UC SOUTHERN REGIONAL LIBRARY FACILITY
AA 000 742 917 8

THE LIBRARY OF
THE UNIVERSITY OF CALIFORNIA
LOS ANGELES

SCHOOL OF LAW

Digitized by the Internet Archive in 2008 with funding from Microsoft Corporation

http://www.archive.org/details/treatiseonlawofi04joyc

A TREATISE

ON THE

LAW OF INSURANCE

OF EVERY KIND

By

JOSEPH A. JOYCE

Of the New York, California, and Connecticut Bars

Second Edition

In Five Volumes

Vol. IV

THE LAWYERS CO-OPERATIVE PUBLISHING CO.
ROCHESTER, N. Y.
1918

v.4

T
J8539i
1917

Copyright 1897
by
JOSEPH A. JOYCE.

Copyright 1918
by
JOSEPH A. JOYCE.

LAW OF INSURANCE

CHAPTER LX.

PARTICULAR REPRESENTATIONS AND WARRANTIES CONTINUED.

§ 2065. Iron shutters: fire risk.
§ 2066. Lading: dunnage: registered tonnage: marine risk.
§ 2067. Lights: fire risk.
§ 2068. Location.
§ 2069. Master's certificate: warranty: marine risk.
§ 2070. Medical attendant: medical treatment: life risk.
§ 2071. Medical examiner: statements to.
§ 2072. Medical examiner: subject of inquiry.
§ 2073. Moored safely in certain harbor: warranty: marine risk.
§ 2074. Occupation: life and accident risks: representation and warranty: continuing warranty.
§ 2075. Other insurance: refusal of other insurers: prior applications, etc.
§ 2076. Opium habit: life risk.
§ 2077. Personal, accidental, or serious injury: wounds: hurts: prior losses: prior indemnity.
§ 2078. Pumps: water: tanks filled, etc.: fire risk: continuing warranty.
§ 2079. Residence: birthplace: life risk.
§ 2080. Relative situation and distance: other buildings: variance in description no warranty that location of other buildings shall remain unchanged.
§ 2081. Relationship: life risk.
§ 2082. Sailing: warranty to sail: marine risk.
§ 2083. Sailing: representation as to time of.
§ 2084. Sailing: representation as to time of may be merely of expectation or belief.
§ 2085. Sailing: warranty to sail may not be engrafted on policy by parol evidence.

667843

§ 2086. Sailing: what constitutes.
§ 2087. Sailing: what does not constitute.
§ 2088. Sheathing vessel.
§ 2089. Ship's safety: warranty: marine risk.
§ 2090. Smoking on premises: continuing warranty: fire risk.
§ 2091. Spirits on board ship: carrying prohibited articles: reasonable construction: marine risk.
§ 2092. Stay of vessel at certain place limited by warranty: marine risk.
§ 2093. Stock kept up to specified amount.
§ 2094. Stowage of cargo: warranty: marine risk.
§ 2095. Suicide: effect of warranty against.
§ 2096. Temperate habits: drunkenness: use of intoxicating liquors.
§ 2097. Tobacco: moderate use of.
§ 2098. Trade and employment of ship: marine risk.
§ 2099. "Uninsured:" policy on another subject-matter: "honor policy."
§ 2100. Unmarried: married: widower: wife.
§ 2101. Use and occupation: whether continuing warranty: fire risk.
§ 2102. Use and occupation: constantly worked: unlawful act not implied.
§ 2103. Use and occupation: dwelling-house: boarding-house: hotel, etc.
§ 2104. Use and occupation: hazardous trade or business.
§ 2105. Use and occupation: house of ill-fame: disorderly or bawdy house.
§ 2106. Use and occupation: manufactory: mill.
§ 2107. Use and occupation: manufactory: incidental uses.
§ 2108. Use and occupation: running factory nights.
§ 2109. Use and occupation: stores: storehouse: storage.
§ 2110. Use and occupation: stores: when continuing warranty.
§ 2111. Use and occupation: tenants: continuing warranty.
§ 2112. Watchman on premises: watch-clock: sleeping in store: continuing warranty.

§ 2065. Iron shutters: fire risk.[12]—The fact that the building insured is described as being fitted with iron shutters and doors does not imply that they shall be kept closed at any particular time. It is sufficient if it has such shutters and doors, and the insurer is not relieved of responsibility because they are open and the fire is carried through them.[13]

§ 2066. Lading: dunnage: registered tonnage: marine risk.[14]—Under a Massachusetts decision if the ship is warranted not to hold more than her registered tonnage, this will be construed to refer to her cargo, and not to necessary and proper dunnage. In such case

[12] See § 1987 herein.
[13] Scott v. Quebec Fire Assur. Co. 1 Stu. (L. C.) 147.
[14] See § 1987 herein.

coal may constitute a suitable article for dunnage if it is used as such in good faith, and in no greater amount than necessary; nor is there a breach of warranty, even though a freight is received for its carriage.[15] It is decided, however, in the Federal Supreme Court, that when merchandise, carried under a bill of lading and paying freight, is put on board by the skipper with knowledge that it would be stowed as dunnage would be stowed, for the purpose of protecting the rest of the cargo from wet, it is cargo and not dunnage; and that a warranty in a ship's policy "not to load more than her registered tonnage," will be broken by carrying more cargo in weight than such tonnage though the excess be used as dunnage; whilst, if such excess had been mere dunnage, and not cargo, there would have been no breach of warranty. In this case Mr. Justice Bradley, states that while the Massachusetts decision "was adverse to the views which we had expressed" still "with all due respect for that intelligent and learned tribunal and after giving full consideration to the views presented in the opinion given in that case we cannot bring ourselves to a different conclusion from that to which we have come." [16] Under a New York decision a warranty that a vessel shall not load more than her registered tonnage refers to her carrying capacity as evidenced by the ship's register under which she is sailing at the date of the policy, and if she sails under a foreign registry, the acts of Congress as to measurement do not apply.[17] In connection with and as somewhat pertinent to the above, as relating to the points of warranty, overloading, excess cargo, and stowage, it is decided that if the vessel is made unseaworthy by excess of cargo actually loaded over the amount stated in the bill of lading then the underwriters would be discharged irrespective of the question whether the statement was made in good faith or not, and whether or not the master knew the fact.[18]

[15] Thwing v. Great Western Ins. Co. 103 Mass. 401, 4 Am. Rep. 567. In this case the court said that coal was shown to be a suitable and proper article to be used for dunnage, it was so used in good faith, and at least as much as the excess above the registered tonnage was reasonably necessary for the dunnage of the ship for her voyage. The mere fact that a freight was paid upon the coal found to have been so used is not necessarily inconsistent with, and cannot control, the finding of the jury.

[16] Great Western Ins. Co. v. Thwing, 13 Wall. (80 U. S.) 672, 678, 20 L. ed. 607, 610; 1 Low. (U. S. D. C.) 444, Fed. Cas. No. 5, 738.

[17] Reck v. Phœnix Ins. Co. 130 N. Y. 160, 29 N. E. 137, 41 N. Y. St. Rep. 250, 45 Alb. L. J. 155.

[18] Granger v. Providence-Washington Ins. Co. 200 Fed. 730, 119 C. C. A. 174, rev'g 192 Fed. 674, considered more fully under § 2163a herein.

§ 2067. Lights: fire risk.[19]—The fact that one open kerosene lamp is used in the office of a mill which is insured does not falsify a statement that no open lights are used in the mill, such lamp not being in the mill properly so called.[20]

§ 2068. Location.[1]—It is said in a Rhode Island case that "there seems to be no doubt that . . . it must be taken as the general rule that all the material statements of the policy of insurance, including statements as to the place in which the insured property is situate, are warranties, and that such warranties must be true, and must continue to be true during the whole life of the policy, as the condition of any recovery thereunder.[2] But some consideration must be given to the nature of the property insured and the uses contemplated; so reference must be had to the voluntary acts of the assured—in fact, all the material circumstances should be considered.[3] This is illustrated by the case where a tank containing oil was carried by a flood four or five hundred feet from its location as set forth in the policy, although it still remained on the assured's premises, and the court held the fact of location to be descriptive only, and if a warranty, then not a continuing one, and if the latter, then at most it was only a warranty against a voluntary change of the tank's location. One of the grounds of this decision was that in case of doubt a construction in favor of assured will be adopted.[4] The above statement also applies where the property is, and is known by assurer to be, of such a character in connection with the business in which it is employed as necessitates its temporary removal and its being kept temporarily in places other than the owner's premises, and where the description of location may be merely intended for identification. It may also, by reason of a statute, become an important factor whether or not the removal relied upon as a defense increased the risk or contributed to the

[19] See § 1987 herein.

[20] Insurance Co. of North America v. McDowell, 50 Ill. 120, 99 Am. Dec. 497.

[1] See § 1987 herein.

On location of movable property as affecting fire insurance thereon, see note in 26 L.R.A. 237.

[2] Lyon v. Providence-Washington Ins. Co. 14 R. I. 109, 110, 51 Am. Rep. 364, per Carpenter, J., citing:

United States.—Eddy Street Iron Foundry v. Hampden Stock & Mutual Ins. Co. 1 Cliff. (U. S. C. C.) 300, Fed. Cas. No. 4,277.

Illinois.—Hartford Fire Ins. Co. v. Farrish, 73 Ill. 166.

Iowa.—Harris v. Royal Canadian Ins. Co. 53 Iowa, 236, 5 N. W. 124.

Maryland.—Shertzer v. Mutual Fire Ins. Co. 46 Md. 506.

New York.—Wall v. East River Mutual Ins. Co. 3 Seld. (7 N. Y.) 370.

[3] See §§ 1742–1750 herein.

[4] Western & Atlantic Pipe Lines v. Home Ins. Co. 145 Pa. St. 346, 27 Am. St. Rep. 703, 21 Ins. L. J. 24, 22 Atl. 665. See also §§ 220 et seq. herein; Soli v. Farmers' Mutual Ins. Co. 51 Minn. 24, 52 N. W. 979; Meadowcraft v. Standard Life Ins. Co. 61 Pa. St. 91.

loss.[5] So a statement in a policy against fire and lightning, describing live stock covered by the policy as being in a certain barn, taken in connection with a clause in the policy providing that the company "shall not be liable for more than the sum or sums insured, nor the interest of the insured, except as hereinafter provided, as specified upon the property described in the places herein set forth, and not elsewhere," is to be construed as mere matter of description for identification of the property insured, and not a promissory stipulation on the part of the insured, or a condition of insurance on the part of the insurer, that such location of property should remain unchanged.[6]

But liability under a form of insurance policy prescribed by statute upon horses while in a designated building, and not elsewhere, does not attach in case they are destroyed while in another building to which they have been temporarily removed while the building designated in the policy is undergoing repairs.[7] So a warranty that property is contained in a dwelling may be availed of as a defense where it is not complied with in that the building was used as a feed store and not as a dwelling.[8] And a policy on chattels, giving permission to move them from their location to a specified building, the policy to cover the property during removal in proportion as the value in each location shall bear to the whole value, will not cover the property while temporarily in another building, although in process of removal.[8a]

It is also declared that nothing is better settled than that the location of the insured property is essentially material in contracts of insurance and enters largely into the matter of fixing the premium rate. Therefore a private garage warranty, based upon a reduced rate of premium, is breached by permanent removal into another state of an automobile from said garage, and recovery on the policy is precluded; nor in such case does the privilege granted of operating the car and housing it temporarily in other places while en route, or while being cleaned and repaired, enable assured to recover by reason of the fact that he placed the car, after said breach, in a shop for repairing; for the policy could not be thereby revived;

[5] E. C. Winsor & Son v. Mutual Fire & Tornado Assoc. 170 Iowa, 521, 153 N. W. 97; Code, sec. 1743. See §§ 1746–1748 herein.

[6] De Graff v. Queen Ins. Co. 38 Minn. 501, 8 Am. St. Rep. 685, 38 N. W. 696.

[7] Rosenthal v. Ins. Co. of North America, 158 Wis. 550, L.R.A.1915B, 361, 149 N. W. 155.

On animal insurance, see note in 44 L.R.A.(N.S.) 569.

[8] Lennox v. Greenwich Ins. Co. 9 Pa. Super. Ct. 171, 43 Wkly. N. C. 398, 29 Pitts. Leg. J. 279.

[8a] Palatine Ins. Co. v. Kehoe, 197 Mass. 354, 15 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1007, 83 N. E. 866.

and he is not aided by a statute making statements representations, and not warranties.[9] But a private garage warranty may be waived by knowledge of and statements by insurer's general agent.[10]

In a policy upon a gasolene launch the warranty was that she should not be engaged in navigation during a certain number of months, and that when laid up, or out of commission, she should be "safely stored at outside" etc. "Privileged to lay up either afloat or ashore." In answer to the question "give location and describe fully the building in which the boat is contained while laid up" it was stated that she was in water at a specified bay. The boat was almost totally destroyed by fire while in assured's boat house, which was a short distance from shore in comparatively deep water, but she was removed therefrom and beached. It was claimed that there was a breach of warranty as to location. It was held that as the only reference to location was in the application, and that was, that while laid up she would be in a building in water at the named bay, and then the words: "shall be safely stored at outside" meant when construed with the application, that she should be stored as she actually was stored "afloat" in the waters of said bay and outside the shore.[11] Again, a provision in a marine policy blank, upon which a fire insurance contract is written, for navigation by the vessel insured, does not so far conflict with a clause in a fire policy blank providing for insurance while the property is "located and contained as described herein" as to be waived by a rider attached to the marine blank waiving all provisions which conflict with the fire blank, although the description in the rider locates the property at a particular place.[12] And payment of the amount due under a fire-insurance policy does not waive fraudulent misrepresentations as to the location of the property at the time of loss, the property having in fact been moved so as to release the liability of the insurer.[13]

[9] Lummus v. Fireman's Fund Ins. Co. 167 N. C. 654, L.R.A.1915D, 239n, 83 S. E. 688, 45 Ins. L. J. 190; Revisal 1905, sec. 4808.

On effect of provision permitting temporary removal of property from place of insurance designated in policy after a permanent removal from that place, see note in L.R.A.1915D, 239.

[10] Commercial Union Assur. Co. of London v. Hill, — Tex. Civ. App. —, 167 S. W. 1095.

On effect of insurance agent's mistake in designating location of property, see note in 2 L.R.A.(N.S.) 548.

[11] Macatawa Transportation Co. v. Fireman's Fund Ins. Co. 168 Mich. 365, 134 N. W. 193, 41 Ins. L. J. 531.

[12] Jackson v. British America Assur. Co. 106 Mich. 47, 30 L.R.A. 636n, 63 N. W. 899.

On effect of riders or slips attached to insurance policies, see note in 30 L.R.A. 636.

[13] Palatine Ins. Co. v. Kehoe, 197 Mass. 354, 15 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1007, 83 N. E. 866.

§ 2069. Master's certificate: warranty: marine risk.[14]—A warranty "that the vessel must be commanded by a captain holding a certificate from the American Shipmasters' Association" means a valid and subsisting certificate.[15]

§ 2070. Medical attendant: medical treatment: life risk.[16]—(a)—If specific inquiries are made whether the assured has had medical attendance within a stated period of time, the fact is thereby made material, and must be disclosed.[17] A false representation of nonattendance by a physician for any serious illness also avoids the policy;[18] and this applies if the policy provides that it shall be void if assured had before its date been attended by a physician for any serious disease or complaint and he had had before that date any disease of the kidney, it is invalidated where it appears that assured died within two years after the policy was issued, and that he had been afflicted with renal colic, although not within that period, and that he had had gallstones and had undergone an operation therefor.[19] So where assured warrants that he has never been sick or attended by a physician, the warranty is falsified by the fact that he was attended by one about a month prior to issuing the policy.[20] A person would also be attended by a physician if he went to his office telling him he had coughed and spit blood, submitted to a physical examination, obtained a prescription, and paid a fee therefor, and afterwards consulted the physician again and paid a fee.[1] The words of the court in a New York case are perti-

[14] See § 1987 herein.

[15] McLoon v. Commercial Ins. Co. 100 Mass. 472, 1 Am. Rep. 129.

[16] See § 1987 herein.

[17] United Brethren Mutual Aid Soc. v. O'Hara, 120 Pa. St. 256, 13 Atl. 932, 12 Cent. Rep. 682. See O'Hara v. United Brethren Mutual Aid Soc. 134 Pa. St. 417, 19 Atl. 683.

[18] Weintraub v. Metropolitan Life Ins. Co. 58 N. Y. Supp. 295, 27 Misc. 540. See Huebner v. Metropolitan Life Ins. Co. 146 Ill. App. 282 (policy to be void if assured had before its date been attended by a physician for any serious disease or ailment; assured's knowledge whether he had any disease is material; warranty; judgment for insurer).

[19] Weintraub v. Metropolitan Life Ins. Co. 58 N. Y. Supp. 295, 27 Misc. 540.

[20] Sullivan v. Metropolitan Life Ins. Co. 36 N. Y. St. Rep. 38, 12 N. Y. Supp. 923.

See Trudden v. Metropolitan Life Ins. Co. 64 N. Y. Supp. 183, 50 App. Div. 473 (warranty that not attended by physician within two years, false: no recovery), s. c. 74 N. Y. Supp. 1083, 69 App. Div. 392; Roche v. Supreme Lodge Knights & Ladies of Honor, 47 N. Y. Supp. 774, 21 App. Div. 599 (question "How long since you were attended by physician or have professionally consulted one?" Answer, "not for two years;" held a breach of warranty if untrue: judgment for plaintiff reversed).

[1] White v. Providence Savings Life Assur. Soc. 163 Mass. 108, 27 L.R.A. 398, 39 N. E. 771.

On what constitutes a consultation with or attendance by a physician within the meaning of an application for life insurance, see note in 18

nent. They are: "To constitute a medical attendance it is not requisite that a physician should attend the patient at his home; an attendance at his own office is sufficient. Of these three physicians, who was the 'usual medical attendant?' It certainly was not Dr. Greenleaf, who attended him during but one brief illness, and never before or after. Was it Dr. Ormsby, who had attended him on two occasions, visiting him in all probability not over half a dozen times? Or was it Dr. Purdy, the family physician in his father's family, upon whom he called yearly for many years for medical advice or treatment? I think Dr. Purdy could more properly be called the usual medical attendant; or whether this be so or not, it was at least a question for the jury, and there was no error in submitting it to them;" and the court also says of Dr. Purdy: "It is quite evident that he knew more about the health and constitution of the assured than any other doctor." [2]

(b) If the name and address of each physician consulted by, or who has prescribed for, assured during a specified time, is required to be truthfully stated and his answers are warranties, he must comply therewith and a false statement as to the same, forfeits the insurance.[3] And where insured in her application warrants that the statements and answers therein are strictly correct and wholly true and if not the policy shall be void, and the policy is issued in consideration that such answers and statements are warranties it constitutes a suppression of a material fact and a misrepresentation and breach of warranty by insured to state that she had not been attended by any physician other than a certain one who is named, when as a fact she had been attended and treated within two days by another than the named physician for a very serious illness.[4] So where the inquiry was made, "How often has medical attendance been required?" and the answer was, "Two years ago," and the name of the medical attendant being asked, assured gave the name of Dr. R., who had in fact attended him about a year before, but the assured did not disclose the fact that he had had a relapse shortly thereafter, when he was attended by Dr. C., and that three physicians in attendance had despaired of his life; such information was found immaterial by the jury, and that no intentional fraud existed; nevertheless the policy was declared void.[5] But the omission to

L.R.A.(N.S.) 362; on time covered by question or representation as to consultation with physician, note in 45 L.R.A.(N.S.) 162.

[2] Cushman v. United States Life Ins. Co. 70 N. Y. 72, per Earl J. See Cushman v. United States L. Ins. Co. 63 N. Y. 404.

[3] Caruthers v. Kansas Mutual Life Ins. Co. (U. S. C. C.) 108 Fed. 487.

[4] Griffith v. Metropolitan Life Ins. Co. of N. Y. 36 App. D. C. 8.

[5] Cazenove v. British Equitable Assur. Co. 29 L. J. C. P. 160, aff'g 28 L. J. C. P. 259, 6 Com. B. N. S. 437. See also the following cases: Mu-mention the name of one of the attending physicians during a period of illness, will not avoid the policy unless the omission is material, where the applicant warrants his statements to be full, complete, and true, "without suppression of any fact or circumstance which would tend to influence the company in issuing a policy;" [6] and if the answers to questions requiring the names of physicians consulted and as to mental derangement are not made a part or basis of the contract, nor referred to in the policy, the omission of one physician's name and a negative reply as to the latter question, do not show a nondisclosure of a material fact; and judgment against insurer is proper.[7] Again, if an application is rejected because of the form of policy required and a new application is made, but the answers in the former as to the name and residence of usual medical attendant, consultation with other physicians, etc., are not fully recorded in the latter by the agent and there is no personal interrogation as to the same, and the name is given therein of one physician and the complaint for which the applicant was attended, while in the first application assured states that he has not consulted any physician, and in the second he is made to say that he had not been under the care of any other physician, etc., the answers in the second application cannot be said to be such necessary inferences from those contained in the first as to be regarded as the applicant's statement so as to bind him.[8] So in case the name and residence of a physician "whom you have personally employed or consulted" is asked, and the applicant's reply is: "Have none," no breach of warranty is shown by the fact of consultation with a physician where assured had not "personally employed" one, for a warranty is confined to the answer and even tual Life Ins. Co. v. Mullen, 107 Md. 457, 69 Atl. 385 (insured had consulted as to diseases two other physicians than the one named as last consulted: held material to risk and policy avoided); Hanna v. Mutual Life Assoc. 42 N. Y. Supp. 228, 11 App. Div. 245 (assured untruthfully named the examining physician as his attending physician: policy avoided); National Life Ins. Co. of U. S. v. Reppond, — Tex. Civ. App. —, 81 S. W. 1012 ("name of each physician consulted or who had prescribed within specified time was required: warranty breached); Talley v. Metropolitan Life Ins. Co. 111 Va. 778, 69 S. E. 936 ("name of every physician who has ever attended you or prescribed for you" was required in conjunction with question as to every illness, etc.: failure to state either the physician consulted shortly before application was made, or the result thereof: no recovery).

[6] Reppond v. National Life Ins. Co. 100 Tex. 519, 11 L.R.A.(N.S.) 981 (annotated on when statements may be regarded as representations although expressly denominated in policy as warranties), 101 S. W. 786.

[7] Joel v. Law Union & Crown (1908) 2 K. B. L. R. 899 (1908) 2 K. B. L. R. 431.

[8] Hewey v. Metropolitan Life Ins. Co. 100 Me. 523, 62 Atl. 600, 35 Ins. L. J. 110.

though the question suggests a fuller reply, still if it is not insisted upon insurer will be limited to that given.[9]

If the name of the family physician is required, this term will include a physician who is consulted professionally by members of the family, and who usually attends assured's wife and children.[10]

Again where assured named his regular family physician for years, but omitted the name of another physician who substituted for him at times, not as his assistant but acting independently for himself, and the illness for which he had consulted the latter was not trivial or so unimportant as to have no relation to assured's general health, the fact that negative answers were given to the questions whether the applicant had consulted any other physician or had any other medical attendant, or had been prescribed "for by any other physician than the above named" are matters manifestly material to the risk, accordingly a judgment for plaintiff was reversed.[11] It is held that assured's failure to fully disclose all the consultations with physicians or all those with whom he had consulted is a ground of reversal of judgment for assured.[12] But it is declared to be well settled that assured is not required to give the name of every physician he has consulted, regardless of the important or unimportant nature of assured's complaint. And where the form of the question is such as to leave some doubt in the ordinary mind whether or not it called for the name of each physician who had attended assured during the same spell of sickness and the short space left for answer in the blank, is of itself an indication that such answer must be brief, it is not an unreasonable inference that in giving the general designation of the ailment, the date and name of the attendant physician, the assured had honestly supposed he had given all the information sought and had fully and completely answered a question asking if he had consulted any physician or physicians in regard to personal ailments during the past seven years and if so to give dates, ailments and physician's name and address; at most the question of good faith and honesty in answering is for the jury.[13] Nor is a warranty untrue that assured had been attended by only a certain named physician where his wife

[9] Haughton v. Aetna Life Ins. Co. 42 Ind. App. 527, 85 N. E. 125. As to inquiries, partial answers, etc., see §§ 487a, 1869 et seq., 1914 et seq., 1916 herein.

[10] Price v. Phoenix Mutual Life Ins. Co. 17 Minn. 497, 10 Am. Rep. 166.

[11] Rigby v. Metropolitan Life Ins. Co. 240 Pa. 332, 87 Atl. 428, 42 Ins. L. J. 1235, act June 23, 1885, Pub. L. 134.

[12] Ætna Life Ins. Co. v. Conway, 11 Ga. App. 557, 75 S. E. 915, 41 Ins. L. J. 1802 (there was also a question of concealment of a previous illness).

[13] Modern Woodmen of America v. Wilson, 76 Neb. 621, 107 N. W. 568, 35 Ins. L. J. 582.

had, against his wishes, called in a physician for a slight ailment, who gave some advice, but it did not appear that assured took any of the medicine prescribed.[14] And when the applicant stated that he had consulted only one physician, and then only for a brief illness of two days, such statement is not falsified by the fact of casual remarks made upon the street when meeting another doctor, nor by the trial, out of curiosity alone, of a new static machine, where there is also evidence of his family in support of the truth of his statements.[15] And if an applicant warrants the truthfulness of his answer to the question, "Have you consulted any other physician?" and agrees that the policy issued in consideration of the warranty shall be void if the answer be false, the liability of the insurer depends upon the truthfulness of the answer.[16]

A statement of nonconsultation with a physician is material and avoids the policy, where the applicant has been treated for different complaints by different physicians and has also had an operation for piles;[17] so where another physician had treated assured a number of times within a brief period for rheumatism, there is a breach of warranty.[18]

(e) It is held that the statement by assured that he has not been prescribed for by a physician is falsified by the fact that a physician has prescribed for a cold.[19] This decision is cited with approval in a Massachusetts case, where a benefit certificate was issued to the assured and he warranted the answers to the questions to be full, complete, and true, and that the answers and application should form the basis of the contract, and that if any misrepresentations or fraudulent or untrue answers were made the policy would be void. The assured was asked whether he had "personally consulted a physician, been prescribed for, or professionally treated within the past ten years," to which he answered "No," which answer the jury found to be false, the court having instructed them that if the as-

[14] Crosby v. Security Mutual Life Ins. Co. 83 N. Y. Supp. 140, 86 App. Div. 89. Compare Beard v. Royal Neighbors of America, 53 Oreg. 102, 19 L.R.A.(N.S.) 798, 99 Pac. 83.

[15] Winn v. Modern Woodmen of America, 138 Mo. App. 701, 119 S. W. 536, 146 Mo. App. 69, 123 S. W. 59, 157 Mo. App. 1, 40 Ins. L. J. 1407. See Mutual Life Ins. Co. of N. Y. v. Morgan, 39 Okla. 205, 135 Pac. 279.

[16] Metropolitan Life Ins. Co. v. Brubaker, 78 Kan. 146, 18 L.R.A. (N.S.) 362, 96 Pac. 62.

[17] Grand Fraternity v. Keatley, 27 Del. (4 Boyce) 308, 88 Atl. 553, 42 Ins. L. J. 1715, decided under law and decisions of Pennsylvania, s. c. Keatley v. Grand Fraternity, 2 Boyce (25 Del.) 511, 82 Atl. 294, s. c. 2 Boyce (25 Del.) 267, 78 Atl. 874, s. c. (U. S. D. C.) 198 Fed. 264, 41 Ins. L. J. 1776, 1784.

[18] Fish v. Metropolitan Life Ins. Co. 73 N. J. L. 619, 64 Atl. 109.

[19] Metropolitan Life Ins. Co. v. McTague, 49 N. J. L. 587, 60 Am. Rep. 661, 9 Atl. 766.

sured being, as he supposed, in need of a physician, went to one for the purpose of consulting him as to what was the matter with him, had an interview, answering such inquiries as the physician deemed pertinent, receiving aid, advice, or assistance from him, assured "consulted" a physician within the meaning of the interrogatory, and also that if they found that he went to a physician for the purpose of procuring aid and assistance from the physician as such, and the physician prescribed a remedy or treated him professionally, either by giving him a prescription or by administering hypodermic injections of morphine, of which there was some evidence, then he was professionally "treated" within the meaning of the interrogatory, or professionally "prescribed for," and the court of appeals declared this charge to be correct and it was held that a distinct disease permanently affecting the health of an applicant is not necessary to render untrue his statement that he has not personally consulted a physician or been prescribed for or professionally treated within a certain time. The court also approves the definition, in another case,[20] of "prescription" which we have given in the next following paragraph. So in a Delaware case where the policy was construed according to the law of Pennsylvania the questions as to consultation with physician is declared not to relate to a condition of health, or mean that it was requisite or proper to consult a physician about any particular disorder, but that the question of disease is wholly separate from the question of consultation.[1] It is also [20] Cobb v. Covenant Mutual Benefit Assoc. 153 Mass. 176, 25 Am. St. Rep. 619, 10 L.R.A. 666, 26 N. E. 230, per Devens, J. See also an instruction per Patvanent, C. J., in Hubbard v. Mutual Reserve Fund Life Assoc. 100 Fed. 719, 40 C. C. A. 665, 29 Ins. L. J. 577, 583 (where the words "consulted," "attended," "prescribed," in connection with "diseases or ailments," are construed; but held under facts that there was a breach of warranty), aff'g 80 Fed. 681, 27 Ins. L. J. 202.

[1] Grand Fraternity v. Keatley, 27 Del. (4 Boyce) 308, 88 Atl. 553, 42 Ins. L. J. 1715, 1718 (for other citations of same case, see note 17 above) citing:

United States.—Life Asso. of America v. Edwards, 159 Fed. 53, 86 C. C. A. 243; Caruthers v. Kansas Mutual Life Ins. Co. (U. S. C. C.) 108 Fed. 487, 491.

Arizona.—Mutual Life Ins. Co. v. Arhelger, 4 Ariz. 271, 36 Pac. 895, 896.

Kentucky.—Insurance Co. v. Schmidt, 29 Ky. L. Rep. 255, 93 S. W. 1055.

Missouri.—McDermott v. Modern Woodmen of America, 97 Mo. App. 636, 71 S. W. 833, 838.

New Hampshire.—Dwyer v. Mutual Life Ins. Co. 72 N. H. 752, 755, 58 Atl. 502.

New Jersey.—Metropolitan Life Ins. Co. v. McTague, 49 N. J. L. 587, 592, 60 Am. Rep. 661, 9 Atl. 766.

New York.—Roche v. Supreme Lodge, 47 N. Y. Supp. 774, 21 App. Div. 599, 601.

Oregon.—Beard v. Royal Neighbors, 53 Oreg. 102, 19 L.R.A.(N.S.) 798, 17 Ann. Cas. 1199, 99 Pac. 83.

Pennsylvania. — United Brethren Mutual Aid Soc. v. O'Hara, 120 Pa. 256, 260, 13 Atl. 932; Baldi v. Metro-decided that an applicant who, for motives of his own, has sought and obtained a professional interview with a physician regarding the state of his health, cannot truthfully answer the question, "Have you consulted any other physician?" in the negative, merely because the interview concerned some temporary ailment or indisposition, slight in character, and not seriously affecting health.[2]

The following definition of a "prescription" is approved by the Court in the Massachusetts case above considered: "If the insured went to a physician for the purpose of getting his aid, advice, or assistance as a physician in a difficulty under which he was then suffering, or supposed himself to be suffering, and the physician hearing what the assured had to say, as a physician, and, for the purpose of relief or cure, or aid, or assistance, gave to the insured medicine, then he prescribed for him."[3] And it is said in a North Carolina case, per Hoke, J., that "It is true that the courts will hold that a prescription given by a physician, in response to a casual inquiry, does not amount to being under such physician's care, within the meaning of this stipulation. A prescription given after more careful examination as an exceptional or isolated occurrence might not be so. No more is it required that a patient should be bedridden to constitute the relationship, and if the insured, being apprehensive as to his condition, though 'up and around' within the time named, consulted" any physician "and intrusted his case to him for regular and continuous treatment, this would come within the representation" that he had not been under the care of a physician within two years "and if false would relieve the defendant from the obligations of the contract."[4] Again, the words, "talked with" and "consulted" are synonymous when applied to seeing a physician and obtaining medicine as a treatment for a personal ailment, and it is not error to refuse to substitute the latter word for the former in a charge to the jury.[5]

In the determination of the above and following points, however, reference should be had to what we have stated concerning health, politan Ins. Co. 24 Pa. Super. Ct. 275, 290, 292.

See also Brock v. United Moderns, 36 Tex. Civ. App. 12, 81 S. W. 340 (consulted about granulated eyelids: warranty: no recovery, although one physician's testimony was that granulated eyelids was not a condition of health, but only local).

[2] Metropolitan Life Ins. Co. v. Brubaker, 78 Kan. 146, 18 L.R.A.(N.S.) 362 and note, 130 Am. St. Rep. 356, 16 Ann. Cas. 267, 96 Pac. 62.

[3] Cobb v. Covenant Mutual Benefit Assoc. 153 Mass. 176, 25 Am. St. Rep. 619, 10 L.R.A. 666, 26 N. E. 230—Devens, J.

[4] Bryant v. Metropolitan Life Ins. Co. 147 N. C. 181, 60 S. E. 983, 37 Ins. L. J. 354.

[5] Winn v. Modern Woodmen of America, 157 Mo. App. 1, 137 S. W. 292, 40 Ins. L. J. 1407 (judgment affirmed for plaintiff), s. c. 146 Mo. App. 69, 123 S. W. 59, s. c. 138 Mo. App. 701, 119 S. W. 536.

trivial complaints or ailments, and serious illness under preceding sections.[6] So questions and answers as to consultation with, treatment or attendance by, a physician and the nature of the ailment should be given a reasonable construction with reference to what is intended by the contract, and the effect thereon or upon the risk, and, therefore, reasonably construed they do not mean a consultation, treatment, or attendance concerning some trivial or temporary indisposition or feeling which has passed away without affecting the general health, but only such information is required as applies to a consultation, treatment, or attendance concerning some illness or disease of substantial importance or of a serious nature;[7] nor is it necessary to detail every circumstance of occasion of consultations with physicians, nor the names of every physician who has treated the applicant, where the matter concerns only temporary disability or indisposition not constituting a disease or a serious ailment.[8] And the above rule has been applied although the answers as to attendance by a physician and the nature of the ailment are made

[6] See §§ 2003 et seq. herein.

[7] United States.—McClain v. Provident Savings Life Assur. Soc. 110 Fed. 80, 49 C. C. A. 31, certiorari denied 184 U. S. 699, 46 L. ed. 765, 23 Sup. Ct. 938; Hubbard v. Mutual Reserve Fund Life Assoc. 100 Fed. 719, 40 C. C. A. 665, 29 Ins. L. J. 577 (rule conceded but held that there was a breach of warranty), aff'g 80 Fed. 681, 27 Ins. L. J. 202.

Arkansas.—Franklin Life Ins. Co. v. Halligan, 71 Ark. 295, 100 Am. St. Rep. 73, 73 S. W. 102.

California.—Poole v. Grand Circle of Women of Wood Craft, 18 Cal. App. 457, 123 Pac. 349, 41 Ins. L. J. 1148—Shaw, J. (code maxim applies, that law disregards trifles; Civ. Code, sec. 3533).

Louisiana.—Cole v. Mutual Life Ins. Co. of N. Y. 129 La. 704, 56 So. 645, 41 Ins. L. J. 227.

Maryland.—Mutual Life Ins. Co. v. Mullen, 107 Md. 457, 69 Atl. 385, 37 Ins. L. J. 507 (statements as to treatment by physician material except when for trivial ailment).

Michigan.—Blumenthal v. Berkshire Life Ins. Co. 134 Mich. 216, 104 Am. St. Rep. 604, 96 N. W. 17; Brown v. Metropolitan Life Ins. Co. 65 Mich. 306, 8 Am. St. Rep. 894, 32 N. W. 610.

Missouri.—Harris v. Knights & Ladies of Honor, 129 Mo. App. 163, 108 S. W. 130. See Winn v. Modern Woodmen of America, 157 Mo. App. 1, 137 S. W. 292, 40 Ins. L. J. 1407, s. c. 146 Mo. App. 69, 123 S. W. 59, s. c. 138 Mo. App. 701, 119 S. W. 536.

Nebraska.—Modern Woodmen of America v. Wilson, 76 Neb. 621, 107 N. W. 568, 35 Ins. L. J. 582.

New York.—Smith v. Travelers' Ins. Co. 135 N. Y. Supp. 18, 76 Misc. 441, 41 Ins. L. J. 1257, s. c. 135 N. Y. Supp. 1143, 151 App. Div. 885.

Ohio—Hunter v. International Fraternal Alliance, 5 Ohio Leg. N. 239, 7 Super. & Com. P. Rep. 289.

Tennessee.—Woodward v. Town Mutual Life Ins. Co. 104 Tenn. 49, 56 S. W. 1020.

Washington.—Hoeland v. Western Union Life Ins. Co. 58 Wash. 100, 107 Pac. 866 (construction should not lead to absurdities).

[8] Sargent v. Modern Brotherhood of America, 148 Iowa, 600, 127 N. W. 52; Blumenthal v. Berkshire Life Ins. Co. 134 Mich. 216, 10 Det. L. N. 429, 96 N. W. 17; Modern Woodmen of warranties.[9] So the fact that assured had been attended by a physician for a few days while sick in bed with malaria does not prevent recovery on the policy, although he had stated that he had consulted no physician during the past five years,[10] nor does the taking of a dose of medicine from a doctor for a temporary indisposition, as biliousness, necessarily constitute treatment by a physician.[11] And inasmuch as confinement in childbirth does not constitute a "personal ailment" a single attendance of a physician on such an occasion several years prior to the application for insurance is not a consultation with a physician.[12] And even though assured had stated that he had only consulted one physician still if there had been consultations with others as to slight and temporary ailments the policy is not avoided.[13] So calling at a doctor's office for medicine for a temporary indisposition and receiving two visits from him for a cold, are not a consultation with a physician nor an attendance by a physician for any complaint, at least it is a question for the jury whether statements negativing such consultation are substantially true, where the answers are construed as representations and not as warranties and assured may have honestly interpreted the policy clause to mean treatment for any serious disease,[14] nor need assured disclose the giving to him of a prescription for a temporary ailment while he was visiting at the private residence of a physician, nor the fact that he was again prescribed for upon their meeting casually upon the street.[15] So the failure of the applicant to disclose the fact of his having consulted a physician on the same day that he applied for his policy, is not a fatal concealment where the object of the consultation was merely to procure a prescription to relieve him from a slight disorder of the stomach, which soon passed

America v. Wilson, 76 Neb. 621, 107 N. W. 568, 35 Ins. L. J. 582.

[9] Franklin Life Ins. Co. v. Galligan, 71 Ark. 295, 100 Am. St. Rep. 73, 73 S. W. 102; Hoeland v. Western Union Life Ins. Co. 58 Wash. 100, 107 Pac. 866.

[10] Goff v. Mutual Life Ins. Co. of N. Y. 131 La. 98, 59 So. 28, 41 Ins. L. J. 1415. See also Genung v. Metropolitan Life Ins. Co. 69 N. Y. Supp. 1041, 60 App. Div. 424 (no breach of warranty).

[11] Modern Woodmen of America v. Lawson, 110 Va. 81, 135 Am. St. Rep. 927, 65 S. E. 509.

[12] Rasicot v. Royal Neighbors of America, 18 Idaho, 85, 29 L.R.A. (N.S.) 433, 108 Pac. 1048.

[13] Mutual Life Ins. Co. of N. Y. v. Morgan, 39 Okla. 205, 135 Pac. 279 (so held as to law in Indian Territory prior to statehood). See Winn v. Modern Woodmen of America, 138 Mo. App. 701, 119 S. W. 536, s. c. 146 Mo. App. 69, 123 S. W. 59, s. c. 157 Mo. App. 1, 137 S. W. 292, 40 Ins. L. J. 1407; Crosby v. Security Mutual Life Ins. Co. 83 N. Y. Supp. 146, 86 App. Div. 89.

[14] Prudential Ins. Co. of America v. Sellers, 54 Ind. App. 326, 102 N. E. 894, 42 Ins. L. J. 1692.

[15] Mutual Reserve Fund Life Assoc. v. Ogletree, 77 Miss. 7, 25 So. 869.

away.[16] In another case, where the name of the physician who last attended was asked, it was held that this must be construed to mean an attendance for some disease of importance, and not a mere temporary indisposition.[17] Again, if the policy stipulates that unless otherwise stated therein as waived the policy is void if insured, before its date, "has been attended by a physician for any serious disease" and the applicant states that she is in perfect health and has never been treated by any physician for any serious illness, the material question at issue resolves itself under the facts into one of what constitutes a "serious illness" and if the trouble or complaint for which assured has been treated and which it is claimed avoids the policy, does not fall within the meaning of those words and is not one entailing some permanent or material impairment of health, recovery is not precluded.[18]

(d) In those cases where representations by an applicant concerning matters of fact presumably within his knowledge, such as his treatment by a physician or his confinement in a hospital, are treated as warranties, a breach thereof will render the policy void.[19] And in case a policy based on the application of assured stipulates that, if any of its statements prove untrue, it shall be void, the false statements that the applicant's present health was good, and that he had had no occasion to consult a physician, will preclude recovery.[20] So where assured has been treated for carcinoma of the liver by a physician it falsifies her statement that she had never consulted a physician even though she was not advised as to the character of the disease, and this is so held whether such statement be considered a representation or warranty.[1] And the term serious disease, includes heart disease, especially so where death results therefrom, and the policy is avoided where assured knew that she had been treated therefor and states to the contrary.[2] Consultation by an applicant for insurance with a physician, within the meaning of a question in the application, is also shown by the fact that her husband notified the physician that she was indisposed and asked him to attend her, and that, upon his arrival at the house, she advised him of her symptoms and received aid from him.[3] So where assured had raised

[16] Hann v. National Union, 97 Mich. 513, 37 Am. St. Rep. 365, 56 N. W. 834.

[17] Brown v. Metropolitan Life Ins. Co. 65 Mich. 306, 8 Am. St. Rep. 894, 32 N. W. 610.

[18] Metropolitan Life Ins. Co. v. Little, 149 Ky. 717, 149 S. W. 998, 41 Ins. L. J. 1798.

[19] Owen v. Metropolitan Life Ins. Co. 74 N. J. Law, 770, 122 Am. St. Rep. 413, 67 Atl. 25.

[20] Nelson v. Nederland Life Ins. Co. 110 Iowa, 600, 81 N. W. 807.

[1] Germania Life Ins. Co. of N. Y. v. Klein, 25 Colo. App. 326, 137 Pac. 73.

[2] Ripp v. Metropolitan Life Ins. Co. 58 N. Y. Supp. 594.

[3] Beard v. Royal Neighbors of blood, and a physician had been consulted and had prescribed for him, a nondisclosure thereof avoids the contract.[4] Again, a breach of warranty that assured had not had medical advice during the last five years, avoids the policy.[5]

America, 53 Oreg. 102, 19 L.R.A. (N.S.) 798, 99 Pac. 83. Compare Crosby v. Security Mutual Life Ins. Co. 83 N. Y. Supp. 140, 86 App. Div. 89.

[4] Smith v. Ætna Life Ins. Co. 49 N. Y. 211.

On what constitutes "spitting or coughing blood," see note in 23 L.R.A.(N.S.) 917.

[5] National Union v. Kelley, 42 Okla. 98, 140 Pac. 1157.

See also the following cases:

United States.—Sladdin v. New York Life Ins. Co. 86 Fed. 102, 29 C. C. A. 596 (had consulted physician and had consumption: held a breach of warranty).

Arkansas.—Brotherhood of American Yeomen v. Fordham, 120 Ark. 605, 180 S. W. 206 (answers as to consulting physician and as to specified diseases false: held breach of warranty).

Iowa.—Smith v. Supreme Lodge Knights & Ladies of Golden Precept, 123 Iowa, 676, 99 N. W. 553 (statements false that had not consulted physician or been treated by physician, and was in good health: held breach of warranty).

Kansas.—Metropolitan Life Ins. Co. v. Brubaker, 78 Kan. 146, 18 L.R.A.(N.S.) 362 and note, 130 Am. St. Rep. 356, 16 Ann. Cas. 267, 96 Pac. 62 (in case of warranty liability depends upon untruthfulness of answer: physician consulted: warranty breached).

Kentucky.—Supreme Lodge Knights of Pythias v. Bradley, 141 Ky. 334, 132 S. W. 547, 40 Ins. L. J. 209 (breach of warranty as to consultation, good health, etc.), s. c. 33 Ky. L. Rep. 413, 109 S. W. 1178, s. c. 32 Ky. L. Rep. 743, 107 S. W. 209, s. c. — Ky. —, 117 S. W. 275; Brisou v. Metropolitan Life Ins. Co. — Ky. —, 115 S. W. 785 (had been operated on: no recovery).

Louisiana.—Petipain v. Mutual Reserve Fund Life Assoc. 52 La. Ann. 503, 27 So. 113, 29 Ins. L. J. 269 (statements that no physician and never inmate of hospital, were false: policy void).

Michigan.—Rathman v. New Amsterdam Casualty Co. 186 Mich. 115, L.R.A.1915E, 980, 152 N. W. 983, 46 Ins. L. J. 373 (accident policy; statements that had not received medical or surgical attendance, etc., in sound condition, etc., held affirmative warranties: no recovery).

Missouri.—Aloe v. Mutual Reserve Fund Life Assoc. 147 Mo. 561, 49 S. W. 553, 28 Ins. L. J. 293 (had been frequently treated by physicians: warranty breached); McDermott v. Modern Woodmen of America, 97 Mo. App. 637, 71 S. W. 833 (warranty falsified that had not consulted or been treated by physician within specified time).

New Hampshire.—Dwyer v. Mutual Life Ins. Co. 72 N. H. 752, 58 Atl. 502 (held a breach of warranty: had consulted and been treated by physician).

New York.—Hoffman v. Metropolitan Life Ins. Co. 126 N. Y. Supp. 436, 141 App. Div. 713 (statement false that not attended by physician and never in hospital: no recovery); Colaneri v. General Accident Assur. Corp. 110 N. Y. Supp. 678, 126 App. Div. 591 (had received medical or surgical treatment for certain diseases; warranty falsified: no recovery).

Texas.—Brock v. United Moderns, 36 Tex. Civ. App. 12, 81 S. W. 340 (statement that had not consulted or been advised by any physician within five years; and to question "If not treated within five years, how long

But it is held that false statements as to consultation with a physician although warranties, do not avoid the policy where it is not so stipulated, unless they are fraudulently made.[6] And where it cannot be said that insurer would have rejected the applicant had it known that he had been treated in a dispensary, his statement to the contrary does not constitute such a breach of warranty as to forfeit the insurance;[7] nor is a warranty that assured had not received medical or surgical attendance, nor consulted a physician within a specified time, broken by the fact that assured in an application to a board of education for leave of absence, stated that he was away on account of serious personal illness and that there was attached to said application a physician's certificate that insured had influenza, or tonsilitis, that is, la grippe, or a cold, where it does not appear that he consulted said physician for the purpose of treatment, and that no examination was made, or prescription given; and the rule above stated as to trivial ailments also applies.[8]

(e) If there is no evidence that assured consulted a physician for the purpose of treatment by him, and he was not called in by assured and no examination was made nor any prescription given, and the physician was at assured's house on other professional duties, there is no violation of a warranty that he had not received medical or surgical attention nor consulted a physician within the time specified.[9]

So where the consultation was not for treatment but for the purpose of obtaining a pension the policy is not avoided even though made warranties.[10] And the fact that while assured was in a doctor's office for another purpose he permitted, without requesting it, some wax to be removed from his ears, does not falsify a statement of non-attendance by a physician.[11] Nor is the policy avoided by consultations relating to matters other than his own diseases or illnesses.[12] But although one seeks, or consults a physician for motives of his since you were under the care of a physician, and for what cause?" assured answered "never," warranty falsified: no recovery).

Ontario.—Smith v. Grand Lodge of British America (Ont.) 24 Canadian L. T. 16 (had consulted several physicians, shortly before: warranty breached).

[6] German American Mutual Life Ins. Assoc. v. Farley, 102 Ga. 720, 29 S. E. 15, 27 Ins. L. J. 657.

[7] Diamond v. Metropolitan Life Ins. Co. 116 N. Y. Supp. 619.

[8] Smith v. Travelers Ins. Co. 135 N. Y. Supp. 18, 76 Misc. 441, 41 Ins. L. J. 1257, s. c. 135 N. Y. Supp. 1143, 151 App. Div. 885.

[9] Smith v. Travelers Ins. Co. 135 N. Y. Supp. 18, 76 Misc. 441, 41 Ins. L. J. 1257, s. c. 135 N. Y. Supp. 1143, 151 App. Div. 885.

[10] National American Ins. Co. v. Ritch, 121 Ark. 185, 180 S. W. 488.

[11] Harns v. Knights & Ladies of Honor, 129 Mo. App. 163, 108 S. W. 130.

[12] Billings v. Metropolitan Life Ins. Co. 70 Vt. 477, 41 Atl. 416.

own, it is held to make it none the less a consultation in so far as the truth of his negative statement as to consulting other physicians is concerned.[13]

(f) Questions in an application as to the time since a physician was consulted, the disease, the name of the physician, and the present state of health, are material so that, if the answers are warranted to be true, their falsity will prevent recovery on the policy.[14] So in case of a warranty that assured has not sought medical advice within a specified time, such period has been held to have relation from the date of the application, not from the time the certificate was issued.[15] If, however, it is not contemplated or intended that a statement as to the time of treatment should be literally true, there is no warranty.[16] And in case an applicant states that he has not been under the treatment of a physician for two years, the expression "two years" is understood as an approximate statement.[17] Again, if a question is so worded as to be ambiguous, and it is therefore not apparent which interpretation was placed upon it by the applicant, the policy will not be forfeited as for falsity in answering, as where the answer is "five years" to the question "How long since you have consulted a physician?" for such an inquiry may be construed to refer either to the time "since he last" or "since he first" consulted a physician.[18] It is also held, however, that the inquiry, "How long since you were attended by a physician, or professionally consulted one?" means not when a physician was first consulted, but when he was last consulted.[19] Where the question is whether assured has employed or consulted individually a physician, this is held not to refer to a con-

[13] Metropolitan Life Ins. Co. v. Brubaker, 78 Kan. 146, 18 L.R.A. (N.S.) 363 (annotated on what constitutes a consultation with or attendance by a physician within the meaning of an application for life insurance) 130 Am. St. Rep. 356, 16 Ann. Cas. 267, 96 Pac. 62.

[14] Crosse v. Supreme Lodge Knights & Ladies of Honor, 254 Ill. 80, 45 L.R.A.(N.S.) 162 (annotated on time covered by question or representation as to consultation with physician), 98 N. E. 261.

[15] Catholic Order of Foresters v. Collins, — Ind. App. —, 69 N. E. 745. See Collins v. Catholic Order of Foresters, 43 Ind. App. 549, 88 N. E. 87, 38 Ins. L. J. 737. (In this case the question was "Have you ever had any severe illness or injury or undergone any surgical operation?" Also, "State when, give particulars, and name your attending physician:" also, "when and for what has medical advice been sought within the last three years?" Breaches of warranty were claimed: from a judgment for defendant, plaintiff appealed: reversed and new trial granted).

[16] Provident Savings Life Assur. Soc. of N. Y. v. Oliver, 22 Tex. Civ. App. 8, 53 S. W. 594.

[17] Owen v. Metropolitan Life Ins. Co. 74 N. J. L. 770, 122 Am. St. Rep. 413, 67 Atl. 25.

[18] Stewart v. Equitable Mutual Life Assoc. 110 Iowa, 528, 81 N. W. 782.

[19] Crosse v. Supreme Lodge Knights & Ladies of Honor, 254 Ill. 80, 45 L.R.A.(N.S.) 162n, 98 N. E. 261.

sultation made at any time during the applicant's life, but to an employment or consultation with reference to the application for insurance, so that proof of employment of a physician six months or a year and a half prior thereto need not be disclosed in answer to such a question.[20]

(g) If the inquiry is as to the last medical attendant, the fact is so far rendered material that it must be disclosed or truly stated. The insurer may desire to consult with the medical man who was the last in attendance, since the information possessed by him may have an important bearing upon the risk and influence largely the judgment of the insurer.[1] And there is a breach of warranty as to the last physician who treated assured when a physician testifies that assured had consulted him and assured's evidence also shows such consultation was had.[2] So in case assured had been attended by a physician several times within a shorter period than that specified by him as being the time when he was last so attended, there is a breach of warranty which avoids the policy.[3] In a Massachusetts case it is held that if the application asks, "By what physician were you last attended?" the applicant is held to have been attended by a physician, within the meaning of that question, where it appears that he had called upon a physician and submitted to an examination by him, and had subsequently again called upon the same physician and consulted him professionally.[4] But, although the answers in the application are made warranties, if assured in response to an inquiry for the name of the last physician who attended him, gives the name of one of two who had so attended him it is sufficient where said physician attended him during the latter and greater part of his illness.[5] And if the occasion of attendance by a physician was several years prior to assured's application and was not of sufficient importance to be remembered, his answer "never" in response to a question as to the time when he was last attended by a physician does not invalidate the policy.[6]

If the name of the last medical attendant is asked, it must be given, whether he be a quack or a regular practitioner.[7]

[20] World Mutual Life Ins. Co. v. Schultz, 73 Ill. 586.

[1] Morrison v. Muspratt, 4 Bing. 60, 12 Moore, 231. See Brown v. Metropolitan Life Ins. Co. 65 Mich. 306, 8 Am. St. Rep. 894, 32 N. W. 610.

[2] Life Assoc. of America v. Edwards, 159 Fed. 53, 86 C. C. A. 243.

[3] Wall v. Royal Society of Good Fellows, 179 Pa. 355, 32 Wkly. N. C. 502, 27 Pitts. L. J. (N. S.) 353, 36 Atl. 748.

[4] White v. Providence Savings Life Assur. Soc. 163 Mass. 108, 39 N. E. 771, 27 L.R.A. 398.

[5] Franklin Life Ins. Co. v. Galligan, 71 Ark. 295, 100 Am. St. Rep. 73, 73 S. W. 102.

[6] Singleton v. Prudential Ins. Co. 42 N. Y. Supp. 446, 11 App. Div. 403.

[7] Everett v. Desbrough, 5 Bing. 503, 3 M. & P. 190. See also Kaspryzk v. Metropolitan Life Ins. Co.

(h) The actual fraud or moral turpitude of insured is unimportant upon the question of consulting a physician within a specified time, where his negative statement must have been known by assured to have been false in that he had been under such treatment at various times within the period specified.[8] So in case the statement is made a warranty and a material misrepresentation, even though there is no intent to deceive, the recovery is precluded by the untruth of a representation by insured that he had not been treated by or consulted with any physician as to personal ailments.[9] But where untrue statements as to attendance by a physician are representations only, the right to recover depends upon whether they were made in good faith or not, or were knowingly or wilfully made with intent to deceive.[10] And it is held that an untrue answer to a question whether the applicant has been treated by a physician within a specified time does not forfeit the insurance as a matter of law unless the answer is wilfully false, or fraudulently made or material.[11] Again, upon the question of good faith of insured in making a negative answer as to medical attendance, etc., it is immaterial whether or not the physician consulted by him

140 N. Y. Supp. 211, 79 Misc. 263, 42 Ins. L. J. 607.

[8] Schas v. Equitable Life Assur. Soc. 166 N. C. 55, 81 S. E. 1014 (judgment below for plaintiff reversed and new trial granted; jury found for plaintiff however and held no error in 170 N. C. 420, 87 S. E. 222, 47 Ins. L. J. 151).

[9] Van Woert v. Modern Woodmen of America, 29 N. Dak. 441, 151 N. W. 224.

[10] Metropolitan Life Ins. Co. v. Johnson, 105 Ark. 101, 150 S. W. 393, 42 Ins. L. J. 73.

[11] Modern Woodmen of America v. Lawson, 110 Va. 81, 135 Am. St. Rep. 927, 65 S. E. 509.

See the following cases:

United States.—McClain v. Provident Savings Life Assur. Soc. 110 Fed. 80, 49 C. C. A. 31 (warranty construed to mean that statements were made in good faith and without fraudulent concealment or intent to deceive and it was so found: consultation with physicians, etc.), certiorari denied 184 U. S. 699, 46 L. ed. 765, 23 Sup. Ct. Rep. 938.

Illinois.—Metropolitan Life Ins. Co. v. Mitchell, 175 Ill. 322, 51 N. E. 637 (there was evidence of good faith: consultation, etc.: judgment against insurer); Walsh v. John Hancock Mutual Life Ins. Co. — Ill. App. —, 42 National Corp. Rep. 656 (statements were known by assured to be false: consultation, etc.).

Maryland.—Mutual Life Ins. Co. v. Mullen, 107 Md. 457, 69 Atl. 385 (bad faith shown where assured must have known of falsity, since he had been treated for diseases: no recovery).

Massachusetts. — Kidder v. Supreme Commandery United Order of the Golden Cross, 192 Mass. 326, 78 N. E. 469, 35 Ins. L. J. 778 (presumption of assured's knowledge exists as to her treatment by physicians, etc., but verdict for plaintiff affirmed).

Nebraska.—Modern Woodmen of America v. Wilson, 76 Neb. 344, 107 N. W. 568, 35 Ins. L. J. 582 (nothing to show answer not given in good faith where question as to treatment or consultations susceptible of different constructions: judgment for plaintiff).

was licensed, where he had been consulted under the belief that he was qualified and authorized to practise medicine, especially so where proofs of death, signed by said physician as such, show that he had treated assured and this is not disproved.[12]

In all cases, however, where questions are asked as to assured's medical attendant, consultation of physician, medical treatment, and the like, assured should answer in good faith; having in view that the obvious purpose of the inquiry, manifest from the words used, should be considered. If in the light of the evidence presented it is apparent that assured's answer cannot be viewed otherwise than as evasive and incomplete, and as intended to prevent a disclosure as to past health from the physician who could best give information as to the same, or to prevent further inquiry by the assurer, then such evasive or incomplete answer ought to avoid the contract. But courts should not by construction in any case force words out of their ordinary and accepted meaning, and if the answer given is clearly responsive to the question, according to the accepted meaning of the words used, it should be held sufficient. We believe these suggestions fully accord with the decided cases. The question whether the answers have been made in good faith is generally one for the jury.[13]

(i) As to the effect of statutes: A provision as to attendance by a physician is a warranty rather than a condition and within the statute a misrepresentation as to such attendance will not avoid the policy where the risk was not increased.[14] And where a statute, which precludes a defense for a misrepresentation or warranty made in the negotiation of the contract, is in the alternative; that is, unless made with intent to deceive; or unless the matter misrepresented increases the risk of loss, so that the existence of either is sufficient, although both may exist, but one must exist, a misrepresentation as to consulting a physician standing alone is an insufficient defense, for such a misrepresentation does not of itself materially and necessarily show the intent to deceive or increase the risk,[15] so the statement must have been of matter which contributed to the event or contingency upon which payment of the policy is based.[16] In a Delaware case the decision was based upon the construction of the Pennsylvania statute and it was held the common-law rule in case of false answers was modified by the statute and that the answers of assured in his application, as to consultation with a physician, and as to certain ailments or diseases, etc., were warranties, and that misrepresentations or untrue statements as to the same were material and recovery was therefore precluded.[17] Under a New York decision, statements as to insured's prior physical condition, his consultation with physicians, etc., were not contained in the policy either directly or by reference and it was held that the defense that they were known by assured to be false, but were relied on by insurer and induced issuing the policy, could not be availed of by insurer.[18]

[12] Kaspryzk v. Metropolitan Life Ins. Co. 140 N. Y. Supp. 211, 79 Misc. 263, 42 Ins. L. J. 607. See Everett v. Desbrough, 5 Bing. 503, 3 M. & P. 190.

[13] See cases throughout this section and examine Scoles v. Universal L. Ins. Co. 42 Cal. 523; Reid v. Piedmont & Arlington Life Ins. Co. 58 Mo. 421; Gibson v. American Mutual Life Ins. Co. 37 N. Y. 580; Phillips v. New York Life Ins. Co. 9 N. Y. Supp. 836, 839, 56 Hun, 649; Maynard v. Rhode, 1 Car. & P. 360; Lindenau v. Desbrough, 8 Barn. & C. 586; Hutton v. Waterloo Life Assur. Co. 1 Fost. & F. 735; Forbes v. Edinburgh Life Assur. Co. 10 Ct. Sess. Cas. (Scot.) 451; Taylor's Medical Jurisprudence (ed. 1866) 760. See subdiv. (m) this section.

[14] Metropolitan Life Ins. Co. v. Goodman, 10 Ala. App. 446, 65 So. 449; Code 1907, sec. 4572.

[15] Mutual Life Ins. Co. of N. Y. v. Allen, 174 Ala. 519, 56 So. 568, 41 Ins. L. J. 221; Code 1907, sec. 4572.

[16] Franklin Life Ins. Co. v. Galligan, 71 Ark. 295, 73 S. W. 102. See § 1916 herein.

[17] Grand Fraternity v. Keatley, 4 Boyce (27 Del.) 308, 88 Atl. 553, 42 Ins. L. J. 1715; Pa. act June 23, 885; P. L. 134, s. c. Keatley v. Grand Fraternity, 2 Boyce (25 Del.) 511, 82 Atl. 294, s. c. 2 Boyce (25 Del.) 267, 78 Atl. 874.

See the following cases:

United States.—Paulhamus v. Security Life & Annuity Co. (U. S. C. C.) 163 Fed. 554 (insurer put on inquiry where names of physicians given: act Pa. June 23, 1885, sec. 1; Pub. L. 134, construed); Fidelity Mutual Life Assoc. v. Jeffords, 107 Fed. 402, 46 C. C. A. 377, 53 L.R.A. 193 (if answers in good faith, misstatements or omissions not wilful, do not avoid: all physicians who examined assured within specified time not named: policy not avoided: Ga. Civ. Code 1895, secs. 2095, 2099).

Georgia.—Fair v. Metropolitan Life Ins. Co. 5 Ga. App. 708, 63 S. E. 812, 38 Ins. L. J. 412 (assured stated no physician had attended her for any complaint, etc., this was untrue: no recovery under Civ. Code 1895, sec. 2097).

Missouri.—Lynch v. Prudential Ins. Co. of America, 150 Mo. App. 461, 131 S. W. 145 (false statement that assured not treated by physician and in sound health is not a warranty: does not preclude recovery unless disease treated contributed to death: Rev. Stat. 1899, sec. 7890, Ann. Stat. 1906, p. 3746).

New York.—Aaronson v. New York Life Ins. Co. 142 N. Y. Supp. 568, 81 Misc. 228 (answer as to how long since assured under care of physician held false: N. Y. Ins. L. sec. 58; Consol. L. 1909, c. 28, construed).

North Carolina.—Bryant v. Metropolitan Life Ins. Co. 147 N. C. 181, 60 S. E. 983, 37 Ins. L. J. 354 (misrepresentation that not under care of physician within two years is material: no recovery: 22 Revis. 1905, sec. 4808).

Texas.—Modern Order of Praetorians v. Hollmig, — Tex. Civ. App. —, 105 S. W. 846 (false warranty as to nonconsultation or nontreatment avoids: Rev. Stat. 1895, art. 3096aa; acts 1908, c. 69, p. 94, not applicable to beneficiary associations), s. c. — Tex. Civ. App. —, 103 S. W. 474.

See § 1916 herein.

[18] Archer v. Equitable Life Assur.

(j) If a contract of insurance is made in, and governed by the laws of another state, wherein representations in an application for insurance as to previous medical attendance are material to the risk, as matter of law, such holding is conclusive as to the materiality of such representations in an action on the policy in another state.[19]

(k) As to renewals: Statements by assured in an application for an accident policy that he had not been disabled nor received medical or surgical attention during the past five years, are material and when attached to and made part of the policy, are affirmative warranties, and when reaffirmed in a renewal certificate are falsified where there have been frequent consultations and attendance by physicians and experts and trips abroad, under serious physical and mental conditions, for treatment.[20]

(l) As to waiver: Where the statute makes statements, representations, and not warranties, and expressly declares that any waiver of its provisions shall be void, an agreement that answers to inquiries are made "inducements to issue of the proposed policy" does avail insurer; and this applies to a statement that assured had not consulted physicians within the past five years.[1]

Soc. of U. S. 218 N. Y. 18, 112 N. E. 433, aff'g 154 N. Y. Supp. 579, 169 App. Div. 43; Ins. L. sec. 58; Consol. Laws, c. 28, sec. 58; Laws 1906, sec. 16.

[19] Fidelity Mutual Life Assoc. v. Harris, 94 Tex. 25, 86 Am. St. Rep. 813, 57 S. W. 635, 29 Ins. L. J. 769. See Franklin Life Ins. Co. v. Galligan, 71 Ark. 295, 73 S. W. 102; McKnelly v. Brotherhood of American Yeomen, 160 Wis. 514, 152 N. W. 169. See §§ 225 et seq. herein.

On conflict of laws as to insurance contracts, see notes in 63 L.R.A. 833; 23 L.R.A.(N.S.) 968; and 52 L.R.A. (N.S.) 275.

[20] Rathman v. New Amsterdam Casualty Co. 186 Mich. 115, L.R.A. 1915E, 980, 152 N. W. 983, 46 Ins. L. J. 373. See Mutual Life Ins. Co. of N. Y. v. Allen, 174 Ala. 511, 56 So. 568, 41 Ins. L. J. 221; Stanyan v. Mutual Life Ins. Co. — Vt. —, L.R.A.1917C, 350, 99 Atl. 417; New York Life Ins. Co. v. Franklin, 118 Va. 418, 87 S. E. 584.

[1] Goff v. Mutual Life Ins. Co. of N. Y. 131 La. 98, 59 So. 28, 41 Ins. L. J. 1415.

As to waiver, see also the following cases:

United States.—Caruthers v. Kansas Mutual Life Ins. Co. (U. S. C. C.) 108 Fed. 487 (breach of warranty as to name and address of each physician, etc., knowledge of medical examiner cannot be imputed to insurer).

Arkansas.—Franklin Life Ins. Co. v. Galligan, 71 Ark. 295, 73 S. W. 102 (estopped by knowledge of examining physician that answers as written down by him are false).

Iowa.—Sargent v. Modern Brotherhood of America, 148 Iowa, 600, 127 N. W. 52 (medical examiner informed by applicant as to last attendance of physician and for what complaint he was consulted: insurer estopped).

Maine.—Strickland v. Peerless Casualty Co. 112 Me. 100, 90 Atl. 974 (finding sustained, that agent had full knowledge of prior sickness; statement that no medical treatment for five years: plaintiff recovered: Rev. Stat. c. 49, sec. 93).

New Jersey.—Fish v. Metropolitan Life Ins. Co. 75 N. J. L. 822, 69 Atl. 176 (breach of warranty that assured

(m) Whether or not insured has misrepresented or falsified concerning medical attendance, consultation with, treatment by, physicians and the like, is ordinarily a question for the jury.[2] So where the question as to attendance by physicians, their names, and the dates, ailments, etc., is so complicated that assured may reasonably believe that he has fully answered the question whether his statements were made honestly in good faith and without intent to deceive, is one for the jury.[3] But it is also held that where negative answers as to consultations with other physicians than the one named, and as to having had other medical attendance, or having been prescribed for by other physicians, are manifestly material and the consultations, etc., did not relate to trivial illnesses, it is the duty of the court to direct a verdict for assured if the testimony of its witnesses is to be believed, unless there is something to take the case out of the rule, but whether the answers were correct was for the jury.[4] had not been under care of physician, etc.: knowledge of examining physician: no recovery).

North Dakota.—Van Woert v. Modern Woodmen of America, 30 N. D. 27, 151 N. W. 224 (warranty as to treatment by or consultation with physician, etc.: not waived by assurer's acts without knowledge).

South Carolina—Gambrell v. United States Health & Accident Ins. Co. 83 S. C. 236, 65 S. E. 231 (warranty that no surgical or medical attendance, etc.: no waiver).

[2] Indiana.—Collins v. Catholic Order of Foresters, 43 Ind. App. 549, 88 N. E. 87, 38 Ins. L. J. 737 (whether or not assured knew his statements to be false).

Missouri.—Winn v. Modern Woodmen of America, 157 Mo. App. 1, 137 S. W. 292, 40 Ins. L. J. 407 (prima facie case entitled to submission), s. c. 146 Mo. App. 69, 123 S. W. 59, s. c. 138 Mo. App. 701, 119 S. W. 536.

New York.—Smith v. Travelers' Ins. Co. 135 N. Y. Supp. 18, 41 Ins. L. J. 1257 (for jury whether there has been a violation of warranty that insured had not been disabled nor received medical attention within past five years).

Oklahoma.—National Union v. Kelley, 42 Okla. 98, 140 Pac. 1157 (is for jury, but jury waived: medical attendance, etc.).

Pennsylvania.—Smith v. Metropolitan Life Ins. Co. 183 Pa. 504, 38 Atl. 1038 (whether bad faith or material omission in failing to disclose any other than named physician).

[3] Modern Woodmen of America v. Wilson, 76 Neb. 344, 107 N. W. 568, 39 Ins. L. J. 582.

[4] Rigby v. Metropolitan Life Ins. Co. 240 Pa. 332, 87 Atl. 428, 42 Ins. L. J. 1235; act June 23, 1885; Pub. L. 134 (considering Murphy v. Prudential Ins. Co. 205 Pa. 444, 55 Atl. 19; Lutz v. Mutual Life Ins. Co. 186 Pa. 527, 40 Atl. 1104; United Brethren Mutual Aid Soc. v. O'Hara, 120 Pa. 256, 13 Atl. 932).

See the following cases:

United States.—New York Life Ins. Co. v. Moats, 207 Fed. 48, 125 C. C. A. 143, 42 Ins. L. J. 1671.

Life Association of America v. Edwards, 159 Fed. 53, 86 C. C. A. 243 (error not to direct verdict where breach of warranty appears as to last physician consulted).

Kentucky.—Brisou v. Metropolitan Life Ins. Co. — Ky. —, 115 S. W. 785 (evidence uncontradicted: not error to direct verdict).

Minnesota. — Wheelock v. Home

§ 2071. Medical examiner: statements to.[5]—Statements made to the insurer's medical examiner may undoubtedly be made material by stipulation, or they may be warranties, or only representations. In ascertaining under which division they come, reference must be had to the terms of the particular contract, subject largely to those general rules which govern in other cases of representations and warranties. The position which the medical examiner holds as agent of the company, together with his professional character, has not infrequently induced courts to incline to as favorable a construction as possible, consistent with the rules of law, of assured's statements to such medical examiner, where it is evident that assured has exercised good faith and fairness in endeavoring to truthfully answer the questions asked,[6] especially so where the policy provides that such questions will be fully explained by the examiner.[7]

In a Louisiana case the application declared that the statements and representations therein contained, together with the declarations made to the medical examiner, constituted the basis of the contract, and that the same were warranted full, complete, and true, and that the warranty was a condition precedent, and the recitals of the contract contained a substantially similar provision, and referred to the application as a part thereof. Upon the reverse of the policy was indorsed a copy of the application, the medical examination, and the warranty clause of the contract, and the court declared "them one complete and homogeneous whole," and that the representations so made warranties prevented a recovery, there being a breach of said warranty.[8] And if an applicant for a policy warrants in his application that his answers to the medical examiner, on the reverse side of the application, are "true and accurate," and that they constitute the basis for the covenant, such answers become warranties, where the policy recites that it is executed in consideration of the warranties made in the application, and that the application shall be a part of the covenant; and a false statement

Ins. Co. 115 Minn. 177, 131 N. W. 1081 (prima facie case of fraud as to consultations that defendant was entitled to submit to jury, not established).

New Jersey.—Brunjes v. Metropolitan Life Ins. Co. 83 N. J. L. 296, 84 Atl. 1062 (breach of warranty as to undisclosed treatment shown as matter of law).

Oregon.—Beard v. Royal Neighbors of America, 53 Oreg. 102, 14 L.R.A. (N.S.) 798, 99 Pac. 83 (question one of law).

[5] See § 1987, also § 474a herein.

[6] See Mowry v. Rosendale, 74 N. Y. 360; Miller v. Mutual Benefit Life Ins. Co. 31 Iowa, 216, 235, 7 Am. Rep. 122. See § 412, and chap. XXIV. (§§ 472 et seq.) herein.

[7] Connecticut General Life Ins. Co. v. McCurdy, 89 Pa. St. 363. See § 311 herein.

On medical examiner as agent of insurer or of insured, see note in 41 L.R.A.(N.S.) 506.

[8] Weil v. New York Life Ins. Co. 47 La. Ann. pt. 2, 1405, 17 So. 853.

made therein by the applicant renders the policy void.[9] So an untrue answer written by the medical examiner that an applicant for insurance was not at the time pregnant, although it is his deduction from her answers and believed by her to be true, will avoid the policy where the applicant warrants in the application, the answers to be true, and declares that the answers as written by the examiner are as given by her.[10] And although by construction the answers in the medical examiner's report do not constitute warranties but representations only, still they are material to the risk and must be substantially true to justify recovery.[11]

But it is also decided that declarations of insured to the medical examiner for insurer are not made warranties by a stipulation in the application that the applicant warrants that the statements in it "are true, full, and complete, . . . and are offered to the company, together with those contained in the declaration to the . . . medical examiner as a consideration for, and as the basis of, the contract." [12] Nor will a false statement in an application defeat liability on the policy on the theory that it misled the medical examiner, where he testifies that he made his report on his own examination, and paid no attention to such answers.[13] And statements to the medical examiner will be considered as representations and not warranties where defendant itself has so treated them in his answer in an action on the policy and also by his requested instructions.[14] So where the report of the insurer's medical examiner as to assured's health and condition is alone relied on by the company, rather than the assured's statements, and what is said by him to the physician is not reported to the company, the policy is not avoided by assured's incorrect answers to said examiner.[15]

[9] Eminent Household of Columbian Woodmen v. Prater, 24 Okla. 214, 23 L.R.A.(N.S.) 917, 103 Pac. 558.

On what reference in policy to application will make it part of policy, see notes in 19 L.R.A.(N.S.) 88; 33 L.R.A.(N.S.) 676.

[10] Supreme Lodge Knights & Ladies of Honor v. Payne, 101 Tex. 449, 15 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1277 (annotated on effect of honest mistake in answer as to health of insured warranted by him to be true), 108 S. W. 1160, 37 Ins. L. J. 324. See § 474a herein.

That if warranty of statements to medical examiner breached, recovery may be precluded regardless of good faith, etc., see Supreme Conclave Knights of Damon v. Wood, 120 Ga. 328, 47 S. E. 940.

[11] National Union v. Arnhorst, 74 Ill. App. 482.

[12] Home Life Ins. Co. v. Fisher, 188 U. S. 726, 47 L. ed. 677, 23 Sup. Ct. 380.

[13] Roe v. National Life Assoc. 137 Iowa, 696, 17 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1144, 115 N. W. 500.

[14] Wolfe v. Supreme Lodge Knights & Ladies of Honor, 160 Mo. 675, 61 S. W. 637.

[15] Higbee v. Guardian Life Ins. Co. 66 Barb. (N. Y.) 462; Hogle v. Guardian Life Ins. Co. 4 Abb. Pr. N. S. (N. Y.) 346.

Again, declarations made to the medical examiner are within a statutory provision that no answer shall be deemed material or avoid the policy unless the matter misrepresented shall have actually contributed to the emergency or event on which the loss becomes due and payable.[16] Nor can insurer avail itself by way of a breach of warranty in the application and the medical examiner's report where, contrary to the statute, a copy thereof is not attached to the policy as required.[17]

Knowledge of assured's agent and of its medical examiner that assured was suffering with a certain disease and that his statements as to the same were false, precludes a defense on the ground of falsity of such representations, and the withholding of such fact from assurer by the medical examiner makes the fraud the wilful act of its own agent alone.[18] And in case assurer's medical examiner writes words in the application without insured's knowledge or consent, it is estopped to rely thereon in defense.[19] So where assured truly answers questions and they are erroneously or falsely recorded by the medical examiner, such falsity does not avoid the policy.[20] But it is decided that untrue answers entered by the so-

[16] Keller v. Home Life Ins. Co. 198 Mo. 440, 95 S. W. 903; Rev. Stat. 1899, sec. 7890.

As to representations under statutes, see § 1916 herein.

[17] Paulhamus v. Security Life & Annuity Co. (U. S. C. C.) 163 Fed. 554; under act Pa. May 11, 1881, sec. 1; P. L. 20. Examine Dimick v. Metropolitan Life Ins. Co. (Metropolitan Life Ins. Co. v. Dimick) 69 N. J. L. 384, 62 L.R.A. 774, 55 Atl. 291, 33 Ins. L. J. 3. See §§ 190 et seq. herein.

On conflict of laws as to necessity of attaching application or copy thereof to policy, see notes in 63 L.R.A. 867; 23 L.R.A.(N.S.) 982; 52 L.R.A.(N.S.) 285; on failure to attach copy of application to policy as affecting right of insurer to rely on representations or warranties incorporated in the policy itself, note in 19 L.R.A.(N.S.) 102.

[18] Northwestern Mutual Life Ins. Co. v. Farnsworth, 60 Colo. 324, 153 Pac. 699.

See Gallant v. Metropolitan Life Ins. Co. 167 Mass. 79, 44 N. E. 1073, 26 Ins. L. J. 543 (certificate of medical examiner that he found insured in sound health does not preclude it from denying that assured was in "sound health," especially so where policy date is later than that of the certificate).

On effect of knowledge of agent acting in two capacities, see note in 3 L.R.A.(N.S.) 444; on effect of knowledge of insurer's agent of falsety of statements in application, note in 16 L.R.A. 33; bad faith of assured as affecting estoppel of insurer to set up falsity of answers in application because of agent's knowledge of such falsety, note in 14 L.R.A.(N.S.) 279.

[19] Mutual Reserve Fund Life Assoc. v. Farmer, 65 Ark. 581, 47 S. W. 850. See § 474a herein.

[20] Sternaman v. Metropolitan Life Ins. Co. 170 N. Y. 13, 57 L.R.A. 318, 62 N. E. 763; Carmichael v. John Hancock Mutual Life Ins. Co. Ltd. 95 N. Y. Supp. 587, 48 Misc. 386 (medical examiner acts as insurer's agent and it is bound by his knowledge and interpretation of the answers, and his errors in relation thereto, and is estopped accordingly; judgment for licitor and medical examiner and signed by the applicant bind him and void the policy where such answers are a warranty under the contract and there is a breach.[1] And even though by statute a soliciting agent is insurer's agent his acts amounting to fraudulent conspiracy with assured do not bind it where under a warranty there is a concealment of a known disease from the medical examiner.[2] It is also held that assured will be estopped to deny and to have adopted his statements to the medical examiner, and to be charged with knowledge of the same, where he accepts and retains the contract for a long period of time in a place where it is frequently seen.[3]

Under an Iowa statute[4] in order to constitute the fraud or de-plaintiff below was, however, reversed and new trial granted); Protected Home Circle v. Winter, 14 Ohio C. C. 194. See Butler v. Michigan Mutual Life Ins. Co. 184 N. Y. 337, 77 N. E. 398, 35 Ins. L. J. 471 (distinction made between knowledge, acts, and duties of soliciting agent and medical examiner, and falsity of statements to latter when warranted avoids the policy, although solicitor was informed of facts), rev'g 87 N. Y. Supp. 1129, 93 App. Div. 619.

On effect of agent's insertion in the application of false answers to questions correctly answered by the insured, see notes in 4 L.R.A.(N.S.) 607; L.R.A.1915A, 273.

[1] Dimick v. Metropolitan Life Ins. Co. (Metropolitan Life Ins. Co. v. Dimick) 69 N. J. L. 384, 62 L.R.A. 774, 55 Atl. 291, 33 Ins. L. J. 3.

[2] Wallen v. National Life Assoc. 168 Mo. App. 503, 153 S. W. 1065, 42 Ins. L. J. 618.

[3] National Union v. Arnhorst, 74 Ill. App. 482.

On retention of policy as waiver of mistake or fraud of insurer or its agent, see note in 67 L.R.A. 705.

[4] "Physician's certificate. In any case where the medical examiner or physician acting as such, of any life insurance company or association doing business in the state shall issue a certificate of health or declare the applicant a fit subject for insurance, or so report to the company or association or its agent under the rules and regulations of such company or association, it shall be thereby estopped from setting up in defense of the action on such policy or certificate that the assured was not in the condition of health required by the policy at the time of the issuance or delivery thereof unless the same was procured by or through the fraud or deceit of the assured." Iowa Ann. Code 1897, p. 645, sec. 1812.

"Medical examination. Said officials shall decline to approve any such form of policy or contract of insurance unless the same shall, in all respects, conform to the laws of this state applicable thereto, and unless the issuance of the same is based upon a satisfactory medical examination of the applicant by a physician duly authorized to practise medicine or by an osteopathic physician duly authorized to practise osteopathy in the state of Iowa, or the state where examined, and no policy or contract of insurance shall be issued by any insurance company to any individual in this state until such examination shall have been passed and duly approved by the medical examiner or medical board of such company." Supplemental Supp. Code Iowa, p. 144, c. 6, sec. 1783–b. Ann. Code Iowa (1898–1907) Tit. IX. c. 6, sec. 1783b (same as above except that above has words "or by an osteopathic physician duly authorized to practise osteopathy").

ceit necessary to prevent an estoppel against insurer, where the medical examiner, or physician acting as such, has issued a certificate of health or declared the applicant a fit subject for insurance, or so reported to the company, etc., there must have been an intent to deceive, and the false statements, or misrepresentations, must have been relied on by said examiner, or the concealment claimed must have misled him, and where assured, relying upon the agent's assurance that the application is in conformity with insurer's rules and regulations, signs it with knowledge of its contents, assured is estopped to assert falsity of the answers therein.[5] Under the Louisiana statute: "Life, health and accident insurance companies which issue policies or contracts of insurance to insured without a medical examination by a physician, shall waive their rights to claim forfeiture for misrepresentation," etc., under certain conditions.[6] This enactment is binding and enforceable but it does not apply where examinations of insured were made by insurer's physicians prior to issuing a policy.[7] And the Wisconsin statute of estoppel which is similar to that of Iowa does not apply to a contract made before its enactment.[8]

[5] Roe v. National Life Assoc. 137 Iowa, 696, 17 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1144, 115 N. W. 500; Code sec. 1812. See Smith v. Supreme Lodge Knights & Ladies of Golden Precept, 123 Iowa, 676, 99 N. W. 553 (case of association held not subject to provisions of Sec. 1812); Wood v. Farmers' Life Assoc. 121 Iowa, 44, 95 N. W. 226 (certificate of medical examiners is intended by sec. 1812, and not the medical director's approval of his report); Peterson v. Des Moines Life Assoc. 115 Iowa, 668, 87 N. W. 397 (by medical examiner or physician is meant the one upon whom devolves the duty of examining the applicant determining the state of his health and reporting as to desirability of the risk; and as involved in this determination all matters bearing upon said risk being a proper and acceptable one are within the estoppel whether they relate to the time of issuance of the policy or prior thereto; but warranties as to other matters than assured's health are not within the intent of this enactment); Stewart v. Equitable Mutual Life Assoc. 110 Iowa, 528, 81 N. W. 782 (insurer is estopped where the medical examiner has declared the applicant a fit subject for insurance, except in cases of fraud and deceit which has misled said examiner, and it must be alleged that said report was improperly obtained); Nelson v. Nederland Life Ins. Co. Ltd. 110 Iowa, 600, 81 N. W. 807 (must be alleged that report improperly obtained); Weimer v. Economic Life Assoc. 108 Iowa, 451, 79 N. W. 123, 28 Ins. L. J. 659 (the fraud or deceit meant is that used in procuring the certificate; or by which said examiner is misled; and the medical examiner's declaration or assertion that the applicant is a proper risk is sufficient to bring it within the enactment); Welch v. Union Central Life Ins. Co. 108 Iowa, 224, 50 L.R.A. 774, 78 N. W. 853, 31 Ins. L. J. 735 (said certificate is not conclusive if it is procured by fraud resulting in fraudulently procuring the policy; McClain's Code § 1759, s. c. 117 Iowa, 394, 90 N. W. 828).

[6] La. act 1908, p. 139, No. 97.

[7] Hanmore v. Metropolitan Life Ins. Co. 137 La. 137, 63 So. 385, 46 Ins. L. J. 8.

It rests upon insurer, when it relies thereon as a defense, to plead and prove the untruth or falsity of insured's answers to the medical examiner,[9] but its answer and request for instructions may be of such a character as to limit it to a claim of misrepresentation only.[10] And the medical examiner's confidential report recommending insured as a first class risk is competent evidence in his favor,[11] and admissions against insurer.[12] If the testimony of insured and the medical examiner, is flatly contradictory upon the points of full disclosure and untrue statements, the jury should determine the issue.[13]

§ 2072. Medical examiner: subject of inquiry.[14]—It is not possible to give a specific rule concerning what constitutes legitimate subjects of inquiry by the medical examiner. Matter which may seem unimportant may be deemed important by the examiner, and may be actually so, in ascertaining the condition of assured's health, and it is said that the assured's pecuniary circumstances may be inquired into as matter having some relation to the expectancy of life, and it has been held that the medical examiner, as a witness, might be asked whether he made such inquiry and what response was given, and how far he deemed such answer material in deciding to advise the taking of the risk, and that the very point of inquiry was whether the pecuniary circumstances were deemed by him material, and whether he would have advised the acceptance of the risk if it had not appeared that the applicant was a man of means. The court also says, referring to the purposes of a medical examination: "The inquiry involves an examination not only into the present state of the various organs and functions of the body, but into the tendency of those organs and functions to take on diseases as affected by habits of mind, as well as of body, temperament, tendency to disease from

[8] McKnelly v. Brotherhood of American Yeomen, 160 Wis. 514, 152 N. W. 169, St. 1913, sec. 4202s.

[9] Iowa Life Ins. Co. v. Haughton, 46 Ind. App. 467, 87 N. E. 702; Wolfe v. Supreme Lodge Knights & Ladies of Honor, 160 Mo. 675, 61 S. W. 637; Carmichael v. John Hancock Mutual Life Ins. Co. 95 N. Y. Supp. 587, 48 Misc. 386. But held contra as to warranty and claim that medical examiner did not correctly transcribe the answers, Hoeland v. Western Union Life Ins. Co. 58 Wash. 100, 107 Pac. 866.

[10] Wolfe v. Supreme Lodge Knights & Ladies of Honor, 160 Mo. 675, 61 S. W. 637.

[11] McKnelly v. Brotherhood of American Yeomen, 160 Wis. 514, 152 N. W. 169.

[12] McGowan v. Supreme Court of Independent Order of Foresters, 104 Wis. 173, 80 N. W. 603.

[13] Sternaman v. Metropolitan Life Ins. Co. 87 N. Y. Supp. 904, 94 App. Div. 610, aff'd 181 N. Y. 514, 73 N. E. 1133.

[14] See § 1987 herein.

hereditary causes, and the occupation and condition in life of the subject." In this case, however, it also appeared that the assured falsely represented to the general agent of the company that he was a moneyed man.[15] We are inclined, however, to the belief that the assured is justified in presuming that the business of the medical examiner is to examine him as to his health and the physical condition of his body, and to report thereon to the company, and that this is the extent of his agency, and therefore, if such examiner inquires about a matter which upon its face bears no apparent relation to his health or physical condition, or which is out of the line of what may be reasonably assumed within the scope of a professional inquiry, that it would be but fair to the assured, before holding him bound by his answers to such questions, to require proof that the scope and bearing upon the risk of such question was explained or otherwise known to the assured, so that a basis may exist for the presumption that he answered understandingly, with a full knowledge of the materiality of his physical condition, to the matter inquired into, and that consequently he actually knew, or ought to have known, that the required information was necessary to be given to enable the medical examiner to make his report.

§ 2073. Moored safely in certain harbor: warranty: marine risk.[16] A warranty that the ship is safely moored in a designated harbor does not necessitate that she be kept safely moored in one place in said harbor. The need of repairs and taking in of cargo may justify her removal from one part of the harbor to another, and the warranty is complied with if she is safely moored at each place to which she is so removed.[17]

§ 2074. Occupation: life and accident risks: representation and warranty: continuing warranty.[18]—(a) It may be generally stated preliminary to the consideration of, and in connection with, the point of representations and warranties that by occupation is ordinarily meant one's general occupation, the principal business of his life, to which he devotes his time, abilities and energies; that which

[15] Valton v. National Life Fund Assoc. 40 N. Y. (1 Keyes) 21, rev'g 17 Abb. Pr. (N. Y.) 268. See s. c. 20 N. Y. 32, 22 Barb. (N. Y.) 9, 4 Abb. Dec. (N. Y.) 437. See Missouri Valley Life Ins. Co. v. Sturges, 18 Kan. 93, 26 Am. Rep. 764.

On misstatement of income of insured, see note in L.R.A.1917C, 344.

[16] See § 1987 herein.

[17] Clarke v. Westmore, Selw. N. P. 1008. See § 2177a herein.

As to continuance, etc., of risk: moored in good safety, see §§ 1537 et seq. herein, see also §§ 1498, 1500 et seq. herein.

[18] See § 1987 herein.

As to prohibited occupations: hazardous, extra hazardous, etc., see §§ 2236 et seq. herein.

As to special risks and losses: occupation of assured: loss of time: change of occupation: limitation of liability, see §§ 2870, 2870a herein.

As to illegal occupation of assured: life risk, see § 2538 herein.

constitutes his regular vocation, business or calling in contra-distinction to that in which he may be temporarily and independently engaged; a present employment may constitute an occupation but only one of a temporary character; a temporary business in which one is engaged may be widely divergent in its nature from his regular business or calling, or it may be of a similar nature, or it may cover, as it frequently does, acts which are necessarily incidental to and a part of one's principal or regular business or vocation. In all cases, however, the application of the word occupation must depend largely upon the particular circumstances of each case, the terms of the contract, the intent of the parties thereto, and the purposes thereof with reference to the risk insured against, especially so, in those cases where risks are classified, or where the insurance is under a benefit certificate with such constitutional provisions, rules, by-laws, etc., as are a valid binding part of the contract. In addition the question whether a statement is a warranty, or merely a representation must be considered as must also the effect of applicable, controlling statutes.[19] Again, a reasonable construction such as intelligent business men would ordinarily give to the word "occupation" will also be held to be that intended.[20] And it is decided that even under a warranty there is a presumption that a person continues in an occupation within the meaning of that term unless it appears by some act of his that he has abandoned it without intent or ability to re-engage therein.[1] But it is also held that a statement as to occupation

[19] United States.—Gotfredson v. German Commercial Accident Co. L.R.A.1915D, 312, 218 Fed. 582, 134 C. C. A. 310, 45 Ins. L. J. 525.

Alabama. — Supreme Lodge, Knights & Ladies of Honor v. Baker, 163 Ala. 518, 50 So. 958.

Massachusetts.—Everson v. General Fire & Life Assur. Corp. 202 Mass. 169, 88 N. E. 658, 38 Ins. L. J. 923, 929.

New York.—Linzee v. Frankfort General Insurance Co. 147 N. Y. Supp. 606, 162 App. Div. 282, 44 Ins. L. J. 83 ("as applied to a person, occupation is the means followed to gain a livelihood, as a business or employment"—Putnam, J.).

Wisconsin. — Stevens v. Modern Woodmen of America, 127 Wis. 606, 107 N. W. 8 (some degree of permanency for hire or profit is required).

See also Webster's Universal Dict. (1910, 1911) "occupation;" also cases throughout this section.

We have elsewhere herein fully discussed the principles governing questions of concealment (c. LV. §§ 1844 et seq.); representations and misrepresentations (c. LVI. §§ 1882 et seq.); warranties (c. LVII. §§ 1942 et seq.); and the effect of statutes in connection therewith (1916), and the reader is referred thereto.

[20] Miller v. Missouri State Life Ins. Co. 168 Mo. App. 330, 153 S. W. 1080.

[1] Supreme Lodge Knights & Ladies of Honor v. Baker, 163 Ala. 518, 50 So. 958. See Clemens v. Metropolitan Life Ins. Co. 20 Pa. Super. Ct. 567.

refers to the time when made and is not an admission that the same occupation was that of assured at the time of a future accident.[2]

(b) If the policy is conditioned to be avoided by any untrue or fraudulent answer to the question asked in the application, answers as to assured's occupation are representations, and must be proven affirmatively to have been fraudulently made or material to the risk to avoid the policy.[3] So where in response to an inquiry as to his profession, occupation, residence, etc., the assured wrote, "Esquire Saltley Hall," the policy was held not avoided, though he kept an ironmonger's shop in the shire.[4] Nor does the fact that insured was engaged in shoveling concrete in a tunnel or covered subway excavation already dug, necessarily falsify his representation that his duties in his occupation of laborer are "Digging —not handling explosives; no tunneling."[5] And a statement by assured in an application for an accident policy that his occupation is that of an "earthenware manufacturer" is not falsified by the fact that while on a visit to a farm he had received his death injury while loading hay.[6] So where assured's occupation is stated as that of farmer and real estate agent the statement is not falsified by the fact that shortly prior thereto he was employed for a short time by a photographer, that he was in arrears in payments on his land and that subsequent to the policy date forfeitures were entered against him.[7] It is also decided that representations in answer to inquiries as to occupation are not warranties, but mere representations made material by the contract, and the only question for the jury is whether they were true or false when made.[8] Nor does the fact that assured both makes and peddles soda water constitute a breach of warranty that he is a "soda water maker," where it appears that in addition to said answer the medical examiner reported, as to the effect of the occupation on the risk, that

[2] Providence Life & Accident Ins. Co. v. Black, — Ala. App. —, 73 So. 757. See §§ 1917–1922 herein.

[3] Southern Life Ins. Co. v. Booker, 9 Heisk. (56 Tenn.) 606, 24 Am. Rep. 344. See Hobbs v. Iowa Mutual Benefit Assoc. 82 Iowa, 107, 31 Am. St. Rep. 466, 11 L.R.A. 299, 47 N. W. Rep. 983.

[4] Perrins v. Marine & General Travelers' Ins. Co. 2 El. & E. 317, 324.

[5] Vinginerra v. Commercial Casualty Ins. Co. 156 N. Y. Supp. 573, 47 Ins. L. J. 317.

[6] North American Life & Accident Ins. Co. v. Burrough, 69 Pa. St. 43, 8 Am. Rep. 212.

On temporary pursuit of other activities as change of occupation within meaning of accident insurance policy, see note in 24 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1174.

[7] Fidelity Mutual Life Assoc. v. Mettler, 185 U. S. 308, 46 L. ed. 922, 22 Sup. Ct. 662.

[8] Mutual Benefit Life Ins. Co. v. Wise, 34 Md. 582.

assured was "out of doors most of the time selling soda water, in my opinion a healthy occupation."[9] And the occupation of school teacher is not changed by the fact that assured superintends the erection of certain buildings for his own use, and while so doing falls and is killed.[10] In another case an accident policy contained the condition, incorporated therein by express reference, that fraud, misstatement, or concealment of any fact in the application should avoid the contract. One of the defenses was that assured had fraudulently misstated and concealed the fact that he owned and operated a sawmill and personally worked with the saws, etc., when he had stated that he was by occupation a miller. It was held, however, that inasmuch as his statement was true when made there was no false representation where he made his sawmill attachment at or about that time; accordingly the defense of fraud having failed for lack of evidence and the fair construction of the written contract being that, if one steps aside from his given occupation and is injured, he may nevertheless recover something, insured was entitled to judgment.[11] Again, a warranty in an accident policy that assured is a switchman is not continuing in the sense that he thereby contracts not to become a brakeman, or that he will not engage in any other occupation.[12] So supervision may properly include taking an active part in work, and it does not necessarily mean doing no manual labor, nor regulating and directing the work of subordinates alone; this is instanced by a case where assured stated that his occupation was "supervising a dray line only," but a question concerning his duties "as so occupied" was left unanswered, and it appeared that during the dull season he drove and operated the dray himself but had assistants at other times. It was accordingly declared that he in fact supervised the business at all times and his answer was not untruthful.[13]

[9] Grattan v. Metropolitan Life Ins. Co. 80 N. Y. 281, 36 Am. Rep. 617.

[10] Stone v. United States Casualty Ins. Co. 34 N. J. Law, 371.

[11] Denoyer v. First National Accident Co. 145 Wis. 450, 130 N. W. 475, 40 Ins. L. J. 1038.

[12] Provident Life Ins. Co. v. Fennell, 49 Ill. 180.

[13] Peterson v. Time Indemnity Co. 152 Wis. 562, 140 N. W. 286, 42 Ins. L. J. 643.

In the following cases there was also no breach of warranty nor misrepresentation: Pacific Mutual Life Ins. Co. v. Bailey, 25 Ky. L. Rep. 1456, 78 S. W. 119 ("general merchandise, retail, proprietor;" demurrer to defense of other occupations sustained; Ky. Stat. sec. 639); Perrin v. Prudential Ins. Co. 62 N. Y. Supp. 720, 30 Misc. 608 (being employed occasionally as bevel smoother of plate glass, does not falsify statement that occupation is dry goods store keeper), aff'g 61 N. Y. Supp. 249, 29 Misc. 597; Clemens v. Metropolitan Life Ins. Co. 20 Pa. Super. Ct. 567 (statement that only occupation was "laborer in rolling mill" held not untrue where he had quit work several months prior thereto but had not abandoned occupation).

A question as to occupation, in an application for life insurance, does not call for information as to the fact of the applicant being an habitual embezzler.[14]

(c) A warranty by assured that he is a grocer does not, in the absence of evidence of an intent to deceive, avoid the policy where he has not further disclosed the fact that he sells liquor at retail in a part of his store.[15] But one who keeps a restaurant adjacent to a saloon between which there is an archway, allowing free passage, and with whom the saloon-keeper boards, is not, though he sometimes, when the latter is at meals or temporarily absent, waits on customers at the bar, without having any interest in the business, connected with the sale of liquors. His statement, therefore, in an application that he is not in any way connected with the sale of ale, wine, or liquor is, true, and cannot occasion the forfeiture of a policy issued to him.[16] And where there is no warranty by reason of the application not being made a part of the policy, when required by statute, and there was a statement by assured that he had never been engaged in the liquor business but it appeared that quite a number of years prior thereto he had, as owner of a drug store, sold liquors therein in the manner usual to such establishments, a judgment for plaintiff was affirmed, for although considered as a representation it was literally untrue, it did not vary from the truth in any material respect and did not increase the risk, and, as was forcibly stated by the court, per Aldrich, D. J., "It is impossible, as said, to see that such business conditions, which ceased so long before the contract, could in a substantial and material way have enhanced the risk; and it is difficult to see that in a case of alleged misrepresentation, not warranties, a verdict against an insured, based upon such evidence or conditions as

[14] Penn Mutual Life Ins. Co. v. Mechanics' Savings Bank & Trust Co. 72 Fed. 413, 19 C. C. A. 286, 37 U. S. App. 692, 73 Fed. 653, 19 C. C. A. 316, 43 U. S. App. 75, 38 L.R.A. 33.

[15] McGurk v. Metropolitan Life Ins. Co. 56 Conn. 528, 1 L.R.A. 563, 16 Atl. 263. See High Court Independent Order of Foresters v. Schweitzer, 70 Ill. App. 139, 2 Chic. L. J. Wkly. 246, aff'd 171 Ill. 328, 49 N. E. 506; Marzulli v. Metropolitan Life Ins. Co. 81 N. J. L. 166, 78 Atl. 1051 (grocery business and sold liquor incidently therein; warranty that not engaged in sale, etc.: judgment for plaintiff); Malicki v. Chicago Guaranty Fund Life Soc. 119 Mich. 151, 5 Det. Leg. N. 743, 77 N. W. 690, 28 Ins. L. J. 216 (tending bar only occasionally falsifies statement that applicant was in grocery business with bar, but bar was tended exclusively by clerk).

As to prohibited risks: engaging in liquor or saloon business, see § 2236b herein.

On who is engaged in the liquor business within the meaning of an insurance contract, see note in 45 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1144.

[16] Collins v. Metropolitan Life Ins. Co. 32 Mont. 329, 108 Am. St. Rep. 578, 80 Pac. 609.

showing substantial and material misrepresentations, should not be set aside on the ground that it was against the evidence. Suppose this question had been answered: 'Yes! as a druggist, according to the usual course of such establishments. But my connection with that concern ceased more than ten years ago;' is it reasonable to suppose that the assurance company would have refused the risk for that reason?"[17] Again, if the nature of assured's business or occupation is falsely stated, as where he is asked whether he has been connected with the sale of beer, wine, or intoxicating liquors, and he falsely answers "No," there is a breach of warranty as a matter of law, which clearly vitiates the contract, and there is not, in such case, a question for the jury whether there is a breach of warranty, but the answer being false, a verdict must be directed for the insurer.[18] But where a similar question was asked, and the assured answered, "No, keep no bar and sell only at wholesale; have government license and town license," it was held a question for the jury whether the statement was so far false as to constitute a breach of warranty, where it appeared that a liquor store was kept by the assured, wherein he sold liquor by the barrel and in quantities less than five gallons, but not to be drunk on the premises.[19]

[17] Hadley v. Provident Savings Life Assur. Soc. of N. Y. 90 Fed. 390, aff'd Provident Savings Life Assur. Soc. of N. Y. v. Hadley, 102 Fed. 856, 43 C. C. A. 25, 29 Ins. L. J. 998, certiorari denied, 179 U. S. 686, 46 L. ed. 386, 21 Sup. Ct. 919.

[18] Dwight v. Germania Life Ins. Co. 103 N. Y. 341, 57 Am. Rep. 729, 4 Cent. Rep. 529, 8 N. E. 654. In this case the assured had kept a hotel where no bar was maintained, but he had on hand a supply of wines and liquors, and was licensed and had permits to carry on the business of retailing these other liquors, to be drunk on the premises, and he sold to his guests but not to others, although he had not been engaged in the business for about a year and a half before his application. It was also declared that if the proof of a fact is so preponderating that a verdict against it would be set aside as contrary to the evidence, it is the duty of the court to direct a verdict. It is not the rule that if there is a scintilla of evidence in support of a proposition, or if the evidence against it does not amount to a demonstration of its incorrectness, a question is raised which must be left to the jury.

[19] Kenyon v. Knights Templars & Masonic Mutual Aid Assoc. 122 N. Y. 247, 25 N. E. 299, 19 Ins. L. J. 1020.

See further upon the point of occupation and intoxicating liquors, the following cases:

Illinois.—Sweeney v. Life Assoc. of America, 152 Ill. App. 173 (connection with real estate department of brewery does not falsify statement that not connected with and no interest in the sale or manufacture of beer); Royal Arcanum v. Coverdale, 93 Ill. App. 373 (false representations as to selling or serving intoxicating liquors voids policy).

Indiana.—Supreme Tribe of Ben Hur v. Lennert, — Ind. App. —, 93 N. E. 869 (employment as driver, soliciting orders, delivering, and collecting for brewery is being engaged

(d) If one answers that he is a laborer, when in fact he has not labored for several years, such answer avoids the policy.[20] So a representation by an applicant that his occupation is that of capitalist, when his only occupation is that of professional gambler, making books, and like pursuits of doubtful character, is of such a material matter as to avoid the policy irrespective of whether "capitalist" involves the possession of large wealth or signifies a person having an income from investments.[1] And a false warranty by assured that he was foreman of a railroad yard when his occupation was foreman of a switching crew, a more hazardous occupation, avoids the policy.[2] There is also under an accident policy, a breach of warranty of an occupation as "ice dealer and proprietor of a transportation company: office work only," where insured engaged "off and on" at that time in buying and selling cattle in large numbers and he was injured while attending to the business.[3] And if in an application for accident insurance the applicant makes a misrepresentation as to his occupation, and the policy is conditioned upon the truthfulness of the representation, such misrepresentation will avoid the policy.[4] So a misrepresentation as to occupation avoids the policy even though a statute provides that no misrepresentation shall be material unless it affect the risk.[5] Again the finding of a jury that insured was a carpenin sale of intoxicants; but judgment rendered for plaintiff).

New York.—Smith v. Chapter General of America, Knights of St. John & Malta, 128 N. Y. Supp. 288, 143 App. Div. 532 ("merchant" held evasive statement when assured actually engaged in saloon business, and insurance is forfeited).

Texas. — Blackstone v. Kansas City Life Ins. Co. — Tex. —, 174 S. W. 821 (fact of working about father's still when boy does not falsify warranty by assured that he had never been "engaged in or connected with the manufacture or sale of malt or spirituous liquors"), rev'g Kansas City Life Ins. Co. v. Blackstone, — Tex. Civ. App. —, 143 S. W. 792, 41 Ins. L. J. 683.

Wisconsin. — Stevens v. Modern Woodmen of America, 127 Wis. 606, 107 N. W. 8 (a boy is not a saloon bartender where he is employed to do chores and later on does work in his employer's saloon cleaning, etc., for the day's business, and ocasionally waits on customers during the owner's absence).

[20] United Brethern Mutual Aid Soc. v. White, 100 Pa. St. 12, 12 Wkly. Not. Cas. 147.

[1] Elliott v. Frankfort Marine, Accident & Plate Glass Ins. Co. 172 Cal. 261, 156 Pac. 481, L.R.A.1916F, 1026.

[2] Triple Link Mutual Indemnity Co. v. Williams, 121 Ala. 138, 77 Am. St. Rep. 34, 26 So. 19, 28 Ins. L. J. 621.

On what amounts to a breach of warranty as to business, profession, or occupation of the insured in a policy of life or accident insurance, see note in L.R.A.1916F, 1030.

[3] Standard Life & Accident Co. v. Ward, 65 Ark. 295, 45 S. W. 1065, 27 Ins. L. J. 719.

[4] Murphey v. American Mutual Accident Assoc. 90 Wis. 206, 62 N. W. 1057, 24 Ins. L. J. 557.

[5] Hartmann v. National Council of ter will be contrary to evidence where it appears that his testimony that at the time of the accident he "was framing timbers, framing sets and caps," is impeached by several neighbors, and the uncontradicted testimony of one witness is that he was not a carpenter.[6] In case it is claimed that assured's occupation was more hazardous than that represented as being the one in which he was engaged, his statements made in applications for revival of other policies on his life are held material both upon the question of occupation and also upon the point of misrepresentation.[7] If an insurance company is misled by a false warranty intentionally made by the applicant as to his occupation, the knowledge of the agent of the insurer taking the application of such misrepresentation does not emasculate the warranty of its vitiating quality.[8]

A policy in an accident company wherein the insured's occupation is incorrectly described may be corrected after the occurrence of an accident.[9]

(e) The risk under a policy insuring against loss by burglary theft or larceny from an apartment is increased by habitual public and private use for entertainments or exhibitions of insured's alleged clairvoyant powers and, therefore, a false warranty by assured that he was a mining partner when in fact he was a clairvoyant or mind reader and used his apartment as above stated, avoids the policy.[10] But an answer, which is not responsive in terms to an interrogatory and upon its face does not have any relation thereto in that it does not profess to convey the information sought, cannot form the basis of a warranty. This applies where assured's occupation is stated as "widow" in an application for a burglary policy, and the fact that she has a husband living constitutes a breach of warranty; such statement can have at most only the effect of a representation the untruth of which can only be availed of by properly pleading the same and alleging its materiality and assurer's reliance thereon in issuing the policy.[11]

Knights & Ladies of Security, 190 Mo. App. 92, 175 S. W. 212; Rev. Stat. 1909, sec. 6937.

[6] Murphey v. American Mutual Accident Assn. 90 Wis. 206, 62 N. W. 1057, 24 Ins. L. J. 557.

[7] McManus v. Peerless Casualty Co. 114 Me. 98, 95 Atl. 510, 46 Ins. L. J. 753.

[8] Triple Link Mutual Indemnity Assoc. v. Williams, 121 Ala. 138, 77 Am. St. Rep. 34, 26 So. 19. But see subdiv. (q) next section.

[9] Ford v. United States Mutual Accident Relief Co. 148 Mass. 153, 1 L.R.A. 700, 19 N. E. 169.

[10] Reese v. Fidelity & Deposit Co. of Md. 156 N. Y. Supp. 408, 93 Misc. 31, 47 Ins. L. J. 337.

[11] Linzee v. Frankfort General Ins. Co. 147 N. Y. Supp. 606, 162 App. Div. 282, 44 Ins. L. J. 83.

§ 2075. Other insurance: refusal of other insurers: prior applications, etc.[12]—(a) Subject to such qualifications or exceptions as exist by reason of statutes which, by very force of the law, become part of the contract,[13] an insurer has the right to require that an applicant shall truthfully state whether or not he has made prior applications for insurance and been rejected and such statements may properly be made warranties and material without regard to their materiality.[13a] So insurer may reasonably require information of this character, for its action may depend upon it, and it is material. This applies where the question is in effect whether the applicant at the time of the inquiry had any proposition or negotiation for insurance pending with or under consideration by any insurer, on which a policy had not been issued, and where the applicant falsely answers in the negative, and there is a warranty, it will be enforced in the absence of waiver or an estoppel.[14]

(b) These questions are in various forms, but in so far as their main object or purpose is to ascertain the applicant's exact situation with relation to other prior applications or proposals for insurance, whether made, pending, postponed, or rejected, or for insurance not issued and the like, and under the stipulations of the contract such matters so inquired about are a warranty, it is material and enforceable and the breach will avoid the contract.[15]

[12] See § 1987 herein.

[13] See subdiv. (i) under this section and § 1916 herein.

[13a] Bonewell v. North American Ins. Co. 160 Mich. 137, 125 N. W. 59, point also approved on rehearing, 167 Mich. 274, Ann. Cas. 1913A, 132 N. W. 1067, 41 Ins. L. J. 150.

[14] Home Life Ins. Co. v. Myers, 112 Fed. 846, 50 C. C. A. 544, 31 Ins. L. J. 523.

See also Ferris v. Home Life Ins. Co. 118 Mich. 485, 5 Det. L. N. 589, 76 N. W. 1041 (where it is said: "It is a right which insurance companies have, to be truthfully informed whether an applicant for insurance has before then applied for insurance and been rejected, and to know whether a medical examiner has declined to give a favorable opinion upon the application so that the persons whose duty it is to act upon the application, upon the part of the company, may act intelligently).

On effect of false representations as to previous application for insurance, see note in 55 L.R.A. 122.

[15] United States.—Home Life Ins. Co. v. Myers, 112 Fed. 846, 50 C. C. A. 544, 31 Ins. L. J. 523 (answer that no proposition or negotiation or examination for insurance "has been made in this or any other company on which a policy has not been issued, or which if issued, was modified in amount, kind, or rates").

Indiana.—Supreme Lodge of Modern American Fraternal Order v. Miller, 60 Ind. App. 269, 110 N. E. 556 (statement among others was, that had never applied to any company without obtaining kind of policy applied for).

Kentucky.—Western & Southern Life Ins. Co. v. Quinn, 130 Ky. 397, 113 S. W. 456 (had never been rejected or postponed: void irrespective of applicant's knowledge of truth or falsity of answer).

Michigan. — Bonewell v. North American Ins. Co. 160 Mich. 137,

And if assured is asked whether an application has been made to other companies and with what result, and he answers, "Yes, and always successful," and "Yes, accepted," which is false, in that the medical examiner declined to recommend another and prior application, the policy is void.[16] Recovery is also precluded in case of a false warranty that no physician had ever given an unfavorable opinion on assured's life.[17] So where upon the first examination of the applicant he gives negative answer to a question whether he 125 N. W. 59 (statement that had not been previously declined or acceptance postponed; also that no policy or certificate canceled or refused), aff'd 167 Mich. 274, Ann. Cas. 1913A, 847, 132 N. W. 1067, 41 Ins. L. J. 150; Genrow v. Modern Woodmen of America, 151 Mich. 250, 114 N. W. 1009 (answered that had never been rejected); Moore v. Mutual Reserve Fund Life Assoc. 133 Mich. 526, 10 Det. L. N. 263, 95 N. W. 573, 32 Ins. L. J. 816 (statement was that no proposal to insure his life had ever been postponed or declined; that no proposal or application to insure his life or for membership had ever been made to any company, association or agent upon which a policy or certificate had not been received in person for the full amount and kind and at the rate applied for; that he had no insurance on his life, or membership, etc.; and that no physician had given an unfavorable opinion, etc.).

Missouri. — Aloe v. Mutual Reserve Fund Life Assoc. 147 Mo. 561, 49 S. W. 553, 28 Ins. L. J. 293 (there were a number of questions concerning other life insurance; whether applications had been postponed or declined; whether any proposal or application to insure had been made on which no policy or certificate had not been received; and whether any physician had given an unfavorable opinion on assured's life); Cundiff v. Royal Neighbors of America, 162 Mo. App. 117, 144 S. W. 128 (warranty that had not been examined by any physician for life insurance and recommendation for policy declined).

New Jersey.—Finn v. Metropolitan Life Ins. Co. 70 N. J. L. 255, 57 Atl. 438, 33 Ins. L. J. 472 ("no proposal or application to insure my life has ever been made to any company or agent upon which a policy has not been issued of the amount applied for").

New York.—Fletcher v. Bankers' Life Ins. Co. of N. Y. 119 N. Y. Supp. 801, 135 App. Div. 295, rev'g 116 N. Y. Supp. 1105, 62 Misc. 546 (answered that had never "made an application on which a policy was not issued, or if issued, on a different plan than the one applied for;" applicant was postponed for another examination; answer false).

Pennsylvania. — Meyer-Bruns v. Pennsylvania Life Ins. Co. 189 Pa. 579, 42 Atl. 297, 28 Ins. L. J. 377 (negative answer to question whether assured was ever rejected, declined or postponed—referring to applications for insurance on his life—and he knew that he had been rejected).

Tennessee.—Mutual Life Ins. Co. v. Dibbrell, 137 Tenn. 528, L.R.A. 1917E, 554, 194 S. W. 581 (considered under subdv. [i] of this section).

[16] Edington v. Ætna Life Ins. Co. 100 N. Y. 536, 3 N. E. 315; New York Life Ins. Co. v. Flack, 3 Md. 341, 56 Am. Dec. 742. See also Anderson v. Fitzgerald, 4 H. of L. Cas. 484, 17 Jur. 995.

On misrepresentation as to previous rejection as increasing risk, see note in L.R.A.1917E, 558.

[17] Ferris v. Home Life Ins. Co. 119 Mich. 485, 5 Det. L. N. 589, 76 N. W. 1041.

had any proposition or negotiation or examination pending for insurance upon which a policy had not been issued, and it appears that in making out a required second application the answers were transposed so that another answer manifestly inapplicable and irresponsive appears to the above question, and the circumstances make it merely a clerical error, the second examination paper will not be held a new or modified application, but the negative answer will be deemed to have been intended to apply as originally made in the first application, and when it is false and a warranty the policy will be avoided; and in such case, even if the second application stood with its transposed answer, its falsity would be equally fatal to recovery.[18] Again, if a person makes a proposal for insurance and offers himself for an examination such as assurer may choose to make before it accepts the risk, it is none the less a proposal merely because after insured has so submitted himself he refuses or neglects to proceed with the examination or to submit to some requirement by the medical examiner, and negotiations are broken off; and in such case a statement by assured in an application to another insurer, that he had never made any proposal for life insurance to any company, association or agent upon which a policy had not been issued, is false, and where it is a warranty the policy is avoided.[19] In a New York case the applicant stated that he had never before applied for membership in the association to which he was then applying, and it appeared that he, with a number of others, petitioned the proper authorities of the order for leave to establish a subordinate council and assured applied for membership, but whether at that time or not did not appear, and he was subsequently examined and informed by the examiner that he could not pass or recommend him for membership, but the application and medical examination were pigeonholed by the doctor and so remained at least until after assured had become a member of another council of the same order. The reason for not reporting said examination was that the application was for charter membership, but a verbal report of the rejection was made to the secretary of the local council when instituted. It was held that these acts of assured constituted an application, and assuming that his statement was a warranty of fact, a finding that there had been no previous application for membership was held error.[20] So in [18] Home Life Ins. Co. v. Myers, 112 Fed. 846, 50 C. C. A. 544, 31 Ins. L. J. 523.

[19] Security Mutual Life Ins. Co. v. Webb, 106 Fed. 808, 45 C. C. A. 648, 55 L.R.A. 122, 30 Ins. L. J. 613, verdict for defendant directed on second trial and aff'd in Webb v. Security Mutual Life Ins. Co. 126 Fed. 636, 61 C. C. A. 383.

[20] Jennings v. Supreme Council of The Loyal Additional Benefit Assoc. 81 N. Y. Supp. 90, 81 App. Div. 76, aff'd (mem.) 95 N. Y. Supp. 1138, case assured's unqualified answer that he had never been rejected or postponed, is untrue and it was made with an actual intent to deceive the policy is avoided by the misrepresentation.[1]

(c) Warranties by assured in an accident policy that no application ever made by him for insurance had been declined, and no accident policy issued to him had been canceled; that he had no accident insurance and had not applied for any, "in this or any other company," are material and a breach thereof authorizes judgment for assurer.[2] So a policy is void or voidable at insurer's option where statements, which are warranties and upon which the contract is based, are false; and this applies where an applicant had stated that no accident, sickness, or life policy issued to him had ever been canceled or renewal refused—"no exceptions," and it clearly appears that there was, upon notice and request, a voluntary surrender of the policy for the purpose of cancelation and it was canceled. There is in such case a cancelation as distinguished from a voluntary surrender of the policy, and although such surrender, apart from an intent to cancel, would not be material, still when the statement as to noncancelation was wilfully false there can be no recovery.[3] And although the policy does not declare the statements warranties, still if applicant's misrepresentations that no accident policy of insurance had been canceled or renewal refused is falsified, as where he had received notice of cancelation and had endeavored to obtain insurance to replace that canceled, in such case the materiality is apparent as a matter of law and as the misrepresentation was also intentional, recovery was precluded.[4]

But there is no such sufficient notice of cancelation as to falsify a statement by insured that no company had canceled any liability insurance to him during a stated period of time, if no unconditional distinct and peremptory notice of cancelation of a policy is given assured, especially so where the claimed false representation aff'd (mem.) 186 N. Y. 571, 79 N. E. 1108.

[1] Langdeau v. John Hancock Mutual Life Ins. Co. 194 Mass. 56, 18 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1190 and note, 80 N. E. 452, 36 Ins. L. J. 432.

[2] Wyss-Thalman v. Maryland Casualty Co. of Balt. (U. S. C. C.) 193 Fed. 55, 41 Ins. L. J. 982, error dismissed, 193 Fed. 53, 113 C. C. A. 383.

[3] Wells v. Great Eastern Casualty Co. — R. I. —, 100 Atl. 395.

[4] Maryland Casualty Co. v. Eddy, 239 Fed. 477, 152 C. C. A. 355. Although this case was a Michigan one it arose before Pub. acts Mich. 1913, p. 501, Art. 264, sec. 6, went into effect on January 1, 1914, said statute provided that: "The falsity of any statement in the application for any policy covered by this act shall not bar the right to recover thereunder unless such false statement was made with actual intent to deceive or unless it materially affected either the acceptance of the risk or the hazard assumed by the insurer."

does not come within the requirements that a concealment must be a designed and fraudulent concealment, or, if not designed, then it must very materially affect the object of the policy and change the risk; and this applies where the agent's insurer wrote assured that they found it necessary to retire his policy for certain reasons, but advised rewriting the risk at a higher rate and should this suggestion be acceptable insured should advise them immediately, "or otherwise" they would be obliged to give notice, etc. As the words "or" and "otherwise" in this connection have substantially the same meaning, suggesting, "on the other hand," and their joint use, strictly speaking only amounts to "emphasizing by redundance the thought conveyed, they serve to so disjunctively coordinate the two propositions, that each in turn excludes the other, and obscures certainty as to either." And in addition it was apparent that said notice should not be final and conclusive.[5]

(d) A policy is not avoided where an application has been made to another company, but has not been finally passed upon, although the applicant makes a negative answer to a question whether any other application has been made upon which a policy has not been issued.[6] And if a policy is not delivered by assurer's agent it is not "issued" in such a sense as to falsify insured's representation that he had never applied for a policy which had not been issued.[7] Nor is a breach of warranty, that no company had recently declined or canceled insurance on assured's property, shown by the fact that an agent had declined the insurance because the property was located outside the territorial limits of his agency, nor is it shown by the fact that another agent had stated that he could not write his insurance and had declined doing so.[8] And the fact that assured had applied to another insurer for a policy, is not of itself sufficient proof to breach a warranty negativing any proposal or application to any insurer which had not been granted, nor a policy or certificate issued for a different amount.[9] Again, a statement by an applicant for life insurance, that no physician had ever given an unfavorable opinion upon his life with reference

[5] American Fidelity Co. v. R. L. Ginsburg Sons Co. 187 Mich. 264, 153 N. W. 709, 46 Ins. L. J. 542. (The leading case of Carter v. Boehm, 3 Burr. 1905, 1 Wm. Black. 593, 13 Eng. Rul. Cas. 501, which is quoted from and relied on by the court in the above case is considered fully under § 1845 herein.

As to cancelation and notice, see §§ 1665 et seq. herein; and as to notice of cancelation to agent or broker, see §§ 637 et seq. herein.

[6] Langdon v. Union Mutual Life Ins. Co. 14 Fed. 272.

[7] Kansas Mutual Life Ins. Co. v. Coalson, 22 Tex. Civ. App. 64, 54 S. W. 388.

[8] Capital Fire Ins. Co. v. King, 89 Ark. 346, 116 S. W. 894.

[9] Haughton v. Ætna Life Ins. Co. 42 Ind. App. 527, 85 N. E. 125.

to insurance, cannot be held to be false because of a confidential communication from a medical examiner to the medical director, of which he had no knowledge, stating that he could not recommend applicant without further examination.[10] And although statements including that of rejection by other insurers are warranties, still if it is not stipulated that the policy shall be void if they are untrue, it is not avoided merely for that reason, they must be fraudulently false.[11]

(e) Effect of incorporating or using rejected application as basis of another application.—It is decided that a statement as to non-rejection by other insurers, made in a rejected application, may be so far incorporated in, reaffirmed and made a part of an application to another assurer and a warranty that its falsity will avoid the contract. This is instanced where assured's application for membership has been rejected and he applies to an insurer of "rejected risks" and attaches to his proposal a copy of the rejected application whereby the statements, answers, and representations in both are made warranties and the basis of the contract and are declared to be full, complete and true. In such case the policy is avoided, where, after said rejection and before making his application as a "rejected risk" assured had been examined by physicians at that time of said last insurer who had rejected him as an unsound risk, but assured had suppressed that fact; and this constitutes a breach of warranty in the rejected application, reaffirmed as above stated, that no proposal or application to insure his life had ever been made to any company or agent upon which he had been rejected or upon which a policy had not been issued or received by him.[12] In another case, however, the rules of the insurer permitted the [10] Security Mutual Life Ins. Co. v. Webb, 106 Fed. 808, 45 C. C. A. 648, 55 L.R.A. 122, 30 Ins. L. J. 613 but the action of the trial court as to this defense was not the only error complained of, and the case turned upon a false warranty whereby the policy was avoided) at the second trial the court directed a verdict for defendant which was aff'd in Webb v. Security Mutual Life Ins. Co. 126 Fed. 636, 61 C. C. A. 383.

On false representations as to previous applications for insurance, see note in 55 L.R.A. 122.

[11] German American Mutual Life Assoc. v. Farley, 102 Ga. 720, 29 S. E. 615, 27 Ins. L. J. 657. ("We are in the present case relieved of the difficulty which sometimes occurs in policies of insurance in which it is stipulated that the policy shall be void if any fact covenanted to be true should prove to be untrue; for in the present case, while the covenants of warranty extend to the truth of the facts, there is nothing in the policy itself which provides that a breach of such covenants should result in avoiding the policy. There was no express contract contained in the policy to the effect that it should be void if the facts warranted to be true should prove untrue"—Atkinson, J.).

[12] National Life Ins. Co. v. Hopkins, 97 Va. 167, 33 S. E. 539, 28 Ins. L. J. 717.

use of a copy of a rejected application made to any other insurer, as it was seeking such applications, since its business was that of insuring sub-standard risks, which included persons with physical imperfections, extra-hazardous occupations, rejected risks, etc. Accordingly it was held that if such an insurer uses a rejected application it cannot reasonably urge that a statement therein that there had been no previous rejection of the applicant was false and fraudulent where such statement was true when made.[13]

(f) Classification of insurance as affecting scope of inquiry and answer as to rejection of applicant, etc. If assurer's plan of doing business is such that it lacks the essential elements to bring it within the meaning of an assessment company and it is not therefore exempt from the general insurance law, and the alleged misrepresentations as to previous nonrejection, or the not giving of any unfavorable opinion by any physician are not material to the risk, and the matters claimed to have been misrepresented had nothing to do with assured's death, and the company has not offered to return the premiums paid with interest as a condition precedent, by statute, to a defense, it is precluded from availing itself of the above defense of misrepresentations.[14]

It would seem that questions as to rejection and the like ought to be considered with reference to the subject-matter of the contract, that is, they ought to sustain at least some degree of relevancy thereto and if the application and question clearly concern one particular class of insurance it might be reasonably assumed that insured in making his answer had that class in mind about which he was interrogated; so where an applicant for accident and health insurance is asked whether or not "any company, society or association" has ever rejected his application, canceled his policy or declined to renew the same, or refused compensation for disability, and he makes an unconditional negative answer it does not constitute such a false representation as to avoid his policy although prior to the date of his statement he had applied for a policy on his life and had been rejected.[15] So certificates in mu-

[13] Security Trust Co. v. Tarpey, 182 Ill. 52, 54 N. E. 1041, aff'g 80 Ill. App. 378.

[14] Aloe v. Fidelity Mutual Life Ins. Co. 164 Mo. 675, 55 S. W. 993, 29 Ins. L. J. 679; acts 1874, p. 89; Rev. Stat. 1879, sec. 5849, see Aloe v. Mutual Reserve Fund Life Assoc. 147 Mo. 561, 49 S. W. 553, 28 Ins. L. J. 293.

Examine Elliott v. Des Moines Life Assoc. 163 Mo. 132, 63 S. W. 400, 30 Ins. L. J. 769. See § 1916 subd. (l) herein, also pp. 3114 et seq., also subd. (k) of this section.

[15] Wright v. Fraternities Health & Accident Assoc. 107 Me. 418, 32 L.R.A.(N.S.) 461, 78 Atl. 475, 40 Ins. L. J. 551, three judges dissented. But compare Alden v. Supreme Tent of Knights of Maccabees, 178 N. Y. 535, 71 N. E. 104; McCollum v. Mutual aid societies do not constitute insurance within the meaning of a question in an application blank of an insurance company as to "existing insurance" in this or any other company.[16] And a printed statement in an application for accident insurance making the applicant assert that no application made by him for insurance had been declined, and no accident, disease, or health policy had been canceled or renewal refused, does not include life policies, where the word "policy" is uniformly used elsewhere in the application as referring to accident or health policies.[17] Nor is a beneficial association issuing death benefit certificates within the meaning of a question whether or not applicant has ever been rejected by any company.[18] And this applies where a fraternal association, such as the Woodmen of the World, is not a "company" within the meaning of a question to an applicant for a benefit certificate, "Has any proposal or application to insure your life ever been made to any company upon which a policy has not issued?"[19]

But under a Minnesota decision, however, it is held error to refuse admission of evidence of assured's application to and rejection by a fraternal association such as the Royal Arcanum where he had stated that no other company or association had ever refused to issue a policy to him and that no person had ever been consulted as to his insurability.[20] Nor does the fact that astual Life Ins. Co. of N. Y. 55 Hun (N. Y.) 103, 8 N. Y. Supp. 249.

On character of insurance or company covered by question in application for life or accident insurance as to other insurance, or as to previous rejection of application, see note in 32 L.R.A.(N.S.) 461.

See §§ 336d et seq., 344–344k, 345 et seq. herein.

[16] Penn Mutual Life Ins. Co. v. Mechanics' Savings Bank & Trust Co. 72 Fed. 413, 19 C. C. A. 286, 37 U. S. App. 692; 73 Fed. 653, 19 C. C. A. 316, 43 U. S. App. 75, 38 L.R.A. 33. Cited in Pacific Mutual Life Ins. Co. v. Van Fleet, 47 Colo. 401, 107 Pac. 1087 (but court stated in the citing case that it did not base its decision upon such distinction). See also Newton v. Southwestern Mutual Life Assoc. 116 Iowa, 311, 90 N. W. 73.

[17] Mays v. New Amsterdam Casualty Co. 40 App. D. C. 24, 46 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1108.

On failure to disclose accident policies in reply to question as to other life insurance as breach of warranty, see note in 1 B. R. C. 305.

[18] Lyon v. United Moderns, 148 Cal. 470, 4 L.R.A.(N.S.) 247n, 113 Am. St. Rep. 291, 7 Ann. Cas. 672n, 83 Pac. 804. See Peterson v. Manhattan Life Ins. Co. 244 Ill. 329, 18 Ann. Cas. 96, 91 N. E. 466; White v. National Life Ins. Co. 11 Ohio Dec. 857.

On previous rejection by benefit association as declination or refusal of insurance within meaning of application for life insurance, see note in 4 L.R.A.(N.S.) 247.

[19] Lyon v. United Moderns, 148 Cal. 470, 113 Am. St. Rep. 291, 7 Ann. Cas. 672n, 4 L.R.A.(N.S.) 247n, 83 Pac. 804.

[20] Bruce v. Connecticut Mutual Life Ins. Co. 74 Minn. 310, 77 N. W.

sured had applied for a second certificate in the Endowment Bank of the Knights of Pythias, a fraternal order excluded from the statutory definition of "insurance company, association or society," and that said certificate had been rejected, qualify his answers in an application for life insurance that he had never applied to any agent, or company for insurance, or for restoration of a lapsed policy without having received a policy of the exact kind and amount applied for, and that no company or association had ever declined or postponed his application for insurance, or offered him a policy different from the one applied for.[1]

(g) A warranty that assured has no burglary insurance, has never been refused any and has applied for none "other than is herein stated," and that the policy shall be void if assured in any way attempts to defraud the company is especially material and binding upon assured; and even though said statement was true when made and assured had no knowledge that it was false when the policy was issued, nevertheless such falsity avoids the policy, for the rule that a warranty must be strictly true and exactly and literally fulfilled applies, and want of knowledge on assured's part does not aid him; nor is he the less bound by the fact that the policy was obtained by a broker employed by him for that purpose.[2]

(h) As to good faith: qualified statements: nonrejection, etc.—The circumstances may be such as to show that the representation was immaterial and also that the applicant's answer, that he had never made an application on which a policy had not been issued, was made in good faith, in which case a judgment for plaintiff may be justified under the contract and the facts.[3] If, however, answers are warranties, good faith or intention are immaterial,[4] but in case of representations, assured should exercise the same good faith toward insurer which he demands of it.[5] In a Wiscon-

210. As to evidence in rebuttal to show knowledge of or waiver by assured, see subd. (r) of this section.

[1] Shawnee Life Ins. Co. v. Watkins, — Okla. —, 156 Pac. 181.

[2] Wolowitch v. National Surety Co. of N. Y. 136 N. Y. Supp. 793, 152 App. Div. 14, 41 Ins. L. J. 1677, s. c. 134 N. Y. Supp. 1150, 149 App. Div. 947. See §§ 1964, 1970 herein.

[3] Fidelity Mutual Life Assoc. v. Miller, 92 Fed. 63, 34 C. C. A. 211.

[4] Jennings v. Supreme Council of the Loyal Additional Benefit Assoc. 81 N. Y. Supp. 90, 81 App. Div. 76, aff'd (mem.) 95 N. Y. Supp. 1138, aff'd (mem.) 186 N. Y. 571, 79 N. E. 1108. See also Clemans v. Supreme Assembly Royal Society of Good Fellows, 131 N. Y. 485, 16 L.R.A. 33, 30 N. E. 496 (considered under subd. (q) of this section). See § 1964 herein.

[5] Mutual Life Ins. Co. v. Hilton-Green, 241 U. S. 613, 60 L. ed. 1202, 30 Sup. Ct. 676, rev'g 211 Fed. 31, 127 C. C. A. 467, 43 Ins. L. J. 685 (considered fully under subd. (q), this section.

As to rule in Kentucky as to good faith, see Blenke v. Citizens Life Ins. Co. 145 Ky. 332, 140 S. W. 561, 41 Ins. L. J. 94.

sin case assured answered in the negative that he had no application for accident or health or benefit life insurance pending, "no exceptions," but the last two words were inserted by the agent and were based by the latter on the assured's answer "no," and it was declared by the court, per Kerwin, J., that assured did not intend to include the instant policy and that he was most likely to understand that the question, in conjunction with another of like import, had reference to policies or applications completed and in existence at the time of the inquiry. "It was very easy to have so framed the question as to leave no room for misunderstanding. The construction claimed by defendant is a forced construction, and should not be adopted to avoid a policy made in good faith without any intention on the part of the applicant to misrepresent. . . . We think it was not established that any false representation was made," accordingly a judgment for plaintiff was affirmed.[6] Again, where the question was specifically asked whether the insured had been rejected by the medical examiner of any other lodge or society, it was held that the absolute truth of his answer was not warranted; that assured was only requested not to suppress known facts, but to answer according to his knowledge or reasonable means of belief.[7] But if a policy has in fact been refused by another company a representation that no company has, to the applicant's best belief, refused him a policy avoids the contract where the statements are made warranties, whether known to be false or not.[8]

(i) As to effect of statutes: nonrejection, etc.—Under a Tennessee decision a negative answer by the applicant to the question whether he had ever been examined for a policy in any company or associations which was not issued as applied for, is material, and when false increases the risk of loss and makes the policy voidable;

[6] Pagel v. United States Casualty Co. 158 Wis. 278, 148 N. W. 878, 44 Ins. L. J. 698 (a case of action upon an accident indemnity policy for a death benefit. The effect of the statute as to misrepresentations was also involved, another point, was also closely involved with that stated in the above text, related to weekly earnings).

[7] Senn v. Supreme Lodge Knights of Honor, 29 Fed. 895; Fowkes v. Marine & Life Ins. Co. 3 Fost. & F. 440. See §§ 1846 et seq. (concealment); §§ 1904 et seq. (representations); §§ 1964, 1970 (warranties) herein.

[8] Kemp v. Good Templars Mutual Benefit Assoc. 64 Hun (N. Y.) 437, 19 N. Y. Supp. 435. See also Wolowitch v. National Surety Co. of N. Y. 136 N. Y. Supp. 793. 152 App. Div. 14, 41 Ins. L. J. 1677, s. c. 134 N. Y. Supp. 1150, 149 App. Div. 947; Travelers' Ins. Co. v. Thorne, 180 Fed. 82, 103 C. C. A. 436, 38 L.R.A.(N.S.) 626, 39 Ins. L. J. 1638, s. c. (but point was warranty as to physical condition); Lynch v. Travelers' Ins. Co. 200 Fed. 193, 118 C. C. A. 379, 42 Ins. L. J. 453.

See §§ 1915 et seq. herein.

and it is also held that it is not necessary under the statute of that state that the matter falsely stated should have contributed to insured's death in order to render the policy voidable under the clause "unless the matter represented increases the risk of loss," it being sufficient that it increased the risk.[9] And a claim, that a false statement as to noncancelation of any prior policy will not render a policy void or voidable, unless such cancelation actually contributed to assured's death, as provided by statute, will not be sustained as the statute does not apply to relief from warranties and fraud.[10]

(j) As to other insurance.—If the contract does not require a disclosure as to other insurance, a nondisclosure is not fatal.[11] And [9] Mutual Life Ins. Co. v. Dibrell, 137 Tenn. 528, L.R.A.1917E, 554, (annotated on misrepresentation as to previous rejection as increasing risk), 194 S. W. 581.

[10] Wells v. Great Eastern Casualty Co. — R. I. —, 100 Atl. 395.

See further the following cases: Masonic Life Assoc. of Western N. Y. v. Robinson, 149 Ky. 80, 147 S. W. 882, 41 L.R.A.(N.S.) 505, 41 Ins. L. J. 1271 (negative answers by applicant to questions whether any physician had ever given an unfavorable opinion upon his life, as to insurance or otherwise, and whether application for insurance had ever been rejected: answers false: no recovery regardless of good faith of applicant: under Ky. Stat. sec. 639); Blenke v. Citizens' Life Ins. Co. 145 Ky. 332, 140 S. W. 561, 41 Ins. L. J. 94 (negative answers to questions whether applicant had ever applied to any company or agent without receiving a policy of the exact amount and kind applied for; whether he had ever applied to any agent without receiving a policy within thirty days; whether he had ever been rejected by any company or association "[this is important];" whether any physician had ever given an unfavorable opinion upon his life in reference to assurance, formally or informally; judgment for defendant was affirmed; other questions were also involved. Ky. Stat. sec. 639. Russell's Stat. sec. 4286); Pacific Mutual Life Ins. Co. v. Glaser, 245 Mo. 377, 150 S. W. 549, 45 L.R.A.(N.S.) 222 (statement that no other company had refused insurance is warranty and not representation and falsity renders policy voidable: Rev. Stat. 1900, sec. 6937); March v. Metropolitan Life Ins. Co. 186 Pa. 629, 65 Am. St. Rep. 887, 40 Atl. 1100, 28 Ins. L. J. 30 (negative answer to questions whether applicant had made application and been rejected, or whether any insurance company had declined orally or in writing to insure him; statements material; judgment for defendant; act of June 23, 1885; P. L. 134; other misrepresentations as to disease, etc., also involved); Pagel v. United States Casualty Co. 158 Wis. 278, 148 S. W. 878, 44 Ins. L. J. 698 (negative answer in application for accident and health insurance that no application pending for accident or health or benefit life insurance: not avoided; Stat. 1913, sec. 4202m; point of representations as to weekly earning was also involved. See this case under subd. [h] of this section). See § 1916 herein.

[11] Agricultural Ins. Co. v. Bemiller, 70 Md. 400, 17 Atl. 380; Dayton Ins. Co. v. Kelly, 24 Ohio St. 345, 15 Am. Rep. 612.

As to representations and concealment: conditions voiding policy, other insurance, see § 2462 herein.

As to want of knowledge of other insurance, see § 2462a herein.

the contract will not be set aside for nondisclosure of a second policy effected by another insurer.[12] So a failure to disclose a prior insurance on a tenement house is not fatal, where insurer had subsequently included said insurance in the policy for its own convenience.[13] Nor does it constitute a breach of warranty of the truth of statements in an application for life insurance to fail to disclose policies insuring against death or injury or from accident, in response to questions in such application as to the amount of insurance carried by the applicant on his life, and whether he had any other insurance in force on his life.[14] And the materiality of a concealment of other insurance, upon a life risk, cannot be presumed from the fact that such concealment was made by the applicant in applications to other companies.[15] It is held, however, that recovery is precluded where there is no disclosure of prohibited concurrent insurance.[16]

(k) If the evident intent of the inquiry is, that only information is called for as to life insurance in regular insurance companies, and that it was not intended to include fraternal or accident insurance, then a failure to specify the latter is not fatal; in case, however, it is clearly intended that the latter should be included, then the fact of insurance in such companies must be disclosed or the contract is avoided.[17]

As to concealment of same facts from other insurers, see § 1874 herein.

As to misrepresentations to other insurers, see § 1926 herein.

What does and does not constitute other, etc., insurance: conditions voiding policy, see c. LVII. (§§ 2455 et seq.) herein.

[12] Fiset v. LaCompagnie Equitable D'Assurance Mutuelle Contre LeFeu, 31 Super. Ct. (Queb. O. L. R.) 334.

[13] Mutual Fire Ins. Co. v. Ward, 95 Va. 231, 28 S. E. 209.

[14] Metropolitan Life Ins. Co. v. Montreal Coal & Towing Co. 35 Can. S. C. 266, 25 Canadian L. T. Occ. N. 4n, 1 B. R. C. 298.

[15] Penn. Mutual Life Ins. Co. v. Mechanics Savings Bank & Trust Co. 72 Fed. 413, 19 C. C. A. 286, 38 L.R.A. 33, 37 U. S. App. 692; 73 Fed. 653, 19 C. C. A. 316, 43 U. S. App. 75.

[16] Roper v. National Fire Ins. Co. 161 N. C. 151, 76 S. E. 869.

Double insurance and concurrent insurance, distinct, see Lawver v. Globe Mutual Ins. Co. 25 S. Dak. 549, 127 N. W. 615, 39 Ins. L. J. 1588, 1596.

Concurrent insurance defined, see § 2480 herein.

On what is concurrent insurance, see note in 49 L.R.A.(N.S.) 374.

[17] Mutual Life Ins. Co. v. Ford (Ford v. Mutual Life Ins. Co.) 61 Tex. Civ. App. 412, 130 S. W. 769, aff'd 103 Tex. 522, 131 S. W. 406 (assured warranted that he was insured in specified "other companies and associations" and "no others"). See Penn Mutual Life Ins. Co. v. Mechanics' Savings Bank & Trust Co. 72 Fed. 413, 19 C. C. A. 286, 37 U. S. App. 75, 38 L.R.A. 33. See subd. (f) of this section, also § 2482 herein.

On failure to disclose accident policies in reply to question as to other life insurance as breach of warranty, see note in 1 B. R. C. 305.

(l) If a partial or incomplete answer as to other insurance is true to the extent of the answer, and is permitted to stand without any attempt to elicit further information, or the right to have the question answered concerning the matter is waived, there is no breach of warranty for a partial answer, in case of a warranty, cannot be extended beyond what it fairly imports without the ascertained intent of the parties.[18] But it is also decided that omission of a part of the insurance carried, from an answer to a question in an application as to policies in other companies, with directions to state companies and amount, will render the answer false.[19]

(m) It is held that if the original policy of fire insurance was void for nondisclosure of prior insurance, a renewal thereof is likewise a nullity, although the prior insurance has ceased to exist in the interval.[20]

(n) If there is warranty by assured that he has no insurance in other companies, a breach thereof avoids the policy.[1] But a distinction is made between a promissory warranty, and a warranty, false representation or statement as to additional insurance which relates to then existing conditions.[2] Again, in Missouri, a stipulation restricting concurrent insurance, whether considered as a condition precedent or subsequent, is a warranty presumed in law to be material to the risk, and any substantial breach of such warranty ipso facto works a forfeiture; and the statute does not prevent such breach from avoiding the policy for said enactment is construed in that state as having the effect only of converting into a mere representation a stipulation relating to existing facts which before had been treated by the courts as a condition precedent, but not as affecting the construction of promissory warranties, that is the word "condition" in the statute refers to facts supposed to exist at the time the policy was made.[3] And a warranty in a fire

[18] Triple Link Mutual Indemnity Assoc. v. Froebe, 90 Ill. App. 299. See § 1969 herein. See also Robinson v. Supreme Commandery, United Order of the Golden Cross of the World, 77 N. Y. Supp. 111, 38 Misc. 97, aff'd 79 N. Y. Supp. 13, 77 App. Div. 215, aff'd 177 N. Y. 564, 69 N. E. 1130.

[19] Penn Mutual Life Ins. Co. v. Mechanics' Savings Bank & Trust Co. 72 Fed. 413, 19 C. C. A. 286, 37 U. S. App. 692, 73 Fed. 653, 19 C. C. A. 316, 43 U. S. App. 75, 38 L.R.A. 33.

[20] Liverpool & London & Globe Ins. Co. v. Agricultural Savings & Loan Co. 33 Can. S. C. 94, 1 B. R. C. 593 (annotated on effect upon renewal of fire insurance of circumstance invalidating original policy but which in the meantime has ceased to exist).

As to renewals: other insurance, see § 2479 herein.

[1] Floyd v. Metropolitan Life Ins. Co. 5 Boyce (Del.) 51, 90 Atl. 404.

[2] Scottish Union & National Ins. Co. v. Wade, 59 Tex. Civ. App. 631, 127 S. W. 1186.

[3] Harwood v. National Union Fire Ins. Co. 170 Mo. App. 298, 156 S. W. 475, 42 Ins. L. J. 1002; Rev. Stat. 1909, secs. 7024, 7025 (act policy that assured has a certain amount of insurance in another company, constitutes a condition precedent to liability, and where said amount is actually less than that stated there is a breach and the policy containing the warranty cannot be enforced.[4]

(o) A material, knowingly false statement as to other insurance avoids the policy;[5] and answers as to other insurance are material.[6] So false answers as to applications for other insurance may be such a variation from the truth as to change the nature, extent, and character of the risk and so avoid the policy.[7] And where in answer to an inquiry at the time of making a proposal for accident insurance insured stated that he was not insured or proposing to insure against accident or disease with any other office or offices, and at the time the statement was made it was true but before the policy was issued it became untrue such declarations are continuing declarations to the issue of the policy and it is not necessary for the insurance office to show that they would not have granted the policy had the disclosure been made. They are entitled to the information in order to enable them to make up their minds and it is then material and important. The policy was held void.[8] So where assured covenants that his representations in his application are a full and true exposition of all the facts, and his statements are not a full and true exposition of all the facts, in that he stated that certain other insurance would expire on a certain date prior to the date of the policy issued to him, and he had, after so stating and before the acceptance and issuing of the policy, procured, without insurer's knowledge or consent, other valid insurance on the same property, the minds of the parties did not meet and recovery is precluded.[9] In a Georgia case, where it appeared that a 1887). See Gross v. Colonial Assur. Co. 56 Tex. Civ. App. 627, 121 S. W. 517; Rev. Stat. 1895, Art. 3096aa; acts 28th Leg. 1903, p. 94, c. 69, sec. 1. See § 1916 herein.

[4] Bancroft v. Heath, 5 Coml. Cas. 110. See Kenyon Paper Co. v. Nederlandsche Lloyds, 109 N. Y. Supp. 311, 124 App. Div. 886 (where there was a warranty as to the amount of other insurance and a reformation and enforcement of a renewal of the policy was sought and judgment was rendered for insurer).

[5] March v. Metropolitan Life Ins. Co. 186 Pa. 629, 65 Am. St. Rep. 887, 40 Atl. 1100, 28 Ins. L. J. 30.

[6] March v. Metropolitan Life Ins. Co. 186 Pa. 629, 40 Atl. 1100, 65 Am. St. Rep. 887, 28 Ins. L. J. 30; Dolan v. Missouri Town Mutual Fire Ins. Co. 88 Mo. App. 666.

[7] Prudential Ins. Co. v. Moore, 231 U. S. 560, 58 L. ed. 367, 34 Sup. Ct. 191, 43 Ins. L. J. 321; Ætna Life Ins. Co. v. Moore, 231 U. S. 543, 58 L. ed. 356, 34 Sup. Ct. 186, 43 Ins. L. J. 311; under Ga. Code secs. 2479, 2480.

[8] Marshall & Scottish Employers' Liability General Ins. Co. Ltd. Re Arbitration, 85 L. T. Rep. N. S. 757. See §§ 1921–3 herein.

[9] Carleton v. Patrons Androscoggin Mutual Fire Ins. Co. 109 Me. 70, 39 L.R.A.(N.S.) 951 (annotated on duty to notify insurer of facts which develop after submission of applica-

person who was a member of a benefit society, subsequently obtained two other certificates from the same society upon two separate applications, stating in each that he was not a member of the society, and each certificate provided upon its face that if the statements in the application upon which it was issued were not true the certificate should be void, it was held that both certificates should be considered void, and of no effect, unless it appeared that at some time before receiving the last dues upon these certificates the company had notice that this identical person was a member at the time of his application for each or both of the insurances.[10]

(p) But if a person in good faith applies for insurance, and in the application states that there is no application for insurance pending in another company, and subsequent to the application and prior to the issuance of the policy thereon, application for insurance is made to another company without informing the first company, the policy subsequently issued by the first company is not avoided thereby, where it contains no requirement that the condition that no application to another company is pending should continue until the policy is issued.[11] Again, if assured states that he has another policy in a named company, but the name given only corresponds in part with that of the insurer with whom his policy, which was void because of nonpayment of premium, was actually placed, there is no breach of warranty in the absence of some pleading or proof showing both companies to be the same.[12]

(q) As to knowledge of assurer or its agent: waiver or estoppel. —The rule as to waiver or estoppel especially applies where assurer with other principal life insurance companies maintain a common agency of which, through their medical boards, they are members, the purpose of said agency or bureau being to make, keep and preserve a record of the names of rejected applicants, such records being always accessible to the members, so that if assurer to whom the application was made, might have learned, or did ascertain tion, but before delivery of policy or certificate), 82 Atl. 649, 41 Ins. L. J. 1067.

[10] Home Friendly Soc. v. Berry, 94 Ga. 606, 21 S. E. 583.

On effect of condition against other insurance in same company, see note in 5 L.R.A.(N.S.) 759.

[11] Smith v. Prudential Ins. Co. 83 N. J. Law 719, 43 L.R.A.(N.S.) 431, 85 Atl. 190.

See also as to oral application and oral contract to deliver policy for other insurance. Mutual Life Ins. Co. v. Summers, 19 Wyo. 441, 120 Pac. 185, 41 Ins. L. J. 340.

[12] Kansas Mutual Life Ins. Co. v. Coalson, 22 Tex. Civ. App. 64, 54 S. W. 388.

On effect of other insurance which ceased before loss under general provisions against other insurance, see note in 10 L.R.A.(N.S.) 305; on void or inoperative policies of insurance as breach of a condition against other or additional insurance on property, see note in 1 B. R. C. 40.

through its agency, that the applicant's statements as to nonrejection, etc., were false, the matter becomes one peculiarly within its knowledge and it cannot be heard to repudiate its obligation on the ground of breach of warranty in this respect, particularly so where it continues the contract in force without disaffirmance or repudiation within a reasonable time after discovery of said breach.[13] And if it is warranted in an application for insurance on a minor's life that the insurer applied to has never refused to issue a policy on said life and said insurer has rejected and retained an application where not only the applicant's name, but the date of his birth, age, town, occupation, and parents' names were the same as in the instant application, and an examination of its files would have disclosed said facts, it is estopped to defeat a recovery on the ground that said warranty was false as it is bound by the knowledge which appears upon its own records, especially so where ample time is afforded between the application and policy dates in which to examine such records, and it does make such examination immediately after assured's death.[14] So where the members of an order are orally informed by assured that he had been a member thereof, and he is admitted upon the basis of a suspended member and not with the ceremonies necessary in case of a novitiate, the society cannot successfully urge in defense that it was misled by his statement that he had never been expelled or suspended from any lodge of the order.[15] Nor is a benefit certificate avoided by a misstatement in an application therefor; that applicant is a member of the fraternal association with which the benefit association is connected where the facts are known to the agent soliciting the application, and applicant becomes a member of the association before any obligation accrues upon the certificate.[16] But a waiver

[13] Union National Bank v. Manhattan Life Ins. Co. 52 La. Ann. 36, 26 So. 800, 30 Ins. L. J. 50 (applicant stated that he had never applied to any company for insurance on his life, without receiving a policy of the exact kind and amount applied for, and had never been declined or postponed by any company and statements were warranties and were false.)

[14] O'Rourke v. John Hancock Mutual Life Ins. Co. 23 R. I. 457, 57 L.R.A. 496, 91 Am. St. Rep. 643, 50 Atl. 834, 31 Ins. L. J. 230.

[15] McRaith v. Grand Lodge Ancient Order United Workmen, 149 Iowa, 148, 126 N. W. 321.

[16] Delaney v. Modern Accident Club, 121 Iowa, 528, 63 L.R.A. 603, 97 N. W. 91.

When there is a waiver or estoppel, see also the following cases:

Kentucky.—Masonic Life Assoc. of Western N. Y. v. Robinson, 149 Ky. 80, 147 S. W. 882, 41 L.R.A.(N.S.) 505, 41 Ins. L. J. 1271 (negative answers as to no unfavorable opinion of physicians and nonrejection, induced by advice of solicitor and medical examiner; knowledge of insurer binds if policy not repudiated after knowledge).

Missouri.—Cundiff v. Royal Neighbors of America, 162 Mo. App. 117, 144 S. W. 128 (warranty that no phy-of false statements as to nonrejection by other insurers does not extend the waiver to a breach of other warranties.[17]

Under a Federal decision it was stipulated that representations should, in the absence of fraud, be deemed representations and not warranties, and it was held that as to this point, insurer, in order to avoid the policies for false representations, must establish their falsity, materiality and the knowledge of assured, actual or imputed, of their falsity, but that, with regard to a representation of assured that there had been no previous application for insurance made by him and rejected or not passed upon favorably by the insurance company, the fact that said statement was untrue, must have been known to have been untrue by assured when he made it, and that it was material, would be sufficient to avoid the policies in suit unless assurer was estopped to rely upon it by reason of its knowledge of its falsity, and that it had such knowledge because of the knowledge of its agents or examiners who handled the matter for it, and a judgment for plaintiff was affirmed, especially so in view of the Florida statute, which was involved and which made persons, etc., acting in certain capacities the agents of insician had ever declined to recommend applicant: insurer had had prior application of applicant rejected for that reason).

New York.—Lynch v. Germania Fire Ins. Co. 116 N. Y. Supp. 998, 132 App. Div. 571 (life insurer's knowledge of previous rejection precludes reliance on breach of warranty); Stage v. Home Ins. Co. of N. Y. 78 N. Y. Supp. 555, 76 App. Div. 509 (local agent had knowledge of other insurance when policy issued); Jacobs v. Northwestern Life Assur. Co. 51 N. Y. Supp. 967, 30 App. Div. 285 (agent fully informed as to rejection of other applications but inserted only one rejected; insurer bound), aff'd 164 N. Y. 582, 58 N. E. 1088; Kelley v. Metropolitan Life Ins. Co. 44 N. Y. Supp. 179, 15 App. Div. 220 (waived by issuing application to rejected applicant).

Oklahoma.—Supreme Tribe of Ben Hur v. Owens, — Okla. —, 151 Pac. 198 (application for beneficial membership in fraternal order; breach of warranty that no prior application made for such membership: prior application on file in head office of order: insurer charged with knowledge and estopped to avoid liability).

Texas.—Hartford Fire Ins. Co. v. Walker, — Tex. Civ. App. —, 60 S. W. 820 (persons acting in certain capacities agents of insurer under Rev. Stat. 1895, art. 3093: such agents' knowledge of previous rejection of applicant waives warranty, notwithstanding policy inhibition, so also where agent inserts false answers as to nonrejection).

On waiver of false forfeiture because of false representations as to previous applications, see note in 55 L.R.A. 132; on notice from taking previous application as waiver of false representations with respect to previous applications for life and mutual benefit insurance, see note in L.R.A.1916A, 982; on effect of insurance broker's knowledge as to other insurance, see note in 38 L.R.A. (N.S.) 638.

[17] Moore v. Mutual Reserve Fund Life Assoc. 133 Mich. 526, 10 Det. L. N. 263, 95 N. W. 573, 32 Ins. L. J. 816. See § 1931 herein.

surer. In the Federal Supreme Court, to which the case was taken, it was expressly declared, as it was in the lower court, that said statements in the application were material, and nothing else appearing, if known to be untrue by assured when made, the policy was invalidated, but the Supreme Court further decided that the policy was avoided without further proof of actual conscious design to defraud, and although it was also declared that the general rule which imputes an agent's knowledge to the principal is well established, still it was not applicable in this case and accordingly the lower court was reversed.[18] So a false warranty by an applicant [18] Mutual Life Ins. Co. of N. Y. v. Hilton-Green, 241 U. S. 613, 60 L. ed. 1202, 30 Sup. Ct. 676, rev'g 211 Fed. 31. 127 C. C. A. 467, 43 Ins. L. J. 685; Fla. Gen. Stat. 1906, sec. 2765. Mr. Justice McReynolds said upon the last point: "The general rule which imputes an agent's knowledge to the principal is well established. The underlying reason for it is that an innocent third party may properly presume the agent will perform his duty and report all facts which affect the principal's interest. But this general rule does not apply when the third party knows there is no foundation for the ordinary presumption—when he is acquainted with circumstances plainly indicating that the agent will not advise his principal. The rule is intended to protect those who exercise good faith and not as a shield for unfair dealing. The Distilled Spirits, 11 Wall. (78 U. S.) 356, 367, 20 L. ed. 167; American Surety Co. v. Pauly, 170 U. S. 133, 156, 42 L. ed. 977, 18 Sup. Ct. 552; American National Bank v. Miller, 229 U. S. 517, 521, 522, 57 L. ed. 1310, 1312, 33 Sup. Ct. 517; Meachem on Agency, 2d ed. sec. 1815.

"Section 2765 of the Florida statute ante, undertakes to designate as agents certain persons who in fact act for an insurance company in some particular; but it does not fix the scope of their authority as between the company and third persons and certainly does not raise special agents with limited authority into general ones possessing unlimited power. We assume Hogue, Torrey and the medical examiners were in fact designated agents of the company with power to bind it within their apparent authority; and in such circumstances the statute does not affect their true relationship to the parties. See Continental Ins. Co. v. Chamberlain, 132 U. S. 304, 310, 33 L. ed. 341, 10 Sup. Ct. 87; New York Life Ins. Co. v. Russel, 77 Fed. 94, 103, 23 C. C. A. 43; Wood v. Firemen's Ins. Co. 126 Mass. 316, 319; John R. Davis Lumber Co. v. Hartford Fire Ins. Co. 95 Wis. 226, 234, 235, 37 L.R.A. 131, 70 N. W. 84.

"The assured at the least consciously permitted an application containing material misrepresentations to be presented by subordinate agents to officers of the insurance company under circumstances which he knew negatived any probability that the actual facts would be revealed; and later he accepted policies which he must have understood were issued in reliance upon statements both false and material. He could claim nothing because of such information in the keeping of unfaithful subordinates. Moreover, the false representations accompanied and were essential parts of the policies finally accepted. He did not repudiate, and therefore adopted and approved, the representations upon which they were based. Beyond doubt an applicant for insurance should exercise toward the company the same good faith which may be rightly demanded of it. The relafor life insurance, that he has not been rejected by any other company, avoids a contract of which it becomes a part, although he tionship demands fair dealing by both parties. New York Life Ins. Co. v. Fletcher, 117 U. S. 519, 529, 533, 29 L. ed. 934, 6 Sup. Ct. 837; Northern Assur. Co. v. Grand View Building Assoc. 183 U. S. 308, 361, 46 L. ed. 213, 22 Sup. Ct. 133; United States Life Ins. Co. v. Smith, 92 Fed. 503, 34 C. C. A. 506.

"Considered with proper understanding of the law, there is no evidence to support a verdict against petitioner and the trial court should have directed one in its favor.

"Judgment of the Circuit Court of Appeals is reversed and the cause remanded to the United States District Court, Northern District of Florida, for further proceedings in accordance with this opinion." Mr. Justice Pitney dissented.

See § 515f herein where an excerpt from the opinion in the above case in the lower court (211 Fed. 31) is given and, notwithstanding, said decision is reversed, a peculiar phase of the case is the different construction placed upon, or application made of, the same authorities cited in the opinions of both courts in support of their different conclusions, and in addition the fact that Mr. Justice Pitney dissented as above stated, is also noteworthy in connection with the opinion below. It is proper to state here, however, that inasmuch as the Supreme Court decision was not reported at the time § 515f herein was written the fact of reversal was not noted therein. Compare Pacific Mutual Life Ins. Co. v. Van Fleet, 47 Colo. 401, 107 Pac. 1087, 39 Ins. L. J. 951 (where some of the same cases are considered as are discussed under both the above Federal decisions). Examine as to burden of proof, subd. (r) this section, also § 3790 herein.

The Supreme Court case above considered (241 U. S. 623) is distinguished in Maryland Casualty v. Eddy, 239 Fed. 477, 480, 482, 152 C. C. A. 355, as to the point that in the citing case there was no statute raising special agents with limited authority into general ones possessing unlimited power; and it is also cited to the point that "in this disposition of the matter, the conclusion seems necessarily involved, although not spelled out, that is to say, that the company is estopped to rely upon such a false answer because its agent had knowledge; is to say that the terms of the contract are to be changed."—Dennison, Cir. J., construing Comp. L. Mich. 1897, sec. 1946, as to agents as applying only to fire and marine insurance and holding that accident insurance was governed by sections 5110–5115.

When no waiver or estoppel, see also the following cases: Travelers' Ins. Co. v. Thorne, 180 Fed. 82, 103 C. C. A. 436, 38 L.R.A.(N.S.) 626, 39 Ins. L. J. 1638 (warranty that to applicant's knowledge no application ever made by him for life, health, or accident insurance had ever been declined, nor any policy ever issued to him ever canceled; nor any renewal ever refused "by this or any other company or association:" broker was held assured's agent; other points also involved: s. c. [but on point as to warranty of physical condition] Lynch v. Travelers' Ins. Co. 200 Fed. 193, 118 C. C. A. 379, 42 Ins. L. J. 453); United States Life Ins. Co. v. Smith, 92 Fed. 503, 34 C. C. A. 506, 28 Ins. L. J. 412 (negative answer that no application made on which policy was not issued, etc.; knowledge and advice of local agent unimportant); Bonewell v. North American Accident Co. 160 Mich. 137, 125 N. W. 59, aff'd 167 Mich. 274, Ann. Cas. 1913A, 847, 132 N. W. 1067, 41 Ins. L. J. 150 (warranty as to nonrejection made on advice of agents' procuring accident insurance, but they were then acting as brokers,' believed it to be true, while the agent of the insurer knew it to be false, having received and forwarded the former application and been notified of its rejection, if the agent did not fraudulently conceal the fact from the applicant.[19]

Where the assured is asked whether applications have been made to other companies for insurance and with what result, and also as to the amounts insured in other companies, and an answer is given which is true as to part of the questions, but does not purport to be an answer as to other applications and the result, the company cannot defend on the ground that assured has not disclosed the fact that other applications have been made and rejected, for by issuing the policy it has waived the answer, and this even though the omission to answer is intentional.[20]

although they subsequently became insurer's general agents: knowledge of or notice to them not binding on assurer); Wolowitch v. National Surety Co. of N. Y. 136 N. Y. Supp. 793, 152 App. Div. 14, 41 Ins. L. J. 1677 (warranty that assured had no burglary insurance, had never been refused any and had applied for none "other than as herein stated:" knowledge of broker procuring insurance for assured not binding on assurer as waiver); Desmond v. Supreme Council Catholic Benevolent Legion, 64 N. Y. Supp. 406, 51 App. Div. 91 (fraternal association: false warranty that applicant had never applied for membership in order nor been rejected; knowledge of medical examiner no estoppel); Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen v. Roberts, 48 Tex. Civ. App. 325, 107 S. W. 626 (false statement that not prior member of order; notice of facts putting ordinarily prudent person on inquiry insufficient to constitute waiver; actual and not constructive knowledge necessary).

[19] Clemans v. Supreme Assembly Royal Society of Good Fellows, 131 N. Y. 485, 16 L.R.A. 33, 30 N. E. 496. See citations under case preceding note herein.

[20] Phœnix Mutual Life Ins. Co. v. Raddin, 120 U. S. 183, 30 L. ed. 644, 7 Sup. Ct. 500.

When there is a waiver or estoppel: misstatements as to other prior insurance.

Arkansas.—Merchants Fire Ins. Co. v. McAdams, 88 Ark. 550, 115 S. W. 175 (agent informed and policy issued with full knowledge of facts).

Maryland.—Monahan v. Mutual Life Ins. Co. of Balt. 103 Md. 145, 5 L.R.A.(N.S.) 759, 63 Atl. 211 (false answer innocently made; warranty: contract continued in force by assurer: rule as to necessity of actual knowledge by assurer held inapplicable.

New Hampshire.—Spalding v. New Hampshire Fire Ins. Co. 71 N. H. 441, 52 Atl. 858 (agent was informed by applicant of existence of other insurance).

Texas.—Standard Life & Accident Ins. Co. v. Davis, — Tex. Civ. App. —, 45 S. W. 826 (insurer had knowledge at time of issuing policy of existence of other insurance).

Virginia.—Mutual Fire Ins. Co. v. Ward, 95 Va. 231, 28 S. E. 209 (agent's and insurer's knowledge of existence of other insurance when policy was issued estops even though conditions requires indorsement of consent therefor).

But see Carleton v. Patrons' Androscoggin Mutual Fire Ins. Co. 109 Me. 70, 39 L.R.A.(N.S.) 951n, 82 Atl. 649, 41 Ins. L. J. 1067 (statements of agent to insured: other

(r) The burden of proof is upon assurer to establish the facts relied on where it sets up as a ground of forfeiture the falsity of assured's statement that he had never been rejected; accordingly where it is shown that assured had informed assurer's agent that he had applied for insurance and had been rejected and said agent stated that it would make no difference in the order applied to, and altered assured's answer to a negative, it was held that assurer must establish the fact that the answer as written in the application was made by assured, that it was intentionally false and material in some particular, and that assurer was induced thereby to act in reliance thereon.[1] Under a Texas decision an applicant stated that he had never had any application for insurance rejected, and it was untrue in that an application for membership in a mutual benefit society had been rejected. It was held competent evidence in behalf of the plaintiff that insured's agent informed assured that such societies were not regarded as life insurance companies and need not be considered as such by him.[2] And it is held error to refuse an offer of an application of a prior date as evidence, where the identity of the subscribed name with that of assured raised the presumption of identity of persons and it is claimed that a warranty is falsified, that assured had had no proposal to insure his life declined and that no application had been made by him without receiving a policy.[3] In a Pennsylvania case, however, error was claimed on the ground that the court overruled and rejected evidence offered by plaintiff to prove that insured's physician was told by insured that his application for membership in a certain order had been rejected and the doctor informed him that it was a beneficial insurance and not an old line company and it would not affect it, said evidence being offered for the purpose of rebutting a statement in the application that assured was not rejected by an insurance company, but it was held that said testimony was rightly excluded as incompetent for the purpose stated, or for any other legitimate purpose in the case.[4] In Oklahoma, under the statute prior insurance; insurer not estopped).

[1] Higgens v. Supreme Castle of Highland Nobles, 83 Neb. 504, 120 N. W. 137. See § 3790 herein.

[2] Equitable Life Assur. Soc. v. Hazlewood, 75 Tex. 338, 7 L.R.A. 217, 12 S. W. 621. See also Alden v. Supreme Tent of Knights of Maccabees of the World, 79 N. Y. Supp. 89, 78 App. Div. 18.

[3] Spiegel v. Empire Life Ins. Co. 96 N. Y. Supp. 201.

[4] Meyer-Bruns v. Pennsylvania Life Ins. Co. 189 Pa. 579, 42 Atl. 297, 28 Ins. L. J. 377. See also Wyss-Thalman v. Maryland Casualty Co. of Balt. (U. S. C. C.) 193 Fed. 55, 41 Ins. L. J. 982, error dismissed, 193 Fed. 53, 113 C. C. A. 383; O'Rourke v. John Hancock Mutual Life Ins. Co. 23 R. I. 457, 57 L.R.A. 296, 91 Am. St. Rep. 643, 50 Atl. 834, 31 Ins. L. J. 230, but solicitor held agent of assured).

of that state, it is held that the burden of proof to establish the materiality of a misrepresentation or concealment, as well as insured's fraudulent intent, is upon insurer and the burden is not shifted where it is shown that insured made an untrue answer as to other insurance, for if there be a presumption that his failure to mention it was intentional this is met by the presumption that a man does not make a fraudulent misstatement. The court, per Kane, J., also said: "In this jurisdiction, where fraud is alleged in the procuring of a written instrument, the proof must sustain the allegations by a preponderance of evidence so great as to overcome all opposing evidence and repel all opposing presumptions of good faith;" and that to merely show that another policy was issued "does not, to our mind, sustain the charge of fraud" within said rule.[5] Upon the question of intent in omitting existing policies from the answer to a question in an application as to the amount of other insurance, evidence of similar omissions by the applicant in answer to similar questions by other companies is relevant and competent.[6]

(s) It is ordinarily a question for the jury to determine under proper instructions, whether an answer as to previous rejections or prior insurance was untrue and made with an actual intent to deceive or was knowingly misrepresented.[7] So it is for the jury to determine under all the circumstances whether assured, an ignorant foreigner with an imperfect knowledge of the English language, in applying for membership in an association, had answered truly or falsely when stating that he had not been previously rejected by any other company, and whether he might not have understood the inquiry as meaning prior applications for life insurance only. It is also a question for the jury whether under the facts the lodge knew, or should in the exercise of reasonable diligence, have known that an application had been made to another lodge of the order by assured, wherein the same questions were answered in the affirmative and that both applications had been passed upon by the grand lodge and in addition whether there had been any fraud or whether there had been a waiver of

[5] Owen v. United States Surety Co. 38 Okla. 123, 131 Pac. 1091, 42 Ins. L. J. 1068; Comp. L. 1909, sec. 3784. Compare Mutual Life Ins. Co. of N. Y. v. Hilton-Green, 241 U. S. 613, 60 L. ed. 1202, 39 Sup. Ct. 676, rev'g 211 Fed. 31, 127 C. C. A. 467 (considered under subd. [q] of this section).

[6] Penn Mutual Life Ins. Co. v. Mechanics' Savings Bank & Trust Co. 72 Fed. 413, 19 C. C. A. 286, 37 U. S. App. 692; 73 Fed. 653, 19 C. C. A. 316, 43 U. S. App. 75, 33 L.R.A. 33.

As to evidence of other insurance see § 3778 herein.

[7] Langdeau v. John Hancock Mutual Life Ins. Co. 194 Mass. 56, 18 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1190, 80 N. E. 452, 36 Ins. L. J. 432.

false answers if any had been made, where the association with all the papers in their possession had continued to receive dues from the assured as a recognized member.[8] It is decided, however, that a false denial by an applicant for life insurance, of rejection by other companies, avoids the policy as matter of law, if it would not have been issued had the insurer known of such rejection, although the statute provides that no misrepresentation shall prevent a recovery on the policy unless material and fraudulent.[9] And it is also held that when a statement or representation contained in an application for life insurance relates to the applicant being insured in any other company or to his having made an application for insurance and been rejected or as to particulars of his having had ailments, such statement or representation must be adjudged material to the risk as a matter of law, and its materiality should not be submitted to the jury for decision.[10] Where certain questions and answers thereto appear in an application for a life insurance, and such answers are shown to be false, it is error for the court to instruct the jury that such answers are a fraud upon the company, "if those questions were asked." [11]

[8] Dubcich v. Grand Lodge Ancient Order United Workmen, 33 Wash. 651, 74 Pac. 832.

[9] Masonic Life Assoc. v. Robinson, 149 Ky. 80, 41 L.R.A.(N.S.) 505, 147 S. W. 882.

[10] March v. Metropolitan Life Ins. Co. 186 Pa. St. 629, 65 Am. St. Rep. 887, 40 Atl. 1100; Lutz v. Metropolitan Life Ins. Co. 186 Pa. 527, 40 Atl. 1104. See Meyer-Bruns v. Pennsylvania Life Ins. Co. 189 Pa. 579, 42 Atl. 297, 28 Ins. L. J. 377 (held not error to direct verdict for insurer; answer that no application rejected, etc.).

See further the following cases:

Michigan.—Ferris v. Home Life Ins. Co. 118 Mich. 485, 76 N. W. 1041, 5 Det. Leg. N. 589 (verdict directed for insurer; warranty that no physician had ever given unfavorable opinion).

Mississippi.—Miller v. Phenix Ins. Co. 105 Mass. 4, 61 So. 983 (whether insured should in good faith have disclosed other insurance is for jury).

New York.—Seidenspinner v. Metropolitan Life Ins. Co. 74 N. Y. Supp. 1108, 70 App. Div. 476 (whether failure to disclose, in answer to inquiries, membership in fraternal, funeral expense societies without certificates, is breach of warranty, is for jury).

Oklahoma.—Owen v. United States Surety Co. 38 Okla. 123, 131 Pac. 1001, 42 Ins. L. J. 1068 (jury to determine under all the circumstances and under proper instructions, truth of statements as to not having other insurance and materiality of misrepresentations).

Tennessee.—Mutual Life Ins. Co. v. Dibrell, 137 Tenn. 528, L.R.A. 1917E, 554, 194 S. W. 580 (whether a misrepresentation when found to be false by the jury, be material, increasing the risk, was after Shannon's Code, sec. 3306, acts 1895, c. 160, as it had been before one of law for the court.—Williams, J.).

On misrepresentation as to previous rejection as increasing risk, see note in L.R.A.1917E, 558.

[11] March v. Metropolitan Life Ins Co. 186 Pa. St. 629, 65 Am. St. Rep. 887, 40 Atl. 1100.

§ 2076. Opium habit: life risk.[12]—Where the assured has been in the habit of eating opium and using laudanum to a dangerous extent, the fact should be disclosed; at least such a rule may fairly be implied from a decision where such facts existed, and it was represented that the assured was in perfect health and his general health had been good, and it was held that a full disclosure of every fact material to the risk should have been made.[13] But a man is not addicted to the exercise or intemperate use of opium unless he habitually uses it daily or often.[14] And although this rule applies to the use of narcotics, still if a statement as to their nonuser is a warranty and it is false, the policy is avoided notwithstanding mistake and good faith.[15]

The burden of proving alleged misrepresentations and fraud on the part of assured is upon assurer; nor is such burden sustained by evidence which is doubtful or circumstances amounting merely to suspicion, and it is proper, upon the question whether assured had ever used opium contrary to his statement negativing such use, to exclude the testimony of a physician that he had, at a time subsequent to the completion of the insurance contract, seen assured under the influence of that drug and that the latter had then stated that he could take two or three bottles a day of laudanum and had done so for several years.[16] And it constitutes error to refuse an instruction that if the jury believes that the answer "No" to the question "Do you now use, or have you ever used, opium, chloral, cocaine, or any other narcotic drug?" was knowingly false and untrue, then the verdict must be for defendant.[17] So an instruction in the language of the statute may properly be given whereby answers of an applicant must be wilfully false or fraudulently made, etc., in order to bar recovery.[18]

§ 2077. Personal, accidental, or serious injury: wounds: hurts: prior losses: prior indemnity.[19]—(a) Where a policy was issued

[12] See § 1987 herein.

As to excepted risks and losses: use of drugs, narcotics, etc., see §§ 2613a, 2613b, 2615 herein.

[13] See Forbes v. Edinburgh Life Assur. Co. 10 Shaw & D. 451, 4 Scot. Jur. 385.

[14] Ætna Life Ins. Co. v. Davey, 123 U. S. 739, 31 L. ed. 315, 8 Sup. Ct. 331, s. c. 20 Fed. 482. See National Fraternity v. Karnes, 24 Tex. Civ. App. 607, 60 S. W. 576, 28 Ins. L. J. 1157 (where same rule is applied to use of narcotics).

[15] National Fraternity v. Karnes, 24 Tex. Civ. App. 607, 60 S. W. 576, 28 Ins. L. J. 157.

On morphinism of insuerd as affecting policy, see note in 39 L.R.A. 265.

[16] Life Ins. Co. of Virginia v. Hairston, 108 Va. 832, 62 S. E. 1057.

[17] Elliott v. Des Moines Life Assoc. 163 Mo. 132, 63 S. W. 400, 30 Ins. L. J. 769.

[18] Life Ins. Co. of Virginia v. Hairston, 108 Va. 832, 62 S. E. 1057.

[19] See § 1987 herein.

"upon the faith of the statements in the application, under a stipulation that if they" should be found in any respect untrue the policy should be void, it was held that although under the policy the answers to questions contained in the application must be construed as warranties that they were true in every particular, yet a negative answer to a question, "Has the party ever met with an accidental or serious personal injury?" will not bar a recovery when insured had actually met with an accidental injury, such injury, however, being slight, and not affecting the future health or longevity of the insured.[20] Nor has a person received "any wound, hurt, or serious bodily injury," within the meaning of those words in an application for a life policy, although while fencing he has received a blow upon the throat by a foil, causing him to raise blood, and which produces an abrasion or hurt on the inside of the windpipe, necessitating his being confined to his bed for three days and the attendance of a physician, but from which he recovers fully without any lasting or serious results.[1] So a gunshot wound in the back of the head which does not affect assured's general health, which is uniformly good, does not falsify a warranty by him that he had never had any bodily or mental infirmity; and where the only evidence upon which to base a breach of said warranty is the pension record, it constitutes error to direct a verdict for assurer.[2] And a policy is not avoided by falsely stating the date of an injury unless as provided by statute it contributed to the happening of the contingency on which the policy is to become due.[3] Again, if one is asked whether he has received any serious personal injury, and the defense is that he has answered falsely, the burden of proof is upon insurer to show such fact. In such case evidence is held inadmissible that the deceased had told the attending physician in his last sickness that he had heard that his skull had been fractured when a child. So also is evidence inadmissible of the existence of a scar on the head where it might have been produced in other ways.[4]

As to "accident" and "accidental:" special risks and losses, see §§ 2862 et seq. herein.

As to excepted risks and losses: accident policies, see §§ 2617 et seq. herein.

[20] Wilkinson v. Connecticut Mutual Life Ins. Co. 30 Iowa, 119, 6 Am. Rep. 657; aff'd Insurance Co. v. Wilkinson, 13 Wall. (80 U. S.) 222, 20 L. ed. 617.

[1] Bancroft v. Home Benefit Assoc. 120 N. Y. 14, 8 L.R.A. 68, 23 N. E. 997, 30 N. Y. St. Rep. 175, 19 Ins. L. J. 468. And see §§ 1808, 1809 herein.

"Wounds" defined: excepted risks and losses, see § 2617a herein.

[2] Black v. Travelers Ins. Co. 121 Fed. 732, 58 C. C. A. 14, 61 L.R.A. 500.

[3] Jacobs v. Omaha Life Assoc. 142 Mo. 49, 43 S. W. 375, s. c. 146 Mo. 523, 48 S. W. 462.

[4] Granger Life Ins. Co. v. Brown, 57 Miss. 308, 39 Am. Rep. 446.

(b) Under English law where assurer's agent at request of the applicant for a policy against driving accidents filled out the proposal form without asking for answers and the applicant signed it without reading, it was held that a misstatement to the effect that no accident had happened to the horses or vehicle avoided the policy as the agent in such case acted for the assured, and the policy provided that misstatements in the proposal should render the contract void.[5]

(c) In case a false negative answer to the inquiry whether assured had ever had property burned or had lost property by fire, is made by the advice of assurer's agent who had knowledge of the facts, assurer is estopped to defend on the ground of misrepresentation unless it appears that assured had knowledge of said restrictions upon agent's powers.[6]

(d) A claim that assured had procured a policy of burglary insurance through fraud and misrepresentation, by stating in his application that he had never suffered loss through burglary, is not sustained by evidence that several years prior thereto a money order form book was mislaid or stolen, where it is not shown that said book was taken from the safe, or as a result of burglary, or that the store or safe was ever burglarized.[7] But a breach of a warranty that assured had never suffered loss from burglary, nor ever received indemnity for any loss therefrom, is not waived by continuing, after knowledge of the breach, an examination of assured after loss under a policy of burglary insurance, where nothing further was done to induce the belief that advantage would not be taken of such breach.[8]

(e) Assurer has the right to stipulate that answers as to previous indemnity, etc., shall be warranties regardless of their materiality.[9] So where one of the warranties by assured, is that he had never received sick benefits from any other society, is falsified, recovery is precluded regardless of whether such misstatements are innocently made or otherwise, nor is assurer liable, in the absence of waiver or estoppel, where such material misrepresentations are not

[5] Life & Health Assur. Assoc. v. Yule (Ct. of Sess. Cas.) 6 F. 537, 41 Scottish L. Rep. 316.

[6] Farmers' & Mechanics' Benevolent Assoc. v. Williams, 95 Va. 248, 28 S. E. 214.

[7] General Accident, Fire & Life Assurance Corp. Ltd. v. Stratton, 165 Ky. 754, 178 S. W. 1060, 46 Ins. L. J. 767.

[8] Bacouby v. United States Fidelity & Guaranty Co. 113 N. Y. Supp. 20.

On condition as to other applications or losses in policy insuring against burglary or theft, see note in 46 L.R.A.(N.S.) 565.

[9] Bonewell v. North American Accident Ins. Co. 160 Mich. 137, 125 N. W. 59; 167 Mich. 274, Ann. Cas. 1913A, 132 N. W. 1067, 41 Ins. L. J. 150.

warranties and they induced assurer in reliance thereon to issue the policy.[10]

But the statement that the applicant has never received compensation for any accident except as herein stated without any exceptions being specified, does not avoid the policy even though he had received such compensation from the assurer itself as well as from other insurers, but assurer's authorized agents who had full knowledge of the facts had not filled out the blank with the exceptions as they had not deemed it necessary.[11] And the word "compensation" in an application for an accident policy requiring a statement as to the amount of compensation previously received for accidents, does not include "indemnity" where the latter word is used exclusively with reference to weekly payments to be made as indemnity during total disability to prosecute business as the result of an accident, and never with reference to payments to be made for loss of life, limb, or eye.[12]

If it is admitted that assured had received indemnity under another accident policy and his warranty to the contrary is thereby falsified as well as in regard to other statements, such matters are material precluding recovery; and in such case evidence is held inadmissible to show that such false representations were inserted by assurer's agent in assured's absence and without his knowledge or consent.[13] But where an answer is written in the application by insurer's agent, who is fully informed of the facts, and by said answer assured states that he has "never received or been refused compensation for accidental injuries or sickness, except as herein stated," but the proof is that he had previously had a policy in a mutual benefit association, been injured, and received compensation, such statement is imperfect and incomplete in that it suggests that compensation might have been received, and assurer cannot avoid its liability under a policy issued by it under such facts even though the statement is made a warranty, for if it was dissatisfied with such incomplete answer, it should have made further inquiries before issuing the policy, otherwise the imperfection was waived; and in addition its agent's knowledge of the facts, his act in writing in or inserting the false

[10] Supreme Lodge of Modern Fraternal Order v. Miller, 60 Ind. App. 269, 110 N. E. 556.

[11] Bayley v. Employers' Liability Assur. Corp. 125 Cal. 345, 58 Pac. 7, s. c. — Cal. —, 56 Pac. 638.

[12] Bayley v. Employers' Liability Assur. Co. 125 Cal. 345, 58 Pac. 7, s. c. — Cal. —, 56 Pac. 638.

[13] Wyss-Thalman v. Maryland Casualty Co. (U. S. C. C.) 193 Fed. 55, 41 Ins. L. J. 982, error dismissed, 193 Fed. 53, 113 C. C. A. 383. See § 2075, subd. (r) herein.

answer precludes insurer by estoppel from availing itself of the alleged breach of warranty.[14]

The burden of proof of materiality is, however, upon assurer under a statute requiring the matter to be material to the risk in order to avoid a policy for breach of warranty.[15] And, for the purpose of showing an alleged breach of warranty evidence is admissible that prior to making the application other insurers had paid assured sick benefits. It is also competent to show that assured's own association had made such payments to him and it constitutes an admission of sickness.[16] And the question whether a breach of warranty as to prior indemnity for an accident is material is held to be one for the jury.[17] So where under an accident policy it was warranted by assured that he had never received indemnity for any accident or illness "except as herein stated" from "this company" for sprained ankle, it was held that whether said warranty was falsified by the fact that he had had his appendix removed about six years prior thereto and also the question of good faith and materiality were for the jury, and although a warranty the effect thereof was limited by the statute.[18]

§ 2078. Pumps: water: tanks filled, etc.: fire risk: continuing warranty.[19]—A mere representation that a force pump is connected with the building is not falsified by the fact that the pump is without hose.[20] A stipulation that there is water on each floor of a building with hose is also fully satisfied by proof that hose is attached to couplings connected with waterpipes in the first and second stories, that the attic story has pipes so constructed as to overflow the same, and that the basement can be flooded with water by a steam pump.[1] And where a cotton factory was insured, and it was represented that the works were in good condition, and that there was a force pump thereon worked by a waterwheel ready and designed for use in case of fire, the fact that there is a diversion of the water, thereby disabling the pump for several

[14] Pacific Mutual Life Ins. Co. v. Van Fleet, 47 Colo. 401, 107 Pac. 1087, 39 Ins. L. J. 951.

[15] Maryland Casualty Co. v. Gehrmann, 96 Md. 634, 54 Atl. 678; acts 1894, p. 1059, c. 662; Poe's Supp. Code Pub. Gen. Laws 1900, art. 23, sec. 142a.

[16] Seidenspinner v. Metropolitan Life Ins. Co. 175 N. Y. 95, 67 N. E. 123, rev'g 74 N. Y. Supp. 1108, 70 App. Div. 476.

[17] Maryland Casualty Co. v. Gehrmann, 96 Md. 634, 54 Atl. 678 (warranty here was connected with one as to physical soundness).

[18] Miller v. Maryland Casualty Co. 193 Fed. 343, 113 C. C. A. 267, 41 Ins. L. J. 990; act Pa. June 23, 1885, P. L. 134.

[19] See § 1987 herein.

As to automatic sprinkler system, see § 1995a herein.

[20] Peoria Marine & Fire Ins. Co. v. Lewis, 18 Ill. 553.

[1] New York Belting & Packing Co. v. Washington Fire Ins. Co. 10 Bosw. (23 N. Y. Super. Ct.) 428.

days, for the purpose of substituting a new bulkhead for the old and decayed one does not constitute a breach of warranty if such repairs do not take an unwarrantable time; nor, in such case, does the fact that repairs might have been made of a less permanent character occupying less time aid assurer.[2] So a statement that the facilities for extinguishing fire are a "force pump and abundance of water" is not a continuing warranty, but only that such were the facilities at the time of the insurance.[3] Nor is a condition precedent created by a stipulation that the force pump on the premises should be kept in working order and substantial compliance only is required and there is such compliance, although it was out of repair for about three months, where reasonable efforts to repair it were made, and when repaired it continued to operate until the night of the fire, when freezing prevented its operation.[4] Again, although the statement that there is plenty of water upon the premises and force pumps are warranties, yet if the application covenants only for the truth of such matters as are material to the risk so far as known to the insured, the materiality of the facts so represented is a question for the jury, and they are only warranties so far as material.[5] Nor does the mere fact that a building is insured as that shown upon the plan, and that a force pump is marked upon the plan, create a continuing warranty that any particular kind of pump will always be kept ready for use. In this case the application was oral, and the plan was merely referred to as on file in the office.[6] So a stipulation to keep a supply of water constantly on top of the mill ready for immediate use is satisfied although the tank is only about two feet deep and three feet square, is fed by a small flume, and said tank is below the apex of the roof.[7] In case the building is being constructed, the warranty that water tanks are to be well supplied with water must be construed with reference to the then state of completion of the building and the tanks, and whether the building of the tanks has been continued with reasonable diligence down to the time of the fire.[8]

[2] Townsend v. Northwestern Ins. Co. 18 N. Y. 168.

[3] Gilliat v. Pawtucket Ins. Co. 8 R. I. 282, 91 Am. Dec. 229.

[4] Cady v. Imperial Ins. Co. 4 Cliff. (U. S. C. C.) 203, Fed. Cas. No. 2,283. See Bulkley v. Protection Ins. Co. 2 Paine (U. S. C. C.) 82, Fed. Cas. No. 2,118.

[5] Garcelon v. Hampden Fire Ins. Co. 50 Me. 580. See Jones Manufacturing Co. v. Manufacturers' Mutual Fire Co. 8 Cush. (62 Mass.) 82, 54 Am. Dec. 742.

[6] Albion Lead Works v. Williamsburg City Fire Ins. Co. 2 Fed. Rep. 479. See opinion in this case.

[7] Sierra M. S. & M. Co. v. Hartford Fire Ins. Co. 76 Cal. 235, 18 Pac. 267.

[8] Gloucester Manufacturing Co. v. Howard Fire Ins. Co. 5 Gray (71 Mass.) 497, 66 Am. Dec. 376.

§ 2079. Residence: birthplace: life risk.[9]—Where the policy was conditioned to be avoided by "any untrue or fraudulent answer" to the questions in the application, and the answers were not strictly true so far as related to birthplace and residence, it was held that the answers were representations, and that the company must prove affirmatively that they were fraudulently made or were material to the risk.[10] If the word "residence" is used in the sense of a permanent domicil, instead of a temporary inhabitancy, the policy is not avoided by a two years' residence in another state.[11] But if the statement as to residence is materially false, the policy will be held void.[12] So a false statement that one's residence is at a certain place which is several miles distant from that where he actually resides avoids the contract.[13] If, however, answers as to residence and birthplace are not strictly accurate, yet if they are substantially true and correct they are sufficient as where assured resides and was born in a rural district and the form of the application is such as to mislead, and does not permit space for a detailed description.[14] And conditions respecting residence as well as other stipulations for assurer's benefit may be waived.[15]

§ 2080. Relative situation and distance: other buildings: variance in description no warranty that location of other buildings shall remain unchanged.[16]—If the policy requires that all buildings within a specified distance shall be mentioned, and stipulates that any misrepresentation or concealment shall avoid the contract, or makes such a statement a warranty, the assured must comply with such condition, and his omission to mention all the buildings so relatively situated vitiates the policy, as a rule, even though innocently done, but if the statement is merely a representation, it is a question for the jury whether the omission is material.[17] And the rule vitiating the policy will be especially enforced where the conditions annexed to the policy and the

[9] See § 1987 herein.

[10] Southern Life Ins. Co. v. Booker, 9 Heisk. (56 Tenn.) 606, 24 Am. Rep. 344.

[11] Mobile Life Ins. Co. v. Walker, 58 Ala. 290.

On character of residence or sojourn in prohibited place which will avoid policy, see note in L.R.A.1915F, 1056.

[12] Huguenin v. Rayley, 6 Taunt. 186, 16 R. R. 599.

[13] Hutchinson v. Hartford Life & Accident Ins. Co. — Tex. Civ. App. —, 39 S. W. 825.

[14] Blackstone v. Kansas City Life Ins. Co. — Tex. —, 174 S. W. 821, rev'g — Tex. Civ. App. —, 143 S. W. 702, 41 Ins. L. J. 683.

[15] Germania Life Ins. Co. v. Koehler, 168 Ill. 293, 61 Am. St. Rep. 108, 48 N. E. 297.

[16] See § 1987 herein.

As to clear space clause: warranty, see § 1998b herein.

As to location: representations and warranties, see § 2068 herein.

[17] Day v. Conway Ins. Co. 52 Me. 60; Burritt v. Saratoga Mutual Ins. Co. 5 Hill (N. Y.) 188, 40 Am.

printed form of application require the fact to be stated, and the omitted buildings are of a hazardous nature, so far as danger from fire is concerned.[18]

So if the assured stipulates in the application that all the exposures within the specified distance are mentioned, such stipulation, coupled with the question as to their relative situation to and distance from other buildings, the application being referred to and forming part of the policy, makes the statements warranties.[19] And if there is a warranty that the building in which a boat is stored is five hundred feet distant from "exposing buildings" the warranty does not require that distance in feet to all buildings, but only to buildings which would tend to increase the risk and might reasonably and naturally be considered in fixing the premium rate, as the word "exposing" or "exposure" in insurance matters means openness to danger, accessibility to anything which may detrimentally affect, and the words "exposing buildings" mean, not a building in itself, but one erected and occupied for the use of dangerous elements, such as fire, whereby the exposure is increased; the use is the test, accordingly if said warranty is breached there can be no recovery regardless of the fact whether or not such building actually influenced the loss, but if "exposing buildings" ceased to be such at the time of loss, recovery is not precluded under a statute requiring that insurer should be injured by the breach in order to avoid the policy.[20]

Again, the statement, made a warranty by the policy, that the house was one hundred feet from the granary, when it was only forty-six feet distant, is a fact the evidence of which may not be stricken out by the court.[1] And slight errors will not avoid the representation; as where it stated that the building was connected on one side, when it was connected on both sides with another building.[2] So it is an immaterial variance that a mill is described as situate in one corner of a section, when in fact it is across a

Dec. 345; Frost v. Saratoga Mutual Ins. Co. 5 Denio (N. Y.) 154, 49 Am. Dec. 234; Wilson v. Herkimer County Mutual Ins. Co. 2 Seld. (6 N. Y.) 53; Jennings v. Chenango County Mutual Ins. Co. 2 Denio (N. Y.) 75.

As to houses and buildings: connected structures or additions: description of property, see §§ 1738, 1739 herein.

[18] Burritt v. Saratoga Mutual Ins. Co. 5 Hill (N. Y.) 188, 40 Am. Dec. 345.

[19] Chaffee v. Cattaraugus County Mutual Ins. Co. 18 N. Y. 376.

[20] Macatawa Transportation Co. v. Fireman's Fund Ins. Co. 168 Mich. 365, 134 N. W. 193, 41 Ins. L. J. 531, Comp. L. 1897, sec. 5180.

[1] State Ins. Co. v. Jordan, 24 Neb. 358, 38 N. W. 839.

[2] Stetson v. Massachusetts Mutual Fire Ins. Co. 4 Mass. 330, 3 Am. Dec. 217.

stream in an adjacent corner of the next section.[3] Nor is an omission to mention buildings on another street, and from which there is no reasonable apprehension of danger, such a suppression of the truth as invalidates the policy, though the fire is communicated through them.[4] And where assured gives the distance to the nearest buildings in each direction and describes them, it is sufficient, even though there are other buildings beyond them within the specified limits, when the question is, "How bounded and the distance from other buildings, if less than ten rods, and for what purposes occupied, and by whom?" and it appears that the assured answered the question as he understood it, and that it was accepted as sufficient at the time.[5]

The knowledge of an insurance agent that a warranty by the assured that "a continuous clear space of one hundred and fifty feet shall hereafter be maintained" between the property insured and any woodworking or manufacturing establishment does not represent the existing state of facts, and that there is no intent to change the situation, and that the insured cannot control a clear space for that distance, prevents a forfeiture of the policy for breach of the warranty, where the agent accepts the premium and issues the policy without taking any steps subsequently to rescind it though knowing of the breach of the warranty, and it appears that on account of the situation of the property, the manner of its use, and its proximity to water, he considered that the existing space was equivalent to that required.[6]

If the application is made a warranty, yet if the statements therein are qualified by the words "so far as known to the applicant and material," an incorrect statement as to the distance of the nearest building, assured not knowing the exact distance, does not avoid the policy.[7] Although where assured truthfully answers the questions in regard to the locality of neighboring buildings, it adds nothing in aid of assurer that the assured also states that said buildings "would not endanger" the insured property "if they should burn," for this is merely matter of opinion.[8] An insur-

[3] Prieger v. Exchange Mutual Ins. Co. 6 Wis. 89.

[4] Dennison v. Thomaston Mutual Ins. Co. 20 Me. 125, 37 Am. Dec. 42.

[5] Gates v. Madison County Ins. Co. 5 N. Y. (1 Seld.) 469, 55 Am. Dec. 360, s. c. 2 N. Y. (2 Comst.) 43.

[6] Michigan Shingle Co. v. State Investment Ins. Co. 94 Mich. 389, 22 L.R.A. 319, 53 N. W. 945. See § 2068 herein.

[7] Noone v. Transatlantic Ins. Co. 88 Cal. 152, 26 Pac. 103.

On effect of qualifying statements or warranties by words to "best of my knowledge and belief," or words of like import, see notes in 43 L.R.A. (N.S.) 431, and 48 L.R.A.(N.S.) 714.

[8] Dennison v. Thomaston Mutual Ins. Co. 20 Me. 125, 37 Am. Dec. 42.

ance company authorized to insure "livestock, wagons, harness," etc., "being upon farms and farm property," but not village property within one hundred feet of other buildings, is not liable for livestock and harnesses insured as farm property, but destroyed while in a village barn within one hundred feet of other buildings.[9]

§ 2081. Relationship: life risk.—(a) The decisions are not in harmony as to the effect of a misrepresentation or false statement of relationship of the designated beneficiary to assured, or of the relations existing between them, it being held in certain jurisdictions that such designation is merely a direction for payment, the falsity of which does not avoid the contract or preclude recovery on that ground, while in other courts, the statement when false avoids the policy on the ground of warranty, or materiality, or both, or because expressly so provided. An important point of weight in this connection, and one which goes rather to the ground of recovery by the beneficiary as such, than to the avoidance of the policy because of the falsity of the statement itself, is this, that consideration must be given to the charter, etc., limitations of classes of beneficiaries to whom benefits may be paid. The above points and such others as are relevant under the decisions will, however, appear from the following presentation of authorities.[10]

(b) When recovery is not precluded. If it does not appear that a statement as to relationship of a beneficiary is regarded as in anyway material to the risk, or that it was clearly intended to be made a warranty or a material representation, or a condition precedent to liability, it will not be so held, and especially is this so where such statement appears only in the application with no mention thereof in the policy and the contract provisions as to changing the beneficiary show that it was not deemed material or important, and in addition, the rule of construction in favor of assured also applies; accordingly the falsity of said statement does not avoid the contract.[11] And in Illinois a statement of relationship in a nomination of a beneficiary of a mutual benefit certificate is not a warranty or false representation which will avoid the certificate in case the relationship proves to be untrue, but it is

[9] Wildey v. Farmers' Mutual Fire Ins. Co. 52 Mich. 446, 18 N. W. 212, Sherwood, J., dissenting.

As to locality: location: description of property, see §§ 1741 et seq. herein.

[10] For discussion of the numerous questions involved as to designation of beneficiaries, specified classes, etc., charter, etc., limitations, see chaps. XXXI.–XXXIII. (§§ 727–882) herein.

[11] Baltimore Life Ins. Co. v. Floyd, 5 Boyce (28 Del.) 401, 94 Atl. 515, aff'g 5 Boyce (28 Del.) 201, 91 Atl. 653.

only a direction for the payment of the policy proceeds.[12] So a misrepresentation as to relationship of the beneficiary, made in an application for a certificate in a fraternal benefit society limited, by the statute under which it was organized, to the payment of death benefits to specified classes, will not because of the falsity of the statement avoid the contract, but will only preclude recovery where the beneficiary is not one of the class, so that if said beneficiary is eligible in his or her true relationship or dependency, etc., the certificate is not invalidated.[13] And if an applicant for membership in a corporation formed to accumulate a fund for the benefit of the widows and children of deceased members makes a false representation as to his relationship to the named beneficiary, this does not constitute a warranty so as to preclude his real beneficiary from recovering on the contract.[14] Again, where any person having an insurable interest in assured's life may be designated as a beneficiary, and such person is also a dependent and is generally known to sustain to the applicant the relation stated in the application, the policy is not avoided by a statement of relationship which does not exist in fact, there being no blood relation between them.[15] A policy is not avoided by a misrepresentation as to the relationship of the beneficiary if made in good faith, and without actual intent to deceive, and under such circumstances in connection with the relations sustained between the applicant and the named beneficiary as are calculated to create the impression that the statement was correct, as such a case is within a statute which requires that representations in order to avoid the policy be made with an actual intent to deceive, or that the matter misrepresented increase the risk of loss.[16]

(c) When recovery is precluded. The policy is held avoided and the right of recovery defeated where it is stipulated in a contract of membership in a benefit society that the applicants statements shall be warranties and payment of any benefit be conditioned by their truth, and a statement was made by the applicant that the beneficiary was his wife, when at the time he was divorced

[12] Cunat v. Supreme Tribe of Ben Hur, 249 Ill. 448, 34 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1192, Ann. Cas. 1912A, 213, 94 N. E. 925, 40 Ins. L. J. 1319, citing Minnesota Mutual Life Ins. Co. v. Link, 230 Ill. 273, 82 N. E. 637. See also Lumpkin v. Travelers' Ins. Co. 11 Colo. App. 249, 52 Pac. 1040; Standard Life & Accident Ins. Co. v. Martin, 133 Ind. 376, 381, 33 N. E. 105.

[13] Goff v. Supreme Lodge Royal Achates, 90 Neb. 578, 37 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1191, 134 N. W. 239, 41 Ins. L. J. 375.

[14] Britton v. Supreme Council, 46 N. J. Eq. 102, 19 Am. St. Rep. 376.

[15] Berdan v. Milwaukee Mutual Life Ins. Co. 136 Mich. 396, 4 Ann. Cas. 332, 99 N. W. 411 (designated as nephew which was in fact untrue).

[16] Afro-American Life Ins. Co. v. Adams, 195 Ala. 147, 70 So. 119; Code 1907, sec. 4572.

from her.[17] So under a New York decision a warranty upon a material matter, as where the applicant stated that the beneficiary was his wife, must be true as a condition precedent to recovery,[18] and where the answer was that the beneficiary was the applicant's wife, but it was false in that she was not his wife but a woman with whom he was living in illicit cohabitation, the statement was held related to material matters affecting the risk and a warranty and therefore the policy was avoided.[19] Under an Oklahoma decision under the law in force in the Indian Territory prior to statehood, and under which the rights of the parties concerning their relations to each other attached, if an inquiry is made as to the relationship of the beneficiary to an applicant for accident insurance, and the answer is a warranty by the terms of the policy, its falsity vitiates the contract even though the statement was made in good faith without knowledge that it was untrue.[20] As above stated, however, this case was based upon the law of Indian Territory, and the determination of the point rested upon the authority of a Federal Supreme Court decision.[1] It was held in this last case that, where assured was asked whether he was married or single and falsely stated that he was single, and there were also false statements as to other matters, a demurrer to a plea setting up said facts was bad even though it did not aver that the alleged false answers were material to the risk, it being held that, regardless of the question of materiality to the risk, any answer untrue in fact, known by an applicant to be so, avoids the policy. It will be seen, therefore, that the Oklahoma case interprets the law more strictly in favor of insurer than does the Federal case, in so far as the factor of good faith of the applicant and his knowledge or want of knowledge of the falsity of his statements are concerned.[2] Again, where both by statute and the constitution and laws of a fraternal beneficiary association the benefits are limited to a certain class and the certificate is issued subject thereto, a false warranty as to relationship of a beneficiary not within the limited class, voids the certificate.[3] And, if one

[17] Smith v. Baltimore & Ohio R. R. Co. 81 Md. 412, 32 Atl. 181.

[18] Gaines v. Fidelity & Casualty Co. 188 N. Y. 411, 11 Com. Cas. 71, 81 N. E. 169.

[19] Continental Casualty Co. v. Lindsay, 111 Va. 389, 69 S. E. 344, 40 Ins. L. J. 124.

[20] Pacific Mutual Life Ins. Co. v. O'Neil, 36 Okla. 792, 130 Pac. 270, 42 Ins. L. J. 655.

[1] Jeffries Admr. v. Economical Life Ins. Co. 22 Wall. (89 U. S.) 47, 22 L. ed. 833.

[2] In the Oklahoma case the applicant did not know that the named beneficiary was not his wife and that they had been divorced.

[3] Gray v. Sovereign Camp Woodmen of the World, 47 Tex. Civ. App. 609, 106 S. W. 176, acts 26 Leg. Sess. acts 1899, p. 195, c. 115 (applicant misrepresented that beneficiary was cousin).

of the objects of a beneficial corporation, chartered under a statute authorizing it to pay to the widows, orphans, relatives, or dependents of a deceased beneficial member a sum of money, is to establish a benefit fund out of which is to be paid to the family, orphans, or dependents of a deceased beneficial member a certain sum of money, a statement in an application for membership and insurance in such society which describes the beneficiary as the niece of the applicant is material; and if it be shown that there was no kinship between them, such false statement in the application will defeat an action to recover the payment of the insurance money, it being provided in a subsequent clause of the application that any false statement therein should forfeit all rights of the applicant or of his beneficiaries.[4] It is also held that it constitutes a fraud upon an association to falsely state that the beneficiary is the applicant's sister in order to enable her to come within the class entitled to the "mortuary money" in case of a member's death, and therefore said beneficiary's claim to the fund will not be sustained.[5] If a false statement as to relationship is so clearly material to the risk as to avoid the policy, plaintiff in an action to recover the proceeds is not aided by a statute which provides that answers to interrogatories shall not bar the right to recover by reason of any warranty, unless it be clearly proved that such answer was material. etc.[6]

§ 2082. Sailing: warranty to sail: marine risk.—If a vessel is warranted to sail, the warranty must be strictly complied with, as must also the warranty that the ship has sailed or that she will sail after a specified day, and nothing excuses performance. The time of sailing may vary the risk according to the seasons of the year, or in policies "at and from" it may be important to fix the duration of the risk at the place, and limit thereby the assured's liability.[7] So a stipulation in a charter that the ship will sail on a specified day is a condition precedent to be strictly performed, regardless of the risks and causes which may prevent compliance. If not performed, the charterer may reject the vessel;[8] and if the ship sails before the day, intending to return, but finding a cargo proceeds on her voyage, there is a breach of warranty.[9]

[4] Supreme Council American Legion of Honor v. Green, 71 Md. 263, 17 Am. St. Rep. 527, 17 Atl. 1048. See also Gray v. Sovereign Camp Woodmen of the World, 47 Tex. Civ. App. 609, 106 S. W. 176.

[5] Koerts v. Grand Lodge of Wisconsin Order of Hermann's Sons, 119 Wis. 520, 97 N. W. 163.

[6] Continental Casualty Co. v. Lindsay, 111 Va. 389, 69 S. E. 344, 40 Ins. L. J. 124, under Va. acts 1906, p. 139, c. 112, par. 28 (which provides that: "All statements or descriptions in any application for a policy of insurance shall be deemed representations and not warranties, and no answer to any interrogatories made by an applicant for policy of insurance shall bar the right to recover upon any policy issued upon such application by reason of any warranty in said application or policy contained, unless it be clearly proved that such answer was wilfully false or fraudulently made, or that it was 'material'"). See also Ashford v. Metropolitan Life Ins. Co. 80 Mo. App. 638, 2 Mo. App. Repr. 766; Rev. Stat. 1889, sec. 5849. See § 1916 herein.

§ 2083. Sailing: representation as to time of.—A statement as to time of sailing may be a representation, and not a warranty, and if made at the time the insurance is effected and is material and false, it will avoid the policy; or if it be of a character to have caused the vessel to have appeared less out of time than she was in reality, it is material.[10] So where a specific inquiry is made as to the time of sailing it makes the answer material and a misrepresentation avoids the policy; and if it is represented that a ship has "not sailed" such representation continues up to the time of the consummation of the contract and if she has actually sailed and is lost before that date there can be no recovery.[11]

§ 2084. Sailing: representation as to time of may be merely of expectation or belief.[12]—A statement as to the time of sailing may not be a warranty or misrepresentation of the fact, but a mere declaration of opinion, expectation, or belief; as where it is represented that the ship is "expected to sail" about or on a certain day.[13] So a statement that the vessel "will sail" from a certain port "in the course of this month," when not shown to be material

[7] Hore v. Whitmore, Cowp. 784; Vizeau v. Grant, reported in 1 Marshall on Ins. (ed. 1810) *353; Beckwith v. Sydebotham, 1 Camp. 117, 10 R. R. 652; Bond v. Nutt, Cowp. 601, per Lord Mansfield.

When breach of warranty may be excused, see marine ins. act of England, sec. 34, given in Appendix C. herein.

[8] Pedersen v. Pagenstecher, 32 Fed. 841.

[9] Vezean v. Grant, reported in 1 Marshall on Ins. (ed. 1810) *353.

[10] Baxter v. New England Ins. Co. 3 Mason (U. S. C. C.) 96, Fed. Cas. No. 1,127; Curell v. Mississippi Ins. Co. 3 La. (O. S.) 353, s. c. 9 La. 163, 29 Am. Dec. 439; Bowden v. Vaughn, 10 East, *415. See §§ 2084–2087 herein.

The accidental concealment of the time of sailing will not prejudice the insurance. M'Lanahan v. Universal Ins. Co. 1 Pet. (26 U. S.) 170, 7 L. ed. 98.

[11] Kerr v. Union Marine Ins. Co. 130 Fed. 415, 64 C. C. A. 617, rev'g 124 Fed. 835, certiorari denied, 194 U. S. 635, 48 L. ed. 1160, 24 Sup. Ct. 854.

[12] See §§ 1987, also §§ 1904, 1924 herein.

[13] Augusta Ins. & Banking Co. v. Abbott, 12 Md. 348; Allegre v. Maryland Ins. Co. 2 Gill & J. (Md.) 136, 20 Am. Dec. 424; Rice v. New England Ins. Co. 4 Pick. (21 Mass.) 439; Brine v. Featherstone, 4 Taunt. 869; Hubbard v. Glover, 3 Camp. 313; Jendrvine v. Slade, 2 Esp. 572; Bowden v. Vaughn, 10 East, 415, 13 Eng. Rul. Cas. 533.

to the risk, is held to be merely a statement of belief or mere expression of opinion that she will sail at the specified date.[14]

§ 2085. Sailing: warranty to sail may not be engrafted on policy by parol evidence.[15]—An agreement by parol that the ship will sail before a certain day may not be ingrafted on the policy by evidence thereof to establish a warranty.[16]

§ 2086. Sailing: what constitutes.—A ship has sailed when she has actually quitted her mooring and broken ground, intending bona fide to at once proceed to sea on the voyage insured, she being then in a state of complete readiness and equipment therefor, with nothing remaining to be done after such commencement of the voyage.[17] And the rule obtains even though after the ship has so commenced her voyage she is forced by stress of weather to stop and come to anchor, provided she intends to proceed at once on her voyage so soon as wind and weather permit, or where the vessel has moved forward for the bona fide purpose, placing herself in a more favorable situation to prosecute the voyage.[18] So if the voyage has commenced, the vessel may be justified by usage in going out of her course to join convoy, that being her only purpose in deviating,[19] or comes to anchor within her direct course for that same purpose, or having so sailed is detained by orders of government, at the port where she expects to join convoy.[20] So where a vessel is to sail "on or after" a certain date and before that date she is ready for sea but is detained by port regulations and for the purpose of keeping her crew on board the master moves her a short distance out from her wharf and anchors in the river where she is more advantageously located for starting, although not intentionally so, from which place she proceeds the next day on her voyage on the date specified, she has "sailed" on [14] Allegre v. Maryland Ins. Co. 2 Gill & J. (Md.) 136, 20 Am. Dec. 424.

[15] See § 1987 herein.

[16] Whitney v. Haven, 13 Mass. 172.

[17] Lang v. Anderdon, 3 Barn. & C. 495, 499, 5 D. & R. 393, 1 Car. & P. 171, 3 L. J. (O. S.) K. B. 62, 27 R. R. 412, per Lord Tenterden; Thelluson v. Ferguson, 1 Doug. 361; Bond v. Nutt, Cowp. 601, 1 Dougl. 367n, per Lord Mansfield; Ridsdale v. Sheddon, 4 Camp. 107; Pettigrew v. Pringle, 3 Barn. & Adol. 514, per Lord Tenterden, C. J.

[18] Bowen v. Hope Ins. Co. 20 Pick. (37 Mass.) 275, 32 Am. Dec. 213; Fisher v. Cockrane (Cockrane v. Fisher) 5 Tyrw. 496, 4 Tyrw. 424, 2 Cromp. & M. 581, 1 Cromp. M. & R. 819, 4 L. J. Ex. 328, 3 L. J. Ex. 185, 40 R. R. 730, 39 R. R. 854. See opinion of Lord Lyndhurst in this case.

[19] Bond v. Nutt, Cowp. 601, 1 Dougl. 367n, reported in 1 Marshall on Ins. (ed. 1810) *354.

[20] Thelluson v. Ferguson, 1 Dougl. 361. And see further on these last two points, Wright v. Shiffner, 11 East, 515, 2 Camp. 247, 11 R. R. 263; Earle v. Harris, 1 Dougl. 357, 352n; Ridsdale v. Sheddon, 4 Camp. 107.

that date and not on the date of moving from the wharf, and there is no breach of warranty.[1] A ship insured at and from an island may sail from port to port of the island.[2] And on much the same grounds the extent of or limits of a port, place, or harbor is not infrequently a matter entitled to weight in determining whether a vessel has sailed, especially in cases where usage enters as a factor.[3] So again, in certain cases the river navigation may be of such a character that the ship may not be enabled to fully equip herself for proceeding to sea until certain limits of navigation have been reached. In such cases it is sufficient if she is at the time of sailing as fully equipped as is consistent with the river navigation, and sails intending to perfect her fitting at the first place possible or usual; as in case of a voyage to and from Lyons to Galatz, and the ship could not pass down the Rhone to Marseilles with standing masts and rigging, and she sailed from Lyons on the day named with intention to put in the mast and bend the sails at Marseilles.[4] Under a time policy, where the warranty is not to sail after a specified day for a named port, it is sufficient that the vessel is prosecuting a voyage not begun after the day designated.[5]

§ 2087. Sailing: what does not constitute.—The rule given under the last section comprises the factors necessary to constitute a ship's sailing, and must be fully complied with. Thus, a ship has not sailed although she has partly weighed anchor and has her sails partly set, and in heaving anchors has moved a few fathoms, but does not actually start on her voyage until after the time, by reason of the master's fears occasioned by heavy seas and severe weather;[6] nor where she is detained by port regulations and moves out a short distance from her wharf for an early start the next morning and for the purpose of keeping her crew on board, and anchors but does not proceed on her voyage until the next day, and this is so even though she is more advantageously placed for starting, although not intentionally so, by so moving and

[1] Sea Insurance Co. v. Blogg [1898] 1 Q. B. D. L. R. 27, [1898] 2 Q. B. D. 398, 67 L. J. Q. B. 757, 78 L. T. 785, 47 W. R. 71, 3 Can. Cas. 1218.

[2] Thelluson v. Ferguson, 1 Doug. 361; Thelluson v. Staples, 1 Doug. 366n.

[3] See Dennis v. Ludlow, 2 Caines (N. Y.) 111; Lang v. Anderdon, 3 Barn. & C. 495, 1 Car. & P. 171, 480, 495, 5 D. & R. 393 (case also of warranty "to sail from"); Williams v. Marshall, 7 Taunt. 468, 6 Taunt. 390, 1 Moore, 168, 2 Marsh. 92.

[4] Bouillon v. Lupton, 15 Com. B. N. S. 113, 3 Fost. & F. 726, 33 L. J. Com. P. 37, 10 Jur. (N. S.) 422, 11 W. R. 966, 14 Eng. Rul. Cas. 72.

[5] Cochrane v. Fisher, 5 Tyrw. 496, 1 Cromp. M. & R. 809.

[6] Nelson v. Salvador, Moody & M. 309, 31 R. R. R. 733. See Meyer v. Gregson, 3 Doug. 402.

anchoring;[7] nor where she has not actually broken ground, although fully ready for sea and intending to sail, but is detained by embargo,[8] provided in such case that the commencement of the risk depends upon the time of sailing;[9] nor where she has not a sufficient crew competent to carry her to her port of destination, and is obliged to stop and take on seamen; nor where she has not obtained her clearance;[10] nor where she starts without her full ballast.[11] So where in a charter of a vessel she was stated to be at B, "guaranteed to sail on or before December 10th," it was held that a constructive sailing did not arise from the fact that, having her general cargo in, she was moored before that date, by order of the harbor master, where she filled out her crew and took on provisions, and after the 10th went out to the roadstead and sailed in a few days.[12]

§ 2088. Sheathing vessel.—Neither a representation nor warranty that the vessel has sheathing can be raised by construction from a stipulation in the policy of nonliability for any damage to the vessel "to or from her sheathing," but if it could, the representation is immaterial if it appears that sheathing would be regarded as of no benefit to the vessel.[13] A representation to an insurer at Boston by the assured in New York that a ship is "coppered" must conform to the meaning of that term as used in New York, the vessel being in that port.[14]

§ 2089. Ship's safety: warranty: marine risk.[15]—If ship or goods insured, lost or not lost, are warranted safe or well on a specified day, and a loss happens on that day before the subscription, the warranty is not broken if at any time on the specified day the ship was in safety.[16]

§ 2090. Smoking on premises: continuing warranty: fire risk.[17]—Although the assured warrants that there is no smoking on the premises, this refers to the time of making the application. It is

[7] Sea Ins. Co. v. Blogg [1898] 1 Q. B. D. L. R. 27, [1898] 2 Q. B. D. 398, 67 L. J. Q. B. 757, 78 L. T. 785, 47 W. R. 71, 3 Com. Cas. 1218.

[8] Hore v. Whitmore, Cowp. 784.

[9] See 1 Phillips on Ins. (3d ed.) 428, sec. 773; 1 Parsons on Marine Ins. (ed. 1868) 360, 361.

[10] Ridsdale v. Newnham, 4 Camp. 111, 3 Maule & S. 456, 15 R. R. 327; Graham v. Barras, 5 Barn. & Adol. 1011, 3 Nev. & M. 125.

[11] Pettigrew v. Pringle, 3 Barn. & Adol. 514.

[12] Pedersen v. Pagenstecher, 32 Fed. 841.

[13] Martin v. Fishing Ins. Co. 20 Pick. (37 Mass.) 389, 32 Am. Dec. 220.

[14] Hazard v. New England Marine Ins. Co. 8 Pet. (33 U. S.) 557, 8 L. ed. 1043; 1 Sum. (U. S. C. C.) 218, Fed. Cas. No. 6,282.

[15] See § 1987 herein.

[16] Blackhurst v. Cockell, 3 Term Rep. 360.

[17] See § 1987 herein.

not a continuing warranty, and is not broken though the assured or other persons smoke there afterwards.[18]

§ 2091. Spirits on board ship: carying prohibited articles: reasonable construction: marine risk.[19]—A statement that no "spirits are allowed on board" in an application for a marine policy must be given a reasonable construction, and the fact that spirits are carried on board which are not for use and are not broached does not avoid the contract.[20]

§ 2092. Stay of vessel at certain place limited by warranty: marine risk.[1]—If a vessel is warranted not to stay on a certain coast over a specified time, the policy is forfeited if she remains over that time, commencing after her arrival there, and being moored twenty-four hours in safety, and the loss of an anchor in a gale will not extend the time.[2] So in case of a warranty that a vessel remain at her moorings during the winter months, and she is moved therefrom for repairs, takes on coal, and proceeds under a charter for a cargo for the purpose of taking on the same, but before reaching the place where she is to receive the cargo she becomes disabled and ties up at a pier where she is destroyed by fire, there is a breach of warranty, even though it is stipulated that in case of loss or misfortune assured should make all reasonable exertions to safeguard the vessel without prejudice to the insurance; so also, where, although the vessel, while moored, became leaky, still the water could have been kept down by pumping; and in such case the claim that she was moved solely for repairs to be made will not be sustained.[3]

§ 2093. Stock kept up to specified amount.—If it is stipulated that the stock insured shall be kept up to a specified amount, it is no defense that said stock is not kept up to said agreed sum, nor does such failure warrant the defense of fraud, for it cannot operate to injure the insurer, since the risk is reduced by said breach.[4]

§ 2094. Stowage of cargo: warranty: marine risk.[5]—It is an implied stipulation in marine policies on cargo that the goods will

[18] Hosford v. Germania Fire Ins. Co. 127 U. S. 399, 403, 32 L. ed. 196, 8 Sup. Ct. 1199. See § 2215, post, as to condition concerning smoking.

[19] See § 1987 herein.

[20] Irvin v. Sea Ins. Co. 22 Wend. (N. Y.) 380.

See for principle of reasonable construction, Alsop v. Commercial Ins. Co. 1 Sum. (U. S. C. C.) 451, 459, Fed. Cas. No. 262, and § 211 herein.

[1] See § 1987 herein.

[2] Murden v. South Carolina Ins. Co. 1 Mill. Const. (S. C.) 200.

[3] Ryan v. Providence-Washington Ins. Co. 79 N. Y. Supp. 460, 79 App. Div. 316.

[4] So held in Travis v. Peabody Ins. Co. 28 W. Va. 583.

[5] See § 1987 herein.

be properly stowed in the vessel and customary place for the carriage of goods of that character, and if the risk is varied or increased by any breach of this implied condition, the policy will be avoided, although usage may justify a stowage which would not otherwise be permitted.[6]

§ 2095. Suicide: effect of warranty against.[7]—If the assured warrants in his application that he will not commit suicide within a specified time from the date of the policy, he is bound thereby, and in effect he warrants that his mental condition will be such for the time stipulated as will prevent suicide, sane or insane.[8]

§ 2096. Temperate habits: drunkenness: use of intoxicating liquors.[9]—(a) Whether a man is of temperate habits, and what constitutes drunkenness, habitual intemperance, or the habitual use of intoxicating liquors, has been a question frequently before the courts. We will include under this section conditions relating to temperate habits, drunkenness, and use of intoxicating liquors, as necessary to the proper consideration of the question indicated. The policies have evidently been so framed in numerous cases as to endeavor to cover the ground, and bind the assured to some positive stipulation. Where the case has been presented to the jury under the usual clauses, the necessity of a definition of words of the character here under consideration used in the particular policy becomes of the utmost importance, yet it is difficult, if not impossible, to give a legal definition of any of said words which can be separated and considered apart from the contract stipulation and facts before the court. While from the particular facts of the individual case courts have attempted such definitions, they can hardly be taken as applicable to all cases wherein like words are used, except in a most general way, and for these reasons the first inquiry necessarily is, What are the facts of the particular case? Questions concerning what constitutes habitual intemperance, etc., have also

[6] Leitch v. Atlantic Mutual Ins. Co. 66 N. Y. 100. See also Taunton Copper Co. v. Merchants' Ins. Co. 22 Pick. (39 Mass.) 108; Wolcott v. Eagle Ins. Co. 4 Pick. (21 Mass.) 429; Wadsworth v. Pacific Ins. Co. 4 Wend. (N. Y.) 33, 34; Lenox v. United Ins. Co. 3 Johns. Cas. (N. Y.) 178; Merchants & Manufacturers Ins. Co. v. Shillito, 15 Ohio St. 559; Apolinaris Co. v. Nord Deutsche Ins. Co. [1904] 1 K. B. L. R. 252, 73 L. J. K. B. 62, 89 L. T. 670, 52 W. R. 174, 20 T. L. R. 79, 9 Asp. M. C. 526; Gould v. Oliver, 4 Bing. N. C. 134, 14 Eng. Rul. Cas. 400; Da Costa v. Edmund, 4 Camp. 142, 2 Chit. 227, 16 R. R. 763; Milward v. Hibbert, 3 Q. B. 120, 2 G. & D. 142, 11 L. J. Q. B. 137, 24 Eng. Rul. Cas. 473.

[7] See § 1987 herein.

[8] Ballantyne v. Mutual Life Ins. Co. (1891) 25 Ir. L. T. & S. J. 538. See Ellinger & Co. v. Mutual Life Ins. Co. of N. Y. [1904] 1 K. B. L. R. 832. See c. LXXI. (§§ 2635 et seq.) herein (on suicide).

[9] See § 1987 herein.

As to representations, etc., under statutes, see § 1916 herein.

been frequently before the courts in various cases other than insurance, with varying conclusions as to the meaning of these terms.[10] But, as above stated, in contracts of life insurance, intemperance and like questions cannot be considered in the abstract, and independently they are involved with the point whether they impair the health. They are dependent upon other and qualifying phrases set forth in the contract, and with the intent of the parties as evidenced by their agreement, as well as with other matters existing [10] The following authorities, in addition to those hereinafter considered, show the different views taken by the courts as to intemperance, etc., in both insurance and other cases, and they are pertinent here in so far as the interpretation of the words themselves is concerned.

Alabama.—State v. Pratt, 192 Ala. 118, 68 So. 255 ("Intemperance:" case of impeachment of judge of probate); State v. Latham, 174 Ala. 281, 61 So. 351 ("Intemperate habits," "intemperance" defined: proceedings for removal of sheriff for intemperance).

Arkansas.—St. Louis, Iron Mountain & Southern Ry. Co. v. Waters, 105 Ark. 619, 152 S. W. 137 ("Intoxicated condition;" "drunk;" action against carrier).

California.—Mahone v. Mahone, 19 Cal. 627 (habitual intemperance: divorce).

Indiana.—Hughes v. State, 50 Ind. App. 617, 98 N. E. 839 ("Intoxicated" defined: action on bond of saloon keeper under statute).

Iowa.—State v. Baughn, 162 Iowa, 308, 50 L.R.A.(N.S.) 912, 143 N. W. 1100 ("Drunk" and "intoxicated" synonymous: removal of mayor of city); Lewis v. Lewis, 75 Iowa, 200, 39 N. W. 271 (habitual drunkenness: divorce); Wheeler v. Wheeler, 53 Iowa, 511, 36 Am. Rep. 240, 5 N. W. 585 (habitual drunkenness: divorce).

Kansas.—Walton v. Walton, 34 Kan. 195, 8 Pac. 110.

Massachusetts.—Blaney v. Blaney, 126 Mass. 205 (habitual drunkenness: divorce); Commonwealth v. Whitney, 11 Cush. (65 Mass.) 477.

Michigan.—Magahay v. Magahay, 35 Mich. 210.

Mississippi.—Yazoo & Mississippi Valley R. Co. v. Davidson, 106 Miss. 108, 63 So. 340 ("Intoxication:" ejection of passenger).

Nebraska.—Freeburg v. State, 92 Neb. 346, 138 N. W. 143 (what are synonyms of "intoxicated," "intoxication").

New Hampshire. — Bachelder v. Bachelder, 14 N. H. 380.

Ohio.—New York Life Ins. Co. v. La Boiteaux (Cin. Super. Ct.) 5 Big. L. & A. Cas. 437.

Oregon.—Parker v. C. A. Smith Lumber & Manufacturing Co. 70 Oreg. 41, 138 Pac. 1061 ("Intoxication;" "Intoxicated:" action for damages: contributory negligence).

Pennsylvania.—Commonwealth v. Tryman, 62 Pa. Super. Ct. 241 ("Intoxication" under statute, allows conviction of "drunkenness;" Ludwick v. Commonwealth, 18 Pa. St. 172; Fox v. Pennsylvania Mutual Life Ins. Co. (Dist. Ct. of Phila.) 4 Big. L. & A. I. Cas. 458.

Texas.—Paris v. Great Northern R. Co. 104 Tex. 482, 140 S. W. 434 ("Drunk;" "Intoxicated;" synonymous: action against carrier: contributory negligence) rev'g — Tex. Civ. App. —, 127 S. W. 294.

Vermont.—State v. Pratt, 34 Vt. 323 (habitual drunkard: prosecution for selling liquors to ).

England. — Chattock v. Shaw, 1 Moody & R. 498.

See Taylor's Medical Jurisprudence, 741 et seq. See note, "Warranty of temperate habits," etc., 38 Am. Rep. 615–617.

and in proof in the case. Again, whether the statement is a representation or warranty must be considered. Not infrequently the question is raised whether such statement is a matter of opinion or belief on the part of the assured, or has the force of a fact, and if there be a condition in the policy avoiding it for intemperance and the like, its exact terms must be construed.[11]

[11] The words of the court in an English case are pertinent. Lord Watson says: "I believe it to be useless to attempt a precise definition of what constitutes 'temperate habits' or 'temperance' in the sense in which these expressions are ordinarily employed. Men differ so much in their capacity for imbibing strong drink that quantity affords no test; what one man might take without exceeding the bounds of moderation another could not take without committing excess. In judging of a man's sobriety, his position in life and the habits of the class to which he belongs must, in my opinion, be always taken into account, because it is the custom of men engaged in certain lines of business to take what is called 'refreshment' without any imputation of excess at times, when a similar indulgence on the part of men not so engaged would be, to say the least, suspicious. But I do not think that the habits of a particular locality ought to be taken into account, or that a man who would be generally regarded as of intemperate habits ought to escape from that imputation because he is no worse than his neighbors. In the present case, the evidence clearly establishes that the assured was a most able and estimable man, but that circumstance is not of much weight, because able and estimable men are not necessarily exempt from social failings. . . . It seems to me to be the fair result of the evidence that the assured was in the habit of taking more drink than was good for him; that he was frequently affected with drunkenness on occasions when all excepting himself were sober; that his indulgence to excess had become so apparent that several of his friends remonstrated with him on the subject, and that instead of repudiating the charge he admitted it and promised amendment. These facts . . . are, in my opinion, altogether inconsistent with the truth of the assertion that he was, on the 9th of November, 1881 (the date of the proposal), of temperate habits and had always been so. I cannot, of course, leave out of view the cause of assured's death," which was certified by the attending physician to have been chronic hepatitis, which fact was not rebutted. The court further distinguishes the case from those where some latent disease exists only discoverable by post mortem, and says the purpose of a question of this character is "to elicit the fact and not the opinion of the assured, and if he chooses to give a satisfactory answer, he must take the risk of its being true. If his answer is hesitating or unsatisfactory, the insurers are put upon their guard and have the option of declining the assurance, or seeking information from other sources, or of charging a higher premium." Thomson v. Weems, L. R. 9 App. Cas. 671, reviewing Scottish Life Assur. Co. v. Buist, 4 Ct. Sess. Cas. 4th series, 1076; Hutchinson v. National Loan Fund Life Assur. Co. 7 Ct. Sess. Cas. (2d series) 467; Life Assoc. of Scotland v. Foster, 11 Ct. Sess. Cas. (3d series) 351, quoting from Lord Chancellor Cranworth in Andersen v. Fitzgerald, 4 H. L. Cas. 484, 503, 17 Jur. 595, and Knickerbocker Life Assur. Co. v. Foley, 15 Otto (105 U. S.) 350, 26 L. ed. 1055, so far as it decides that "in the case of an intemperate man delirium tremens is occasioned by abstinence from drink, and in the case

(b) In a Federal Supreme Court case the question concerning what constituted habitual intemperance was considered. We believe the opinion is of sufficient importance to warrant its insertion in part as given below.[12] Another decision in the same court holds of a temperate man by indulgence in liquor," and also on the ground that a finding of fact by the jury can form no ground for a precedent for the guidance of a court of law, even though the court may have refused to set it aside.

On scope and effect of provisions in policies of insurance forbidding use of intoxicating liquor, see notes in 15 L.R.A.(N.S.) 206, and 25 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1241.

[12] Northwestern Life Ins. Co. v. Muskegon National Bank, 122 U. S. 501, 30 L. ed. 1100, 25 Cent. L. J. 300, 7 Sup. Ct. 1221, opinion by Mr. Justice Miller. "The Muskegon National Bank recovered a judgment in the circuit court of the United States for the southern district of New York, against the Northwestern Mutual Life Insurance Company, upon a policy of insurance on the life of Erwin G. Comstock for twenty-three thousand seven hundred and seventeen dollars and four cents, and to this judgment the present writ of error is directed. The bank had an insurance upon the life of Comstock, its debtor, for the sum of twenty thousand dollars. On the trial before the jury, although some other issues were made in the pleadings, the contest turned, so far as the assignments of error are presented here, on the condition of Comstock in regard to the habit of drinking alcoholic liquors. The policy, and the application for it, the answers to which were signed both by Comstock and the bank through its president, present the foundation of the controversy. The sixteenth interrogatory is as follows: 'Are you, or have you ever been, in the habit of using alcoholic beverages or other stimulants.' The answer to this was, 'Yes; occasionally.' The twenty-second interrogatory, 'Have you read and assented to the following agreement?' was answered, 'Yes.' This agreement, so far as it touches the present issue, reads as follows: 'It is hereby declared that the above are the applicant's own fair and true answers to the foregoing questions, and that the applicant is not, and will not become, habitually intemperate or addicted to the use of opium.' The body of the policy declared that if Comstock shall become intemperate, so as to impair his health or induce delirium tremens, or if any statement in the application, on the faith of which the policy is made, shall be found to be in any material respect untrue, the policy is void. . . . We do not know of any established legal definition of those words. As they relate to the customs and habits of men generally in regard to the use of intoxicating drinks, and as the observation and experience of one man on that subject is as good as another of equal capacity and opportunities, their true meaning and significations would seem to be a question addressed rather to the jury than to the court. While there may be, on the one hand, such a clear case of intemperate habits as to justify the court in saying that such and such facts constitute a condition of habitual intemperance, or, on the other, such an entire absence of any proof, beyond an occasional indulgence in the use of ardent spirits, as to warrant the opposite conclusion, yet the main field of inquiry, and the determination of the question within it, must be submitted to the jury, and the question on this submission must be decided by them. The testimony in this case is all embodied in the record, and is contra-that the answer that assured had never been addicted to the intemperate use of liquors must be referred to a time prior to the issue of the policy; that if the policy is conditioned to be void if assured shall become so far intemperate as to impair his health, an excessive dictory. It must be divided into its relations to the two periods—before and after the execution of the policy. It is seen from the testimony that Comstock left Muskegon, where many of these witnesses resided who testify as to his excessive use of intoxicating drinks prior to 1875, and that they knew nothing of his habits after that. The policy was taken out in 1879. It is also quite clear that, under a pledge made to one of his partners in business, he had refrained from the use of intoxicating drinks from the 1st of June, 1878, up to the time of taking out this policy, and continued so to refrain up to March, 1880. There are several witnesses who testify that, after his removal to New York in 1875, he was drunk, had sprees once in a while, and perhaps several of them, up to the time when he made this pledge to his partner. There are others who testify that, after March, 1880, he was again seen intoxicated, and had spells of confinement on account of those sprees. On the other hand, there were four or five witnesses examined, some of whom were in the same building in which Comstock was employed in New York, who saw him daily, and transacted business with him for the two or three years prior to his death, which was in 1881, who testify that they never saw him drunk, or under the influence of liquor, and did not suppose that he was addicted to drinking; but that he was a prompt, efficient business man, and that they had no suspicion that he was intemperate, or indulged in the excessive use of stimulants. Among these, Mr. Samuel Borrow, vice-president of the Equitable Life Assurance Society, in whose building Comstock was a tenant, says that he saw him almost daily for two or three years prior to his death; that he struck him as a very energetic, active man; and that he never saw him under such circumstances as to suggest that he had been drinking. Under these circumstances, and in view of this conflicting testimony, the following language of the judge in his charge to the jury in this case seems to contain all that was necessary for him to say by way of assisting them to arrive at a just verdict: 'I think that there is no rule of law which says that, in order to make a man a drunkard, he must drink every day or every week to excess. Neither, on the other hand, does a single or an occasional excess make a man an habitual drunkard; but if you find that the habit and rule of a man's life is to indulge periodically and with frequency, and with increasing frequency and violence, in excessive fits of intemperance, such a use of liquor may properly cause the finding of habitual drunkenness. It is the fact of the certainty of these periodical sprees, accompanied with their frequency, which marks the habit. If a man should indulge in such a debauch once in a year only, it could not, in my opinion, properly be said that he was an habitual drunkard; he would be an occasional drunkard. But if such debauches increased in frequency, and the certainty of their increasing frequency becomes established, then the time finally arrives when the line between an occasional excess and habit is crossed. It is for you to say whether Comstock was, at the time of the application, or became afterward, the victim of such a habit. If you find that, after the making of the policy, Comstock became so far intemperate as to impair his health, the policy is avoided, and the verdict will be for the defendant.' At the request of the defendant, he also gave to the jury the following instructions: 'If the jury find from the evidence that Erwin G. Comstock was habitually intemperate when the use of liquor even though it does not induce delirium tremens, vitiates the policy, and that it is a question of fact whether such intemperance caused the death of assured. This case also holds that such intemperance need not necessarily continue down to the application for the policy of insurance was made, then they must find for the defendant. If the jury find from the evidence that Erwin G. Comstock became habitually intemperate after the issuing of that policy, then they must find for the defendant. If the jury find from the evidence that, after the making of the policy, Erwin G. Comstock became so far intemperate as to impair his health, then they must find for the defendant.' . . . What effect should be given to an entire abstinence from the use of liquors, for a whole year, in connection with occasional drunken sprees before or after, is not for the court to determine. . . . It would be rather harsh for a court to instruct a jury, as a matter of law, that a man who was sober nearly two years was at a period near the middle of that time 'habitually intemperate.' It was certainly a question to be left to the jury, on all the testimony, to draw their own conclusions in regard to the subject. . . . The court had no right in this summing up to ignore the testimony of four or five respectable and intelligent gentlemen who knew Comstock well during the most important part of this period, during several years of it, who saw him almost daily, and who testify that they never had any reason to suppose that he used ardent spirits at all, much less to excess. It was for the jury to weigh all these circumstances, and to determine in view of them all whether he was habitually intemperate. There are very few decisions by courts of high character relating to this question. The principal one which has been brought to our attention is Knickerbocker Life Ins. Co. v. Foley, 105 U. S. 350, 26 L. ed. 1055. In that case the insured, in answer to the question, 'Is the party of temperate habits; has he always been so?' answered 'Yes;' whereas the defendant company alleged that in fact he was a man of intemperate habits. The court, through Mr. Justice Field, said: 'The question was as to the habits of the insured. His occasional use of intoxicating liquors did not render him a man of intemperate habits, nor would an occasional case of excess justify the application of this character to him. An attack of delirium tremens may sometimes follow a single excessive indulgence. . . . When we speak of the habits of a person we refer to his customary conduct, to pursue which he has acquired a tendency from frequent repetition of the same acts. It would be incorrect to say that a man has a habit of anything from a single act. . . . The court did not, therefore, err in instructing the jury that, if the habits of the insured, "in the usual, ordinary, and everyday routine of his life, were temperate," the representations made are not untrue, within the meaning of the policy, although he may have an attack of delirium tremens from an exceptional overindulgence. It could not have been contemplated, from the language used in the policy, that it should become void for an occasional excess by the insured, but only when such excess had, by frequent repetitions, become a habit. And the testimony of witnesses, who had been intimate with him for years, and knew his general habits, may well have satisfied the jury that, whatever excesses he may at times have committed, he was not habitually intemperate.' We think this language eminently applicable to the case before us. . . . The judgment of the circuit court is therefore affirmed."

time of the last illness.[13] But it is also determined that a statement that assured has been and is of temperate habits is not necessarily falsified by the fact that he has had delirium tremens, and that the declaration is true if his usual and everyday life was temperate; also that an occasional use of intoxicating liquors does not make one a man of intemperate habits, nor an exceptional case of excess justify such an appelation.[14] So it is likewise decided that a representation by assured that he had never used spirituous liquors to excess is not falsified by proof of a single case of excess, or even by evidence of overindulgence in one, two, or three instances, as "excess" is used in the sense of increasing the insurance risk, and if directed against a habit or condition it must likewise be of sufficient substance to increase the risk, that is, the conditions shown by the evidence must, in the sense of the contract, be substantially and materially at variance with the representations upon which said contract was made, and then, if found material, they must have been relied on as a substantial inducement, not the sole or entire inducement, to issue the policy. In addition, a reasonable time limit which should comprehend the substantial and material conditions of the contract should be made within which such inquiries should be confined, and this involves the court's discretion, which is ordinarily not subject to review, so that even though the inquiry whether assured had ever indulged excessively would literally carry the time limit to such a remote period as to be unreasonable, still a reasonable limitation should be deemed intended and not an unreasonable one, notwithstanding the literal scope of the inquiry.[15] And in line with the above decision a [13] Ætna Life Ins. Co. v. Davey, 123 U. S. 739, 31 L. ed. 315, 8 Sup. Ct. 331, rev'g 20 Fed. 482. See Davey v. Ætna Life Ins. Co. 38 Fed. 650, 18 Ins. L. J. 665, 811, s. c. 140 U. S. 76, 35 L. ed. 371, 11 Sup. Ct. 720.

[14] Knickerbocker Life Ins. Co. v. Foley, 105 U. S. 350, 26 L. ed. 1055, approved in Northwestern Life Ins. Co. v. Muskegon National Bank, 122 U. S. 501, 30 L. ed. 1100 (considered in note 12 ante under this section).

Cited in Holtum v. Germania Life Ins. Co. 139 Cal. 645, 647, 73 Pac. 591; Supreme Lodge Knights of Pythias v. Foster, 26 Ind. App. 333, 342, 59 N. E. 877; Henn v. Metropolitan Life Ins. Co. 67 N. J. L. 310, 316, 51 Atl. 689.

Distinguished in Malicki v. Chicago Guaranty Fund Life Soc. 119 Mich. 151, 156, 77 N. W. 690.

Doubted in Thompson v. Weems, L. R. 9 App. Cas. 671 (quoted from in note 11 ante under this section). See Swick v. Home Life Ins. Co. 2 Dill. (U. S. C. C.) 160, Fed. Cas. No. 13,692, 2 Ins. L. J. 415; Brockway v. Mutual Benefit Life Ins. Co. 9 Fed. 249; Ranney v. Mutual Benefit Life Ins. Co. (1873) U. S. C. C. 1st Dist. Mass.

As to intemperance, use of intoxicating liquors, etc., as excepted risks and losses, see §§ 2612 et seq. herein.

[15] Provident Savings Life Assur. Soc. v. Hadley, 102 Fed. 856, 43 C. C. A. 25, 29 Ins. L. J. 998, aff'g Hadley v. Provident Savings Life Assur. Soc. 90 Fed. 390, certiorari negative answer to the question "Do you use alcoholic stimulants?" is held to refer to the then present time, and also where the reply was "no" to an inquiry, "were you ever intoxicated?" that a finding was justified, even though there was evidence of excesses in the past, of treatment for inebriety and acute alcoholism.[16] Again, where the question was "What is your daily practice in regard to the use of wines, spirits, or malt liquors?" and "What has been your practice in the past?" to both of which the answer was "none," the two questions must be read together so that the words "practice in the past" are limited to wines, spirits, or malt liquors, and the word "daily" should also be adopted, and the latter question being susceptible of two constructions, one which would relate not to daily but to general practice, it should be construed against insurer and in favor of insured, so that the answer being "no" or "none" it was either irresponsive or responsive, if the former, the want of an answer or an imperfect answer without further inquiry is waived, if the latter, then the interrogatory was fully met in the absence of fraud, and where it is alleged that assured then was and theretofore had been strongly addicted to the use of wines, spirits, or malt liquors, and indulged therein at frequent and regular intervals, it does not falsify the above answer "no" to the inquiry as to daily practice, therefore a demurrer to such a plea will be sustained, especially so when said plea does not allege that assured fraudulently or wrongfully omitted to state or concealed that he was or had been strongly addicted to the use of wines, spirits, or malt liquors, and indulged therein at frequent and regular intervals, or even that he drank to excess, or how often he drank, or that his indulgence therein had injuriously affected his health, or in any manner was material to the risk.[17] And where assured's alleged misrepresentations or concealments as to his drinking habits, and as to the kind and amount of daily consumption of malt, etc., liquors, and alcoholic beverages, and of concealment as to matters relating thereto are not shown to be wilfully false or to be of such a nature as to increase or enhance the risk or denied 179 U. S. 686, 46 L. ed. 386, 21 Sup. Ct. 919.

[16] Bacon v. New England Order of Protection (U. S. C. C.) 123 Fed. 152.

[17] Keatley v. Grand Fraternity (U. S. D. C.) 198 Fed. 264, 41 Ins. L. J. 1776, s. c. 25 Del. (2 Boyce) 267, 78 Atl. 874, 25 Del. (2 Boyce) 511, 82 Atl. 294, s. c. (U. S. D. C.) 198 Fed. 272, 41 Ins. L. J. 1784; Grand Fraternity v. Keatley, 27 Del. (4 Boyce) 308, 88 Atl. 553, 42 Ins. L. J. 1715 (the last three of these cases related, however, to representations as to health, family history, consultations with physicians, etc., and the effect of the Pa. act June 23, 1885, P. L. 134, as to material representations, etc., although these points were also involved in the first two cases above cited).

to be material to the risk assumed within the intent of a statute relating thereto and assured is found not to be an excessive drinker, nor his death caused by the drinking habit, assurer's defense fails and the policy is not avoided.[18]

Under an Alabama decision where the claim is that a negative answer to an inquiry whether assured used alcoholic or other stimulants was false, the court may properly instruct the jury that it must believe that it was assured's habit to use alcoholic or other stimulants at the time he made his application in order to find for defendant.[19] In Arkansas it is also held that an exceptional or occasional excess is not contemplated, but only an habitual or customary use, that is, a habit or customary course of conduct with a tendency to frequent repetitions, where the inquiry is as to the extent or excessive use of alcoholic stimulants, wine or malt liquors, etc.[20] So the word "addicted" in a requested instruction whether assured was "addicted to the use of intoxicating liquor" has the same meaning of habitual, etc., use as above stated.[1] And in that state a warranty of use of intoxicants only moderately, has reference, unless otherwise expressly so provided, to the time when made and not to a future use, so that if true when first made at the time of an original application for fraternal insurance the fact that assured surrenders his first certificate and obtains another and again applies for a third certificate, the application blank for which reaffirms the warranties in the first, but at the time the last application was made he drank to excess, said blank confirmation in said last application is not a warranty that he does not at that time use intoxicants to excess.[2] So under another decision if answers given in an application for life insurance are made warranties, inquiry as to assured's use of liquors and tobacco calls for the habit of the insured in these respects at the time of the application, and does not direct his mind to a single or incidental use.[3] But excessive use both before and after the policy is issued avoids the contract and precludes recovery where assured falsely stated that he did not

[18] Royal Union Mutual Life Ins. Co. v. Wynn (Wynn v. Royal Union Mutual Life Ins. Co.) (U. S. C. C.) 177 Fed. 289, Ga. Civ. Code 1895, secs. 2097–2098, 2101, aff'd (mem.) 185 Fed. 1007, 107 C. C. A. 664.

[19] Supreme Lodge Knights & Ladies of Honor v. Baker, 163 Ala. 518, 50 So. 958.

[20] Metropolitan Life Ins. Co. v. Shane, 98 Ark. 132, 135 S. W. 836. See also Mutual Reserve Fund Life Assoc. v. Cotter, 81 Ark. 205, 99 S. W. 67.

[1] Des Moines Life Ins. Co. v. Clay, 89 Ark. 230, 116 S. W. 232.

[2] Supreme Lodge Knights of Pythias v. Davis, 90 Ark. 264, 119 S. W. 257.

[3] Franklin Life Ins. Co. v. Galligan, 71 Ark. 295, 100 Am. St. Rep. 73. See Brotherhood of Locomotive use liquor at all.[4] But a statement in an accident policy application by assured that his habits are correct and temperate is held not a warranty; and the words "except as follows: no exceptions" qualify the disabilities to which the applicant has stated that he is not subject, and do not refer to separate statements as to habits.[5] Under a California decision a representation by an applicant that his habits of life are correct and temperate, does not refer necessarily to his temperance as a user of liquor or narcotics, so that, even though he was not addicted to these faults and although his representations may be true in said particular, it does not protect him in living in adultery.[6] In a Canada case the policy was so worded as to make the question not so much one of what constituted intemperance, as whether insured's habits as to temperance had been so far altered as to increase the risk.[7] In a Delaware case the point of daily "practice" as to the use of malt and spirituous liquors, and the construction of questions and answers relating thereto, was fully discussed, but as the same point arose in the same case in a Federal court it has been considered under that subdivision of this section.[8] In England, in addition to the decision already noted, it is held that if the jury find that assured was not of temperate habits at the time the proposal was made, the policy is avoided, even though the statement was made in good faith,[9] and that the question is whether assured was of temperate habits at the time of the insurance, also that it is not a question whether he was intemperate to such a degree as to impair his health.[10] Under a Georgia decision it appeared among other statements in an application that in answer to an inquiry "are you and have you always been of sober and temperate habits?" assured stated that he then was, and had been for some time, a total abstainer, but had formerly drank occasionally. Said statements were made the basis of the contract and a warranty. Assured surrendered this policy and took out another for a larger amount in place thereof containing a very similar stipulation, but it also excepted

Firemen & Enginemen v. Cole, 108 Ark. 527, 158 S. W. 153 (considered under subd. (d) of this section).

[4] Franklin Life Ins. Co. v. American National Bank, 74 Ark. 1, 84 S. W. 789.

[5] Maloney v. Maryland Casualty Co. 113 Ark. 174, 167 S. W. 845.

[6] Elliott v. Frankfort Marine, Accident & Plate Glass Ins. Co. 172 Cal. 261, L.R.A.1916F, 1026, 156 Pac. 481. As to intemperate habits, etc., see Hogins v. Supreme Council of the Champions of the Red Cross, 76 Cal. 109, 9 Am. St. Rep. 173, 18 Pac. 125.

[7] Boyle v. Phœnix Mutual Life Ins. Co. Ram's App. Cas. (L. C.) 379; 14 Can. S. C. Rep. 723 (three judges dissenting).

[8] Considered near end of subd. (a) this section.

[9] Hutton v. Waterloo Life Assur. Co. 1 Fost. & F. 735.

[10] Southcombe v. Merriman, Car. & M. 286.

the risk of death from the use of intoxicating liquors or narcotics, and also voided the policy and authorized its cancelation, etc., if assured should fall into the habit of becoming intoxicated, or into the habitual use of narcotics, or should have delirium tremens within three years from the date. There were also various warranties among which were affirmative answers as to the present and past use of malt or spirituous beverages made to the medical examiner. Assured had, between the dates of these two policies, made another application which was exactly the same as the last with a reference to "the old application" upon which was indorsed a requirement that agents and examiners answer questions explicitly stating that the terms "temperate, moderate," etc., would not do. In a suit upon the second policy taken out in place of the one surrendered, it was alleged in defense that assured had falsified his above statement in that he was an habitual drinker of intoxicating liquors, and had suffered from delirium tremens within the three years, that the policy had lapsed and upon reinstatement he had falsely reiterated his statements in his original application. There was considerable evidence sustaining said allegations of intoxication, drunkenness, etc., and he died in the "city stockade" where he had been sent for public drunkenness. It was held as to the above points that all matters which would destroy or defeat the contract, such as habits, etc., of assured, were controlled by the incontestable clause; that if an application for reinstatement was unnecessary, misrepresentations therein constituted no defense. Accordingly a judgment for the full policy amount was affirmed.[11] In Illinois, a case was decided wherein the assured was held to have forfeited his rights under a benefit certificate for violation of an agreement of total abstinence.[12] So it is held that the beneficiary is precluded from recovering where assured died as a result of the use of intoxicating liquors where he had falsely stated that he was not addicted to the excessive use of intoxicants, even though proof of habitual excessive use would have been required in order to expel him from the society under its rules.[13] In another case in the same state statements of the member of a mutual benefit society as to his habits were held representations, and not warranties, not avoiding the policy when made in good faith, even though [11] Massachusetts Benefit Life Assoc. v. Robinson, 104 Ga. 256, 42 L.R.A. 261, 30 S. W. 918, 28 Ins. L. J. 1003. See subd. (a) at end of this section (Ga. Stat.).

As to incontestability: fraud: false and fraudulent misrepresentations or warranties, etc., see §§ 3733a–3733h herein.

[12] Supreme Council of Royal Templars of Temperance v. Curd, 111 Ill. 284.

[13] Marren v. North American Union, 145 Ill. App. 375.

partly untrue.[14] In Indiana where the issue was upon the question what constituted temperate habits in respect to the use of intoxicating liquors, it was held that this referred to the applicant's habits at the date of the application, and excluded findings of the jury as to previous habits.[15] And if assured signs a statement in the medical examination that he is, to the best of his knowledge and belief, temperate, etc., and a proper subject for insurance, it will be construed as a warranty only of his bona fide belief and opinion.[16] Under another decision where assured represented that he was a total abstainer from the use of intoxicants a finding of the jury that at the time of the application he was not addicted to the use of such liquors and was a total abstainer will be sustained, notwithstanding evidence to the contrary, where a large number of witnesses who were often in his company, and also the hotel keeper where he boarded, testify that they had never seen him intoxicated or when he had showed signs of intoxication, and had never detected the smell of liquor on his breath, and that they had known him to refuse offers of drink, and there was also other evidence of like tenor and effect.[17] Under an Iowa decision the use of whisky to some extent does not breach a warranty by assured that he used a glass of beer occasionally, so stated in answer to an inquiry: "Do you use either malt or spirituous liquors daily or nearly every day?" nor by the statement "beer" in answer to a question "If so, what is used and the approximate amounts?" answer explicitly.[18] So in case assured states that he does not use intoxicants to "excess" and also that he does take "a glass of beer occasionally" it suggests the advisability of further inquiry, and it is very pertinently declared, per Weaver, J., that "What consti-

[14] Northwestern Benefit & Mutual Aid Soc. v. Cain, 21 Ill. App. 471. See further, Richards v. Richards, 19 Bradw. (Ill. App.) 435; Murphy v. People, 90 Ill. 59. It is also held in the appellate court in that state that if the statements in an application for membership in a mutual benefit society are made warranties, and the applicant states in his application that he uses liquors to no extent, the fact that he does use alcoholic stimulants occasionally will not, it is held, avoid the insurance, unless there appears to be to some extent a habit or custom in using them: Grand Lodge Ancient Order United Workmen v. Belcham, 48 Ill. App. 346. But see Mutual Life Ins. v. Simpson, 88 Tex. 333, 28 L.R.A. 765, 53 Am. St. Rep. 757, 31 S. W. 501, rev'g (Tex. Civ. App.) 28 S. W. 837.

[15] John Hancock Mutual Life Ins. Co. v. Daly, 65 Ind. 6. See also 8 Ins. L. J. 319.

As to excessive use of intoxicating liquor, see Union Life Ins. Co. v. Jamison, 31 Ind. 28, 67 N. E. 199.

[16] Iowa Life Ins. Co. v. Haughton, 46 Ind. App. 467, 87 N. E. 702.

[17] Union Central Life Ins. Co. v. Hollowell, 20 Ind. App. 150, 50 N. E. 399.

[18] Lakka v. Modern Brotherhood of America, 163 Iowa, 159, 49 L.R.A. (N.S.) 902, 143 N. W. 513. See Miller v. Mutual Benefit Life Ins. Co. 34 Iowa, 222.

tutes 'excess' in this respect is largely a matter of opinion, and varies all the way between a 'drink' and a 'drunk;' while an occasional glass of beer may mean anything from a glass once a month to one every fifteen minutes according to the capacity of the individual, or, perhaps according to the 'liberality' of his views." [19] In Kentucky, and this is undoubtedly true in all jurisdictions, an insurer has a right to require for his own protection information as to the habits of an applicant for insurance concerning the use of intoxicants so that it may understandingly act in assuming or rejecting the risk, for knowledge of this character is of vital importance,[20] as such inquiries relate to matters material to the risk and a full, true and correct answer should be given, and the policy will be avoided if the applicant's statements concerning the same are false,[1] although it is held that they need only be substantially true,[2] and under the statute of said state, whereby statements are to be deemed representations and not warranties, no misrepresentations unless material or fraudulent prevent recovery.[3] It is also decided that in order to be material such former habits must have existed to such an extent as to affect assured's health or physical condition at the time of the application, and thereby render him an unsatisfactory subject for insurance.[4] A distinction, however, is made in this respect that although the case holding as last stated is approved, still it is decided that there should be a reversal of judgment where an instruction in effect required insurer to show that assured was, at the time of the application, addicted to the intemperate or excessive use of intoxicating liquor, etc., in order to defeat a recovery on that issue, it being held that if the applicant was at the time in the habit of using such intoxicants, no recovery should be allowed on the policy although he was not using them excessively or intemperately.[5] Under another decision a statement by assured that he

[19] Biermann v. Guaranty Mutual Life Ins. Co. 142 Iowa, 341, 120 N. W. 963, 965.

[20] Metropolitan Life Ins. Co. v. Ford, 31 Ky. L. Rep. 514, 102 S. W. 876; Union Central Life Ins. Co. v. Lee, 20 Ky. L. Rep. 839, 47 S. W. 614, 28 Ins. L. J. 171; Mutual Life Ins. Co. of N. Y. v. Thomson, 94 Ky. 253, 259, 22 S. W. 87.

[1] Provident Savings Life Assur. Soc. v. Dees, 27 Ky. L. Rep. 670, 86 S. W. 522; Union Central Life Ins. Co. v. Lee, 20 Ky. L. Rep. 839, 47 S. W. 614, 28 Ins. L. J. 171.

[2] Metropolitan Life Ins. Co. v. Ford, 31 Ky. L. Rep. 514, 102 S. W. 876.

[3] Ky. Stat. 639; Russell's Ky. Stat. 1909, p. 1031, sec. 4286, in force since 1874. See § 1916 herein.

[4] Mutual Life Ins. Co. of N. Y. v. Thomson, 94 Ky. 253, 259, 22 S. W. 87.

[5] Union Central Life Ins. Co. v. Lee, 20 Ky. L. Rep. 839, 47 S. W. 614, 28 Ins. L. J. 171 (negative answers were given to the questions: "Do you use spirituous, malt, or other intoxicating liquors? If so, to what had never been drunk to intoxication during the five years last past, made in answer to a question, is not falsified by testimony that he had been seen intoxicated by two witnesses on one occasion and by one witness on perhaps one occasion; nor is it falsified where the applicant was at no time shown to be unable to take care of himself or to go about his business especially so, as what would be considered intoxication by one witness would be regarded as duly sober by another.[6] Again, a representation that the applicant's habits are correct without exception, continued on yearly renewal contracts, refer only to the time when made and if true then, there is no continuing warranty that they were true as to the renewal policy sued on, so that their then falsity is no defense.[7] The question as to the use of alcoholic beverages may be such as to render a direct answer practically impossible by one who has ever indulged in such use in the slightest degree, and the answer may therefore be not responsive. As where the question was: "What is your practice as regards the use of spirits, wines, malt liquors, or other alcoholic beverages?" and the answer was "Kind, nothing. Amount, none. How often, never;" but it is held that the word "practice" means, in said connection, "custom," "habit," and that if the applicant's use of intoxicants has not been so frequent as that he can be said to have acquired the habit of using intoxicants, a jury would be warranted in finding that his negative answer as to his practice in said use of intoxicants was true; and a judgment for plaintiff was affirmed even though assured had taken the Keeley treatment, but the evidence failed to show that he had taken it for inebriety.[8] In a Louisiana case it is held, affirming the judgment of the court of appeal, that a negative answer to the question, "Do you use spirituous, malt, or vinous liquors?"—is not false when the answerer partakes of intoxicating liquors only occasionally and temperately. Upon rehearing, however, the judgment of the court of appeal was held erroneous and it was decided that a life policy is forfeited where, in answer to questions in the application whether the applicant used spirituous liquors, and as to the average quantity used per day, he wrote "No," when in fact he did use liquor to some extent, even though such use was not habitual or excessive. It was also determined that specific inquiries make material the matter inquired about and that any misrepresentation avoids the policy without regard extent? Kind? Average quantity each day? Have you at any time used them to excess? When? Give full particulars).

[6] Columbian Life Ins. Co. v. Tousey, 152 Ky. 447, 153 S. W. 767.

[7] Ætna Life Ins. Co. v. Rustin, 152 Ky. 42, 153 S. W. 14.

[8] Columbia Life Ins. Co. v. Tousey, 152 Ky. 447, 153 S. W. 767.

to actual materiality; and if the answers were such as might have influenced insurer in accepting the risk, or fixing the premium, they must be truthful, and, therefore, in answering questions as to habits of the above character the statements should not be misleading.[9] It is also decided in that state that if the policy stipulates that it shall be void if any untrue answer has been made, and the assured declares that his habits then were, and always had been, temperate, the contract is avoided if the answer is untrue, although made in good faith and without intent to deceive.[10] In a Maryland case insured stated that his habit as to the use of intoxicants was one glass of beer a day on an average, and that such had been his habit in the past, also that he had never taken any special treatment for alcoholism, which under the evidence was manifestly untrue in that it appeared that he drank very much more on the average per day than he had stated, and he had been specially treated for acute alcoholism, he had also been treated for cirrhosis of the liver of which alcohol, or the abuse of spirituous liquors was shown to be the most common or chief cause. It was held that the applicant's drinking was palpably material to the risk and his false answers avoided the policy; also, that being so material and in view of the fact that he must have known his statements to be untrue, they were not made in good faith; and in addition, in view of the materiality of the statements and their falsity the cause of death was unimportant.[11] But it is also held that the use of alcoholic liquors within six months prior to the application date does not falsify a statement that the applicant is a total abstainer made in reply to a question: "Do you use alcoholic or other stimulants, and if so to what extent?" [12] In Massachusetts it is determined that under its statute a contract is voidable if fraudulently obtained either by misrepresentations made with actual intent to deceive, or if the matter misrepresented increased the risk; also that if insured used ardent spirits to excess his habits of inebriety were material upon whether he was an insurable risk; and where the falsity of negative answers to questions concerning this habit is shown by competent evidence, that for a long time prior to the application, not too remote, assured

[9] Brignac v. Pacific Mutual Life Ins. Co. 112 La. 576, 66 L.R.A. 322, 36 So. 595.

[10] Hartwell v. Alabama Gold Life Ins. Co. 33 La. Ann. 1353, 39 Am. Rep. 294.

[11] Mutual Life Ins. Co. v. Mullen, 107 Md. 457, 69 Atl. 385, 37 Ins. L. J. 507; act 1894, p. 1059, c. 662; Code Pub. Gen. L. 1904, art. 23, sec. 196. See also Forwood v. Prudential Ins. Co. of America, 117 Md. 254, 83 Atl. 169, 41 Ins. L. J. 1135. See § 1916 herein.

[12] Supreme Council of Royal Arcanum v. Brashears, 89 Md. 633, 43 Atl. 866.

was addicted to habits of intoxication, of which he must have had knowledge, the policy would be avoided.[13] In a Michigan case, by the terms of the application and certificate the answers were warranties. It was also stipulated that if the member became so far intemperate from the use of intoxicating liquors as to produce delirium tremens, or should die as a direct result of the drinking of intoxicating liquors, or if any of the statements or declarations in the application should be found untrue in any respect the policy should be void and all benefits thereunder forfeited without notice. The trial court charged the jury that "intoxication" was defined as a condition of a man whose physical and mental powers are affected by the use of intoxicating liquors; also that the term "intoxicated" is defined "as 'inebriated,' 'made drunk,' 'excited by frenzy.' You see it is a pretty strong definition when you get down to intoxication." In the Supreme Court, Ostrander, C.J., said: "The undisputed testimony was that after the certificate was issued deceased used intoxicating liquors. It is not very clear whether he used liquor for three years immediately before the certificate was issued; before the three year period he used liquors. We think the testimony does not conclusively prove either that he used liquor at the time the application was made, that he had before that time been intoxicated, that he had delirium tremens, or that he died as the direct result of drinking intoxicating liquors. . . . We are not satisfied with either definition of 'intoxication' given in the charge—one most favorable, and the other most unfavorable, to the defendant. For the favorable definition given, defendant is responsible, because the instruction was requested. The question, 'Were you ever intoxicated?' in an application for insurance, ought not to be treated as asking whether at any time the applicant had taken liquor with any perceptible effect upon either his mental or physical powers. Nor should it be held to be the equivalent of the question, 'Were you ever excited to frenzy by drink?' The testimony tended strongly to sustain each of defendant's contentions, and especially the one that the insured had been many times, if not commonly, intoxicated before he made the application. We are therefore constrained to hold that in giving the definition of the word intoxicated unfavorable to defendant reversible error was committed."[14] It was also held in that [13] Langdeau v. John Hancock Mutual Life Ins. Co. 194 Mass. 56, 18 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1190, 80 N. E. 452, 36 Ins. L. J. 432; Rev. L. c. 173, sec. 27.

[14] Gall v. Sovereign. Camp Woodmen of the World, 166 Mich. 690, 132 N. W. 468, 40 Ins. L. J. 1964 (questions and answers were as follows: "Do you now use wine, spirits, or malt liquors? No. If so what kind and average amount per day [no answer]. Were you ever intoxicated? No. If so, when [no answer]. Have state that if there was a false representation as to the habit of using spirituous liquors before the issue of the policy it was avoided and that an instruction was erroneous, that if assured at the time of effecting the insurance "was in the habit of drinking intoxicating liquors to excess, that would end the case and your verdict should be for defendant. If you find he was not an intemperate user of alcoholic liquors, it would not avoid the policy. It is a simple question whether he was an excessive drinker. If he was an habitual, excessive drinker, it would avoid the policy." In the case so holding assured was asked whether he drank beer, ale, wine, or spirits and if so to state what, how often, and how much, to which he answered, "Yes, two or three glasses of beer daily." And he also gave a negative answer to the question "Have you ever drank beer, wine, or spirits, or ale, to excess?" and there was evidence tending to falsify this statement. Grant, C. J., said: "The representation was clear and explicit that he did not drink spirituous liquors. Defendant asked this and was entitled to know it. If he was in the habit of using spirituous liquors as a beverage, he should have so stated." [15] In the same case it is held error to instruct the jury that if it believed that insured "indulged in ale, wine, beer, or intoxicating liquors to excess" then the policy was obtained by false representations and was void, but that if "he did not indulge in spirituous liquors to excess" then the defense was not sustained.[16] It is decided in Minnesota that the expression "intemperate use of intoxicating liquors," in a contract of insurance, means such an indulgence in intoxicants as tends to impair the health of the insured, or render the insurance risk more hazardous.[17] It is also held that the question, "Do you use malt or spirituous beverages?" refers to a customary and habitual use and not to a single occasional act or use; so that inquiry, "Have you always been temperate?" means moderation and an abstinence from excessive or injurious use, and not total abstinence from the use of malt or spirituous liquors.[18] And a benefit certificate is not vitiated, in the absence of fraud or intentional concealment, by the answer "When I come to town,—beer" to the question, "If you use intoxicants at all, state kind and quantity consumed," where question and you ever taken a liquor cure? No. If so, when and where? [no answer]."

[15] Malicki v. Chicago Guaranty Fund Life Soc. 119 Mich. 151, 5 Det. L. N. 743, 77 N. W. 690, 28 Ins. L. J. 216.

[16] Malicki v. Chicago Guaranty Fund Life Soc. 123 Mich. 148, 81 N. W. 1073.

[17] O'Connor v. Modern Woodmen of America, 110 Minn. 18, 25 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1244, 124 N. W. 454.

[18] Chambers v. Northwestern Mutual Ins. Co. 64 Minn. 495, 58 Am. St. Rep. 549, 67 N. W. 367.

answer were by the certificate made a part thereof and it was provided that, if such information was not literally true in every respect, the benefit certificate would be void, although the applicant was in the habit of drinking both beer and whisky, as the answer was truthful so far as responsive and was sufficient to inform the society that the applicant to some extent was in the habit of drinking intoxicants.[19] In a Mississippi case assured stated among other matters that he did not and never had used narcotics, and never used daily exceeding two ounces of spirits or two drinks of wine, or malt liquors and "have always been temperate and sober, except as stated below, never drank habitually, nor to any excess." He also stated that several years prior thereto he had suffered from insomnia and nervousness due to overwork, but had fully recovered. It was agreed that these statements were material to the risk, the sole basis of the contract and they were also warranties to be full, complete and true. It appeared that about the time stated as to suffering from insomnia, etc., assured had been treated for acute dementia partly due to alcoholism and to overtaxation and worry, and that he remained at a sanatarium for about three weeks. The rule was asserted that any contract induced by misrepresentation or concealment of material facts may be avoided by the party injured thereby; that if a party makes a positive statement of a fact material to the risk, such fact must be true; that it is not sufficient that he believes it to be true, but it must be so in fact, or the policy will be avoided, provided always that the misstatement be about a material matter, and a judgment for plaintiff was reversed.[20] In Missouri, if the statement as to sober and temperate habits is true when made, assured's subsequent intemperate habits do not avoid the contract.[1] So where the misrepresentation relates to assured's habits as to temperance, etc., it does not avoid the insurance unless, within the statute, the matter so misrepresented contributed to assured's death.[2] It is also decided in that state that a statement that insured abstained entirely from the use of intoxicating liquors and had always been a total abstainer, and which were warranted to be true in the application which formed

[19] O'Connor v. Modern Woodmen of America, 110 Minn. 18, 25 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1224, 124 N. W. 454.

[20] Fidelity Mutual Life Ins. Co. v. Miazza, 93 Miss. 18, 46 So. 817, 37 Ins. L. J. 810, s. c. 93 Miss. 422, 48 So. 1017.

[1] Reichard v. Manhattan Ins. Co. 31 Mo. 518. See further, Gartside v. Connecticut Mutual Life Ins. Co. 8 Mo. App. 593.

"Habitual drunkard," see Sitton v. Grand Lodge Ancient Ord. U. W. 84 Mo. App. 208.

"Intemperate," see Evans v. Modern Woodmen of America, 149 Mo. App. 166, 129 S. W. 485.

[2] Harris v. Fidelity Casualty Co. of N. Y. 172 Mo. App. 241, 157 S. W. 1046, 42 Ins. L. J. 1357; Rev. Stat. 1909, sec. 6937. See § 1916 herein.

part of the contract, were warranties, and if the jury had found the statements false it would have been their duty to have found for insurer. A judgment for plaintiff was reversed upon the point that the credibility of a witness, upon whose testimony rested the proof of the falsity of assured's statement, was improperly assailed.[3] In Nebraska, where one was insured in a mutual benefit society, it was held that the failure to declare a forfeiture for the excessive use of liquors during assured's lifetime prevented the company from raising such an objection for the first time after death to defeat a recovery.[4] In New York, if there is a warranty against habitual intemperance, it is not necessary to prove that the health has been impaired to sustain the defense of a breach of warranty;[5] and the word "temperate" as a warranty is held to mean, not that assured totally abstains, but that he is moderate in the use of intoxicants, and refrains as a habit from excessive indulgence,[6] and that assured, if not generally or specifically inquired of as to the habit of intemperance, is not obligated to disclose the same, although it may be prejudicial to his health.[7] In another case in that state assured warranted that he was temperate and did not use liquor to excess, but he also stated that he had "taken beer" and had been intoxicated twice, the last time being "six months ago," but it appeared that he was given to yearly periodical sprees and had within three or four years been several times convicted of public intoxication and sentenced to jail, and that he died during such a confinement, but otherwise he was not an habitual drinker and that his health was apparently not thereby impaired or affected. It was held that by his acceptance as a member a practical construction was placed upon his statements by the parties, that the jury was justified in finding assured's statements true, and a judgment for plaintiff was affirmed.[8] In Ohio, a

[3] Hoagland v. Modern Woodmen of America, 157 Mo. App. 15, 137 S. W. 900, 40 Ins. L. J. 1580.

[4] Grand Lodge Ancient Order United Workmen v. Brand, 29 Neb. 644, 46 N. W. 95.

[5] McGinley v. United States Life Ins. Co. 77 N. Y. 495. See Shader v. Railway Passengers Ins. Co. 66 N. Y. 441, 23 Am. Rep. 65, 5 Thomp. & C. (N. Y.) 643; Van Valkenburg v. American Popular Life Ins. Co. 70 N. Y. 605; Horton v. Equitable Life Assur. Soc. (N. Y. C. C. P. 1870), 2 Big. L. & A. I. Cas. 108; Furness v. Mutual Ins. Co. (Supr. Ct. N. Y.) 11 Rept. 98, 14 J. & S. (46 N. Y. Super. Ct.) 467.

[6] Meacham v. New York State Mutual Benefit Assoc. 30 N. Y. St. Rep. 874, 120 N. Y. 237, 24 N. E. 283.

"Excessive" held to mean excessively or intemperately, Moon v. Prudential Ins. Co. of America, 87 N. Y. Supp. 368, 92 App. Div. 135 (finding for plaintiff held not sustained by evidence), s. c. 95 N. Y. Supp. 1147.

[7] Rawls v. American Life Ins. Co. 36 Barb. (N. Y.) 357. But see Rawlins v. Desbrough, 2 Moody & R. 328.

[8] Hann v. Supreme Ruling of Fraternal Mystic Circle, 140 N. Y. Supp.

warranty that the applicant has never been intemperate and is of correct and temperate habits, is not broken by occasional excessive indulgences, although a continuous and daily use of intoxicating drinks is not necessary to constitute intemperate habits,[9] but that if assured has been addicted to periodical and habitual spreeing, the contract will be void.[10] In a Pennsylvania case the stipulation was that if assured should become so intemperate as to seriously and permanently impair his health, or induce delirium tremens, the policy should be void, and it was held that habitual intemperance was not meant unless it had the exact effect stipulated, and that any less effect was insufficient;[11] but a witness may be asked, under the issue of falsity of a declaration of temperate habits, whether he had ever seen the insured under the influence of liquor, and also whether he had ever seen the assured drunk more than once.[12] In Rhode Island, it is held that assured need not have been strictly temperate, and although he occasionally used liquor, yet if he did not indulge to an excess, he was not intemperate or addicted to the excessive use of alcoholic liquors.[13] Under a South Carolina decision an occasional excessive use of intoxicating liquors does not constitute intemperate habits.[14] In Texas representations concerning habits as to the use of intoxicants are held limited to the time of making the application and are not retroactive and do not relate to the future;[15] and evidence of the knowledge of insured's agent as to assured's habits of drunkenness must be properly set up in the replication to render it admissible.[16]

666, 155 App. Div. 665, 42 Ins. L. J. 649 (Kruse, J. dissenting; one of the grounds being that "He was intoxicated too much and too often to be classed as temperate"). Compare Shea v. Great Camp of Knights of Maccabees, 52 N. Y. Supp. 333, 31 App. Div. 633.

[9] Union Mutual Life Ins. Co. v. Reif, 36 Ohio St. 596, 38 Am. Rep. 613. See Protected Home Circle v. Winter, 14 Ohio C. C. 194.

[10] Mutual Benefit Ins. Co. v. Holterhoft, 2 Cinc. (Ohio) 379. See Northwestern Mutual Life Ins. Co. v. Risley, 22 Ohio C. C. 160, 12 Ohio C. D. 186.

[11] Odd Fellows Mutual Life Ins. Co. v. Rohkopp, 94 Pa. St. 59, 9 Ins. L. J. 787. See Knecht v. Mutual Life Ins. Co. 90 Pa. St. 118, 35 Am. Rep. 641.

[12] United Brethren Mutual Aid Soc. v. O'Hara, 120 Pa. 256, 13 Atl. 932. See Keatley v. Travelers Ins. Co. 187 Pa. 197, 42 W. N. C. 371, 40 Atl. 808.

[13] Mowry v. Home Ins. Co. 9 R. I. 346.

[14] Fludd v. Equitable Life Assur. Soc. of the U. S. 75 S. C. 315, 55 S. E. 762.

[15] Order of United Commercial Travelers v. Sampson, — Tex. Civ. App. —, 177 S. W. 169.

[16] Texas Mutual Life Ins. Co. v. Davidge, 51 Tex. 244.

For other cases as to intemperance, etc., see Darrill v. Modern Woodmen of America, — Tex. Civ. App. —, 118 S. W. 211 (statements as to never having been intoxicated, etc., merely statements of opinion); Equitable Life Assurance Soc. v. Liddell, — Tex. Civ. App. —, 74 S. W. 87 (occasional excesses no breach of

Under a Virginia decision assured's statements that he had never drank intoxicants to excess evidently has reference to the time when he made his application and not to excessive drinking or being drunk at periods of time subsequent thereto.[17] In Washington an admission of occasional drinking, as where assured had stated that he drank beer once in a great while, must be considered in connection with his statement that he was almost, and always had been, a total abstainer, and in view of both statements the certificate will not be avoided: so, unless assured is so addicted to excessive or periodical indulgence in the use of intoxicating liquors that it becomes habitual, he is not "intemperate" even though he may have drank to excess upon exceptional occasions; and it does not constitute error to charge the jury that "the best definition I can give you of the word 'intemperate' so far as the intemperate use of intoxicating liquor is concerned is the immoderate use of intoxicating liquor. I don't know whether you know any more about it now than you did before. I don't."[18] Under a Wisconsin decision, "Intemperate habit" as applied to the use of intoxicants is defined as commonly meaning the use thereof to excess; that no idea of regularity of interval between indulgence or degree of excessiveness is meant, but merely that one has an appetite and has indulged it so as to become accustomed to indulge it with considerable frequency and to an apparent degree. The idea is conveyed that a man has so often excessively indulged in intoxicating liquor that it has become his customary rather than exceptional course of conduct, that is, it is a usual, customary characteristic of him.[19]

(c) As to waiver or estoppel: insurer's or agent's knowledge or acts. Where a policy of life insurance provides that it shall be void if the insured shall use alcoholic drinks so as to injure his health, and that the insurer may cancel the policy, when it comes warranty); Brown v. Sovereign Camp Woodmen of the World, 20 Tex. Civ. App. 373, 49 So. 893 (defense of misrepresentations as to use of intoxicating liquors: judgment for assurer).

[17] Metropolitan Life Ins. Co. v. De Vault's Admx. 109 Va. 392, 63 S. E. 982.

[18] Schon v. Modern Woodmen of America, 51 Wash. 482, 99 Pac. 25. See Aris v. Mutual Life Ins. Co. of N. Y. 54 Wash. 269, 103 Pac. 50, 54 Wash. 695, 103 Pac. 53 ("occasional" defined).

[19] Andrews v. United States Casualty Co. 151 Wis. 82, 142 N. W. 487, 42 Ins. L. J. 1370—Marshall, J. (accident insurance), s. c. but decided on one of the other points involved, 159 Wis. 604, 150 N. W. 947, 45 Ins. L. J. 539. See Bakalors v. Continental Casualty Co. 141 Wis. 43, 25 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1241 (annotated on scope and effect of provisions in policies of insurance forbidding use of intoxicating liquor), 122 N. W. 721.

to his knowledge that the insured has made false statements in this respect, or does so use alcoholic liquor, and that the policy shall be void if he dies from the effects of intoxication, or while intoxicated, and the insurer's agent makes out a policy well knowing the insured to be an habitual drunkard, and afterward receives the premium without canceling the policy, the insurer thereby waives all the conditions in the policy, except that making it void if the insured dies while intoxicated, or from the effects of intoxication.[20] And the acceptance of a premium upon a life policy, with knowledge that since the issue of the policy the assured has become addicted to the use of intoxicating liquors, is a waiver of a right of forfeiture on that ground.[1] So in a Colorado case the policy was revived by a creditor, with the knowledge of insurer's president that insured had become so far intemperate as to impair his health, and the plaintiff was permitted to recover.[2] Again, although it is claimed that assured's answers as made were by mistake or fraud of insurer's agent, so inserted in the application as to falsify or qualify those made by assured, it is held that a policy provision prohibiting an agent from changing or modifying the terms of said policy does not apply to conditions relating to the inception of the contract.[3]

(d) As to evidence. The burden of proof is upon assurer to sustain its relied upon claim of misrepresentations, their material-

[20] Newman v. Covenant Mutual Benefit Assoc. 76 Iowa, 56, 1 L.R.A. 659, 14 Am. St. Rep. 196, 40 N. W. 87.

[1] Phoenix Mutual Life Ins. Co. v. Raddin, 120 U. S. 183, 30 L. ed. 644, 7 Sup. Ct. 500.

[2] Pomeroy v. Rock Mountain Insurance & Saving Inst. 9 Colo. 295, 12 Pac. 153.

[3] Forwood v. Prudential Ins. Co. of America, 117 Md. 254, 83 Atl. 169, 41 Ins. L. J. 1135.

See further as to waiver and estoppel the following cases:

Illinois.—Busing v. Modern Woodmen of America, 151 Ill. App. 49 (waiver of defense as to excessive use of liquor held not to waive defense of death from such use).

Iowa.—Bierman v. Guaranty Mutual Life Ins. Co. 142 Iowa, 341, 120 N. W. 963 (agent had knowledge of insured's intemperate habits: insurer estopped).

Maryland.—Forwood v. Prudential Ins. Co. of America, 117 Md. 254, 83 Atl. 169, 41 Ins. L. J. 1135 (mistake or fraud of agent in writing in answers as to use of liquor does not aid recovery).

Ohio.—Protected Home Circle v. Winter, 14 Ohio C. C. 194 (if member stated facts truly as to use of intoxicants and agent inserted false answers certificate cannot be forfeited).

Oregon. — Whigham v. Supreme Court Independent Order of Foresters, 51 Oreg. 489, 94 Pac. 968 (knowledge of officers and agents of lodge as to use of liquor does not estop) s. e. 44 Oreg. 543, 75 Pac. 1067.

Virginia. — Modern Woodmen of America v. Lawson, 110 Va. 81, 3 Va. Appeals, 527, 65 S. W. 509 (assurer held,—estopped by agent's personal knowledge of applicant's habits as to use of intoxicating liquors and that his statements as to same are false).

ity and fraudulent intent.[4] So the burden of proving death from delirium tremens is on insurer when it relies upon this defense.[5] And where the statute so requires and the contract is within the terms thereof, it must, in order to preclude recovery, be clearly shown that assured's statements that he never used intoxicating liquor and was a total abstainer were wilfully false, fraudulently made, material, and induced insurer to issue the policy.[6] In case an applicant states that he used a glass of beer occasionally, in answer to the question whether he used either malt or spirituous liquors daily or nearly every day; and to the further inquiry, "If so, what is used and the approximate amount? Answer explicitly," he answers "beer," it is held that evidence that he used whisky to some extent does not show that the warranty was breached.[7] And death from the intemperate use of intoxicating liquor is not shown by evidence of accidental poisoning and consequent death from drinking wood alcohol since the latter is not an intoxicating liquor but a narcotic poison.[8]

If, however, assurer has clearly and fully met the burden of proof resting upon it and has shown beyond controversy the falsity of assured's negative answers to questions as to his daily use of malt, and spirituous liquors, and also whether he had ever used them to excess, and assured has admittedly signed the application which declared "that all the statements and answers to above questions are complete and true, and I agree that they shall form a part of the insurance applied for," the original burden of proof is shifted and it then rests upon plaintiff to show that said answers and statements were not those of assured, or that he qualified the same, but that assurer's agent or medical examiner wrote them in the application as they appeared therein, as the latter's conclusions, and that they were so written without assured's knowledge, and without his qualifications; that is, that said answers, as written in the application, were not in fact those made by assured. In addition the burden thus shifted must rest upon evidence sufficiently positive and certain to remove the barrier to recovery raised by

[4] Metropolitan Life Ins. Co. v. De Vault's Admx. 109 Va. 392, 63 S. E. 982.

That excessive use of intoxicants not provable under general denial, see Marren v. North American Union, 145 Ill. App. 375.

[5] Malicki v. Chicago Guaranty Fund Life Soc. 119 Mich. 151, 77 N. W. 690, 28 Ins. L. J. 216, s. c. 123 Mich. 148, 81 N. W. 1073.

[6] Northwestern Mutual Life Ins. Co. v. Risley, 22 Ohio C. C. R. 160, 12 Ohio C. D. 186.

[7] Lakka v. Modern Brotherhood, 163 Iowa, 159, 49 L.R.A.(N.S.) 902, 143 N. W. 513.

[8] Modern Woodmen of America v. Lawson, 110 Va. 81, 3 Va. Appeals, 527, 65 S. E. 509.

the proven falsity of assured's answers in view of the fact that the matters falsely stated were peculiarly within the knowledge of the applicant and not necessarily, or even presumably within assurer's knowledge and where it also appears that the application was annexed to and made a part of the policy assured could have discovered the fact that the answers as written, either through mistake or fraud of the agent, were not his, and that he failed to disclose the same, or to notify assurer, thereby participating in said agent's mistake or fraud.[9] And where physicians testify that they had treated assured for alcoholism the latter's statement that he had never been treated for the alcohol habit is not aided by evidence that he was a temperate man.[10]

In Kentucky, it has been held if assured warrants that he is of temperate habits, and has not taken a drink for over a year, that evidence may be given of acts of intemperance done within a sufficiently reasonable time prior to the making of the proposal to have allowed the habit to be formed.[11] So evidence of a plea of guilty, by an applicant for insurance, to a charge of drunkenness, is admissible in an action by an assignee of the beneficiary upon the policy in support of a defense of misrepresentation by the applicant as to his habits in that regard, where the plea was not so remote from the time of the application as to have no evidentiary value.[12] And if, under a life policy providing that the application for insurance shall be a part thereof, and that any false or fraudulent representation made therein shall render the policy null and void, the insurer alleges that a representation made by the insurer that he has "always been temperate" was false, evidence as to his business habits, pursuits and associations, at and before the time of issuing the policy is admissible as bearing upon the question whether he was temperate or intemperate.[13] But it is also held that even though evidence of assured's nonuse of intoxicants subsequent to the time of his application might be admissible if it related to a date not too remote but immediately after making said application, still a retroactive effect cannot be given a pre-

[9] Forwood v. Prudential Ins. Co. of America, 117 Md. 254, 83 Atl. 169, 41 Ins. L. J. 1135.

[10] Home Life Ins. Co. v. Sibert, 96 Va. 403, 31 S. E. 519.

[11] Mutual Life Ins. Co. v. Gividen, 13 Ky. L. Rep. 970.

[12] Langdeau v. John Hancock Mutual Life Ins. Co. 194 Mass. 56, 18 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1190, 80 N. E. 452, 36 Ins. L. J. 432.

That insured had at no time been tried for intemperance by the local lodge is inadmissible evidence, see Evans v. Modern Woodmen of America, 149 Mo. App. 166, 129 S. W. 485.

[13] Chambers v. Northwestern Mut. L. Ins. Co. 64 Minn. 495, 58 Am. St. Rep. 549, 67 N. W. 367.

sumption of continuance of a habit by evidence of insured's nonuse of intoxicants at a remote time of about nine months after the date of his application and such evidence is inadmissible and its admission justifies a reversal of a judgment for plaintiff where without such evidence his testimony is uncorroborated.[14]

In case assured has stated that he had suffered from insomnia and nervousness from overwork but had been treated therefor and fully recovered, and he has negatived, by his answers to questions concerning the same, any habitual or excessive drinking excepting a specified small amount daily, evidence is relevant, material and admissible of physicians which shows that at the time referred to he was suffering from acute mania or total dementia, and that his condition was partly due to alcoholism and partly to overtaxation, insomnia and mental worry, the effect or result of which might be fatal or otherwise.[15] And it is a proper inquiry, on cross examination of the physician who had examined assured at the time of his application, if at the time of making his said examination there were any indications of an habitual use of alcoholic stimulants by assured.[16] But a medical expert will not be permitted to state whether he regarded excessive use of intoxicating liquors as a pernicious habit, where such excessive use was relied on in defense and also that it had contributed to assured's death and that he had agreed not to use such liquors to excess nor indulge in any pernicious habits that would obviously tend to shorten life.[17] And where error was claimed in refusing to admit in evidence certain letters of the medical examiner to insurer containing declarations as to the habits of an applicant for life insurance, made by said medical examiner, it was held that they were not binding on the applicant, although the application stated that the examiner was his agent in filling it up, and he knew that the examiner was to write a letter in relation to the matter, and therefore the evidence was irrelevant and properly excluded, especially so where the policy contained an incontestible clause.[18]

A nonexpert may give his opinion as to another's intoxication.[19] And as an aid to the determination of the point whether or not

[14] Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen & Enginemen v. Cole, 108 Ark. 527, 158 S. W. 153.

[15] Fidelity Mutual Life v. Miazza, 93 Miss. 18, 46 So. 817, 37 Ins. L. J. 810, s. c. 93 Miss. 422, 48 So. 1017.

[16] Supreme Lodge Knights & Ladies of Honor v. Baker, 163 Ala. 518, 50 So. 958.

[17] Union Life Ins. Co. v. Jamison, 31 Ind. App. 28, 67 N. E. 199.

[18] Massachusetts Benefit Life Assoc. v. Robinson, 104 Ga. 256, 42 L.R.A. 261, 30 S. E. 918, 27 Ins. L. J. 1003.

[19] Commonwealth v. Eyler, 217 Pa. 512, 11 L.R.A.(N.S.) 639 (annotated on opinion evidence by nonexperts as to intoxication), 66 Atl. 746.

As to evidence of fellow workman, see Union Life Ins. Co. v. Jamison, 31 Ind. App. 28, 67 N. E. 199.

assured falsely represented that he was temperate in the use of intoxicating liquors, witnesses may, after stating the basis of their information, state whether assured was temperate or intemperate.[20] So the opinion of a witness as to insured's being under the influence of liquor on a certain occasion, or his "judgment" if he did not know, may properly be given where he has had ample opportunity to observe the facts on which to base said opinion or judgment. If, however, his opinion is not based upon observation, it is not error, or if so, harmless error, to exclude the same.[1] Again, permitting a large number of persons having knowledge of the facts to testify as to the temperate character of one who, in applying for life insurance, represented himself as temperate with respect to the use of intoxicating liquors, is not error.[2] The applicant's reputation, however, "for being an intemperate user of alcoholic beverages" is not admissible to contradict a statement in his application for life insurance that, while he used intoxicating liquors, he did so temperately; for it is not offered to affect credibility, but in denial of a fact, pertinent to the issue raised, and not difficult to prove, if true, by the acts of the insured.[3] And it is held that a clause that assured "does not now and will not practice any pernicious habits that obviously tend to shorten life" cannot be extended or enlarged by parol evidence to include the habit of using intoxicating liquors, by showing that assurer's agent explained it to assured as having that meaning.[4]

(e) Court or jury. The jury ought to decide upon the weight of evidence whether assured was of temperate habits at the time of the insurance,[5] and this applies also to intoxication, excessive use of intoxicating liquors and the like.[6] Under a comparatively

[20] Taylor v. Security Life & Annuity Co. 145 N. Car. 383, 15 L.R.A. (N.S.) 583 (annotated on opinion evidence as to intemperance of particular person), 59 S. E. 139.

[1] Campbell v. Fidelity & Casualty Co. 22 Ky. L. Rep. 1295, 60 S. W. 492.

[2] Taylor v. Security Life & Annuity Co. 145 N. C. 383, 15 L.R.A. (N.S.) 583, 59 S. E. 139.

[3] Smith v. Prudential Ins. Co. 83 N. J. L. 719, 43 L.R.A.(N.S.) 431, 85 Atl. 190.

As to evidence generally of reputation as to drunkenness or sobriety, see Norfolk & Western R. Co. v. Hoover, 79 Md. 253, 25 L.R.A. 710, 29 Atl. 994 (evidence of general reputation for intemperance of railroad brakeman); Guy v. Lanark Fuel Co. 72 W. Va. 728, 79 S. E. 941, 48 L.R.A. (N.S.) 536 (general reputation for drunkenness of physician).

[4] Masons' Union Life Ins. Assoc. v. Brockman, 20 Ind. App. 206, 50 N. E. 493.

[5] Southcombe v. Merriman, Car. & M. 286.

[6] Alabama. — Supreme Lodge Knights & Ladies of Honor v. Baker, 163 Ala. 518, 50 So. 958 (refusal to direct verdict not error).

Arkansas.—Des Moines Life Ins. Co. v. Clay, 89 Ark. 254, 20 L.R.A. (N.S.) 205, 116 S. W. 232 (jury recent decision the answer was, "my habits of life are correct and temperate," but the evidence tended to show that the applicant had gone on periodical sprees; that he had taken the so-called "gold cure" with only temporary good results; that at a time not long before the application, he had taken another kind of medical treatment for the cure of the liquor habit, and that he died from a relapse of the habit. Upon these facts it was declared that an issue was raised for the jury.[7] But it is also decided that the fact that assured drank intoxicating liquors very much in excess of what he has represented in answer to inquiries as to his daily average, is material to the risk as matter of law.[8]

§ 2097. Tobacco: moderate use of.—The "moderate" use of tobacco implies a habit more or less fixed.[9]

§ 2098. Trade and employment of ship: marine risk.[10]—The trade and employment of every ship must be strictly in accordance with law, and this includes municipal law, the law of nations, and commercial treaties with the country to which the vessel belongs; for such treaties bind the subjects of the countries which are parties thereto, as well as their own municipal laws. The trade and employment must also be not only lawful, but must be lawfully prosecuted. This rule also extends to the navigation and conduct of the ship, and to the master's legal qualifications. The question although only one witness testified on contradiction as to intoxication).

Michigan.—Gall v. Sovereign Camp Woodmen of the World, 166 Mich. 690, 132 N. W. 468, 40 Ins. L. J. 1964 (defense of use of liquor at time of application, or before then had been intoxicated, or had had delirium tremens, or that he died as result of such use not conclusively proven: question for jury); Malachi v. Chicago Guaranty Fund Life Soc. 123 Mich. 148, 81 N. W. 1073 (excessive use of spirituous liquors: for jury), s. c. 119 Mich. 151, 5 Det. L. N. 743, 77 N. W. 690, 28 Ins. L. J. 216.

Mississippi.—Fidelity Mutual Life Ins. Co. v. Miazza, 92 Miss. 422, 48 So. 1017 (whether insurer influenced in issuing policy by assured's statements, is for jury), s. c. 93 Miss. 18, 46 So. 817.

New York.—Moore v. Prudential Ins. Co. of America, 87 N. Y. Supp. 368, 92 App. Div. 135 (excessive use of liquor: for jury), s. c. 95 N. Y. Supp. 1147; Keefe v. Supreme Council Catholic Mutual Ben. Assoc. 64 N. Y. Supp. 1012, 52 App. Div. 616 (whether such use excessive or such as to impair health, for jury).

Wisconsin.—Bakalars v. Continental Casualty Co. 141 Wis. 43, 25 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1241, 122 N. W. 721. (when court cannot direct that insured under accident policy was under influence of intoxicating liquor).

[7] Maryland Casualty Co. v. Eddy, 239 Fed. 477, 152 C. C. A. 355.

[8] Mutual Life Ins. Co. v. Mullan, 107 Md. 453, 457, 69 Atl. 385,—Worthington, J., approved and applied in Forwood v. Prudential Ins. Co. of America, 117 Md. 254, 83 Atl. 169, 41 Ins. L. J. 1135.

[9] Grand Lodge Ancient Order United Workmen v. Belcham, 48 Ill. App. 346, per Wall, J.

[10] See § 1987 herein.

As to liberty of ports where employment of ship is limited by the policy, see § 2401 herein.

ship is also obligated to carry all such documents and papers as are required by the existing treaties above mentioned and the law of nations.[11] But this rule does not refer to such enactments as are collateral to, but which may affect trade and navigation.[12]

The term "lawful trade" refers to an employment by the owners, and not to the ship's being barratrously employed by the master.[13] But a warranty not to use certain specified ports under an insurance to navigate the Atlantic ocean between Europe and America may be construed to describe the trade in which the vessel is engaged, rather than a stipulation confining the insurance to those portions of her voyage specified;[14] even though a warranty under a time policy not to carry grain across the Atlantic is broken if the vessel is then carrying grain, although she is just entering harbor after a voyage across the Atlantic.[15] Again, "Lawful goods" does not amount to a warranty that goods are not contraband.[16] But a stipulation not to be employed in the cotton trade is broken if the vessel insured is on each of several trips chiefly loaded with cotton, although at the time of loss she is loaded with corn and has no cotton on board, and is engaged for several trips thereafter to carry corn.[17] So a time policy on a vessel, warranted employed in general passenger and freighting business on a designated sound during the term of the policy does not cover it while it is laid up for the winter in a river flowing into the sound; and evidence is inadmissible to show that by custom and usage, the form of the policy covered a vessel when laid up.[18]

As to limited or prohibited trade: prohibited waters: excepted risks, see § 2681 herein.

[11] Christie v. Secretan, 8 Term Rep. 192, per Lord Kenyon and Lawrence, J.; Eenrom, The, 2 C. Rob. Adm. 1, 6, per Lord Stowell; Farmer v. Legg, 7 Term Rep. 186; The Sisters, 5 C. Rob. Adm. 155, per Lord Stowell; Wilson v. Marryat, 8 Term Rep. 31; The Vigilantia, 1 C. Rob. Adm. 1; Barker v. Phœnix Ins. Co. 8 Johns. (N. Y.) 237, 5 Am. Dec. 339; 1 Marshall on Ins. (ed. 1810) *178.

[12] Redmond v. Smith, 7 Man. & G. 457, 8 Scott (N. S.) 250, 13 L. J. C. P. 159, 8 Jur. 711, 66 R. R. 734.

[13] Havelock v. Hancill, 3 Term Rep. 277, 1 R. R. 703.

[14] Merchants' Mutual Ins. Co. v. Allen, 121 U. S. 67, 30 L. ed. 858, 7 Sup. Ct. 821. The clause was "warranted by the assured not to use port or ports in Eastern Mexico, Texas, nor Yucatan during the continuance of this insurance, nor ports in the West India Islands between July 15th and October 15th, nor ports on the northeast coast of Great Britain beyond the Thames, nor ports on the continent of Europe north of Antwerp between November 1st and March 1st."

[15] Sawyers v. Coasters' Mutual Ins. Co. 6 Gray (72 Mass.) 221.

[16] Seton v. Low, 1 Johns. Cas. (N. Y.) 1.

On effect of warranty against contraband or illicit trade in marine insurance policy, see note in 5 B. R. C. 64.

[17] Gaty v. Phœnix Ins. Co. 30 Mo. 56.

[18] Canton Ins. Office, Ltd. v. Independent Transportation Co. 217 Fed. 213, 55 L.R.A.(N.S.) 408n, 45 Ins.

§ 2099. "Uninsured:" policy on another subject matter: "honor policy."—Where the insurance was on the hull and machinery of a steamship for "five thousand pounds, warranted uninsured," but it appeared that insurances had been effected on "disbursements" for two thousand six hundred pounds by means of "honor" policies, it was held that although the "honor" policies were void under 19 George II. chapter 37, they were effective to operate as a breach of warranty, but not being on any part of the subject matter insured under the policy in question, but on "disbursements" alone, there was no breach of warranty.[19]

§ 2100. Unmarried: married: widower: wife.[20]—If a married man represents himself as single, there is a breach of the warranty.[1] So where assured was married and stated that he was a widower, it was held such a material representation as avoided the contract.[2] But if a married woman has an insurable interest in goods purchased by her on credit, her concealment of her coverture at the time of taking the policy is not a fact material to the risk, nor are her rights affected by private instructions to agents, uncommunicated to her, that they are not to issue insurance on stocks of merchandise in the hands of married women.[3] A false warranty that assured is married avoids the policy.[4] So where assured expressly warrants that the designated beneficiary is his wife and this is untrue by reason of the fact that a prior

L. J. 206. (The court, per Gilbert, C. J., said: "these warranties cannot be reasonably construed to be other than what their terms plainly import. . . . All such warranties are inserted for the purpose of limiting and defining the risk"), rev'g Independent Transportation Co. v. Canton Ins. Office, Ltd., 173 Fed. 564. The court cites or considers upon the first point Hastorf v. Greenwich Ins. Co. (U. S. D. C.) 132 Fed. 122; London Assurance Co. v. Thompson, 179 N. Y. 94, 62 N. E. 1066; Kirk v. Home Ins. Co. 86 N. Y. Supp. 980, 92 App. Div. 26; St. Nicholas Ins. Co. v. Merchants Ins. Co. 11 Hun (N. Y.) 108; Mannheim Ins. Co. v. Charles Clarke Co. — Tex. Civ. App. —, 157 S. W. 291, 42 Ins. L. J. 1177, and quotes from Birrel v. Dwyer, 9 App. Cas. 345, per Lord Watson.

[19] Roddick v. Indemnity Mutual Marine Ins. Co. 1 L. R. Q. B. D. (1895) 836, aff'd as to the last point. 2 L. R. Q. B. D. (1895) 380, 14 R. 516, 72 L. T. 860, 44 W. R. 27. As to the first point, quære, whether the court below held rightly.

"Hull and machinery" does not cover "disbursements," see § 2784a herein.

[20] See § 1987 herein.

As to relationship, see § 2081 herein.

[1] Jeffries v. Union Mutual Life Ins. Co. 1 McCrary (U. S.) 114, 1 Fed. 450.

[2] United Brethren Mutual Aid Soc. v. White, 100 Pa. St. 12, 12 Wkly. Not. Cas. 147.

[3] Queen Ins. Co. v. Young, 86 Ala. 424, 11 Am. St. Rep. 51, 5 So. 116.

[4] Ashford v. Metropolitan Life Ins. Co. 98 Mo. App. 505, 2 Mo. App. Repr. 766, 72 S. W. 712; Makel v. John Hancock Mutual Life Ins. Co. 88 N. Y. Supp. 757, 95 App. Div. 241.

marriage entered into by her had not been dissolved by divorce or death and it does not appear that she had ever taken any steps to ascertain whether her husband was living or dead and there is no proof that he had ever absented himself and he was present at the trial and testified, a judgment for assurer will be affirmed.[5] But where one representing himself to be a married man effects an insurance on his own life for the benefit of his alleged wife, and as her agent, when in fact the marriage is void by reason of the reputed wife having a former lawful husband living at the time, and the policy contains a provision that any false statement by assured shall invalidate it, it is held that the policy is not void by reason of the illegality of the last marriage, unless it appears that the said reputed husband and wife knew at the time the insurance was effected that at the time of their supposed marriage the lawful husband was living and the marriage illegal, and failed to inform the company of the fact.[6]

§ 2101. Use and occupation: whether continuing warranty: fire risk.[7]—A description in the application of the uses to which the premises are to be applied, or as to occupancy, does not constitute a continuing warranty that they shall be used for no other purposes, or not otherwise occupied than as stated; such statement is a representation, the falsity of which must be proven by the assurer, and if proven, it avoids the contract.[8] And a statement that a house is occupied by a certain named person is not a promissory warranty of such person's continued occupation, and, if the house becomes vacant, there is no breach of the warranty, as it relates in time to the date of the policy and its then occupation.[9] Nor is there a continuing warranty created by the words "while occupied as the Park Terrace Sanitarium," especially so where there

[5] Gaines v. Fidelity & Casualty Co. of N. Y. 188 N. Y. 411, 81 N. E. 169, 36 Ins. L. J. 757, aff'g 97 N. Y. Supp. 836, 111 App. Div. 386, aff'g 87 N. Y. Supp. 821, 93 App. Div. 524. Compare Richards v. King, 107 N. Y. Supp. 720, 57 Misc. 177.

[6] Equitable Life Ins. Co. v. Patterson, 41 Ga. 338, 5 Am. Rep. 535. See also Holabird v. Atlantic Mutual Life Ins. Co. 2 Dill. (U. S. C. C.) 166, Fed. Cas. No. 6,587.

[7] See § 1987 herein.

[8] Burlington Ins. Co. v. Brockway, 138 Ill. 644, 28 N. E. 799, aff'g 39 Ill. App. 43; New England Fire & Marine Ins. Co. v. Wetmore, 32 Ill. 221; Howard Fire & Marine Ins. Co. v. Cornick, 24 Ill. 455; German Ins. Co. v. Russell, 65 Kan. 373, 58 L.R.A. 234, 69 Pac. 345; Smith v. Mechanics & Traders Ins. Co. 32 N. Y. 399, 29 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 384; Mullin v. Vermont Mutual Ins. Co. 54 Vt. 223. See authorities cited under § 2103 herein.

[9] O'Neil v. Buffalo Fire Ins. Co. 3 N. Y. (3 Comst.) 122. See Frisbie v. Fayette Mutual Ins. Co. 27 Pa. St. 325; East Texas Fire Ins. Co. v. Kempner, 12 Tex. Civ. App. 533, 34 S. W. 393, 35 S. W. 1069.

are other policy clauses evidencing a contrary intent.[10] So although special rates are charged, the policy is not avoided by a change of the represented use, which does not increase the risk, and which as changed is still of the same character of risk, calling for the same rates.[11] And if a policy upon goods does not require a statement of the occupancy of the building in which they are located, a failure to disclose the same does not avoid the contract. If the occupancy in such case is stated, it is not a warranty, but a representation, the mere falsity of which is not material where it does not occasion the loss.[12] But in case the terms of the contract make such statements as to use and occupation warranties, they are not, as a rule, promissory or continuing warranties, but only that the property was so used or occupied at the time stated; that is, merely a warranty in praesenti.[13] The policy may, however, be so worded as to make such warranty continuing.[14]

§ 2102. Use and occupation: constantly worked: unlawful act not implied.[15]—Although it is stated that the premises are constantly worked, the building being described as a mill used for drying paper, and even though it is stipulated that the statements are a just, true, and full exposition of all the facts and circumstances material to the risk, such statement does not amount to a warranty that the mill shall be worked on Sunday, for an unlawful act will not be implied. It will be construed to mean constantly worked during the usual working days and hours; nor does the fact that the only work carried on at night is the process of drying, constitute a substantial error.[16] But whether working Sundays would be an illegal act ought, it would seem, to depend upon some statutory enactment, prohibitive in character.[17]

[10] Southern National Ins. Co. v. Cobb, — Tex. Civ. App. —, 180 S. W. 155.

[11] Smith v. Mechanics & Traders Ins. Co. 32 N. Y. 399.

[12] Howard Fire & Marine Ins. Co. v. Cornick, 24 Ill. 455; Browning v. Home Ins. Co. 71 N. Y. 508, 27 Am. Rep. 86.

[13] Woodruff v. Imperial Fire Ins. Co. 83 N. Y. 133; Alexander v. Germania Fire Ins. Co. 66 N. Y. 464, 23 Am. Rep. 76, and note 79; United States Fire & Marine Ins. Co. v. Kimberly, 34 Md. 224, 6 Am. Rep. 325, and cases under following sections.

[14] Poor v. Humboldt Ins. Co. 125 Mass. 274, 28 Am. Rep. 228. See sections following.

[15] See § 1987 herein.

[16] Prieger v. Exchange Mutual Ins. Co. 6 Wis. 88, 89.

[17] Under the Sunday laws one who engages in business is presumptively engaged in an illegal transaction, subject to rebuttal by justifying circumstances: Cooley on Torts (2d ed.) 175, *152 et seq. Contracts made on Sunday were as valid at the common law as if made on any other day, but prohibited by the Sunday statutes, are void: 7 Wait's Actions and Defenses, 114–23. See 8 Wait's Actions and Defenses, 557. See 3 Parsons on Contracts (7th ed.) 898–907. But

§ 2103. Use and occupation: dwelling-house: boarding-house: hotel, etc.[18]—If a building is insured and described as a dwelling-house, or declared to be occupied or used as a dwelling, or unoccupied, it is as a rule a mere representation or matter of description only, which must be materially false to avoid the policy, or a change in the use and occupation must materially increase the risk. But in those cases where from the stipulations of the contract such statement amounts to a warranty, the warranty must be referred to the time of making the proposal. It is not a continuing warranty that it shall be continued to be used and occupied as stated during the entire risk, or that the use and occupation shall not be changed.[19]

In a New York case a statement that the building was used for a dwelling was held not a warranty that the building was used at the time as stated, but simply that such was the character of the building; that it was fitted and designed for that use, and the see pp. 3629, 3631 herein, as to warranty that watchman will be kept every night: Sunday watchman.

[18] See § 1987 herein.

As to conditions voiding policy: change of occupancy: effect of non-occupation: increase of risk: vacant and unoccupied, etc., see §§ 2223 et seq. herein.

[19] Illinois.—Burlington Ins. Co. v. Brockway, 138 Ill. 644, 28 N. E. 799, aff'g 39 Ill. App. 43 (occupancy held matter of mere description and not continuing warranty).

Kansas.—German Ins. Co. v. Russell, 65 Kan. 373, 58 L.R.A. 234, 69 Pac. 345 (not continuing warranty but only warranty of situation at time insurance affected); Niagara Fire Ins. Co. v. Johnson, 4 Kan. App. 16, 45 Pac. 789 (is descriptive of property and not warranty that building then occupied as dwelling house).

Maine. — Thayer v. Providence-Washington Ins. Co. 70 Me. 531 (building unoccupied at time of fire held immaterial unless risk increased); Joyce v. Marine Ins. Co. 45 Me. 168, 71 Am. Dec. 536 (held matter of description merely and not a continuing warranty).

Missouri.—Waddle v. Commonwealth Ins. Co. 184 Mo. App. 571, 170 S. W. 682, 45 Ins. L. J. 183 ("occupied as a residence:" "occupied:" do not mean uninterrupted, continuous, occupation).

New Jersey. — Rafferty v. New Brunswick Fire Ins. Co. 3 Har. (18 N. J. Law) 480, 38 Am. Dec. 525 (held not a warranty that it will not be used for any other purpose).

New York.—Alexander v. Germania Fire Ins. Co. 66 N. Y. 464, 23 Am. Rep. 76, and note 79 (case holds the clause a warranty and policy void if house not occupied at the time as stated); O'Neil v. Buffalo Fire Ins. Co. 3 N. Y. (3 Comst.) 122 (not a continuing warranty of occupation).

Pennsylvania. — Heffron v. Kittaning Ins. Co. 132 Pa. St. 580, 20 Atl. 698 (held not a warranty but mere description); Cumberland Valley Mutual Protection Co. v. Douglass, 58 Pa. St. 419, 98 Am. Dec. 298 (held not a continuing warranty).

Tennessee.—Planters' Ins. Co. v. Sorrels, 1 Baxt. 352, 25 Am. Rep. 780 (not avoided by subsequent change in use).

West Virginia.—Bryan v. Peabody Ins. Co. 8 W. Va. 605 (held not a warranty, but mere matter of description).

policy was not avoided, even though it was unoccupied at the time.[20] It is also held that the description of a building as a "dwelling-house" is not, in the absence of misrepresentation or concealment as to the fact of occupation, a warranty that the building is occupied as a dwelling, and the omission of the applicant to disclose the fact that the building is vacant, in the absence of any inquiry on that point is not a breach of a condition that any omission to make known every material fact shall avoid the policy.[1] So where an insurance was upon the building and furniture therein, it was held not necessarily a continuing warranty of occupation as stated, and that the vacancy of the house was not per se an increase of risk,[2] and keeping private boarders in a house insured and actually occupied as a dwelling by assured does not avoid the policy in the absence of some express prohibition or other contract provision to the contrary.[3] Nor is a warranty, that the insured premises are "occupied as a boarding-house," broken by their occupancy in part as a bar-room and billiard-room, where such occupancy is not forbidden and does not increase the risk.[4] So a representation that a building is occupied is not made by describing it as a dwelling house.[5] And if the building is described as a "hotel," it is sufficient that it is then so used.[6] So one applying for insurance on a "dwelling house" which he states is in process of erection, complies with his undertaking if, when occupied, the building is used for that purpose.[7] It is also held that where a policy was upon goods described as contained in a dwelling-house "occupied all the year round," there is a sufficient compliance with the warranty that the building was so occupied at the time of insurance and of loss, where it also appeared that it was permanently occupied during the entire period with the exception of about a month, and that the occupation was resumed about six months before the loss.[8] Again, a clause that barns are "used for hay, straw, grain unthreshed, stabling, and shelter," is not a continuing warranty of exclusive use for such purposes. The words are a description, or, at most, a warranty that the build-

[20] Woodruff v. Imperial Fire Ins. Co. 83 N. Y. 133.

[1] Browning v. Home Ins. Co. 71 N. Y. 508, 27 Am. Rep. 86.

[2] Cumberland Valley Mutual Protection Co. v. Schell, 29 Pa. St. 31.

[3] Milwaukee Mechanics' Ins. Co. v. Fuquay, 120 Ark. 330, 179 S. W. 497.

[4] Martin v. State Ins. Co. 44 N. J. L. 485, 43 Am. Rep. 397.

[5] Slabodisky v. Phenix Ins. Co. 53 Neb. 816, 74 N. W. 270.

[6] Hall v. People's Mutual Fire Ins. Co. 6 Gray (72 Mass.) 185.

[7] Harris v. North American Ins. Co. 190 Mass. 361, 4 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1137 (annotated on building in process of erection as vacant), 77 N. E. 493.

[8] Ring v. Phœnix Assur. Co. 145 Mass. 426, 14 N. E. 525.

ings at the time they were insured were as described.[9] Nor can a claim that a building was warranted to be occupied by the insured and his family be sustained when his answer to the question contained in the application, "Each story how occupied?" is this, "Second story by tenant as a lodging-house." [10]

In case there is stamped on the face of the policy a warranty that "the within-described building is occupied exclusively for dwelling purposes by not more than two families" it will be construed as meaning primarily that said building is used exclusively for dwelling purposes, so that, in the absence of waiver, if it is used for business purposes there is a breach of warranty.[11] In another case the description of the building as a dwelling-house was also held a warranty of exclusive use for that purpose, and that there was a breach where the building was used for a purpose coming within the class designated as extra-hazardous, such as its occupation in the past for a billiard saloon and bar.[12] So a statement that the insured building is a dwelling is held not a representation but a warranty which is breached where it is used as a feed store, thereby avoiding the policy.[13] And use as a dwelling house does not include a grocery store.[14] A statement that the building is occupied as a "dwelling and boarding-house" is also held a warranty of its then occupation.[15] So the declaration of occupation as "hotel with bar and billiard-room attached" constitutes a warranty of exclusive use at that time as stated, the policy stipulating that false representations or concealment as to the use shall avoid the contract.[16] Again, if the policy warrants that a family shall live in the house throughout the year, such warranty is not complied with where at the time of the fire, and for some time previous, the premises were occupied only by two workmen, who ate and worked elsewhere during the day, but kept their trunks and clothing in the house and slept there at night.[17]

There is a waiver of a breach of warranty as to exclusive occu-

[9] Billings v. Tolland County Mutual Fire Ins. Co. 20 Conn. 139, 50 Am. Dec. 277.

[10] Menk v. Home Ins. Co. 76 Cal. 51, 9 Am. St. Rep. 158.

[11] De Noyelles v. Delaware Ins. Co. of Phila. 138 N. Y. Supp. 855, 42 Ins. L. J. 403.

[12] Sarsfield v. Metropolitan Ins. Co. 61 Barb. (N. Y.) 479, 42 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 97.

[13] Lennox v. Greenwich Ins. Co. 9 Pa. Super. Ct. 171, 29 Pitts. L. J. N. S. 279, 43 Wkly. N. C. 398, s. c. 2 Pa. Super. Ct. 451, 39 Wkly. N. C. 188.

[14] Greenwich Ins. Co. v. Dougherty, 64 N. J. L. 716, 42 Atl. 485.

[15] Franklin Fire Ins. Co. v. Martin, 40 N. J. L. 568, 29 Am. Rep. 271.

[16] Baker v. German Fire Ins. Co. 124 Ind. 490, 24 N. E. 1041.

[17] Poor v. Humboldt Ins. Co. 125 Mass. 274, 28 Am. Rep. 228.

On effect of sleeping on premises to prevent their becoming vacant or unoccupied within insurance policy, see note in 40 L.R.A.(N.S.) 58.

pation for dwelling purposes, where insurer has knowledge at the time of accepting the premium and delivering the policy that the building was used for business purposes.[18] And the agent's knowledge that the insured building which was owned by a city was intended for occupation for small pox patients, or as a pest house, and was not occupied by the city sexton as stated precludes assurer from avoiding the policy.[19] And if the agent was informed that one room of the insured dwelling was used as a millinery store but he described it in the application as a dwelling house, telling assured it should be so described, assurer is estopped to assert that the policy is void even though both it and assurer's charter prohibit waiver by agents with certain exceptions.[20] Again, where the building insured was described in the policy as a "Pri. frm. dwg., by me or tenant" but at the time of destruction it was used as a storehouse for machinery and it appeared that the agent to whom the application was made was informed that the building could not be kept occupied as a dwelling by tenants during the policy term and he was requested to prepare the application so that the building would be covered by the policy whether used as a dwelling, storehouse, or granary and said agent agreed for an extra premium, which was paid, to do so, but instead the policy was made out as above stated, a direction of a verdict in favor of insurer was held error.[1] In case dwelling houses in process of erection are insured under a warranty that they shall be occupied by a family during the life of the policy and they are not completed at the time of the fire but permission to complete them had been given by agreement added to the policy, signed by an agent authorized to execute and issue it, the warranty of occupation is waived.[2] So where insurance is upon property while occupied as a dwelling and greenhouse recovery is not precluded, even though the greenhouse was never used for that purpose, where the agent knew that insured intended that the dwelling, then attached to a greenhouse, was to be moved to another lot and connected with a greenhouse then being constructed, and also that each building was to be occupied for its own particular use, and permission was given to complete the building which was moved and enlarged but not connected with [18] De Noyelles v. Delaware Ins. Co. of Phila. 138 N. Y. Supp. 855, 42 Ins. L. J. 403.

[19] City of De Soto v. American Guaranty Fund Mutual Fire Ins. Co. 102 Mo. App. 1, 74 S. W. 1.

[20] Ross-Langford v. Mercantile Town Mutual Ins. Co. 97 Mo. App. 79, 71 S. W. 720.

[1] Cornelius v. Farmers' Ins. Co. — Iowa, —, 81 N. W. 236, 29 Ins. L. J. 509, s. c. 113 Iowa, 183, 84 N. W. 1037.

[2] Bakkaus v. Caledonia Ins. Co. 112 Md. 676, 77 Atl. 310, 39 Ins. L. J. 1431.

the greenhouse.[3] Nor is a building in process of construction within the meaning of an instruction by an insurance company to its agent not to insure unoccupied buildings.[4] A building is a dwelling house where the upper part thereof is fitted up and occupied as such although the lower part is not occupied by anyone it having once been used as a creamery, of which fact insurer's agent had knowledge.[5]

If personal property is insured while located and contained in a building occupied as a private dwelling the fact that it was so occupied at the time of the fire should be shown by the complaint in an action to recover for the loss, if, however, after a general denial said fact as well as that the property was contained therein are admitted a demurrer may properly be overruled,[6] and the burden of proof of increase of hazard in such cases is on the insurer.[7] In another case the defense was that the house was insured as a dwelling but in fact it was used as a place for the manufacture of candy and the question was one of falsely concealing the fact that the building was a factory and not a dwelling house. It was held that the burden of proving that the plaintiff who obtained the policy knew that the house when the policy was issued was used as a factory, and where the evidence does not show any fraudulent concealment of said fact the question should at least be submitted to the jury and it is error to instruct the jury to find for the defendant.[8] And, for the purpose of showing insurer's knowledge, evidence is material, competent, and relevant that there were maps and cards in the office and possession of insurer's agent which showed the occupancy of the insured premises and which were kept for the purpose of obtaining information as to such matters; and said evidence is admissible even though it contradicts another witness called by the same party, since a distinction is made between contradicting and impeaching a witness.[9] If in addition to the description as a dwelling-house the policy is conditioned to be void for any increase of hazard by change of use or occupancy, there is then a continuing warranty of [3] Holter Lumber Co. v. Fireman's Fund Ins. Co. 18 Mont. 282, 45 Pac. 207, 26 Ins. L. J. 10.

[4] Harris v. North American Ins. Co. 190 Mass. 361, 4 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1137n, 77 N. E. 493.

[5] Walrod v. Des Moines Fire Ins. Co. 159 Iowa, 121, 140 N. W. 218, 42 Ins. L. J. 732.

[6] Germania Fire Ins. Co. v. Barringer, 43 Okla. 79, 142 Pac. 1026.

As to description of property: locality: contained in, see §§ 1742 et seq. herein.

As to representations and warranties: location, see § 2068 herein.

[7] Planters' Ins. Co. v. Sorrels, 1 Baxt. 352, 25 Am. Rep. 780.

[8] Bailey v. Liverpool & London & Globe Ins. Co. 166 Mo. App. 593, 149 S. W. 1169, 41 Ins. L. J. 1819.

[9] De Noyelles v. Delaware Ins. Co. of Phila. 138 N. Y. Supp. 855, 42 Ins. L. J. 403.

use, but the question whether a change in use increases the hazard is for the jury.[10]

§ 2104. Use and occupation: hazardous trade or business.[11]—If the fact is known to the company's agent that a hazardous trade is carried on in an adjoining building, and an extra premium is charged by reason thereof, the policy is not avoided because such fact is not recited therein.[12] But a prohibition against exercising a hazardous or extrahazardous business is in effect a prospective or promissory warranty, the violation of which avoids the policy, although it has been discontinued.[13]

§ 2105. Use and occupation: house of ill-fame: disorderly or bawdy house.[14]—Although the warranty is that the insured building is occupied as a hotel, it being leased for that purpose and apparently so used, no breach arises from the fact that it is then occupied and used as a house of ill-fame, the assured not having knowledge thereof and not consenting thereto.[15] In determining the materiality of the fact not disclosed that the insured property was used as a house of ill fame, the point should be considered that increased premiums are not charged on risks of such a character, should be considered and the natural consequences of such use are only to be regarded; acts of lawless violence are not such.[16] And if a contract of insurance is made in good faith, without any purpose to effect, advance, or encourage acts in violation of law, the policy is not void.[17]

§ 2106. Use and occupation: manufactory: mill.[18]—Where the property was described as a four-story warehouse, "first floor occupied by machinery used for making barrels, with privilege of storing barrels on the premises and other merchandise not more "hazardous," and a true and accurate description of the use and occupation was stipulated, otherwise the policy to be forfeited, it was held

[10] Germania Fire Ins. Co. v. Deckard, 3 Ind. App. 361, 28 N. E. 868.

[11] See § 1987 herein.

As to prohibited uses: hazardous and extra hazardous, see §§ 2211 herein.

[12] Southern Ins. & Trust Co. v. Lewis, 42 Ga. 587.

[13] Mead v. Northwestern Ins. Co. 7 N. Y. 530.

Compare as to temporary increase of risk, § 2239 herein.

[14] See § 1987 herein.

Use of premises for unlawful purposes, see § 2218 herein.

Where traffic insured, unlawful, or unlawful business carried on upon insured property, see § 2536 herein.

[15] Hall v. People's Mutual Fire Ins. Co. 6 Gray (72 Mass.) 185.

[16] Loehner v. Home Mutual Ins. Co. 17 Mo. 247. See § 2218, post, "Use of premises for unlawful purpose."

[17] Corinthian v. Royal Ins. Co. 91 Miss. 386, 18 L.R.A.(N.S.) 214 (annotated on insurance on bawdy house or furniture therein), 124 Am. St. Rep. 701, 45 So. 361.

[18] See § 1987 herein.

As to conditions voiding policy: ceasing to operate factory: operating factory, etc., at night, see §§ 2216, 2216a herein.

that this was not a continuing warranty, but a warranty in praesenti.[19] So a warranty that the property is a paper-mill is not broken merely by discontinuing the use of the paper-mill and putting in a pair of mill stones for grinding in place of the rag cutter and duster, all the other machinery continuing the same as before.[20] And the drawing of a lottery with the consent and participation of the assured in a building insured against loss by fire as a "shoe manufactory" does not avoid the policy on the building, nor on the stock therein.[1] So although the contract states that no steam engine is used, this does not preclude the erection of one thereafter, provided it does not increase the risk. In this case there was, however, a condition against an increase of risk.[2] But if the description is made a warranty, and the property is described as a grist-mill, it is held that it must not be used for other purposes.[3] In another case the business carried on was described as the manufacture of bath tubs. On adjoining premises the insured also conducted the business of sawing and planing lumber, and the shavings therefrom were carried by a tube to feed the boiler furnace on the insured premises; it was held that this did not amount to a carrying on of the business of sawing and planing lumber on the insured premises.[4] In a Federal case the policy was upon a builder's risks to cover a structure in process of construction which was to be equipped with requisite ore-crushing machinery. The premium rate being greater for occupied premises than for those being constructed there was a warranty that they should not be occupied for a longer period than thirty days without special permission in writing and readjustment of rate. The question whether there was an actual occupancy within the terms of the policy or whether it was an occupancy merely for experimental tests and adjustment of machinery was held to be a question of fact upon the evidence. A judgment below for insured was reversed and a new trial granted.[5]

§ 2107. Use and occupation: manufactory: incidental uses.[6]—If a manufactory is insured as used for a certain kind of business, this will, as a rule, include therein such things as are incidental

[19] United States Fire & Marine Ins. Co. v. Kimberly, 34 Md. 224, 6 Am. Rep. 325.

[20] Wood v. Hartford Ins. Co. 13 Conn. 533, 35 Am. Dec. 92.

[1] Boardman v. Merrimack Ins. Co. 8 Cush. (62 Mass.) 583.

[2] Stokes v. Cox, 1 Hurl. & N. 533, 26 L. J. Ex. 113, 3 Jur. (N. S.) 45, 5 W. R. 89.

[3] Jennings v. Chenango County Mutual Ins. Co. 2 Denio (N. Y.) 75.

[4] Keeney v. Home Ins. Co. 71 N. Y. 396, 27 Am. Rep. 60.

[5] Scottish Union & National Ins. Co. v. Encampment Smelting Co. 166 Fed. 231, 92 C. C. A. 319, 38 Ins. L. J. 495.

[6] See § 1987 herein.

to and reasonably necessary for carrying on the business; as where a building was described as used for the manufacture of lead pipe, the manufacture of reels for coiling the same is within the use.[7] The question, however, whether the use is such an incident of the business as to be included therein, may be one for the jury. This was so held where the application contained the inquiry "for what purpose the building was used," and the answer was, "Tobacco pressing; no manufacturing;" but the evidence showed that in a shed attached to the main building tobacco hogsheads were manufactured.[8]

§ 2108. Use and occupation: running factory nights.[9]—In a Maine case the question was asked, "during what hours is the factory worked?" and it was stated in answer thereto that it was worked during certain specified hours up to 7 P. M., summer and winter, "short time now." The factory was thereafter run all night for a certain time, when the insurer's agent, with knowledge of the facts, consented for an additional premium that the same might be continued, and the case was decided upon this point, such act being held a waiver, but the court, although expressly saying that it was unnecessary to determine whether the running all night unattended with loss operated to forfeit the policy, nevertheless declared that it might be fairly inferred that it was expected that the factory would be run nights at times.[10]

§ 2109. Use and occupation: stores: storehouse: storage.[11]—If the building is described as used in a certain part for stores, it is not necessary that all of said part should be so occupied; a substantial compliance is sufficient.[12] The words "occupied as a storehouse" are a warranty, and must be complied with, and if occupied for any other purpose the contract will be void,[13] although the clause "used for the storage of ice" is merely descriptive of the business ordinarily carried on in the building, and not a warranty that ice is then stored therein at that time.[14] And the fact that a milliner who pays no rent occupies a small room in a build-

[7] Collins v. Charlestown Mutual Fire Ins. Co. 10 Gray (76 Mass.) 155.

[8] Sims v. State Ins. Co. 47 Mo. 54, 4 Am. Rep. 311.

[9] See § 1987 herein.

[10] North Berwick County v. New England Fire & Marine Ins. Co. 52 Me. 336. See § 2239 herein.

When statements as to night work in factory is not a warranty, see Phoenix Assur. Co. v. Munger Improved Cotton Machine Mfg. Co. 92 Tex. 297, 49 S. W. 222, 28 Ins. L. J. 248, aff'g — Tex. Civ. App. —, 49 S. W. 271.

[11] See § 1987 herein.

[12] Carter v. Humboldt Mutual Ins. Co. 17 Iowa, 456. See also Peoria Marine & Fire Ins. Co. v. Perkins, 16 Mich. 380.

[13] Wall v. East River Mutual Ins. Co. 3 Seld. (7 N. Y.) 370, 3 Duer (N. Y.) 264.

[14] Dolliver v. St. Joseph Fire & Marine Ins. Co. 131 Mass. 39.

ing in which insured has stated that goods were stored does not avoid the policy where assured has control of the room.[15]

§ 2110. Use and occupation: stores: when continuing warranty.[16]—A statement that the lower part of the building is occupied for stores is not a continuing warranty, but only that it is at the time so occupied, and, if then false, the policy is avoided, but a warranty that the upper portion of the building is "to remain unoccupied during the continuance of the policy" is a promissory or executory warranty, a non-compliance with which at any time during the existence of the policy will operate to avoid it, whether material to the risk or not.[17]

§ 2111. Use and occupation: tenants: continuing warranty.[18]—In the absence of an express stipulation to the contrary, a change of tenants has no effect on the contract of insurance on a dwelling-house if the use be not changed;[19] and even though the then tenant was careful and prudent, and the substituted tenant grossly negligent, the policy is not avoided by the change, as this is not in itself a technical increase of risk.[20] It is also held that the breach of a condition in a policy that it shall be "void if the building insured now is, or shall hereafter be, occupied by a tenant," does not render the policy void in case the premises are so occupied, but voidable merely at the election of the insurer, and when an election has once been exercised, the insurer will be confined to its choice.[1] If it be warranted that a vacant house will be occupied by a tenant, and the policy states no certain time within which the warranty is to be performed, it is sufficient if it is complied with in a reasonable time.[2] But it is decided the holder of a policy on a dwelling-house described therein as occupied by good tenants cannot recover for a loss, if such house was in fact vacant when the policy was [15] Liverpool & London & Globe Ins. Co. v. Colgin, — Tex. Civ. App. —, 34 S. W. 291.

[16] See § 1987 herein.

[17] Stout v. City Fire Ins. Co. 12 Iowa, 371, 79 Am. Dec. 539.

[18] See § 1987 herein.

[19] Cumberland Valley Mutual Protection Co. v. Douglass, 58 Pa. St. 419, 98 Am. Dec. 298. In this case the court said: "And if a building be insured as an 'occupied dwelling-house,' it is a matter of description rather than a stipulation affecting its use. So it is greater or less in case of tenancy by different persons, but in the absence of express stipulation to the contrary, a change of tenants will not affect the contract if the use be not changed."

[20] Gates v. Madison County Mutual Ins. Co. 1 Seld. (5 N. Y.) 469; Lyon v. Commercial Ins. Co. 2 Rob. (La.) 266; Hobson v. Wellington Ins. Co. 6 U. C. 356. See § 2223, post, as to change of occupancy.

[1] Ohio Farmers' Ins. Co. v. Vogel, 166 Ind. 239, 3 L.R.A.(N.S.) 966 (annotated on effect on vacancy clause of tenant's removal without owner's knowledge), 117 Am. St. Rep. 382, 76 N. E. 977.

[2] Hough v. City Fire Ins. Co. 29 Conn. 10, 76 Am. Dec. 581; Herrick v. Union Mutual Fire Ins. Co. 48 Me. 558, 77 Am. Dec. 244.

issued. Such statement is a warranty; and to entitle the insured to recover, it must have been true, even though it was made in ignorance, and without any desire to misrepresent any of the facts.[3] Although the statements are made warranties, and the answer to the question, "For what is the building used and how many tenants are there?" is merely "Dwelling," it is doubtful whether this constitutes a warranty that it is then occupied. The question as to tenants being unanswered, the most that could be implied from the answer is that it is used as a dwelling, and if the agent or insurer who filled out the application had knowledge that it was not so used, such agent's knowledge estops the insurer.[4]

Knowingly issuing a policy upon a building in possession of a tenant waives a provision of the policy that it shall be void if the building shall be in such possession.[5] If a fire policy is intended to cover property occupied by the owner, and provides that it shall become void if such property shall become unoccupied or occupied by a tenant, but is used to insure property exclusively occupied by tenants to the knowledge of the insurer at the time of issuing the policy, such conditions for forfeiture are inapplicable and cannot be enforced.[6] But a letter from an insurance agent to the adjuster of the insurer, stating that the insured premises had been let and sublet, and that the subtenant had left the premises about four hours before the loss, does not admit the occupancy of the building at the time of the fire.[7]

§ 2112. Watchman on premises: watch-clock: sleeping in store: continuing warranty.[8]—If the statement that a watchman is kept at certain times or during the night, or constantly, is made a warranty, it is a continuing warranty,[9] but such a construction is not favored where any other reasonable one can be given, especially where words are used in the present tense.[10] So although a clerk sleeps in the store at the time of effecting the policy, one need not necessarily continue to sleep there unless the policy so provides, or unless it be shown that the rate of premium was affected thereby,

[3] Boyd v. Insurance Co. 90 Tenn. 212, 25 Am. St. Rep. 676, 16 S. W. 470.

[4] Alexander v. Germania Ins. Co. 5 Thomp. & C. (N. Y.) 208, 2 Hun (N. Y.) 655.

[5] Ohio Farmers' Ins. Co. v. Vogel, 166 Ind. 239, 3 L.R.A.(N.S.) 966, 76 N. E. 977.

[6] Ohio Farmers' Ins. Co. v. Vogel, 166 Ind. 239, 3 L.R.A.(N.S.) 966, 117 Am. St. Rep. 382, 76 N. E. 977.

[7] Stotenberg v. Continental Ins. Co. 106 Iowa, 565, 68 Am. St. Rep. 323, 76 N. W. 835.

[8] See § 1987 herein.

[9] Blumer v. Phœnix Ins. Co. 48 Wis. 535, 33 Am. Rep. 830, 4 N. W. 674, s. c. 45 Wis. 622 (one judge dissenting); Ripley v. Ætna Ins. Co. 30 N. Y. 136, 86 Am. Dec. 362.

[10] Virginia Fire & Marine Ins. Co. v. Buck, 88 Va. 517, 13 S. E. 973; Albion Lead Works v. Williamsburg City Fire Ins. Co. 2 Fed. 479.

or that the insurer was prejudiced by the fact that a clerk did not sleep there at the time of the loss.[11] If an application for insurance addressed to a certain company contains a statement that a watchman is kept on the premises, but the agent splits up the insurance among the various companies which he represents, the application does not become a part of the contract between the insured and the companies to which it was not addressed.[12]

The form of the question and answer and the character of the risk must necessarily be important in connection with the stipulations of the policy. Usage also of what is done in similar establishments is held admissible.[13] So an important factor to be considered is, whether or not the policy defines the specific duties of a watchman other than by the use of that word alone, and the nature of the risk with relation to the degree of care necessitated should also be given consideration, as where such services can be and ordinarily are performed by any reasonably competent, reliable person or employee whose duty it is and who is sufficiently familiar therewith, to attend to such matters.[14] The cases throughout this section also further instance the application and force of the above statement. Nor is it material to the fact whether a watchman is kept that he is not called a watchman.[15] It is also a consideration of force that insured exercised good faith in employing and instructing competent watchmen.[16] And it is assured's duty to exercise ordinary care in fulfilling the terms of his warranty, where the requirement is, where a ferryboat is insured, that two competent watchmen shall be employed, one of whom shall be on board and on duty all the time, and the watchman should likewise exercise, in the performance of duty, such care and skill as is usually exercised by reasonable prudent and careful men in watching similar

[11] Grubbs v. Virginia Fire & Marine Ins. Co. 110 N. C. 108, 14 S. E. 516.

[12] Waukau Milling Co. v. Citizens' Mutual Fire Ins. Co. 130 Wis. 47, 118 Am. St. Rep. 998, 109 N. W. 937, 36 Ins. L. J. 119, 10 Am. & Eng. Ann. Cas. 795.

[13] This was so held where the policy was upon a machine shop. It was also held in the same case that a statement that a watchman is kept on the premises does not require one to be constantly kept there, but only that he be employed at such times as men of ordinary care and skill would deem necessary under the circumstances. Crocker v. People's Mutual Fire Ins. Co. 8 Cush. (62 Mass.) 79.

[14] Mannheim Ins. Co. v. Charles Clarke & Co. — Tex. Civ. App. —, 157 S. W. 291, 42 Ins. L. J. 1177, 1185.

[15] Au Sable Lumber Co. v. Detroit Manufacturers' Mutual Fire Ins. Co. 89 Mich. 407, 21 Ins. L. J. 311, 50 N. W. 870.

[16] Theriault v. California Ins. Co. of S. F. 27 Idaho, 476, 149 Pac. 719. See Phoenix Assur. Co. v. Coffman, 10 Tex. Civ. App. 631, 32 S. W. 810.

premises.[17] The question is whether a watchman was employed and acted as such. The amount paid him is immaterial.[18]

A provision on a slip of paper pasted on the face of an insurance policy and having no connection with the warranties expressed therein that a watchman shall be employed by the insured to be constantly on the premises while the mill is not in operation, does not release the company from liability for a loss which is not due to a failure to keep the watchman.[19] And if the watchman is still on duty when the business of the factory is suspended, there is no forfeiture, even though discontinuing the operation of the factory is conditioned to work a forfeiture.[20] Under another decision an agreement on the part of the assured to keep a watchman on the premises when the machinery is not in operation, is a condition subsequent, a breach of which releases the insurer, but the obligation must not be so strictly construed as to effect a result which the parties cannot be reasonably presumed under all the circumstances of the case to have intended, therefore the temporary absence of a watchman from the insured premises without the consent or knowledge of the insured, during which a fire occurs, will not release the insurer, though in the application he agreed to keep a watchman on the premises at all times when the machinery was not in operation. He complied with the condition thereby imposed on him when he employed and retained a watchman whose competency and fidelity he had no occasion to distrust.[1] Nor does the failure to have a watchman on duty while the insured plant is shut down temporarily over Sunday, avoid the policy, where the requirement is that a day and night watchman be constantly kept on duty while the property was idle or inoperative, and that if it was shut down for more than thirty days permission must be indorsed upon the policy therefor, for in such case a cessation from the ordinary operation of the plant is meant and in this respect the words "idle and inoperative" and "shut down" will be held synonymous,[2] but the employment of a watchman, as a rule, fulfills the requirement that one be employed on the premises, day and night, and the policy is not avoided by the fact that he was

[17] St. Paul Fire & Marine Ins. Co. v. Kendle, 163 Ky. 146, 173 S. W. 373.

[18] Virginia Fire & Marine Ins. Co. v. Buck, 88 Va. 517, 13 S. E. 973.

[19] Hart v. Niagara Fire Ins. Co. 9 Wash. 620, 27 L.R.A. 86, 58 Pac. 213.

[20] American Fire Ins. Co. v. Brighton Cotton Manufacturing Co. 125 Ill. 131, 17 N. E. 771.

[1] McGannon v. Millers' National Ins. Co. 171 Mo. 143, 94 Am. St. Rep. 778, 71 S. W. 160, 32 Ins. L. J. 347.

[2] Tillamook Lumber Co. v. Liverpool & London & Globe Ins. Co. (U. S. C. C.) 175 Fed. 508, 34 Ins. L. J. 693, aff'd in Liverpool & London & Globe Ins. Co. v. Tillamook Lumber Co. 178 Fed. 161, 101 C. C. A. 481, 39 Ins. L. J. 1122.

sixty-five feet away at the time of the fire, where he was engaged in watching the property from a point which afforded a better view of the premises than if he had been in the mill.[3] And where a watchman was near by on the premises for two hours before the fire broke out, the requirement that one be kept on the premises at all times when the insured mill was not in operation is satisfied.[4] The temporary absence of a watchman in a matter directly in the line of his duty, where he immediately returns, is not a breach of the requirement that a watchman be kept about the premises.[5] Again, if the policy on a tug does not require that the watchman should be one especially employed for that purpose a warranty that the tug shall at all times have a competent watchman on board is fully complied with where a competent person performed this duty, although he performed other duties in the operation of the tug and was negligent on the occasion in question and did not keep watch as he should have done, and this is also so held although said duty of watchman may have been imposed on different members of the crew at different times.[6]

It is held that an answer to the question whether a watchman is employed on the premises during the night is a representation material to the risk, which must be regarded as obligatory on the insured.[7] But a warranty is not broken that a watchman be kept on duty at night, where without his employer's knowledge he goes to sleep during the time he should be on duty,[8] especially so where said watchman was employed in good faith.[9] A man employed to watch in the daytime, and who is permitted to sleep at night, is not a watchman at night within the meaning of a fire insurance policy providing that a "watchman shall be employed by the insured, to be in and about the premises day and night."[10] So where the words were "watchman on premises at night," it was held merely an affirmative warranty relating to the time of the application, and the fact that the watchman was away on the night of the fire constituted no defense, the insured having no knowledge

[3] Sierra Milling, Smelting & Mining Co. v. Hartford Fire Ins. Co. 76 Cal. 235, 18 Pac. 267.

[4] Kansas Mill Owners' & Manufacturers' Mutual Fire Ins. Co. v. Metcalf, 59 Kan. 383, 53 Pac. 68.

[5] Au Sable Lumber Co. v. Detroit Manufacturers' Mutual Fire Ins. Co. 89 Mich. 407, 21 Ins. L. J. 311, 50 N. W. 870.

[6] Mannheim Ins. Co. v. Charles Clarke & Co. — Tex. Civ. App. —, 157 S. W. 291, 42 Ins. L. J. 1177.

[7] Sheldon v. Hartford Mutual Ins. Co. 22 Conn. 235, 58 Am. Dec. 420.

[8] Burlington Fire Ins. Co. v. Coffman, 13 Tex. Civ. App. 439, 35 S. W. 406.

[9] Phoenix Assur. Co. v. Coffman, 10 Tex. Civ. App. 631, 32 S. W. 810.

[10] Rankin v. Amazon Ins. Co. 89 Cal. 203, 23 Am. St. Rep. 460, 26 Pac. 872.

thereof.[11] "During the night" means throughout the night when used in connection with keeping a watchman.[12] So the answer that "there is a watchman nights," is held in New York to mean every night, and the warranty is broken and the policy annulled if no watch is kept from twelve o'clock Saturday night till twelve o'clock Sunday night.[13] And the same decision was given in Connecticut, where the statement was, "There is a watchman nights; no clock; bell is struck every hour." [14] Although in another Connecticut case the answer, "There is a watchman nights," given to the question, "Is there a watchman, etc., during the night?" was held a material representation requiring substantial performance.[15] If a policy contains a permission for the works to remain idle, accompanied by a warranty by the assured "that at all times when the above works are idle and inoperative, one or more watchmen shall be kept constantly on duty at night," the assured is not required to keep a watchman at night when the works are operated during the day.[16] And where the question as to a watch being kept during the night was answered, "None, except people working in the mill during the night," this was held not to be a warranty that there should be a watch or that men should always be at work at night.[17]

If the policy provides that whenever the plant is idle competent watchmen shall be employed and due diligence shall be used to keep a continuous watch both day and night in and immediately around said parts of the plant, something more than the employment of competent men is required, and a mere agreement by insured with the men that they were to watch intermittently or occasionally at quite a distance from the premises, does not fulfil insured's obligation under the contract.[18] So a nonobligatory arrangement made by insured's watchman, one of whom only was employed, the other acting merely with the owner's consent with

[11] Virginia Fire & Marine Ins. Co. v. Buck, 88 Va. 517, 13 S. E. 973.

On absence of watchman without knowledge of insured as a defense, see note in 34 L.R.A.(N.S.) 563.

[12] Glendale Woolen Co. v. Protection Ins. Co. 21 Conn. 19, 54 Am. Dec. 309.

[13] Ripley v. Ætna Ins. Co. 30 N. Y. 136, 86 Am. Dec. 362. But see Ripley v. Astor Ins. Co. 17 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 244.

[14] Glendale Woolen Co. v. Protection Ins. Co. 21 Conn. 19, 54 Am. Dec. 309.

[15] Sheldon v. Hartford Fire Ins. Co. 22 Conn. 235, 58 Am. Dec. 420.

[16] Mackintosh v. Agricultural Fire Ins. Co. 150 Cal. 440, 119 Am. St. Rep. 234, 89 Pac. 102.

[17] Prieger v. Exchange Mutual Ins. Co. 6 Wis. 89. But see Blumer v. Phœnix Ins. Co. 48 Wis. 535, 33 Am. Rep. 830, 4 N. W. 674, s. c. 45 Wis. 622 (one judge dissenting).

[18] Shoshone Concentrating Co. v. Hamburg-Bremen Fire Ins. Co. 64 Wash. 638, 117 Pac. 500.

the watchman of another yacht forty or fifty feet away, does not constitute a compliance with a requirement that at least two competent watchmen should be employed, and that one of them should be on duty at all times.[19] And if a watchman sleeps at night so far away that he cannot see the mill, he cannot be said to be a night watchman kept in the mill.[20] Again, where insured warranted that his boat should at all times have a competent watchman on board and it appears that the sole watchman aboard went ashore to secure a change of clothing, and while absent the boat caught fire and was consumed, said act of insured's agent, even though done without his knowledge, constitutes a material breach of warranty.[1] One who sleeps on the premises is not a watchman kept there at night.[2]

In Michigan all policies, whether standard or not, are covered by a statute declaring that no policy of fire insurance shall be declared void by the insurer for breach of any condition if the insurer has not been injured by it.[3] In a Federal case it is held that there is no merit in the claim that the failure of insured to maintain upon the insured premises forty combination night watch and fire alarm boxes of the A. D. T. system, that a watchman should be on duty nights, Sundays and holidays and at all times when the premises were not in operation, and that the watchman on duty should ring in to the main or central office each hour for the purpose of registration, for in such case even though it is admitted that said hourly requirement is never complied with, still if it is also conceded that such noncompliance or failure to so report hourly, in no way contributed to the loss, and as a matter of fact the watchman on duty sent in a fire alarm promptly, the statute of the state applies which provides that a policy shall not be avoided for the breach of a warranty or condition unless the breach existed at the time of loss and contributed to the loss.[4] If

[19] Mannheim Ins. Co. v. Tyner, 142 Ky. 22, 133 S. W. 1000.

[20] Wenzel v. Commercial Ins. Co. 67 Cal. 438, 7 Pac. 817. See McKenzie v. Scottish Union & National Ins. Co. 112 Cal. 548, 44 Pac. 922.

[1] Whealton Packing Co. v. Ætna Ins. Co. 185 Fed. 108, 107 C. C. A. 113, 34 L.R.A.(N.S.) 563, citing Norwaysz v. Thuringia Ins. Co. 204 Ill. 334, 68 N. E. 551; Snyder v. Home Ins. Co. (U. S. D. C.) 133 Fed. 848, aff'd 148 Fed. 1021, 79 C. C. A. 536; Ripley v. Aetna Ins. Co. 30 N. Y. 136, 86 Am. Dec. 362; First National Bank v. Insurance Co. of N. A. 50 N. Y. 45; Ryan v. Providence Washington Ins. Co. 79 N. Y. Supp. 460, 79 App. Div. 316.

[2] Brooks v. Standard Fire Ins. Co. 11 Mo. App. 349.

[3] McGannon v. Michigan Millers' Mutual Fire Ins. Co. 127 Mich. 636, 54 L.R.A. 739, 89 Am. St. Rep. 501, 87 N. W. 61, 30 Ins. L. J. 872.

[4] E. H. Stanton Co. v. Rochester German Underwriters Agency (U. S. D. C.) 206 Fed. 978, 42 Ins. L. J. 1621; Wash. Ins. Code, 1911, sec. 34; L. 1911, pp. 161, 197, which provides insurer has no knowledge of the breach of a warranty as to vacancy and a "watchman with approved watch clock clause" but expressly waives compliance therewith by a vacancy permit in consideration of the basis rate on which the policy is written, and also upon condition of full compliance with said warranty, such waiver has no force.[5]

The burden of proof rests upon insurer to show alleged remissness of duty on the part of the watchman; but whether he was on duty even though not awake all the time is a question for the jury.[6] It is also a question for the jury whether a temporary absence from an insured boat lying in port, the watchman going on shore to get a meal, is in accordance with a custom so to do, no meals being cooked on board ship.[7] So where a vessel was stipulated to be in charge of a watchman, it was held a question for the jury whether there was a sufficient compliance where the watchman was employed to watch this and other vessels, and was in a yard near by where the vessel lay.[8] So the term "good watch kept" will be construed to mean a suitable or proper watch, and the question whether such a watch is kept is for the jury.[9] that: "The breach of a warranty or condition in any contract or policy of insurance shall not avoid the policy nor avail the insurer to avoid liability, unless such breach shall exist at the time of the loss and contributed to the loss; anything in the policy or contract of insurance to the contrary notwithstanding. In case a loss occurs while a breach of warranty exists, if it contributes to the loss, the insured shall only be entitled to recover the amount of insurance the premium paid would purchase at the rate that would be charged without the warranty. This section shall be liberally construed."

[5] Frick v. Millers' National Ins. Co. — Mo. —, 184 S. W. 1161.

[6] St. Paul Fire & Marine Ins. Co. v. Kendle, 163 Ky. 146, 173 S. W. 373.

[7] Gibson v. Farmers' & Mechanics' Ins. Co. 1 Cin. Sup. Ct. 410, 13 Ohio Dec. 629.

[8] Plyer v. German-American Ins. Co. 48 Hun (N. Y.) 618, 1 N. Y. Supp. 395.

[9] Parker v. Bridgeport Ins. Co. 10 Gray (76 Mass.) 302.

CHAPTER LXI.

NEUTRALITY AND NATIONAL CHARACTER.

§ 2122. Warranty of neutrality: generally.
§ 2123. Object and meaning of this warranty.
§ 2124. Neutral property defined: who is a neutral: domicil.
§ 2125. Warranty true when made not forfeited by subsequent hostilities.
§ 2126. Warranty of neutrality as affected by barratry.
§ 2127. Documents, papers, etc., required.
§ 2128. Character of documents and insignia of national character required.
§ 2129. Description in policy or representation as to national character.
§ 2130. Goods shipped from a neutral to a belligerent.
§ 2131. Goods shipped from a belligerent to a neutral: transfer after capture.
§ 2132. Agreement to claim property as neutral in case of capture.
§ 2133. Neutral vessels employed in belligerent service.
§ 2134. May neutrals avail themselves in time of war of trade prohibited during peace?
§ 2135. Vendee of vessel.
§ 2136. Neutrality violated by breach of blockade.
§ 2137. Notice to neutral of blockade required.
§ 2138. Where existence of blockade is notorious or it has long continued.
§ 2139. What constitutes a blockade.
§ 2139a. Same subject: British orders in Council, etc.
§ 2140. Continuance of blockade.
§ 2141. Effect of sailing for blockaded port: intention to enter: breach of blockade: what is and is not.
§ 2142. Simulated or false papers: concealment, suppression, or spoliation of papers.
§ 2142a. Same subject: "liberty to run blockade:" seizure.
§ 2143. Carrying contraband goods: contraband of war: breach of neutrality.
§ 2144. Breach of neutrality from resistance to lawful right of search.

§ 2122. Warranty of neutrality: generally.[10]—In time of maritime war it has been customary for the insurer to require a warranty

[10] In this chapter the English admiralty cases are frequently cited. The decisions of Sir William Scott, who was appointed judge of the high of neutrality, or that the ship or goods insured are neutral property when a neutral desired to effect a policy thereon, or some representation was made that the property belonged to a subject of a neutral state, or was neutral, which is the same as a warranty of neutrality.[11] Although such a warranty is generally expressed in the policy by proper words, it is declared if the insurance is effected by a resident neutral on his own property, that the neutral character at least of the vessel, if not the cargo, may be necessarily inferred, and, although there is no express warranty or representation, the assured impliedly stipulates that he will preserve his property and conduct the voyage insured in a neutral condition and character.[12] This rule was applied where the shipowner effected a policy on freight, and did not disclose the fact known to him that the goods were neutral, no inquiry being made by the insurer. The freight was lost by reason of the fact that false papers were used to disguise the national character of the cargo;[13] otherwise, had no false papers been used, it is not clear what interest the insurer on freight has in knowing the national character of the cargo, as freight is usually paid by the captors.[14] So it is held that the insured is not bound to anticipate a capture and condemnation in violation of the law of nations, and is under no obligation to communicate facts and circumstances from which such capture and condemnation might be apprehended, unless they are such court of admiralty in 1798, so far as they are an exposition of the general principles of national law, are adopted and relied on by the federal courts, and Chancellor Kent declares that the decisions of the supreme court of the United States evidence that "the authority of that eminent judge stood as high at Washington as it does at Westminster." Griswold v. Waddington, 16 Johns. (N. Y.) 438, 468.

[11] Goix v. Low, 1 Johns. Cas. (N. Y.) 341; Walton v. Bethune, 2 Brev. (S. C.) 453, 4 Am. Dec. 597; Baring v. Christie, 5 East, 398, 3 Bos. & P. 201, 4 R. R. 520, 6 R. R. 759; Baring v. Claggett, 3 Bos. & P. 201, 5 East, 398, 4 R. R. 520, 14 Eng. Rul. Cas. 155; Lothian v. Henderson, 3 Bos. & P. 499, 7 R. R. 829.

The marine insurance act of England provides: "Warranty of neutrality. 36.—(1) Where insurable property, whether ship or goods, is expressly warranted neutral, there is an implied condition that the property shall have a neutral character at the commencement of the risk, and that, so far as the assured can control the matter, its neutral character shall be preserved during the risk." Marine ins. act 1906 (6 Edw. VII. c. 41) sec. 36 (1); 2 Butterworth's Twentieth Cent. Stat. (1900–1909) p. 408; Chitty's Stat. Eng. p. 890.

As to origin and growth of law of neutrality, see Taylor's Internat. L. pp. 617 et seq., secs. 596 et seq.

On liability of insurer under policy of marine insurance for losses arising out of state of war as affected by warranties, see note in 5 B. R. C. 10.

[12] Stocker v. Merrimack Ins. Co. 6 Mass. 220, per Sewall, J.

[13] See The Rising Sun, 2 Rob. Admr. 104.

[14] See The Atlas, 3 Rob. Adm. 299, 304n.

as to create so general an impression of danger as must enhance the premium of insurance; but a knowledge of facts and circumstances of the latter description is not to be presumed against the insured; and although he may be aware that certain circumstances may become ground of condemnation in violation of the law of nations, there is no implied warranty that they do not exist in relation to the property insured.[15] An exception in a policy of insurance against any loss arising from the violation of existing laws or regulations of belligerent nations restricting neutral commerce, does not cover a loss occurring from the violation of any decree subsequently made.[16]

§ 2123. Object and meaning of this warranty.—The object of this warranty is to apprise the insurer of the character of the property and to exclude the risk of belligerent capture. The general warranty has only in view a breach of neutrality under the laws of nations and subsisting treaties, and the engagement of the assured is that the property is neutral for the purpose of being protected, and that no act of the owner or his agents will be committed during the voyage insured constituting a breach of neutrality, and that the ship will be furnished with all necessary documents and papers to establish such neutrality, if questioned, as required by the law of nations and subsisting international treaties;[17] for the assured is bound not only to maintain the property as neutral, but to so conduct himself toward the belligerent parties as not to forfeit his neutrality. A warranty of neutrality will be broken by unneutral conduct of the assured.[18] Notwithstanding the object of this warranty, there are cases in which, although it may be fulfilled, yet the property insured may nevertheless be subjected to loss from seizure by a belligerent; as where goods of an enemy are carried,[19] or there is a breach of an arbitrary ordinance of a belligerent.[20]

[15] Marsh v. Muir, 1 Brev. (S. C.) 134, 2 Am. Dec. 648.

[16] Wood v. New England Ins. Co. 14 Mass. 31, 7 Am. Dec. 182.

For Proclamation of Neutrality of Aug. & Sept. 1914, by President of United States and acts prohibited thereby, see 9 Amer. Jour. of Internat. L. (1915) Suppl. pp. 110 et seq., with list of identical proclamations of belligerents, 9 Id. Special No., pp. 88, 96, 97, 99, 106, 194–206.

[17] Smith v. Delaware Ins. Co. 3 Wash. (U. S. C. C.) 127, Fed. Cas. No. 13,035; Galbraith v. Gracie, 1 Wash. (U. S. C. C.) 219, Fed. Cas. No. 2296.

[18] Cleveland v. Union Ins. Co. 8 Mass. 308; Schwartz v. Insurance Co. of North America, 3 Wash. (U. S. C. C.) 117, Fed. Cas. No. 12,504.

As to "neutral rights and duties in maritime warfare" and articles of Hague Conference of 1907, see Hershey's Essentials of International Pub. L. (1912) pp. 465 et seq., with Bibliography at p. 476.

[19] See Barker v. Blakes, 9 East, 283, 9 R. R. 558.

[20] See Mayne v. Walter, 1 Park. Ins. (8th ed.) 730, 3 Doug. 79.

In warranting the property to be neutral, this will be construed to mean a warranty only that the interest of the insured is neutral; the fact that another who is interested in the cargo is a belligerent does not falsify the warranty where his interest is not insured.[1] But if a part of the interest insured is owned by a belligerent, or if the entire interest is so owned, in consequence of which the risk is increased, the warranty is falsified, and this rule applies where the interest of the belligerent is merely an equitable one, or an interest as cestui que trust.[2]

§ 2124. Neutral property defined: who is a neutral: domicil.—Neutral property, within the meaning of the warranty of neutrality or of neutral ownership, is that which belongs to the subject of a neutral state; that is, a state at amity with the belligerent powers, or the property of one who, for the purposes of trade or commerce, has his domicil in the neutral state and has obtained the commercial character, and is entitled to the privileges of a neutral.[3]

We have seen that the fact that one is a citizen of a neutral state does not, as a rule, make his property neutral if he is a resident

[1] Livingston v. Maryland Ins. Co. 6 Cranch (10 U. S.) 274, 3 L. ed. 222. The interest of the belligerent was in the profits of the cargo. See Barker v. Blakes, 9 East, 283, 9 R. R. 558; Bayard v. Massachusetts Fire & Marine Ins. Co. 4 Mason (U. S. C. C.) 256, Fed. Cas. No. 1133.

[2] Murray v. United Ins. Co. 2 Johns. Cas. (N. Y.) 168; Bayard v. Massachusetts Fire & Marine Ins. Co. 4 Mason (U. S. C. C.) 256, Fed. Cas. No. 1133. See Galbraith v. Gracie, 1 Wash. (U. S. C. C.) 219, Fed. Cas. No. 2296; Price v. Dupeau, 1 Brev. (S. C.) 452, 2 Am. Dec. 680.

[3] Tabbs v. Bendelack, 3 Bos. & P. 207n, 4 Esp. 108, reported in 1 Marshall on Ins. (ed. 1810) *386; Wilson v. Maryatt, 8 Term Rep. 31, 1 Bos. & P. 430, reported in 1 Marshall on Ins. (ed. 1810) *68.

"In international practice there are applied two widely divergent criterions or tests of enemy character. France and some of the other European States apply the test of political nationality. The Anglo-American system, which is also applied in a somewhat modified form by Japan, makes enemy or neutral character in maritime warfare depend upon commercial or trade domicil." Hershey's Essentials of International Pub. L. (1912) pp. 442-443. Quoting also from Declaration of Paris that "the neutral flag covers enemy's goods, with the exception of contraband of war" and "neutral goods with the exception of contraband of war are not liable to capture under enemy's flag."

The enemy character of vessels is determined for purposes of maritime capture by the domicil of the owner "the domicil here contemplated being that frequently designated commercial (as distinguished from personal) domicil. Therefore, if a vessel, though flying the neutral flag, is found to be the property of a person domiciled or carrying on trade in the enemy country, his interest in her is liable to confiscation." Phillipson's International Law and the Great War (1915) p. 339. See Id. 254. See also as to test of the flag and domicil, Wheaton's Elements of International Law (5th Eng. ed. 1916) pp. 572 et seq.

of a belligerent country, domiciled there for commercial purposes;[4] for if a neutral engages in commerce in an enemy's country on the same footing and advantages, and subject to the same protection and benefits, as native resident subjects, his property so employed becomes incorporated into the general commerce of the hostile country, and therefore liable to confiscation, without regard to his citizenship, for he cannot carry on a substantially hostile commerce and have the immunity and advantages of a strictly neutral character.[5]

If a neutral has partners residing in a belligerent country, a warranty of neutral ownership will be falsified as to trade with the hostile firm, and if a neutral has a commercial establishment in a belligerent state during war, the same rule applies to the hostile trade.[6] But such merchants may also have a neutral domicil for commercial purposes, which will impress goods owned by him with the neutral character, and the above rule will not apply to goods of an owner notwithstanding he may also have a commercial establishment in the belligerent state.[7]

An established domicil in the United States for the purpose of commerce makes the property American, for, in respect to the trade in which such resident is engaged, he is a citizen of this country, even though a foreign subject and not naturalized.[8] But a residence from 1811 to 1813 in this country, at which latter date the insurance was effected, was held not to support a warranty that the property was Swedish, the presumption of permanent residence and domicil here not being repelled by proof.[9]

A hostile national character may impress itself upon the trade and property of one by reason of his habitual employment in the [4] See §§ 296–299 herein; The Antonia Joanna, 1 Wheat. (14 U. S.) 159, 4 L. ed. 60; The Citto, 3 Rob. 41; The President, 5 Rob. 277; McConnell v. Hector, 3 Bos. & P. 113, 6 R. R. 724; Tabbs v. Bendelack, 4 Esp. 108, per Lord Kenyon; 3 Bos. & P. 207. See O'Meally v. Wilson, 1 Camp. 484, 10 R. R. 732.

[5] See The San Jose Indiano, 2 Gall. (U. S. C. C.) 268, Fed. Cas. No. 12,322, per Story, J.; The Antonia Joanna, 1 Wheat. (14 U. S.) 159, 4 L. ed. 60. See The Venus, 8 Cranch (12 U. S.) 253, 3 L. ed. 553; The Danons, 4 Rob. 255n; The Nayade, 4 Rob. 251; The Vigilantia, 1 Rob. 1. See §§ 296–299 herein.

[6] The Antonia Joanna, 1 Wheat. (14 U. S.) 159, 4 L. ed. 60; The San Jose Indiano, 2 Gall. (U. S. C. C.) 268, Fed. Cas. No. 12,322; Elbers v. United Ins. Co. 16 Johns. (N. Y.) 128. See Arnold v. United Ins. Co. 1 Johns. Cas. (N. Y.) 363; The Franklin, 6 Rob. 127; The Dree Gebroeders, 4 C. Rob. 235; The Vigilantia, 1 Rob. 1.

[7] See The Herman, 4 Rob. Adm. 228; The Portland, 2 Rob. 41.

[8] Bill v. Reid, 1 Maule & S. 726, 14 R. R. 557; Johnson v. Ludlow, 2 Johns. Cas. (N. Y.) 481; Wilson v. Marryatt, 8 Term Rep. 31; The Neptunus, 6 Rob. 408; The Matchless, 1 Hagg. 103.

[9] Elbers v. United Ins. Co. 16 Johns. (N. Y.) 128.

navigation of the hostile state; as in the case of a master or mariner so employed, and this without regard to the question of domicil, but it may be proven, however, to have acquired another and distinct national character.[10] We have further considered the question of domicil under a prior chapter, to which we refer.[11]

If the owner is a neutral or even a subject, but possesses an estate within belligerent colonial territory, the produce therefrom is impressed by the hostile character of the territory, and is liable to capture in transitu if shipped therefrom. In such case the property is not of neutral origin;[12] but if the voyage is not entire and direct from the colonial port of loading to a belligerent port, there may be a bona fide importation to a neutral port and exportation thence. What constitutes a bona fide importation and transshipment, and not an entire voyage from the hostile port to the mother country, rests upon the particular facts in evidence, although landing the cargo is not, it seems, absolutely necessary.[13] And even if a neutral could not lawfully carry on a trade between the mother country of a belligerent and its colonies, which was not allowed to such neutral in time of peace, yet the penalty of for-

[10] The Embden, 1 Rob. 16, cited in 1 Duer on Marine Ins. (ed. 1845) 526, sec. 43.

[11] See c. XI. herein; The Herman, 4 Rob. Adm. 228; The Portland, 3 Rob. Adm. 41.

[12] Thirty Hogsheads of Sugar v. Boyle, 9 Cranch (13 U. S.) 191, 3 L. ed. 701. In this case Mr. Chief Justice Marshall said: "The acquisition of land in the Danish colony bound him (the plaintiff) to the fate of that colony. When the colony became British, the soil and its unsold produce became British, and the general commercial or political character of the plaintiff could not affect this transaction. Although as a Dane he was an enemy of Great Britain, yet, as proprietor of land in one of her colonies, he was no enemy and could ship his produce to her in safety from her cruisers" (and at the risk of ours who were then at war with her). See also The Vrow Catharina, 5 Rob. 161; The Phœnix, 5 Rob. 25. And this is true even though such produce be shipped in time of peace, unless it be delivered while peace exists. "By reason," says Sir William Scott in The Vrow Anna Catharina, 5 Rob. 161, "that the proprietor has incorporated himself with the permanent interests of the nation, and is to be taken as a part of it independent of his own personal residence or sympathies." The Phœnix, 5 Rob. 25; The Rensburg, 4 Rob. Adm. 121.

[13] The William, 5 Rob. 349; The Polly, 2 Rob. 361; The Essex, 5 Rob. 369; The Maria, 5 Rob. 365. See 1 Duer on Marine Ins. (ed. 1845) 217–725, where this rule is considered, it being in effect a modification of the "rule of 1756," which prohibited neutrals from carrying on the coasting or colonial trade of the enemy in time of war from which they were excluded in peace: 1 Duer on Marine Ins. 699–717, 763, 770. Examine also appendix, 1 Wheat. (U. S.) 507; 1 Kent's Commentaries (15th ed.) 85n; 17 & 18 Vict. c. 5. See also § 2134 herein.

feiture can attach only during the existence of such unlawful trade, which cannot affect or vitiate a subsequent lawful voyage.[14]

If the goods are warranted American, it is not a breach of warranty that the goods are not exported by the importers where the vessel has on board a certificate of origin of a belligerent colony, it being a document in the course of trade without which the cargo would not be admitted to entry.[15] In the British prize courts it is declared that the question of national character is made to depend upon the ownership at the date of the seizure and is to be determined by the evidence, also that enemy ownership is the true criterion for condemnation; and this is applied to enemy goods on British ships at the commencement of hostilities.[16]

§ 2125. Warranty true when made not forfeited by subsequent hostilities.—The warranty, if true when made, is not falsified by the fact that by reason of subsequent hostilities arising the property ceases to be neutral in character. Future war is at the insurer's risk, but if the warranty is false when made, the policy has no inception.[17]

§ 2126. Warranty of neutrality as affected by barratry.—If there be a warranty of neutrality and the policy binds the underwriter to answer for the barratry of the master, the warranty implies that the neutral character shall not be forfeited by any acts of the insured or his agents, except only those amounting to barratry.[18]

§ 2127. Documents, papers, etc., required.—A warranty of neutrality or neutral ownership implies that there shall be on board ready for use every document and paper which is necessary, in accordance with the laws of nations and subsisting international treaties, to prove its neutral or national character. The ship must be navigated not only according to the law of nations, but also according to the particular treaties subsisting between the country to which she belongs and other countries,[19] and the assured can

[14] Kemble v. Rhinelander, 3 Johns. Cas. (N. Y.) 130.

[15] Le Roy v. United Ins. Co. 7 Johns. (N. Y.) 343.

[16] The Odessa; The Woolston (1915) L. R. 13 Asp. Mar. L. Cas. 215 [1916] 1 A. C. 145, 1 P. C. 554, 85 L. J. P. C. 49, 114 L. T. 10, 60 S. J. 292, 32 T. L. R. 103.

[17] Saloucci v. Johnson, 4 Doug. 224, 232; Park on Ins. 364; Tyson v. Gurney, 3 Term Rep. 477. See The Carlos J. Roses, 177 U. S. 655, 44 L. ed. 929, 20 Sup. Ct. 803; St. Enoch Shipping Co. v. Phosphate Mining Co. 86 L. J. K. B. 74, [1916] 9 K. B. 624, 21 Com. Cas. 192; 1 Marshall on Ins. (ed. 1810) *387. This subject is also considered under the sections herein covering "capture," "contraband," etc.

As to embargo and subsequently enacted laws, see §§ 2523 et seq. herein.

[18] Wilcocks v. Union Ins. Co. 2 Binn. (Pa.) 574, 4 Am. Dec. 480.

[19] Coolridge v. New York Firemen's Ins. Co. 14 Johns. (N. Y.)

never be surprised by the want of the proper documents, except by his own neglect or fault.[20]

While certain documents may evidence neutrality, it is held not necessary that all of such documents should be on board. It is sufficient that the vessel is provided with such authenticated documents as are necessary to establish the neutrality or ownership, and that such documents be ready for use, but the want of any documents so necessary to establish the ship's neutrality will not be a compliance.[1] And in estimating the materiality of the papers on board a ship to the risk, their effect taken together should be considered, not the effect of any one of them taken by itself.[2]

If by treaty between a neutral and belligerent certain documents are agreed upon as necessary to be furnished to evidence the neutral character of the ship, the warranty of neutrality is falsified if they are not furnished as agreed, nor must the ship subject herself to detention for want of such documents; but where no such treaty 308; Murray v. Alsop, 3 Johns. Cas. (N. Y.) 97; Blagge v. New York Ins. Co. 1 Caines (N. Y.) 549; Schwartz v. Insurance Co. of North America, 6 Binn. (Pa.) 378; Ludlow v. Union Ins. Co. 2 Serg. & R. 119; Siffkin v. Lee, 2 Bos. & P. N. R. 484; Barzillai v. Lewis, 3 Doug. 126; Christie v. Secretan, 8 Term Rep. 192, per Lord Kenyon.

"Where the nationality or neutrality of a ship or cargo is expressly warranted, it is implied that the ship will carry the requisite documents to show such nationality or neutrality, and that it will not carry any documents which cast reasonable suspicion thereon: Deering's Annot. Civ. Code Cal. sec. 2668.

The marine insurance act of England provides: "Warranty of neutrality. . . . (2) Where a ship is expressly warranted 'neutral' there is also an implied condition that, so far as the assured can control the matter, she shall be properly documented, that is to say, that she shall carry the necessary papers to establish her neutrality, and that she shall not falsify or suppress her papers, or use simulated papers. If any loss occurs through breach of this condition, the insurer may avoid the contract." Marine ins. act 1906 (6 Edw. VII. c. 41) sec. 36 (1); 2 Butterworth's Twentieth Cent. Stat. (1900–1909) p. 408; Chitty's Stat. Eng. p. 890.

[20] Smith v. Delaware Ins. Co. 3 Wash. (U. S. C. C.) 127, Fed. Cas. No. 13,035.

[1] The San Jose Indiano, 2 Gall. (U. S. C. C.) 268, Fed. Cas. No. 12,322; Barker v. Phœnix Ins. Co. 8 Johns. (N. Y.) 307, 5 Am. Dec. 339; Blagge v. New York Ins. Co. 1 Caines (N. Y.) 549; Griffith v. Insurance Co. of North America, 5 Binn. (Pa.) 464; Le Cheminant v. Pearson; Le Cheminant v. Allnutt, 4 Taunt. 367, per Marshall, C. J.; Baring v. Claggett, 3 Bos. & P. 201, 5 East, 398, 14 Eng. Rul. Cas. 155. See Siffkin v. Lee, 2 Bos. & P. N. R. 484. "It is to be observed that though by the law of nations the want of some of these papers may be taken as strong presumptive evidence, yet the want of none of them amounts to conclusive evidence against the ship's neutrality." 1 Marshall on Ins. (ed. 1810) *408.

[2] Livingston v. Maryland Ins. Co. 7 Cranch (99 U. S.) 506, 3 L. ed. 421.

exists, the warranty is not falsified because the ship has been navigated contrary to particular arbitrary ordinances of which neutrals are not obligated to take notice, and which are contrary to the law of nations.[3]

In times of universal peace a warranty of national character is complied with where the register is the only document on board and a duly certified copy of the original register from the office of the register of the treasury, which is required by law in case of loss to be deposited in such office, is legal evidence of such register.[4] In case of a ship with British register the court will look beyond nominal ownership and if the real owners make it enemy property it will be so held.[5]

If the national character of the vessel is not made a part of the contract of insurance so as to have the force of a warranty, and there is no warranty or representation of the national character of the vessel, yet if it appears that the loss is occasioned from the want of the proper documents required to show such character, there can be no recovery under an insurance on the vessel or freight or on the goods of the owner or charterer of the vessel, for in such case the fact that the vessel is not furnished with such documents as are necessary under the law of nations and international treaties to evidence her neutral or national character and ownership operates to exonerate the insurer from the loss, and to this extent there is an implied warranty that such documents shall be on board. The rule does not apply to papers required by the arbitrary ordinances of belligerent states not binding on a neutral power, nor to the goods of a shipper having no absolute or special interest in the vessel, unless perhaps he has knowledge of the fact that by the want of such documents his property is exposed to unusual peril or increased hazard and has failed to disclose the fact. An exception would also exist, in case the risks were notwithstanding expressly covered by the policy, if there had been a full disclosure of facts and the risk had, with such knowledge by the underwriter, been assured by him.[6] It must be observed, however, that the loss must distinctly

[3] Rich v. Parker, 7 Term Rep. 705, 4 R. R. 552, 14 Eng. Rul. Cas. 149; 2 Esp. 615; Pollard v. Bell, 8 Term Rep. 434, 5 R. R. 404; Mayne v. Walter, reported with the above two cases in 1 Marshall on Ins. (ed. 1810) 397, 409, 413 a.

[4] Catlett v. Pacific Ins. Co. 1 Paine (U. S. C. C.) 594, Fed. Cas. No. 2,517.

[5] The St. Tuno, 86 L. J. P. 1 (1916) p. 291, 2 P. Cas. 272, 115 L. T. 684.

[6] Polleys v. Ocean Ins. Co. 14 Me. (2 Shep.) 141; Cleveland v. Union Mutual Ins. Co. 8 Mass. 308, Sewall, J., dissenting; Bell v. Carstairs, 14 East, 374, 2 Camp. 544, 12 R. R. 557, 14 Eng. Rul. Cas. 319, per Lord Ellenborough; Steel v. Lacy, 3 Taunt. 285, 12 R. R. 658; Pollard v. Bell, 8 Term Rep. 434, 5 appear to have been wholly or partially caused by the want of such necessary documents, but it is not, therefore, necessary that the ship should sail with such documents.[7] In this connection it is declared that where the national character of a vessel is not warranted or represented, the assured need not show that she has a sea letter or other papers required by the laws of the country or by treaties with foreign nations.[8] In so far as this statement expresses a different rule from that above given, it apparently conflicts with the decisions cited on which said rule is based.[9]

§ 2128. Character of documents and insignia of national character required.—The following documents and insignia of national character are specified by Mr. Arnould as necessary: 1. The flag: 2. The passport, sea brief, sea letter, or pass; 3. The register or certificate of registry: 4. The bill of sale; 5. The muster-roll; 6. The charter-party; 7. The log-book; 8. The bill of health; 9. Proofs of the national character of the cargo, as invoices, bills of lading, certificates of origin, etc.[10] By the law of nations the flag

R. R. 404; Christie v. Secretan, 8 Term Rep. 1921; Hobbs v. Henning, 34 L. J. Com. P. 117, 122, 17 Com. B. (N. S.) 791, 5 N. R. 406, 11 Jur. (N. S.) 223; Dawson v. Atty, 7 East, 367; Price v. Bell, 1 East, 663; Le Cheminant v. Pearson (v. Allnut) 4 Taunt. 367; Bell v. Bromfield, 15 East, 364; Carruthers v. Gray, 3 Camp. 142, 15 East, 35; Bird v. Appleton, 8 Term Rep. 562, 5 R. R. 468, 13 Eng. Rul. Cas. 547. Examine Stocker v. Merrimack Ins. Co. 6 Mass. 220; Horneyer v. Lushington, 3 Camp. 85, 15 East, 46, 13 Eng. Rul. Cas. 637; Mayne v. Walter, 3 Doug. 79.

[7] But see 17 & 18 Vict. c. 124, sec. 122. But if the exporter shall fail to deliver to the searcher a shipping bill with duplicates thereof when required of the goods exported by him as prescribed by the customs consolidation act of 1853, he shall be held liable.

[8] Elting v. Scott, 2 Johns. (N. Y.) 157. See Barnewall v. Church, 1 Caines (N. Y.) 217, 2 Am. Dec. 180.

[9] But see Bell v. Carstairs, 14 East, 374, 393, 2 Camp. 544, 12 R. R. 557, 14 Eng. Rul. Cas. 319, per Lord Ellenborough.

[10] 1 Arnould on Marine Ins. (Perkin's ed. 1850) 624, *623; Id. (Maclachlan's ed. 1887) 626 et seq.; Id. (9th ed. Hart & Simey) secs. 661 et seq., pp. 846 et seq. See 17 Earl of Halsbury's Laws of England, sec. 826, p. 421; Wheaton on Maritime Captures and Prizes, 65, 66. See Price v. Bell, 1 East, 663; Baring v. Clagett, 3 Bos. & P. 201, 14 Eng. Rul. Cas. 155; Rich v. Parker, 7 Durn. & E. 705, 14 Eng. Rul. Cas. 149; Garrels v. Kensington, 8 Durn. & E. 230; Bell v. Bromfield, 15 East, 364; Le Cheminant v. Pearson, 4 Taunt. 367. Mr. Marshall enumerates them as follows: 1. The passport, sea brief or sea letter. See Anonymous, Skin. 404. "This document is indispensably necessary to the safety of every neutral ship;" 2. The proofs of property, such as a bill of sale, etc. These proofs are essential: See The Sisters, 5 Rob. Adm. 155, per Lord Stowell; 3. The muster-roll (rôle d' equipage). See Christie v. Secretan, 8 Term Rep. 192; 4. The charter-party. See Saloucci v. Johnson, reported in 1 Marshall on Ins. (ed. 1810) 419, per Ashhurst, J.; 5. The bills of lading; 6. The invoices; 7. The log-book or ship's journal; 8. The bill of health.

evidences the national character of the ship, although not of the goods.[11] If a vessel is described as carrying a "Kniphausen flag," and represented as a "Kniphausen vessel," the warranty is satisfied if she is documented and navigated according to the laws of that state.[12] And where the ship was warranted Danish and she carried Danish colors, and the master conducted himself as the master of a ship of that nationality, the warranty was held satisfied.[13]

A neutral ship which sails under the enemy's flag and pass is impressed with that character. The fact that such a hostile character is assumed presumes that some benefit or advantage is thereby sought, and therefore assured may not disclaim the belligerent character.[14] Neutral goods loaded on board such a ship are not, however, subject to the rule, but the neutral character and ownership may be proven where the goods are so loaded in time of peace, unless the same was done in contemplation of war, and with a design to protect them from hostile capture.[15] It is also held in this country that neutral goods may be lawfully carried on board an enemy's armed ship without being prize of war.[16] This decision

1 Marshall on Ins. (ed. 1810) *406 et seq. The papers required are the sea letters or passports describing and certificates containing the particulars of the cargo and place whence the ship sailed, signed by the officers of the port. Cooper's American Politics (ed. 1884) bk. v. p. 113. As to sea letters, see 6 Wheat. (19 U. S.) Append. 12, 36, 58; Slight v. Rhinelander, 1 Johns. (N. Y.) 192; 2 Laws U. S. c. 339; 3 Laws U. S. c. 329.

[11] The Vrow Elizabeth, 5 C. Rob. 11; The Success, 1 Dod. 132; The Vreede Scholtys, 5 C. Rob. 5n.

Nationality of vessel is determined by the flag. The Tommi; The Rotherband, 84 L. J. P. 85, (1914) p. 251, 1 P. Cas. 16, 112 L. T. 257, 13 Asp. Mar. Cas. 5, 59 Sol. J. 96, 31 T. L. R. 15.

As to use of neutral flag by belligerent, see Phillipson's International Law and The Great War (1915) p. 352. As to correspondence concerning same, see 9 Amer. Jour. Internat. L. (1915) Special number, pp. 88, 96, 97, 99, 106.

As to use of neutral flags on merchant vessels of belligerents, and that the British merchant shipping act authorizes the use of the British flag by foreign merchant vessels in time of war to escape capture, see 9 Amer. Jour. Internatl. Law, pp. 464, 471–472.

[12] Von Tungelyn v. Du Bois, 2 Camp. 151.

[13] Arcangelo v. Thompson, 2 Camp. 620, 12 R. R. 758. See Pollard v. Bell, 8 Term Rep. 434, 5 R. R. 468, per Lord Kenyon.

[14] Schwartz v. Insurance Co. of North America, 3 Wash. (U. S. C. C.) 117, Fed. Cas. No. 12,504; The Ann Green, 1 Gall. (U. S. C. C.) 274, 290, Fed. Cas. No. 414, per Story, J.; Higgins v. Livermore, 14 Mass. 106; Barker v. Phœnix Ins. Co. 8 Johns. (N. Y.) 307, 5 Am. Dec. 339; Slight v. Rhinelander, 1 Johns. (N. Y.) 192; The Success, 1 Dod. Adm. 131, per Sir Wm. Scott; The Ann, 1 Dod. Adm. 221; The Princess, 2 Rob. Adm. 49, per Sir Wm. Scott; The Vigilantia, 1 Rob. Adm. 13, per Sir Wm. Scott.

[15] The Ann Green, 1 Gall. (U. S. C. C.) 274, 286, Fed. Cas. No. 414, per Story, J.; The Vreede Scholtys, 5 Rob. Adm. 5n.

[16] The Nereide, 9 Cranch (13 U.

is, however, criticised by Mr. Duer, on the ground that "it is a premeditated attempt to oppose, if practicable, the right of search, and to this preliminary act the full effect of actual resistance may be justly and legally imputed." [17] But the goods of a neutral may, it is admitted, be carried in a merchant or unarmed ship of the enemy, for the right of capture does not extend to the goods of a friend.[18] The presumption, however, that they are the enemy's goods must be overcome by documents showing their neutral character.[19]

A neutral ship may carry a belligerent cargo, and not by the mere fact of so doing falsify a warranty of neutrality either of the ship or of such part of the cargo as is covered by separate insurance, and is not hostile in character, unless there is an attempt to disguise and carry belligerent goods as neutral.[20] But this rule, although it permits a neutral to carry belligerent goods without a violation of belligerent rights, yet it does not protect such goods from hostile seizure and confiscation, and subjects the vessel not only to detention, but it may also be carried into the captor's port to unload the goods. The custom is to then release the vessel, and in such case freight is usually paid by the captors, as the goods, being enemy's goods, a delivery to the captor is in effect a delivery to the consignee for the purpose of freight, unless the right to freight is destroyed by carrying false papers or by the suppression of papers.[1]

S.) 388, 3 L. ed. 769; The Atalanta, 3 Wheat. (16 U. S.) 409, 4 L. ed. 422. But see The Fanny, 1 Dod. Adm. 443, per Sir Wm. Scott; Kemble v. Rhinelander, 3 Johns. Cas. (N. Y.) 130; 2 Wheaton's International Law, 260–278. The Declaration of Paris of 1856, signed by the representatives of the chief European powers, provides in section 3 that "neutral goods, except contraband of war, are not liable to capture under an enemy's flag."

Adherence to the rules of the Declaration of Paris was declared by the President's Proclamation of April 26, 1898, including the rule that "neutral goods, not contraband of war, are not liable to confiscation under the enemy's flag." The Carlos P. Roses, 177 U. S. 655, 44 L. ed. 929, 20 Sup. Ct. 1903.

[17] 1 Duer on Marine Ins. (ed. 1845) 731, 732, relying on opinion of Story, J., in The Nereide, 9 Cranch (13 U. S.) 388, 3 L. ed. 769.

[18] The Fanny, 1 Dod. Adm. 443, 448; 1 Duer on Marine Ins. (ed. 1845) 732.

[19] See The Flying Fish, 2 Gall. (U. S. C. C.) 374, Fed. Cas. No. 4,892.

[20] Barker v. Blakes, 9 East, 283; Schultz v. Insurance Co. of North America, 3 Wash. (U. S. C. C.) 117, Fed. Cas. No. 12,504; Phœnix Ins. Co. v. Pratt, 2 Binn. (Pa.) 308. See The Nereide, 9 Cranch (13 U. S.) 388, 3 L. ed. 769, per Marshall, C. J.

[1] 2 Wheaton's International Law, 160; The Atlas, 3 Rob. 304n; The Emanuel, 1 Rob. 296; 1 Duer on Marine Ins. (ed. 1845) 530–33. The Declaration of Paris of 1856, signed by the representatives of the chief European powers, provides in section 2 that "the neutral flag covers enemy's

It is held that if the government, for the purpose of protecting from its cruisers the ship of another state, grants it a passport, this does not violate the laws of neutrality, nor impress the ship with the national character of the government from whom the passport is obtained.[2] Where the treaty between France and America of 1778 required that all ships belonging to the subject of either ally should be furnished with passports or sea letters expressing the name, property, and bulk of the ship, and the name and place of habitation of her master, and that such passport should be exhibited, etc., and the ship sailed from London to Guernsey, England then being at war with France, it was held that a warranty of American property was falsified by the ship not having such passport on board, and that a ship which, for want of a necessary document, subjects herself to detention forfeits her neutrality, even though the fact is that she is American property.[3]

Where there was a warranty that the ship was American, and the proof was of American ownership, and the vessel had all the necessary papers except a register, having sailed with a sea letter only, this was held to be a sufficient evidence of a compliance with the warranty.[4] If a ship is warranted American property, and it is represented that she sails under a sea letter or certificate, and that her out cargo is wholly or partly contraband of war, the warranty is not satisfied unless she is neutral for all purposes and properly documented as such, and will so conduct herself as a neutral as not to violate the laws of neutrality.[5] An insurance on a "British brig" is not a warranty that she is British registered, but applies to her ownership, and is satisfied prima facie where she is navigated under a clearance and license from the British custom-house at New Providence, and is owned by a British subject.[6] A copy of the ship's register, unless authenticated by the oath of a witness who has seen the original, is held no evidence that the ship is American, although goods with the exception of contraband of war."

[2] Hallett v. Jenks, 1 Caines Cas. (N. Y.) 43, s. c. 3 Cranch (7 U. S.) 210, 2 L. ed. 414. See Bulkley v. Derby Fishing Co. 1 Conn. 571; Hayward v. Blake, 12 Mass. 176. But see The Julia, 8 Cranch (12 U. S.) 181, 3 L. ed. 528, 1 Gall. (U. S. C. C.) 605; The Ariadne, 2 Wheat. (15 U. S.) 143, 4 L. ed. 205; Ogden v. Barker, 18 Johns. (N. Y.) 87.

[3] Rich v. Parker, 7 Term Rep. 705, 4 R. R. 552, 14 Eng. Rul. Cas. 149, 2 Esp. 615, reported in 1 Marshall on Ins. (ed. 1810) *409.

[4] Barker v. Phœnix Ins. Co. 8 Johns. (N. Y.) 307, 5 Am. Dec. 339. See Sleght v. Rhinelander, 2 Johns. (N. Y.) 531, reversing 1 Johns. (N. Y.) 192; Griffith v. Insurance Co. of North America, 5 Binn. (Pa.) 464.

[5] Schwartz v. Insurance Co. of North America, 6 Binn. (Pa.) 378.

[6] Mackie v. Pleasants, 2 Binn.

the copy is certified by the collector;[7] but a copy certified by the registrar of the treasury department where the original register is filed, coupled with a certificate under the department seal that he is a registrar, is evidence.[8]

§ 2129. Description in policy or representation as to national character.—If the vessel is described in the policy or is represented as an American or British, etc., ship, it is equivalent to a warranty of national character.[9] So where a policy of insurance was effected upon a vessel represented to be American, and furnished with American papers, but in reality owned by Spanish subjects, which fact was not disclosed to the insurers, the policy was held void from the beginning, on the ground both of misrepresentation and concealment, and in such case the insured cannot recover, whether the loss is caused by the misrepresentation or concealment or otherwise.[10] But the representation of the insured that the cargo is American is not falsified by the vessel's carrying the baggage of French passengers.[11] And a representation of property covered as American is substantially complied with if the property be actually American.[12] If the vessel be described in the policy as a prize vessel, and afterward her national character is changed so as to increase the risk, this discharges the underwriters.[13] Where, however, a ship is described or warranted as of a particular national character, this does not mean merely that she is so built, but that she is entitled to all the privileges and immunities to which a ship of the national character specified is entitled.[14]

§ 2130. Goods shipped from a neutral to a belligerent.—Goods shipped during war or during peace in contemplation of war from a neutral to a belligerent, to become his property on arrival, are impressed from the commencement of the voyage with the hostile character of the consignee, and are subject during the voyage to

(Pa.) 363. See also Griffith v. Insurance Co. of North America, 5 Binn. (Pa.) 464.

[7] Coolidge v. New York Firemen's Ins. Co. 14 Johns. (N. Y.) 308.

[8] Catlett v. Pacific Ins. Co. 4 Wend. (N. Y.) 75, affirming Catlett v. Keith, 1 Wend. (N. Y.) 561.

[9] Higgins v. Livermore, 14 Mass. 106; Lewis v. Thatcher, 15 Mass. 431, 432; Atherton v. Brown, 14 Mass. 152; Barker v. Phœnix Ins. Co. 8 Johns (N. Y.) 307, 5 Am. Dec. 339; Murray v. United Ins. Co. 2 Johns. Cas. (N. Y.) 168; Vandenheuvel v. Church, 2 Johns. Cas. (N. Y.) 127; Francis v. Ocean Ins. Co. 6 Cow. (N. Y.) 404.

[10] Price v. De Peau, 1 Brev. (S. C.) 452, 2 Am. Dec. 680.

[11] Vasse v. Ball, 2 Yeates (Pa.) 178.

[12] Hughes v. Union Ins. Co. 8 Wheat. (21 U. S.) 294, 5 L. ed. 620.

[13] Seamans v. Loring, 1 Mason (U. S. C. C.) 127, Fed. Cas. No. 12,583.

[14] Rich v. Parker, 7 Term Rep. 705, 4 R. R. 552, 14 Eng. Rul. Cas. 149, 2 Esp. 615, per Ashhurst, J., reported in 1 Marshall on Marine Ins. (ed. 1810) *411.

capture and confiscation, and this rule is not affected by usage to the contrary, nor by any special agreement which in effect would evade the operation of the law, such agreement being held fraudulent. Goods so shipped falsify a warranty of neutral property. The rule also applies to goods contracted in good faith to be shipped during peace, but not shipped until after war is declared, although if shipped bona fide during peace, and subsequent hostilities arise, the neutral ownership of the goods remains unchanged till delivery, and the rule does not apply.[15] This rule is, however, subject to such exceptions as may arise from the exercise of the right of stoppage in transitu.[16]

§ 2131. Goods shipped from a belligerent to a neutral: transfer after capture.—Goods shipped during war or during peace in contemplation of war from a belligerent to a neutral country, if belligerent in character at the commencement of the voyage, so continue until delivery in the neutral country, and are subject to capture in transitu. But if it is clearly proven that the title to the [15] The Venus, 8 Cranch (12 U. S.) 253, 275, 3 L. ed. 553; The Ann Green, 1 Gall. (C. C.) 274, 291, Fed. Cas. No. 414, per Story, J.; The Francis, 1 Gall. (C. C.) 445, Fed. Cas. No. 5,032, per Story, J.; The Anna Catharina, 4 Rob. Adm. 107, per Sir Wm. Scott; The Vrow Margaretha, 1 C. Rob. 336; The Jan Frederick, 4 Rob. 107; The Atlas, 3 Rob. 299; The De Biboa, 2 C. Rob. 134; The Staadt Embden, 1 C. Rob. 26n; The Ringende Jacob, 1 C. Rob. 89; The Sally Griffiths, 3 C. Rob. 303. But see De Wolff v. New York Fire Ins. Co. 2 Cow. (N. Y.) 56, 20 Johns. (N. Y.) 214; Ludlow v. Browne, 1 Johns. (N. Y.) 1, 3 Am. Dec. 277. In this last case a policy of insurance was effected on goods from New York to France, warranted as American property. The goods were purchased and shipped in an American vessel by American merchants to French merchants, under an agreement that the former were to deliver the goods at St. Valleery, for which they were to be allowed a certain commission, taking on themselves all risks; the consignees were to pay the freight on delivery and also for the amount of cargo, in bills on London, guaranteed by a commercial house in that city. During the voyage the goods were captured by the British and condemned as French property. It was held that the property of the goods remained in the consignors until delivery in France, and that the warranty in the policy was not broken in regard to the neutral character of the property, so as to vitiate the policy. See 1 Kent's Commentaries (5th ed.) 86, 87.

As to merchant vessels carrying supplies to belligerent vessels, see circular of Department of State of U. S. 9 Amer. Jour. of Internat. L. (1915) Suppl. p. 122. See also Id. p. 124.

As to "Importance of old prize rules lessened by modern conditions of transportation business and law" enemy goods in neutral bottoms, see Bordwell's Law of War (ed. 1908) p. 220.

As to belligerent destination see Taylor's Internat. L. (ed. 1904) p. 743, sec. 665.

[16] See The Constantia, 6 Rob. 321, 330, per Sir Wm. Scott; Dutton v. Solomonson, 3 Bos. & P. 582.

property was acquired and was also absolutely and unconditionally vested in the neutral consignee, and the goods delivered to him or his agent at the time of shipment, the neutral character of the property continues in transitu. Less evidence is required, however, to prove the neutral character where the title is so acquired and the goods are shipped during peace and subsequent hostilities arise. If, however, the consignee is not obligated to accept the goods, as in case of an election to take them, or if the property is under the dominion or control of the consignor in transitu, it does not lose its belligerent character, for the property must be devested out of the shipper, and absolutely and unconditionally vested in the neutral consignee at the commencement of the transit.[17] A warranty of neutrality is broken by transfer on the part of the insured, after capture of a part of the subject insured, to a subject of the belligerent, for a breach as to part vitiates the whole.[18]

Notwithstanding the rule first stated, it is said "that in order to constitute an effectual transfer of the property there must be either an order for the goods or an effectual acceptance of them by the consignee prior to the capture. If the capture takes place where no order has been given, and before the goods have been accepted, they must be considered as the property of the persons who have so consigned them." [19] Both Mr. Phillips and Mr. Duer deduce from the quoted statement an exception to the rule in substance as follows: If goods are shipped conditionally, and the neutral complies with the conditions and accepts the goods in transitu before capture, they become neutral in character from that time.[20] The principal rule first given in this section is subject to such exceptions as may arise from the exercise of the right of stoppage in transitu.[1]

[17] The Frances, 8 Cranch (12 U. S.) 354, 3 L. ed. 587, 9 Cranch (13 U. S.) 183, 189, 3 L. ed. 698, 1 Gall. (C. C.) 445, Fed. Cas. No. 5,032; The Merrimack, 8 Cranch (12 U. S.) 318, 3 L. ed. 575; The Venus (M'Gee's Claim) 8 Cranch (12 U. S.) 251, 275, 3 L. ed. 553; The Sally, 3 C. Rob. 300n; The Aurora, 4 Rob. 218; The Atlas, 3 C. Rob. 299; The Margaretha, 1 Rob. 336; The Noyd Gedacht, 2 Rob. 137; The Anna Catharina, 4 C. Rob. 107; The Carl Walter, 4 Rob. 207; The Carolina, 1 Rob. 304; The Twende Venner, 6 Rob. 329n. Examine The Danecke-baar Africana, 1 Rob. 107 (the rule stated in the text was that in England prior to the Declaration of Paris of 1856); 1 Arnould on Marine Ins. (Maclachlan's ed. 1887) 625. See also Maclachlan on Shipping, 560.

[18] Goold v. United Ins. Co. 2 Caines (N. Y.) 73.

[19] The Cousinne Marianne, 1 Edw. Adm. 346, per Sir Wm. Scott.

[20] 1 Duer on Marine Ins. (ed. 1845) 435, sec. 33; 1 Phillips on Ins. (3d ed.) 439, sec. 795. Examine The Francis, 9 Cranch (13 U. S.) 183, 3 L. ed. 698, argument of counsel and opinion of court.

[1] The Constantia, 6 Rob. 330, per Sir Wm. Scott, and cases cited under last note under preceding section

Under a late English case a claim was made by reason of a change of ownership of the goods, seized, between the dates of seizure and the claim, the property being in neutrals when seized, thereafter the shippers, German agents, claimed the goods against the underwriters for a total loss, said goods having been insured against war risks by enemy underwriters in Hamburg. The underwriters paid in full, thereby becoming owners of the goods, and the claim filed by the shippers in fact was made on behalf of the underwriters. The claim was disallowed and the proceeds of the sale of the goods was condemned as enemy property.[2]

§ 2132. Agreement to claim property as neutral in case of capture.—The agreement to claim property as neutral in case of capture is held so far legal that the insured cannot recover if he refuses to assert such claim where the property is captured, and it is no excuse that this refusal is on the ground that it would render him guilty of perjury so to do.[3]

§ 2133. Neutral vessels employed in belligerent service.—A neutral vessel cannot, without being subject to forfeiture, engage in any service or employment of a belligerent which will aid or assist him in warding off the pressure of war, or in favoring its offensive projects. The vessel must not subject herself to the belligerent's orders, or identify herself with the interests of such belligerent. Thus, being engaged in the transport service of the enemy, or in carrying military persons in his employ, or the transportation of military stores, whether immediately connected with the active service of the belligerent or not, or the conveyance of dispatches for a belligerent, all render the vessel so engaged subject to confiscation, and all property of the owner is subject to the penalty where he is in privity or has knowledge of the conveyance of hostile dispatches.[4] And it is a high misdemeanor either to fit out, arm, or employ a vessel against people at peace with this country.[5]

See The Twende Venner, 6 Rob. 329n.

[2] The Palm Branch (1916) L. R. Prob. Div. 230, 115 L. T. 557, 32 L. T. R. 725. See The Sorfareren, 85 L. J. P. 121, 1 P. Cas. 589, 114 L. T. 46, 13 Asp. M. C. 223, 32 T. L. R. 108.

[3] Coolidge v. Blake, 15 Mass. 429.

[4] The Commereen, 1 Wheat. (14 U. S.) 382, 4 L. ed. 116, per Story, J.; The Atalanta, 6 Rob. 440, 454, per Sir Wm. Scott; The Friendship, 6 Rob. 420, per Sir Wm. Scott; The Carolina, 4 Rob. 256; The Rapid, 1 Edw. 228; The Orozembo, 6 Rob. 430, per Sir Wm. Scott.

[5] The Monte Allegro, 7 Wheat. (20 U. S.) 520, 5 L. ed. 513; The Estrella, 4 Wheat. (17 U. S.) 298, 4 L. ed. 574; United States v. Rayburn, 6 Pet. (31 U. S.) 352, 8 L. ed. 424; United States v. Guinet, 2 Dall. (2 U. S.) 321, 1 L. ed. 398; The Salvador, L. R. 3 P. C. App. Cas. 218. But see British Consul v. Ship Mermaid (Adm. 69, 71). For other reasons relating to this point see The Gran Para, 7 Wheat. (20 U. S.) 471, 5 L. ed. 302; United States v.

The rule does not, however, preclude carrying dispatches by a neutral vessel between an ambassador in a neutral state and his own country; although a belligerent, such act does not constitute a breach of the warranty of neutrality, nor subject the vessel to confiscation, although she may be liable to detention.[6] One marked distinction, however, seems to be made between the cases of carrying dispatches of a belligerent and other belligerent employment, and that is, that in the former case the knowledge of the owner or of the master is an important factor, since the mere fact of belligerent dispatches being on board does afford a ground for enforcing the penalty where no knowledge of the fact exists on the part of the owner or master, while in other cases of belligerent employment it has been held that the ignorance or knowledge or privity of the master or owner is an immaterial matter.[7]

§ 2134. May neutrals avail themselves in time of war of a trade prohibited during peace?—In England, what was known as the rule of 1756 prohibited neutrals during war to engage in a colonial or coasting trade of a belligerent state, from which they were excluded in time of peace;[8] for although a belligerent under an entire inability to supply his colonies in time of war affects to open

Quincy, 6 Pet. (31 U. S.) 445, 8 L. ed. 458. The Bello Corrunes, 6 Wheat. (19 U. S.) 152, 5 L. ed. 229; The Santa Maria, 7 Wheat. (20 U. S.) 490, 5 L. ed. 505, 3 Atty. Gen. Opin. 738. And examine Rev. Stats. U. S. sec. 5,283.

[6] The Commercen, 1 Wheat. (14 U. S.) 382, 4 L. ed. 116; The Madison, 1 Edw. 224; The Caroline, 1 Rob. 461, per Sir Wm. Scott.

[7] The Caroline, 6 Rob. 461; The Hope, 6 Rob. 463n; The Orozembo, 6 Rob. 430, per Sir Wm. Scott.

[8] In 1756, when war between Great Britain and France was declared, what was known as the Rule of 1756 was enforced. It was in direct opposition to the law of nations, as well as to the principle declared by Frederick the Great, "that goods of an enemy cannot be taken from on board the ships of a friend," and in direct violation of the treaty between England and Holland. 2 Lossing's Harper's Cyclopedia of United States History (ed. 1893) 1232, tit. "Rule 1756." The French Convention, by decree, 1793, allowed to neutral vessels the privileges of French ships, and the British government refused to recognize the trade as neutral between France and her West India colonies. The rule of 1756 was revived, and British cruisers were ordered to seize and bring in all vessels loaded with breadstuffs and bound for France, even though both vessel and cargo were neutral, but, on proof of neutrality, they were not to be forfeited. The cargo was to be paid for and the vessel released on bond being given to land in countries friendly to Great Britain. Taken from 1 Lossing's Harper's Cyclopedia of United States History (ed. 1893) 160, tit., "British Interference with the Rights of Neutrals." "In 1793, the British government issued instructions to its public and private ships of war 'to detain and bring in for adjudication' all neutral vessels laden with the produce of any colony of France or carrying provisions or other supplies for the use of such colonies.'" 1 Duer on Marine Ins. (ed. 1845) 717.

them to neutrals, nevertheless it is held that it still continues a privileged trade, and that neutrals may not avail themselves of the concession, and embark in such trade without thereby identifying themselves with the belligerent and impressing the trade with such hostile character, and that in effect, by so interposing, the neutral relieves the belligerent from the condition into which the other belligerent had reduced him. This rule was subsequently modified, and was strictly enforced by English tribunals during the great maritime wars from 1792 to 1815,[9] although it was not only not admitted by the United States to be an established principle of the law of nations, but was declared to be utterly opposed thereto, and this government vigorously remonstrated, rejecting the rule and denouncing the doctrine as an unjust, arbitrary, and violent innovation. In its modified form the rule covered only the trade on a direct voyage from a colonial port of lading to the mother country, and permitted a direct trade between the colonies and the neutral country, and an exportation thence to the mother country, provided the voyage of importation and exportation did not constitute one entire voyage, and the importation to the neutral country was bona fide, and not with an original intention on the part of the importer to reship the goods and thereby evade the operation of the rule.[10] [9] "And the confiscation of a vast number of American ships with valuable cargoes of colonial produce was the fruit of this decree." 1 Duer on Marine Ins. (ed. 1845) 701, 721.

[10] 1 Arnould on Marine Ins. (Perkins' ed. 1850) 629 et seq.; Id. (Maclachlan's ed. 1887) 631 et seq.; Id. (8th ed. Hart & Simey) sec. 660, p. 816, sec. 664, pp. 823 et seq., sec. 771, p. 931; 1 Phillips on Ins. (3d ed.) 448, sec. 816; 1 Duer on Marine Ins. (ed. 1845) 699–725, 762–770, where this subject is exhaustively treated by the writer, who denies the authority of the rule, and considers and cites numerous cases and other references, among which are the following: Berons v. Rucker, 1 Wm. Black. 313, per Lord Mansfield; The Princessa, 2 Rob. 52; The Vrow Anna Catharina, 5 Rob. 15; The Rendsburg, 4 Rob. 121; Sir Wm. Scott's opinion in The Immanuel, 2 Rob. 200–204, and his argument in The Emmanuel, 1 Rob. 296; The Phœnix, 3 Rob. 186; The Joanna Tholen, 6 Rob. 72; The Rebecca, 2 Rob. 101; The Jonge Thomas, 3 Rob. 233n; Argument of counsel for claimant in The Wilhelmina, 4 Rob. Append. 5; The Polly, 2 Rob. 361; The Essex, 5 Rob. 369; The Maria, 5 Rob. 365; The Katharina, 5 Brown P. C. (Tomlyn's ed.) 328; 1 Wheat. (14 U. S.) Append. 507; 2 Wheat. (15 U. S.) Append. 29; Mr. Munroe's letter to Lord Mulgrave, Sept. 23, 1805; Mr. Madison's letter to Messrs. Monroe & Pinckney, May 11, 1806; 1 Kent's Commentaries (5th ed.) 84, 85n; Lord Liverpool's "Discourse on the Conduct of the Government of Great Britain;" Ward on the Rights and Duties of Belligerents and Neutrals; Mr. Stephen's pamphlet, "War in Disguise;" Mr. Madison's "Examination of the British Doctrine;" 5 American State Papers, 330, 355.

§ 2135. Vendee of vessel.—The fact that a vessel has been sold by a belligerent to a neutral in time of war does not impress her with a neutral character, unless the sale is absolute and the title totally divested out of the belligerent vendor, and her subsequent trade and conduct must also be of such a character as to place the transfer above the suspicion of being merely colorable and in fraud of belligerent rights. If the belligerent vendor retains a contingent interest, dependent upon the performance or nonperformance of any condition whereby the title or any interest therein is to revert to him at some future time, or if he holds a lien thereon for any part of the purchase money, or if the vessel be employed by the neutral vendee in the enemy's trade, or continues under the control and management of the belligerent vendor, the vessel has not such a neutral character as to protect her from capture. This is in substance what has been held by the English admiralty.[11] If a vessel is transferred to an alien under such conditions that the title is not devested out of the vendor, an American citizen, as where the property, although it is to be paid for, at all events is not to be transferred until a future day, this will satisfy the warranty on the part of the vendor of American property.[12] It has also been held by the English admiralty that the absolute sale to a neutral of an armed belligerent vessel in a neutral port, in which she was forced to take refuge by the other belligerent, is not such a valid transfer as will protect her thereafter from capture, although the rule is otherwise as to a merchant ship.[13] The fact that the vendee of a vessel sold in an American port may, perhaps, use her in the service of a belligerent, is not a violation of neutrality.[14]

§ 2136. Neutrality violated by breach of blockade.—It may be stated as a general rule that a breach of blockade by a neutral

[11] The Vigilantia, 1 Rob. 1; The Noyd Gedacht, 2 Rob. 137n; The Endraught, 1 Rob. 18; The Vrow Herminia, 1 Rob. 163; The Lechs Geschwinstein, 4 Rob. 100; The Embden, 1 Rob. 16. See also The Benito Estranger, 176 U. S. 568, 20 Sup. Ct. 489, 44 L. ed. 592.

The British ships transfer restriction act, 1916 (5 Geo. V. c. 21, act Aug. 23, 1916 [54 Brit. Stat. 1916, pp. 124, 125]) provides: "Where after the passing of the act, any person who is the owner or mortgagee of a British ship ceases to be a British subject or becomes a foreign contraband company, that ship, or, in the case of a mortgagee of a ship, the interest of the mortgagee shall be subject to forfeiture under part I of the merchant shipping act 1894." See also 53 British Stat. (1914–15) p. 41 (act 16 March, 1915).

As to American registry and restriction on transfer of ship, see shipping act 1916, U. S. Stat. 1915–16, pp. 728 et seq.

[12] Mugatroyd v. Crawford, 3 Dall. (3 U. S.) 491, 1 L. ed. 692.

[13] The Minerva, 6 Rob. 399, and note.

[14] The Santissima Trinidad, 7 Wheat. (20 U. S.) 283, 5 L. ed. 454; The Betsey, Bee Adm. 67, Fed. Cas. No. 17,750; The Meteor, 3 Am. Law Rev. 173.

violates his neutrality. But the blockade must be one of which notice, actual or constructive, has been given; it must also have been duly and sufficiently instituted and properly maintained, for although a belligerent has the right to exclude neutral commerce by an investment of the enemy's port with a naval force, yet such exclusion should be held operative only when done and maintained strictly in accordance with the rules of law and the right of war. In brief, there must be an actual blockade, intended to exclude all communication with the invested port, and to suspend its commerce both as to its import and export trade; it must also be properly maintained, and there ought to be some clear act of violation by the neutral.[15]

§ 2137. Notice to neutral of blockade required.—There must be a knowledge of the existence of a blockade, either actual or constructive, on the part of a neutral. Actual personal notice is conclusive, without regard to its immediate source, especially where by due inquiry it might have been confirmed.[16] Again, under the English admiralty decisions and upon other high authority a blockading nation has, as a general rule, the right to conclusively presume that a notification to a neutral government is a personal notification to each subject and resident entitled to claim its neutral character and protection, and this is true as to the blockading power, irrespective of the neglect of the neutral government to make publication of the notice received.[17] It is declared, however,

[15] The Juffrou Maria Schroeder, 3 Rob. 147; The Frederick Molke, 1 Rob. 86; The Webraart Van Pillau, 2 C. Rob. 128; Harratt v. Wise, 9 Barn. & C. 712, 7 L. J. (O. S.) K. B. 309, per Lord Tenterden; The Gute Edwartung, 6 C. Rob. 182; The Vrow Judith, 1 Rob. 150, per Sir Wm. Scott; The Maria, 5 C. Rob. 365; The Haabet, 6 Rob. 58; The Mercurius, 1 Rob. 82, per Sir Wm. Scott; 1 Marshall on Ins. (ed. 1810) *80.

See § 2139 and compare § 2139a herein.

Attempt to leave blockaded port subjects vessel and cargo to condemnation. The Johann Maria, 10 Moore's Privy Council 70, Scott's Cas. on Internat. L. p. 803.

As to contracts involving breach of neutrality: same as to supply of munitions of war and of blockade breach, see 2 Wharton's Conflict of Laws (3d ed.) sec. 496, 497, pp. 1183, 1184.

[16] The Tutela, 6 Rob. 177; Winder v. Wise, Dawson & Lloyd's Mercantile Cases, 238. In this case there had been a publication of the notice in the London Gazette after the captain had sailed on his voyage and an insurance on goods abroad. The Rolle, 6 Rob. 364.

Blockade must be known to exist. The Olinde Rodrigues, 174 U. S. 510, 43 L. ed. 1065, 19 Sup. Ct. 851.

[17] The Neptunas, 2 Rob. 110, and cases id. 109, 111, 131, 298; The Tutela, 6 Rob. 177; Harratt v. Wise, 9 Barn. & C. 712, 7 L. J. (O. S.) K. B. 309, per Lord Tenterden; The Adelaide, 2 C. Rob. 111n; 1 Kent's Commentaries, 147 et seq.; opinion of Kent, C. J., in Radcliff v. United Ins. Co. 7 Johns. (N. Y.) 38; Maclachlan on Shipping, 569 et seq.; 1 Arnould on Marine Ins. (Perkins' that the rule is open to some qualification and relaxation for the furtherance of justice and the benefit of commerce; as in case the master sails on his voyage before notice is published of the blockade, and also that the presumption of knowledge from such notification is open to rebuttal in insurance cases, and it becomes a question of fact for the jury whether there was actual knowledge or not.[18]

§ 2138. Where existence of blockade is notorious or has long continued.—Where the fact of the existence of the blockade is so open and notoriously known at the port of departure that it may reasonably be presumed that the neutral must have been informed of its existence, he is presumed to have knowledge thereof. This rule has also been applied to a vessel seeking egress from a blockaded port with a cargo loaded after the commencement of the blockade; so to a case where notice has been given to a neighboring state, and a sufficiently reasonable time has elapsed thereafter, and also where an important commercial port has been blockaded and the hostile investment has long continued.[19]

§ 2139. What constitutes a blockade.—A blockade must have been duly and sufficiently established either directly by the sovereign power, or by express or implied delegation of power, or presumably by adoption and ratification, except that where a blockade has been declared by the sovereign authority, it is thereby limited in its extent, and no discretionary power exists in the blockading force to enlarge its terms as against a neutral.[20] A blockade of an enemy's port may also be established without any proclamation by the President, by the commander of the naval forces, as an adjunct to naval operations against other blockaded ports and the enemy's fleet.[1]

There must not only be an actual de facto blockade, but it must

ed. 1850) 744, sec. 276; 1 Phillips on Ins. (3d ed.) 457, 458, secs. 829, 830; 1 Marshall on Ins. (ed. 1810) *80; 1 Duer on Marine Ins. (ed. 1845) 648 et seq. See also 1 Duer on Marine Ins. (ed. 1845) 691–698, where this writer fully examines the note to Olivera v. Union Ins. Co. 3 Wheat. (16 U. S.) 183, 196, 4 L. ed. 365, and appendix, and also reviews the authorities relied on and rejects, as not expressing the law, the rule there stated, viz., that notification to a neutral minister is not notice to his government or its citizens according to the recognized doctrine here.

[18] Harratt v. Wise, 9 Barn. & C. 712, 7 L. J. (O. S.) K. B. 309, per Lord Tenterden.

[19] The Vrow Judith, 1 Rob. 150; The Adelaide, 2 Rob. 111 n, per Sir Wm. Scott; The Frederick Molke, 1 Rob. 86; The Calypso, 2 Rob. 298; The Hutige Hane Dahl, 3 Rob. 328.

[20] The Rolla, 6 Rob. 364, per Sir Wm. Scott; The Henrick, 1 Rob. 146. See § 2139a herein.

[1] The Adula, 176 U. S. 361, 44 L. ed. 505, 20 Sup. Ct. 432.

be properly maintained. It must be of such a character and be maintained by such an actually existing adequate force before the port that every vessel which attempts egress or ingress is imminently liable to capture; for it must be intended to suspend commerce with the blockaded port by so far encircling it at sea that all communication is effectually cut off.[2] And no blockade exists as to

[2] King v. Delaware Ins. Co. 2 Wash. (U. S. C. C.) 300, Fed. Cas. No. 7,788; Radcliff v. United Ins. Co. 7 Johns. (N. Y.) 38; Williams v. Smith, 2 Caines (N. Y.) 1, 2 Am. Dec. 209; The Mercurius, 1 Rob. 67; The Betsey, 1 C. Rob. 93, 5 Eng. Rul. Cas. 187; The Vrow Judith, 1 Rob. 150, per Sir Wm. Scott; 2 Wheaton's International Law, 228, 233; 1 Kent's Commentaries (5th ed.) 144 et seq. See Treaties of United States and Chili, 1822; United States and Peru, 1830, and July 22, 1856; United States and Russia, July 22, 1854; United States and Two Sicilies, Jan. 13, 1855; 7 Journ. Congress, 241, Dec. 1871. On May 16, 1806, England, by orders in council, declared the whole coast of Europe, from Elbe in Germany to Brest in France, in a state of blockade, when it could not spare a sufficient naval force from other points of service to enforce the blockade over more than a small proportion of the territory. On November 21, 1806, Napoleon issued the Berlin Decree, declaring the British islands in a state of blockade, although he had no naval force, in fact hardly a ship, with which to enforce the decree. This was the beginning of the "Continental System" and was in effect intended as a retaliatory measure; Great Britain, in January, 1807, by order in council, restrained trade by neutrals between belligerent ports, a commerce generally allowed prior thereto, and covered substantially the same territory as the former order, and again, on November 17, 1807, she prohibited all neutral trade between France and her allies, except through Great Britain. Napoleon's retaliatory measure, or Milan Order of December 17, 1807, and like decrees issued by Spain and Holland, declared that every vessel should be forfeited and denationalized if found on the high seas on a voyage to or from any British port, or which should submit to search by British cruisers, or which should pay any license money, tax, or duty to that government. The Berlin Decree was not at first enforced against American vessels by the French. The American minister having been informed by the French authorities that they would not be molested, but after July 7, 1807, it was announced that American vessels laden with British merchandise or the merchandise of her colonies would be seized, and in November, 1807, the American ship Horizon was actually seized and her cargo condemned as of British origin, and thereafter other American vessels and their cargoes were also seized. In the same year, Great Britain, after a formal demand for the surrender of the Danish fleet at Copenhagen, seized their vessels and took them to England, and by an order in council, November 11, 1807, she made another retaliatory order in council, prohibiting neutral trade except through Great Britain with France or her allies. The retaliatory orders in council of Great Britain were, although a plain violation of the law of nations, defended by Sir William Scott, although he had previously declared it to be "monstrous to suppose that because one country has been guilty of an irregularity every other country is let loose from the law of nations." The Flad Oyen, 1 Rob. 142; The Fox, Edw. Adm. 311. The greater part of the above note is taken in substance from 2 Lossing's Harper's Cyclopedia of United States

any marine channel left open.[3] And the legal effect of a lawful and sufficient blockade is the closing of the port and an interdiction of the entrance of all vessels, of whatever nationality or business.[4]

Whether the fact that a port is merely besieged and not invested by sea, prevents transportation there by neutrals of goods by sea, has been questioned by Chief Justice Marshall. If, however, the goods so transported were within the class known as contraband of war, or of a nature to aid the inhabitants in continuing resistance, it might be reasonably assumed that the act of transportation was a breach of neutrality,[5] although it is held that it is not a violation

History (ed. 1893) 1034, title "Orders and Decrees," 966, title "Neutrals, Rights of Attacked," and in part from 1 Duer on Marine Ins. (ed. 1845) 644, and note b. In 1810 Congress passed an act, the purpose of which was to obtain a revocation of British and French orders, but it proved unsuccessful: 2 Lossing's Harper's Cyclopaedia of United States History (ed. 1893) 1215, tit. "Revocation of British 'Orders' and French 'Decrees' Sought."

What constitutes an effective blockade: test of effectiveness, see The Olinde Rodrigues, 174 U. S. 510, 43 L. ed. 1065, 19 Sup. Ct. 851.

"A blockade (that is a war blockade as distinguished from a 'pacific blockade') may be defined as 'an act of war carried out by the warships of a belligerent detailed to prevent access to or departure from a defined part of the enemy's coast.' The preventive measures are enforced against vessels of all nations. The earlier text-writers all require that the siege or blockade should actually exist and be carried out by an adequate force, and not merely declared by proclamation, in order to render commercial intercourse with the port or place unlawful on the part of neutrals. . . . A blockade being thus an infringement of maritime rights its operation is not to be extended further than the actual circumstances of the case render necessary. . . . A blockade must also be absolute, that is, it must interdict all commerce whatever within the blockaded port." Wheaton's Elements of International Law (5th Eng. ed. 1916) pp. 767 et seq. covering also the points of what must be proved to constitute a violation of blockade; actual presence of blockading force; temporary interruption; effectiveness of blockade; knowledge of the party; extent of notice; cessation of blockade and notice; violation of blockade, etc.

Compare § 2139a herein.

As to blockades, see Taylor's Internat. L. (ed. 1904) pp. 759 et seq., secs. 674 et seq. That blockades to be binding must be effective, see Id. pp. 766 et seq., secs. 678 et seq.

As to necessity of blockade being effective, etc., and as to rights of neutral vessels to sail in good faith to blockaded ports, etc.: naval war code of 1900; doctrine of continuous voyage, etc., Art. 19 of Declaration of London. See Article "Some Phases of the Laws of Blockade" by Alexander Holtzoff, 10 Amer. Jour. Internat. L. (1916) pp. 52–64.

Absence of blockading fleet excuses entry and departure during such absence. The Nancy, 1 Acton, 57, Scott's Cas. on Internat. L. p. 817.

[3] The Ocean, 3 C. Rob. 297; The Jonge Pieter, 4 C. Rob. 79.

[4] The Adula, 176 U. S. 361, 44 L. ed. 505, 20 Sup. Ct. 432.

[5] Letter to American minister at London, Sept. 20, 1800; 3 Wheat. (16 U. S.) Append. 41; 1 Duer on Marine Ins. (ed. 1845) 656, 658, sec. 32. Although it is said "all commerce is absolutely prohibited with a town or place besieged, invested, or of a maritime blockade for a neutral to export goods from a port not blockaded, to which they had been conveyed overland from the blockaded port.[6] Again, the condemnation of a vessel by a foreign court of admiralty, for a breach of blockade, is conclusive evidence of that fact, in an action for insurance.[7]

§ 2139a. Same subject: British Orders in Council, etc.—The exigencies of the present Great War have brought about what may be designated as an entirely new kind of blockade not within the conception of what all jurists and text-writers on international law and kindred subjects have heretofore denominated blockades. These efforts have not been called by the technical name of blockade but have been respectively declared to be military areas and war zones by the different belligerents promulgating or decreeing their existence.[8] On October 17, 1914, Russia gave warning that navigation would be even blockaded." 1 Marshall on Ins. (ed. 1810) *80.

[6] The Ocean, 3 Rob. 297.

[7] Croudson v. Leonard, 4 Cranch (8 U. S.) 434, 2 L. ed. 670. Cited in:

United States.—Hilton v. Guyot, 159 U. S. 167, 40 L. ed. 109, 16 Sup. Ct. 139; Cushing v. Laird, 107 U. S. 79, 27 L. ed. 395, 2 Sup. Ct. 196; The Mary, 9 Cranch (13 U. S.) 142, 3 L. ed. 684; Tompkins v. Tompkins, 1 Story (U. S. C. C.) 553, Fed. Cas. No. 14,091; The Parkhill, Fed. Cas. No. 10,755a; Dunham v. New England Mutual Ins. Co. 1 Low. Dec. 254, Fed. Cas. No. 4,152; De Lovio v. Bolt, 2 Gall. (U. S. C. C.) 474, Fed. Cas. No. 3,776; Cushing v. Laird, 6 Ben. (U. S. C. C.) 461, Fed. Cas. No. 3,509; Clark v. United States, 2 Wash. (U. S. C. C.) 524, Fed. Cas. No. 2,837; Bradstreet v. Neptune Ins. Co. 3 Sumn. (U. S. C. C.) 605, Fed. Cas. No. 1,793.

Connecticut.—Fisher v. Fielding, 67 Conn. 128, 32 L.R.A. 247, 52 Am. St. Rep. 270, 34 Atl. 714.

Iowa.—Melhop v. Doane, 31 Iowa, 401, 7 Am. Rep. 147.

Minnesota.—Farrell v. City of St. Paul, 62 Minn. 274, 29 L.R.A. 780, 54 Am. St. Rep. 641, 64 N. W. 809.

New Hampshire.—Beach v. Workman, 20 N. H. 383.

New Mexico. — United States v. Maxwell Land Grant Co. 5 N. Mex. 307, 3 L.R.A. 753, 21 Pac. 153.

New York. — Ocean Ins. Co. v. Francis, 2 Wend. 68; New York Firemen Ins. Co. v. De Wolf, 2 Cow. 66.

Pennsylvania.—Cheriot v. Foussat, 3 Binn. 260.

South Carolina.—Groning v. Union Ins. Co. 1 Nott & McC. 540.

Tennessee.—Brown v. Brown, 86 Tenn. 319, 7 S. W. 640; Williams v. Saunders, 5 Coldw. 78; Pinson v. Ivey, 1 Yerg. 350.

Virginia. — Tilson v. Davis, 32 Gratt. 104.

[8] "Another striking feature of the present war is the absence of blockade formally declared and applied in the way in which that doctrine had been previously recognized, namely by actual patrol of the enemy's coasts and waters with a sufficient number of cruisers to prevent ingress and egress. In its place 'military areas' or 'war zones,' depending for their effectiveness upon submarine mines and torpedo boats have been established not only within the enemy's waters, but upon the high seas. The penalty meted out to neutrals for entering these zones is not the penalty which may be legitimately invoked for breach of blockade, namely, confiscation of vessel or cargo after dangerous in certain zones. On February 4, 1915, and on January 31, 1917, Germany declared certain waters to be war zones. And as to Great Britain we quote the following: "The Secretary of the Admiralty makes the following announcement:—During the last week the Germans have scattered mines indiscriminately in the open sea on the main trade route from America to Liverpool via the North of Ireland. Peaceful merchant ships have already been blown up with loss of life by their agency. The White Star liner Olympic escaped disaster by pure good luck. But for the warning given by British cruisers, other British neutral merchant and passenger vessels would have been destroyed. These mines cannot have been laid by any German ship of war. They have been laid by some merchant vessel flying a neutral flag which has come along the trade route as if for the purpose of peaceful commerce and while profiting to the full by the immunity enjoyed by neutral merchant ships, has wantonly and recklessly endangered the lives of all who travel on the sea, regardless of whether they are friend or foe, civilian or military in character. Mine laying under a neutral flag and reconnaisance conducted by trawlers, hospital ships, and neutral vessels are the ordinary features of German naval warfare. In these circumstances, having regard to the great interests intrusted to the British Navy, to the safety of peaceful commerce on the high seas, and to the maintenance within the limits of International Law of trade between neutral countries, the Admiralty feel it necessary to adopt exceptional measures appropriate to the novel conditions under which the war is being waged.

"They therefore give notice that the whole of the North Sea must be considered a military area. Within this area merchant shipping of all kinds, traders of all countries, fishing craft and all other vessels will be exposed to the gravest dangers from mines which it has been necessary to lay, and from warships searching vigilantly by night and day for suspicious craft. All merchant and fishing vessels of every description are hereby warned of the dangers they encounter by entering this area except in strict accordance with admiralty directions. Every effort will be made to convey this warning to neutral countries and to vessels on the sea, but from the 5th of November onward the Admiralty announce that all ships condemnation by a prize court, but, in case a neutral ship comes in contact with a mine or is encountered by a submarine, it must almost inevitably be sunk with its cargo regardless of whether either be guilty or innocent, and the passengers and crew, whether combatants or non-combatants, left to the precarious fate of saving their own lives in the ship's boats or of being rescued by vessels which may happen along at that time." 9 Amer. Jour. of Intl. Law (1915) pp. 462 et seq. (Editorial comment).

passing a line drawn from the northern point of the Hebrides through the Faroe Islands to Iceland do so at their own peril.

"Ships of all countries wishing to trade to and from Norway, the Baltic, Denmark, and Holland are advised to come, if inward bound, by the English Channel and the Straits of Dover. There they will be given sailing directions which will pass them safely, so far as Great Britain is concerned, up the East Coast of England to Farn Island, whence a safe route will if possible be given to Lindesnaes Lighthouse. From this point they should turn north or south to their destination, keeping as near the coast as possible. The converse applies to vessels outward bound. By strict adherence to these routes the commerce of all countries will be able to reach its destination in safety so far as Great Britain is concerned, but any straying, even for a few miles from the course thus indicated, may be followed by fatal consequences." [9] [9] London Times, Nov. 3, 1914, p. 6, col. 5.

Another reason for the mining of the North Sea by England and its declaration of the whole North Sea as a military area also applies as follows; In the House of Commons Sir G. Parker asked the Prime Minister whether in view of the anxiety of public opinion in the United States he would make a general explanatory statement of the policy of Great Britain as to certain matters of which the mining of the North Sea was the principal one. Mr. Asquith stated that as to laying of mines by the Germans in the North Sea outside of territorial limits upon the trade routes, there was a belief that in many cases they were laid by fishing or merchant vessels disguised as neutrals and ostensibly following their ordinary pursuits in breach of the Hague convention of 1907. Mr. Asquith further said that "His Majesty's government deliberately abstained and abstained entirely from the use of mines during the first two months of the war outside British Territorial waters, but eventually found it necessary to adopt counter measures in order to cope with the German policy of mine laying combined with their submarine atrocities. A mine field was therefore laid across the Southern portion of the North Sea in such a way as to guard the approaches to the English channel and due public warning was given in accordance to the Hague Convention. . . . The menace to peaceful shipping presented by these wholly illegal methods of waging war is so great that His Majesty's Government have been compelled to adopt the only possible means of protection—namely, to declare the whole North Sea to be a military area and to restrict all shipping crossing it to a narrow passage, along which the strictest supervision can be exercised. Access to the coasts of Great Britain and neutral countries has been made as safe as it is in the power of the British Navy to make it, and although this has been done at the price of certain inconveniences and delay to shipping through its inability to follow its accustomed routes, the price cannot in the circumstance of the case be considered a high one. His Majesty's Government are fully aware of the anxiety prevailing in the United States and other neutral countries on these subjects, and they trust that this policy will be fully understood. They are confident that public opinion in neutral countries will appreciate their earnest desire that there should be no interference with neutral trade provided the vital interests of Great Britain, which are at stake in the present conflict, are adequately maintained. Any interference by the British Navy is directed not to increase British trade or to diminish the trade of any neutral foreign country, but solely to prevent goods from reaching the enemy which would increase his power in the war against the British and allied forces." London Times Nov. 18th 1914.

§ 2140. Continuance of blockade.—Although as a general rule, the presumption exists that a blockade by notification continues until notification that it is raised, and the blockading power should

See § 2569a, and appendix F herein.

As to blockades during the present Great War see Art. by James W. Garner, 10 Amer. J. of Intl. L. (1915) pp. 818–857.

As to the legitimacy of closing the North Sea, by Great Britain it is said that "this action introduced a new species of blockade rendered both possible and necessary on account of the great part played by mines and submarines in the present war;" and as to memorandum of Berlin of February 4th 1915, aimed at England by way of retaliation. "If this pronouncement was intended to be a declaration of blockade to take effect on February 18, then it is quite obvious that it could be no more than a 'paper' blockade. Germany did not possess the naval resources necessary to maintain an effective blockade in the seas surrounding Great Britain and Ireland, nor could she at this juncture of the war establish what may be called a quasi-blockade by means of scattering mines in those waters; for mines may be gathered by any passing vessel and freedom of navigation reestablished if her warships be not present to prevent such action. The Memorandum, quoted in part above, contains certain particulars required by international law for the purpose of instituting a blockade. It makes the necessary declaration, and notifies it to the neutral Powers. It states when it will begin, the limits of the coasts to be blockaded, and how long neutral vessels will be allowed in order to come out. No time is fixed by international law; but a reasonable amount of time is necessary. Very frequently a fortnight's delay has been allowed, as is the case under British practice; and this is the delay allowed by Germany in the present case. Even all these and other conditions be fulfilled, yet a blockade cannot be regarded as binding unless it is effective, that is unless it is maintained by a sufficient force which is really able to prevent any approach to a departure from the enemy coast, and expose to danger and probable capture any neutral vessel attempting to get through. If no such adequate force is present, the alleged blockade is no real blockade at all. To proclaim it on the chance of capturing here and there a neutral vessel, so that other neutral merchantmen may cease making voyages to British ports, is illegitimate. Indeed, failing an effective blockade, any forcible interference with a neutral vessel that has no contraband and is not engaged in unneutral service will constitute an act of war against the neutral state concerned.

"This threatened procedure on the part of Germany has been generally characterized as piracy. Though if carried out it will amount to a flagrant breach of international law and a crime against the entire society of states, it will not be piracy in the sense contemplated by the law of nations. In this sense piracy is an act of depredation or violence committed on the high seas by a private vessel without authorization from any state." Phillipson's Interna-give prompt notice of discontinuance,[10] yet other acts will justify the presumption that the blockade is raised. Thus, if a neutral receives information from one of the blockading powers on whom he is justified in relying, such notice, though erroneous, will excuse his proceeding to or attempting to enter the blockaded port.[11] So the blockade must be uniform, constant, and general as to all vessels not privileged by law, not permitting some to pass and excluding others under like circumstances, otherwise it may be justly inferred that the blockade is raised;[12] and the blockade may be discontinued by the blockading force being dispersed or driven away by the enemy, in which case, if resumed, another notice is required.[13] There must be an adequate force present. The animus revertendi of the blockading fleet does not continue the blockade, nor is the entry of a neutral, after being notified, a breach of his neutrality if the blockading force be not before the port.[14] But an accidental or temporary removal of a blockading fleet by winds or storms, the commander intending to return at once, and using due diligence to effect the same, does not suspend the blockade, and if the neutral, with notice or knowledge of the cause of its absence, attempts to enter it is a breach of the blockade.[15] The blockade of a port is not terminated by the fact that the mouth of the bay is in the complete possession and control of the blockading fleet, when the enemy's port is still in the possession of the enemy's forces, as are several other positions in the neighborhood, and the port is eighteen miles from the mouth of the bay, and access to it is obtained either by a small river emptying into the upper bay or by rail from another town on the bay.[16]

§ 2141. Effect of sailing for blockaded port: intention to enter: breach of blockade: what is and is not.—There is declared to be

tional Law and The Great War (1915) p. 384.

As to the status of converted merchantmen and defensively armed merchantmen, see Phillipson's International Law and the Great War (1915) pp. 125 et seq.

As to Legality of Blockades Instituted by Napoleon's Decrees, and The British Orders in Council, 1806–1813, see Art. by Archibald H. Stockder, in Vol. 10 Amer. Jour. Intl. L. (1916) pp. 492–508.

[10] The Neptunus, 1 C. Rob. 170, 5 Eng. Rul. Cas. 183. See The Betsey, 1 Rob. 332; The Shepherdess, 5 Rob. 262.

[11] The Neptunus, 2 Rob. 112; Northcote v. Douglass, 10 Moore P. C. 37; The Courier, 1 Edw. 249. See Oldden v. M'Chesney, 5 Serg. & R. (Pa.) 71.

[12] The Rolla, 6 C. Rob. 364, per Sir Wm. Scott. See Oldden v. M'Chesney, 5 Serg. & R. (Pa.) 71.

[13] The Hoffnung, 6 Rob. 112, 117; The Triheten, 6 Rob. 65.

[14] Williams v. Smith, 2 Caines (N. Y.) 1, 2 Am. Dec. 209.

[15] The Hoffman, 6 Rob. 116. See The Margeretha, 6 Rob. 62; The Neptunus, 1 Rob. 170, 5 Eng. Rul. Cas. 183; The Vrow Johanna, 2 Rob. 109.

[16] The Adula, 176 U. S. 361, 44 L. ed. 505, 20 Sup. Ct. 432.

a difference between a de facto blockade arising from mere maritime investment of the port, and one in which the blockading power has duly notified all neutral states, since in the former case the ignorance of the neutral in sailing to a blockaded port may be proven, whereas in the latter case the act of a neutral ship in sailing for the blockaded port with knowledge of the blockade is a breach thereof; at least, such is the opinion of Sir William Scott.[17] But the rule is generally thus stated: The mere act of sailing for a blockaded port with knowledge that it is such must be coupled with the intent to evade the blockade.[18] If, however, the mere sailing with knowledge of the blockade is an overt act evidencing the beginning of the execution of the intention to evade the blockade, and is so far conclusive evidence of the intent, then it would be a breach from the departure of the vessel,[19] and so construed there is substantially little, if any, difference between the two rules. But if the intent to evade the blockade depends upon other evidence than the mere act of sailing with knowledge of its existence, such a construction makes the last rule entirely different in its effect from that first noted. Thus, it is expressly held in New York that a mere sailing for a port understood to be blockaded is not such a breach of neutrality as affects a policy of insurance.[20] The doctrine of the New York cases is, however, criticised by Mr. Duer as opposed to the authorities.[1] It is also held in the Federal Supreme Court that the sailing of a vessel with a premeditated attempt to violate a blockade is ipso facto a violation of the blockade, and renders

[17] The Vrow Johanna, 2 Rob. 109, and opinion of Sir Wm. Scott, 111, 114, 116, 124, 128, 131; 1 Marshall on Ins. (ed. 1810) *81; 1 Duer on Marine Ins. (ed. 1845) 669, sec. 44.

[18] Fitzsimmons v. Newport Ins. Co. 4 Cranch (8 U. S.) 185, 199, 2 L. ed. 591, per Marshall, C. J.; The Nereide, 9 Cranch (13 U. S.) 388, 440, 3 L. ed. 769, per Story, J.; The Columbia, 1 Rob. 154, 5 Eng. Rul. Cas. 194; The Neptunus, 2 Rob. 110; The Betsey, 1 C. Rob. 334; The Shepherdess, 5 C. Rob. 262; The Vrow Johanna, 2 Rob. 109; The James Cooke, Edw. Adm. 261; The Irene, 5 Rob. 81, per Sir Wm. Scott; 1 Arnould on Marine Ins. (Perkins' ed. 1850) 747; Id. (8th ed. Hart & Simey) sec. 668, p. 827, sec. 760, p. 917, secs. 766 et seq., pp. 926 et seq.; 1 Phillips on Ins. (3d ed.) 459, secs. 831, 833; 1 Duer on Marine Ins. (ed. 1845) 666, 667, secs. 41, 42, 690–98.

[19] Yeaton v. Fry, 5 Cranch (9 U. S.) 335, 3 L. ed. 117; 1 Kent's Commentaries, (5th ed.) 147 et seq.

[20] Vos v. United Ins. Co. 1 Caines Cas. (N. Y.) VII., 2 Johns. Cas. (N. Y.) 469, rev'g 2 Johns. Cas. (N. Y.) 180; Liotard v. Graves, 3 Caines (N. Y.) 226. See also Sperry v. Delaware Ins. Co. 2 Wash. (U. S. C. C.) 243, Fed. Cas. No. 13,236; Medeiros v. Hill, 8 Bing. 231, per Tindal, C. J., noted below.

[1] Duer on Marine Ins. (ed. 1845) 696 et seq. See also 1 Duer on Marine Ins. 664 et seq., and criticism (1 Duer on Marine Ins. 691 et seq.) of note to Oliveria v. Union Ins. Co. 3 Wheat. (16 U. S.) 183, 196, 4 L. ed. 365, appendix, and cases cited.

the vessel subject to capture from the moment she leaves the port of departure.[2] Again, it is held that a vessel might lawfully sail for a port in the West Indies known to be blockaded until she was warned off, according to the British orders of April, 1804, relating to blockades in the West Indies. She was not bound to make inquiry elsewhere than of the blockading force.[3] It is also intimated that a vessel may, with knowledge of the fact of blockade, sail from the United States to a blockaded port in Europe under instructions to ascertain if it has been raised, or under the expectation that it might be raised, intending to proceed to another port if it has not, and also that the intent to evade the blockade must not only exist, but must be coupled with some act in furtherance thereof.[4] But if the intent to violate the blockade has been given up and the course changed, the ground for seizure no longer exists.[5]

If insurance be against all risks, blockaded ports excepted, a vessel sailing for a blockaded port, not knowing that it is blockaded, is covered by the policy. The exception is not of the port, but of the risk of capture for breaking the blockade; and a vessel sailing ignorantly to a blockaded port is not liable to capture under the law of nations. She is entitled to notice and warning from the blockading belligerent not to proceed;[6] but if after such notice she deliberately proceeds, regardless of the warning, and the intent is clear, she is subject to seizure.[7] And if information be obtained of the existence of the blockade at a port at which the vessel touches on the voyage, this is such a notice as that her neutrality is forfeited if she then proceeds to the blockaded port or attempts to enter;[8] although it is held that mere intention to enter a blockaded port, without any actual attempt after being warned off, is no breach of the blockade, and no cause for condemnation either

[2] The Adula, 176 U. S. 361, 44 L. ed. 505, 20 Sup. Ct. 432.

[3] Maryland Ins. Co. v. Woods, 6 Cranch (10 U. S.) 29, 3 L. ed. 143.

[4] Fitzsimmons v. Newport Ins. Co. 4 Cranch (8 U. S.) 185, 2 L. ed. 591, per Marshall, C. J.; Calhoun v. Insurance Co. 1 Binn. (Pa.) 293, per Brackenridge, J.; Sperry v. Delaware Ins. Co. 2 Wash. (U. S. C. C.) 243, Fed. Cas. No. 13,236. See The Shepherdess, 5 Rob. 264; Dalgleish v. Hodgson, 7 Bing. 495, 5 M. & P. 407, 9 L. J. (O. S.) C. P. 138; Medeiros v. Hill, 8 Bing. 231, 1 M. & Sc. 311, 5 Car. & P. 182; Naylor v. Taylor, 9 Barn. & C. 718, M. & W. 205, 31 R. R. 731.

[5] The Trende Lostre, 6 C. Rob. 290 n.; The Imina, 3 C. Rob. 168; The James Cook, 1 Edw. Adm. 261.

[6] Yeatin v. Fry, 5 Cranch (9 U. S.) 335, 3 L. ed. 117. See The Columbia, 1 Rob. 156; Fitzsimmons v. Newport Ins. Co. 4 Cranch (8 U. S.) 185, 2 L. ed. 591, 200; Treaty between United States and Great Britain, 1794, sec. 18, providing for notice in case vessels sailed without port blockaded.

[7] The Apollo, 5 Rob. 256; The Adonis, 5 C. Rob. 228; The Tutela, 6 C. Rob. 177.

[8] Winder v. Wise, Dan. & Ll. Merc. Cas. 23; The Columbia, 1 Rob. 130.

by international law or by the treaty between the United States and Great Britain, and that where an American vessel and cargo were condemned by a British court of admiralty for persisting in an intention to enter a blockaded port, the condemnation was illegal, and the insurers were liable.[9] So persisting in an intention to enter is not an attempt to enter under a treaty which provides that "the ship may be turned away, but she shall not be detained if cargo is not contraband nor be confiscated, unless after notice she shall again attempt to enter." [10] Lingering about the place as if waiting for an opportunity to enter, or, in some instances, not making immediately for another port, or perhaps a clearly evidenced purpose to carry out a declaration of a resolution to break the blockade after warning, or approaching so closely as to be enabled to slip in if opportunity affords might be evidence of an attempt to enter the blockaded port.[11] If a master have actual notice of a blockade, he is not at liberty even to approach the blockaded port for the purpose of making inquiries of the blockading vessels since such liberty would not fail to lead to an attempt to violate the blockade under pretext of approaching the port for the purpose of making such inquiries.[12] Nor may the vessel be permitted to proceed to the very port or mouth of the harbor for the purpose of ascertaining if the blockade be raised. The vessel has no right to inquire of the blockading squadron, but is bound to make inquiry at a neighboring port.[13] A direction to enter a blockaded harbor, given by [9] Williamson v. Tunno, 1 Brev. (S. C.) 151, 2 Am. Dec. 654. See also Sperry v. Delaware Ins. Co. 2 Wash. (U. S. C. C.) 243, Fed. Cas. No. 13,236.

[10] Fitzsimmons v. Newport Ins. Co. 4 Cranch (8 U. S.) 185, 2 L. ed. 591 (under treaty between the United States and Great Britain).

[11] Fitzsimmons v. Newport Ins. Co. 4 Cranch (8 U. S.) 185, 2 L. ed. 591, 199, per Marshall, C. J. See The Apollo, 5 Rob. 256, per Sir Wm. Scott; The Charlotte Christina, 6 Rob. 101; The Elizabeth, 1 Edw. Adm. 198; The Neutralitet, 6 Rob. 30; The Arthur, 1 Edw. Adm. 202; The Columbia, 1 C. Rob. 154, 5 Eng. Rul. Cas. 194.

[12] The Adula, 176 U. S. 361, 44 L. ed. 505, 20 Sup. Ct. 432. See the Olinde Rodrigues, 174 U. S. 510, 43 L. ed. 1065, 19 Sup. Ct. 851; The Newfoundland, 176 U. S. 97, 114, 20 Sup. Ct. 274, 44 L. ed. 386.

[13] The Spes, 5 Rob. 76, per Sir Wm. Scott; The Juno, 2 C. Rob. 116; Maryland Ins. Co. v. Woods, 6 Cranch (10 U. S.) 45, 48, 3 L. ed. 143. But see Sperry v. Delaware Ins. Co. 2 Wash. (U. S. C. C.) 243, Fed. Cas. No. 13,236, per Washington, J. It is declared that no case "has laid it down that the mere act of sailing to a port which is blockaded at the time the voyage is commenced is any offense against the law of nations, where there is no premeditated intention of breaking the blockade if it shall be found to continue in force when the ship arrives off the port," as it might be of the utmost importance to a merchant to introduce his goods into that port at the very first moment the blockade is raised: Medeiros v. Hill, 8

the commanding officer of one of the blockading vessels, which has hailed an approaching ship, cannot be construed as a permission to violate the blockade as such permission would not be within the scope of his authority.[14] And entry may in certain cases of physical necessity, such, perhaps, as stress of weather, be justified,[15] or a license or express or implied permission may be given.[16] Where the insurers "take no risk of a blockaded port, but if turned away the insured to be at liberty to proceed to a port not blockaded," they will not be liable for any loss happening in consequence of the blockade, whether such blockade is strictly legal or not,[17] and a neutral vessel permitted by the blockading force to enter may have egress with her original cargo.[18] So a vessel within a port blockaded after the commencement of her voyage, and prevented from proceeding on it, sustains a loss by a peril within that clause of the policy insuring against "arrests and restraints," and if the vessel so prevented be a neutral cargo laden before the institution of the blockade, the restraint is unlawful.[19] And the egress may perhaps be justifiable where the cargo has been actually delivered to the master before the blockade was established. But, in other cases, attempting egress with a cargo wholly or partly laden after the blockade is established, and if its existence ought to have been known, violates the blockade.[20] So egress of a neutral ship in ballast exempts from condemnation, even though she is purchased from an enemy, provided the sale is bona fide and delivery made before the blockade was established, but otherwise where such purchase was made after the blockade was commenced.[1] And a neutral ship may leave with a cargo, the proceeds of funds of neutral owners, where the necessity of saving the goods from confiscation by reason of impending war is imminent and pressing.[2] It is Bing. 231, per Tindal, C. J., relying on the Shepherdess, 5 Rob. 264; Naylor v. Taylor, 9 Barn. & C. 718, per Lord Tenterden, and denying that The Neptunus, 2 Rob. 110, decides otherwise.

[14] The Adula, 176 U. S. 361, 44 L. ed. 505, 20 Sup. Ct. 432.

[15] The Charlotta, 1 Edw. Adm. 252; The Fortuna, 5 Rob. 27. But see The Shepherdess, 5 Rob. 262; The Hurtige Dane, 2 Rob. 124; The Arthur, 1 Edw. Adm. 202.

[16] The Juffrow Maria Schroeder, 3 Rob. 147; The Juno, 2 Rob. 116.

[17] Radcliff v. United Ins. Co. 7 Johns. (N. Y.) 38.

[18] The Maria Schroeder, 4 Rob. 89n.

[19] Olivera v. Union Ins. Co. 3 Wheat. (16 U. S.) 183, 4 L. ed. 365. See also Oldden v. M'Chesney, 5 Serg. & R. (Pa.) 71; The Juno, 2 Rob. 118; The Vrow Judith, 1 C. Rob. 150.

[20] The Rolla, 6 Rob. 371; The Neptunus, 1 Rob. 170, 5 Eng. Rul. Cas. 183; The Calypso, 2 Rob. 298; The Vrow Judith, 1 Rob. 150.

[1] The Potsdam, 4 Rob. 89; The Frederick Molke, 1 C. Rob. 88; The General Hamilton, 6 Rob. 61.

[2] The Drie Vrienden, 1 Dod. 270; The Wassen Hundt, 1 Dod. 271n.

declared in a Federal Supreme Court case where certain claims were made in reliance upon a foreign treatise on international law, that "We cannot, however, accept this opinion as overruling in any particular the prior decisions of this court . . . to the effect that a departure for a blockaded port with intent to violate the blockade renders the vessel liable to seizure. When Congress has spoken upon this subject it will be time enough for this court to act. We cannot change our rulings to conform to the opinions of foreign writers as to what they suppose to be the existing law upon this subject."[3] And where under an insurance effected during the Civil War the vessel proceeded on her voyage and was stopped by the enemy's squadron blockading Chesapeake Bay, and sent back to port, it was held not to be a loss of the voyage within the policy;[4] for it is held that a blockade is not an unlawful restraint.[5]

§ 2142. Simulated or false papers: concealment, suppression, or spoliation of papers.—If unlawful goods or their destination, or the unlawful employment of the ship, is sought to be covered by false or simulated papers, or belligerent goods are attempted to be disguised and carried as neutral under such papers, the act will generally amount to a breach of the warranty of neutrality, and will involve those who are parties or privies to the fraud, as well as principals to whom may be imputed the acts of their agents. If done without permission of the underwriters given in the policy, and the property is condemned on that account, the insurers are discharged, and this is so held even though it is the only means by which that trade can be carried on, and the risk is in fact diminished thereby, and probably so where the risk is not excluded by warranty or representation;[6] although so far as the under-

[3] The Adula, 176 U. S. 361, 371, 44 L. ed. 505, 20 Sup. Ct. 432, per Mr. Justice Brown.

[4] Patterson v. Marine Ins. Co. (Patterson v. Baltimore Ins. Co.) 5 Har. & J. (Md.) 417. In this case Wirt, attorney general of the United States, contended that as the vessel was stopped by the enemy's blockading squadron and sent back in good order, there was no right to abandon under a clause in the policy wherein the assurers assumed responsibility for "unlawful arrests or detention." It was held in this case that capture was made with a view to prize, but arrest with a view to restoration. See also Hodkinson v. Robinson, 3 Bos. & P. 388.

[5] Brewer v. Union Ins. Co. 12 Mass. 170, 7 Am. Dec. 53; McCall v. Marine Ins. Co. 8 Cranch (12 U. S.) 59, 3 L. ed. 487.

[6] The Fortuna, 3 Wheat. (16 U. S.) 236, 245, 4 L. ed. 379; The Betsey, 2 Gall. (U. S. C. C.) 377, 384, Fed. Cas. No. 1,364; The Ann Green, 1 Gall. (U. S. C. C.) 274, Fed. Cas. No. 414; The Alexander, 1 Gall. (U. S. C. C.) 532, 536; The St. Nicholas, 1 Wheat. (14 U. S.) 417, 4 L. ed. 125; Livingston v. Maryland Ins. Co. 7 Cranch (11 U. S.) 506, 533, 536, 3 L. ed. 430; Blagge v. New York Ins. Co. 1 Caines (N. Y.) 549, 565; Schwartz v. Insurance Co. of North

writer's liability is concerned, it is doubtful whether his permission would not be implied from a well-known and general usage to carry false papers, or so where the nature of the voyage is such that the carrying of such papers is indispensable, and it has been so expressly declared by high authority.[7] If the general agent of ship and cargo covers enemy's property on board the warrant of neutrality is violated.[8] And where goods were warranted American in a policy, it was held that the insured could not recover after an attempt by their captain or general agent to cover foreign goods, though such foreign goods were covered without the consent of the insured and could easily be distinguished from the American.[9] It is a breach of warranty of neutrality that a vessel and cargo, warranted American property, shall be navigated and claimed as Spanish property, and that all evidence to prove the neutrality of the vessel and cargo is concealed from the captors. In case of such warranty it is not only necessary that the cargo should be in truth neutral, but also that no act of commission or of omission should be performed to jeopardize the claim to a neutral character, whether by the owner or by his agents.[10]

America, 6 Binn. (Pa.) 378; Phœnix Ins. Co. v. Pratt, 2 Binn. (Pa.) 308; Pratt v. Phœnix Ins. Co. 1 Browne (Pa.) 152; Horneyer v. Lushington, 15 East, 46, 3 Camp. 85, 13 Eng. Rul. Cas. 637; The Nancy, 3 Rob. 122; The Graaff Bernstorf, 3 Rob. 109; The Eeuron, 2 Rob. 9; The Rosalie, 2 Rob. 343; The Juffrou Anna, 1 Rob. 124; The Eliza, 6 Rob. 192; The Carolina, 3 Rob. 75; The Calypso, 2 Rob. 154; The Phœnix, 3 Rob. 186; Steele v. Lacy, 3 Taunt. 284.

In general, concealment of papers amounts to a breach of warranty. Livingston v. Maryland Ins. Co. 7 Cranch (11 U. S.) 506, 3 L. ed. 421.

[7] Livingston v. Maryland Ins. Co. 7 Cranch (11 U. S.) 506, 3 L. ed. 421, per Marshall, C. J.; Planche v. Fletcher, Doug. 283, per Lord Mansfield. See also Maryland Ins. Co. v. Bathurst, 5 Gill & J. (Md.) 159; Galbraith v. Gracie, 1 Wash. (U. S. C. C.) 219, Fed. Cas. No. 2,296; Buck v. Chesapeake Ins. Co. 1 Pet. (26 U. S.) 151, 7 L. ed. 90; 1 Phillips on Ins. (3d ed.) 444, secs. 809–811. It is said by Emerigon that: "If the simulation is concealed from the insurers, they will not be responsible for the confiscation of the effects insured. . . . It results . . . that the insurers answer for the capture if the simulation or the 'for account' has been declared to them in the policy. . . . There is no doubt that the insurers will then be responsible for the loss if the effects insured are captured and confiscated by the enemy." Emerigon on Ins. (Meredith's ed. 1850) c. xii. secs. 20, 367; 1 Arnould on Marine Ins. (Perkins' ed. 1850) 631, sec. 233; Id. (Maclachlan's ed. 1887) 633, 634, 685; Id. (8th ed. Hart & Simey) sec. 666, p. 825, sec. 732, p. 893; 1 Duer on Marine Ins. (ed. 1845) 738–745, 637–640.

[8] Schwartz v. Insurance Co. of North America, 6 Binn. (Pa.) 378; Pratt v. Phœnix Ins. Co. 1 Browne (Pa.) 152.

[9] Phœnix Ins. Co. v. Pratt, 2 Binn. (Pa.) 308.

[10] Galbraith v. Gracie, 1 Wash. (U. S. C. C.) 219, Fed. Cas. No. 2,296.

The warranty in a policy of insurance that the property belongs to the insured is falsified by his having concealed papers on the vessel at the time of capture, having practiced artifice to prevent their detection, and by the use of fictitious names for the purpose.[11] But the concealment or spoliation of papers is not proof of enemy's property sufficient of itself to warrant a condemnation, although it may justify a detention and, unexplained, may warrant confiscation, dependent upon all the circumstances, although if the destruction of papers is entire, the presumption against innocent goods is stronger than otherwise.[12] As to spoliation of documents it is declared that the destruction, by deliberate act of a person, of a document which, according to what its contents may have been, would have told strongly either for or against him, raises the strongest possible presumption that if it had been produced it would have told against him; and even if the document is destroyed by said persons own act, but under circumstances in which the intention to destroy evidence may fairly be considered rebutted, still he has to suffer. He is in the position in which he is without the corroboration which might have been in his case. This is applied to the destruction of the signal log and many other documents by the captain of a captured German ship fitted out as a hospital ship, but largely beyond her requirements as such with signalling apparatus, wireless installations, etc., and which was condemned as prize.[13]

§ 2142a. Same subject: "liberty to run blockade:" seizure.—In a Federal case the policy in question, issued by an English company, described the risk as excluded by the warranted free from capture, seizure, and detention clause, and covered the voyage from the port of San Francisco to Vladivostok, while there, and thence back to a safe neutral port. Vladivostok was then the principal naval station and base of supplies of Russia in its war with Japan, and was closely invested by the Japanese. A heavy premium, undoubtedly by reason of said war, was fixed and paid, with a stipulation for certain returns under specified conditions. Assured was expressly given "liberty to run blockade." For the purpose of evading capture a false clearance was taken of the ship for a port

[11] Carrere v. Union Ins. Co. 3 Har. & J. (Md.) 324, 5 Am. Dec. 437. See also Livingston v. Maryland Ins. Co. 7 Cranch (11 U. S.) 506, 536, 3 L. ed. 421, per Marshall, C. J.

[12] Livingston v. Maryland Ins. Co. 7 Cranch (11 U. S.) 506, 544, 545, 3 L. ed. 421; The Romeo, 6 Rob. 351; The Ann Green, 1 Gall. (C. C.) 274, 281, Fed. Cas. No. 414, per Story, J.; The Pizarro, 2 Wheat. (15 U. S.) 227, 241, 4 L. ed. 226; The Rising Sun, 2 Rob. 108; The Polly, 2 Rob. 362; The Hunter, 1 Dod. 480.

[13] The Ophelia, 85 L. J. R. N. S. (1916) 169 (Priv. Coun.) L. R. 2 App. Cas. [1916] 206, aff'g [1915] p. 129, 84 L. J. P. 131.

in Japan. The ship was seized by the Japanese, abandoned to insurers, condemned on the ground of using false papers, and sold. It was held that both by the law of England and of the United States insurers were liable under the policy. A question was also raised upon the point whether the contract was executed in London or San Francisco, but the court in view of the above conclusion held this point unimportant. It was further declared by the court that it assumed that the trial court was in error in refusing to determine and declare to the jury what the law of England was upon the subject and in leaving to it the determination of that matter as a question of fact, but that it was harmless error inasmuch as the jury decided correctly.[14]

§ 2143. Carrying contraband goods: contraband of war: breach of neutrality.—Carrying goods contraband of war prohibited by treaty with the government to which the neutral shipowner belongs is a breach of neutrality extending to freight, and probably to the ship, where the terms of the treaty are clear and it is clearly violated.[15] And the carrying of contraband generally constitutes a breach of neutrality, attended with loss of freight, except in certain cases where the shipowner also owns the cargo, or all the owners of ship and cargo are concerned in the act under special circumstances which may entail the greater loss of both ship and cargo.[16] A breach of express warranty against carrying contraband of war will avoid the policy,[17] but in a policy on commissions upon lawful goods, the warranty against contraband goods is not broken, though the assured is captain and the contraband goods are shipped without the knowledge of the insurer.[18] In a Maryland case, in an action upon an open policy of insurance on a cargo, it appeared that the vessel and cargo had been condemned on account of contraband trade, but that neither the insured nor insurer knew of the contraband articles being on board. There was no representa-

[14] Maritime Ins. Co. Ltd. v. M. S. Dollar Steamship Co. 177 Fed. 127, 100 C. C. A. 547, 39 Ins. L. J. 1074, aff'g 149 Fed. 616. See Northwestern Steamship Co. v. Maritime Ins. Co. 161 Fed. 166.

That underwriter presumed to know causes which occasion political perils, see § 1808 herein.

As to concealment: ship's papers: false clearance, etc., see §§ 1832, 2142 herein.

[15] The Neutralitet, 3 Rob. 295.

[16] The Richmond, 5 Rob. 290; The Commerceen, 1 Wheat. (14 U. S.) 382, 388, 4 L. ed. 116, per Story, J., 2 Gall. (U. S. C. C.) 264; The Mercurius, 1 Rob. 288; The Jonge Tobias, 1 Rob. 330; The Franklin, 3 Rob. 217; The Ringende Jacob, 1 Rob. 89; The Jemima, 3 Rob. 168. See The Charlotte, 5 Rob. 277; The Jonge Margaretha, 1 Rob. 189.

[17] Seymour v. London & Provincial Marine Ins. Co. 41 L. J. Com. P. 193, 27 L. T. 417.

On effect of warranty against contraband or illicit trade in marine insurance policy, see note in 5 B. R. C. 64.

[18] De Peyster v. Gardner, 1 Caines (N. Y.) 492.

tion or warranty that either vessel or cargo were neutral. It appeared also that the interest of the assured greatly exceeded the amount insured, and it was held that the plaintiff was entitled to recover.[19]

§ 2144. Breach of neutrality from resistance to lawful right of search.—The resistance to the right of search in time of war, lawfully exercised for a lawful purpose, constitutes a breach of neutrality. It must be exercised by a lawfully commissioned cruiser of the belligerent, or by his ships of war, and extends only to private merchant ships, and not to public ships of war. The object of search is limited to enemy's property contraband of war, or men in the military or naval service of the enemy. The law of nations also impresses upon belligerents the duty to show their colors, or make known their belligerent character and the cause of detention, otherwise the neutral is not only justified in resisting, but is obligated so to do, and the rescue of a neutral ship from a belligerent is such a breach of neutrality that the insurers will be exonerated in case of loss. Nor will resistance to the right of search be justified by instructions or orders of the government of the neutral. The above rule is subject to treaty stipulations with the neutral power.[20] Although the right of search should be lawfully exercised, with due regard to the rights of the master and crew and safety of the ship, yet if the authority and cause of detention be made known, it seems to be the duty of the neutral master to submit, upon remonstrance, to even gross misconduct not menacing life, relying upon his right to redress from the belligerent for damages. But if no authority be made known, the right and duty to resist exists, for in such case neither the owners nor the government to which the neutral belonged could demand indemnity.[1] Where a ship was

[19] Baltimore Ins. Co. v. Taylor, 3 Har. & J. (Md.) 198.

[20] The Mariana Flora, 11 Wheat. (24 U. S.) 1, 42, 6 L. ed. 405; The Pizarro, 2 Wheat. (15 U. S.) 227, 4 L. ed. 226; The Anna Maria, 2 Wheat. (15 U. S.) 327, 332, 4 L. ed. 252, per Marshall, C. J.; The Nereide, 9 Cranch (13 U. S.) 388, 427, 3 L. ed. 769; M'Lellan v. Maine Fire & Marine Ins. Co. 12 Mass. 246; Robinson v. Jones, 8 Mass. 536, 5 Am. Dec. 114; Wilcocks v. Union Ins. Co. 2 Binn. (Pa.) 574, 4 Am. Dec. 480; Snowden v. Phœnix Ins. Co. 3 Binn. (Pa.) 457; The Elsabe, 4 Rob. 408; The Maria, 1 Rob. 340, per Lord Stowell; The Despatch, 3 Rob. 279. June 25, 1792, an act was passed by Congress authorizing resistance to and the taking as prize of French vessels attempting search and seizure of merchant vessels of the United States and the rescue of vessels seized by the French with benefit of salvage; 2 Lossing's Harper's Cyclopaedia of United States History (ed. 1893) 1201, tit. "Resistance to Search."

[1] See the Anna Maria, 2 Wheat. (15 U. S.) 327, 328, 4 L. ed. 252; M'Lellan v. Maine Fire & Marine Ins. Co. 12 Mass. 246; 1 Duer on Marine Ins. (ed. 1845) 727, sec. 12; 1 Kent's Commentaries (ed. 1844) 156, note a.

warranted Danish property, and she was seized and sent into port for examination, her rescue by the master and crew was held a breach of the warranty; and the same would be true of an attempt to rescue.[2] If the right of search is attempted in neutral waters, it may be resisted, for it cannot be lawfully exercised there.[3] The United States denies the right of search for seamen or subjects of the belligerent, although it was once insisted on by Great Britain.[4]

[2] Garrels v. Kensington, 8 Term Rep. 230; Wilcocks v. Union Ins. Co. 2 Binn. (Pa.) 574, 4 Am. Dec. 480: The Despatch, 3 C. Rob. 278.

[3] The Topaz, 2 Act. App. Cas. 20. As to the capture in territorial waters of a neutral, see The Bangor, 85 L. J. P. 218 [1916] p. 181, 2 P. Cas. 206, 114 L. T. 1212, 32 T. L. R. 590.

[4] October 17, 1807, commanders of British ships of war were authorized by proclamation to seize all British mariners on board foreign merchant vessels: 2 Lossing's Harpers' Cyclopaedia of United States History (ed. 1893) 1186, tit. "Recall of British Seamen," "Impressment," "impress, The Treaty of 1806."

CHAPTER LXII.

SEAWORTHINESS.

§ 2151. Warranty of seaworthiness implied: voyage policy: general rule.
§ 2152. Whether warranty of seaworthiness implied in time policies: the English rule.
§ 2153. Whether warranty of seaworthiness in time policies in this country.
§ 2154. Same subject: conclusion.
§ 2155. Implied warranty of seaworthiness in time policies: code provisions: stipulation.
§ 2155a. Warranty of seaworthiness: policy on cargo or freight.
§ 2156. Innocence of assured: unknown defects.
§ 2157. Effect of exception of losses occasioned by unseaworthiness: knowledge.
§ 2158. Effect of previous survey: certificate of seaworthiness: subsequent survey: condemnation.
§ 2159. Different degrees of seaworthiness.
§ 2160. What constitutes seaworthiness.
§ 2161. What constitutes seaworthiness and unseaworthiness: cases.
§ 2161a. Seaworthiness: refrigerating plant: insurance on insulation for.
§ 2161b. Loss of vessel while moored: duty of assured: negligence.
§ 2162. Effect of noncompliance with statute.
§ 2162a. Injury in collision as evidence of unseaworthiness: statute.
§ 2163. Effect of usage upon seaworthiness of foreign vessel in foreign port.
§ 2163a. Overloading: effect of practice or custom to understate measurements.
§ 2164. Manning vessel.
§ 2165. Whether inferior officers must be competent to fill master's position.
§ 2166. Whether vessel must when she sails have a full complement of men engaged for whole voyage.
§ 2167. Negligence or misconduct of master or crew: continuing warranty.
§ 2168. Employment of pilot.
§ 2169. Warranty may be superseded by stipulation: waiver and estoppel: latent defects.
§ 2169a. Latent defects: Inchmaree clause.

§ 2169b. When warranty not superseded by stipulation.
§ 2169c. Same subject: effect of Harter act.
§ 2170. Seaworthiness: estoppel against insurer: certificate of board of underwriters.
§ 2170a. Assurer's knowledge of condition of vessel and nature of risk.
§ 2171. Successive voyages or stages of the voyage.
§ 2172. To what time the warranty of seaworthiness refers.
§ 2173. Continuing warranty as to seaworthiness: the English rule.
§ 2174. Continuing warranty as to seaworthiness: the rule in this country.
§ 2175. Continuing warranty as to seaworthiness: time policies.
§ 2176. Continuing warranty as to seaworthiness: repairs.
§ 2177. Whether cases as to necessity for repairs can be reconciled with other doctrines and cases apparently in conflict therewith.
§ 2177a. Moored in safety: breach of warranty: repairs.
§ 2178. Assurer's approval of ship at port of departure: subsequent repairs.
§ 2179. Subsequent noncompliance as to seaworthiness no retrospective effect.
§ 2180. Vessel seaworthy for port.
§ 2181. Whether original unseaworthiness may be cured before loss.
§ 2182. Policy at and from vessel sailing unseaworthy: may defect be remedied before loss?
§ 2183. Vessel becoming unseaworthy after commencement of risk and defect cured before loss.

§ 2151. Warranty of seaworthiness implied: voyage policy: general rule.—It is well settled that there is an implied warranty in every contract of marine insurance under a voyage policy on ship, cargo, or freight, that the vessel is seaworthy and competent to perform her voyage at the time she sails. She must be tight, staunch, and strong, properly manned and equipped, and otherwise fit and in a navigable state for the service and voyage contemplated. If she is not seaworthy for the service and voyage intended, and not fit to encounter ordinary perils, no matter what the cause, or however innocent the assured may be, the underwriter on the ship or on the goods conveyed therein, or on the freight, is not liable.[1]

[1] United States.—M'Lanahan v. Universal Ins. Co. 1 Pet. (26 U. S.) 183, 7 L. ed. 98; Stetson v. Insurance Co. of North America (U. S. D. C.) 215 Fed. 186, 44 Ins. L. J. 554; Long Dock Mills & Elevator Co. v. Mannheim Ins. Co. 116 Fed. 886, aff'd 123 Fed. 861, 59 C. C. A. 668; Pacific Coast Steamship Co. v. Bancroft-Whitney Co. 94 Fed. 180, 36 C. C. A. 135, rev'd on other points in Queen of the Pacific, 180 U. S. 49, 45 L. ed. 419, 21 Sup. Ct. 278; Seamen v. Enterprise Fire & Marine Ins. Co. 21 Fed. 778, note 58 Am. Dec. 671–74; Ward v. China Mutual Ins.

Nor is this warranty confined in a sailing vessel to the sufficiency of the hull, but it extends also to the sails and rigging.[1a] "In a voyage policy there is an implied warranty that at the commence-

Co. 4 Fed. 43; Prescott v. Union Ins. Co. 2 Wash. (U. S. C. C.) 152, 480, Fed. Cas. No. 17,284.

Connecticut.—Hoxie v. Home Ins. Co. 32 Conn. 2, 85 Am. Dec. 240.

Illinois.—Merchants' Ins. Co. v. Morrisson, 62 Ill. 242, 14 Am. Rep. 93.

Louisiana.—Donnally v. Merchants' Mutual Ins. Co. 28 La. Ann. 939, 26 Am. Rep. 129 (on freight); Dupeyre v. Western Marine & Fire Ins. Co. 2 Rob. (La.) 457, 38 Am. Dec. 218; Southern v. Memphis Ins. Co. 3 La. Ann. 474, 48 Am. Dec. 462.

Maryland.—Field v. Insurance Co. of North America, 3 Md. 244.

Massachusetts.—Deshon v. Merchants Ins. Co. 11 Met. (52 Mass.) 199, per Hubbard, J.; Starbuck v. New England Ins. Co. 19 Pick. (36 Mass.) 198; Paddock v. Franklin Ins. Co. 11 Pick. (28 Mass.) 227; Merchants' Ins. Co. v. Clapp, 11 Pick. (28 Mass.) 56; Hoxie v. Pacific Mutual Ins. Co. 7 Allen (89 Mass.) 211; Taylor v. Lowell, 3 Mass. 331, 3 Am. Dec. 141.

Mississippi.—Natchez Ins. Co. v. Stanton, 2 Smedes & M. (10 Miss.) 340, 41 Am. Dec. 592.

New York.—Thebaud v. Great Western Ins. Co. 155 N. Y. 516, 519, 50 N. E. 284, 27 Ins. L. J. 756, O'Brien, J.; Van Wickle v. Mechanics' & Traders' Ins. Co. 97 N. Y. 350; Rogers v. Sun Mutual Ins. Co. 46 N. Y. Sup. Ct. 65; American Ins. Co. v. Ogden, 15 Wend. (N. Y.) 532; Walden v. Firemen's Ins. Co. 12 Johns. (N. Y.) 128; Talcot v. Commercial Ins. Co. 2 Johns. (N. Y.) 124, 3 Am. Dec. 406; Talcot v. Marine Ins. Co. 2 Johns. (N. Y.) 130; Silva v. Low, 1 Johns. Cas. (N. Y.) 184; Barnewall v. Church, 1 Caines (N. Y.) 217, 2 Am. Dec. 180.

South Carolina.—Hudson v. Williamson, 3 Brev. (S. C.) 342, 1 Tread. (S. C.) 360; Ingraham v. South Carolina Ins. Co. 2 Tread. Const. (S. C.) 707.

England.—Dudgeon v. Pembroke, 46 L. J. Ex. 409, 2 App. Cas. 284, 36 L. T. 382, 25 W. R. 499, 3 Asp. M. C. 393, 14 Eng. Rul. Cas. 105, 1 Q. B. D. Ex. 96; Forshaw v. Chabert, 3 Brod. & B. 158, 6 Moore, 369, 23 R. R. 596; Koebel v. Saunders, 17 Com. B. N. S. 71, 33 L. J. Com. P. 310, 10 L. T. 695; Quebec Marine Ins. Co. v. Commercial Bank of Canada, L. R. 3 P. C. 234, 39 L. J. P. C. 53, 22 L. T. 559, 18 W. R. 769; Wedderburn v. Bell, 1 Camp. 1, 10 R. R. 615, per Lord Ellenborough; Wilkie v. Geddis, 3 Dow. 57, 60, 15 R. R. 17, per Lord Redesdale; Dixon v. Sadler, 5 Mees. & W. 415, 9 L. J. Ex. 48, 14 Eng. Rul. Cas. 58, 8 Mees. & W. 895, 14 Eng. Rul. Cas. 63, per Parke, B.; Gibson v. Small, 4 H. L. Cas. 353, 17 Jur. 1131, per Erle, J.; Christie v. Secretan, 8 Term Rep. 192, per Lawrence J.; Oliver v. Cowley, reported in 1 Marshall on Ins. (ed. 1810) *160; Shoolbred v. Nutt, reported in 1 Marshall on Ins. (ed. 1810) *475; Lill v. Beach, reported in 1 Marshall on Ins. (ed. 1810) *160.

[1a] Stetson v. Insurance Co. of North America (U. S. D. C.) 215 Fed. 186, 44 Ins. L. J. 554.

"In every marine insurance upon ship or freight or freightage, or upon anything which is the subject of marine insurance, a warranty is implied that the ship is seaworthy:" Deering's Annot. Civ. Code Cal. sec. 2681. See Emerigon on Ins. (Meredith's ed. 1850) c. xii. sec. 38, pp. 444–63; c. vi. sec. 4, p. 138.

Presumption as to seaworthiness and unseaworthiness; burden of proof, see §§ 3786 et seq. herein.

ment of the voyage the ship shall be seaworthy for the purpose of the particular adventure insured." [2]

So it is a good defense on a general average bond that the loss was caused by the unseaworthiness of the vessel.[3] The warranty does not mean, however, that the cargo itself is seaworthy, but that the ship in which it is conveyed is seaworthy, and the warranty applies although the shipper of the goods may be innocent and has no interest in the ship.[4] And it is decided that the implied warranty of seaworthiness on the part of the shipowner exists and is a condition precedent to performance by the shipper in every charter-party or contract of affreightment, and if a vessel chartered to carry a cargo is not seaworthy at the date of the charter and the delivery of the cargo, there is such a nonperformance of the condition precedent by the shipowner that the shipper is released, and may recover possession of his property and such damages as he may have sustained by such breach.[5]

§ 2152. Whether warranty of seaworthiness implied in time policies: the English rule.—Although there was formerly some doubt in England, it seems to be the finally settled doctrine that the law does not, in the absence of special stipulations in the contract, imply any warranty in time policies that the vessel shall be seaworthy at any particular time.[6] Notwithstanding this rule, it is

[2] Marine insurance act 1906 (6 Edw. VII. c. 41) sec. 39 (1); Butterworth's Twentieth Century Stat. (1900–1909) p. 408. See Appendix C herein.

[3] Cheraw & Salisbury Railroad Co. v. Broadnax, 109 Pa. St. 432, 58 Am. Rep. 733, 1 Atl. 228.

[4] Oliver v. Cowley, reported in 1 Marshall on Ins. (ed. 1810) *160; 1 Park on Ins. 470; Koebel v. Saunders, 17 Com. B. N. S. 71, 33 L. J. Com. P. 310, 10 Jur. (N. S.) 920, 10 L. T. 695, 12 W. R. 1106; Acatos v. Burns, L. R. 3 Ex. D. 282, 47 L. J. Ex. 566, 26 W. R. 624, 24 Eng. Rul. Cas. 306.

[5] The Director, 34 Fed. 57 (annotated case), 36 Fed. 335. See McAdams v. Severick, 35 Fed. 305 (annotated case).

[6] Dudgeon v. Pembroke, L. R. 2 App. Cas. 284, 1 Q. B. D. L. R. 96, 9 Q. B. 581, 36 L. T. 382, 31 L. T. 31, 46 L. J. Q. B. 409, 43 L. J. Q. B. 220, 25 W. R. 499, 22 W. R. 914, 3 Asp. M. C. 393, 14 Eng. Rul. Cas. 105, per Lord Penzance, quoting Lord Campbell; Gibson v. Small, 4 H. L. Cas. 353, 17 Jur. 1131, 94 R. R. 138, 14 Eng. Rul. Cas. 86, aff'g Small v. Gibson, 16 Q. B. 141, rev'g 16 Q. B. 128, 19 L. J. Q. B. 147, 14 Jur. 368. In this case, the question was exhaustively considered for the first time (1849); Thompson v. Hopper, 6 El. & B. 172, 25 L. J. Q. B. 240, per Lord Campbell, El. B. & E. 1038, 27 L. J. Q. B. 441, 26 L. J. Q. B. 22, 5 W. R. 83, 6 W. R. 857; Fawcus v. Sarsfield, 6 El. & B. 192, 25 L. J. Q. B. 249, 2 Jur. N. S. 665; Jenkins v. Heycock, 8 Moore, P. C. 351, 1 C. L. R. 406; Michael v. Tredwin, 17 Com. B. 551, 25 L. J. Com. P. 83; West India & Panama Telegraph Co. v. Home & Colonial Marine Ins. Co. 6 Q. B. D. 51, 62. In Sadler v. Dixon, 8 Mees. & W. 895, 9 L. J. Ex. 48, 11 L. J. Ex. 435, 52 R. R. 774, 14 Eng. Rul. Cas. 63, affirming 5 Mees. & W. 405, 14 Eng.

intimated in an English case that a vessel under a time policy which has been for a long time on a distant voyage must, although her crew has been reduced by death or desertion, have a sufficient crew for some of the objects of the voyage and for navigating the ship home.[7] It is, however, there provided by the marine insurance act of 1906, that "In a time policy there is no implied warranty that the ship shall be seaworthy at any stage of the adventure, but where, with the privity of the assured, the ship is sent to sea in an unseaworthy state, the insurer is not liable for any loss attributable to unseaworthiness." [8]

§ 2153. Whether warranty of seaworthiness in time policies in this country.—Although such is the settled law of England, resting upon the statute, the rule stare decisis and public policy,[9] nevertheless the law in this country cannot be said to be settled upon this point at the present time. It is decided in an Illinois case that under a time policy there is no implied warranty of seaworthiness when the vessel starts on her first voyage.[10] Under a Massachusetts decision, where the vessel is at sea it is held that there is no implied warranty that the ship is seaworthy at the commencement of the risk.[11] But in another case in the same state it was held that if the vessel is at sea, there is an implied warranty that she has sailed in a seaworthy condition, and is then so far safe and existing as a vessel as to be properly a subject for insurance at the time the risk attaches, and is capable of being made navigable by suitable repairs in port on arrival, and that the owners will make her seaworthy if possible. But if she has ceased to exist as a vessel at the time the policy would

Rul. Cas. 58, Tindal, C. J., declared in substance that there was no distinction between time and voyage policies with regard to providing a competent master and crew and nonresponsibility for their subsequent improper conduct. This case must, however, be considered overruled. See also to same effect, Hollingsworth v. Brodrick, 7 Ad. & E. 40, 2 N. & P. 608, 8 L. J. Q. B. 80, 1 Jur. 430. "It is settled law that there is no implied warranty of seaworthiness in any time policy. . . . If, however, a vessel insured under a time policy sail in an unseaworthy state and incur loss consequent thereupon, and not directly attributable to a peril insured against, such loss will not be recoverable:" McArthur on Marine Ins. (ed. 1890) 15.

[7] Hucks v. Thornton, Holt N. P. 30, 17 R. R. 594.

[8] Marine insurance act 1906 (6 Edw. VII. c. 41), sec. 39(5); Butterworth's Twentieth Century Stat. (1900–1909) p. 408.

[9] Dudgeon v. Pembroke, L. R. 2 App. Cas. 284, 43 L. J. Q. B. 220, 46 L. J. Ex. 409, 36 L. T. 382, 31 L. T. 31, L. R. 9 Q. B. 581, 1 Q. B. D. 96, 22 W. R. 914, 25 W. R. 499, 3 Asp. M. C. 393, 14 Eng. Rul. Cas. 105, per Lord Penzance, quoting Lord Campbell.

[10] Merchants' Ins. Co. v. Morrison, 62 Ill. 242, 14 Am. Dec. 93 (decided 1871).

[11] Macy v. Mutual Marine Ins. Co. 12 Gray (78 Mass.) 497.

otherwise attach, and is incapable by reasonable and suitable repairs of being made navigable, or if she sails from a subsequent port in such an unseaworthy condition that the loss is immediately attributable thereto, either wholly or partly, no recovery can be had, although if the loss does not proceed from such default in making her navigable, but happens from a peril insured against, a recovery may be had.[12] Again, in that state it is held that under a policy on unlimited time the insurer is discharged if the vessel becomes unseaworthy,[13] and also that under a time policy on a vessel in a foreign port, if full repairs may be made, that there is an implied warranty of seaworthiness both in port and in setting out therefrom. The court, however, declares that it does not decide anything beyond the precise case before it,[14] and also expressly disclaims stating any rule which would imply a warranty of seaworthiness under a time policy on a vessel at sea, on the ground that the insured has no means of knowing her actual condition, or of restoring her to a seaworthy condition if not so at the time the policy is to attach, and the contract is fully entered into with a precise understanding of the situation, and therefore the circumstances tend to rebut any implied warranty that the vessel is seaworthy when the risk attaches.[15] In Connecticut, it is held that the warranty of seaworthiness is a necessary incident to all contracts of marine insurance, and applies to time as well as voyage policies.[16] In New York, seaworthiness at the inception of the risk is declared to be a condition precedent in every policy where the vessel is insured in port,[17] and in another case in that state a vessel insured on time was unseaworthy when leaving an intermediate port, and a recovery was not permitted, though the loss was not occasioned by such unseaworthiness, and although she had sailed in a seaworthy condition after the commencement of the [12] Capen v. Washington Ins. Co. 12 Cush. (66 Mass.) 517, per Shaw, C. J. The court limited its ruling to the exact question before it.

[13] Cleveland v. Union Ins. Co. 8 Mass. 308.

[14] Hoxie v. Pacific Mutual Ins. Co. 7 Allen (89 Mass.) 211. The English cases relied on are Small v. Gibson, 16 Q. B. 128, 141; Hucks v. Thornton, Holt, N. P. 30, 17 R. R. 594. Hollingsworth v. Brodrick, 7 Ad. & E. 40, 2 N. P. 608, 8 L. J. Q. B. 80; Sadler v. Dixon, 8 Mees. & W. 895, 11 L. J. Ex. 435, 14 Eng. Rul. Cas. 63. But as to these cases see the rule in England first stated under this section.

[15] Hoxie v. Pacific Mutual Ins. Co. 7 Allen (89 Mass.) 211, per Bigelow, C. J. See Paddock v. Franklin Ins. Co. 11 Pick. (28 Mass.) 227, per the court; Martin v. Fishing Ins. Co. 20 Pick. (37 Mass.) 389, 32 Am. Dec. 220.

[16] Hoxie v. Home Ins. Co. 32 Conn. 21, 85 Am. Dec. 240. See also Dallam v. Insurance Co. 6 Phila. (Pa.) 15.

[17] Berwind v. Greenwich Ins. Co. 114 N. Y. 231, 234, 21 N. E. 151.

risk.[18] And in the United States court it is held that under a time policy "lost or not lost," the vessel being in a distant sea, there is no implied warranty of seaworthiness, but otherwise where the policy is in the home port, and if the vessel enters upon her first voyage in an unseaworthy condition the insurers are discharged.[19] And this rule has been extended to the case where the vessel is in, or has arrived at a distant port before or after the commencement of the risk, and might or ought to have been repaired, and the vessel leaves such port and is lost in consequence of her unseaworthy condition, although it is also held that there is no absolute implied warranty of seaworthiness in a time policy.[20] In Maine the implied warranty of seaworthiness applies to time policies, except where the vessel is at sea when the risk attaches.[1]

§ 2154. Same subject: conclusion.—In England, prior to the marine insurance act of 1906, given under a preceding section,[2] in the case of Dudgeon v. Pembroke,[3] Lord Penzance quoted from Lord Campbell as having declared that there was no implied warranty of seaworthiness in any time policy,[4] and said that this law rested upon a course of decisions extending upwards of twenty years, and that it was too late to change the rule, except by legislative authority. We have, therefore, the two extremes of the English rule and that of the Connecticut decision above noted. There are certainly many serious objections to the doctrine of the Connecticut case, and, as to the English rule, outside of the principle stare decisis, Lord Penzance tacitly admits its objectionable grounds.[5] But even then the difficulty which the courts have experienced in attempting to formulate a definite, intermediary rule is obvious.

[18] American Ins. Co. v. Ogden, 20 Wend. (N. Y.) 287. See Hathaway v. Sun Mutual Ins. Co. 8 Bosw. (N. Y.) 33.

[19] Ronse v. Insurance Co. 3 Wall. Jr. (U. S. C. C.) 367, Fed. Cas. No. 12,089.

[20] Jones v. Insurance Co. 2 Wall. Jr. (U. S. C. C.) 278, Fed. Cas. No. 7,470, per Grier, J.

[1] Plummer v. Insurance Co. of North America, 114 Me. 128, 95 Atl. 605.

[2] See § 2152 herein.

[3] 2 App. Cas. 284, 46 L. J. Ex. 409, 31 L. T. 31; 36 L. T. 382, 25 W. R. 499; L. R. 9 Q. B. 581, 1 Q. B. 96, 46 L. J. Q. B. 409, 43 L. J. Q. B. 220, 3 Asp. M. C. 393, 14 Eng. Rul. Cas. 105.

[4] Lord Campbell cited Gibson v. Small, 44 L. C. 353, 14 Eng. Rul. Cas. 86; Thompson v. Hopper, 6 El. & Bl. 172.

[5] He says: "Whatever may be argued as to the soundness of the conclusions then arrived at, or however desirable it may be, as a matter of public policy and concern, that some such obligation of keeping his vessel, as far as it is within his power, seaworthy, should be cast upon the shipowner, the law must . . . be considered as settled:" Dudgeon v. Pembroke, 2 App. Cas. 284, 31 L. T. 31, 36 L. T. 382, 25 W. R. 499, L. R. 7 Q. B. 581, 1 Q. B. 96, 46 L. J. Q. B. 409, 43 L. J. Q. B. 220, 3 Asp. M. C. 393, 14 Eng. Rul. Cas. 105.

It is pertinent to inquire whether in time policies, by reasonable construction, the nature and subject matter of the contract and the intention of the parties, coupled with the circumstances attending the making of the contract, rebut or tend to rebut the presumption of an implied warranty of seaworthiness. The situation of the ship at the time the policy is to attach becomes an important factor, as well as the fact whether she is so situated that she can be so prepared and fitted as to make her seaworthy, reference being had to the nature, extent, and necessities of the voyage and the service required. If at the time the risk is to attach, the vessel is at sea, and the assured has no means of ascertaining her actual condition, or of changing it and making her seaworthy in case she is then unseaworthy, both parties are assumed to have had knowledge, and to have entered into the contract with reference thereto, and the presumption of an implied warranty of seaworthiness is necessarily rebutted. But this is not the case in all time policies. If the vessel is in port when the insurance is effected, the same reasons do not exist as in the last case for holding that the implied warranty is rebutted, and it is difficult to conceive why the vessel should not be seaworthy at the time of sailing, although the policy is to attach on a certain date prior to her actual departure. To say that the vessel may leave port in an unseaworthy condition in such case seems opposed to the fundamental principles of the contract of insurance and inconsistent with its reasonable construction. But assume a case where the vessel has left port on the day preceding that named for the commencement of the risk, and is at sea when the risk attaches. Does the law then require that the ship shall be seaworthy at the commencement of the risk? Can the insurer avail himself of the fact that the ship was not absolutely seaworthy when she left port, provided she is safely at sea on the day named? These questions are qualifiedly answered in a Massachusetts case,[6] where the court asserts in effect that there is no absolute warranty of seaworthiness in such case, but if the risk attaches when the vessel first sails from port, that it is implied that she is then seaworthy, and if she is at sea, that she has only sailed in such a seaworthy condition as to be safe; that is, a proper subject of insurance. This declaration implies no more than this, that the vessel must so far exist as a vessel that the policy may attach, not that she must be seaworthy for the voyage, and it could hardly be asserted that the policy has a retrospective effect, so as to incorporate into it a warranty by implication that a vessel which had sailed from port and was at sea before the policy attached was absolutely seaworthy at the time of sailing from port. But the courts of that state have declared that under a policy at and from all ports and places to which the ship may proceed in the coasting trade for six months or a year, no difficulty can be experienced in making her seaworthy for the time insured.[7] Again, if during the existence of the risk the vessel arrives at a port in such a condition that she may not leave port with reasonable safety, it would seem only consistent with the requirements of the contract of marine insurance that the vessel should be made in some degree seaworthy for proceeding on her voyage, even though the policy be on time, although it might be questioned whether the liability of the insurer would exist, in case of loss, unless the act of knowingly sending the ship to sea was the immediate cause of the loss, and the question might arise whether, if the action was barred it would not be because of the wrongful act whereby the loss was occasioned, rather than unseaworthiness.[8] It will be seen, therefore, that although a time policy is a contract of marine insurance, and has primarily incorporated therein an implied warranty of seaworthiness, yet there are numerous cases where such a warranty would be inconsistent with the very nature of the contract and the intention of the parties, evidenced by the circumstances attendant upon making the contract, and therefore in such cases the implied warranty is rebutted. It is also evident from the words of Lord Campbell and Lord Penzance above noted that the English rule rests mainly upon the principle stare decisis. Some obligation should certainly exist under a time policy whereby the vessel should be seaworthy. The extent to which this obligation should be enforced must rest with the courts, and to some extent upon legislative action. But it would seem that there is nothing in the nature of the contract itself, or in the usual circumstances attendant upon making it, which would rebut the presumption that the vessel is seaworthy when, at the beginning of her voyage, she sails from a port where the policy has attached. Beyond these points a difficulty arises. If the vessel is at sea when the risk attaches, having left port a short time prior thereto, events may have happened between leaving such port and the commencement of the risk which would cause the vessel to be not absolutely seaworthy, and nevertheless she might still be safe at sea, and a proper subject for the attachment of the risk. If a vessel insured under such a policy be obligated to repair at an intermediate port, the question is not then solved, for although it would seem consistent that she

[6] Capen v. Washington Ins. Co. 12 Cush. (66 Mass.) 517.

[7] Hoxie v. Pacific Mutual Ins. Co. 7 Allen (89 Mass.) 211, per Bigelow, C. J.; instancing Martin v. Fishing Ins. Co. 20 Pick. (37 Mass.) 389, 32 Am. Dec. 220.

[8] See Thompson v. Hopper, El. B. & E. 1038, 96 Eng. C. L. 1038; 27 L. J. Q. B. 441, 6 El. & B. 172, 25 L. J. Q. B. 240; Capen v. Washington Ins. Co. 12 Cush. (66 Mass.) 517. But see § 2161 herein.

should be made in some degree seaworthy for her voyage, yet the question arises as to the degree of seaworthiness necessary, and as above stated, if she left an intermediate port in such an unseaworthy condition as not to be reasonably safe for a sea voyage, if such act was the immediate cause of loss, the issue might rest not upon her unseaworthiness, but upon wrongful disregard of duty causing the loss.[9] It is doubtful, therefore, whether the decisions, in the absence of some statutory provision, will ever be reconciled upon any intermediary rule that extends beyond the two cases above noted, except possibly upon the ground in some court of stare decisis in that particular state.

§ 2155. Implied warranty of seaworthiness in time policies: code provisions: stipulation.—In a case in the Federal courts the construction of the California code relative to seaworthiness under time policies arose. The code of that state provides that there is an implied warranty of seaworthiness in every policy of marine insurance,[10] and also that "when the insurance is made for a specified length of time, the implied warranty is not complied with unless the ship be seaworthy at the commencement of every voyage she may undertake during that time."[11] The vessel was insured on time at and from a California port, and it was stipulated that the provisions of the code of that state relating to the warranty of seaworthiness should be conclusive and binding upon the parties. The vessel was not provided at the commencement of the voyage with ground tackle reasonably fit for the services and exigencies of the voyage, and was consequently totally lost, and the action, a libel on the policy, was dismissed.[12]

§ 2155a. Warranty of seaworthiness: policy on cargo or freight.—Although it was not usual in England for underwriters on cargo to rely on the defense of unseaworthiness, as it generally paid the cargo owner and availed itself of the latter's rights against the ship owner by subrogation, still an implied warranty of seaworthiness in a policy on cargo has been held the same as that on a ship, which is that she shall be seaworthy for the venture when she starts, and with reference to a warranty on cargo the ship must be fit for the proposed service, that is, fit in respect to all those things appertaining to the safe carriage of cargo to its destination.[13] Under the [9] But see §§ 2161, 2167, 2177 herein.

[10] Deering's Annot. Civ. Code Cal. sec. 2681.

[11] Deering's Annot. Civ. Code Cal. sec. 2683.

[12] Pope v. Swiss Lloyd Ins. Co. 6 Saw. (U. S. C. C.) 533, 4 Fed. 153, citing Gibson v. Small, 4 H. L. Cas. 353, 14 Eng. Rul. Cas. 86; Jones v. Insurance Co. 2 Wall. Jr. (U. S.) 278, Fed. Cas. No. 7,470, opinion of Grier, J. See also Cox v. United States, 6 Pet. (31 U. S.) 181, 203, 8 L. ed. 363, 1 Gall. (U. S. C. C.) 371, Fed. Cas. No. 16,871.

[13] Sleigh v. Tyser [1900] 2 Q. B. 333, 336, 69 L. J. Q. B. 626, 5 Coml.

marine insurance act of 1906, however, there is no implied warranty that goods or movables are seaworthy "(1) In a policy on goods or other movables there is no implied warranty that the goods or movables are seaworthy. (2) In a voyage policy on goods or other movables there is an implied warranty that at the commencement of the voyage the ship is, not only seaworthy as a ship, but also that she is reasonably fit to carry the goods or other movables to the destination contemplated by the policy." [14] In a Federal case the chartered owner subchartered a steamship's carrying capacity for a cargo of livestock for a voyage, total amount of freight to be a lump sum, one-half prepaid, and the bills of lading called for freight at a fixed rate on each animal delivered. The subcharterer took out certificates of insurance under running policies for the precise amount of the bill of lading freight on each head of livestock including the risk of mortality. Two of the running policies under which the certificates were issued, were upon cargo, but it was held that the subject of the insurance being freight said policies must be read with the substitution of freight for cargo. The charterers were to supply feed and fodder for the livestock, also fittings therefor, furnish cattlemen, etc. Owing to the fodder not being of a kind digestible by the cattle, there was an extraordinary mortality among them, and it was claimed that this amounted to unseaworthiness of the vessel for the voyage. It was decided, however, that said fodder was not an appurtenance of the vessel, but of the cargo, and that there was no such implied warranty of the fitness of the cargo, and also that as the libelant, who sued as holder of the certificates, had nothing to do with the fodder, the insurance on freight was not affected by the character of the fodder and that said libelant was entitled to recover for the bill of lading freight lost on livestock which was not delivered.[15] And in case of cargo on board ship or ships on condition of declaring the ship on the policy to the underwriter as soon as known, the ship must be seaworthy or the policy will not attach.[16]

§ 2156. Innocence of assured: unknown defects.—It is not necessary that fraud be imputable to the assured; he may be innocent

Cas. 271, 16 T. L. R. 404, 9 Asp. M. C. 97, Bigham, J.

[14] Marine insurance act 1906 (6 Edw. VII. c. 41) secs. 40(1), 40(2); Butterworth's Twentieth Century Stat. (1900–1909) p. 408.

[15] Tweedie Trading Co. v. Western Assurance Co. of Toronto, 179 Fed. 103, 102 C. C. A. 397, 39 Ins. L. J. 1342, aff'g 168 Fed. 962; Sleigh v. Tyser, L. R. [1900] 2 Q. B. D. 333, 69 L. J. Q. B. 626, 9 Asp. M. C. 97, 82 L. T. 804.

[16] Orient Mutual Ins. Co. v. Wright, 23 How. (64 U. S.) 401, 16 L. ed. 524; Sun Mutual Ins. Co. v. Wright, 23 How. (64 U. S.) 412, 16 L. ed. 529.

and believe that the vessel is seaworthy, yet if she is unseaworthy at the time of sailing, the policy is void, nor does it excuse him that there are unknown defects, nor that he has taken precautions to make her seaworthy; if it subsequently appears that she was not in fact seaworthy.[17] And an instruction is erroneous which makes immaterial the owner's knowledge of the vessel's unseaworthiness.[18] So where a floating dock was insured, it was held that a loss arising from inherent defects, such as weakness or rottenness of timbers, insufficiency of machinery, or defective construction of valves, released the insurers;[19] and where it appeared that before the cargo was loaded the ship's timber holds were in a defective condition, by which water could enter, and that had the leak been known in time the vessel could have been kept clear by pumping, the ship was held unseaworthy.[20] Again, inasmuch as in every contract for the carriage of goods by sea, there is a warranty on the part of the shipowner that the ship is seaworthy at the time of beginning her voyage, and his undertaking to safely carry the goods cannot be discharged because the want of fitness in the vessel is the result of latent defects.[1]

§ 2157. Effect of exception of losses occasioned by unseaworthiness: knowledge.—If a policy of insurance excepts losses occasioned by unseaworthiness, the effect of such an exception is a warranty

[17] The Southwark, 191 U. S. 1, 48 L. ed. 65, 24 Sup. Ct. 1 (so prior to Harter act, 27 Stat. 445, explained in The Wilderoft, 201 U. S. 378, 386, 50 L. ed. 794, 26 Sup. Ct. 467); Marcy v. Sun Ins. Co. 11 La. Ann. 748; M'Cargo v. Merchants' Ins. Co. 10 Rob. (La.) 334; Oliver v. Cowley, reported in 1 Marshall on Ins. (ed. 1810) *160; 1 Park on Ins. 470; Douglass v. Scougall, 4 Dow, 269, 16 R. R. 69, per Lord Eldon; Lee v. Beach, reported in 1 Marshall on Ins. (ed. 1810) *160; 1 Park on Ins. 468; 1 Marshall on Ins. (ed. 1810) *161. See Richelieu & Ontario Navigation Co. v. Boston Marine Ins. Co. 136 U. S. 408, 34 L. ed. 398, 10 Sup. Ct. 934; Mills v. Roebuck, reported in 1 Marshall on Ins. (ed. 1810) *162, is opposed to law. See Watson v. Clark, 1 Dow, 344, 14 R. R. 73, 14 Eng. Rul. Cas. 50; Parker v. Potts, 3 Dow. 23, 27, 15 R. R. 1.

Examine §§ 2169–2169c herein.

[18] Eureka Fire & Marine Ins. Co. v. Purcell, 19 Ohio Cir. Ct. R. 135, 10 O. C. D. 528.

[19] Marcy v. Sun Ins. Co. 11 La. Ann. 748.

[20] Standard Refinery Co. v. Schooner Centennial, 2 Fed. 409, citing Monticello v. Mollison, 17 How. (58 U. S.) 152, 15 L. ed. 68; Commercial Ins. Co. of Cincinnati v. The C. D. Jr. 1 Woods (U. S. C. C.) 72; Fed. Cas. No. 7,051; Amazon Ins. Co. v. The Steamboat Iron Mountain, 1 Flip. (U. S. C. C.) 616, Fed. Cas. No. 270, 4 Cent. L. J. 103.

[1] Pacific Coast Steamship Co. v. Bancroft-Whitney Co. 94 Fed. 180, 36 C. C. A. 135, rev'd on other points in Queen of the Pacific, 180 U. S. 49, 45 L. ed. 419, 21 Sup. Ct. 278, citing The Caledonia, 43 Fed. 681, 685, aff'd 157 U. S. 124, 39 L. ed. 644, 15 Sup. Ct. 537; Work v. Leathers, 97 U. S. 379, 24 L. ed. 1012; The Edwin I. Morrison, 153 U. S. 199, 210, 38 L. ed. 688, 14 Sup. Ct. 823.

that the loss shall not be caused thereby, and it is not material in such case whether the vessel's unseaworthiness was known or unknown.[2]

§ 2158. Effect of previous survey: certificate of seaworthiness: subsequent survey: condemnation.—The fact that the vessel was surveyed before she sailed, and pronounced by carpenters to be competent, does not excuse the assured if she proves, in the course of the voyage, not to be seaworthy;[3] and although ship's carpenters certified that the repairs made were all that were necessary to enable her to proceed on her voyage, and it afterward appeared that she was unseaworthy as to her ironwork, her lower deck beams, and knees, by reason of which she was unable to withstand the ordinary perils of the sea, it was held that recovery could not be had.[4] Although in the Federal court, where a vessel proceeded to a certain port for repairs, and upon survey being had it was declared that no repairs were necessary, and that she was seaworthy for the voyage, and therefore no repairs were made, it was held that a recovery could be had for a loss on such voyage, although the circumstances cast the burden of proof of seaworthiness on assured.[5] And in another case in that court it was decided that, unless overcome by competent evidence, the report of the surveyors of a port is sufficient evidence that the vessel is seaworthy.[6] Where the rules of a mutual society required yearly surveys of the hull and materials of insured ships, and the providing of such repairs and stores as were deemed necessary by the underwriters, such requirement being a condition precedent, the ship was declared unseaworthy for noncompliance in furnishing the necessary repairs and stores.[7] And a survey of the vessel by the underwriter's surveyors is not a waiver of compliance with the warranty nor does it preclude them from showing that the vessel was unseaworthy.[8] A vessel was surveyed in a port of distress, pronounced unfit for sea, sold as a wreck, purchased and repaired, again surveyed, and pronounced

[2] Richelieu & Ontario Nav. Co. v. Boston Marine Ins. Co. 136 U. S. 408, 10 Sup. Ct. 934, 34 L. ed. 398. Cited in The Irrawady (Flint v. Cristall) 171 U. S. 187, 190, 43 L. ed. 130, 131, 18 Sup. Ct. 831; The Caledonia, 157 U. S. 124, 140, 39 L. ed. 644, 649, 15 Sup. Ct. 537; Flint & P. M. R. Co. v. Marine Ins. Co. 71 Fed. 210, 215; Pride v. Providence-Washington Ins. Co. 6 Pa. Dist. R. 227, 232. See §§ 2169–2169b herein.

[3] Warren v. United Ins. Co. 2 Johns. Cas. (N. Y.) 232, 1 Am. Dec. 164.

[4] Douglass v. Scougall (The North Star) 4 Dow, 269, 16 R. R. 69.

[5] Lunt v. Boston Marine Ins. Co. 19 Blatchf. (U. S. C. C.) 151, 6 Fed. 562, s. c. 17 Fed. 411.

[6] Batchelder v. Insurance Co. of North America, 30 Fed. 459.

[7] Stewart v. Wilson, 12 Mees. & W. 11, 13 L. J. Ex. 27, 7 Jur. 1020.

[8] Danson v. Cawley, Newf. Rep. (1817–1828) 377.

competent for the voyage and insured; she made water rapidly after sailing and was surveyed and condemned. It was held that she was unseaworthy, although the surveyors reported that her defective and injured condition was not in any degree occasioned by decay or rottenness of her materials.[9] But where for the purpose of showing that the vessel was seaworthy before she left her home port the certificate of a marine inspector was offered in connection with his oath, who stated that although he had no independent and distinct recollection of the facts therein stated, yet, so far as he remembered, the statements therein contained were true at the date thereof, such certificate was held competent evidence of the facts therein stated; it being declared that it was in its nature a semi-official document, and although not made in pursuance of any positive enactment or rule of law, nevertheless it ranked with entries made by bank clerks, messengers, and other similar agents.[10]

Although a vessel is seaworthy at the time of sailing on the insured voyage, still the insurer is discharged where upon a regular survey she is found at a subsequent period of the voyage, leaky and in a very decayed condition and "altogether unworthy of being repaired, and that she ought to be condemned as being unsafe and unfit ever to go to sea again," where it is stipulated that if said vessel upon a regular survey should be thereby declared unseaworthy "by reason of her being unsound or rotten." But the survey in such case is not conclusive evidence of unseaworthiness if it declares the vessel unseaworthy for any additional cause, besides being "unsound or rotten."[11] And under a policy providing for the discharge of the insurer if the vessel, "after a regular survey, should be condemned for being unsound and rotten," a certificate of the port wardens declaring the vessel to be so decayed that the repairs would cost more than her value when repaired, and stating that the vessel is condemned as not seaworthy and unworthy of repair, is conclusive evidence to discharge the insurer, although the condemnation was not specially authorized by any state law, where such condemnation was obtained by the master as the agent of the owners and afterwards adopted by them as proof of the facts stated.[12] Again, a stipulation that the fittings and condition of cattle are to [9] Parker v. Potts, 3 Dow, 23, 15 R. R. 1.

[10] Perkins v. Augusta Insurance & Banking Co. 10 Gray (76 Mass.) 312, 71 Am. Dec. 654. See Berwind v. Greenwich Ins. Co. 114 N. Y. 231, 21 N. E. 151.

[11] Dorr v. Pacific Ins. Co. 7 Wheat. (20 U. S.) 581, 5 L. ed. 528. See this case also for what constitutes a "regular survey."

[12] Janney v. Columbian Ins. Co. 10 Wheat. (23 U. S.) 411, 6 L. ed. 354, cited in The Dawn, 1 Ware (U. S. C. C.) 487, Fed. Cas. No. 3,665; Potter v. Ocean Ins. Co. 3 Sumn. (U. S. C. C.) 42, Fed. Cas. No. 11,335.

be approved by Lloyds agent's surveyor does not supersede the implied warranty of seaworthiness.[13]

§ 2159. Different degrees of seaworthiness.—That there are different degrees of seaworthiness dependent upon the character of the vessel, its construction, its navigation and service required, the length and nature of the voyage, the season of the year, its trade, and other factors, is clearly evidenced by the cases.[14] Thus, a "steamship" or vessel capable of being propelled by steam or sails must be seaworthy with reference to its character, service, and navigation required; she must be fully equipped, manned, and provisioned as a steamer and sailing vessel.[15] A flatboat navigating the Mississippi must be seaworthy with reference to its navigation and service required.[16] So a voyage may require a different complement of men or state of equipment in different parts or stages; as in case of one down a canal or river and thence to the open sea.[17] And the rule as to the nature of the services required applies where only the ordinary perils of waters in or near a harbor instead of the ordinary perils of the sea are liable to be encountered.[18] If a vessel is built for river service and not for open sea navigation and is insured for a voyage to a place where it is intended to be used and said voyage necessitates navigating the open sea for at least a part thereof, a recovery for the loss of the vessel shortly after putting to sea, cannot be defeated on the ground of an implied warranty of seaworthiness for the sea voyage where assurer, before assuming the risk is put in possession of all information concerning the con-

[13] Sleigh v. Tyser [1900] 2 Q. B. 333, considered under § 2169b herein.

[14] M'Lanahan v. Universal Ins. Co. 1 Pet. (26 U. S.) 170, 184, 7 L. ed. 518; Chase v. Eagle Ins. Co. 5 Pick. (22 Mass.) 51. See Bell v. Reed, 4 Binn. (Pa.) 127, 5 Am. Dec. 398; Annen v. Woodman, 3 Taunt. 299, 12 R. R. 663; Watt v. Morris, 1 Dow, 32; Clapham v. Langton, 34 L. J. Q. B. 46, 10 C. T. 875, 12 W. R. 1011; Burgess v. Wickham, 3 B. & S. 669, 33 L. J. Q. B. 17, 8 L. T. 47; Knill v. Hooper, 2 Hurl. & N. 277, 26 L. J. Ex. 377, 5 W. R. 791; Woolf v. Claggett, 3 Esp. 257, 6 R. R. 830; Parker v. Potts, 3 Dow, 23, 15 R. R. 1, and in fact the cases throughout this chapter. See § 1767 herein.

The degrees of seaworthiness are various; and the rates of premiums are varied by the underwriters according to the character and qualities of the vessels to which they relate. Orient Mutual Ins. Co. v. Wright, 23 How. (64 U. S.) 401, 16 L. ed. 524; Sun Mutual Ins. Co. v. Wright, 23 How. (64 U. S.) 412, 16 L. ed. 529.

[15] Howard v. Orient Mutual Ins. Co. 2 Rob. (N. Y.) 539; also, Myers v. Girard Ins. Co. 26 Pa. St. 192.

[16] Donnelly v. Merchants' Mutual Ins. Co. 28 La. Ann. 939, 26 Am. Rep. 129.

[17] Dixon v. Sadler, 5 Mees. & W. 405, 9 L. J. Ex. 48, 14 Eng. Rul. Cas. 58, aff'd 8 M. & W. 895, 11 L. J. Ex. 435, 14 Eng. Rul. Cas. 63, per Parker, B.

[18] Farmers' Feed Co. v. Insurance Co. of North America, 166 Fed. 111, 92 C. C. A. 95, aff'g 162 Fed. 379.

struction and character of the vessel, the plans and specifications thereof and has knowledge through its engineer of the extent of the hazard and accordingly exacts double the ordinary premium charged for sea going vessels, so that the nature of the service for which she was intended is fully known to both parties.[19]

This question of degree has become one of special importance at the present day. Although the principle underlying the doctrine of seaworthiness has not changed, nevertheless the modern vessel must undoubtedly possess many qualifications required by her construction, intended service, and safe navigation as necessary to her seaworthiness which could not have been formerly contemplated, and it is probably equally true that the standard of nautical skill on the part of those to whom the navigation of the vessel of the present is intrusted has been raised to a higher degree than formerly.[20]

It is, however, held to be peculiarly within the province of the jury to determine upon the evidence as to the question of seaworthiness in the particular case before it.[1] In a New York case a steamer was insured under a time policy and about twelve hours after she left port, at near two o'clock in the morning, she began to leak, and because of inability to stop the leakage she was run ashore, where she sank. Upon being raised it was found that an after porthole in the starboard alleyway was open and that there were no other holes or breaks in the hull. The evidence showed that the vessel was properly constructed and was in a perfectly seaworthy condition when the policy was issued, and it was insisted that a presumption of unseaworthiness arose from the fact of the entry of water through the open port shortly after sailing without encountering any storm. Evidence to rebut this presumption was given and it was held that the question of seaworthiness then became one for the jury upon the evidence, as it was impossible as a matter of law to entirely exclude the inference that some one on the vessel opened the deadlight and that a charge to the jury was properly given which permitted it to consider upon the evidence

[19] Thebaud v. Great Western Ins. Co. 155 N. Y. 516, 50 N. E. 284, 27 Ins. L. J. 756.

[20] See Tidmarsh v. Washington Fire & Marine Ins. Co. 4 Mason (U. S. C. C.) 439, Fed. Cas. No. 14,024, per Story, J. That the old rule as to sailing vessels is still involved, see § 2160 herein, at end thereof.

[1] Fuller v. Alexander, 1 Brev. (S. C.) 149; M'Lanahan v. Universal Ins. Co. 1 Pet. (26 U. S.) 170, 184, 7 L. ed. 518; Thebaud v. Great Western Ins. Co. 155 N. Y. 516, 50 N. E. 284, 27 Ins. L. J. 756; Voisin v. Providence-Washington Ins. Co. 68 N. Y. Supp. 333, 51 App. Div. 553. As to questions for jury, see § 3710a herein. Palmer v. Great Western Ins. Co. 116 N. Y. 599, 23 N. E. 5, 27 N. Y. St. Rep. 675; Prescott v. Union Ins. Co. 1 Whart. (Pa.) 399, 30 Am. Dec. 207.

whether or not it was a fair inference that some one on the vessel opened the deadlight without criminal intent though with mistaken judgment. It was also decided, upon the claim of unseaworthiness because of the inadequacy of the pumps to meet the emergency, that said question was properly submitted to the jury where the evidence sufficiently established that the vessel was well fitted with pumps, adapted to all ordinary conditions, or to such as could reasonably be anticipated, so that if they were inadequate under the circumstances it was because the occasion and circumstances were extraordinary and such as could not reasonably have been anticipated.[2]

§ 2160. What constitutes seaworthiness.—It is difficult to formulate a rule as to what constitutes seaworthiness that will apply to every case, although it may be generally stated that the vessel is seaworthy if she is fit to perform the voyage insured as to ordinary perils, reference being had to the nature of the service required, the character of the navigation, the trade in which she is engaged, and to the season of the year in which the voyage is to be made. She must be tight, staunch, and strong enough to resist the ordinary perils of the sea, in a fit state of repairs, properly manned and equipped, and supplied with whatever is required for the safe and secure navigation of the vessel, and necessary to meet the ordinary exigencies of the voyage;[3] and as we have before stated, in case of

[2] Starbuck v. Phenix Ins. Co. 62 N. Y. Supp. 264, 47 App. Div. 621, aff'd (mem.) 166 N. Y. 593, 59 N. E. 1130, s. c. 54 N. Y. Supp. 293, 34 App. Div. 293, s. c. 45 N. Y. Supp. 995, 19 App. Div. 139, s. c. 41 N. Y. Supp. 901, 10 App. Div. 198, 75 N. Y. St. Rep. 1270.

[3] United States.—Watson v. Insurance Co. of North America, 2 Wash. (U. S. C. C.) 480, Fed. Cas. No. 17,-285; Ross v. Sloop Active, 2 Wash. (U. S. C. C.) 226, Fed. Cas. No. 12,-071; The Lillie Hamilton, 18 Fed. 327; Pope v. Swiss Lloyd Ins. Co. 4 Fed. 153; The Washington, 3 Blatchf. (U. S. C. C.) 276, Fed. Cas. No. 17,-220, per Nelson, J.

Louisiana.—Whitney v. Ocean Ins. Co. 14 La. Ann. 485, 32 Am. Dec. 595; McDowell v. General Mutual Ins. Co. 7 La. Ann. 684, 56 Am. Dec. 619.

Maine.—Plummer v. Insurance Co. of North America, 114 Me. 128, 95 Atl. 605.

Massachusetts.—Kettel v. Wiggin, 13 Mass. 68.

New York.—Draper v. Commercial Mutual Ins. Co. 4 Duer (N. Y.) 234, 21 N. Y. 378; Walden v. New York Firemen's Ins. Co. 12 Johns. (N. Y.) 128, aff'd 12 Johns. (N. Y.) 513; Fontaine v. Phœnix Ins. Co. 10 Johns. (N. Y.) 58; Treadwell v. Union Ins. Co. 6 Cow. (N. Y.) 270.

Pennsylvania.—Brown v. Girard, 4 Yeates (Pa.) 115, 1 Binn. (Pa.) 40, 2 Am. Dec. 400; Prescott v. Union Ins. Co. 1 Whart. (Pa.) 399, 30 Am. Dec. 207.

England.—Watt v. Morris, 1 Dow, 32; Daniels v. Harris, L. R. 10 Com. P. 1, 44 L. J. C. P. 1, 31 L. T. 408, 23 W. R. 86; Douglass v. Scougal, 4 Dow, 269, 16 R. R. 69; The Gentleman, Ole. Adm. 110, Fed. Cas. No. 5,324, rev'd 1 Blatchf. (C. C.) 196, Fed. Cas. No, 5,323.

"It is meant that she shall be in a fit state, as to repairs, equipment, a sailing vessel this warranty covers not only the sufficiency of the hull but extends also to the sails and rigging.[3a]

§ 2161. What constitutes seaworthiness and unseaworthiness: cases.—The implied warranty of seaworthiness extends to the machinery of a steamer, to its construction, and power required for its navigation;[4] and a defect in her boiler although not apparent when she left port, makes the vessel unseaworthy.[5] But where the boilers of a vessel stand the standard test before commencement of the voyage and except for some unforeseen peril, she would have completed her voyage in safety, the fact that said boilers begin to leak soon after beginning the voyage, after the vessel has grounded, does not prove her unseaworthiness.[6] So her engines must, when delivered, be fit to perform the service for which the vessel is engaged.[7] And the vessel must not be without necessary firewood, oil, and candles;[8] and medicines and neces-

and crew and in all other respects, to encounter the ordinary perils insured:" Dixon v. Sadler, 5 Mees. & W. 415, 9 L. J. Ex. 48, 14 Eng. Rul. Cas. 58, aff'd 8 M. & W. 895, 14 Eng. Rul. Cas. 63, per Parke, B. A ship "is seaworthy if it is fit in the degree which a prudent owner uninsured would require to meet the perils of the service it is then engaged in, and would continue so during the voyage unless it meet with extraordinary dangers:" Gibson v. Small, 4 H. L. Cas. 353, 1 C. L. R. 363, 7 Jur. 113, 114 Eng. Rul. Cas. 86, per Earle, J. "Seaworthiness imports, in the law of insurance, a relation between the condition of the ship and the perils she may have to encounter in the situation in which she may be placed;" and the court also adds to this the definition in the last cited case: Hoxie v. Pacific Mut. Ins. Co. 7 Allen (89 Mass.) 211, per Bigelow, C. J. "A ship is seaworthy when reasonably fit to perform the services and to encounter the ordinary perils of the voyage contemplated by the parties to the policy:" Deering's Annot. Civ. Code Cal. sec. 2682; "A warranty of seaworthiness extends, not only to the condition of the structure of the ship itself, but requires that it is properly laden and provided with a competent master, a sufficient number of competent officers and seamen, and the requisite appurtenances and equipments, such as ballast, cables and anchors, cordage and sails, food, water, fuel, lights, and other necessary or proper stores and implements for the voyage:" Deering's Annot. Civ. Code Cal. sec. 2684.

"A ship is deemed to be seaworthy when she is reasonably fit in all respects to encounter the ordinary perils of the seas of the adventure insured." Marine insurance act 1906 (6 Edw. VII. c. 41) sec. 39 (4); Butterworth's Twentieth Century Stat. (1900–1909) p. 408.

[3a] Stetson v. Insurance Co. of North America (U. S. D. C.) 215 Fed. 186, 44 Ins. L. J. 554.

[4] Myers v. Girard Ins. Co. 26 Pa. St. 192.

[5] Quebec Marine Ins. Co. v. Commercial Bank of Canada, 3 L. R. P. C. 234, 39 L. J. P. C. 53, 22 L. T. 559, 7 Moore, P. C. N. S. 1.

[6] St. Paul Fire & Marine Ins. Co. v. Pacific Cold Storage Co. 157 Fed. 625, 87 C. C. A. 14, 14 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1161.

[7] McAdams v. Severich, 35 Fed. 305 (annotated case). See the Director, 34 Fed. 57 (annotated case), 36 Fed. 335.

[8] Fontaine v. Phœnix Ins. Co. 10

saries for the voyage may be required.[9] The ship may be unseaworthy for want of the necessary ground tackle.[10] So she must be provided with all necessary stores,[11] and must have sufficient coal for the voyage.[12] And the failure at the time of sailing to have a sufficient supply of coal for the voyage for which a vessel is chartered, renders her unseaworthy; and this applies where the master sails with such insufficient supply intending to stop at an intermediate port and refill the bunkers, but owing to inability from said cause to reach said port he is compelled to put into another harbor and the vessel is stranded. And in such case where she is released and towed to her port of original destination and certain salvage charges are paid by assurer and it sues therefor, making the shipowner a party, it is decided that the charterer is liable for said breach of contract occasioned by said unseaworthiness, whether considered as a common or special carrier.[13] The vessel must also be sufficiently tight, staunch, and strong to resist the ordinary action of the seas, without injury to her cargo;[14] and she should be sufficiently seaworthy as to be able to encounter ordinarily rough weather, without being compelled to jettison her deck cargo.[15] But it is held that a vessel is none the less seaworthy because it is necessary to jettison a deck load, which is carried within the intent of the policy.[16] The vessel must not be unduly laden or overloaded.[17] So where the insurance was upon a cargo of lumber and the policy permitted a deck load, but owing to the loading the barge was top heavy and cranky from the start and was therefore unseaworthy, it was held that there could be no recovery.[18] It is held, however, that reference must be had to the capacity of the boat or craft, and not to the depth of the river over the shoals or bars.[19] So improper stowage of her cargo or furniture, whereby it becomes Johns. (N. Y.) 58, cited in 1 Duer (N. Y.) 175, 3 Rob. 208, 476.

[9] Woolf v. Claggett, 3 Esp. 257, 258, 6 R. L. 830.

[10] Pope v. Swiss Lloyd Ins. Co. 4 Fed. 153; Wilkie v. Geddes, 3 Dow, 57, 15 R. R. 17.

[11] Fontaine v. Phœnix Ins. Co. 10 Johns. (N. Y.) 48.

[12] Howard v. Orient Mutual Ins. Co. 2 Rob. (N. Y.) 539.

[13] British & Foreign Marine Ins. Co. v. Kilgour Steamship Co. Ltd. (U. S. D. C.) 184 Fed. 174.

[14] The Lillie Hamilton, 18 Fed. 327; Wilkie v. Geddes, 3 Dow, 57, 15 R. R. 17.

[15] Daniels v. Harris, L. R. 10 Com. P. 1, 31 L. T. 408, 23 W. R. 86, 2 Asp. M. C. 413.

[16] Granger v. Providence Washington Ins. Co. 200 Fed. 730, 119 C. C. A. 174.

[17] Weir v. Aberdeen, 2 Barn. & Ald. 320, 20 R. R. 450; Cincinnati Mutual Ins. Co. v. May, 20 Ohio, 211.

[18] Anderson Lumber Co. v. Greenwich Ins. Co. 79 Fed. 125.

[19] Cincinnati Mutual Ins. Co. v. May, 20 Ohio, 211. This case may be questioned so far as it is qualified by the depth of the water.

displaced, and the ship injured or lost, makes her unseaworthy. Usage may, however, be a factor in determining what is proper stowage.[20] And the requirement of seaworthiness is held to extend to boats or lighters necessarily and customarily used in transporting goods across the isthmus in a voyage from New York to Chagres, and thence across the isthmus to California, but this is on the ground of three distinct voyages,[1] although it has also been declared that it does not extend to lighters for transshipment of goods to the shore.[2] (And it is decided that the warranty of seaworthiness does not extend to a barge used for lightening the cargo where the policy includes "the risk of craft and/or raft to and from the vessel." [3] So negligence in not properly calking a deck may make the vessel unseaworthy.[4] So the ship is unseaworthy if her condition is "rotten," although she might have performed the voyage in good weather; [5] so a boat which is very old and in bad condition, although patched up, which sinks while in dock, under a not excessive deck load, is inherently weak and unseaworthy.[6] And unseaworthiness is proven by evidence that upon boring, no sound wood, but only mud and rotten wood was found,[7] and a vessel is unseaworthy where her "timbers" are decayed and ironwork loose,[8] if her sails are defective,[9] or if the compass is defective, whereby it is rendered unsafe and unsuitable for use.[10] Although the fact that the compass did not register accurately at the time of the loss is not sufficient to sustain a finding that a schooner was unseaworthy at the time of the insurance.[11] So the manner of a vessel's construction and materials may enter into the question of seaworthiness,[12] and a vessel although constructed for inland navigation

[20] Kopetoff v. Wilson, 1 Q. B. D. 377, 45 L. J. Q. B. 436, 34 L. T. 677, 24 W. A. 706. See also Weir v. Aberdeen, 2 Barn. & Ald. 320, 20 R. R. 450; Chase v. Eagle Ins. Co. 5 Pick. (22 Mass.) 51; Warren v. Manufacturers' Ins. Co. 13 Pick. (30 Mass.) 518, 25 Am. Dec. 341.

[1] Van Valkenburg v. Astor Mutual Ins. Co. 1 Bosw. (14 N. Y.) 61.

[2] Lane v. Nixon, L. R. 1 Com. P. 412, 35 L. J. C. P. 243, 12 Jur. (N. S.) 392, 14 W. R. 641.

[3] Pacific Creosoting Co. v. Thames & Mersey Marine Ins. Co. Ltd. (U. S. D. C.) 210 Fed. 958.

[4] The Thomas Melville, 31 Fed. 486.

[5] Hudson v. Williamson, 3 Brev. (S. C.) 342, 1 Tread. (S. C.) 360.

[6] Long Dock Mills & Elevator Co. v. Mannheim Ins. Co. 116 Fed. 886, aff'd 123 Fed. 861, 59 C. C. A. 668.

[7] Morse v. St. Paul Fire & Marine Ins. Co. (U. S. C. C.) 122 Fed. 748, s. c. (U. S. C. C.) 124 Fed. 451, s. c. (U. S. C. C.) 129 Fed. 233.

[8] Douglass v. Scougall, 4 Dow, 269, 16 R. R. 69.

[9] Wedderburn v. Bell, 1 Camp. 1, 10 R. R. 615.

[10] Richelieu & Ontario Nav. Co. v. Boston Marine Ins. Co. 136 U. S. 408, 34 L. ed. 398, 10 Sup. Ct. 934. See M'Loskie v. Glasgow & Clyde Marine Ins. Co. 6 Cas. Ct. Sess. (Bell & Murray) 2.

[11] Allen v. McFall (U. S. C. C.) 89 Fed. 463.

[12] Watt v. Morris, 1 Dow, 32; Bell must be made as far as possible seaworthy for sea service, if insured therefor;[13] and if she is originally seaworthy, it makes no difference that the peril was an extraordinary one, which she was not built to encounter.[14] So the ship may be unseaworthy where her timber holds are defective.[15] And it is held that the vessel must be in a condition to carry a full cargo.[16] So sufficient anchors and cables are necessary;[17] but an anchor is not necessary to the seaworthiness of a flatboat navigating the Mississippi river.[18] So sailing with insufficient ballast makes the vessel temporarily unseaworthy.[19] But the fact that a vessel during a storm lends a cable and small anchor to another vessel, and is afterward driven ashore, does not necessarily make her unseaworthy, and the jury having found for the insured, the verdict was not disturbed.[20] The implied warranty of seaworthiness has also been held to extend to the sufficiency of a tugboat employed in towing the insured boats,[1] but the fact that the towing ropes were decayed is held no evidence of unseaworthiness.[2] A party insuring a floating dock warrants that it is seaworthy and fit for the work for which it is designed, properly equipped with efficient machinery, and protected against accidents from the ordinary effects of water.[3] But a tug, although she may be rendered unseaworthy for propelling herself, by reason of breaking a shaft, may nevertheless be seaworthy for being towed to her home port.[4] A vessel is not unseaworthy from failure to carry a ship's carpenter on a voyage from New York to Liverpool.[5] Nor is the amount of premium paid a factor to be considered in determining the degree of seaworthiness

v. Reed, 4 Binn. (Pa.) 127, 5 Am. Dec. 398.

[13] Turnbull v. Janson, 36 L. T. N. S. 635, 3 Asp. M. C. 433. See Clapham v. Langton, 34 L. J. Q. B. 46, 10 L. T. 875, 12 W. R. 1011; Knill v. Hooper, 2 Hurl. & N. 277, 26 L. J. Ex. 377, 5 W. R. 791; Burgess v. Wickham, 3 Best & S. 669, 33 L. J. Q. B. 17, 8 L. T. 47.

[14] Lockwood v. Sauganus Ins. Co. 46 Mo. 71.

[15] Standard Refinery Co. v. Schooner Centennial, 2 Fed. 409.

[16] Abbott v. Broome, 1 Caines (N. Y.) 292, 2 Am. Dec. 187.

[17] Wilkie v. Geddes, 3 Dow, 57, 15 R. R. 17. See Harrison v. Douglass, 3 Ad. & E. 396, 6 N. M. 180, 1 H. & W. 380.

[18] Donnally v. Merchants' Mutual Ins. Co. 28 La. Ann. 939, 26 Am. Rep. 129.

[19] Deblois v. Ocean Ins. Co. 16 Pick. (33 Mass.) 303, 28 Am. Dec. 245. See Merchants' Mutual Ins. Co. v. Sweet, 6 Wis. 670.

[20] Patrick v. Commercial Ins. Co. 11 Johns. (N. Y.) 9.

[1] Merchants' Ins. Co. v. Algeo, 31 Pa. St. 446. This is certainly a broad extension of the doctrine of seaworthiness.

[2] Stone v. Aberdeen Marine Ins. Co. 11 Cas. Ct. Sess. (Y. T. & F.) (1848) 1041.

[3] Marcy v. Sun Ins. Co. 11 La. Ann. 748.

[4] Union Ins. Co. v. Smith, 124 U. S. 405, 31 L. ed. 497, 8 Sup. Ct. 534.

[5] Walsh v. Washington Ins. Co. 3 Rob. (N. Y.) 202, 203.

of the vessel.[6] A provision in a charter party that the vessel shall be seaworthy, or tight, staunch, strong and in every way fitted and provided for the contemplated voyage, does not imply a warranty of insurability at the ordinary rates for the cargo and voyage, and the refusal of the insurance while evidence of unseaworthiness of greater or less weight, dependent upon the circumstances and the condition of the vessel is not of itself conclusive evidence.[7] Prima facie the term "unseaworthiness" in a bill of lading covers not only the unseaworthiness of the ship in the sense that it was not fit to meet the perils of the sea, but also in the sense that the ship was not in a fit condition to carry the cargo.[8]

§ 2161a. Seaworthiness: refrigerating plant: insurance on insulation for.—A refrigerating plant in vessels employed in the dressed beef trade must be reasonably fit for the purposes and uses for which it is intended and it is included in the warranty of seaworthiness of the vessel.[9] In another case an action was brought on a policy of marine insurance for voyages out and home between England and Australia, on the insulation of a steamship which was intended to bring home frozen meat and miscellaneous cargo the insulation was required for refrigeration; it consisted of timber casing lined with charcoal and cooled by currents of cold air. For the efficiency of this part of the apparatus it was necessary that the charcoal should be kept dry. She leaked on her outward voyage and the insulation had to be replaced and damage occurred from leakage on the homeward voyage. There was no weather to account for the leakage. She discharged her cargo in good condition and on subsequent voyages there was leakage again notwithstanding repairs. It was held that leakage was accounted for by reason that the vessel was so constructed that there was danger of panting and that the injury to the insulation consequent upon the leakage was traceable thereto and that the absence of panting beams rendered the vessel unseaworthy.[10]

§ 2161b. Loss of vessel while moored: duty of assured: negligence:—Where assured did not, either before or after launching a yacht insured under a time policy, examine her appliances, and provided neither an anchor watch or caretaker, and the vessel filled while moored there, negligence is thereby shown.[11]

[6] Hoxie v. Home Ins. Co. 32 Conn. 21, 85 Am. Dec. 240.

[7] J. J. Moore & Co. v. Cornwall, 144 Fed. 22, 75 C. C. A. 180.

[8] Rathbone Brothers & Co. v. D. McIver Sons & Co. [1903] 2 K. B. 378, [1903] W. N. 128.

[9] The Southwark, 191 U. S. 1, 48 L. ed. 65, 24 Sup. Ct. 1, explained in The Wilderoft, 201 U. S. 374, 50 L. ed. 794, 26 Sup. Ct. 467, under Harter act, 27 U. S. Stat. 445.

[10] Lund v. Thames & Mersey Marine Ins. Co. Ltd. 17 T. L. R. 566.

[11] Plummer v. Insurance Co. of North America, 114 Me. 128, 95 Atl. 605.

§ 2162. Effect of noncompliance with statute.—The stowing on deck of the water on board a vessel does not make her unseaworthy, nor cast the burden of proof upon the assured to show her seaworthiness, although such act is contrary to the statute of the United States of 1790,[12] requiring all vessels bound on a voyage across the Atlantic to have on board, secured under deck, a certain quantity of water, and imposing a penalty on the master or owner in case the crew or passengers are put on short allowance through failure to comply with its requirements.[13] It is also held that the noncompliance with a statute does not make the vessel per se unseaworthy,[14] and it is held that the noncompliance with a statute as to the complement of men required may be excused when compliance is impossible.[15]

§ 2162a. Injury in collision as evidence of unseaworthiness: statute.—And it is held in California that the fact that a vessel had been injured in a collision may be shown as a circumstance to prove that she was unseaworthy and the implied warranty violated, so that no liability on the part of assurer would attach within the meaning of the code of that state, which provides that there is an implied warranty of seaworthiness in every marine insurance contract and that the vessel is seaworthy when reasonably fit to perform the services and to encounter the ordinary perils of the voyage contemplated.[16]

§ 2163. Effect of usage upon seaworthiness of foreign vessel in foreign port.—If a policy is taken out upon a vessel belonging to a foreign country, it has been declared by high authority that the underwriter must be assumed to be cognizant of the common usages of trade in the foreign country or of the port to which the vessel belongs, as to the equipment of vessels of that class for the intended voyage.[17] This ruling is approved by Mr. Arnould, Mr. Maclachlan, Mr. Hart, Mr. Simey, Mr. Phillips, and Mr. Parsons.[18] And it

[12] Chapter 56, sec. 9.

[13] Warren v. Manufacturers' Ins. Co. 13 Pick. (30 Mass.) 513, 25 Am. Dec. 341; Deshon v. Merchants' Ins. Co. 11 Met. (52 Mass.) 199. See Cunard v. Hyde, El. B. & E. 670, 2 El. & E. 1, 27 L. J. Q. B. 408; Redmond v. Smith, 7 Man. & G. 457.

[14] Sherlock v. Globe Ins. Co. 1 Cin. Sup. Ct. (Ohio) 193, 13 Ohio Dec. 495. See also § 2168 herein, as to employment of pilot.

[15] Suart v. Powell, 1 Barn. & Adol. 266, 8 L. J. (O. S.) K. B. 391.

[16] California Canneries Co. v. Canton Insurance Office, Ltd. 25 Cal. App. 303, 143 Pac. 549, 44 Ins. L. J. 685.

[17] Tidmarsh v. Washington Ins. Co. 4 Mason (U. S. C. C.) 439, Fed. Cas. No. 14,024, per Story, J.

[18] 1 Arnould on Marine Ins. (Perkins' ed. 1850) 677, *675; Id. (Maclachlan's ed. 1887) 670; Id. (8th ed. Hart & Simey) sec. 711, p. 873. "This rule appears full of good sense and equity, and worthy of an option in our own jurisprudence." Id. 1 Phillips on Ins. (3d ed. 391) § 719; is held that where the owner in New York of a vessel, which was there at the time of effecting the policy, obtained an insurance thereon from an underwriter in Boston, and described the vessel as a "coppered" ship, that term should be construed according to the usages of the port of New York, and not those of Boston, on the ground that the assured could not be presumed to know the usages of the port of Boston.[19] Where a bark was insured from Clyde to Havana, and it was usual in Nova Scotia, where she was built and belonged, to have only one suit of sails for boats of that class, it was held that as the place of making and enforcement of the contract was Scotland, the custom of Greenock must prevail, as to the degree of seaworthiness, in respect to what constituted sufficient sails for a vessel of that character for the voyage insured.[20]

§ 2163a. Overloading: effect of practice or custom to understate measurements.—While the measurement of a permitted deck cargo is correctly stated in the policy and the assurer is protected because of the warranty of seaworthiness and is discharged where there is an excess of cargo actually loaded over that stated in the bill of lading thereby occasioning loss, still the fact that it had been the practice to understate the footage of dressed lumber for freight purposes by deducting so much of the footage as the vessel carried in excess of the footing of rough lumber which she could have carried, is not material to the risk, but the test is, whether reasonable underwriters would be influenced in assuming the risk if advised of such practice, and this would also depend upon each particular underwriter, and a policy otherwise legal would not be invalidated because insurer was not advised of such practice, so that said practice or custom does not constitute a defense to recover the value of a portion of the cargo jettisoned.[1]

§ 2164. Manning vessel.—It is one of the requirements of the implied warranty of seaworthiness that the ship shall, at the commencement of the voyage, be sufficiently manned by a master, officers, and crew of competent skill and ability to navigate her. If the warranty is not complied with in this respect, the policy will be avoided,[2] even though it be exceedingly difficult or even impos-

1 Parsons on Marine Ins. (ed. 1868) 386.

[19] Hazard v. New England Marine Ins. Co. 8 Pet. (33 U. S.) 557, 8 L. ed. 1043, rev'g 1 Sum. (U. S. C. C.) 218, Fed. Cas. No. 6,282.

[20] Cook v. Greenock Marine Ins. Co. 5 Cas. Ct. Sess. 246, 15 Scot. Jur. 611.

[1] Granger v. Providence Washington Ins. Co. 200 Fed. 730, 119 C. C. A 174.

[2] M'Lanahan v. Universal Ins. Co. 1 Pet. (26 U. S.) 170, 183, 7 L. ed. 98; The Gentleman, Ole. Adm. 110, Fed. Cas. No. 5,324, rev'd 1 Blatchf. (U. S. C. C.) 196, Fed. Cas. No. 5,323; Caldwell v. Western Marine & Fire Ins. Co. 19 La. 42, 36 Am. Dec. 667; St. Louis Ins. Co. v. Glasgow,

sible to obtain such sufficient crew.[3] The master must be of competent skill, prudence, and discretion. An unusual degree of skill, however, is not required; it is sufficient if he has ordinary prudence and skill, reference being had to the navigation and voyage intended,[4] and it is also held that he must be of general good character, although facts or information as to his carelessness, extravagance, or want of economy are not material to the risk of barratry, and need not be disclosed.[5] If a departure from the course of the voyage is the result of not employing a master of the requisite skill, the underwriter is discharged.[6] And where the master had not been to sea for twenty years, it was held that such deficiency went to that general condition of efficiency of the ship known as seaworthiness, which was the subject of warranty and there was no obligation to disclose said fact, but where it was shown that the master had the requisite qualifications of seamanship throughout the voyage, and there is no proof of his incompetency, the owners are not put in breach of the warranty of seaworthiness.[7] The rule as to competency of the master has been very strictly enforced in one case, where it was held that there was a breach of the warranty of seaworthiness where the master was incompetent, although the navigation of the vessel was under the entire charge of a competent navigator and sailing master, and it was not intended that the master should have any part in navigating the ship.[8] The warranty of seaworthiness in respect to master, officers, and crew is not broken by laying the boat on the dock for repairs and giving her over to the control of workmen or laborers,[9] nor is the warranty broken by the occasional temporary absence of one of the crew to procure water or provisions, or upon other duties incidental to the voyage, especially where the loss is in no way attributable thereto,[10] and 8 Mo. 713, 41 Am. Dec. 661; Draper v. Commercial Mutual Ins. Co. 4 Duer (N. Y.) 234; Silva v. Low, 1 Johns. Cas. (N. Y.) 184; Treadwell v. Union Ins. Co. 6 Cow. (N. Y.) 270.

[3] The Gentleman, Ole. Adm. 110, Fed. Cas. No. 5,324; 1 Blatchf. 196, Fed. Cas. No. 5,323; Forshaw v. Chabert, 3 Brod. & B. 158, 6 Moore, 369, 23 R. R. 596.

[4] Riggin v. Patapsco Ins. Co. 7 Har. & J. (Md.) 279, 16 Am. Dec. 303; Walden v. New York Firemen's Ins. Co. 12 Johns. (N. Y.) 128, aff'd 12 Johns. (N. Y.) 513; St. Louis Ins. Co. v. Glasgow, 8 Mo. 713, 41 Am. Dec. 661.

[5] Walden v. New York Firemen's Ins. Co. 12 Johns. (N. Y.) 128, aff'd 12 Johns. (N. Y.) 513.

[6] Riggin v. Patapsco Ins. Co. 7 Har. & J. (Md.) 279, 16 Am. Dec. 302.

[7] "Gunford" Ship Co. Ltd. v. Thames & Mersey Marine Ins. Co. Ltd. [1910] Sess. Cas. 1072.

[8] Draper v. Commercial Mutual Ins. Co. 4 Duer (N. Y.) 234, 21 N. Y. 378.

[9] St. Louis Ins. Co. v. Glasgow, 8 Mo. 713, 41 Am. Dec. 661.

[10] Caldwell v. Western Ins. Co. 19 La. 42, 36 Am. Dec. 667; Busk v. Royal Exch. Assur. Co. 2 Barn. & Ald. 73, 20 R. R. 350, 14 Eng. Rul. Cas. 332, per Bayley, J.; Lapene v.

where the master was neither incompetent nor insufficient as a crew and the vessel was otherwise seaworthy the temporary absence of the master does not aid the assurer in case of loss or injury by stranding which was a peril insured against,[11] nor is it requisite that the vessel should be officered and manned when laid up in port,[12] and a mate is sufficient for a vessel frozen up for the season.[13] And the warranty, even though arising from express stipulation, may be affected by usage; as in case of a custom to discharge a part of the hands employed on a flatboat before the termination of the voyage.[14] It is undoubtedly true that different degrees of seaworthiness exist in reference to the competency of the officers and sufficiency of the crew as in other cases, for one voyage may necessitate a greater degree of competency and discretion and nautical knowledge than another,[15] and it is declared that there must be sufficient skill in the captain and crew for the purposes of the voyage insured, and if loss results from the employment of a master not acquainted with the usual course of navigation on the insured voyage, and so far incompetent as to be unable to safely navigate the vessel through ordinary perils of the voyage, she is unseaworthy.[16] So a master and one hand is held insufficient to navigate a vessel of about thirty-five tons' burden on a voyage from New York to Edenton, South Carolina.[17] The crew must, at the time of sailing on the voyage, be adequate and competent to perform the usual duties and meet the ordinary perils to which the vessel may be exposed on that voyage.[18]

§ 2165. Whether inferior officers must be competent to fill master's position.—As high an authority as Chief Justice Shaw declares that "a vessel cannot be deemed seaworthy which has not on board some person capable of navigating her besides the master," and that it is presumed that a mate is appointed who is competently skilled to take the office of master in case of emergency,[19] relying

Sun Mutual Ins. Co. 8 La. Ann. 1, 58 Am. Dec. 668.

[11] Lewis v. Aetna Ins. Co. (U. S. D. C.) 123 Fed. 157, aff'd on same opinion 129 Fed. 1006, 64 C. C. A. 210, certiorari denied in 195 U. S. 629, 49 L. ed. 352, 25 Sup. Ct. 787.

[12] Bell v. Western Marine & Fire Ins. Co. 5 Rob. (La.) 423, 39 Am. Dec. 542.

[13] Busk v. Royal Exch. Assur. Co. 2 Barn. & Ald. 73, 20 R. R. 350, 14 Eng. Rul. Cas. 332.

[14] Grant v. Lexington Fire, Life & Marine Ins. Co. 5 Ind. 23, 61 Am. Dec. 74.

[15] See Treadwell v. Union Ins. Co. 6 Cow. (N. Y.) 270.

[16] Tait v. Levi, 14 East, 481, 13 R. R. 289.

[17] Dow v. Smith, 1 Caines (N. Y.) 32.

[18] Hunter v. Potts, Selw. N. P. (1811) 1017, per Lord Ellenborough; Hucks v. Thornton, Holt, N. P. 30; Forshaw v. Chabert, 3 Brod. & B. 158, 6 Moore, 369; Shore v. Bentall, 7 Barn. & C. 798, 1 M. & Ry. 111, 31 R. R. 289.

[19] Copeland v. New England Marine Ins. Co. 2 Met. (43 Mass.) 432.

upon an English decision substantially to that effect, the case being a policy upon an East India voyage, where the question whether the vessel was properly manned for an East India voyage was left to the jury.[20] It certainly would not seem unreasonable to require the enforcement of such a rule in case of steamships and other large vessels, or in cases where the voyage is a long one, although it is an extension of the rule as generally understood and received, and it could be urged that a requirement resting upon an implied warranty ought to be so well established that the contract may be deemed to have been made in reference thereto.[1]

§ 2166. Whether vessel must when she sails have a full complement of men engaged for whole voyage.—The warranty of seaworthiness generally contemplates that when a vessel sails on her voyage she must then have a full complement of men sufficient for the whole of that particular voyage, and this is evidently the English rule strictly enforced, except possibly in those cases where a liberty is reserved to touch and stay in the course of the voyage; it being also held that the fact that the deficiency was supplied in due course of the voyage did not aid assured.[2] And in this country where at the time of sailing the crew consisted of but ten persons,

[20] Clifford v. Hunter, 1 Moody & M. 103, 3 Car. & P. 16.

[1] M'Lanahan v. Universal Ins. Co. 1 Pet. (26 U. S.) 170, 184, 7 L. ed. 98; The Niagara v. Cordes, 21 How. (62 U. S.) 7, 16 L. ed. 41; Treadwell v. Union Ins. Co. 6 Cow. (N. Y.) 270; Draper v. Commercial Ins. Co. 4 Duer (N. Y.) 234, 21 N. Y. 378; Gillespie v. Forsyth, 2 L. R. Q. B. (Quebec) 257; see 3 Kent's Commentaries (5th ed.) 287n. 1 Arnould on Marine Ins. (Perkins ed. 1850) 685, 686, *683; Id. (Maclachlan's ed. 1887) 675; Id. (8th ed. Hart & Simey) sec. 722, p. 882. "The skill in navigation of the master or other persons on board requisite to seaworthiness must depend upon the particular voyage:" 1 Phillips on Ins. (3d ed.) 385, sec. 708.

[2] 1 Arnould on Marine Ins. (Perkins' ed. 1850) 687, 688, *684; Id. (Maclachlan's ed. 1887) 676, 677; Id. (8th ed. Hart & Simey) sec. 723, p. 883. Citing Forshaw v. Chabert, 3 Brod. & B. 158, 6 Moore, 369. In this case the policy was "at and from" on a homeward risk. The full complement of men required was ten, but owing to the loss of some of the crew and inability to obtain others, the vessel sailed with only eight men engaged for the whole voyage and two for a part of the voyage. The captain landed the two men at the place agreed and shipped two others for the remainder of the voyage, and the vessel was held unseaworthy because the ten men had not been engaged for the whole voyage. Mr. Phillips criticises this case on the ground that as some of the hands were lost at the loading port, the master could employ necessary means to remedy the deficiency, and also that the warranty is less strictly construed where the voyage commences from a foreign port: 1 Phillips on Ins. (3d ed.) 387, citing Cruder v. Philadelphia Ins. Co. 2 Wash. (U. S. C. C.) 262, Fed. Cas. No. 3,453; Motteux v. London Assurance Co. 1 Atk. 545. See also 17 Earl of Halsbury's Laws of England, secs. 833 et seq., pp. 424 et seq.

and the master intended to stop at a specified place to procure seamen, and before that point was reached the ship foundered, it was held that the intention to stop evidenced either that the crew was not sufficient, or that they were not engaged for the whole voyage.[3] But the rule is qualified in those cases where a different complement of men is required for different parts of the voyage or stages of the navigation.[4] The general rule would, therefore, subject to such qualifications as are above noted, be probably enforced in this country.[5] In applying the rule, however, it should be remembered that the English doctrine as to subsequent seaworthiness differs from that in this country, and that under a policy "at and from" a question has arisen whether, if an unseaworthiness exists at the time of sailing, it may be remedied before loss; therefore, if the vessel's complement of men be sufficient for a voyage to an intermediate port, although not engaged for the whole voyage, and it is almost certain at the time of sailing that the defect could be and it is remedied there before loss, such facts might be entitled to much consideration. Usage may also be an important factor. The fact that the steamer did not carry a night crew on a run that was to be made wholly by daylight does not tend to show that the steamer was unseaworthy.[6]

§ 2167. Negligence or misconduct of master or crew: continuing warranty.—If the assured has employed a competent master and crew, and the vessel at the beginning is seaworthy in this respect, the warranty is complied with, for the assured does not warrant that they shall continue to do their duty, and if the loss has been immediately caused by a peril insured against, the underwriters are liable, even though unseaworthiness subsequent to the sailing may have arisen primarily from the negligence, carelessness, or other misconduct of the master and crew, and though the loss may be remotely caused thereby, and this is true whether the fault be of omission or commission, and whether the insurance be against barratry or not. In brief, the insurers are liable for a loss remotely arising from negligence of the master and mariners, but proximately from a peril insured against.[7] Thus, it does not avail the

[3] Silva v. Low, 1 Johns. Cas. (N. Y.) 184. See also Cruder v. Philadelphia Ins. Co. 2 Wash. (U. S. C. C.) 262, Fed. Cas. No. 3,453.

[4] Dixon v. Sadler, 5 Mees. & W. 415, 9 L. J. Ex. 48, 14 Eng. Rul. Cas. 58, per Parke, B.; Treadwell v. Union Ins. Co. 6 Cow. (N. Y.) 270.

[5] See Cruder v. Philadelphia Ins. Co. 2 Wash. (U. S. C. C.) 262, Fed. Cas. No. 3,453.

[6] Louisville Ins. Co. v. Monarch, 99 Ky. 578, 36 S. W. 563, 564.

[7] United States. — Columbia Ins. Co. v. Lawrence, 10 Pet. (35 U. S.) 507, 517, 9 L. ed. 512; Patapsco Ins. Co. v. Coulter, 3 Pet. (28 U. S.) 222, 7 L. ed. 659; M'Lanahan v. Universal Ins. Co. 1 Pet. (26 U. S.) 170, 184, 7 L. ed. 98, per Story, J.; General Mut. Ins. Co. v. Sherwood, 14 How. (55 U. S.) 351, 14 L. ed. 452; underwriter that if the master and crew had acted with proper diligence the loss by fire might have been averted and the cargo saved, nor does the fact that the fire originated from the master's carelessness prevent recovery,[8] nor is it material that the boat was negligently managed where the loss arose from an explosion of the boilers.[9] And where the captain, the vessel being aground, ordered brandy in barrels loaded on deck to be thrown overboard, and the crew, not being able to do this, knocked in the barrel heads, it was held that the loss was by the perils of the sea, and that there was no such unskillfulness or misconduct of the master as would excuse

Sperry v. Delaware Ins. Co. 2 Wash. (U. S. C. C.) 243, Fed. Cas. No. 13,236; The Titania, 19 Fed. 101.

Kentucky.—Louisville Underwriters v. Pence, 93 Ky. 96, 40 Am. St. Rep. 176, 19 S. W. 10, 21 Ins. L. J. 493, 14 Ky. L. Rep. 21; Firemen's Ins. Co. v. Powell, 13 B. Mon. (52 Ky.) 311.

Louisiana.—Henderson v. Western Marine & Fire Ins. Co. 10 Rob. (La.) 164, 43 Am. Dec. 176.

Maryland.—Georgia Insurance & Trust Co. v. Dawson, 2 Gill (Md.) 365.

Massachusetts.—Copeland v. New England Ins. Co. 2 Met. (43 Mass.) 432.

Missouri.—Missouri Ins. Co. v. Glasgow, 8 Mo. 725; St. Louis Ins. Co. v. Glasgow, 8 Mo. 713, 41 Am. Dec. 661.

Pennsylvania.—Phœnix Fire Ins. Co. v. Cochran, 51 Pa. St. 143; American Ins. Co. v. Insley, 7 Pa. St. 223, 47 Am. Dec. 509.

England.—Redman v. Wilson, 14 Mees. & W. 476, 14 L. J. Ex. 333, 9 Jur. 714; Dixon v. Sadler, 5 Mees. & W. 415, 9 L. J. Ex. 48, 14 Eng. Rul. Cas. 58, per Parke, B., 8 Mees. & W. 895, 14 Eng. Rul. Cas. 63, cited Wilton v. Atlantic Royal Mail Steam Navigation Co. 10 Com. B. (N. S.) 453, 100 Eng. C. L. 465, 30 L. J. C. P. 369, 8 Jur. (N. S.) 232, citing Busk v. Royal Exch. Co. 2 Barn. & Ald. 73, 20 R. R. 350, 14 Eng. Rul. Cas. 332; Walker v. Maitland, 5 Barn. & Ald. 171, 24 R. R. 230; Holdsworth v. Wise, 7 Barn. & C. 791; Bishop v. Pentland, 7 Barn. & C. 214, 219; Shore v. Bentall, 7 Barn. & C. 798n, 1 M. & Ry. 111.

See: United States. — Orient Ins. Co. v. Adams, 123 U. S. 67, 31 L. ed. 63, 8 Sup. Ct. 68; Phœnix Ins. Co. v. Erie & W. Transportation Co. 117 U. S. 312, 20 L. ed. 873; Waters v. Merchants' Louisville Ins. Co. 11 Pet. (36 U. S.) 222, 9 L. ed. 691, per Story, J.

Massachusetts.—Parkhurst v. Gloucester Mutual Fire Ins. Co. 100 Mass. 301, 1 Am. Rep. 105.

New York.—Mathews v. Howard Ins. Co. 11 N. Y. 9.

Ohio.—Germania Ins. Co. v. Sherlock, 25 Ohio St. 33, 1 Wkly. Law Bul. 226, 7 Ohio Dec. 17.

England.—Davidson v. Burnand, 4 L. R. C. P. 117, 38 L. J. C. P. 73; Laurie v. Douglass, 15 Mees. & W. 746; Phillips v. Nairne, 4 Com. B. 343, 350, 16 L. J. C. P. 194, 11 Jur. 455; Carruthers v. Lydebotham, 4 Maule & S. 77, 16 R. R. 392; Corcoran v. Gurney, 1 El. & B. 456, 22 L. J. Q. B. 113, 17 Jur. 1152. There are decisions in conflict with so much of the above rule as relates to unseaworthiness and neglect to repair, as noted hereafter under this section. See §§ 2741–44 herein, "Barratry."

[8] Patapsco Ins. Co. v. Coulter, 3 Pet. (28 U. S.) 222, 7 L. ed. 659.

[9] Perrin v. Protection Ins. Co. 11 Ohio, 147, 38 Am. Dec. 728, overruling Lodwicks v. Ohio Ins. Co. 5 Ohio, 433, and other decisions in that state.

the insurers.[10] Nor does it avail the underwriter that the negligence and carelessness of the officers and crew was the remote cause of an explosion of a powder magazine and consequent loss of the ship.[11] And where the vessel puts into a port in distress, it is held that the insured is not liable for the improper exercise of judgment in putting out to sea in an unseaworthy condition, for the master and mariners are not the servants of the assured.[12] In a Massachusetts case, however, a distinction is made between the acts of the master, officers, and crew in their own proper sphere in navigating the vessel, and the master's acts as agent or representative of the owner of the vessel, holding that the rule is limited to acts of negligence or misconduct in the first case, and not to those acts in the latter.[13] But if such a distinction exists, exactly where the line should be drawn would be a difficult matter to determine, although an exception to the rule might arise, so far as the doctrine of the cases in this country would require the master to make repairs where the ship becomes unseaworthy during the voyage to which the insurance relates. There are also decisions in conflict with the principal rule first above stated.[14] Notwithstanding the general rule above noted, the provisions of the California code that under an insurance for a specified length of time the ship must be seaworthy at the commencement of every voyage she may undertake during that time, and also that either party may rescind for the violation of a material warranty or other material provision of the policy by either party thereto, are material factors bearing upon the question, which would probably change the rule there so far as policies for a specified time are concerned.[15]

§ 2168. Employment of pilot.—The employment of a pilot goes to the question of seaworthiness,[16] and it is held that the insurer

[10] Van Syckel v. The Ewing, Crabbe, Adm. 405, Fed. Cas. No. 16,877.

[11] Waters v. Merchants' Ins. Co. 11 Pet. (36 U. S.) 213, 9 L. ed. 69, 1 McLean (U. S. C. C.) 275, Fed. Cas. No. 17,266; Mathews v. Howard Ins. Co. 11 N. Y. 9, overruling Grim v. Phœnix Ins. Co. 13 Johns. (N. Y.) 451.

[12] Brioso v. Pacific Mutual Ins. Co. 4 Daly (N. Y.) 246, citing the cases in the last note, and Redman v. Wilson, 14 Mees. & W. 476, 14 L. J. Ex. 333, 9 Jur. 714.

[13] Copeland v. New England Marine Ins. Co. 2 Met. (43 Mass.) 432; 1 Phillips on Ins. (3d ed.) 402, sec. 732.

[14] See Riggin v. Patapsco Ins. Co. 7 Har. & J. (Md.) 279, 16 Am. Dec. 302; Cleveland v. Union Ins. Co. 8 Mass. 308; American Ins. Co. v. Bryan, 26 Wend. (N. Y.) 563, 36 Am. Dec. 278, 1 Hill (N. Y.) 25. See Law v. Hollingsworth, 7 Term Rep. 160, overruled in Sadler v. Dixon, 5 Mees. & W. 415, 9 L. J. Ex. 48, 14 Eng. Rul. Cas. 58; Alcock v. Royal Exch. Assur. Corp. 13 Q. B. 292, 18 L. J. Q. B. 121, 13 Jur. 445.

[15] Deering's Annot. Civ. Code Cal. secs. 2610, 2683.

[16] Lapene v. Sun Ins. Co. 8 La. Ann. 1, 58 Am. Dec. 668.

may defend on the ground that the vessel did not have a pilot.[17] But in determining to what extent it enters into such question, reference must be had to the law and usage, as a factor entering into the safe navigation of the vessel, and also to the circumstance whether the port is one of departure or entry, or an intermediate port. In accordance with the rule stated under the preceding section herein, if the vessel have a competent master and crew at the commencement of the voyage, a doubt would be raised whether the master's negligence in subsequently failing to employ a pilot at an intermediate port or ports of entry would excuse the underwriters, provided a peril insured against was the proximate cause of loss, although it is declared that if the nonemployment of a pilot at an intermediate port is only the remote cause of the loss, where the vessel was originally seaworthy, the master being of competent skill, the insurers are nevertheless liable.[18] But it is also declared that this doctrine is subject to the qualification that if an act of parliament requires the employment of a pilot, it is necessary.[19] And, under the merchant shipping acts of England of 1854 and 1862, if the assured, says Mr. Maclachlan, were to sail without a licensed pilot, the policy would be vitiated, whether on goods or on the ship, when the assured is a party to the illegality.[20] So it is held in this country that the presumption of unseaworthiness, arising under a statute, from a foreign vessel leaving the port of New York without a licensed pilot is not rebutted by the fact that she was taken out of port in safety by the master.[1] But in another case it is held that a statutory unseaworthiness is not established by a statute requiring an outward bound vessel to employ a licensed pilot under penalty for noncompliance, and that the underwriter is not excused by the mere refusal of the master to receive on board a pilot, even though the loss occurs in pilot ground, but that the question of seaworthiness depends upon the circumstances, such as usage of the port and the master's ability to pilot his own vessel.[2] So it is held that a schooner is not rendered unseaworthy by sailing up the Potomac without a licensed pilot, where her mate is acting as pilot, and is a skillful man, it being customary for mates to pilot vessels of her size in such cases, and this even though the statute prohibited other than properly

[17] Treadwell v. Union Ins. Co. 6 Cow. (N. Y.) 270.

[18] Phillips v. Headlam, 2 Barn. & Adol. 380, 9 L. J. (O. S.) K. B. 238.

[19] Hollingsworth v. Broderick, 7 Ad. & El. 40, 44, 2 N. & P. 608, 8 L. J. Q. B. 80, per Patterson, J.

[20] 2 Arnould on Marine Ins. (Maclachlan's ed. 1887) 696; 2 Id. (8th ed. Hart & Simey) secs. 702, 703, pp. 862 et seq.

[1] Borland v. Mercantile Mutual Ins. Co. 46 N. Y. Sup. Ct. 433, under Laws N. Y. 1857, c. 242.

[2] Flanigan v. Washington Ins. Co. 7 Pa. St. 306, under Pa. Stats. 1803.

licensed pilots from acting.[3] So in the case of a government vessel, she is not prima facie unseaworthy from the fact that the officers navigating her are not licensed pilots.[4] And recovery was had where a pilot was on board, although not licensed.[5] So a recovery was had where a pilot was not employed by a vessel entering a harbor, the loss occurring at a point where the pilot was usually dismissed and beyond that place at which the aid of a pilot was desirable.[6] But if a vessel is about to enter a harbor where the approaches are difficult of access, and where not only nautical skill but local knowledge and experience thereof is required, and pilots are to be had, and the usage is to take pilots on board, it is held that the law is not satisfied as to seaworthiness unless a pilot is employed.[7] So the question as to a custom exempting an assured from providing a branch pilot in coasting trade from North Carolina is declared to be one of fact, both as to its existence and reasonableness.[8] It is also decided that the master is bound to secure the services of a pilot when entering a foreign port where pilots are employed, and must approach pilot ground with caution, and that the underwriter's liability ceases upon failure to employ a pilot on the part of the owner or his agents, where a pilot's services are necessary to avoid danger.[9] And that as the captain has, upon coming out of a harbor, the power to procure a pilot, he is obligated to do so, especially where usage requires a pilot. But it is held in another case that the neglect to employ a pilot discharged the insurers when the loss was a direct and immediate consequence of the neglect, but not otherwise.[10] If a competent pilot is received on board, and the navigation of the vessel given into his charge, the warranty would undoubtedly be complied with as to seaworthiness.[11] But the nature of the risk, as where a non-seagoing vessel is, with full knowledge of said fact, insured for a voyage necessitating, at least in part, an ocean voyage, may make the question of whether it was usual and customary, the master being a competent navigator, to employ a pilot during certain parts of the voyage.[12] It will be seen from the

[3] Keeler v. Fireman's Ins. Co. 3 Hill (N. Y.) 250.

[4] Hathaway v. St. Paul Fire & Marine Ins. Co. 1 McCrary (C. C.) 25, 1 Fed. 197.

[5] Domingo v. Merchants' Mutual Ins. Co. 19 La. Ann. 479.

[6] McMillan v. Union Ins. Co. Rice (S. C.) 248, 33 Am. Dec. 112.

[7] Whitney v. Ocean Ins. Co. 14 La. 485, 33 Am. Dec. 595n; Thomson v. Bisset, 4 Cas. Ct. Sess. (Shaw & D. R.) 670, 677. See Van Syckel v. The Ewing, Crabbe, Adm. 405, Fed. Cas. No. 16,877, and examine De Pau v. Jones, 1 Brev. (S. C.) 437.

[8] Cox v. Charleston Fire & Marine Ins. Co. 3 Rich. (S. C.) 331, 45 Am. Dec. 771.

[9] McDowell v. General Mutual Ins. Co. 7 La. Ann. 684, 56 Am. Dec. 619.

[10] McMillan v. Union Ins. Co. Rice (S. C.) 248, 33 Am. Dec. 112.

[11] Law v. Hollingsworth, 7 Term Rep. 160.

[12] Thebaud v. Great Western Ins.

above cases that there is much doubt whether the nonemployment of a pilot constitutes such unseaworthiness as to relieve the insurers, except perhaps when law and usage require one to be taken in going out of a port, or where the nonemployment is the proximate cause of the loss. We would suggest that a possible ground for a solution of the question may exist in the fact that the warranty of seaworthiness relates to the condition of the ship, and its equipment and fitness for port or for the voyage, and that the employment of a pilot is a mere temporary condition, relating merely to the ship's temporary navigation within certain limits.

§ 2169. Warranty may be superseded by stipulation: waiver and estoppel: latent defects.—The warranty of seaworthiness may be superseded by stipulation, or by acts or declarations of the assurer operating as a waiver or estoppel. Thus, the underwriters may agree that the ship is seaworthy for the voyage, which will dispense with the ordinary warranty and render the insurers liable for loss, even from latent defects not aggravated by ordinary perils.[13] And if at the time of issuing the policy the insurer knows that the vessel is unseaworthy, and elects to continue the risk and take the entire premium, whereby the assured is induced to rely upon the belief that the insurance is in force, this estops the underwriter from avoiding the contract after a loss on the ground of unseaworthiness. A case of this character differs, however, from one where the underwriter has reasonable means and opportunity of ascertaining the facts, but has no knowledge thereof,[14] and it is also to be distinguished from one where the assurer is as well acquainted with the state and condition of the ship, as the owner, and has equal opportunity for judging as to her unseaworthiness, but does not know the vessel is unseaworthy.[15] An advertisement that the company would insure goods on certain enumerated boats amounts to a waiver of the implied warranty of seaworthiness.[16] If it be stipulated that vessels used by assured shall be approved by the assurer, the certificate of the assurer's inspector approving a vessel constitutes an admission of seaworthiness, which supersedes the ordinary warranty.[17] So after the vessel has sailed, the assurers, having knowledge of the unseaworthiness, may waive the fact of breach of the warranty, and contract that the same may be remedied, and thereby render themselves liable to the same extent

Co. 155 N. Y. 516, 50 N. E. 284, 27 Ins. L. J. 756.

[13] Parfitt v. Thompson, 13 Mees. & W. 392, 14 L. J. Ex. 73. See § 2156 herein.

[14] Hoxie v. Home Ins. Co. 32 Conn. 21, 85 Am. Dec. 240.

[15] Oliver v. Cowley, reported in 1 Marshall on Ins. (ed. 1810) *161.

[16] Natchez Ins. Co. v. Stanton, 2 Smedes & M. (Miss.) 340, 41 Am. Dec. 592.

[17] Marine Fire Ins. Co. v. Burnett, 29 Tex. 433.

as if the vessel had been originally seaworthy.[18] But it cannot be held that the fact of seaworthiness, as a condition precedent, is waived or ceases to be a condition, if the unseaworthiness has been created by the intentional wrong of the master.[19]

§ 2169a. Latent defects: Inchmaree clause.—Where every effort is made to render a vessel seaworthy as where she was constructed, both with respect to hull and machinery by builders of the best reputation under competent supervision and notwithstanding all proper precautions are taken there is a latent defect in the casting of a bedplate which occasioned the injury, and the insurance was upon a new lake steamboat under a time policy containing the Inchmaree clause providing that "this insurance also to cover loss of, or damage to the hull or machinery through . . . any latent defect in the machinery or hull, provided such loss or damage has not resulted from the want of due diligence by the owners of the ship or any of them, or by the manager," etc., it was held that the vessel was seaworthy in the ordinary sense and that the policy attached and the insurer was liable.[20]

§ 2169b. When warranty not superseded by stipulation.—In order to exclude the implied warranty of seaworthiness the words used must be pertinent and apposite, and, therefore, such implied warranty or implied condition in a policy on cattle is not excluded or superseded by a policy stipulation that the "fittings and condition of cattle" be approved by Lloyd's agent's surveyor and there is a breach of both provisions where there is an insufficient ventilation and an insufficient supply of cattlemen to attend them.[1]

[18] Weir v. Aberdein, 2 Barn. & Ald. 320, 20 R. R. 450; Quebec Marine Ins. Co. v. Commercial Bank of Canada, L. R. 3 P. C. 234, 244, 39 L. J. P. C. 53, 22 L. T. 559, 18 W. R. 769, per Lord Penzance.

[19] Borland v. Mercantile Mutual Ins. Co. 14 Jones & S. (46 N. Y. Super. Ct.) 433.

[20] Cleveland & Buffalo Transit Co. v. Insurance Co. of North America, (U. S. D. C.) 115 Fed. 431. The court, per Adams, D. J., states the reason for and history of the Inchmaree clause Id. 435.

[1] Sleigh v. Tyser [1900] 2 Q. B. 333, 69 L. J. Q. B. 626, 82 L. T. 804, 5 Com. Cas. 271, 9 Asp. M. C. 97. The court, Bigham, J., said: "The question then arises whether insufficient ventilation and an insufficient supply of men constitute a breach of the implied warranty—or, more correctly, the implied condition—of seaworthiness. I think they do. What is the implied warranty in a policy on cargo? It is, in my opinion, exactly the same as the warranty in a policy on ship—that the ship shall be seaworthy for the adventure on which she starts. Stating the warranty with particular reference to a policy on cargo, it may be defined as a warranty—or rather as a condition—that the ship shall be fit for the proposed service—fit, that is, in respect of all those things that appertain to the safe carriage of the cargo in question to its destination. No doubt it is not usual for underwriters on cargo to rely on the defense of unseaworthiness; the underwriter generally pays the cargo owner and avails himself of the latter's right against the ship owner, the benefit of which he obtains by subrogation: McArthur's Contract of Marine Ins. (2d ed.) p. 15, note (c). But this is because of the supposed hardship of the law which makes innocent shippers of cargo responsible for the oversight or neglect of the shipowner. The practice does not modify the law, and in the present case the hardship out of which the practice has sprung does not exist, for the plaintiffs had themselves undertaken with the shipowners to provide both the ventilation appliances and the cattle-men. . . . But it is said in this case that the implied warranty is gone by reason of the express words in the policy to which I have already referred—'the fittings and condition of the cattle to be approved by Lloyd's agent's surveyor.' . . . It is argued on the plaintiff's behalf that their compliance with that express provision of the contract discharges them from further obligation. I do not, however, think so. The certificate has nothing to do with the sufficiency of men shipped on board to attend to the cattle. With that matter Lloyd's surveyor did not concern himself. And though ventilation appliances may well come within the meaning of the word 'fittings,' the question remains whether the parties intended, by this stipulation that the fittings should be approved by Lloyd's agent, to supersede the implied warranty of seaworthiness in respect of ventilation. I am of opinion that they did not. . . . To exclude the implied warranty of seaworthiness the words used must be express, pertinent, and apposite, per Lord Penzance in Quebec Marine Ins. Co. v. Commercial Bank of Canada, L. R. 3 P. C. 234, at p. 242. If I could find in these words sufficient to satisfy me that the parties intended that Lloyd's surveyor should be put in the position of a sole judge to decide once for all whether the fittings were enough for the purpose required, I should probably come to a different conclusion as to intention of the parties in introducing the stipulation relied on. But I do not find anything of the kind. The stipulation is, in my opinion, merely superadded for the benefit of the underwriter, and therefore does not exclude the implied warranty. See Mody v. Gregson, L. R. 4 Ex. 49, at p. 53."

§ 2169c. Same subject: effect of Harter act.—The rule stated under a prior section,[2] as well as that given under the last preceding one, is affected by the Harter act[3] to the extent that said act precludes the insertion in bills of lading of any covenant or agreement whereby the obligation of the shipowner to use due diligence in making the vessel seaworthy, fit and capable for performing her intended voyage is lessened or avoided and this applies to vessels engaged in the dressed beef trade where a refrigerating apparatus is necessary, and is therefore included in the warranty of seaworthiness, so that said act is violated by inserting in bills of lading, of a vessel employed in said trade, the "dressed beef clause" releasing said vessel from damages notwithstanding defects in the refrigerating apparatus whether they existed prior to or at the commencement of the voyage; and it must be shown that the owner has used due diligence to make the vessel seaworthy at the

[2] See § 2156 herein.

[3] 27 U. S. Stat. 445.

commencement of the voyage and this includes making the refrigerating plant reasonably fit for the intended uses thereof.[4]

§ 2170. Seaworthiness: estoppel against insurer: certificate of board of underwriters.—If an inspector of a local board of underwriters, to which the insurer belongs, issues, shortly prior to the attachment of the risk, and delivers to the manager of the insured, a certificate that he has made a thorough examination of the barge in question, and has found her in good order, and well conditioned, privileged to carry certain goods and merchandise to a certain amount on certain waters, and that goods and merchandise shipped on her will be insured at the usual rates of premium by the insurers composing said local board of underwriters for a specified time, subject to reinspection at any time, said certificate estops said insurer to question the seaworthiness of the barge, as against a shipper of the goods specified, who has relied thereon in making said shipments and in effecting said insurance.[5]

§ 2170a. Assurer's knowledge of condition of vessel and nature of risk.—Where there is no fraud or misrepresentation to induce assurer to accept the risk and it has full knowledge of the history of the vessel, her condition and all the facts from a written record on file in its office, and by reason of the increased hazard it charges a higher premium it is precluded from defending that said vessel is unseaworthy because she is lost by reason of rough water occasioned by wind and tide being against each other.[6] And where assurer before assuming the risk is fully informed as to all the circumstances, the character of the vessel and nature of the hazard, and exacts an additional premium for the risk, it cannot defeat a recovery on the ground of unseaworthiness.[7]

§ 2171. Successive voyages or stages of the voyage.—If a voyage consists of different parts, and not one entire voyage, or if there be successive stages before the vessel sails on her main voyage, a different complement of men or a different degree of seaworthiness may be sufficient for the several voyages, or for each stage of the voyage, but the vessel must be seaworthy for each voyage, or for each successive stage of a voyage, in a degree commensurate with her then risk.[8] And in case a policy upon a steamship where

[4] The Southwark, 191 U. S. 1, 48 L. ed. 65, 24 Sup. Ct. 1, explained in The Wildcroft, 201 U. S. 378, 50 L. ed. 794, 26 Sup. Ct. 467.

[5] Western Assurance Co. v. Southern Cotton Oil Co. 16 U. S. C. C. A. 67, 68 Fed. 924.

[6] Farmers' Feed Co. v. Ins. Co. of North America, 166 Fed. 111, 92 C. C. A. 95, aff'g 162 Fed. 379.

[7] Thebaud v. Great Western Ins. Co. 155 N. Y. 516, 50 N. E. 284, 27 Ins. L. J. 756, considered under § 2159 herein.

[8] Cobb v. New England Mutual Ins. Co. 6 Gray (72 Mass.) 192;

the length of the voyage is such that it must of necessity be divided into stages for the purpose of coaling, said vessel must, however, as between the shipowner and the assurer, at the commencement of each stage of the voyage, be seaworthy for that stage by being sufficiently provided with coal for that stage. The shipowner must show that he had sufficient coal for the whole voyage, or sufficient at the commencement of each stage, that the ship was seaworthy for that particular stage, otherwise he fails to defeat the prima facie inference of unseaworthiness.[9] Where the first part of the voyage is river navigation and the subsequent part a sea voyage, the vessel must, upon sailing on the latter, be seaworthy therefor.[10] If the ship may at her election pursue any part of her voyage she may choose, it is sufficient if she has a competent crew for such part of the adventure; as where the voyage was both sealing and whaling, and she pursued only sealing, for which purpose she had a sufficient crew, she was held seaworthy.[11] If the risk is to commence from the loading of the cargo on board ship at and from different ports, whereby there are separate voyages and different shipments therefor, the vessel must be seaworthy for each voyage.[12] It may be a question whether the voyage is entire or consists of Treadwell v. Union Ins. Co. 6 Cow. (N. Y.) 270; Bell v. Reed, 4 Binn. (Pa.) 127, 5 Am. Dec. 398; Dixon v. Sadler, 5 Mees. & W. 415, 9 L. J. Ex. 48, 14 Eng. Rul. Cas. 58, per Parke, B.; Bouillon v. Lupton, 33 L. J. C. P. 37, 15 Com. B. (N. S.) 113, 10 Jur. (N. S.) 422, 8 L. T. 575, 11 W. R. 966, 14 Eng. Rul. Cas. 72, 109 Eng. C. L. 113; Oliverson v. Loughman, 4 M. & S. 346, cited 2 Barn. & Ald. 322; Lane v. Nixon, L. R. 1 C. P. 412. As to seaworthiness where voyage consists of different stages, see article in 48 L. T. 84; 2 Chic. Leg. News, 107.

[9] Greenock Steamship Co. v. Maritime Ins. Co. [1903] 2 K. B. 657, 72 L. J. K. B. 868, 89 L. T. 200, 52 W. R. 186, 9 Com. Cas. 41, 9 Asp. M. C. 463, aff'g [1903] 1 K. B. 367, relying upon The Vortigern [1899] P. 140, 155, 68 L. J. P. 49, 80 L. T. 382, 47 W. R. 437, 8 Asp. M. C. 523. It was also declared in this case that: "I do not myself think that it very much matters what the policy is called—whether a time policy, or a voyage policy. One must look at the policy and see what was contemplated by the shipowner and the underwriters respectively, and whether having regard to what both parties contemplated, the ship was seaworthy," Vaughan Williams, L. J.

"Where the policy relates to a voyage which is performed in different stages, during which the ship requires different kinds of, or further preparation or equipment, there is an implied warranty that at the commencement of each stage the ship is seaworthy in respect of such preparation or equipment for the purposes of that stage." Marine insurance act 1906 (6 Edw. VII. c. 41) sec. 39 (3); Butterworth's Twentieth Century Stat. (1900–1909) p. 408.

[10] Quebec Marine Ins. Co. v. Commercial Bank of Canada, L. R. 3 C. P. 234, 39 L. J. P. C. 53, 22 L. T. 559.

[11] Hucks v. Thornton, 1 Holt N. P. 30, 17 R. R. 594, per Gibbs, C. J.

[12] Biccard v. Shepherd, 14 Moore P. C. 471, 5 L. T. N. S. 504, 10 W. R. 136.

separate voyages. If it be the former, the rule does not apply, although the voyage may consist of different parts.[13] This rule is, however, subject to such qualifications as exist in this country under the rules relating to continuing seaworthiness and repairs. The California code provides that "where different portions of the voyage contemplated by a policy differ in respect to the things requisite to make the ship seaworthy therefor, a warranty of seaworthiness is complied with if, at the commencement of each portion, the ship is seaworthy with reference to that portion." [14]

§ 2172. To what time the warranty of seaworthiness refers.—To what time the warranty of seaworthiness refers depends upon the character of the risk, and it is a point which has been much discussed whether any implied warranty of seaworthiness exists in time policies. The fact has also been considered important as to whether the insurance is upon ship or goods and freight, whether the policy is "from" or "at and from," or whether the voyage is entire, or consists of different parts or stages, reference being had to seaworthiness for the voyage. These points are fully considered in the several sections under this chapter, but it may be generally stated that seaworthiness must exist, as a condition precedent, at the commencement of the voyage insured; that is, at the time the vessel sails, and if the ship is not then seaworthy, the policy is void and insurers discharged, even though the loss arises from another cause; for unseaworthiness at the time of sailing is a good defense, and neither party in such a case is bound, and the premium if paid, must be returned. So also in certain cases the vessel must be seaworthy in port.[15] So it is held, both in England and in this country, that if the vessel sails in an unseaworthy condition, the underwriter is not liable, even though the vessel arrives safely at her destination.[16] But if the vessel is seaworthy

[13] See Van Valkenberg v. Astor Mutual Ins. Co. 1 Bosw. (14 N. Y.) 61; Holdsworth v. Wise, 1 Moody & R. 673, 7 Barn. & C. 794, 31 R. R. 299.

[14] Deering's Annot. Civ. Code Cal. sec. 2685.

[15] Pacific Coast Steamship Co. v. Bancroft-Whitney Co. 94 Fed. 180, 36 C. C. A. 135, rev'd on other points in Queen of the Pacific, 180 U. S. 49, 21 Sup. Ct. 278, 45 L. ed. 419; Scriba v. Insurance Co. of North America, 2 Wash. (U. S. C. C.) 107, Fed. Cas. No. 12,560; Merchants' Ins. Co. of Chicago v. Morrison, 62 Ill. 242, 14 Am. Rep. 93; Porter v. Bussey, 1 Mass. 436; Dudgeon v. Pembroke, 46 L. J. Ex. 409, 2 App. Cas. 284, 36 L. T. 382, 14 Eng. Rul. Cas. 105, 1 Q. B. D. Ex. 96; Forshaw v. Chabert, 3 Brod. & B. 158, 6 Moore, 369, 23 R. R. 596; Wedderburn v. Bell, 1 Camp. 1, 10 R. R. 615, per Lord Ellenborough; Knill v. Hooper, 2 Hurl. & N. 277, 26 L. J. Ex. 377, 5 W. R. 791; Quebec Marine Ins. Co. v. Commercial Bank of Canada, L. R. 3 C. P. 234, 39 L. J. P. C. 53, 22 L. T. 559; Christie v. Secretan, 8 Term Rep. 192, 198, per Lawrence, J.

[16] Stewart v. Wilson, 12 Mees. & W. 11, 13 L. J. Ex. 27, 7 Jur. 1020;

when she sails, it is a sufficient compliance with the warranty, even though she is lost shortly afterwards.[17] There are exceptions, however, to the principal rule above noted, which will be hereafter considered.

§ 2173. Continuing warranty as to seaworthiness: the English rule.—It seems to be settled in England that no continuing warranty of seaworthiness for the voyage is implied, but that it is a sufficient compliance with the warranty if the ship be seaworthy for the voyage insured when she first sails thereon, and this rule applies, where the voyage is entire, to a sailing from an intermediate port, or from an outport during a subsequent stage of the voyage.[18]

§ 2174. Continuing warranty as to seaworthiness: the rule in this country.—In this country the rule as to a continuing warranty of seaworthiness differs from the English rule, and is apparently in conflict with the general rule stated elsewhere, that if the loss is proximately caused by a peril insured against, the remote cause of the loss will not be a defense even though ascribable to the mere negligence of the master and crew, and even though such negligence primarily caused the unseaworthiness. We may, however, state the following as the rule which obtains here: In the

Prescott v. Union Ins. Co. 1 Whart. (Pa.) 399, 30 Am. Dec. 207.

[17] Treat v. Union Ins. Co. 56 Me. 231, 96 Am. Dec. 447; Stephenson v. Piscataqua Fire & Marine Ins. Co. 54 Me. 55; Martin v. Fishing Ins. Co. 20 Pick. (37 Mass.) 389, 32 Am. Dec. 220; Treadwell v. Union Ins. Co. 6 Cow. (N. Y.) 270; Walsh v. Washington Marine Ins. Co. 32 N. Y. 427; Patrick v. Hallett, 1 Johns. (N. Y.) 241; Miller v. Russel, 1 Bay (S. C.) 309; Franco v. Natusch, 6 Tyrw. 401.

[18] Dixon v. Sadler, 5 Mees. & W. 415, 9 L. J. Ex. 48, 14 Eng. Rul. Cas. 58, 8 Mees. & W. 895, 900, 14 Eng. Rul. Cas. 63, per Parke, B.; Bermon v. Woodbridge, 2 Doug. *781, 14 Eng. Rul. Cas. 507, per Lord Mansfield; Holdsworth v. Wise, 7 Barn. & C. 794; Eden v. Parkinson, Doug. 732, per Lord Mansfield; Watson v. Clarke ("The Midsummer Blossom"), 1 Dow P. C. 344, 14 R. R. 73, 14 Eng. Rul. Cas. 50; Parfitt v. Thompson, 13 Mees. & W. 392, 14 L. J. Ex. 73; 1 Arnould on Marine Ins. (Perkins' ed. 1850) 657, *656, sec. 244; Id. (Maclachlan's ed. 1887) 652 et seq. 659; 2 Id. (8th ed. Hart & Simey) sec. 691, p. 848. But see Phillips v. Headlam, 2 Barn. & Adol. 380, 382, 9 L. J. (O. S.) K. B. 238; Thompson v. Hopper, 6 El. & B. 172, 27 L. J. Q. B. 441, 6 W. R. 857, per Lord Campbell. Mr. Parsons states the English rule as follows: "We suppose the law in England at this time to be that if a ship which is seaworthy at the commencement of the voyage subsequently becomes unseaworthy from any cause whatever, other than the willful and wrongful act of the insured himself, this subsequent unseaworthiness will not discharge the insurer from his liability for a loss subsequent to the unseaworthiness, if that loss be the direct and proximate cause of a peril insured against:" 1 Parsons on Marine Ins. (ed. 1868) 382, 383; citing Marshall on Ins. (Shee's ed.) 122; Gibson v. Small, 4 H. L. Cas. 353, 1 C. L. R. 363, 17 Jur. 1131, 14 Eng. Rul. Cas. 86.

absence of anything in the policy to the contrary, if a defect of seaworthiness subsequently arises, the assured or the master, or those who may, under the circumstances, be held to be his agents, must make the vessel seaworthy, or restore her to a seaworthy condition during the period of the risk, so far as the same may reasonably be done by the exercise, in good faith, of due diligence, proper care, and reasonable discretion, in view of all the circumstances, and if through a want of such prudence and diligence by assured or his agents a loss occurs, which distinctly appears to have been directly caused thereby, the assurer is not liable, although the contract is not affected as to any other risk or loss covered by the policy, nor increased or caused by, such particular defect, and if the loss is not connected with such unseaworthiness so caused, the insurer is nevertheless liable; as where the vessel is not repaired, or only temporarily repaired at an intermediate port, the master, in the exercise of good faith and reasonable discretion, under the circumstances, deeming no repairs or only temporary repairs necessary at that port, and the subsequent loss of the vessel is in no way connected with such failure to repair, the insurer is nevertheless liable. There is nothing in the above rule to prevent the assured from making out a prima facie case, by showing that the vessel was seaworthy at the commencement of the voyage.[19] In the following case, while the general rule is followed as to losses remotely caused by the negligence of the master and mariners, it is held that the insurer is discharged by proof that the efficient and direct cause of encountering the peril is the failure on the part of the assured to act in good faith toward the insurer, or to exercise ordinary prudence in the management, navigation, and care of the vessel, for the underwriter cannot be held for losses by the peril insured against directly caused by the fraud or gross misconduct of the assured; that the latter is obligated, under the warranty of seaworthiness, to exercise such a sufficient degree of care as to secure competent officers and a crew, but that the burden rests upon the underwriter to satisfy the jury, beyond a reasonable [19] United States.—Union Ins. Co. v. Smith, 124 U. S. 405, 31 L. ed. 497, 8 Sup. Ct. 53, per Blatchford, J.; The Titania, 19 Fed. 101.

Louisiana.—Lapene v. Sun Mutual Ins. Co. 8 La. Ann. 1, 58 Am. Dec. 668; McDowell v. General Mutual Ins. Co. 7 La. Ann. 684, 56 Am. Dec. 619; Dupeyre v. Western Ins. Co. 2 Rob. (La.) 457, 38 Am. Dec. 218.

Massachusetts.—Starbuck v. New England Ins. Co. 19 Pick. (36 Mass.) 198; Paddock v. Franklin Ins. Co. 11 Pick. (28 Mass.) 227, per Shaw, C. J.

Ohio.—Franklin Ins. Co. v. Cobb, 2 Cin. Sup. Ct. 87.

Pennsylvania.—Peters v. Phœnix Ins. Co. 3 Serg. & R. (Pa.) 25.

South Carolina. — Cudworth v. South Carolina Ins. Co. 4 Rich. Law (S. C.) 416, 55 Am. Dec. 692. In this case the insured was owner and master.

doubt, that the master designedly cast away and destroyed his vessel in a case where the defense rests upon such facts, and that it was not the position of the party, but the character of the fact upon which the degree of proof rested.[20] So it is held that insurers are not liable for the neglect of the master in not causing the false keel to be repaired, whereby the vessel became exposed to the action of worms, which obtained entrance while in the Pacific Ocean, and destroyed the ship, and this was held to release the insurers.[1] It is held that seaworthiness is limited to the commencement of the risk, and that the insurer is not released by the fact that the vessel afterward becomes unseaworthy.[2] If the contract assumes risks only "on all cotton seed in bulk or in bags owned by the assured, or consigned to them and shipped to their address in New Orleans on board good and seaworthy steamboats and barges," there is no contract, express or implied, that after shipment the steamboat or barge shall continue in a seaworthy condition.[3] Where the owner of a river steamer contracted for her employment in respondent's service for a specified time, guaranteeing that the vessel should have the underwriter's certificate as to her seaworthiness, and it was given at the commencement of the service, but withdrawn during her service, it was held that the guaranty was a continuing one, extending over the entire period of employment, not limited to the beginning thereof.[4]

§ 2175. Continuing warranty as to seaworthiness: time policies. —We have already considered the question whether there is any implied warranty of seaworthiness in time policies,[5] and the un-

[20] Shultz v. Pacific Ins. Co. 14 Fla. 73 (but quære, as to the "reasonable doubt"); Marshall v. Thames Fire Ins. Co. 43 Mo. 586; Kane v. Hibernia Ins. Co. 39 N. J. L. 697, 23 Am. Rep. 239.

[1] Hazard v. New England Marine Ins. Co. 1 Sum. (U. S. C. C.) 218, rev'd 8 Pet. (33 U. S.) 557, 8 L. ed. 1043, Fed. Cas. No. 6,282. See § 2797, and chapter LXXIII. herein.

[2] American Ins. Co. v. Ogden, 15 Wend. (N. Y.) 532, 533; Peters v. Phœnix Ins. Co. 3 Serg. & R. (Pa.) 25.

Under the California code an implied warranty of seaworthiness is complied with if the ship be seaworthy at the time of the commencement of the risk, except, where the policy is on time, the vessel must be seaworthy at the commencement of every voyage, and except also where goods are transshipped at an intermediate port under the terms of the policy or the description of the voyage or the established custom of trade, in which latter case the vessel on which the cargo is shipped or transshipped must be seaworthy at the commencement of its particular voyage: Deering's Annot. Civ. Code Cal. sec. 2683.

[3] So declared in Western Assurance Co. v. Southern Cotton Oil Co. 16 U. S. C. C. A. 67, per Pardee, J., 68 Fed. 924. See 16 U. S. C. C. A. 65, 68 Fed. 923.

[4] Whipple v. Mississippi & Yazoo Packet Co. 34 Fed. 54.

[5] See §§ 2152–54 herein.

settled state of the law in that respect necessitates an inquiry whether there is a continuing warranty of seaworthiness in time policies, and if so, its extent.[6] It is held that there is an implied obligation under a time policy to keep the vessel tight, strong, and staunch as far as practicable during the voyage, although it is declared in the same case that there is no continuing warranty of seaworthiness.[7] In another case in the United States Supreme Court it is held that although the warranty is complied with in time policies if the vessel is seaworthy at the commencement of the risk, yet if a subsequently arising defect as to seaworthiness is, through the bad faith or want of ordinary prudence or diligence on the part of assured or his agents, permitted to continue, the insurer is discharged as to any loss directly arising therefrom, but as to the other risks or losses covered by the policy, and not increased or occasioned by unseaworthiness, the underwriter is not discharged and that if the want of ordinary care is alleged by insurer, it must be proved by him.[8] It is held, however, that where a vessel sustains a loss by a peril insured against, receives partial repairs, and makes several trips in an unseaworthy condition, that the insurer is not discharged, for the liability was fixed while she was seaworthy.[9] In New York, it is declared that there is an implied warranty to keep the vessel seaworthy while the risk continues, so far as "reasonably possible," and necessitates "active diligence" in this respect, but this rule, taken in connection with the other language of the court immediately preceding such declaration, must be intended to be limited to those cases where the vessel leaves the port where the vessel is insurd.[10] So in another case in that state the vessel lost her small bower anchor in entering an intermediate port, and the master endeavored to replace it, but was unable to procure one of sufficient size, and set sail therefrom,

[6] "Where an insurance is made for a specified length of time, the implied warranty is not complied with unless the ship be seaworthy at the commencement of every voyage she may undertake during that time:" Deering's Annot. Civ. Code Cal. sec. 2683.

[7] Capen v. Washington Ins. Co. 66 Mass. 517.

[8] Union Ins. Co. v. Smith, 124 U. S. 405, 8 Sup. Ct. 534, 31 L. ed. 497, per Blatchford, J. In this case there was an exception of liability for loss consequent upon incompetency of the master and want of care and skill in navigating the vessel, rottenness, inherent defects and all other unseaworthiness. The vessel, a tug, which had sprung a leak, was made seaworthy to be towed and was attempted to be towed to a port of repairs and passed two other ports where she might have been repaired, and recovery for a loss occurring before she reached the intended port of repairs was had.

[9] Gazzam v. Cincinnati Ins. Co. 6 Ohio, 71.

[10] Berwind v. Greenwich Ins. Co. 114 N. Y. 231, 234, 21 N. E. 151.

unseaworthy in this respect. It was held that, having been originally seaworthy, sailing from an intermediate port in such unseaworthy condition did not discharge the underwriter.[11] In Wisconsin, it is declared that assured is obligated from time to time to keep the vessel in a condition suitable for the service required, and the underwriter is not liable if a loss is occasioned by the failure so to do; but in this case the vessel left port with insufficient ballast, which ordinary care and prudence justified procuring, and capsized, and the case was submitted to the jury.[12] It certainly is not unreasonable to require that where the vessel leaves port at the inception of the risk she should be seaworthy under a time policy,[13] and that she should be kept in that condition within the limits of the rule stated under the last section; there being nothing in the policy to warrant a different construction.[14]

§ 2176. Continuing warranty as to seaworthiness: repairs.—If a vessel which is originally seaworthy becomes unseaworthy during the voyage, and the master, who is owner of the vessel, neglects to repair her at a port of refuge or trade, or other port which he has entered, and, in consequence thereof, the vessel leaves port in an unseaworthy condition, and the loss is caused directly by such neglect, and not otherwise, the insurers are released.[15] This rule has also been extended to repairs by the master[16] where he has reasonable cause for suspecting the existence of defects, or where he has knowledge of the same, and has reasonable grounds for the belief that such repairs are necessary to enable her to proceed on her voyage,[17] or if the defect be of such a character that a pru-

[11] In this case the insured vessel sustained damage from perils of the sea, but reached port and discharged her cargo: American Ins. Co. v. Ogden, 20 Wend. (N. Y.) 287.

[12] Merchants' Mutual Ins. Co. v. Sweet, 6 Wis. 670.

[13] See § 2154 herein.

[14] See §§ 2151–53 herein, and next section.

[15] Cudworth v. South Carolina Ins. Co. 4 Rich. (S. C.) 416, 55 Am. Dec. 692; McDowell v. General Mutual Ins. Co. 7 La. Ann. 684, 56 Am. Dec. 619. See Putnam v. Wood, 3 Mass. 481. "When a ship becomes unseaworthy during the voyage to which an insurance relates, an unreasonable delay in repairing exonerates the insurer from any loss arising therefrom:" Deering's Annot. Civ. Code Cal. sec. 2686.

[16] United States.—Jones v. Insurance Co. 2 Wall. Jr. (U. S. C. C.) 278, Fed. Cas. No. 7,470.

Massachusetts.—Copeland v. New England Mutual Ins. Co. 2 Met. (43 Mass.) 432, 439, per Shaw, C. J.; Deblois v. Ocean Ins. Co. 16 Pick. (33 Mass.) 303, 308, 28 Am. Dec. 245; Paddock v. Franklin Ins. Co. 11 Pick. (28 Mass.) 227.

New York. — Berwind v. Greenwich Ins. Co. 114 N. Y. 231, 234, 21 N. E. 151.

Wisconsin. — Merchants' Mutual Ins. Co. v. Sweet, 6 Wis. 670.

[17] Starbuck v. New England Mutual Ins. Co. 19 Pick. (36 Mass.) 198.

dent and discreet master of competent skill and judgment would consider it necessary to examine and repair before leaving port to continue the voyage.[18] But if a competent master, in the exercise of a reasonable discretion as a prudent man, and in good faith, omits to examine and repair the vessel, or if he partially repairs her under such conditions, deeming her seaworthy for the rest of the voyage, and runs her in an unseaworthy state, the neglect to repair does not release the insurers.[19] These decisions may probably rest upon the ground that the master is the agent or representative of the owner for the purpose of making repairs,[20] although it is directly held that the master and mariners are not the servants of the assured, so as to bind him by their negligent acts or improper exercise of judgment in leaving port with a vessel in an unseaworthy condition, when she was originally seaworthy.[1] The rule requiring repairs by the master has also been applied to time policies.[2] But in all the above cases the loss must have been directly attributable to the insufficiency, or master's neglect or omission to repair, and not otherwise.[3] The fact of original seaworthiness of a vessel does not constitute prima facie evidence that a necessity for subsequent repairs has arisen from some extraordinary peril.[4] If there is a condition that repairs be made to a vessel, the insured is obligated to make the necessary repairs before exposing the vessel again to the perils of navigation.[5] And it is held that although there is an implied warranty that a vessel will be kept in repair and maintained in a seaworthy condition, [18] Adderly v. American Mutual Ins. Co. Taney (U. S. C. C.) 126, Fed. Cas. No. 75.

[19] Gazzam v. Cincinnati Ins. Co. 6 Ohio, 71; Hathaway v. Sun Mutual Ins. Co. 8 Bosw. (21 N. Y.) 33.

[20] Union Ins. Co. v. Smith, 124 U. S. 405, 31 L. ed. 497, 8 Sup. Ct. 534, per Blatchford, J.; Jones v. Insurance Co. 2 Wall. Jr. (U. S. C. C.) 278, Fed. Cas. No. 7,470; Hazard v. New England Mutual Ins. Co. 8 Pet. (33 U. S.) 557, 8 L. ed. 1043, 1 Sum. (U. S. C. C.) 218, 230, Fed. Cas. No. 6,282; Copeland v. New England Mutual Ins. Co. 2 Met. (43 Mass.) 432, per Shaw, C. J.; Paddock v. Franklin Ins. Co. 11 Pick. (28 Mass.) 227, 236; American Ins. Co. v. Ogden, 20 Wend. (N. Y.) 287, 301, per Walworth, Ch.; 1 Phillips on Ins. (3d ed.) 402, sec. 732.

[1] Brioso v. Pacific Mutual Ins. Co. 4 Daly (N. Y.) 246, citing Redman v. Wilson, 14 Mees. & W. 476; Waters v. Merchants' Ins. Co. 11 Pet. (36 U. S.) 213, 9 L. ed. 69; Matthews v. Howard Ins. Co. 11 N. Y. 9.

[2] Jones v. Insurance Co. 2 Wall. Jr. (U. S. C. C.) 278, Fed. Cas. No. 7,470; Union Ins. Co. v. Smith, 124 U. S. 405, 31 L. ed. 497, 8 Sup. Ct. 534, per Blatchford, J.; Hathaway v. Sun Mutual Ins. Co. 8 Bosw. (21 N. Y. 33.

[3] Copeland v. New England Marine Ins. Co. 2 Met. (43 Mass.) 432, 439, per Shaw, C. J.

[4] Donnell v. Columbian Ins. Co. 2 Sum. (U. S. C. C.) 366, Fed. Cas. No. 3,987.

[5] Hyde v. Mississippi Mutual Fire Ins. Co. 10 La. Ann. 543, 29 Am. Dec. 465.

so far as the same can be done by active diligence and prudent conduct, it does not excuse a breach of warranty that the vessel shall be securely moored in safety during the winter where, although the boat is in a leaky condition, still there is no immediate danger of sinking, and there is no unusual damage and the breach could have been avoided by notice to assurer.[6] Underwriters on cargo are not relieved on account of the neglect of the master to make repairs at an intermediate port at which she is unseaworthy except where the cargo or outfits are owned by the owner of the vessel.[7]

§ 2177. Whether cases as to necessity for repairs can be reconciled with other doctrines and cases apparently in conflict therewith.—It will be seen by an examination of the cases relating to seaworthiness in time policies in this country,[8] and of those relating to the negligence of the master and crew,[9] that there is an apparent want of harmony between them and the cases noted under this and the preceding section. The principal difficulty exists in the attempt to cover by the term "seaworthiness" one standard as to the fitness, equipment, and manning at the time of sailing, and another standard as to her fitness and equipment during the voyage, while, in the latter case the term "seaworthiness," strictly construed, does not properly apply, for it is not an absolute seaworthiness within the meaning of that warranty, as interpreted by the courts. If we say that, independently of the warranty of seaworthiness as to the vessel, its equipment, its officers and crew, there is an implied condition or warranty that due diligence and discretion, such as a prudent man would exercise in his own affairs, shall be used to ascertain defects which unfit the vessel for continuing her voyage with reasonable safety, and also to repair her as may be necessary in the exercise of a reasonable discretion for continuing her voyage, a ground for reconciling the cases appears. The proviso, however, is that if the want of repairs arising from the failure or neglect to exercise proper diligence and discretion is the direct or proximate cause of loss, then the assurer shall be released, but if the loss arises from a peril insured against, the assured may recover, since the assurer is liable where a peril insured against is the proximate cause of loss; but if the failure or neglect to repair under the conditions

[6] Ryan v. Providence-Washington Ins. Co. 79 N. Y. Supp. 460, 79 App. Div. 316.

[7] Morse v. St. Paul Fire & Marine Ins. Co. (U. S. C. C.) 122 Fed. 748 (criticising Union Ins. Co. v. Smith, 124 U. S. 405, 427, 8 Sup. Ct. 534, 31 L. ed. 497) s. c. (U. S. C. C.) 124 Fed. 451, s. c. (U. S. C. C.) 129 Fed. 233.

[8] See § 2153 herein.

[9] See § 2167 herein.

above stated can reasonably be said to have been the cause of loss, it is the proximate cause, even though that cause is a peril insured against. The maxim, non remota causa sed proxima spectatur, applies.[10]

§ 2177a. Moored in safety: breach of warranty: repairs.—Where a steam canal boat, insured against fire and maritime perils, is warranted to be securely moored in a safe place during the winter, the insurer to be duly notified as to time and place when so laid up, there is a breach of warranty if said boat, without giving the required notice, is, because of her leaky condition, removed during the winter from her moorings for the purpose of unloading, repairing and making her seaworthy, and in such case neither the sue and labor clause, nor the implied duty to keep the vessel in a seaworthy condition, aids assured.[11]

§ 2178. Assurer's approval of ship at port of departure: subsequent repairs.—If, under a stipulation therefor, the assurer approves of a vessel at a port of departure, and inspection is only made there, no obligation is thereby imposed upon assured to put the vessel in as good a condition at intermediate ports as she was when inspected.[12]

§ 2179. Subsequent noncompliance as to seaworthiness no retrospective effect.—If a vessel has sailed in a seaworthy condition for the voyage, a subsequent noncompliance with the warranty cannot have a retrospective effect, so as to excuse the insurer for a loss occurring prior to such noncompliance; for the subsequent seaworthiness contemplated by the rule above noted[13] does not go to the extent of holding the warranty so far a continuing one as to be a condition precedent in this respect.[14]

§ 2180. Vessel seaworthy for port.—The vessel may be seaworthy for port, the degree being commensurate with her then safety, whether for temporary purposes, or moving about in the harbor, or undergoing repairs, or lying in the offing, and even though her state of repair and equipment be such as to constitute unseaworthiness for the voyage.[15] And while every ship must, at [10] See Copeland v. New England Mutual Ins. Co. 2 Met. (43 Mass.) 432, 439, per Shaw, C. J., where a suggestion is made which could reasonably form the basis of the distinction in the text.

[11] Ryan v. Providence Washington Ins. Co. 79 N. Y. Supp. 460, 79 App. Div. 316. See § 2073 herein.

[12] Marine Fire Ins. Co. v. Burnett, 29 Tex. 433.

[13] See § 2174 herein.

[14] See §§ 1952–55 herein; 1 Phillips on Ins. (3d ed.) 401, sec. 730.

[15] M'Lanahan v. Universal Ins. Co. 1 Pet. (26 U. S.) 170, 184, 7 L. ed. 98, per Story, J.; Paddock v. Franklin Ins. Co. 11 Pick. (28 Mass.) 227; Taylor v. Lowell, 3 Mass. 331, 3 Am. Dec. 141; Smith v. Surridge, 4 Esp. 25, 6 R. R. 837; Forbes v. Wilson, reported in 1 Marshall on Ins. (ed. 1810) *155; Parmeter v. Cousins, 2 Camp. 235, 257, 11 R. R. 702, 13

the commencement of the voyage, possess the qualities of seaworthiness, still, a policy on the ship "at and from a port" will attach, though the vessel be undergoing extensive repairs at a port.[16] If a time policy is effected on a vessel in port, and she is seaworthy for port on the day the risk commences, the policy attaches.[17] It is held in Massachusetts that the assured on cargo or freight does not warrant that the vessel is seaworthy for the voyage at the time of taking the cargo on board, but only that she is seaworthy at the time of sailing, and that under a policy "at and from," if the goods are loaded, and the vessel having sailed is subsequently compelled to return to port, unload her cargo for repairs, and reload, that the policy attaches from the first loading, and that the underwriters are liable on the return to port and during the subsequent homeward voyage, and this extends to freight insured.[18] Notwithstanding the strong character of this authority, a different rule is asserted by Mr. Phillips, who says that the seaworthiness of the ship depends upon the uses and purposes to which it is applied, and that if an insurance is upon cargo and freight, and the goods are loaded for the voyage when the ship is in so defective a state that the cargo must be relanded to make repairs, the risk does not attach on the cargo if it is to commence at the time of loading; but he adds, referring to the Massachusetts case,[19] that the noncompliance was at an intermediate stage of the risk, and there was nothing to prevent the attachment of the risk at the time of reloading upon repairs.[20] In a case where cargo was

Eng. Rul. Cas. 608; Anner v. Woodman, 3 Taunt. 299, 12 R. R. 263; Dixon v. Sadler, 5 Mees. & W. 415, 9 L. J. Ex. 48, 14 Eng. Rul. Cas. 58, per Parke, B. See chapters on attachment and duration of risk, ship, goods, and freight, §§ 1483 et seq., 1523 et seq., 1562 et seq., 1606 et seq. herein.

"Where the policy attaches while the ship is in port, there is also an implied warranty that she shall, at the commencement of the risk, be reasonably fit to encounter the ordinary perils of the port." Marine insurance act 1906 (6 Edw. VII. c. 41) sec. 39 (2); Butterworth's Twentieth Century Stat. (1900–1909) p. 408.

[16] M'Lanahan v. Universal Ins. Co. 1 Pet. (26 U. S.) 170, 7 L. ed. 98.

Cited in The Gentlemen, Olcott (U. S. C. C.) 115, Fed. Cas. No. 5,324; Higgle v. National Lloyds, 11 Biss. (U. S. C. C.) 401, 14 Fed. 148; Lapene v. New York Sun Mutual Ins. Co. 8 La. Ann. 3, 58 Am. Dec. 668; St. Victor Barrett v. New York General Mutual Ins. Co. 8 La. Ann. 103; Mead v. Northwestern Ins. Co. 7 N. Y. 536.

[17] Hoxie v. Pacific Mutual Ins. Co. 7 Allen (89 Mass.) 211. See Dallam v. Insurance Co. 6 Phila. (Pa.) 15.

[18] Taylor v. Lowell, 3 Mass. 331, 3 Am. Dec. 141; Merchants' Ins. Co. v. Clapp, 11 Pick. (28 Mass.) 56; Paddock v. Franklin Ins. Co. 11 Pick. (28 Mass.) 227. See Motteux v. London Assur. Co. 1 Atk. 545, 13 Eng. Rul. Cas. 467, per Lord Hardwicke.

[19] Taylor v. Lowell, 3 Mass. 331, 3 Am. Dec. 141.

[20] 1 Phillips on Ins. (3d ed.) 394, 395, secs. 721–23.

insured "at and from" North Carolina to New York, the assurers were precluded from showing that the vessel was unseaworthy prior to crossing the boundary line of North Carolina, it being held sufficient if she was then seaworthy.[1] It is also held that under an insurance "at and from," a warranty of seaworthiness must be referred to the commencement of the risk, and if between that time and the time of sailing the vessel becomes unfit for sea without the fault of the insured, and is afterward lost by the perils of the sea, the insured can recover.[2] It would undoubtedly be true, upon analogy with principles established in other cases, that if the risk commences on the cargo and freight at the first loading of the goods, that the vessel must be and continue, while in port, seaworthy in a degree commensurate with her then risk. Whether the Massachusetts rule or Mr. Phillips' rule be held the true one as to the attachment of risk upon a cargo which has been loaded, unloaded for repairs, and reshipped, it would probably not be doubted that a ship must be in such a seaworthy condition as to receive the cargo without injury thereto.[3] But such a case may be distinguished from those on which the Massachusetts doctrine is based, for a ship may be fitted to receive the cargo without injury while lying in port, and the cargo may be unloaded, the ship reported to be seaworthy for the voyage, and the cargo reshipped without injury or damage thereto; if the ship is in a suitable condition to carry the cargo put on board, or intended to be put on board, she is seaworthy.[4]

§ 2181. Whether original unseaworthiness may be cured before loss.—A question has arisen whether original unseaworthiness may be cured before loss, so that the underwriter will be liable for the loss. Mr. Phillips, referring to seaworthiness, says: "This warranty is not violated so as to defeat the insurance by merely incidental, temporary deficiency at the commencement of the risk, in fitness for the voyage, that may be easily remedied, and soon is so in fact."[5] This writer, however, declares in another section

[1] Treadwell v. Union Ins. Co. 6 Cow. (N. Y.) 270.

[2] Garrigues v. Coxe, 1 Binn. (Pa.) 592, 2 Am. Dec. 493.

[3] Stanton v. Richardson, 45 L. J. C. P. 78, 33 L. T. 193, 3 Asp. M. C. 23, L. R. C. P. 421, 9 C. P. 390, 5 Eng. Rul. Cas. 632. "A ship which is seaworthy for the purpose of an insurance upon the ship may nevertheless, by reason of being unfitted to receive the cargo, be unseaworthy for the purpose of insurance upon the cargo:" Deering's Annot. Civ. Code Cal. sec. 2687.

[4] Schultz v. Pacific Ins. Co. 14 Fla. 73.

[5] 1 Phillips on Ins. (3d ed.) 397, sec. 726; citing United States v. Hunt, 2 Story (U. S. C. C.) 120, 121, Fed. Cas. No. 15,423; Taylor v. Lowell, 3 Mass. 331, 3 Am. Dec. 141; Merchants' Ins. Co. v. Clapp, 11 Pick. (28 Mass.) 56; Stanwood v. Rich, Sup. Ct. Mass. Suff. Nov. 1817; Deblois v. Ocean Ins. Co. 16 Pick. (33 that if the vessel is unseaworthy, "owing to some material deficiency," at the time referred to by the warranty, tho underwriter is discharged.[6] We doubt the legality or practicability of a rule which attempts in policies "from" to distinguish between a "material deficiency" and an "incidental temporary deficiency," in connection with the warranty of seaworthiness at the commencement of the risk, in view of all that term implies. The vessel is or is not seaworthy for the voyage at the time to which the warranty relates. If the "incidental deficiency" is such a sufficient factor of seaworthiness that, if it were not remedied before loss, the warranty would be broken, it is just as much material as any other factor of seaworthiness, and to admit an exception in such a case would open the door to numerous encroachments upon the rule, and leave much ground for fraud as well. If the exception be admitted that an "incidental, temporary deficiency at the commencement of the risk" can be cured before loss, then the same reason exists for holding the insurers liable in case want of seaworthiness originally existing is cured before loss, thereby leaving the question merely one whether the vessel was unseaworthy at the time of loss, instead of at the time of sailing. The rule stated by Mr. Phillips differs from the case of a risk attaching in part under a policy at and from, and also differs from the case where a vessel originally seaworthy becomes unseaworthy after the commencement of the risk, and rests upon different principles. To hold that the vessel may remedy before loss an unseaworthy condition existing at the commencement of the risk overthrows the rule that seaworthiness when the vessel sails is a condition precedent, and it is held in a case in point that where the vessel's boiler was defective at the time she sailed, so as to make her unseaworthy, that the fact that the defect was remedied before loss could not aid assured.[7] In a Louisiana case, however, the vessel sailed from port short of water, and stopped to obtain it, and was subsequently lost by a peril wholly disconnected with the original unseaworthiness, and the insurers were held liable.[8]

Mass.) 303, 28 Am. Dec. 245; Chase v. Eagle Ins. Co. 5 Pick. (22 Mass.) 51; McMillan v. Union Ins. Co. Rice (S. C.) 248, 249, 33 Am. Dec. 112; Weir v. Aberdeen, 2 Barn. & Ald. 320, 20 R. R. 450. He says Mr. Justice Story intimates a doubt of this last case in M'Lanahan v. Universal Ins. Co. 1 Pet. (26 U. S.) 170, 184, 7 L. ed. 98. Mr. Parsons reviews these cases, and concludes that they do not support Mr. Phillips' rule (1 Parsons on Marine Ins. [ed. 1868] 378, 379), and a careful examination of the same cases warrants that conclusion.

[6] 1 Phillips on Ins. (3d ed.) 381, sec. 696.

[7] Quebec Marine Ins. Co. v. Commercial Bank of Canada, L. R. 3 P. C. 234.

[8] Lapene v. Sun Mutual Ins. Co. 8 La. Ann. 1, 58 Am. Dec. 668. Regarding risks immaterial to peril

§ 2182. Policy at and from vessel sailing unseaworthy: may defect be remedied before loss?—It is an important question whether, under a policy at and from, the risk having attached in port, the sailing of a vessel in a state of unseaworthiness imputable to the assured discharges the insurers, or whether it may be remedied before loss. The main question is, Is the risk divisible to the extent that, although the vessel must be seaworthy for port to a degree commensurate with her then risk, must she also be absolutely seaworthy for her voyage when she sails? Or may the doctrine of temporary suspension and removal of the risk, the policy having already attached in port, be applied, holding the insurers liable for a loss occurring after the unseaworthiness existing at the time of sailing has been remedied? It is held in England that, under a policy at and from, the fact that the vessel sails in an unseaworthy condition for the voyage, she having been seaworthy for port, does not ab initio avoid the policy so as to entitle assured to a return of the premium.[9] In another English case under a policy at and from the actual decision was that the underwriter had clearly waived an unseaworthiness which existed when the vessel first sailed, since they had consented in writing that the defect might be remedied, and that she might proceed a second time on her voyage, and the insurers were, therefore, held liable, the loss happening through another and entirely different cause.[10] It appears that the claim was made in this last case that the vessel having once sailed in an unseaworthy condition for the voyage this fact wholly put an end to the underwriter's liability on the policy, and Lord Tenterden is reported to have declared in answer to this claim that if a vessel, at the commencement of her voyage, is, by mistake or accident, unseaworthy, by reason of some defect which is immediately discovered and remedied before loss, the underwriters are nevertheless liable, since there would be many from which injury is received, see American Ins. Co. v. Ogden, 15 Wend. (N. Y.) 532. See 3 Kent's Commentaries (5th ed.) 289. Two cases are cited by the court: In the Louisiana case, in the first, it was held that the warranty is confined to the commencement of the risk, and if the vessel is then seaworthy the insurer is not bound, although he is liable for unseaworthiness subsequently arising. In the second case (American Ins. Co. v. Ogden, 20 Wend. (N. Y.) 287) the risk under a time policy had attached, and the vessel left an intermediate port without replacing a small anchor which had been lost, but which the master had exercised due diligence to provide.

[9] Annen v. Woodman, 3 Taunt. 299, 12 R. R. 663. See Christie v. Secretan, 8 Term Rep. 192, 198, per Lawrence, J.

[10] Weir v. Aberdein, 2 Barn. & Ald. 320, 20 R. R. 450; Quebec Marine Ins. Co. v. Commercial Bank of Canada, L. R. 3 P. C. 234, 244, 39 L. J. P. C. 53, 22 L. T. 559, 18 W. R. 769, per Lord Penzance.

cases "where it would turn out that the assured could have no claim upon the underwriters, because something was wanting or something excessive at the instant of the ship's departure, although the want had been supplied or the excess removed before the loss happened." [11] Although the actual decision was based upon a waiver, yet in view of the fact that the above statement was made in direct answer to a claim by the underwriters, it may not unreasonably be construed as intended to apply in those cases of the character mentioned where the policy is at and from, the risk having attached and the defect remedied before loss, the loss being wholly disconnected with the unseaworthiness. We do not say, however, that this is the law, but only that such conclusion may be fairly deduced from the case; nevertheless, outside of this decision, the rule in England seems to be that if a vessel under a policy at and from sails in an unseaworthy condition for the voyage, the underwriter is discharged, though the policy has attached in or "at" port.[12] In a Massachusetts case, in an action to recover the premium, the ship, under a policy "at and from," sailed in an unseaworthy condition, but returned to port, discharged her cargo, was repaired, and cargo reshipped, when she again sailed, and the policy was held to have attached "at" port, and the insurer's liability to have continued on return to port, and subsequently on her voyage homeward, and that no return of premium could be had; [13] and to substantially the same effect is another case in the same state, under a policy on cargo and freight at and from.[14] The principle underlying the English cases seems, with perhaps the exception of the case from which Lord Tenterden's remarks above noted are taken, that there are really two warranties as to seaworthiness one of which attaches while the ship is in port,

[11] Weir v. Aberdein, 2 Barn. & Ald. 320, 20 R. R. 450, per Lord Tenterden.

[12] Knill v. Hooper, 2 Hurl. & N. 277, 26 L. J. Ex. 377; Wedderburn v. Bell, 1 Camp. 1, 10 R. R. 615; 1 Arnould on Marine Ins. (Perkins' ed. 1850) 675, *672; Id. (Maclachlan's ed. 1887) 665, where it is said: "Of course, if she ultimately sails unseaworthy for the voyage, this, according to the rule already laid down, wholly discharges the underwriters from all liability for loss on the voyage, although the policy may have attached on her while 'at' the port, owing to her having been there seaworthy for her other risk:" Citing Parker v. Potts, 3 Dow, 23, 27, 15 R. R. 1, per Parke arguendo in Watson v. Clark, 1 Dow, 344, 14 R. R. 73, 14 Eng. Rul. Cas. 50, see also 2 Arnould on Marine Ins. (8th ed. Hart & Simey) sec. 698, p. 857; sec. 714, p. 875. Examine 1 Marshall on Ins. (ed. 1810) 208, reporting Gilbert v. Redshaw.

[13] Taylor v. Lowell, 3 Mass. 331, 3 Am. Dec. 141. See Christie v. Secretan, 8 Term Rep. 192, 198, per Lawrence, J.

[14] Merchants' Ins. Co. v. Clapp, 11 Pick. (28 Mass.) 56. But see Deshon v. Merchants' Ins. Co. 11 Met. (52 Mass.) 199, 208.

and is commensurate to her then risk, and the other a condition of seaworthiness for her voyage, which does not attach till she sails.[15] And it is held in this country that where the vessel is seaworthy for port, the assured also impliedly warrants that she shall be seaworthy when she sails.[16] But Lord Tenterden's opinion and the cases in this country above noted suggest the point whether, in policies at and from, curing defects of seaworthiness not latent is limited to the time between the attachment of the risk "at" port and the sailing of the vessel, or whether defects of the character suggested by Lord Tenterden may be cured before loss, so as to render the insurer liable for loss totally disconnected with the unseaworthiness, or must the vessel under a policy "at and from" be absolutely seaworthy when she sails. The two Massachusetts cases seem to indicate clearly that the risk, having once attached, is merely suspended, and revives on the vessel again becoming seaworthy; and this conclusion would be aided by the construction of the warranty given by the court in another case in that state, where it is said that it would be consistent to hold that after the policy has once attached, the underwriter should be responsible for losses which could not possibly be "occasioned by peril increased or affected by the breach of such implied warranty," but should be exempted from all loss or damage proceeding from the cause warranted against.[17] Mr. Phillips is of the opinion that a temporary unseaworthiness imputable to the assured may be remedied before loss where the policy has attached in port and the vessel sails in an unseaworthy condition, and asserts that the doctrine "is supported by considerations of equity and commercial expediency, and a predominant principle in jurisprudence that unnecessary forfeitures are to be avoided." [18] While the decisions afford no absolutely certain ground for the deduction of such a rule, yet we are inclined to the belief that there is much in the language of the courts, the decisions, and analogous cases to warrant such a conclusion.[19] And even in an English case it is held

[15] Forbes v. Wilson, per Lord Kenyon, reported in 1 Marshall on Ins. (ed. 1810) *155; Park on Ins. 299; Smith v. Surridge, 4 Esp. 25, 6 R. R. 837; Annen v. Woodman, 3 Taunt. 299, 12 R. R. 663, per Lawrence, J.

[16] Hoxie v. Pacific Mut. Ins. Co. 7 Allen (89 Mass.) 211.

[17] Paddock v. Franklin Ins. Co. 11 Pick. (28 Mass.) 227, 234, per Shaw, C. J.

[18] 1 Phillips on Ins. (3d ed.) 406, 407, sec. 734.

[19] See Cruder v. Philadelphia Ins. Co. 2 Wash. (U. S. C. C.) 339, Fed. Cas. No. 3,452, per Washington, J.; McLanahan v. Universal Ins. Co. 1 Pet. (26 U. S.) 170, 184, 7 L. ed. 98, per Story, J.; Treadwell v. Union Ins. Co. 6 Cow. (N. Y.) 270; Garrigues v. Cox, 1 Binn. (Pa.) 592, 2 Am. Dec. 493; Prescott v. Union Ins. Co. 1 Whart. (Pa.) 399, 30 Am. Dec.

that under a policy "at and from" a defect in the vessel's seaworthiness for the voyage, she being seaworthy for port, may be remedied before the vessel sails.[20]

§ 2183. Vessel becoming unseaworthy after commencement of risk and defect cured before loss.—If the risk has commenced, the vessel having sailed, being originally seaworthy, but she becomes unseaworthy during the voyage, and the defect is cured before loss, the warranty having been originally complied with, and the insurer's liability having once attached, it will exist at the time of loss, for the risk is in effect merely suspended, and revives when the seaworthiness again exists.[1]

207. See 3 Kent's Commentaries (5th ed.) 289.

[20] Oliverson v. Loughman, 4 M. & S. 346, cited in 2 Barn. & Ald. 322.

[1] Deblois v. Ocean Ins. Co. 16 Pick. (33 Mass.) 303, 305, 28 Am. Dec. 245. See §§ 2176, 2177 herein, as to "Repairs and Continuing Warranty."

TITLE IX.

CONDITIONS VOIDING THE POLICY.

CHAPTER LXIII.

CONDITIONS VOIDING THE POLICY—GENERAL CONDITIONS.

§ 2190. Conditions in policy: generally.
§ 2191. Alterations and repairs: employing mechanics, etc.: generally.
§ 2192. Permission to make alterations or repairs.
§ 2193. Whether loss was occasioned by the alterations cannot be inquired into: materiality of alteration.
§ 2194. Materiality of alteration.
§ 2195. Alteration by act of proprietors.
§ 2196. Alteration conditioned to be at risk of insured.
§ 2197. Repairs upon the insured premises: builder's risk.
§ 2197a. Unauthorized additions to building: proximity to other houses.
§ 2198. Specially prohibited articles under policy on stock of goods, etc.: generally.
§ 2199. "Stock in trade:" "goods usually kept."
§ 2200. Storing of prohibited articles.
§ 2201. Keeping of prohibited articles: hazardous and extra hazardous.
§ 2202. Specially prohibited articles: benzine: burning fluid: camphene: dynamite: fireworks: gasolene.
§ 2203. Specially prohibited articles: gunpowder: hay: kerosene: lights: naphtha.
§ 2204. Specially prohibited articles: petroleum: saltpeter: spirituous liquors: turpentine.
§ 2205. Erection of buildings adjacent to insured premises.
§ 2206. Erection of adjacent buildings to which insured is not a party.
§ 2206a. Erection or occupation of adjacent buildings: change in exposure.
§ 2206b. Requirement to build chimneys.
§ 2207. Increase or change of risks.

§ 2207a. Same subject: conspiracy to burn property: fraud.
§ 2207b. Same subject: attempt to burn property.
§ 2208. Notice of increase of risk: waiver.
§ 2209. Prohibited use of premises.
§ 2210. Meaning of "premises" as used in condition.
§ 2211. Prohibited uses: hazardous and extra hazardous.
§ 2212. Where policy is only suspended during a temporary prohibited use.
§ 2213. Uses not violation of the conditions as to prohibited use.
§ 2214. Change in "situation or circumstances affecting the risk."
§ 2215. Condition as to smoking upon the premises.
§ 2216. Ceasing to operate factory, etc.: operating factory, etc., at night.
§ 2216a. Same subject: when condition violated: instances.
§ 2217. Use of stoves on premises: fires.
§ 2218. Use of premises for unlawful purposes.
§ 2219. Prohibited uses which will avoid the policy.
§ 2220. Waiver of forfeiture on account of prohibited use.
§ 2221. Notice in case of change of use: waiver.
§ 2222. Effects of acts of tenant upon insured property.
§ 2223. Change of occupancy: tenancy.
§ 2224. Effect of nonoccupation of insured premises where policy only prohibits increase of risk.
§ 2224a. Increase of risk: material to risk: clauses as to vacancy, etc.
§ 2225. Vacant or unoccupied and similar clauses: validity, construction and meaning thereof.
§ 2225a. "Vacant, unoccupied, and uninhabited:" "vacant, unoccupied or uninhabited."
§ 2225b. "Untenanted or vacant."
§ 2225c. Temporary vacancy or absence: owner, tenant, or occupant.
§ 2225d. Vacancy, etc.: several buildings or kinds of property: entirety or divisibility of risk.
§ 2225e. Premises untenantable or unfit for occupancy: vacancy enforced.
§ 2226. Provision as to notice in case premises become vacant or unoccupied: permit.
§ 2227. "Unoccupied premises."
§ 2228. "Vacant" premises.
§ 2228a. Vacant by removal: personally unoccupied.
§ 2229. Conditioned to be void if premises become "vacant and unoccupied."
§ 2230. Conditioned to be void if the premises become "vacant or unoccupied."
§ 2230a. Same subject: when premises "vacant or unoccupied:" instances.
§ 2230b. Same subject: when premises not "vacant or unoccupied:" instances.

§ 2230c. Same subject: watchman acting under legal process.
§ 2231. Waiver of condition as to premises being vacated.
§ 2232. Restrictions in life policy as to residence: travel, etc.: waiver.
§ 2233. Same subject: construction of phrase "settled limits of the United States."
§ 2234. Restriction as to travel: construction of permit to go beyond prescribed limits.
§ 2235. Where insured is prevented by sickness from returning within time limited by permit.
§ 2236. Prohibiting change of occupation: prohibited occupations: hazardous, extra hazardous: construction of clauses as to.
§ 2236a. Same subject.
§ 2236b. Engaging in liquor or saloon business.
§ 2236c. Prohibited occupations: waiver and estoppel.
§ 2237. Prohibition as to entering military or naval service.
§ 2237a. Same subject: subsequently enacted prohibitory law by successor society.
§ 2237b. Same subject: armed resistance or insurrection in territory of United States.
§ 2238. Change in possession, title, or interest.
§ 2239. Effect of temporary increase of risk: temporary violation of condition.
§ 2240. Same subject: authorities.

§ 2190. Conditions in policy: generally.—The parties may insert in the policy such conditions as they choose, and will be bound thereby, provided the conditions are not contrary to law or public policy.[2] An insurer also has a right to designate or prescribe in its contracts the terms and conditions upon which it will accept a proposed risk, and upon which it will be responsible for losses, provided, however, that said terms and conditions are not illegal or contrary to public policy, and the acceptance by assured of such conditions imposes upon the latter the duty of substantial compliance therewith and failure to comply in any material respect in the absence of waiver or estoppel, relieves assurer from liability except to the expressed or implied extent of said contract terms.[3] So it is declared those conditions or clauses inserted in the contract and which induce caution as to the conduct of either party in respect to the subject matter thereof, are not repugnant to public policy, because anything that stimulates diligence and good faith between the contracting parties, is highly promotive of the general as well as the individual good.[4] The law of legal relation between insurers and assured is the policy of insurance with its clauses, conditions, and stipulations, by which the mutual rights and liabilities of the parties are to be understood and measured,[5] and the assured cannot urge, in an action to recover for a loss, the fact that the conditions which are embodied in the policy, and upon which the insurers assumed the risk, were not specially pointed out to him.[6] But conditions in the policy should be set forth in clear and unambiguous language.[7] Concerning the effect of a condition, it may be stated that although a policy is conditioned to be void in case of a breach of any of the conditions, it is not absolutely void as a result of such a breach, but only voidable at the option of the insurers.[8]

[2] Wood v. Hartford Fire Ins. Co. 13 Conn. 533, 35 Am. Dec. 92; Beadle v. Chenango Mutual Ins. Co. 3 Hill (N. Y.) 161.

[3] Dover Glass Works Co. v. American Fire Ins. Co. 1 Marv. (Del.) 52, 65 Am. St. Rep. 264, 29 Atl. 1039; Johnson v. Maryland Casualty Co. 73 N. H. 259, 111 Am. St. Rep. 609, 60 Atl. 1009.

We shall only treat in this chapter of those conditions which pertain to the contract of insurance during the existence of the risk, and not of those which relate to the attachment of the risk, or to matters subsequent to the loss. Those conditions which go to the life of the policy after the risk has commenced and prior to the loss need, as a general rule, be only substantially performed. A strict and literal compliance by the insured is not necessary.[9] So conditions usually contained in policies of insurance, providing that they shall be suspended, or the insurer relieved wholly or partially from liability, upon the happening of some event, or the doing or omitting to do some act, are not conditions precedent, but matters of defense, which, together with their breach, must be pleaded and proved by the insurer.[10] And when an insurance

[4] Dover Glass Works Co. v. American Fire Ins. Co. 1 Marv. (Del.) 32, 65 Am. St. Rep. 264, 29 Atl. 1039.

[5] West Branch Ins. Co. v. Helfenstein, 40 Pa. St. 289, 80 Am. Dec. 573.

[6] Reeve v. Phœnix Ins. Co. 23 La. Ann. 219.

[7] Anderson v. Fitzgerald, 4 H. L. Cas. 484, 17 Jur. 995.

[8] Turner v. Meridian Ins. Co. 16 Fed. 454, Fed. Cas. No. 530n, Shearman v. Niagara Fire Ins. Co. 46 N. Y. 526, 7 Am. Rep. 380.

[9] United States.—Cady v. Imperial Fire Ins. Co. 4 Cliff. (U. S. C. C.) 203, Fed. Cas. No. 2,283.

Illinois.—Insurance Co. of North America v. McDowell, 50 Ill. 120, 99 Am. Dec. 497.

Indiana.—Kentucky Mutual Ins. Co. v. Jenks, 5 Ind. 96; Indiana Mutual Fire Ins. Co. v. Conner, 5 Ind. 170.

Iowa.—Bankhead v. Des Moines Ins. Co. 70 Iowa, 387, 30 N. W. 740.

Massachusetts.—Houghton v. Manufacturing M. F. Co. 8 Met. (49 Mass.) 114, 41 Am. Dec. 489.

Virginia.—Home Ins. Co. v. Cohen, 20 Gratt. (Va.) 312.

England.—Shaw v. Roberts, 6 Ad. & E. 75, 1 Nev. & P. 279, 6 L. J. K. B. 106. See c. XLVI. herein, as to warranties.

[10] Moody v. Amazon Ins. Co. 52

company attempts to defeat a recovery upon a policy upon a condition for its own benefit, and which deprives the assured, no matter how honest his claim, of the indemnity for which he paid, the company must be held to entire good faith, and the breach of condition must be promptly taken advantage of. Nothing else must be alleged as a reason for nonpayment, and the insured must not be led astray by proposing settlement on grounds other than the alleged breach of condition.[11]

§ 2191. Alterations and repairs: employing mechanics, etc.: generally.—If a policy contains no prohibition against any alteration in the insured premises, an alteration which does not increase the risk will not avoid the policy.[12] In the absence of any stipulation or restriction as to alterations or repairs in the insured premises, the insured may make any alteration, change, or repairs which do not increase the risk. The insurer cannot in such cases set up, in defense to an action on the policy, the fact that there has been some trivial or immaterial alteration in the premises. Nor will the fact that the premises insured have undergone a general repairing be any defense on the part of the insurers where such repairs were necessary to render the premises tenantable. The insured in such cases is entitled to the ordinary and customary use of the insured property, and to the exercise of the ordinary acts of ownership over it, the only obligation upon him being that the risk shall not be substantially increased. If the risk has been increased, then the insurer may avoid the policy, though there is no condition to that effect, since the insured, when the policy is issued, impliedly guarantees that the risk shall not be increased.[13] The question applicable in all these cases is whether there has been an increase of risk which could not have been in the contemplation of the insurers when the insurance was effected. If there has been, then the policy is void, but if not, it will continue of full force and effect. This is a question for the jury.[14] If a condition voiding the policy for increase of hazard is immediately followed

Ohio St. 12, 26 L.R.A. 313, 49 Am. St. Rep. 699, 38 N. E. 1011.

[11] Bonnert v. Pennsylvania Ins. Co. 129 Pa. St. 558, 15 Am. St. Rep. 739, 18 Atl. 552.

[12] Stetson v. Massachusetts Fire Ins. Co. 4 Mass. 330, 3 Am. Dec. 217.

[13] See §§ 2207, 2239.

[14] United States.—Dorn v. Germania Ins. Co. 5 Ins. L. J. 183, 8 Chic. Leg. News, 156, Fed. Cas. No. 4005.

Connecticut.—Wood v. Hartford Fire Ins. Co. 13 Conn. 533, 35 Am. Dec. 92.

Delaware.—Lattomus v. Farmers' Mutual Fire Ins. Co. 3 Houst. (Del.) 404.

Louisiana.—Meyer v. Queen City Ins. Co. 41 La. Ann. 1,000, 6 So. 899.

Maryland.—Washington Fire Ins. Co. v. Davison, 30 Md. 91, 92, 108; Jolly v. Baltimore Ins. Co. 1 Har. & J. (Md.) 295, 18 Am. Dec. 288.

Massachusetts.—Curry v. Common-by a clause prohibiting employment of mechanics in building, altering, or repairing the premises for more than fifteen days at any one time, the latter clause is the material governing one in determining whether alterations operate as a forfeiture, for while the question of increase of hazard may be material, nevertheless if the work is extended without assurer's consent, beyond the time limit permitted, it would have the right to terminate the policy, even though the premises had not been injured or destroyed by fire, for the increase of hazard would not necessarily be a point involved, at least, it is so decided, although in the case so holding and in which a forfeiture was declared because of alterations prolonged beyond said time limitation for repairs, nevertheless, much stress was placed by the court in the opinion upon facts, showing clearly an increase of hazard in that among other things there were in the new building considerable quantities of linseed oil, turpentine dryer and other necessary materials for painters and that they were at work shortly preceding the fire. The repairs consisted of tearing down certain additions, used for storage and a stone basement wall, and erecting new buildings and connecting them with the main one, and the work was done without assurer's required consent in such cases.[15]

And under conditions of the above character the question of forfeiture may, upon the evidence, be a matter of law.[16] wealth Ins. Co. 10 Pick. (27 Mass.) 535, 20 Am. Dec. 547.

New Jersey.—Robinson v. Mercer County Mutual Fire Ins. Co. 3 Dutch. (27 N. J. Law) 134.

New York.—Rann v. Home Ins. Co. 59 N. Y. 387.

Pennsylvania.—Lebanon County v. Franklin Fire Ins. Co. 237 Pa. 360, 44 L.R.A.(N.S.) 148, 85 Atl. 419, 42 Ins. L. J. 397, 399.

See James v. Lycoming Fire Ins. Co. 4 Cliff. (U. S. C. C.) 272, Fed. Cas. No. 7,182. In an exhaustive opinion in this case Clifford, J., said: "Whether regarded as a condition subsequent or a mere promissory warranty, the condition in question, it is clear, is not one where a literal compliance with its terms is required. Such a construction would be absurd, as it would render the policy void if the insured employed a mechanic to take out a broken slate or replace a broken pane of glass or stop a leak in a gas fixture or in a cistern. . . . Such conditions prohibiting repairs which increase the risk it is held by some courts are operative only when the increased risk is in existence, and that the policy becomes effectual as soon as the increased risk terminates:" Thompson v. Hopper, 6 El. B. & E. 1033, 1038, 27 L. J. Q. B. 441; Stokes v. Cox, 1 Hurl. & N. 533, 543, 26 L. J. Ex. 113; Baxendale v. Harvey, 4 Hurl. & N. *445. As to temporary increase of risk, see §§ 2239, 2240 herein.

[15] Newport Improvement Co. v. Home Ins. Co. 163 N. Y. 237, 57 N. E. 475, 29 Ins. L. J. 899, aff'g 47 N. Y. Supp. 1143, 21 App. Div. 633.

[16] Newport Improvement Co. v. Home Ins. Co. 163 N. Y. 237, 57 N. E. 475, 29 Ins. L. J. 499, aff'g 47 N. Y. Supp. 1143, 21 App. Div. 633; Robb v. Millers' Mutual Fire Ins. Co. 230 Pa. 44, 79 Atl. 150.

So in most policies there are conditions in regard to alterations, and these stipulations may greatly restrict and limit the rights, which the insured would otherwise have, to make alterations or repairs. The exact language of such conditions is important, for it is from them that the rights of the insured are ascertained.[17]

Though the policy provides that the company will not be liable "if the risk be increased by any means within the control of the insured," yet, under a permission to make alterations in the insured property, the insured may make such alterations as he desires, provided the risk is not increased for a longer period of time or to a greater degree than is necessary to make such alterations.[18]

A condition in a policy against any change in the situation and circumstances of property affecting the risk is not intended to prevent the making of necessary repairs, and the use of such means for the purpose as are reasonably necessary. Both parties to a contract for insurance must be presumed to expect that the property will be preserved and kept in better condition by making repairs upon it.[19] And where the policy provided that it should be void if without assurer's assent the situation or circumstances of the risk should, by or with the knowledge, advice, agency or consent of insured be so altered as to cause an increase of such risk, and the mortgagee continued the employment of mechanics in making alterations, etc., in and upon the premises beyond the time limit allowed therefor under a mechanic's permit, the policy was held not forfeited thereby unless the risk was increased and it was also held that whether situation or circumstances were such as to increase the risk was a question for the jury. The court in this case made a distinction between it and a Federal Supreme Court decision wherein the policy was to be avoided if mechanics were employed in the building in making alterations and repairs.[20] A violation of a condition that if mechanics are employed in building, altering, or repairing the premises, without notice to or permission of the insurance company, terminates the contract where it is so stipu-

[17] See Imperial Fire Ins. Co. v. Coos County, 151 U. S. 452, 38 L. ed. 231, 14 Sup. Ct. 379.

[18] Firemen's Ins. Co. v. Appleton Paper & Pulp Co. 161 Ill. 9, 43 N. E. 713.

[19] First Congregational Church v. Holyoke Mutual Fire Ins. Co. 158 Mass. 475, 35 Am. St. Rep. 508, 19 L.R.A. 587, 33 N. E. 572; Lebanon County v. Franklin Fire Ins. Co. of Phila. 237 Pa. 360, 85 Atl. 419, 43 Ins. L. J. 397, 44 L.R.A.(N.S.) 148n.

[20] Gilman v. Commonwealth Ins. Co. 112 Me. 528, L.R.A.1915C, 758, 92 Atl. 721, 45 Ins. L. J. 340, distinguishing Imperial Fire Ins. Co. v. Coos County, 151 U. S. 452, 38 L. ed. 231, 14 Sup. Ct. 379.

On scope and effect of provision that the working of mechanics shall avoid policy, see note in 44 L.R.A. (N.S.) 148.

lated, unless there is a waiver or estoppel and this is true although in the opinion of the court and the jury the alterations and repairs of the building do not in fact increase the risk.[1] But the making of repairs necessary for the proper care and preservation of the property is not within the operation of a provision in an insurance policy making the working of mechanics in altering or repairing the premises avoid the policy.[2] A distinction also exists between an unqualified provision as to the employment of mechanics making alterations and repairs and a clause voiding the policy if mechanics are employed in building, altering, or repairing the premises for more than fifteen days at any one time unless so agreed, and the latter clause is reasonable and valid and operates as a limitation of time within which repairs may be made without any agreement, but beyond which the risk of forfeiture is assumed, even though the repairs made are only those ordinarily and reasonably necessary to preserve the property.[3] And where different contractors are employed, and so far as time for the particular work of each was taken, no one extended the time limit for repairs fixed in the policy, but the mechanics were engaged to work, although not consecutively, for a number of days beyond said time limit, yet as the work was done in accordance with a certain plan as a whole, and as a continuous piece of work from its commencement to its completion, it was held that the policy was forfeited by being carried on without assurer's consent, over the permitted time as above stated.[4] So rubbing and polish-

[1] Imperial Fire Ins. Co. v. Coos County, 151 U. S. 452, 38 L. ed. 231, 14 Sup. Ct. 379.

Cited in: United States.—Gross v. New York T. & Steamship Co. 107 Fed. 516, 521; Union Central Life Ins. Co. v. Berlin, 101 Fed. 673, 677, 41 C. C. A. 592, 597; Petit v. German Ins. Co. 98 Fed. 800, 803; Georgia Home Ins. Co. v. Rosenfield, 95 Fed. 358, 360, 37 C. C. A. 96, 99; Fischer v. London & Lancashire Fire Ins. Co. 83 Fed. 807, 809; Lozano v. Palatine Ins. Co. 78 Fed. 278, 280, 24 C. C. A. 85, 87, 41 U. S. App. 694; Jackson v. Fidelity & Casualty Co. 75 Fed. 359, 366, 21 C. C. A. 394, 400, 41 U. S. App. 552; Western Assurance Co. v. Redding, 68 Fed. 708, 714, 15 C. C. A. 619, 625, 30 U. S. App. 442.

District of Columbia.—Hamburg-Bremen Fire Ins. Co. v. Lewis, 4 App. D. C. 66, 86.

Massachusetts.—Hill v. Middlesex Mutual Assurance Co. 174 Mass. 542, 545, 55 N. E. 319.

Ohio.—Ohio Farmers' Ins. Co. v. Burget, 65 Ohio St. 119, 126, 55 L.R.A. 825, 827, 87 Am. St. Rep. 596, 61 N. E. 712.

Virginia.—Virginia Fire & Marine Ins. Co. v. Morgan, 90 Va. 290, 293, 18 S. E. 191.

[2] Lebanon County v. Franklin Fire Ins. Co. 237 Pa. 360, 44 L.R.A. (N.S.) 148n, 85 Atl. 419, 43 Ins. L. J. 397.

[3] German Ins. Co. v. Hearne, 117 Fed. 289, 54 C. C. A. 527, 59 L.R.A. 492, 32 Ins. L. J. 462, certiorari denied, 188 U. S. 742, 47 L. ed. 678, 23 Sup. Ct. 849.

[4] Robb v. Millers' Mutual Fire Ins.

ing woodwork, repairing walls and ceilings, repairing and reburnishing plumbing and gas fittings, and repairing the gutters and spouts, are within the provisions of a fire policy, making it void in case mechanics are engaged in repairing the building for more than fifteen days at any one time.[5] But it is decided that painters are not mechanics within the intent of such clauses.[6] If the policy is not intended to become of force and effect before alterations and repairs are completed, their prolongation beyond the time limit therefor does not avoid the policy.[7]

Where a policy was issued upon a "mill building and additions, including flumes . . . and automatic sprinkler equipment complete," and permission was given to "make alterations, additions, and repairs to building and machinery," it was held that the insured might remove the sprinkler equipment for the purpose of putting in a more complete one, and that such removal would not avoid the policy.[8] So where due diligence is by the policy required to be used to maintain the sprinkler system, then in use, in complete working order at all times, and by accident, notwithstanding more than ordinary care amounting substantially to due diligence is taken, repairs became necessary and while making the same and before their completion, a loss occurs, there is no such increase of risk or change made in the system as avoids the policy, even though it requires consent of assurer in writing if a change in said system be made.[9] Placing and operating an engine fifty feet away from an insured building is not an alteration of the insured premises, nor is it a use for carrying on trade or business which increases the risk unless expressly so declared by the contract.[10] It is decided that even though assurer's agent had knowledge, obtained during negotiations for the policy, that alterations were to be made in the building and said agent told assured that it would be all right, still there was no waiver of a condition limiting the time for making repairs, where written indorsement of a change of the terms of the policy was required to be made thereon

Co. 230 Pa. 44, 79 Atl. 150, 40 Ins. L. J. 951.

[5] German Ins. Co. v. Hearne, 117 Fed. 289, 54 C. C. A. 527, 59 L.R.A. 492.

[6] Smith v. German Ins. Co. 107 Mich. 270, 2 Det. Leg. News, 667, 30 L.R.A. 368, 65 N. W. 236.

[7] Massell v. Protective Mutual Fire Ins. Co. 19 R. I. 565, 35 Atl. 209.

[8] Firemen's Ins. Co. v. Appleton Paper & Pulp Co. 161 Ill. 9, 43 N. E. 713.

On change in use or condition of mill or factory as avoiding policy, see note in 45 L.R.A.(N.S.) 123.

[9] Cummer Lumber Co. v. Associated Manufacturers' Mutual Fire Ins. Corp. 73 N. Y. Supp. 668, 67 App. Div. 151, 31 Ins. L. J. 87, aff'd (mem.) 173 N. Y. 633, 66 N. E. 1106.

[10] Schaeffer v. Farmers' Mutual Fire Ins. Co. 80 Md. 563, 45 Am. St. Rep. 361, 31 Atl. 317.

by certain officers, and the same condition was in assurer's by-laws.[11]

§ 2192. Permission to make alterations or repairs.—Permission in an insurance policy to make necessary alterations or repairs will not be considered as giving permission to make such changes as will materially increase the risk. So where the policy authorized the insured to make "necessary alteration and repairs," it was held that this did not authorize him to construct an addition to the building twelve feet in width, and two hundred feet in length.[12] If "the insured has permission to make alterations and repairs incidental to the business," he cannot make such repairs or alterations as will materially increase the liability of the property to destruction by fire.[13] And where a policy of insurance gave permission to the insured "to make additions, alterations, and repairs," it was held that a new warehouse erected forty feet away from the main building was neither an addition, an alteration, or repairs, although connected with the main building by a bridge and an underground passage used for pipes.[14] But continuing work after the expiration of a building permit does not avoid an insurance policy which provides that it shall become invalid if, without the consent of the company, the situation or circumstances affecting the risk shall by, or with, the knowledge, advice, agency, or consent of the insured be so altered as to cause an increase of such risk, unless such continuance increases the risk.[15] But the fact that alterations were completed before the loss occurs, will not preclude insurer, when it has not consented thereto, from avoiding the policy where the alterations are not ordinary repairs, but are of such a nature as may of themselves materially increase the risk, such as changing tenements into flats.[16]

§ 2193. Whether loss was occasioned by the alterations cannot be inquired into: materiality of alteration.—If, in the absence of any stipulation as to alteration or increase of risk, it be shown that the risk has been materially increased by any alteration, the

[11] Robb v. Miller's Mutual Fire Ins. Co. 230 Pa. 44, 79 Atl. 150, 40 Ins. L. J. 95.

[12] Frost's Detroit Lumber Works v. Miller's Mutual Ins. Co. 37 Minn. 300, 5 Am. St. Rep. 846, 34 N. W. 35.

[13] Crane v. City Ins. Co. 3 Fed. 558.

[14] Peoria Sugar Refinery Co. v. People's Fire Ins. Co. 24 Fed. 773.

[15] Gilman v. Commonwealth Ins. Co. 112 Me. 528, 55 L.R.A.(N.S.) 758, 92 Atl. 721.

[16] Hill v. Middlesex Mutual Fire Assoc. Co. 174 Mass. 542, 55 N. E. 319, 29 Ins. L. J. 185. See §§ 2239, 2240 herein.

On effect of temporary condition which ceased before loss under general provision against increase of risk or specific provision against certain conditions, see notes in 10 L.R.A. (N.S.) 736; 28 L.R.A.(N.S.) 593; 32 L.R.A.(N.S.) 240; and 48 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1221.

fact as to whether the loss was caused thereby cannot be inquired into. The insured cannot show it in an action to recover for a loss, and the insurer is not obliged to show that the alteration caused the loss. And this same rule prevails under a condition forbidding any alterations or repairs which increase the risk. So where, in an action upon a policy of insurance issued by a company incorporated under an act which provides that if any alteration shall be made in any building by the proprietor thereof, after insurance has been made thereon by the company, whereby it may be exposed to greater risk from fire, the insurance shall be void, unless an additional premium and deposit after such alteration be settled and paid to the company, but no alterations or repairs not increasing the risk shall affect the insurance, it is held that an instruction was correct, that in case of a material alteration, it was not necessary, in order to avoid the policy, for the company to show that the loss had been occasioned by the alteration.[17]

§ 2194. Materiality of alteration.—If the policy specifies certain alterations as prohibited, any such alterations, if made by the insured, will avoid the policy, and the question will not then arise as to whether such alterations are material to the risk. If, however, such alterations as increase the risk are prohibited, then the question arises as to whether the alterations made do in fact increase the risk. In determining this question, the factor whether the rate of premium charged for the insurance is that which would have been charged in the altered condition of the building is important, and it has been held that if the building as altered would not have called for a higher rate of premium than before such alteration, then there has been no increase of the risk.[18] In a case involving this point it was held that an instruction to the jury that the alteration must have been such that a higher rate of premium would have been demanded to insure the building in its altered state than before, otherwise the alteration was not material, was correct.[19] The fact, however, that the insurers would have charged a higher premium is not of itself conclusive as to whether the risk has been increased. It is a question for the jury to decide, under all the facts of the case, whether the risk has actually been increased, and the fact that the insurer regarded it as a greater risk is not conclusive upon the jury.[20]

[17] Merriam v. Middlesex Mutual Fire Ins. Co. 21 Pick. (38 Mass.) 162, 32 Am. Dec. 252. See Newport Improvement Co. v. Home Ins. Co. 163 N. Y. 237, 57 N. E. 475, 29 Ins. L. J. 899, aff'g 47 N. Y. Supp. 1143, 21 App. Div. 633, considered under § 2191 herein.

[18] Schenck v. Mercer County Mutual Fire Ins. Co. 24 N. J. L. (4 Zab.) 447.

[19] Merriam v. Middlesex Mutual Fire Ins. Co. 21 Pick. (38 Mass.) 162, 32 Am. Dec. 252.

[20] Williams v. People's Fire Ins. Co. 57 N. Y. 274; Loyal Mutual Fire

§ 2195. Alteration by act of proprietors.—The alteration of insured premises by "act of proprietors" so as to avoid the insurance, within the terms of the charter of the insurance company, is an alteration by the owner himself, or authorized by him or adopted as his before a loss accrues, and not an alteration by the tenant without authority, and whether he has authorized and adopted the act is a question for the jury.[1]

§ 2196. Alteration conditioned to be at risk of insured.—Under an insurance policy providing that alterations or repairs made in and about the insured premises must be at the risk of the party insured, such repairs or alterations do not per se avoid the contract, but only place upon the insured party the hazard of their increasing the liability of the insured.[2]

§ 2197. Repairs upon the insured premises: builder's risk.—We have already stated that such ordinary repairs as are necessary to render the premises tenantable and to keep the property insured in such condition as is necessary for the proper enjoyment and use thereby will not avoid the policy. The insured is entitled to make ordinary and necessary repairs about the premises.[3] Thus, after a policy of insurance was taken out on a mill, the boiler being cracked and in a dangerous condition, it became necessary to put in another with some additions, and these repairs did not increase the risk, and extended no farther than was reasonably necessary, and were completed several months before the destruction of the mill. It was held in an action on the policy that the above facts did not render it void under the condition termed the "builders' risk."[4] In another case the application stated that there was a force pump, "designed expressly for protection against fire, at all times in good condition for use." The insured, for the purpose of putting in a new bulkhead, the old one being badly decayed, interrupted the supply of water for several days, thus disabling the pump, and it was held that these acts did not avoid the policy if Ins. Co. v. J. S. Brown & Bro. Mercantile Co. 47 Colo. 467, 107 Pac. 1098, 39 Ins. L. J. 870, 875; Lebanon County v. Franklin Fire Ins. Co. of Phila. 237 Pa. 360, 44 L.R.A. (N.S.) 148, 44 Ins. L. J. 148n, 85 Atl. 419, 43 Ins. L. J. 397, 399.

[1] Padleford v. Providence Mutual Fire & Life Ins. Co. 3 R. I. 102, 67 Am. Dec. 496.

[2] Girard Fire & Marine Ins. Co. v. Stephenson, 37 Pa. St. 293, 73 Am. Dec. 423.

[3] Dorn v. Germania Ins. Co. 8 Chic. Leg. News, 156, Fed. Cas. No. 4,005; 5 Ins. L. J. 183; Lyman v. State Ins. Co. 14 Allen (96 Mass.) 329; Grant v. Howard Ins. Co. 5 Hill (N. Y.) 10. This is as stated in a prior section held not to excuse exceeding the time limit allowed in the policy condition for making repairs, see § 2191 herein.

[4] James v. Lycoming Ins. Co. 4 Cliff. (U. S. C. C.) 272; Fed. Cas. No. 7,182.

the repairs were made without unnecessary delay;[5] and though in making the repairs prohibited articles are taken upon the premises, this will not avoid the policy where such articles are necessary and incidental to making the repairs.[6] Although the insured may make necessary and ordinary repairs about the insured premises, yet if the repairs are of an extensive nature, and amount to a material alteration, and such as increase the risk, the insured cannot recover on the policy for a loss occurring subsequent to the alteration.[7] Again, a policy of insurance against fire on an icehouse contains a condition entitled "builder's risk," and that "the working of carpenters, roofers, etc., in building, altering, or repairing the premises named in the policy, without permission indorsed in writing on the policy, should vitiate it." The assured, in an action on the policy, testified that the "icehouse was nearly as good as new, for the reason that he always kept a crew of men and a carpenter or two about the building the year round, and was constantly making repairs and keeping the building in thorough condition." It was held that, under the facts, the policy was not vitiated.[8]

§ 2197a. Unauthorized additions to building: proximity to other houses.—An increase of risk, by the unauthorized addition to the building in which a business is conducted, is not shown by evidence that the addition brought the building a few feet nearer certain houses, if it is not shown how far distant these houses were, and that their proximity increased the danger of fire.[9]

§ 2198. Specially prohibited articles under policy on stock of goods, etc.: generally.—The policy generally prohibits the keeping or use of certain articles upon the insured premises. Stipulations of this character must be construed in reference to the subject matter of the policy, having in view the general rule that if the written and printed parts of a policy are inconsistent, that which is written will prevail over the printed. There are many instances in which a policy of insurance is issued upon a stock of goods, or upon materials used in a manufacturing establishment as a part of the stock usually and ordinarily required in such business, or it may happen that in the process of manufacture certain articles

[5] Townsend v. Northwestern Ins. Co. 18 N. Y. 168.

[6] Au Sable Lumber Co. v. Detroit Mfg. Mutual Fire Ins. Co. 89 Mich. 407, 50 N. W. 870, 21 Ins. L. J. 311.

[7] Howell v. Baltimore Equitable Soc. 16 Md. 377; Allen v. Massasoit Ins. Co. 99 Mass. 160; Kern v. South St. Louis Ins. Co. 40 Mo. 19; Mack v. Rochester German Ins. Co. 106 N. Y. 560, 13 N. E. 343.

[8] Franklin Fire Ins. Co. v. Chicago Ice Co. 36 Md. 102, 11 Am. Rep. 469.

[9] Mitchell v. Mississippi Home Ins. Co. 72 Miss. 53, 48 Am. St. Rep. 535, 18 So. 86.

are kept or used which are prohibited in the printed stipulations of the policy. In such cases, to hold otherwise than that the written should prevail over the printed matter, would be to defeat the purposes of the policy and the clear intent of the parties when making the contract; nor should the printed matter be extended by implication to defeat the written description;[10] and therefore the policy will not be avoided by keeping on the premises articles prohibited by the printed portion of the policy if they were part of the general stock of merchandise which the written part of the policy permitted to be kept thereon.[11] So an "agreement indorsed," permitting otherwise prohibited articles to be kept on insured premises, is made where the articles are included in the written description of the property insured.[12] And not only do the above stated rules of construction apply, but a use of prohibited articles which is a necessary incident to the business or to the carrying on of the occupation in which the insured is engaged, must be deemed to have been contemplated by the parties, and to have been impliedly permitted by the assurer, as where farm buildings are insured it will be assumed that they will continue to be used for purposes for which they were intended in the ordinary course of that occupation or business.[13]

[10] Phœnix Ins. Co. v. Flemming, 65 Ark. 54, 39 L.R.A. 789, 44 S. W. 464, 27 Ins. L. J. 584; O'Neill v. Caledonian Ins. Co. 166 Cal. 310, 135 Pac. 1121 (considered under § 2202 herein); McClure v. Mutual Fire Ins. Co. 242 Pa. 59, 48 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1221, 88 Atl. 921 (considered under § 2202 herein). But compare Norfolk Fire Ins. Co. v. Tulley, 112 Va. 413, 71 S. E. 534.

[11] McClure v. Mutual Fire Ins. Co. 242 Pa. 59, 48 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1221, 88 Atl. 921.

[12] Yoch v. Home Mutual Ins. Co. 111 Cal. 503, 34 L.R.A. 857, 44 Pac. 189.

[13] Bouchard v. Dirigo Mutual Fire Ins. Co. 113 Me. 17, L.R.A.1915D, 187, 92 Atl. 476, 92 Atl. 899, 45 Ins. L. J. 476. Citing and considering:

Maryland.—Carlin v. Western Assurance Co. 57 Md. 515, 40 Am. Rep. 440.

Massachusetts.—First Congregational Church v. Holyoke Mutual Fire Ins. Co. 158 Mass. 475, 9 L.R.A. 587, 35 Am. St. Rep. 508, 33 N. E. 572.

Missouri.—Archer v. Merchants & Manufacturers Ins. Co. 43 Mo. 434.

New Jersey.—Garrabrant v. Continental Ins. Co. 75 N. J. Law, 577, 12 L.R.A.(N.S.) 443, 67 Atl. 90.

New York.—Harper v. City Ins. Co. 22 N. Y. 441, aff'g 14 N. Y. Super. Ct. 520.

Pennsylvania.—Lebanon Co. v. Franklin Fire Ins. Co. 237 Pa. 360, 44 L.R.A.(N.S.) 148, 85 Atl. 419, Ann. Cas. 1914B, 130; Plate Co. (Silver Plate Co.) v. National Fire Ins. Co. 170 Pa. 151, 32 Atl. 613.

Wisconsin.—Davis v. Pioneer Furniture Co. 102 Wis. 394, 78 N. W. 956; Faust v. American Fire Ins. Co. 91 Wis. 158, 30 L.R.A. 783, 51 Am. St. Rep. 876, 64 N. W. 833.

England.—Dobson v. Sotheby, 1 Moody & M. 90, 30 Rev. Rep. 718. Also note 13 Ann. Cas. 540.

On effect of provision in fire insurance policy prohibiting presence of designated articles on premises, see note in 3 B. R. C. 7.

So the use of inflammable substances which constitute component parts of a stock of materials used in, and which is a necessary, usual, and customary incident to a business, must have been in the contemplation of the parties at the time of taking a policy of insurance upon said stock of materials and are covered by said policy, and it is not avoided, notwithstanding express language to that effect in printed clauses, by keeping such substances in such quantities only and using them in such manner only as must have been contemplated.[14] So the words "kept or used" in the clause as to especially prohibited articles, are not confined in their meaning to a temporary possession or possession for a temporary purpose, nor are they applicable to one occasion alone, nor to an exceptional use in some emergency, but they imply that which is, customary or habitual, a continuance or duration; there must be some degree of permanency.[15] But where it is stipulated that the

On construction and effect of provisions against keeping prohibited articles, see note in L.R.A.1917C 278.

On use of engine on farm premises as violation of general provisions against increase of risk or specific provisions relating to engines, see note in L.R.A.1915D, 187.

On the effect of temporary keeping of prohibited articles on premises which ceased before loss under provision against keeping such articles, see notes in 10 L.R.A.(N.S.) 741; 28 L.R.A.(N.S.) 593, 32 L.R.A.(N.S.) 240; and 48 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1221.

[14] Maril v. Connecticut Fire Ins. Co. 95 Ga. 604, 30 L.R.A. 835, 23 S. E. 463. See the following cases: Plinsky v. Germania Fire & Marine Ins. Co. 32 Fed. 47; Tubb v. Liverpool & London & Globe Ins. Co. 106 Ala. 651, 17 So. 615.

[15] Bouchard v. Dirigo Mutual Fire Ins. Co. 113 Me. 17, L.R.A.1915D 187, 92 Atl. 899, 45 Ins. L. J. 476. Citing and considering:

Georgia.—Adair v. Southern Mutual Ins. Co. 107 Ga. 297, 45 L.R.A. 204, 73 Am. St. Rep. 122, 33 S. E. 78.

Illinois.—Szymkus v. Eureka Fire & Marine Ins. Co. 114 Ill. App. 401.

Massachusetts.—First Congregational Church v. Holyoke Mutual Fire Ins. Co. 158 Mass. 475, 19 L.R.A. 587, 35 Am. St. Rep. 508, 33 N. E. 572.

Michigan.—Smith v. German Ins. Co. 107 Mich. 270, 30 L.R.A. 368, 65 N. W. 236.

New York.—Hynds v. Schenectady County Ins. Co. 16 Barb. 119, aff'd 11 N. Y. 554.

Pennsylvania.—Lebanon County v. Franklin Fire Ins. Co. 237 Pa. 360, 44 L.R.A.(N.S.) 148, 85 Atl. 419, Ann. Cas. 1914B, 130; Mears v. Humboldt Ins. Co. 92 Pa. 15, 37 Am. Rep. 647; Farmers' & Mechanics' Ins. Co. v. Simmons, 30 Pa. 299.

Texas.—Springfield Fire & Marine Ins. Co. v. Wade, 95 Tex. 598, 58 L.R.A. 714, 93 Am. St. Rep. 870, 68 S. W. 977.

Wisconsin.—Clute v. Clintonville Mutual Fire Ins. Co. 144 Wis. 638, 32 L.R.A.(N.S.) 240, 129 N. W. 661.

England.—Thompson v. Equity Fire Ins. Co. (1910) L. R. App. Cas. 592 ("keep or store," "stored or kept"); note 13 Ann. Cas. 542; Webster's New Int. Dict.; Standard Dict. See also Lebanon County v. Franklin Fire Ins. Co. of Phila. 237 Pa. 360, 44 L.R.A.(N.S.) 148n, 85 policy shall be avoided by use of an article expressly specified and there is nothing in the contract from which a permission to use such article in a partial, limited, or temporary way can be inferred full effect will be usually given to such prohibitive clause by declaring a forfeiture for its violation.[16] And it is decided that where the keeping of certain articles is prohibited the provision only applies where the specified articles are not the subject of insurance.[17] And if the policy prohibits keeping, storing, or using certain articles, specifying each by name, in excess of a named quantity, none of the articles mentioned are thereby entirely excluded but the restriction as to each article is only upon quantities greater than that so stated.[18]

If the insurer issues a policy upon a stock of goods such as is "usually kept," or a similar phrase is used, the insured should, as a general rule, subject to such qualifications as are hereafter noted, be allowed to recover where he can show that such articles were usually kept in that business. Substantially the same rule should also prevail, in the case of an insurance upon materials, or a building used for the purposes of manufacture, as to articles usual and necessary to carry on the business. To declare a forfeiture in such cases, based upon the printed description as opposed to the written description, would be to give the insurer the benefit of terms of his own choosing, which will perhaps operate to deceive the insured into the belief that his property is protected. And it is a cardinal rule that courts will construe conditions strictly against the insurer so as to prevent a forfeiture. The wording of the policy should, therefore, be carefully considered in all cases. These principles are clearly sustained by the cases noted under the following sections.[19]

Again, a stipulation voiding the policy if specified prohibited articles are kept or used, any custom or usage of manufacture or trade to the contrary notwithstanding, such clause limits the custom or usage to one appertaining to trade or manufacture and a domestic custom is excluded.[20]

Atl. 143, 43 Ins. L. J. 397. See § 2202 herein.

[16] Wheeler v. Traders' Ins. Co. 62 N. H. 450, 13 Am. St. Rep. 582.

[17] Mascott v. Granite State Fire Ins. Co. 68 Vt. 253, 35 Atl. 75.

[18] Phœnix Ins. Co. v. Slaughter, 12 Wall. (79 U. S.) 404, 20 L. ed. 444.

[19] Minnesota.—Russell v. Manufacturers & Builders Fire Ins. Co. 50 Minn. 409, 52 N. W. 906.

Missouri.—Renshaw v. Missouri State Mutual Fire & Marine Ins. Co. 103 Mo. 595, 23 Am. St. Rep. 904, 15 S. W. 945; Barnard v. National Fire Ins. Co. 27 Mo. App. 26.

Pennsylvania.—Fraim v. Manchester Fire Assur. Co. 170 Pa. 166, 32 Atl. 616; Fraim v. National Fire Ins. Co. 170 Pa. 151, 50 Am. St. Rep. 753, 32 Atl. 613.

[20] American Central Ins. Co. v. Green, 16 Tex. Civ. App. 531, 41 S.

§ 2199. "Stock in trade:" "goods usually kept."—The insurer is presumed to contract with reference to the business known to be conducted upon the premises, and if in the ordinary use of the premises, building, or goods upon which the insurance is effected certain articles are used which are prohibited in the printed portion of the policy, this will not avoid the policy.[1] So an insurance on a dry goods store which prohibits "the use of the premises for carrying on or exercising any business which is hazardous or extra hazardous, or for the purpose of keeping or storing goods of that character," is not void because bales of cotton are kept in such store as a part of the dry goods stock in trade, although such articles are designated in the policy as hazardous.[2] And where the policy describes the stock to be "such as is usually kept in a country store," but in the printed condition many of the articles which are usually kept in such a store are prohibited as hazardous, the written description of the property will overcome the printed conditions therein.[3] If the clause "usually kept in a country store," or one of similar import, is followed by the words "except as hereinafter provided," and in the subsequent printed part of the policy certain articles are prohibited, the policy will be avoided by the keeping of any such articles.[4] If the clause "usually kept," etc., is followed by a clause permitting the keeping of a specified quantity or amount of the prohibited articles, the insured will not be permitted to show that a greater amount is usually kept in such stores.[5] So an insurance on a stock of merchandise consisting of drugs and chemicals and such other goods, not more hazardous,

W. 74. See also Heron v. Phœnix Mutual Fire Ins. Co. 180 Pa. 257, 36 L.R.A. 517, 57 Am. St. Rep. 638, 36 Atl. 740. But compare Norfolk Fire Ins. Co. v. Talley, 112 Va. 413, 71 S. E. 534.

[1] Grant v. Lexington Fire Ins. Co. 5 Ind. 23, 61 Am. Dec. 74.

[2] Moore v. Protection Ins. Co. 29 Me. 97, 48 Am. Dec. 514.

[3] Arkansas.—Phœnix Ins. Co. v. Fleming, 65 Ark. 54, 39 L.R.A. 789, 44 S. W. 464, 27 Ins. L. J. 584.

Massachusetts. — Whitmarsh v. Conway Fire Ins. Co. 16 Gray (82 Mass.) 359, 77 Am. Dec. 414.

Minnesota.—Phœnix Ins. Co. v. Taylor, 5 Minn. 492.

New York.—Pindar v. Kings County Mutual Ins. Co. 36 N. Y. 648, 93 Am. Dec. 544.

Pennsylvania.—Franklin Fire Ins. Co. v. Updegraff, 43 Pa. St. 350.

Vermont.—Carrigan v. Lycoming Fire Ins. Co. 53 Vt. 418, 38 Am. Rep. 687.

See contra, Western Assur. Co. v. Rector, 85 Ky. 294, 3 S. W. 415; Beers v. Forest City Mutual Fire Ins. Co. 39 Ohio St. 109. Examine Birmingham Fire Ins. Co. v. Kroeger, 83 Pa. St. 64, 24 Am. Rep. 147.

[4] Lancaster Fire Ins. Co. v. Lenheim, 89 Pa. St. 497, 33 Am. Rep. 778. Pleadings when demurrable, when not; gasolene; merchandise usually kept in similar stocks, see Cassimus v. Scottish Union & National Ins. Co. 135 Ala. 256, 33 So. 163.

[5] Pittsburgh Ins. Co. v. Frazier, 107 Pa. St. 521.

such as is usually kept for sale in a drug store covers benzine.[6] And if a policy provides that it shall be void if dynamite is kept, used, or allowed on the premises, unless otherwise provided by agreement indorsed on the policy or added thereto, and a slip is attached to the policy providing that the insurance shall cover certain articles and such other merchandise as is usually kept for sale in a retail hardware store, the policy is not avoided by reason of keeping dynamite on the premises, if it can be proved to be an article of merchandise usually kept for sale in a retail hardware store.[7] So where the insurance is upon the "stock in trade" of a furniture dealer, paints, varnishes, and oils used in the course of the business are covered.[8] Where, however, the policy is upon "stock in trade, consisting of not hazardous merchandise," and the policy classifies the hazards as not hazardous, hazardous, extra hazardous, and specially hazardous, if goods are kept which are within the classes specified as being of greater risk, the policy is avoided.[9] A policy of insurance upon the materials used in a business, or the process of manufacture, will permit the use of all such materials as are ordinarily used in that business, though the printed part of the policy may prohibit keeping some of those materials.[10] If, however, the policy covers finished articles which are not in the process of manufacture, articles used in the manufacture of the finished product cannot be kept. So where a policy was issued upon a stock of "cabinet wares," it was held that the keeping of paint and varnish, which was used in the manufacture of the cabinet wares, being prohibited in the printed conditions, the policy was avoided.[11]

§ 2200. Storing of prohibited articles.—Another of the ordinary conditions of an insurance policy is that prohibiting the storing of certain hazardous articles; this provision has been construed as covering only those cases where the storing and safe-keeping of the prohibited articles is the sole object of the deposit, or to the storing in a mercantile sense; that is, a keeping for safe custody. It does not refer to a keeping as incidental to the

[6] Phœnix Ins. Co. v. Fleming, 65 Ark. 54, 39 L.R.A. 789, 44 S. W. 464, 27 Ins. L. J. 584.

[7] Phœnix Ins. Co. v. Walters, 24 Ind. App. 87, 79 Am. St. Rep. 257, 26 N. E. 257. Examine Sperry v. Springfield Fire & Marine Ins. Co. 26 Fed. 234 (policy avoided).

[8] Haley v. Dorchester Fire Ins. Co. 12 Gray (78 Mass.) 545, 546.

[9] Richards v. Protection Ins. Co. 36 Me. 273.

[10] Hall v. Insurance Co. of North America, 58 N. Y. 292, 17 Am. Rep. 255; Citizens' Ins. Co. v. McLaughlin, 53 Pa. St. 485, 6 Am. L. Reg. N. S. 374. See Bryant v. Poughkeepsie Mutual Ins. Co. 21 Barb. (N. Y.) 154, s. c. 17 N. Y. 200.

[11] Appleby v. Astor Ins. Co. 54 N. Y. 253.

use.[12] But whatever may be the exact meaning of the words "stored or kept" under a statutory provision relieving insured from liability for loss or damage occurring while gasolene is stored or kept in the insured building such provision does not preclude recovery where the only gasolene used in the building was that used in a small quantity in a cooking stove although it appeared that it caused the fire.[13] Although it is held that said words "stored or kept" as used in the statute, must be separately interpreted and that the policy might be avoided by a keeping which was not continuous nor habitual but only one which was temporary for a special purpose.[14] The keeping of hazardous articles for the purpose of retail is not a storing within the meaning of the condition.[15] In such cases, though the goods are kept, the purpose of the keeping is not the storing of them, but that of sale; the keeping being in all such instances incidental to the use.[16] Thus, the keeping by a grocer of oils and liquors for this purpose will not avoid the policy under such a condition.[17] Nor will the keeping of spirituous liquors in a house for the purpose of retailing them to the boarders avoid the insurance.[18] If an insurance is upon a building in the process of erection, articles necessary to be used in the construction thereof may be kept, though the policy prohibits storing of such articles. Such keeping for use is not a storing within the meaning of the condition.[19] Nor is the temporary keeping of tar for the purpose of repairing the building a storing.[20] But a policy on a three-story building described therein, covers a one-story addition to such building adjoining to, connected therewith, and for a long time previously thereto used and occupied in connection therewith, so as to avoid the policy for the unauthorized storing of explosives in such addition.[1] So a violation of a provision, prohibiting the [12] Williams v. Fireman's Fund Ins. Co. 54 N. Y. 569, 13 Am. Rep. 620; New York Equitable Ins. Co. v. Langdon, 6 Wend. (N. Y.) 623. See § 2198 herein.

[13] Thompson v. Equity Fire Ins. Co. [1910] App. Cas. L. R. 592. See § 2198 herein.

[14] Equity Fire Ins. Co. v. Thompson (Ont.) 29 Canadian L. T. 617, rev'g 17 Ont. L. R. 214. See § 2198 herein.

[15] Renshaw v. Missouri State Mutual Fire & Marine Ins. Co. (103 Mo. 595, 23 Am. St. Rep. 904, 43 Alb. L. J. 400, 20 Ins. L. J. 385, 15 S. W. 945. But see contra, Whitmarsh v. Charter Oak Fire Ins. Co. 2 Allen (84 Mass.) 581; Macomber v. Howard Fire Ins. Co. 7 Gray (73 Mass.) 257.

[16] Moore v. Protection Ins. Co. 29 Me. 97, 48 Am. Dec. 514; Phœnix Ins. Co. v. Taylor, 5 Minn. 492.

[17] New York Equitable Ins. Co. v. Langdon, 6 Wend. (N. Y.) 623; Buchanan v. Exchange Ins. Co. 61 N. Y. 26.

[18] Rafferty v. New Brunswick Ins. Co. 18 N. J. L. 480, 38 Am. Dec. 525.

[19] O'Neil v. Buffalo Fire Ins. Co. 3 Comst. (N. Y.) 122.

[20] Dobson v. Sotheby, Moody & M. 90, 31 R. R. 718.

[1] Boyer v. Grand Rapids Fire Ins.

storing of seed cotton or loose lint cotton in the insured building renders the policy void, although the cotton was stored in the building, without the knowledge of the insured, by one to whom he had leased the premises, and who was in control of them.[2]

§ 2201. Keeping of prohibited articles: hazardous and extra hazardous.—The insurer may prohibit the keeping of certain articles by express terms in the policy. Such articles are generally specified in the printed portion of the policy. When there is nothing in the written portion inconsistent with the printed part, as a general rule no recovery can be had for a loss occurring while such articles are kept. These articles, and also the prohibited uses of the premises, may be classified with reference to their bearing upon the risk, for some articles kept or trades pursued upon the premises may be of a more hazardous nature than others. The terms "not hazardous," "hazardous," "extrahazardous," and "specially hazardous" are used by the different insurers to classify the different risks. Each of these terms has a separate and distinct technical meaning which is well understood among insurers.[3] The condition prohibiting hazardous articles has been held to refer to those articles which create a greater risk of fire, and not to those which are more liable to injury in case of fire.[4] A policy upon goods "hazardous" and "not hazardous," will not cover merchandise included in the terms "extra hazardous" and "specially hazardous." [5] The conditions of keeping and the enumeration of articles mentioned as hazardous in a policy of insurance form part of it, and, if prohibited by it, it is not necessary for the insurer to show that the keeping thereof caused the loss or increased the risk.[6] A clause prohibiting the keeping of certain articles cannot be extended to include buildings not covered by the policy.[7] If the policy prohibits the keeping of certain articles which are denomi-

Co. 124 Mich. 455, 83 Am. St. Rep. 338, 83 N. W. 124.

[2] Edwards v. Farmers' Mutual Ins. Assoc. 128 Ga. 353, 12 L.R.A. (N.S.) 484, 57 S. E. 707.

[3] Pindar v. Continental Ins. Co. 38 N. Y. 364, 97 Am. Dec. 795. In this case Woodruff, J., said: "With these specifications of risks, 'not hazardous,' 'hazardous,' 'extra hazardous,' and 'specially hazardous,' the parties agree to an insurance. The policy declares what was insured in explicit terms as 'goods hazardous' and 'not hazardous' and excludes all others. It follows that the condition by which the policy was declared void if any goods 'extra hazardous' are kept, the contract is specific—the defendant had a right to make it, and the keeping of turpentine, it being 'extrahazardous,' was fatal and forbade any recovery."

[4] Rathbone v. City Fire Ins. Co. 31 Conn. 193.

[5] Pindar v. Continental Ins. Co. 38 N. Y. 364, 97 Am. Dec. 795; Richards v. Protection Ins. Co. 30 Me. 273.

[6] Phœnix Ins. Co. v. Lawrence, 4 Met. (61 Ky.) 9, 81 Am. Dec. 521.

[7] Sperry v. North American Ins. Co. 22 Fed. 516.

nated as hazardous, it is held that the casual deposit of any of these articles in the building covered will not be a violation of the condition;[8] nor will the keeping of articles incidental to the use of the insured premises.[9] If the policy specifies articles which it prohibits as being of a hazardous nature, articles which are not enumerated in such specification will not avoid the policy, except the keeping of such articles materially increases the risk.[10]

§ 2202. Specially prohibited articles: benzine: burning fluid: camphene: dynamite: fireworks: gasolene.—(a) Benzine. The temporary taking of benzine upon the premises for the purpose of cleaning the machinery is not a violation of a condition forbidding the insured to "keep or have . . . benzine" upon the premises,[11] nor is the risk increased by the temporary use of benzine in cleaning furniture and carpets,[12] and if the keeping of a particular article, such as benzine, is necessary in the insurer's business, the fact that the printed portion of the policy excludes the keeping thereof will not avoid the contract, where the written portion of the contract covers the property to be used in conducting that particular business.[13] And this applies where the insured property is a paint shop, where the use of benzine is necessary to carry on the business.[14] Again, where a policy by a typewritten rider annexed thereto, insures "paints, oils, varnishes," and "such other articles as are usually kept in a sign painter's and carriage painter's and tinner's shop," the insured may show that benzine is one of the articles usually kept in such a business, and therefore that the policy is not avoided by its keeping, and this though the policy provides in its printed stipulations that it shall be void "if (any usage or custom of trade or manufacture to the contrary, notwithstanding) there be kept benzine."[15] So benzine kept bottled in small quantities as part of a stock in trade is included in a policy containing a written description of the property insured as a stock of drugs and chemicals such as are usually kept for sale in a drug store, although the printed portion of the policy stipulates that it shall be void if benzine is kept without an agreement indorsed on the policy. The latter stipulation refers to keeping benzine in large quantities.[16] And [8] Hynds v. Schenectady County Mutual Ins. Co. 11 N. Y. 554. See Phœnix Ins. Co. v. Lawrence, 4 Met. (61 Ky.) 9, 81 Am. Dec. 521.

[9] New York Equitable Ins. Co. v. Langdon, 6 Wend. (N. Y.) 623.

[10] New York Equitable Ins. Co. v. Langdon, 6 Wend. (N. Y.) 623.

[11] Mears v. Humboldt Ins. Co. 92 Pa. St. 15, 37 Am. Rep. 647, 9 Ins. L. J. 139.

[12] Bentley v. Lumberman's Ins. Co. 191 Pa. 276, 43 Atl. 209, 28 Ins. L. J. 552.

[13] Faust v. American Fire Ins. Co. 91 Wis. 158, 30 L.R.A. 783, 64 N. W. 883, 51 Am. St. Rep. 876.

[14] Mascott v. First National Fire Ins. Co. 69 Vt. 116, 37 Atl. 255.

[15] Mascott v. Granite State Fire Ins. Co. 68 Vt. 253, 35 Atl. 75.

[16] Phœnix Ins. Co. v. Flemming, 65

clauses which forbid the keeping by the insured upon his premises of "hazardous" articles, but which has indorsed upon it by the company permission "to keep one barrel of benzine or turpentine in tin cans," are not violated by the introduction of a barrel of benzine in a wooden barrel upon the premises for the purpose of immediately emptying the same into a tin can.[17] But keeping or using benzine on the premises contrary to the provisions of the policy will avoid it unless such use is incidental to the business, adopted from necessity or custom, and recognized by insurer, or is in small quantities for a special and not dangerous purpose.[18] Where a policy provides that it shall be void in case benzine is used upon the premises, a statement by the insured in his proofs of loss that he had been informed that the fire was caused by the use of benzine by others upon the premises will not estop him from showing upon the trial that no benzine was in fact used, in the absence of any claim of surprise by defendant.[19] Whether benzine is a "burning fluid or chemical oil" is a question of fact for the jury.[20]

(b) Burning fluid. If the memorandum of special hazards prohibits the use of burning fluid for lighting, such use will avoid the policy.[1] But burning fluid, as prohibited in a policy of insurance, does not necessarily mean any fluid which will burn.[2]

(c) Camphene. Though a policy prohibits in its printed conditions the keeping of camphene, yet where a building is insured "privileged for a printing office," the insured may use camphene so far as is necessary in the business of printing.[3] And a provision in a policy forbidding the use of camphene is not violated by the use of a fluid for the purpose of illumination which is not in its nature like camphene.[4]

Ark. 54, 39 L.R.A. 789, 67 Am. St. Rep. 900, 44 S. W. 464, 27 Ins. L. J. 584.

[17] Maryland Fire Ins. Co. v. Whiteford, 31 Md. 219, 1 Am. Rep. 45.

[18] Wheeler v. Traders Ins. Co. 62 N. H. 450, 13 Am. St. Rep. 582.

[19] White v. Royal Ins. Co. 149 N. Y. 485, 44 N. E. 77, aff'g 29 N. Y. Supp. 323, 8 Misc. Rep. 613, 60 N. Y. S. R. 830.

[20] Mears v. Humboldt Ins. Co. 92 Pa. St. 15, 37 Am. Rep. 647, 9 Ins. L. J. 139.

[1] Campbell v. Charter Oak Fire & Marine Ins. Co. 10 Allen (92 Mass.) 213.

[2] Putnam v. Commonwealth Ins. Co. 4 Fed. 753.

[3] Harper v. Albany Ins. Co. 17 N. Y. 194. In this case the court said: "By insuring the plaintiff's stock, with the privilege of a printing office and book bindery, the use of such materials, including camphene, as were necessary in that business were allowed; otherwise, the contract was a mere delusion. But the restraining clause might nevertheless have its full effect upon the use of camphene for the purposes of light and for all purposes beyond its necessary connection with the stock and business insured."

[4] Wheeler v. American Central Ins. Co. 6 Mo. App. 235.

(d) Dynamite. The keeping of dynamite in a building without the written consent of the insurance company will avoid a policy prohibiting the keeping of nitro-glycerine in the building.[5] And if dynamite has been kept upon property insured by a policy providing that it shall be void if dynamite is kept, used, or allowed thereon, no recovery can be had on the policy, although the dynamite had nothing to do with the loss.[6] But the keeping of dynamite will not avoid the policy if it can be proved to be an article of merchandise usually kept for sale in a retail hardware store.[7]

(e) Fireworks. Fireworks may be shown to be an ordinary part of a stock of a "fancy goods and Yankee notion store," upon which a policy of insurance has been issued, and where it is so proven, the keeping of them is not a violation of a printed condition of the policy forbidding such keeping.[8] And if squibs containing a less amount of gunpowder than the quantity permitted are kept in a stock of general merchandise as is usual in such cases the policy is not avoided even though assured has no permit therefor other than as above stated and the prohibition is that fireworks shall not be kept, used, or allowed, any usage or custom of trade to the contrary notwithstanding.[9] So where a policy upon a building prohibited the keeping of fireworks upon the premises, it was held that the keeping of fireworks in a building twenty-five or fifty feet distant did not avoid the policy.[10] But it has been held that an insurance upon "family groceries, wines, liquors, tobacco, and cigars" does not include fireworks.[11] So fireworks temporarily kept for a celebration the next day avoids the policy under a condition that they shall not be kept, used, or allowed, notwithstanding any custom, usage or trade to the contrary.[12] And fireworks are not included under the name of firecrackers which are permitted to be kept, nor are they within the description "other articles in the line of business," where the policy requires that fireworks be specially written

[5] Sperry v. Springfield Fire & Marine Ins. Co. 26 Fed. 234.

[6] Bastian v. British American Assur. Co. 143 Cal. 287, 66 L.R.A. 255, 77 Pac. 63.

[7] Phœnix Ins. Co. v. Walters, 24 Ind. App. 87, 79 Am. St. Rep. 257, 26 N. E. 257.

[8] Barnum v. Merchants' Fire Ins. Co. 97 N. Y. 188. See Steinbach v. Lafayette Ins. Co. 54 N. Y. 90; Steinbach v. Relief Ins. Co. 13 Wall. (80 U. S.) 183, 20 L. ed. 615; Plinsky v. Germania Fire Ins. Co. 32 Fed. 47.

[9] Merchants & Traders Ins. Co. v. Floyd, 20 Ky. L. Rep. 1538, 49 S. W. 543.

[10] Allemania Fire Ins. Co. v. Pittsburgh Exposition Soc. 10 Cent. Rep. 592, 11 Atl. 572, 8 Sadler, 424.

[11] Georgia Home Ins. Co. v. Jacobs, 56 Tex. 366.

[12] Heron v. Phœnix Mutual Fire Ins. Co. 180 Pa. 257, 36 L.R.A. 517, 57 Am. St. Rep. 638, 36 Atl. 740.

in it.[13] Nor are fireworks included under "general merchandise" although they had been generally kept in such store but were not necessary to the business.[14] When forfeiture of a fire insurance policy is claimed for breach of conditions concerning the keeping of fireworks, the fact that fireworks were on exhibition, or that one of the insurance agents, after the policy was issued, purchased fireworks in his individual capacity at the insured store, does not necessarily show that another agent issuing the policy knew of the presence of such fireworks, so as to constitute a waiver by him of such forfeiture. The burden of proof is on the insured to show that the agent issuing the policy knew at the time of the keeping of such fireworks, or that the other agent, with knowledge, did some act in the course of his duties as such, recognizing the continuing validity of the policy.[15] Although the keeping of fireworks may be waived by giving a permit therefor, still such waiver is not of itself impliedly extended so as to authorize their continued keeping so that if they are not removed after the expiration of said permit the policy becomes ipso facto void.[16]

(f) Gasolene. A condition against the use or keeping of gasolene on the insured premises, is not broken by its use to an extent necessary to carry on the business, for which the insurer knew that the property insured was used and where both parties must have known either that the business insured must be discontinued or gasolene used therein. But in order to justify the use of gasolene on insured premises, on the ground that such use was necessary to continue the business which the insurer knew to be the one carried on by the assured, the necessity need not be absolute, nor need it be proved that the gasolene was of such vital importance to the business that it could not be ignored. It is sufficient that the gasolene was in ordinary use by the trade for the attainment of the results for which it was employed by the assured.[17] If a policy specifies as

[13] Steinbach v. Relief Fire Ins. Co. 13 Wall. (80 U. S.) 183, 20 L. ed. 615. Cited in:

United States.—James v. Lycoming Ins. Co. 4 Cliff. 272, 287, Fed. Cas. No. 7,182.

District of Columbia.—Mitchell v. Potomac Ins. Co. 16 App. D. C. 241, 265.

Kansas.—Cobb v. Insurance Co. of North America, 17 Kan. 492, 503.

Kentucky.—Western Assur. Co. v. Rector, 85 Ky. 294, 305, 3 S. W. 415.

New York.—Steinbach v. Lafayette Fire Ins. Co. 54 N. Y. 90, 97.

Distinguished in Plinsky v. Germania Fire & Marine Ins. Co. 32 Fed. 47, 49; Stout v. Commercial Union Assur. Co. 11 Biss. 309, 312, 12 Fed. 554, 566; Tubb v. Liverpool & London & Globe Ins. Co. 106 Ala. 651, 662, 17 So. 615.

[14] Norfolk Fire Ins. Co. v. Talley, 112 Va. 413, 71 S. E. 534.

[15] Phœnix Ins. Co. v. Fleming, 65 Ark. 54, 39 L.R.A. 784, 67 Am. St. Rep. 900, 44 S. W. 464.

[16] Betcher v. Capital Fire Ins. Co. 78 Minn. 240, 80 N. W. 971, 29 Ins. L. J. 135.

[17] Fraim v. National Fire Ins. Co.

insured a stock of goods in a first-class retail stove and tin store, and upon "such other goods kept for sale" therein, and this is followed by a privilege to keep not more than a certain quantity of gasolene or other oil or vapor, the "other goods" must be such as are ordinarily, usually, and customarily kept for sale in a store of that kind, and not such other classes of property as assured may then or at any time keep for sale in said store, and unless gasolene is such a commodity thus usually kept for sale, it is not covered and the privilege granted to keep gasolene implies that it was not considered by the parties as being otherwise covered, and where an additional premium is paid for said permission it will be deemed that it was thereby intended to offset any forfeiture which might otherwise have been incurred by said keeping, and that assured understood the terms of his policy and paid for keeping the permitted quantity and knew that if more was kept the policy would be forfeited.[18] And the use of gasolene such as is usual and necessary in the business of an auto repair shop, is permitted where the written part of a rider states that premises are to be used for such purpose, for the written controls the printed part of a policy in case of repugnancy.[19] And where keeping a small quantity of gasolene in no way contributed to the loss and it was usual and customary to keep such an article as a part of the goods insured, as one ordinarily used in the business, the policy is not thereby avoided and in such case the written will prevail over the printed clause in regard thereto.[20] And gasolene, kept as part of the usual stock of merchandise, will not avoid a policy in which a written description of the property insured names such stock "as is usually kept in country stores," although a printed condition declares that the policy shall be void if certain articles, including gasolene, are kept, used, or allowed on the premises.[1] So, although gasolene and coal oil may be articles of the class known as "extra hazardous," the keeping of them in reasonable quantities in a grocery store for the purpose of selling at retail, unless specially prohibited in the policy, will not avoid a contract of fire insurance.[2] So the keeping upon insured premises

170 Pa. St. 151, 37 Wkly. Notes Cas. 39, 50 Am. St. Rep. 753, 32 Atl. 613.

[18] Mitchell v. Potomac Ins. Co. 183 U. S. 42, 46 L. ed. 74, 22 Sup. Ct. 22, 31 Ins. L. J. 570, aff'g 16 App. D. C. 241.

[19] O'Neill v. Caledonian Ins. Co. of Edinburgh, Scotland, 166 Cal. 310, 135 Pac. 1121.

[20] McClure v. Mutual Fire Ins. Co. of Chester County, 242 Pa. 59, 48 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1221, 88 Atl. 921.

[1] Yock v. Home Mutual Ins. Co. 111 Cal. 503, 34 L.R.A. 857, 44 Pac. 189. Compare Cassimur v. Scottish Union & National Ins. Co. 135 Ala. 256, 33 So. 163 ("merchandise usually kept in similar stocks:" When allegation demurrable, when not).

[2] Renshaw v. Missouri State Mutual Fire & Marine Ins. Co. (103

of a very small quantity of gasolene for use in an engine used to operate the machinery necessary for the business, does not nullify insurance upon the property, although the keeping of gasolene is prohibited by the policy, if premiums were paid.[3] So the taking of a pint of gasolene in a bottle securely corked, into an insured dwelling, for cleansing purposes, is not within a clause in the policy avoiding it if there is kept, used, or allowed on the premises "any gasolene." [4]

A provision in a fire insurance policy rendering it void if gasolene is "kept, used, or allowed" on the premises, is not violated by the bringing of a gallon of it, on a single occasion, onto the property for temporary use, although such act results in the destruction of the property. Such a condition is not violated unless it is brought there for the purpose of being stored or kept. The purpose of the word "used" is to provide against the danger which would arise from the habitual, constant, or continued exposure of the property through the presence or use of the articles. The one word forbids the permanent or habitual keeping of the dangerous thing, and the other a like use of it without the actual depositing or storing of it on the premises.[5] So where gasolene is temporarily left at insured's factory instead of at his home where it was intended that delivery should have been made, and assured at once, upon learning of such fact, takes precautions for safety by placing it outside until its removal shortly thereafter, said gasolene is not so "kept or allowed" as to forfeit the policy, for the words "kept or allowed" do not refer to the temporary presence of gasolene on the premises, said prohibition means something more than a mere casual taking of gasolene on the premises and removing it soon after, and the burden of proof is on the insurer to show by a fair preponderance of evidence that assured exposed the property insured to the additional hazard of habitually keeping gasolene upon the premises for a considerable time before the jury would be warranted in finding for assurer.[6] Nor is the use, temporarily, of gasolene in an engine used for threshing grain in an insured barn, such a keeping or use of gasolene as to avoid the policy.[7]

Mo.) 595, 23 Am. St. Rep. 904, 15 S. W. 945.

[3] McClure v. Mutual Fire Ins. Co. 242 Pa. 59, 48 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1221, 88 Atl. 921.

[4] Arnold v. American Ins. Co. 148 Cal. 660, 25 L.R.A.(N.S.) 6, 84 Pac. 182.

[5] Springfield Fire & Marine Ins. Co. v. Wade, 95 Tex. 598, 58 L.R.A. 714, 93 Am. St. Rep. 870, 68 S. W. 977.

[6] Clute v. Clintonville Mutual Fire Ins. Co. 144 Wis. 638, 32 L.R.A. (N.S.) 240n, 129 N. W. 661, 40 Ins. L. J. 494.

[7] Bouchard v. Dirigo Mutual Fire Ins. Co. 113 Me. 17, L.R.A.1915D, 187, 92 Atl. 899, 45 Ins. L. J. 476.

But it is held that if a policy provides that it shall become void if gasolene is kept, used, or allowed on the insured premises, the policy is avoided by temporarily storing a small quantity of gasolene to be used in a gasolene stove for cooking purposes.[8]

The prohibition as to the use or keeping of gasolene is not to be strictly construed, as what is intended to be prohibited is the habitual and not the exceptional use, as in case of an emergency so that it does not preclude the use of a torch in order to burn off old paint or soften it up and prepare a building for repainting, and such use for such purpose, does not prevent a verdict for insured where a fire occurs therefrom, nor is such use within said clause as a matter of law,[9] although the increase of hazard in such case is held a question for the jury where there is some evidence to show that it was the custom of painters.[10] So a policy in the standard form is not made void by the use of a gasolene torch by a painter for the purpose of burning off paint from the building insured, where the work has continued for less than the fifteen days allowed by the policy for repairs.[11] Nor is gasolene "kept, used, or allowed" on the premises insured, by leaving a five gallon can containing said article in the building for a number of days for use in burning off old paint preparatory to repainting the building.[12] So a prohibition against using the premises for a more hazardous business does not include the use of gasolene for lighting.[13] So the presence on the insured premises of a small quantity of gasolene in a gasolene stove used for cooking, from which the fire originated, is not a storing or keeping within a condition of the policy that the insurer shall not be liable "for loss or damage occurring while gasolene is stored or kept in the building insured." [14] And the necessary use of gasolene in a gasolene stove for cooking, will be deemed to have been contemplated by the policy, where such use is customary in the neighborhood.[15] But it is also held that where the deposit or use of gasolene is prohibited, the use thereof in a stove in the house containing the

[8] Boyer v. Grand Rapids Fire Ins. Co. 124 Mich. 455, 83 Am. St. Rep. 338, 83 N. W. 124.

[9] Lebanon County v. Franklin Fire Ins. Co. of Phila. 237 Pa. 360, 44 L.R.A.(N.S.) 148n, 85 Atl. 419, 43 Ins. L. J. 397.

[10] Smith v. German Ins. Co. 107 Mich. 270, 65 N. W. 236, 30 L.R.A. 368.

[11] Garrebrant v. Continental Ins. Co. 75 N. J. Law, 577, 12 L.R.A. (N.S.) 443, 67 Atl. 90.

[12] Smith v. German Ins. Co. 107 Mich. 270, 30 L.R.A. 368, 65 N. W. 236.

[13] Mutual Fire Ins. Co. v. Coatesville Shoe Factory, 80 Pa. St. 407, 412.

[14] Thompson v. Equity Fire Ins. Co. 3 B. R. C. 1 (1910) A. C. 592. Also reported in 80 L. J. P. C. N. S. 13, 103 L. T. N. S. 153, 26 Times L. R. 616n.

[15] American Central Ins. Co. v. Green, 16 Tex. Civ. App. 531, 41 S. W. 74.

insured property, avoids the contract, even though it is kept in a receptacle in another building.[16] Again, a clause prohibiting the generating or evaporating within the building, or contiguous thereto, of any substance for burning gas, or the use of gasolene for lighting, is not infringed by the manufacture of gas from gasolene fifty feet from the building, and the use of it for lighting the building, it not appearing that gas and gasolene are substantially the same.[17] Nor is gasolene kept upon the "premises" within the policy intent where it is stored in quantities in excess of that permitted in an open shed only a few feet away from the buildings described as containing the insured property and which must be deemed, in conformity with the wording of the policy, to be the "premises" intended to be covered.[18] And where the amount of gasolene permitted is limited to that in the reservoirs of machines admitted into the building, where the insured machine is permanently or temporarily "stabled" such provision will be construed to intend that more than one auto may be kept there, each with gasolene in its tank.[19] If without assured's knowledge or complicity, directly or indirectly, an employee of assured's carried a can of gasolene upon the premises for the purpose of burning the house or building containing the insured goods, and it was so used, such act does not constitute keeping, using, or allowing gasolene on the premises.[20]

But a condition against the keeping of gasolene upon the insured premises will be broken where kept by one who temporarily occupies the premises with the implied consent of the insured, such violation being deemed a violation by the assured.[1] And if permission is given by assured to another to use a rear platform to the building and the latter without assured's knowledge attaches thereto a gasolene lamp which explodes and causes the loss, there can be no recovery.[2] So where the condition of the policy was that it should be void if, among other things, gasolene was kept, used, or allowed on the insured premises, and the question was whether there had been any violation of this condition on the part of the insured, and the cause of the fire was not in any way involved, testimony showing that the fire was not caused by gasolene was held

[16] Pennsylvania Fire Ins. Co. v. Faires, 13 Tex. Civ. App. 111, 35 S. W. 55.

[17] Arkell v. Commerce Ins. Co. 69 N. Y. 191, 25 Am. Rep. 168. See Liverpool & London & Globe Ins. Co. v. Gunther, 116 U. S. 113, 29 L. ed. 575, 6 Sup. Ct. 306.

[18] Rau v. Westchester Fire Ins. Co. 55 N. Y. Supp. 459, 36 App. Div. 179, 28 Ins. L. J. 182.

[19] O'Neill v. Caledonian Ins. Co. of Edinburgh, Scotland, 166 Cal. 310, 135 Pac. 1121.

[20] Queen Ins. Co. v. Van Giesen, 136 Ga. 741, 72 S. E. 41.

[1] German Fire Ins. Co. v. Board of Commrs. 54 Kan. 732, 45 Am. St. Rep. 306, 39 Pac. 697.

[2] Kohlmann v. Selvage, 54 N. Y. Supp. 230, 34 App. Div. 380.

inadmissible, and properly rejected as it was calculated to mislead the jury.[3]

§ 2203. Specially prohibited articles: gunpowder: hay: kerosene: lights: naphtha.—(a) Gunpowder.—A condition against keeping gunpowder for sale or on storage upon the premises does not cover the case where gunpowder is merely kept upon the premises, but neither on storage nor for sale;[4] nor does it cover the merely placing of it upon the premises.[5] A condition in a policy of insurance upon "dry goods and groceries" that it shall be void in case gunpowder is kept "upon or in the premises insured," has been held not to apply in such a case, as "premises" means real estate, and not "dry goods and groceries." So where a policy of insurance provides that the building insured is privileged to contain goods "not hazardous, hazardous, and extra hazardous," and the proposals annexed thereto enumerate three classes of goods under the several heads, "not hazardous," "hazardous," and "extra hazardous," adding at the close of the last class, "gunpowder is not insurable unless by special agreement," the meaning is that gunpowder belongs to the "extra-hazardous" class, and may be stored in the building without forfeiting the policy, but that it will not be covered by the insurance unless there is a special agreement to that effect.[6] Where the insurance was upon "a stock of goods and merchandise" in plaintiff's store, it was held that though the policy forbids the keeping of gunpowder, the keeping of it in small quantities for the purpose of retail did not avoid the policy.[7] Placing gunpowder in a building is not a "storing" of gunpowder therein within the meaning of an exception in the policy, where the powder is placed there with a lighted match by municipal authority, for the purpose of an explosion.[8]

(b) Hay.—Where the policy does not cover "extra hazardous" articles, the keeping of hay, which is one of the articles designated in that class, will avoid the policy.[9] If the policy forbids the keeping of "hay pressed in bales," it being claimed as hazardous, it is held that the keeping of loose, unbaled hay in large quantities is also forbidden, since it is of a more hazardous nature.[10]

[3] Turnbull v. Home Fire Ins. Co. 83 Md. 312, 34 Atl. 875.

[4] State Ins. Co. v. Hughes, 10 Lea (78 Tenn.) 461.

[5] Hartford Protection Ins. Co. v. Harmer, 2 Ohio St. 452, 59 Am. Dec. 684.

[6] Duncan v. Sun Fire Ins. Co. 6 Wend. (N. Y.) 488, 22 Am. Dec. 539.

[7] Leggett v. Ætna Ins. Co. 10 Rich. (S. C.) 202. But see Western Assur. Co. v. Rector, 85 Ky. 294, 3 S. W. 415. See Pittsburgh Ins. Co. v. Frazee, 107 Pa. St. 521.

[8] City Fire Ins. Co. v. Corlies, 21 Wend. (N. Y.) 367, 34 Am. Dec. 258.

[9] Francis v. Somerville Mutual Ins. Co. 25 N. J. L. 78.

[10] Dittmer v. Germania Ins. Co. 23 La. Ann. 458, 8 Am. Rep. 600.

(c) Kerosene: Lights.—In the absence of proof, kerosene oil will not be held to be a "burning fluid or chemical oil," as these terms are used in an insurance policy.[11] A policy of insurance which allows the keeping of kerosene on the premises to be used for lights, provided the lights are filled and trimmed by daylight, is avoided where the insured draws kerosene by lamplight for the purpose of loaning it to a neighbor, in consequence of which an explosion occurs.[12] And the words "for lights" are restricted in meaning to lighting the insured premises only, and the words "by daylight" are intended to prevent the use of artificial light from which the oil might catch fire.[13] So like restrictions are merely a regulation of the use of the oil for lighting purposes, and will not be construed to prohibit its use for any other purposes than for lights.[14] Where a policy of fire insurance upon goods in a store contained a clause prohibiting the use of any burning fluid or chemical oils, and a subsequent clause expressly permitting the use of kerosene oil for use of lights in dwellings, it was held that the use of kerosene oil as a light in the store rendered the policy null and void.[15] And an instruction is proper that if the fire causing the loss was occasioned by assured's failure to comply with the policy restrictions as to the use of kerosene oil on the premises, the jury should find for assurer. But the keeping and storing of oil about the premises will not avoid the policy where the restrictions as to the quantity kept for sale and the use of the oil kept for lighting purposes are complied with.[16] A policy of insurance issued upon a photographer's stock, "including . . . materials used in their business," has been held to permit the use of a portable kerosene oil lamp or stove, such as is ordinarily used in that business, though there may be a clause prohibiting the use of kerosene.[17] Where a policy provided that the insurers should not be liable for loss occasioned by the use of kerosene oil as a light in any barn or outbuilding, and the insured took a kerosene lamp to his barn to catch fowls, and while there the lamp was upset and the barn destroyed, it was held that if the fire was occasioned by the use of the kerosene rather than of any other burning fluid, the policy was avoided, the condition not

[11] Mark v. National Fire Ins. Co. 24 Hun (N. Y.) 565.

[12] Gunther v. Liverpool & London & Globe Ins. Co. 34 Fed. 501.

[13] Gunther v. Liverpool & London & Globe Ins. Co. 134 U. S. 110, 10 Sup. Ct. 448, 33 L. ed. 857.

[14] Snyder v. Dwelling-House Ins. Co. 59 N. J. L. 544, 59 Am. St. Rep. 625, 37 Atl. 1022.

[15] Cerf v. Home Ins. Co. 44 Cal. 320, 13 Am. Rep. 165.

[16] Phœnix Ins. Co. v. Fleener, 104 Ark. 119, 148 S. W. 650, 41 Ins. L. J. 1488.

[17] Hall v. Insurance Co. of North America, 58 N. Y. 292, 17 Am. Rep. 255.

being restricted to an habitual use of the oil in the barn.[18] A provision that the insurer will not be liable "for the use of kerosene" means where the loss is occasioned by such use.[19] Where a steamboat was insured against fire by a policy conditioned to be void "if gunpowder, camphene, spirit gas, naphtha, benzine or benzole, chemical, crude, or refined coal oils are kept or used on the premises without consent," it was held that the use of kerosene oil to light the boat did not forfeit the policy.[20] So, where a fire insurance policy prohibited the use of camphene, spirit gas, burning fluid, or chemical oils, but permitted the use of refined coal oil, kerosene, or other carbon oil for lights, if drawn and the lamps filled by daylight, and the insured used for lights lard oil and candles, filling the lamps at night, it was held no breach of condition.[1]

(d) Naphtha.—The use of a naphtha torch to burn old paint from a wooden building for the purpose of repainting it, when such use continues every working day for nearly a month, violates a condition in a policy of insurance providing that it shall become void if the situation and circumstances of the risk shall be so altered as to cause an increase thereof, and this is so even though the naphtha is not on or in the premises, but is used in a liquid form a few inches outside the wall;[2] and in such case the question to be submitted to the jury is whether the use of naphtha at the time and in the manner in which it was used was reasonable and proper in the repair of the building, having reference to the danger from fire, as well as other considerations. If the use of the naphtha torch was, under the circumstances and at the time and in the manner in which it was used, an unreasonable use, the policy is avoided thereby.[3]

§ 2204. Specially prohibited articles: petroleum: saltpeter: spirituous liquors: turpentine.—(a) Petroleum.—The keeping by the insured of small quantities of petroleum for medicinal purposes will not avoid a policy which provides that if petroleum is stored upon the premises without written consent the policy shall be void.[4] Where a fire insurance policy on a specifically described steam flour-mill and machinery prohibited keeping of petroleum on "the [18] Matson v. Farm Buildings Ins. Co. 73 N. Y. 310, 29 Am. Rep. 149.

[19] Jones v. Howard Ins. Co. 117 N. Y. 103, 22 N. E. 578, 26 N. Y. St. Rep. 844.

[20] Morse v. Buffalo Fire Ins. Co. 30 Wis. 534, 11 Am. Rep. 587.

[1] Carlin v. Western Assurance Co. 57 Md. 515, 40 Am. Rep. 440.

[2] First Congregational Church v. Holyoke Mutual Fire Ins. Co. 158 Mass. 475, 35 Am. St. Rep. 508, 19 L.R.A. 587, 33 N. E. 572. See § 2202 herein.

[3] First Congregational Church v. Holyoke Mutual Fire Ins. Co. 158 Mass. 475, 19 L.R.A. 587, 35 Am. St. Rep. 508, 33 N. E. 572.

[4] Williams v. Firemen's Fund Ins. Co., 54 N. Y. 569, 13 Am. Rep. 620.

premises," and the insured kept a barrel of petroleum in the engine-house adjoining, but not included in the specific description of the premises, and the fire originated in the main building, it was held that the petroleum was not on "the premises," and that the insured had a right to keep petroleum on the premises for the purpose of lubricating the insured machinery.[5]

(b) Saltpeter.—An insurance upon a wholesale grocery, with permission to keep "all articles kept for sale in such stock," is not avoided by the keeping of saltpeter, though the policy contains a printed stipulation prohibiting insured from keeping it, where it is shown to be part of stock usually kept in such business.[6] In Illinois, it has been held that an instruction in an action on an insurance policy that if the company knew the character of the business to be carried on when it issued the policy, it must be held to have taken the risks usual in that business, is erroneous, as tending to mislead, where the defense was that the insured kept saltpeter on the premises in violation of the condition of the policy, and the proof showed not only that it was of doubtful necessity for the insured to keep saltpeter on the premises to carry on his business, and unreasonable to keep a keg of it, but also that he kept it on sale.[7] In an action upon a policy of fire insurance which covered a stock of "drugs and medicines" and contained a stipulation that the policy should be avoided "if the insured shall keep gunpowder, fireworks, saltpeter," etc., it was held that the prohibition was not against keeping saltpeter as a drug, but only in such manner or quantity or for such purpose as would increase the risk, and where saltpeter was on hand as part of the stock of drugs at the time the policy issued, being an article usually kept in drug stores, it was kept as a part of the stock insured, and although specially prohibited by the terms of the policy, the contract was not thereby avoided.[8]

(c) Spirituous liquors.—Though a policy provides that spirituous liquors shall not be kept, yet where such keeping is incidental to the business of a grocer, it does not avoid the policy.[9] So also they may be kept for the use of the family, or for the purpose of selling to boarders.[10]

(d) Turpentine.—Spirits of turpentine may be shown to be part of the stock usually kept in the business upon the stock of [5] Carlin v. Western Assurance Co. of Toronto, Canada, 57 Md. 515, 40 Am. Rep. 440.

[6] Stout v. Commercial Ins. Co. 11 Ins. L. J. 688, 11 Biss. (U. S. C. C.) 309, 12 Fed. 554.

[7] Commercial Ins. Co. v. Mehlman, 48 Ill. 313, 95 Am. Dec. 543.

[8] Collins v. Farmville Insurance & Banking Co. 79 N. C. 279, 28 Am. Rep. 322.

[9] New York Equitable Ins. Co. v. Langdon, 6 Wend. (N. Y.) 623.

[10] Rafferty v. New Brunswick Fire Ins. Co. 18 N. J. L. 480, 38 Am. Dec. 525.

which the policy is issued.[11] In Pennsylvania, however, where a fire policy insured a stock of "general merchandise of all kinds usually kept in a country retail store . . . except as hereinafter provided," and immediately following this was a printed exemption from liability for loss where "turpentine or benzine" were deposited, stored, kept, or used without written consent on the policy, and the insured kept for sale both turpentine and benzine without such consent, it was held that the policy was void, although those articles might be part of the merchandise usually kept in such stores.[12]

§ 2205. Erection of buildings adjacent to insured premises.—Unless the policy contains a stipulation against the erection of adjacent buildings, it has been held that it will not be avoided by the erection of such buildings unless some injury actually results therefrom.[13] It has also been held that though the erection of adjacent buildings by the insured may increase the risk, this will not avoid the policy, unless such loss is occasioned by such increase.[14] The fact that a policy is issued upon a building which is described as having no buildings adjacent thereto is no warranty upon the part of the insured that no adjacent buildings will be erected, where the policy contains no stipulation to that effect.[15] A policy which stipulates that if the risk is increased by the erection of adjacent buildings, the insurer may rescind the contract, is not made absolutely

[11] Pindar v. Kings Co. Ins. Co. 36 N. Y. 648, 93 Am. Dec. 544.

[12] Lancaster Fire Ins. Co. v. Lenheim, 89 Pa. St. 497, 33 Am. Rep. 778.

Under the New York standard form of fire policies the condition as to prohibited articles reads as follows: "If (any usage or custom of trade or manufacture to the contrary notwithstanding) there be kept, used, or allowed on the above-described premises benzine, benzole, dynamite, ether, fireworks, gasolene, greek fire, gunpowder exceeding twenty-five pounds in quantity, naphtha, nitroglycerine, or other explosives, phosphorus, or petroleum, or any of its products of greater inflammability than kerosene oil of the United States standard (which last may be used for lights and kept for sale according to law, but in quantities not exceeding five barrels, provided it be drawn and lamps filled by daylight or at a distance not less than ten feet from artificial light"). 3 N. Y. Rev. Stats. (8th ed. 1663) Laws 1886, c. 488, am'd 1887, c. 429; 1901, c. 513; 1903, c. 106; 1909, c. 240; 1910, chaps. 168, 638, 668; 1913, c. 181; C. L. 1909, c. 33, sec. 121; Consol. L. c. 28.

[13] Gates v. Madison County Mutual Ins. Co. 5 N. Y. (1 Seld.) 469, 55 Am. Dec. 360. See Pottsville Iron Co. v. Horan, 89 Pa. 438, 9 Ins. L. J. 201. Examine Stetson v. Massachusetts Ins. Co. 4 Mass. 330, 3 Am. Dec. 217; Lattomus v. Farmers' Mutual Fire Ins. Co. 3 Houst. (Del.) 404.

[14] Howard v. Kentucky & Louisville Mutual Ins. Co. 13 B. Mon. (Ky.) 282; Stebbins v. Globe Ins. Co. 2 Hall (N. Y.) 632.

[15] Howard v. Kentucky & Louisville Mutual Ins. Co. 13 B. Mon. (Ky.) 282.

void by the erection of such buildings, and if the insurers fail to rescind the contract after having knowledge of the facts, the insured may recover for subsequent loss.[16] Where a policy provides that it shall be void if the risk is increased by the erection of any building contiguous thereto, the erection of a building twenty-five feet distant from the one insured is not contiguous, within the meaning of the policy.[17] If a policy is conditioned to be void in case the risk is increased by any alteration or change in circumstances by or with the advice, agency, or consent of the insured, the erection of a building by the insured on an adjoining lot which increases the risk will avoid the policy;[18] as it will also where the policy prohibits any increase of risk by any means within the control of the insured.[19] But if the erection of adjacent buildings has decreased the general risk, it will not avoid the policy, though the external risk has been increased. Thus, where a furnace was taken out of the insured building and placed in an addition, which had been built subsequent to the issuance of the policy, it was held that as the change decreased the risk generally, the policy was not avoided.[20] A breach of condition by the erection without notice of a barn on an adjacent lot is waived by acceptance and retention of the premium by insurer with knowledge of the breach.[1]

§ 2206. Erection of adjacent buildings to which insured is not a party.—If buildings are erected upon adjoining land over which the insured has no control, this will not avoid a policy conditioned to be void in case of any increase of risk, though the risk may be increased by the erection of the buildings.[2] The condition refers to acts over which the insured has control, and though the insured may own the adjoining land, yet the erection of buildings thereon which increases the risk by one holding under a lease executed prior to effecting the insurance will not avoid the policy.[3] But if with assured's knowledge a wooden building is erected, though

[16] Commercial Ins. Co. v. Mehlman, 48 Ill. 313, 95 Am. Dec. 543.

[17] Olson v. St. Paul Fire & Marine Ins. Co. 35 Minn. 432, 59 Am. Rep. 333, 29 N. W. 125.

[18] Allen v. Massasoit Ins. Co. 99 Mass. 160. See also Howard v. Kentucky & Louisville Mutual Ins. Co. 13 B. Mon. (Ky.) 282, 289; Boatwright v. Ætna Ins. Co. 1 Strob. (S. C.) 281, 287.

[19] Francis v. Somerville Mutual Ins. Co. 1 Dutch. (25 N. J. L.) 78; Murdock v. Chenango County Ins. Co. 2 N. Y. 210.

[20] Lomas v. British America Assurance Co. 22 U. C. Q. B. 310; Heneker v. British Am. Assur. Co. 13 U. C. C. P. 99.

[1] Schmurr v. State Ins. Co. 30 Oreg. 29, 46 Pac. 363, 26 Ins. L. J. 373.

[2] Howard v. Kentucky & Louisville Mutual Ins. Co. 13 B. Mon. (Ky.) 282.

[3] Franklin Fire Ins. Co. v. Gruver, 100 Pa. St. 266.

not by him nor under his control, within a few feet of the insured building, the hazard is increased and the policy forfeited.[4]

§ 2206a. Erection or occupation of adjacent buildings: change in exposure.—An insurance policy upon cornerib and the contents thereof, providing that it shall be void in case of any change in the exposure by the erection or occupation of adjacent buildings, or by any means whatever in the control or knowledge of the assurer, is avoided by the use by the assurer, or with his permission, of an engine and boiler near the cornerib, furnishing the power to a corn sheller. The word "exposure" as used in policies of insurance indicates danger of destruction or injury to the property insured from external sources not inherent in the property itself.[5]

§ 2206b. Requirement to build chimneys.—A condition voiding the policy if assured fails to build or have built brick or stone chimneys within a specified time from the date of the application, does not obligate compliance therewith nor bind assured where the policy was issued and delivered without an application although it was subsequently signed by assured.[6]

§ 2207. Increase or change of risks.—Most policies of fire insurance contain a clause to the effect that the policy shall be void in case of any increase in the risk. In construing this clause, the intent of the parties is to be considered, as in all other parts of the policy. A strict construction against the insured will not be given to such a condition. The use of the property upon which the policy is issued must be considered, and the insurer is presumed to have assumed the risk in reference thereto.[7] An increase of hazard is some alteration or change in the situation or condition of the property insured, which tends to increase the risk—something of duration, and not a casual change of a temporary character.[8] Increase in risk resulting from adjacent premises over which the assured has no control will not avoid a policy of insurance, though it declares that if the "hazard is increased without the consent of the company in writing the policy shall be void." This condition applies only to the insured premises, or to property under the control of the assured.[9] So a risk is not necessarily increased, in case of a

[4] Straker v. Phœnix Ins. Co. 101 Wis. 413, 77 N. W. 752, 28 Ins. L. J. 143.

[5] Davis v. Western Home Ins. Co. 81 Iowa, 496, 10 L.R.A. 359, 25 Am. St. Rep. 509, 46 N. W. 1073.

[6] Loyal Mutual Fire Ins. Co. v. J. S. Brown & Bro. Mercantile Co. 47 Colo. 467, 107 Pac. 1098, 39 Ins. L. J. 870.

[7] Holbrook v. St. Paul Fire & Marine Ins. Co. 25 Minn. 229. "Hazard," "moral hazard," "increased hazard." See Hartford Ins. Co. v. Dorrok, — Tex. Civ. App. —, 133 S. W. 465, 40 Ins. L. J. 499.

[8] Angier v. Western Assur. Co. 10 S. Dak. 82, 66 Am. St. Rep. 685, 71 N. W. 761. See §§ 2239, 2240 herein.

[9] State Ins. Co. v. Taylor, 14 Colo.

policy of insurance upon a distillery, by the fact that the assured kept on hand, and had at the time of the fire, thirty or forty barrels of whisky in the cellar, for a necessary and natural incident of the business would be to have some of the manufactured article on hand.[10] A subsequent sale under a pre-existing judgment or encumbrance does not increase the risk.[11] And a verdict that a change of business did not increase the hazard will not be disturbed.[12] A mere trifling increase will not avoid the policy. There must be a substantial and material increase, such as the insurer could not reasonably from the terms of the policy have contracted to assume,[13] and where there is such an increase, the policy is avoided.[14] Under a fire policy conditioned that if an engine be used upon the premises the president of the company shall appoint a committee to ascertain the amount of increase of risk, if any, by examination, and, if increased, the insured shall pay an additional premium, the use of the engine does not itself forfeit the policy, nor of necessity increase the risk; but if risk is increased and loss caused thereby, the insurer, in the event of no additional premium note being given, is released from liability, unless it has neglected to appoint the committee and make examination provided for.[15] The provision in a policy of insurance against an increase of risk by acts of the insured is an independent condition of itself, and is not to be controlled or limited by the previous provisions or specifi-

499, 20 Am. St. Rep. 281, 24 Pac. 333.

[10] People's Ins. Co. v. Spencer, 53 Pa. St. 353, 91 Am. Dec. 217.

[11] Collins v. London Assurance Co. 165 Pa. St. 298, 30 Atl. 924.

[12] McClure v. Mutual Fire Ins. Co. of Chester County, 242 Pa. 59, 48 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1221, 88 Atl. 921.

[13] United States.—Crane v. City Ins. Co. 3 Fed. 558.

Connecticut.—Wood v. Hartford Fire Ins. Co. 13 Conn. 533, 35 Am. Dec. 92.

Maryland.—Allen v. Mutual Ins. Co. 2 Md. 111.

Massachusetts.—Merriam v. Middlesex Ins. Co. 21 Pick. (38 Mass.) 162, 32 Am. Dec. 252; Jones Manufacturing Co. v. Mutual Ins. Co. 8 Cush. (62 Mass.) 82, 83, 54 Am. Dec. 742.

New York.—Parker v. Arctic Fire Ins. Co. 59 N. Y. 1; Appleby v. Astor Fire Ins. Co. 54 N. Y. 253.

Pennsylvania.—Girard Fire & Marine Ins. Co. v. Stephenson, 37 Pa. St. 293, 73 Am. Dec. 423.

[14] Lounsbury v. Protection Ins. Co. 8 Conn. 459, 21 Am. Dec. 686; Rice v. Tower, 7 Gray (67 Mass.) 426; Sanford v. Mechanics' Ins. Co. 12 Cush. (66 Mass.) 541; Bowman v. Pacific Ins. Co. 27 Mo. 152; Duncan v. Sun Ins. Co. 6 Wend. (N. Y.) 488, 22 Am. Dec. 539.

As to avoidance of policy by new and different use, see Progress Spinning & Knitting Mills Co. v. Southern National Ins. Co. 42 Utah, 263, 45 L.R.A.(N.S.) 132 and note, 130 Pac. 63.

[15] Schaeffer v. Farmers' Mutual Fire Ins. Co. 80 Md. 563, 45 Am. St. Rep. 361, 31 Atl. 317. But in German Ins. Co. v. Hart, 16 Ky. L. R. 344, it was held that a steam threshing machine placed near a barn did not avoid the policy, although it was the cause of the destruction of the property.

cations of the hazards. Therefore, an act done by the insured, although not included in the class of specified hazards, nevertheless avoids the policy if it increases the risk.[16] A condition forfeiting the policy if the property insured is so changed as to increase risk is not broken by a changed use of premises, as restaurant to that of paint and wagon shop, when evidence shows that such change diminished the risk.[17] If the policy simply contains a condition that "any increase of risk" will avoid it, any material increase will defeat the policy, and where such an increase is shown to have been made, there can be no inquiry into the fact as to whether the loss was caused by such increase of risk.[18] A provision of a policy requiring that if the circumstances affecting the risk shall be altered by the assured so as to increase the risk, without the consent of the underwriters, the policy shall be void, binds the assured not only not to make any alterations in the use of the property which shall increase the risk, but also obligates him not to discontinue the exercise of any precaution which it is represented in the application will be adopted with a view to diminish the risk, and a failure to substantially comply with such provision will release the underwriter.[19] The condition that a policy shall become void if the risk is increased by any means whatever within the control of the assured is not broken by his making a conveyance which is intended and accepted as a mortgage to secure the payment of a loan, unless it is found that the execution of such mortgage did increase such risk.[20] It has been decided that in case the policy is to be void if there is any change by which the degree of risk is increased without the consent of the company, a change which is the result of accident is not within the meaning of the provision.[1] There is such an increase of risk as avoids the policy where an insured [16] Dittmer v. Germania Ins. Co. 23 La. Ann. 458, 8 Am. Rep. 600. In this case the assured allowed a lot of loose and unbaled hay to be stored in the upper part of the building insured without giving notice to the insurers. It was held that although unbaled hay was not specially excepted from the hazards, yet from its very nature the risk was increased, and therefore it avoided the policy on that ground. See also Boatwright v. Ætna Ins. Co. 1 Strob. (S. C.) 281. See Ampersand Hotel Co. v. Home Ins. Co. 198 N. Y. 495, 28 L.R.A. (N.S.) 218, 91 N. E. 1049, 39 Ins. L. J. 1031, 1033.

[17] Esch v. Home Ins. Co. 78 Iowa, 334, 16 Am. St. Rep. 443, 43 N. W. 229.

[18] Hoffecker v. Newcastle County Mutual Ins. Co. 5 Houst. (Del.) 101; Lyman v. State Ins. Co. 14 Allen (96 Mass.) 329; Mead v. North Western Ins. Co. 7 N. Y. 530.

[19] Houghton v. Manufacturers' Mutual Fire Ins. Co. 8 Met. (49 Mass.) 114, 41 Am. Dec. 489.

[20] Crittenden v. Springfield Fire & Marine Ins. Co. 85 Iowa, 652, 39 Am. St. Rep. 321, 52 N. W. 548.

[1] Breuner v. Liverpool & London & Globe Ins. Co. 51 Cal. 101, 21 Am. Rep. 703.

mill or manufactory then carrying on a certain business, subsequently changes the same exclusively to one wherein the chances of loss by fire are greatly increased, in that the material insured is more quickly ignited and combustible.[2]

§ 2207a. Same subject: conspiracy to burn property: fraud.—A conspiracy, unaccompanied by an overt act, to burn insured property, in which the owner joins, does not, although it is in process of accomplishment at the time the property is destroyed by fire, avoid the policy, under provisions that the policy shall be void in case of any fraud touching any matter relating to the subject of the insurance, or if the hazard is increased by any means within the control or knowledge of the insured.[3]

§ 2207b. Same subject: attempt to burn property.—A mere possibility that an unsuccessful attempt by an unknown person to burn an insured building may be repeated, coupled with failure to take any adequate measures to prevent it or to notify the insurer, is not an increase of hazard which will avoid the policy, under a provision that it shall be void if the hazard is increased by any means within the control or knowledge of the insured.[4]

§ 2208. Notice of increase of risk: waiver.—As a general rule, if the policy is conditioned to be void in case notice is not given to the insurers of any increase of risk, failure to give notice will defeat a recovery on the policy for any subsequent loss.[5] A similar rule also prevails where by-laws of a mutual company containing a provision such as the above are made a part of the policy.[6] The insured is bound only to give notice to the company of any change of which he has knowledge, and by which he knows the rate of insurance will be increased, when the conditions of the policy require him to give notice to the company of any change in the insured or neighboring premises, or in the use or occupation of the same, whereby the risk is increased so as to increase the rate

[2] Progress Spinning & Knitting Mills Co. v. Southern National Ins. Co. 42 Utah, 263, 45 L.R.A.(N.S.) 122, 130 Pac. 63, 42 Ins. L. J. 704.

On change in use or condition of mill or factory as avoiding policy, see note in 45 L.R.A.(N.S.) 123.

[3] Ampersand Hotel Co. v. Home Ins. Co. 198 N. Y. 495, 28 L.R.A. (N.S.) 218, 91 N. E. 1099, 39 Ins. L. J. 1031.

[4] Williamsburg City Fire Ins. Co. v. Weeks Drug Co. 103 Tex. 608, 31 L.R.A.(N.S.) 603, 132 S. W. 121.

On indications that building may be intentionally set on fire as an increase of risk, see note in 31 L.R.A. (N.S.) 603.

[5] Peoria Sugar Refining Co. v. People's Fire Ins. Co. 24 Fed. 773; Gardiner v. Piscataqua Marine & Fire Ins. Co. 38 Me. 439; Kern v. South St. Louis Mutual Ins. Co. 40 Mo. 19; Franklin Fire Ins. Co. v. Grawer, 100 Pa. St. 266.

[6] Calvert v. Hamilton Mutual Ins. Co. 1 Allen (83 Mass.) 308, 79 Am. Dec. 744.

of insurance.[7] If an insurance on a "builder's risk" on a factory and its machinery, the building being in the course of construction, stipulates for notice to the company as soon as manufacturing is ready to begin, and that the rate shall be adjusted, but that the use of the premises so as to increase the risk shall avoid the policy, there must be a notice or readjustment of the rate before the actual beginning of manufacturing, and there must be a notice of a use or occupancy beyond the ordinary hazard of a builder's risk, otherwise the policy will be void, but the fact of manufacturing without notice of readjustment, or of increase or risk without notice or consent, is for the jury.[8] But where by the terms of a policy the insured was bound to give notice to the company of an increase of risk, and the company was to have the option thereupon to terminate the insurance, and the insured did increase the risk, but failed to notify the company thereof, and the insured property was subsequently destroyed, but not by reason of such increased risk, it was held that the liability of the company on the policy still continued, as it could not be certainly assumed that the company, if notified, would have terminated the insurance.[9] If the policy is to be void in case notice of any increase of risk is not given, notice must be given within a reasonable time, in the absence of any limitation as to time in the policy.[10] And where it is optional with the insurer as to whether an increase avoids the policy, the decision must also be made within a reasonable time.[11] Notice of

[7] Rife v. Lebanon Mutual Ins. Co. 115 Pa. St. 530, 2 Am. St. Rep. 580, 6 Atl. 65.

[8] Phœnix Ins. Co. v. Franklin Brass Co. 7 U. S. C. C. A. 144, 8 U. S. App. 451, 58 Fed. 166. "We think the court should have instructed the jury in simple positive terms: 1. That unless the insurer was previously notified of the readiness of the insured to commence manufacturing operations, and unless the rate of insurance was adjusted and fixed, an actual commencement of the manufacturing of goods would release it; and 2. That during the period antecedent to readiness for commencing the work of manufacturing, if the insured so used or occupied the premises as to increase the risk of the insurer beyond the ordinary hazard of builders' risks, the latter would not be responsible for loss by fire if its consent had not been given upon previous notice; leaving it to the jury to decide upon the questions of fact whether there had, before the fire, been a commencement of manufacturing operations without notice of readiness to commence to the insurer and without a readjustment of the rate; or, if not, whether there had been an increase of the risk of fire without notice to or consent of the insurer. The court erred in failing to give such instructions:" Phœnix Ins. Co. v. Franklin Brass Co. 8 U. S. App. 460, per Hughes, D. J.

[9] Joyce v. Maine Ins. Co. 45 Me. 168, 71 Am. Dec. 536.

[10] Pim v. Reid, 6 Man. & G. 1, 6 Scott (N. R.) 982, 12 L. J. C. P. 299; Canada Landed Credit Co. v. Canada Agricultural Ins. Co. 17 Grant Ch. (U. C.) 418.

[11] Lattomus v. Farmers' Mutual Fire Ins. Co. 3 Houst. (Del.) 404.

an increase of risk given during the life of the original policy will run through subsequent renewals.[12] A condition of policy upon farm buildings, requiring notice of any change material to the risk, does not include the use of a steam engine upon one occasion in connection with a machine for crushing grain, but refers to a structural alteration in the premises, or habitual or permanent alteration in the nature of the work or business carried on.[13] Knowledge of the agent of a mortgagee for whose benefit a building is insured that the owner of the building is doing that which increases the hazard, is knowledge of the mortgagee, within a provision of the policy avoiding it in case of increase of hazard not communicated to the company.[14] A violation of a clause against increase of hazard, is not waived by the insurer canceling the policy by letter at about the date of a fire, on the ground of such violation.[15]

§ 2209. Prohibited use of premises.—The fact that the insured property is described in the policy as being used for a certain purpose does not constitute a warranty that there shall be no other use subsequent to effecting the insurance. Though there may, however, in the absence of any express stipulation, be a change in the use, yet if there is such a change as increases the risk, the policy will be void. No change which does not increase the risk will avoid the policy.[16] The policy may, and generally does, prohibit any change in the use or occupation of the insured premises. A frequent condition is that prohibiting any change which shall increase the risk. Where a policy contained a condition avoiding it in case the premises "shall be occupied or used so as to increase the risk," and at the time of the insurance there was a planer in the mill which was used occasionally to plane lumber cut in the mill, and this use was continued after the policy was issued, it was held that the condition only prohibited a new and different use from that to which the property was applied when the policy was issued and a use by which the risk was increased.[17] A condition of this nature is held to be a continuing warranty.[18] The fact that the

[12] People's Ins. Co. v. Spencer, 53 Pa. St. 353, 91 Am. Dec. 217.

[13] Johnston v. Dominion Grange Mutual Fire Ins. Co. 23 Ont. App. 729. See § 2598 herein.

[14] Cole v. Germania Fire Ins. Co. 99 N. Y. 36, 1 N. E. 38.

[15] Ruffner Bros. v. Dutchess Ins. Co. 59 W. Va. 432, 115 Am. St. Rep. 924, 53 S. E. 943.

[16] Wood v. Hartford Ins. Co. 13 Conn. 533, 35 Am. Dec. 92; Blood v. Howard Fire Ins. Co. 12 Cush. (66 Mass.) 472; Reynolds v. Commerce Ins. Co. 47 N. Y. 597; Crane v. City Ins. Co. 2 Flip. (U. S. C. C.) 576, 3 Fed. 558.

[17] Whitney v. Black River Ins. Co. 72 N. Y. 117, 28 Am. Rep. 116.

[18] Germania Fire Ins. Co. v. Deckard, 3 Ind. App. 361, 28 N. E. 868.

prohibited use was not with the knowledge or consent of the insured, but was the act of some third party in possession, has been held to avoid the policy the same as if done by the insured himself.[19] Where the owners of a flour mill, the insurance upon which provided that it should be void if appropriated to other purposes, devoted a part of the mill for several months to the coopering business, it was held that the policy was avoided.[20] In an action upon a policy of insurance which contained a stipulation that if the premises should be "appropriated or used" for carrying on the trade of a carpenter, etc., the policies should be of no force or effect so long as any portion of the premises was so appropriated or used, and while the policy was running a box manufactory was established on the premises, but work therein had been temporarily suspended for some months before the building was destroyed by fire, it was held that the mere setting up of the machinery, etc., for the manufacture of boxes was not such an "appropriation" of a part of the premises to carpenter's work as avoided the policy, and had no other effect than to suspend the policy while the factory was in actual operation.[1] Keeping a barroom for the purpose of retailing liquors to boarders and others does not constitute the keeper a tavern-keeper, within the meaning of a provision within a policy against carrying on that occupation.[2] A provision, permitting the use, for the purpose of threshing the crops on the premises, of a steamthresher, with an efficient spark arrester, does not by inference prohibit the use of a steam engine in connection with a machine for threshing grain.[3]

§ 2210. Meaning of "premises" as used in condition.—The words "premises," as used in the policy, has been held to mean "building."[4] So where a policy was issued upon a stock of goods, and was conditioned to be void in case gunpowder was stored "upon or in the premises insured," it was held that "premises" referred to buildings, and not to goods, and that the keeping of gunpowder in the stock insured was not a keeping "upon or in the premises insured."[5]

[19] Wetherell v. City Fire Ins. Co. 16 Gray (82 Mass.) 276; First National Bank of Ballston v. Insurance Co. of North America, 50 N. Y. 45.

[20] Harris v. Columbia Ins. Co. 4 Ohio St. 285.

[1] United States Fire & Marine Ins. Co. v. Kimberly, 34 Md. 224, 227, 6 Am. Rep. 325.

[2] Rafferty v. New Brunswick Ins. Co. 18 N. J. L. (3 Har.) 480, 38 Am. Dec. 525.

On who is engaged in the liquor business within the meaning of an insurance contract, see note in 45 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1144.

[3] Johnson v. Dominion Grange Mutual Fire Ins. Co. 23 Ont. App. 729.

[4] Robinson v. Mercer County Mutual Ins. Co. 3 Dutch. (27 N. J.) 134; Mosley v. Vermont Fire Ins. Co. 55 Vt. 142.

[5] Leggett v. Ætna Ins. Co. 10 Rich. (S. C.) 202.

§ 2211. Prohibited uses: hazardous and extra hazardous.—Another frequent condition of the policy is that which stipulates that if the premises shall be appropriated or used for any purposes which are denominated as hazardous or extra hazardous, the policy shall be void. Such a condition has been held to amount to a promissory warranty that there shall be no such use of the premises.[6] In cases where a certain use or uses of the premises are prohibited such use or uses will avoid the policy, whether the change has thereby increased the risk or not.[7] If an insurance is effected upon a building which is to be used for a purpose denominated as hazardous in the list of hazards which is stated in the policy, the rule seems to be that any change of use to a purpose which is included in the same list of hazards will not avoid the policy.[8] The occasional occupation of the premises insured for purposes called hazardous in the conditions annexed to a policy of fire insurance will not avoid the policy; if such an occupation is connected with the buildings insured, there must be direct appropriation of the property to such use or purpose before the covenant is broken.[9] The privileges for all the purposes of the business insured will include an occupation necessary for the carrying on of such business, although it may be excepted in the provision against occupations denominated extra hazardous.[10] Under the clause of a fire policy making it void if any unauthorized hazardous trade increasing the risk is carried on in the building, the fact that such trade is carried on avoids the policy, no matter what was the cause or origin of the fire, or that such trade was carried on by the tenant of the assured without his knowledge or consent, and the fact that the insured had no knowledge of the prohibited use will not preserve the policy.[11] If there has been a breach of this condition, and the premises have been used for a prohibited purpose, the fact that the loss has not occurred from such use will not avail the insured. The policy is conditioned to be void in case of a prohibited use, and where there is such a use, the policy is void though the loss is caused by

[6] Mead v. North Western Ins. Co. 7 N. Y. (3 Seld.) 530.

[7] Allen v. Mutual Fire Ins. Co. 2 Md. 111; Jones v. Manufacturers' Ins. Co. 8 Cush. (62 Mass.) 82, 54 Am. Dec. 742; Stetson v. Massachusetts Mutual Fire Ins. Co. 4 Mass. 330, 3 Am. Dec. 217; Grant v. Howard Ins. Co. 5 Hill (N. Y.) 10.

[8] Reynolds v. Commercial Ins. Co. 47 N. Y. 597; Smith v. Mechanics' & Traders' Fire Ins. Co. 32 N. Y. 399, 29 How. Pac. 384.

[9] Merchants' & Manufacturers' Mutual Ins. Co. v. Washington Mutual Ins. Co. 1 Handy (Ohio) 408, 12 Ohio Dec. 209.

[10] Lounsbury v. Protection Ins. Co. 8 Conn. 459, 21 Am. Dec. 686.

[11] Howell v. Baltimore Equitable Soc. 16 Md. 377; Mead v. North Western Ins. Co. 7 N. Y. 530; Hoxsie v. Providence Mutual Ins. Co. 6 R. I. 517.

some risk which the policy insures against, and not by the prohibited use.[12] Conditions in a policy of fire insurance exempting the insurers from liability in case of the carrying on of extra-hazardous occupations in the building are not conditions precedent but matters of defense, and therefore need not be negatived in the declaration.[13]

§ 2212. Where policy is only suspended during a temporary prohibited use.—If the policy, instead of being conditioned to be void in case of a prohibited use, provides that so long as the premises shall be so appropriated or used the policy shall cease to be of force and effect, this clause will simply cause a suspension of the policy during the time of such prohibited use. In case of a prohibited use under such a condition, the insured may recover in case of a loss, provided that at the time of a loss the prohibited use has ceased and the risk has not been increased by such temporary use.[14]

§ 2213. Uses not violation of the conditions as to prohibited use.—A clause in a policy of insurance that a "carpenter's shop" is prohibited is not violated by the employment of a carpenter to make necessary repairs about the premises.[15] Nor does the employing of a carpenter for an occasional day's work about the insured premises avoid a policy conditioned to be void if the premises are used for any trade, business, or vocation classed as hazardous.[16] The making of brooms by hand has been held not to be within the meaning of a condition that the policy shall be void if the building is used for "mills and manufactories of any kind." [17] The condition against a change of use is not violated by the use of a stove in the insured building, where such use is connected with the work of finishing the building.[18]

§ 2214. Change in "situation or circumstances affecting the risk."—The insured contracts with reference to the ordinary use

[12] Mead v. North Western Ins. Co. 7 N. Y. 530; Jones Manufacturers' Co. v. Manufacturers' Ins. Co. 8 Cush. (62 Mass.) 82, 54 Am. Dec. 742; Murdock v. Chenango Ins. Co. 2 Const. (N. Y.) 210; Clark v. Manufacturers' Ins. Co. 2 Wood. & M. (U. S. C. C.) 472, Fed. Cas. No. 2,829, 5 Fed. 692.

[13] Lounsbury v. Protection Ins. Co. 8 Conn. 459, 21 Am. Dec. 686.

[14] New England Fire & Marine Ins. Co. v. Wetmore, 32 Ill. 22. Compare Smith v. Mechanics' Ins. Co. 32 N. Y. 399. See also Lounsbury v. Protection Ins. Co. 8 Conn. 459, 21 Am. Dec. 686; Keenan v. Missouri Ins. Co. 12 Iowa, 126; Phœnix Ins. Co. v. Lawrence, 4 Met. (61 Ky.) 9, 81 Am. Dec. 521.

[15] Lounsbury v. Protection Ins. Co. 8 Conn. 459, 21 Am. Dec. 686.

[16] Westchester Fire Ins. Co. v. Foster, 90 Ill. 121. See also Grant v. Howard Ins. Co. 5 Hill (N. Y.) 10.

[17] Franklin Fire Ins. Co. v. Block, 57 Pa. St. 74.

[18] Troy Fire Ins. Co. v. Carpenter, 4 Wis. 20.

of the insured premises, and any use which is necessary to the proper use and enjoyment of the property will not avoid the policy, unless expressly prohibited. Thus, where before the issuing of a policy of fire insurance a dummy-engine had been used near the insured building as often as its use was required, it was held that its subsequent use when required, although it increased the risk, did not make void the policy under a provision therein contained that "if the situation or circumstances affecting the risk shall be so altered or changed as to increase the risk," the policy should be void.[19]

§ 2215. Condition as to smoking upon the premises.—A condition in a policy of insurance that there shall be no smoking upon the insured premises is fulfilled if the insured complies with the condition on his part, and exercises reasonable diligence and care in preventing others from smoking on the premises. It is an undertaking on the part of the insured that there shall be no smoking with his consent.[20]

§ 2216. Ceasing to operate factory, etc.: operating factory, etc., at night.—A condition in a policy of insurance upon a building used for manufacturing purposes that it shall be void if the factory ceases to be operated, is not avoided by a merely temporary suspension of business, either for the purpose of repairs or for the want of materials.[1] So a condition against any cessation of operation

[19] Commonwealth v. Hide & Leather Ins. Co. 112 Mass. 136, 17 Am. Rep. 72.

[20] Insurance Co. of North America v. McDowell, 50 Ill. 120, 99 Am. Dec. 497. Here the court said: "In the application it was stated that smoking was not allowed. It appears that at one time smoking was done in the mill, but that it was prohibited by the insured as soon as they were informed that it was prohibited by the policy, and a notice was posted in the mill. This was some time before the loss. In such a case the insured only undertakes that he will not do the act or allow others to, if he can, by reasonable precaution, prevent it. Where the insured prohibited smoking and posted the notice, he did all that was required of him:" See Aurora Fire Ins. Co. v. Eddy, 55 Ill. 213.

[1] American Fire Ins. Co. v. Brighton Cotton Mfg. Co. 125 Ill. 131. In this case Scott, J., said: "After policy was written lease was made with the consent of the company. The lessees had operated the mill up to within a week of its destruction. Then most of the hands were discharged until their services should be again needed. There is evidence to show that the employees understood that the suspension of work was to be but for a short time. For the purpose of starting up, the lessees were getting in coal and doing other things indicating an intention to resume business. All the plant and much valuable material was in the building. One of the lessees was at the building when fire was discovered, and had come there with money to pay persons engaged as laborers about the mill. It is plain that the building was at no time 'vacant and unoccupied' in the sense those terms are used in the policy:" Brighton Mfg. Co. v. Redding Fire Ins. Co. 33 of an insured mill for ten consecutive days, has no reference to such temporary cessations as occur in the usual course of business, or arise from causes beyond the control of the insured.[2] And if insurer knows that continuous operation of an ice factory is impossible, the policy will not be avoided by a vacancy or cessation of operation for ten days, although the policy may be so conditioned.[3] So the operation of a mill at night under a permit by assurer's agent does not breach the condition, where said operation has ceased several months before the fire occasioning the loss.[4] Again, the temporary closing of an insured mill for forty-two days without notice to the insurers, when such closing is caused by want of logs to manufacture, such logs being daily expected, but detained by low water, is not such "ceasing to operate" as will avoid a policy of fire insurance providing that it shall become void if "the mill shall cease to be operated" without notice to or consent of the insurers.[5] And a condition as to insured mill that the non-operation for ten consecutive days will avoid the policy, is not violated by a cessation of operation for want of water-power in the winter, when the fact that the mill could not be operated in severe winter weather on account of a lack of water power was an existing fact known to the insurer at the time of issuing the policy.[6] So where the policy stipulated that it should be avoided if the manufactory insured should cease to be operated for more than ten consecutive days, and the agent of the insurer, knowing that operations were compelled to be suspended during certain seasons of the year, owing to the freezing of the water in the mill-race, had granted repeated renewals of said policy, a renewal term extending over the period of the loss operates as a waiver of the condition, Fed. 232; Brighton Mfg. Co. v. Fire Ins. Co. of Philadelphia, 33 Fed. 234; Brighton Mfg. Co. v. Reliance Ins. Co. 33 Fed. 235; Brighton Mfg. Co. v. Fire Ins. Co. of Pennsylvania, 33 Fed. 236; Lebanon Mutual Ins. Co. v. Leathers, 5 Sadler (Pa.) 226, 20 Wkly. Not. Cas. 107, 8 Atl. R. 424; Poss v. Western Assur. Co. 7 Lea (75 Tenn.) 704, 40 Am. Rep. 68.

See §§ 2239, 2240 herein.

[2] Waukau Milling Co. v. Citizens' Mutual Fire Ins. Co. (Waukau Milling Co. v. Bower City Mutual Fire Ins. Co.: Waukau Milling Co. v. Central Manufacturers' Mutual Ins. Co.) 130 Wis. 47, 118 Am. St. Rep. 998, 109 N. W. 937.

[3] Morotock Ice Co. v. Pankey, 91 Va. 259, 21 S. E. 487.

[4] Strause v. Palatine Ins. Co. 128 N. Car. 64, 36 S. E. 256.

[5] City Planing & Shingle Mill Co. v. Merchants', Manufacturers' & Citizens' Mutual Fire Ins. Co. 72 Mich. 654, 16 Am. Rep. 552, 40 N. W. 777. See also Rosenerans v. Insurance Co. of North America, 66 Mo. App. 352, 2 Mo. App. Rep. 1362.

[6] Waukau Milling Co. v. Citizens' Mutual Fire Ins. Co. (Waukau Milling Co. v. Bower City Mutual Fire Ins. Co.: Waukau Milling Co. v. Central Manufacturers' Mutual Ins. Co.) 130 Wis. 47, 118 Am. St. Rep. 998, 109 N. W. 937.

even though during said renewal term the operations have ceased, owing to said cause, for more than the stipulated period.[7]

Where the property insured was described as a frame building, while occupied as a flour and roller mill, and covers also, by construction to prevent a forfeiture, machinery used in the manufacture of meal, bran and other feed products, and at the time the policy was issued the mill was not used for the manufacture of flour nor for a longer period than ten days thereafter, but was used and operated for the manufacture of meal, bran, and other feed products from the time the insurance was effected until the property was destroyed, it was decided that operations had not ceased within the policy intent.[8] So where the insured property consisted of a smelter, and a furnace as subsequently placed therein by permission of the insurer and was in full operation, requiring the working of five or six men, and in connection with it one of the boilers and also the tools and water-pipes on the premises, and the buildings were occupied for the storage of ores and other materials, the premises were not idle and unoccupied within the meaning of a condition in the policy against their being idle, and unoccupied, though four boilers therein were not in use, nor were other parts of the building used except as above stated.[9] A building used as a shoe factory may be considered of itself a manufacturing establishment, and so also may the machinery, furniture, etc., used in the business, where they are insured by separate policies, providing in statutory language that they shall be void if the premises insured are a manufacturing establishment and operations therein cease for more than thirty days, although in strictness the establishment must consist of the building, machinery, etc., combined.[10] But where machinery and merchandise are exclusively insured and the machinery is personalty, it is not a manufacturing establishment, so that ceasing to operate the same is not a ground of forfeiture. A distinction exists between such a case and one where the manufactory is itself insured and the machinery therein is used in connection with its operation, in which

[7] Bellevue Roller Mill Co. v. London & Liverpool Fire Ins. Co. 4 Idaho, 307, 39 Pac. 196.

[8] Capital Fire Ins. Co. v. Carroll, 26 Okla. 286, 109 Pac. 535, 39 Ins. L. J. 1258. See also Central Montana Mines Co. v. Fireman's Fund Ins. Co. 92 Minn. 223, 99 N. W. 1120, 100 N. W. 3, 33 Ins. L. J. 745. Compare Mecca Fire Ins. Co. v. Coughlan, — Tex. Civ. App. —, 134 S. W. 266, 40 Ins. L. J. 816; Progress Spinning & Knitting Mills Co. v. Southern National Ins. Co. 42 Utah, 263, 45 L.R.A.(N.S.) 122n, 130 Pac. 63.

[9] Mackintosh v. Agricultural Fire Ins. Co. 150 Cal. 440, 119 Am. St. Rep. 234, 89 Pac. 102.

[10] Stone v. Howard Ins. Co. 153 Mass. 475, 11 L.R.A. 771, 27 N. E. 6.

latter case the forfeiture clause for non-operation would apply.[11] Boots and shoes in a shoe factory do not constitute part of the manufacturing establishment, so that the suspension of operations in the factory will defeat insurance on them under a policy providing that it shall be void if the premises insured are a manufacturing establishment and operations therein cease for more than thirty days; but machines, tools and furniture are to be regarded as part of the establishment, under a similar policy.[12] Again, machinery and apparatus used in the business of manufacturing leather and morocco, including boiler, engine, etc., being the only property covered by a policy of insurance, do not constitute a mill, and the standing still thereof does not create a forfeiture, under a policy which provides that "if a building covered by this policy shall become vacant or unoccupied, or if a mill or manufactory shall stand idle, . . . all liability thereupon shall cease," where a further provision of the policy as to the falling of a building expressly declares that the policy shall cease as to property therein as well as to the building.[13] So a policy on an idle distillery described by written words as "occupied by the assured as a distillery," and in which the assured has an office which he occupies, is not void because the distillery is not in operation, notwithstanding a condition that the policy shall be void if it "ceases to be operated for more than ten consecutive days." [14] And insurance of a building which is not in operation as a manufactory at the time, as "occupied as an ice factory," does not require its operation as such, to make the policy valid, under a provision that the policy shall be void if on a manufacturing establishment which shall cease to be operated for ten consecutive days.[15]

If a policy insuring a mill provides that it shall be void if the mill is run extra hours, but fixes no hours within which the mill may run, it cannot be declared void merely because the mill is sometimes run nights.[16] So it is held that if a policy containing such a condition is issued and delivered by a general agent of the company, who has knowledge of the fact that the factory has always been operated at night, and also knows that such use is to be continued, and it is in fact continued with his knowledge, the [11] Phenix Ins. Co. v. Holcomb, 57 Neb. 622, 73 Am. St. Rep. 300, 78 N. W. 300, 28 Ins. L. J. 238.

[12] Stone v. Howard Ins. Co. 153 Mass. 475, 11 L.R.A. 771, 27 N. E. 6.

[13] Halpin v. Insurance Co. of North America, 120 N. Y. 73, 8 L.R.A. 79, 23 N. E. 989.

[14] Louck v. Orient Ins. Co. 176 Pa. 638, 33 L.R.A. 712, 35 Atl. 247, 38 Wkly. N. C. 550.

[15] Home Ins. Co. v. North Little Rock Ice & Electric Co. 86 Ark. 538, 23 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1201, 111 S. W. 994.

[16] German-American Ins. Co. v. Steiger, 109 Ill. 254.

condition is waived.[17] But a breach of the condition as to operating a mill at night, is not waived by the adjuster's acts in delivering blanks for proofs of loss.[18]

A condition forbidding the cessation of the operation of the insured establishment without the consent of the insured, is valid, reasonable and proper.[19] So a condition that insured shall not run the factory at night without permission from the company indorsed upon the policy, is binding upon the insured.[20] And it is decided that neither the fact that a person insured usually ceases the operation of his shoe factory during the dull season, nor the general custom of other manufacturers to do the same thing, can render nugatory a provision in his policy that it shall be void if the factory ceases operations for more than thirty days.[1]

§ 2216a. Same subject: when condition violated: instances.—If a policy specifies a certain number of days as the limit of its ceasing to be operated, as where it is conditioned to be void if the mills insured should remain idle, from any cause whatever, for the period of twenty days without notice to the company, it is held that the fact that the premises are closed for the purpose only of making necessary repairs is immaterial, where done in violation of the condition.[2] And there is a forfeiture where a creamery is idle for a longer time than that permitted by the condition, except that it is occasionally operated and is used for storage of butter, and shipments were made therefrom from time to time.[3] A sawmill is also shut down within the provision of a policy rendering it void if the works insured shall remain shut down for more than thirty days without permission from the insurer; where it is not running and nothing is done in or about it except to take away and ship lumber previously cut, and to prepare the machinery for winter by removing belts, etc.[4] And a condition forbidding the cessation [17] American Central Ins. Co. v. McCrea, 8 Lea (76 Tenn.) 513, 41 Am. Rep. 647. Compare Houghton v. Manufacturers' Mutual Ins. Co. 8 Met. (49 Mass.) 114, 41 Am. Dec. 489.

[18] Alspaugh v. British America Ins. Co. 121 N. Car. 280, 28 S. E. 415, 27 Ins. L. J. 441.

On furnishing blanks for proofs of loss or claim as a waiver of breaches of condition or forfeiture, see note in L.R.A.1917A, 1065.

[19] Dover Glass Works Co. v. American Fire Ins. Co. 1 Marv. (Del.) 32, 65 Am. St. Rep. 264, 29 Atl. 1039.

[20] Reardon v. Faneuil Hall Ins. Co. 135 Mass. 121.

[1] Stone v. Howard Ins. Co. 153 Mass. 475, 11 L.R.A. 771, 27 N. E. 6.

[2] Day v. Millowners Mutual Fire Ins. Co. 70 Iowa, 710, 29 N. W. 443.

[3] Cronin v. Fire Association of Philadelphia, 123 Mich. 277, 6 Det. L. N. 1048, 29 Ins. L. J. 564. See Downs v. German Alliance Ins. Co. (Del. Super. Ct. 1906) 36 Ins. L. J. 767.

[4] McKenzie v. Scottish Union & of the operation of the insured establishment, without the consent of the insurer, and providing for the care and supervision of the workmen, and also providing that a breach of such condition shall avoid the policy, is broken, and the insurance terminated, when the business is discontinued and the operation of the establishment has ceased without the consent of the insurer, although watchmen are provided and kept in the establishment continually until the loss and fire occur.[5] Again, getting shingle bolts to the mill, selling and shipping shingles therefrom, and placing some shingles in the dry kiln without turning on the steam, are not an operation of the mill when the machinery is stopped, so as to prevent an operation of the clause in an insurance policy making it void if the property is shut down or idle for more than thirty days without permission.[6] So running a mill day and night violates the contract, especially so where it appears assured knew that a much higher premium would have been charged for night operation; and assured is not aided by the fact that he had never seen the policy and had no knowledge of its contents, it having been taken out in the mortgagors' name for the mortgagees' benefit on the application of the former.[7] An allegation that the hazard of the burning of a shingle mill was increased after the issuance of an insurance policy thereon, is supported by evidence that the mill was allowed to remain idle, where the facilities for extinguishing fires were largely dependent upon the mill being in operation.[8] If successive permits are given to cease operations and a loss occurs after expiration of the time limit under the last permit there can be no recovery and it constitutes no excuse that insured had not renewed the permit because of notice of cancelation but on the contrary the failure to renew evidences that insured regarded said notice of cancelation as effective and therefore took no further steps under the policy.[9]

§ 2217. Use of stoves on premises: fires.—In the absence of any provision prohibiting the use of additional stoves upon the insured premises, the mere putting up of additional stoves will not avoid the policy, unless it be shown that the risk has been thereby increased.[10] The fact that the insured has stated in his application

National Ins. Co. 112 Cal. 548, 44 Pac. 922, 25 Ins. L. J. 561.

[5] Dover Glass Works v. American Fire Ins. Co. 1 Marv. (Del.) 32, 65 Am. St. Rep. 264, 29 Atl. 1039.

[6] Brehm Lumber Co. v. Svea Ins. Co. 36 Wash. 520, 68 L.R.A. 109, 79 Pac. 34.

[7] Alspaugh v. British-American Ins. Co. 121 N. Car. 290, 28 S. E. 415, 27 Ins. L. J. 441.

[8] Brehm Lumber Co. v. Svea Ins. Co. 36 Wash. 520, 68 L.R.A. 109, 79 Pac. 34.

[9] El Paso Reduction Co. v. Hartford Fire Ins. Co. (U. S. C. C.) 121 Fed. 937, 32 Ins. L. J. 758.

[10] Newhall v. Union Mutual Ins. Co. 52 Me. 180.

As to pleadings as to placing stoves in barns; violation of mutual association's rules against insuring

"no stoves used" does not constitute a continuing warranty that none shall be used.[11] The policy may, however, prohibit the use of stoves entirely, or limit their use, and if the condition is violated, it will avoid the policy. Thus, where a policy prohibited the building of any fire upon the insured premises except in a small stove in the office, it was held that the placing of a stove in another part of the building and its subsequent use without the consent of the insurers would avoid the policy.[12] A covenant in the policy that insurer "will not be answerable for any loss arising from the use of fires in buildings unprovided with a good, substantial stove or brick chimney" does not require that a stove in which fires are used should be built into and form part of a brick chimney.[13]

§ 2218. Use of premises for unlawful purposes.—If it is provided by the policy or by the by-laws of a mutual company that, in case the insured buildings are appropriated to any illegal uses, the agent of the company must insist that such use shall cease, or else cancel the policy, the appropriation of the building to an illegal purpose will not of itself avoid the policy.[14] But if a policy is conditioned to be void in case the building is used for an unlawful purpose, it is avoided by the storage and sale of intoxicating liquors without a license;[15] and it is held that such unlawful use will avoid the policy, though insured had no knowledge thereof.[16] The carrying, however, of a large stock of liquors in a drug store with occasional unlawful sales, does not avoid the policy on the goods as a matter of law.[17] Where a house insured is occupied by a tenant at the time of the delivery of the policy and of the loss, the fact that the premises were used for an unlawful purpose without the knowledge of the insured will not avoid the policy when it does not prohibit such illegal use and the loss does not result therefrom.[18] The keeping of a bawdyhouse will, however, avoid a policy upon a dwelling-house which is conditioned to be void in case of a change of use.[19] And if the hazard is increased by conducting a gambling establish-barns, see Farmers' Mutual Fire Ins. Co. v. Hill, 45 Ind. App. 605, 91 N. E. 361, 39 Ins. L. J. 721.

[11] Aurora Fire Ins. Co. v. Eddy, 55 Ill. 213.

[12] Daniels v. Equitable Fire Ins. Co. 50 Conn. 551.

[13] Madsden v. Phœnix Ins. Co. 1 S. C. 24.

[14] Behler v. German Mutual Fire Ins. Co. 68 Ind. 347.

[15] Kelly v. Worcester Ins. Co. 97 Mass. 284.

[16] Kelly v. Worcester Ins. Co. 97 Mass. 284; Jones v. Fireman's Ins. Co. 2 Daly (N. Y.) 307, s. c. 51 N. Y. 318. Examine Allen v. Home Ins. Co. 133 Cal. 29, 65 Pac. 138, 30 Ins. L. J. 711.

[17] Kellogg v. German American Ins. Co. 133 Mo. App. 391, 113 S. W. 663.

[18] Nebraska & Iowa Ins. Co. v. Christensen, 29 Neb. 572, 26 Am. St. Rep. 407, 45 N. W. 924. See § 2222 herein.

[19] Cedar Rapids Ins. Co. v. Shimp, 16 Bradw. (Ill. App.) 248.

ment upon the premises, the policy is avoided in the absence of a waiver.[20] In this connection, consideration should also be given to those cases where property is represented or warranted to be used for certain purposes, as where it is insured while occupied as a dwelling-house and it is used for an illegal or unlawful purpose, such as a bawdyhouse, thereby avoiding the policy even though such use is not expressly prohibited by the policy.[1] The commission, of a crime upon the premises will not avoid the policy. The condition refers to some actual and continued use of premises which is illegal.[2]

§ 2219. Prohibited uses which will avoid the policy.—If a policy prohibits certain trades as "specially hazardous" and "extra hazardous," the use of a part of the insured building for any of such trades will avoid the policy, and in such a case it is not necessary to show an increase of risk.[3] The keeping of confectionery in glass jars for the purpose of sale will avoid a policy which enumerates "confectionery" among hazardous risks which are prohibited.[4] So also will the carrying a sailmaker's stock of goods and tools into the loft of a building, though work has not actually been commenced, if the policy prohibits any hazardous business, and enumerates "sailmakers" in that clause.[5] And a policy on a woolen mill, which provides that it shall be void if the hazard is increased by any means within the control or knowledge of the insurer, becomes void when the mill is devoted to the manufacture of cotton bats.[6]

§ 2220. Waiver of forfeiture on account of prohibited use.—If the insurer after knowledge of uses which constitute a forfeiture, continues to treat the policy of insurance as an existing valid contract, the forfeiture is waived. Thus, where the insurer, after knowledge of the fact that the premises had been used for prohibited purposes, fixed no increased rate of premium, and continued to collect the regular assessments upon the policy, the forfeiture was held to be waived.[7]

[20] Moriarty v. United States Fire Ins. Co. 19 Tex. Civ. App. 669, 49 S. W. 132.

[1] Allen v. Home Ins. Co. 133 Cal. 29, 65 Pac. 138, 30 Ins. L. J. 711. See § 2105, and examine § 2537 herein.

[2] Boardman v. Merrimac Mutual Fire Ins. Co. 8 Cush. (62 Mass.) 583.

[3] Matthews v. Queen City Ins. Co. 2 Cin. (Ohio) 109, 13 Ohio Dec. 798; Lee v. Howard Ins. Co. 3 Gray (69 Mass.) 583; Dewees v. Manhattan Ins. Co. 35 N. J. 366.

[4] Wetherell v. City Fire Ins. Co. 16 Gray (82 Mass.) 276.

[5] Wetherell v. City Fire Ins. Co. 16 Gray (82 Mass.) 276.

[6] Progress Spinning & Knitting Mills Co. v. Southern National Ins. Co. 42 Utah, 263, 45 L.R.A.(N.S.) 122n, 130 Pac. 63. Examine Capital Fire Ins. Co. v. Carroll, 26 Okla. 286, 109 Pac. 535, 39 Ins. L. J. 1258 (considered under § 2216 herein).

[7] Witte v. Western Mutual Fire Ins. Co. 1 Mo. App. 188. Inasmuch, however, as the question of waiver or

§ 2221. Notice in case of change of use: waiver.—Where it is provided by the by-laws of a mutual insurance company that, in case the property is subjected to a more hazardous use, notice shall be given to the secretary, it has been held that a verbal notice to the general agent of the company, the treasurer, and one of the directors is sufficient, and will continue the policy in force.[8] But notice to insurer that the insured premises had been leased to a tenant, and its receipt of premiums or assessments from the owner thereafter, do not waive a provision of the policy forbidding the storing of seed cotton in the insured building.[9]

§ 2222. Effects of acts of tenant upon insured property.—If the risk has been increased, or if certain prohibitions of the policy have been violated by the tenant of the insured, this will be equivalent to a violation of the provisions by the insured himself, and will avoid the policy.[10] If the policy is conditioned to be void in case of any change of risk by assured "or others," [11] or in case of any increase of risk "by any means within his control," [12] the acts of tenants to whom he lets the premises will avoid the policy, though the insured has no knowledge of such acts. Where, however, the policy was conditioned to be void in case of any changes within the "control or knowledge" of the insured, it was held that acts of tenants in violation of the conditions of the policy, and of which the insured had no knowledge, would not defeat a recovery on the policy.[13] But where a policy provides that it shall be void if naphtha is used on the premises insured, the use of naphtha by a tenant of the in-estoppel depends so largely upon the acts of insurer's agent and the extent to which insurer is chargeable therewith reference is hereby made to the chapters on agency herein.

[8] Planter's Mutual Ins. Co. v. Rowland, 66 Md. 236, 7 Atl. 257.

As to notice of increase of risk, see § 2208 herein.

[9] Edwards v. Farmers' Mutual Ins. Assoc. 128 Ga. 353, 12 L.R.A.(N.S.) 484, 57 S. E. 707.

[10] Liverpool & London & Globe Ins. Co. v. Gunther, 116 U. S. 113, 29 L. ed. 575, 6 Sup. Ct. 306 (followed in Gunther v. Liverpool & London & Globe Ins. Co. 134 U. S. 110, 33 L. ed. 857, 10 Sup. Ct. 448, cited in Norwaysz v. Thuringia Ins. Co. 204 Ill. 334, 344, 68 N. E. 551, 33 Ins. L. J. 83, 90; Thuringia Ins. Co. v. Norwaysz, 104 Ill. App. 390, 395; German Fire Ins. Co. v. Shawnee County, 54 Kan. 737, 45 Am. St. Rep. 306, 39 Pac. 697; Smith v. German Ins. Co. 107 Mich. 270, 298, 30 L.R.A. 368, 378, 65 N. W. 236); Appleby v. Firemen's Fund Ins. Co. 45 Barb. (N. Y.) 454; Diehl v. Adams County Mutual Ins. Co. 58 Pa. St. 443, 98 Am. Dec. 302.

On effect upon insurance policy of breach of condition by tenant, see note in 12 L.R.A.(N.S.) 489.

[11] Shepard v. Union Ins. Co. 38 N. H. 232.

[12] Appleby v. Firemen's Fund Ins. Co. 45 Barb. (N. Y.) 454; Wetherell v. City Fire Ins. Co. 16 Gray (82 Mass.) 276.

[13] Merrill v. North American Ins. Co. 23 Fed. 245; Nebraska & Iowa Ins. Co. v. Christiansen, 29 Neb. 572, 26 Am. St. Rep. 407, 45 N. W. 924.

sured invalidates the policy, so far as the insured is concerned, whether he knows of its use or not.[14] So an insured is chargeable with any acts of his lessee in keeping on the premises any prohibited articles, although they were not intended to be used there, but for lighting other places.[15] It is also declared that it is no excuse that insured had no knowledge as to the increase of risk, or the unlawful or illegal use of the insured property by his tenant, he cannot avoid responsibility on the ground of want of notice, by turning over the control of the premises to another for he is presumed to have notice, whether said premises are occupied by himself or his tenant.[16] And it is accordingly held that, under the ordinary condition of a policy, the fact that the owner of the premises has no knowledge that the risk has been increased or conditions as to the use of premises violated by the tenant will be no defense to a condition for forfeiture.[17] There are, however, cases which hold that the right of the insured to recover cannot be defeated by any acts of a tenant, unless done with the knowledge and consent of insured.[18]

§ 2223. Change of occupancy: tenancy.—If the policy contains no provision as to change of tenants, occupancy, or possession, it has been held that a mere change of tenants will not avoid the policy, though it may appear that the new tenant is more careless than the former.[19] This would certainly be true if there were no increase

[14] Badger v. Platts, 68 N. H. 222, 19 L.R.A. 587, 73 Am. St. Rep. 572, 33 N. E. 572.

[15] Gunther v. Liverpool & London & Globe Ins. Co. 134 U. S. 110, 33 L. ed. 857, 10 Sup. Ct. 448.

[16] Allen v. Home Ins. Co. 133 Cal. 29, 65 Pac. 138, 30 Ins. L. J. 711, 713.

[17] United States. — Liverpool & London & Globe Ins. Co. v. Gunther, 116 U. S. 113, 29 L. ed. 575, 6 Sup. Ct. 306, followed in Gunther v. Liverpool & London & Globe Ins. Co. 134 U. S. 110, 33 L. ed. 857, 10 Sup. Ct. 448.

Maryland.—Howell v. Baltimore Equitable Soc. 16 Md. 377.

Massachusetts.—Kelly v. Worcester Fire Ins. Co. 97 Mass. 284.

New York.—Duncan v. Sun Fire Ins. Co. 6 Wend. (N. Y.) 488, 489, 22 Am. Dec. 539.

Pennsylvania.—Long v. Beeber, 106 Pa. St. 466, 51 Am. Rep. 532; Diehl v. Adams County Mutual Ins. Co. 58 Pa. St. 443, 98 Am. Dec. 302; Fire Assoc. of Pennsylvania v. Williamson, 26 Pa. St. 196. In this case the court said: "It is not material that the landlord did not know that his tenant kept gunpowder. His contract with the insurance company was that it should not be kept without their permission, and it was his business to see that his tenants did not violate the contract."

[18] White v. Mutual Fire Assurance Co. 8 Gray (74 Mass.) 566; Hoxie v. Providence Ins. Co. 6 R. I. 517; Heneker v. British American Assurance Co. 14 U. C. C. P. 57.

[19] Lyon v. Commercial Ins. Co. 2 Rob. (La.) 266; Gates v. Madison County Mutual Ins. Co. 5 N. Y. 469, 55 Am. Dec. 360; Hobson v. Wellington District Mutual Fire Ins. Co. 6 U. C. Q. B. 356. See § 2103 herein.

Decisions as to vacancy and unof risk, as the insured by his statement, when obtaining the insurance, that the premises are occupied by a certain person does not warrant by such statement that the person then in possession shall continue in possession during the life of the policy. If, however, the risk is materially increased by the change of tenants, it would seem that the policy would be avoided.[20] A policy conditioned to be void in case "any change be made as to tenancy or occupancy" is not avoided by the fact that the tenant removes from the premises.[21] There is said to be no change such as is contemplated by the condition until the new tenant enters.[1] But a lease to tenants is a change in occupancy of property insured as a private dwelling where assured ceases to occupy the same.[2] The clause "change of occupants," as used in a policy of insurance, has been held to apply to personalty as well as real estate.[3] The vacancy of the premises has been held not to be "change in the nature of the occupancy," as the condition is intended to refer to an occupation for a different purpose.[4]

§ 2224. Effect of nonoccupation of insured premises where policy only prohibits increase of risk.—If a policy prohibits any increase of risk, and contains no prohibition or clause in regard to the premises becoming vacant or unoccupied, then the mere fact that the premises become vacant or unoccupied will not avoid the policy, unless the risk is materially increased. It has been held, however, that the fact that the premises become vacant and unoccupied will not avoid the policy, unless there is an express stipulation to that effect, even though the risk may be increased.[5] Where a policy simply provided that if the risk was increased by any means within the control of the insured the policy should be void, and if by any means not within his control notice should be given to the company which might avoid the policy it was held that a temporary vacancy between one tenancy and another was to be regarded as a part of the risk, and, in case of a longer vacancy, it was sufficient to notify the company thereof.[6] Where a building occupied as a dwelling-house occupation in case of dwelling houses, tenements, and other property are further considered under the sections next following covering the particular clauses governing each case. See §§ 2224 et seq. herein.

[20] See §§ 2224, 2224a herein.

[21] Somerset County Mutual Fire Ins. Co. v. Usaw, 112 Pa. St. 80, 56 Am. Rep. 307, 4 Atl. 355.

[1] Alston v. Old North St. Ins. Co. 80 N. C. 326, 8 Ins. L. J. 428.

[2] Planters' Fire Ins. Co. v. Steele, 119 Ark. 597, 178 S. W. 910, 46 Ins. L. J. 617.

[3] Wadradt v. Phœnix Ins. Co. 64 Hun (N. Y.) 129, 19 N. Y. Supp. 293.

[4] Gould v. British American Assur. Co. 27 U. C. Q. B. 473.

[5] Gamwell v. Merchants' & Farmers' Mutual Fire Ins. Co. 12 Cush. (66 Mass.) 167.

[6] Lockwood v. Middlesex Mutual Ins. Co. 47 Conn. 553. See Luce v. Dorchester Ins. Co. 105 Mass. 297, was insured as such, the policy providing that if the condition or circumstances of the property should be so changed by the act of the insured as to materially increase the risk, the policy should become void, unless the consent of the insurer to the change was obtained, it was held that the non-occupancy of the building for a year prior to its destruction by fire was not a change within the meaning of the condition in the policy.[7] But where buildings of a poor class on a cheap farm in a remote settlement without near neighbors were burned while vacant, it sufficiently appeared that the risk was increased by the vacancy so as to avoid the policy, under a condition to that effect in the policy, although the statute provided that vacancy should not be a forfeiture unless the risk was thereby increased.[8] In an action upon a policy which provided that, in case there was any change affecting the occupancy of the property whereby the risk was increased, notice should be given to the company, but which did not declare that the vacating of the premises was an increase of risk, it was held that the right of the insured to recover could not be defeated by the fact that he had moved out of the premises without notifying the insurer.[9]

§ 2224a. Increase of risk: material to risk: clauses as to vacancy, etc.—The words "vacant and unoccupied," when used in a policy of insurance in connection with the idea that the insurer is stipulating against an increase in the risk from the absence of persons from the premises insured, must be regarded as interchangeable, and equivalent in meaning. If no one lives in the house, it is both vacant and unoccupied, though it may contain articles of furniture which the last occupant failed to remove.[10] And where

7 Am. Rep. 522; Insurance Co. of North American v. Hannum, 11 Monaghan (Unreported Sup. Ct. Cas. Pa.) 369.

[7] Gilliat v. Pawtucket Mutual Fire Ins. Co. 8 R. I. 282, 91 Am. Dec. 229.

[8] Lancy v. Home Ins. Co. 82 Me. 492, 20 Atl. 79.

[9] Residence Fire Ins. Co. v. Hannawold, 37 Mich. 103.

[10] Moore v. Phoenix Fire Ins. Co. 64 N. H. 140, 10 Am. St. Rep. 384, 6 Atl. 27. See Moore v. Phœnix Ins. Co. 62 N. H. 240, 13 Am. St. Rep. 556. "The meaning of the words 'vacant and unoccupied,' as used in the contract of insurance, is that which the parties intended to give them; and that intention is to be found from the whole instrument, the subject-matter of the contract, and the situation of the property insured. The object of the stipulation against vacancy and nonoccupancy was to guard against the increased risk which arises from the absence of every body whose duty or interest might afford some protection. In the same clause of the contract, 'increase of risk' from the mode of occupation and use of the premises, and 'increase of risk by any means whatever,' are mentioned as express grounds for avoiding the policy. 'If the building shall be occupied or used so as to increase the risk, or become vacant and unoccupied for a period of more than ten days, or the risk be increased by any means whatever,' is a statement in which the leading it is conditioned that vacancy for a period of thirty days avoids the policy, unless notice thereof be given, and a vacancy permit be issued, such clause should be construed with reference to its manifest purpose and contemplates protection against the hazard covered by the policy by the care and attention of a guardian of the premises, that is some individual in care thereof, who exercises a preserving superintendency over them. And within this rule a dwelling house may be vacant even though it is not actually occupied as a residence or place of abode and "it may be vacant even though far from empty of everything but air." [11] So the continued non-occupation of a dwelling-house from the time the policy was issued up to the time of the fire and over the period permitted by the policy is material to the risk.[12] Nor are the premises occupied even though the tenant and his servants had been engaged very shortly before the fire in cleaning and preparing the house for occupation.[13] And it constitutes a good defense that an insured dwelling-house became "vacant by the removal" of assured, was vacant when destroyed by fire and had been so vacant for more than thirty days prior thereto without insurer's consent, and it is unnecessary to allege also that the risk was thereby increased, nor is such vacancy clause modified by a statute relating to change increasing the risk.[14] And where a house situate on the outskirts of a city in a somewhat secluded and isolated location and quite a distance from the road with only a few neighbors but with none in close proximity and with inadequate fire protection, is permitted to remain vacant during the night, there is such a material increase or exposure to risk by said vacancy and idea in the condition of forfeiture is 'increase of risk,' and that idea must have been intended as a part of the definition of the words 'vacant and unoccupied.' It was the increase of risk from the loss of care and attention of persons otherwise present which the parties intended to guard against by the stipulation of forfeiture in case of vacancy or non-occupancy for more than ten days. They intended by the words 'vacant and unoccupied,' as used in the policy and in the connection in which they were used, such a desertion of the premises and removal from them as would materially increase the risk." Moore v. Phoenix Fire Ins. Co. 64 N. H. 140, 142, 10 Am. St. Rep. 384, 6 Atl. 27, Allen, J.

On when insured property is vacant or unoccupied, see note in 2 L.R.A.(N.S.) 517.

[11] Robinson v. Mennonite Mutual Fire Ins. Co. 91 Kan. 850, 139 Pac. 420, condition was: "Becomes and remains vacant."

[12] Thomas v. Hartford Fire Ins. Co. 21 Ky. L. Rep. 1139, 56 S. W. 264.

[13] Thomas v. Hartford Fire Ins. Co. 21 Ky. Law Rep. 914, 53 S. W. 297, 21 Ky. L. Rep. 1139, 56 S. W. 264. Condition was: "Or if the premises . . . be unoccupied . . . or if the risk be increased." "Or if the premises . . . be unoccupied . . . or if the risk be increased."

[14] Doten v. Ætna Ins. Co. of Hartford, Conn. 77 Minn. 774, 80 N. W. 630; Laws 1895, c. 175, secs. 25, 53.

non-occupancy as to preclude recovery for loss, within a statute to that effect.[15]

But the risk is not necessarily, or prima facie, increased by the property becoming vacant or unoccupied.[16] And if the policy provides that if the premises become vacant it shall be void, it is not necessary that the vacancy should increase the risk, as the violation of the condition itself avoids the policy. So an instruction that if the jury believe that if the house was vacant as prohibited in the policy, and "further believe from the evidence that the risk was thereby increased," they should find for the defendant, was held erroneous.[17] It is also held that there must be a substantial change of risk to constitute a change of occupancy.[18] So an increase of risk or fraud of the insured is necessary to defeat a policy by reason of nonoccupancy, notwithstanding a provision in the policy that it shall be void in case of nonoccupancy without the insurer's consent, under a statute providing that the whole amount of insurance in case of total loss, or the full amount of a partial loss, shall be paid in the absence of any increase of risk without the consent of the insurer, and also of intentional fraud.[19] It is further decided that under a fire policy on household furniture non-occupation of the dwelling-house in which it is located is not of itself a change material to the risk.[20] And an independent clause in a standard fire insurance policy, providing that the policy shall be void if the property becomes vacant without the consent of the insurer, is not affected by another clause providing that the policy shall be void if the situation or circumstances affecting the risk shall be so altered as to cause increase in the risk, and such increase need not, therefore, be shown, to avoid the policy under the former clause.[1] And a statute requiring every person insuring any building to have an examination thereof made and its value fixed by his agent, and providing that, in the absence of any change in the risk without the consent of the insurers and also of fraud on the part of the assured, the whole amount of the policy shall be paid in case of a total loss, refers only to a change in the condition of the property

[15] Jones v. Granite State Fire Ins. Co. 90 Me. 40, 37 Atl. 326, 26 Ins. L. J. 611; Rev. St. c. 49, sec. 20.

[16] Moody v. Amazon Ins. Co. 52 Ohio St. 12, 26 L.R.A. 313, 49 Am. St. Rep. 699, 38 N. E. 1011.

[17] Galveston Ins. Co. v. Long, 51 Tex. 89.

[18] Driscoll v. German-American Ins. Co. 74 Hun (N. Y.) 153, 26 N. Y. Supp. 646.

[19] Moody v. Amazon Ins. Co. 52 Ohio St. 12, 26 L.R.A. 313, 49 Am. St. 699, 38 N. E. 1011; Rev. Stat. secs. 3643, 3644.

[20] Boardman v. North Waterloo Ins. Co. 31 Ont. 525, 20 Canadian L. T. 126.

[1] Knowlton v. Patrons' Androscoggin Mutual Fire Ins. Co. 100 Me. 481, 2 L.R.A.(N.S.) 517, 62 Atl. 289.

affecting its value, and does not refer to a change in the building or structure itself nor to a temporary vacancy nor does it prevent the operation of a condition of the policy making it void in the event of the property becoming vacant and unoccupied.[2] An instruction that the burden is upon assured to show that a change of occupancy if any there was, did not cause the fire or contribute thereto, and that the burden is upon assurer to show that such change, if any, increased the risk, is not error, especially so where such instruction is in accord with the statute.[3]

§ 2225. Vacant or unoccupied and similar clauses: validity, construction and meaning thereof.—A clause that the policy shall be void if the premises be or become vacant and unoccupied and so remain for a certain specified time, is reasonable, valid and binding.[4] So conditions avoiding a policy because the premises become "vacant or unoccupied," should receive a strict construction and when ambiguous, be construed most strongly against the insurer.[5] So the vacancy clause should, in connection with the entire contract, the property, the circumstances and intent of the parties, be reasonably construed [6] according to the ordinary acceptation of the language used and as it would be usually understood.[7] And a stipulation that the policy shall be void in case the premises become vacant or unoccupied is to be construed in view of the situation and character of the property insured, and the ordinary incidents and con-

[2] Germania Fire Ins. Co. v. Werner, 76 Ohio St. 543, 12 L.R.A.(N.S.) 456, 118 Am. St. Rep. 891, 81 N. E. 980.

[3] Seaman v. Anchor Fire Ins. Co. 149 Iowa, 583, 128 N. W. 934, 40 Ins. L. J. 370. Wording of clause does not appear.

On necessity of proof of increase of risk to avoid insurance policy because of the vacancy of the insured property, see note in 12 L.R.A.(N.S.) 456.

[4] Burner's Admr. v. German American Ins. Co. 103 Ky. 370, 20 Ky. L. Rep. 71, 45 S. W. 109, 31 Chic. Leg. N. 18, 27 Ins. L. J. 732, 733. Stipulation is "one of the parties could lawfully make and we must give it full force and effect unless it appears that it was abrogated" by subsequent agreement or waiver. Patterson v. American Ins. Co. 164 Mo. App. 157, 148 S. W. 448, 41 Ins. L. J. 1473, 1476, Johnson, J.

On when insured property is vacant or unoccupied, see note in 2 L.R.A.(N.S.) 517.

[5] Moody v. Amazon Ins. Co. 52 Ohio St. 12, 26 L.R.A. 313, 49 Am. St. Rep. 699, 38 N. E. 1011; Hampton v. Hartford Fire Ins. Co. 65 N. J. L. 265, 52 L.R.A. 344, 47 Atl. 433, 30 Ins. L. J. 141. See §§ 220 et seq. herein.

[6] Farmers' Mutual Equity Ins. Co. v. Smith, 158 Ky. 459, L.R.A.1915B, 844, 165 S. W. 675 (condition was: "Insurance will not be carried upon unoccupied buildings, unless," etc.); Home Fire Ins. Co. v. Peyson, 54 Neb. 495, 74 N. W. 960. Examine Silver v. London Assur. Co. 61 Wash. 593, 112 Pac. 666, 40 Ins. L. J. 479, considered under § 2230c herein.

[7] Stone v. Granite State Fire Ins. Co. 69 N. H. 438, 45 Atl. 235, 29 Ins. L. J. 250 clause was: "Vacant by the removal."

tingencies affecting the use to which it and other property situated similarly and of like character is subject.[8] These words should also be construed with respect to the use and adaptability of the building insured.[9] Again, in construing such a condition the courts will look to the subject matter of the contract. The occupancy of a dwelling, of a church, of a mill, or of a barn is each essentially different in its scope and character, and the construction must be with reference thereto.[10] So the word "vacant" means empty according to the ordinary sense in which the term is used.[11]

Both conditions need not be shown in order to avoid a policy of insurance under a clause making it void when "vacant or unoccupied." [12] And since these words are not synonymous, care must be taken in construing the conditions in which they are used. If a policy is conditioned to be void in case the premises become "vacant or unoccupied," the existence of either condition will avoid the policy.[13] But if, on the other hand, the policy contains the condition that it shall be void in case the premises are left "vacant and unoccupied," then they must be both vacant and unoccupied in order to defeat a recovery.[14] And the meaning of the words "vacant and unoccupied," as used in the contract of insurance, is that which the parties intended to give them; and that intention is to be found

[8] Whitney v. Black River Ins. Co. 72 N. Y. 117, 28 Am. Rep. 116.

[9] Limburg v. German Fire Ins. Co. 90 Iowa, 709, 23 L.R.A. 99, 48 Am. St. Rep. 468, 57 N. W. 626, condition was: "vacant or unoccupied."

[10] Continental Ins. Co. v. Kyle, 124 Ind. 132, 19 Am. St. Rep. 77, 9 L.R.A. 81, 24 N. E. 727; Hampton v. Hartford Fire Ins. Co. 65 N. J. L. 265, 52 L.R.A. 344, 47 Atl. 433, 30 Ins. L. J. 141.

"The better reason and clear weight of authority hold to the doctrine that a condition against vacancy and unoccupancy, usually found in insurance policies, must be construed with relation to the character or class of property to which it relates; that it should not have the same interpretation when applied to churches and schoolhouses as when applied to stores and dwellings; nor the same when applied to houses to be occupied by the owner and to houses to be occupied by tenants." Ohio Farmers Ins. Co. v. Vogel, 166 Ind. 239, 3 L.R.A.(N.S.) 966, 117 Am. St. Rep. 382, 76 N. E. 977, Hadley, J. condition was "vacant or unoccupied or occupied by tenants."

[11] Agricultural Ins. Co. v. Owens, — Tex. Civ. App. —, 132 S. W. 828. Condition was: "Vacant or unoccupied." See also Gash v. Home Ins. Co. of N. Y. 153 Ill. App. 31, 33, Shirley, J.; Norman v. Missouri Town Mutual Fire, Lightning, T. C. & W. Ins. Co. 74 Mo. App. 456, 1 Mo. App. Repr. 259. See § 2228 herein.

[12] Limburg v. German Fire Ins. Co. 90 Iowa, 709, 23 L.R.A. 99, 48 Am. St. Rep. 468, 57 N. W. 626.

[13] Herman v. Adriatic Ins. Co. 85 N. Y. 162, 39 Am. Rep. 644. See § 2230 herein. But compare Covey v. National Union Fire Ins. Co. Cal. App. 161 Pac. 35 ("vacant or unoccupied," tenancy; "unoccupied" and "vacant" synonymous.)

[14] Hermann v. Merchants' Ins. Co. 81 N. Y. 184, 37 Am. Rep. 488. See § 2229 herein.

from the whole instrument, the subject-matter of the contract, and the situation of the property insured.[15]

The word "occupied," in reference to a dwelling place, means actual use of the premises by human beings as their customary place of abode.[16] And if there is an exception of liability in case an insured dwelling-house remains unoccupied for seven days, and it is continuously unoccupied for a longer period, the court may properly direct a verdict for the insurer.[17] But a church is not "vacant" and "unoccupied," as a matter of law, within the meaning of a clause respecting such nonoccupancy for more than ten days without written consent of the insurer, merely because no services are held in it and the windows are boarded up for more than that period because there is no minister to officiate.[18] If, however, the policy be upon a factory or mill, and contains a vacancy clause, it is not necessary for any one to reside in the building during the night season, unless the policy expressly requires it. The occupation of the premises as a storehouse will not be a compliance with the condition; there must be some actual use thereof in accordance with the purposes and use of such a building.[19]

Inasmuch as vacancy provisions are to be construed with relation to the character or class of property insured, they should not have the same interpretation when applied to houses to be occupied by the owner, as to houses to be occupied by tenants.[20] And as the vacancy clause should, in connection with the entire contract, the property, the circumstances and intent of the parties be reasonably construed, and there is no such breach of a condition as to vacancy where the insured dwelling-house is only vacant for a reasonable time between the moving out and moving in of tenants.[1] [15] Moore v. Phoenix Fire Ins. Co. 64 N. H. 140, 142, 10 Am. St. Rep. 384, 6 Atl. 27, Allen, J. See § 2229 herein.

[16] Bonefant v. American Fire Ins. Co. 76 Mich. 653, 43 N. W. 682; Weidert v. State Ins. Co. 19 Or. 261, 20 Am. St. Rep. 809, 24 Pac. 242, 19 Ins. L. J. 740; Burner's Admr. v. German American Ins. Co. 103 Ky. 370, 20 Ky. L. Rep. 71, 45 S. W. 109, 31 Chic. Leg. N. 18, 27 Ins. L. J. 732, White, J. "Unoccupied," "Occupancy," see Gash v. Home Ins. Co. of N. Y. 153 Ill. App. 31, 33, Shirley, J. See §§ 2227 et seq. herein.

[17] Thompson v. Caledonia Fire Ins. Co. 92 Wis. 664, 66 N. W. 801.

[18] Hampton v. Hartford Fire Ins. Co. 65 N. J. Law, 265, 52 L.R.A. 344, 47 Atl. 433, 30 Ins. L. J. 141.

[19] Halpin v. Insurance Co. of North America, 120 N. Y. 70, 23 N. E. 988.

[20] Ohio Farmers' Ins. Co. v. Vogel, 166 Ind. 239, 3 L.R.A.(N.S.) 966, 117 Am. St. Rep. 382, 76 N. E. 977, condition was "vacant or unoccupied." As to tenements, see instances under §§ 2227 et seq. herein.

On effect on vacancy clause of tenant's removal without owner's knowledge, see note in 3 L.R.A.(N.S.) 966.

[1] Farmers' Mutual Equity Ins. Soc. v. Smith, 158 Ky. 459, L.R.A.1915B, 844, 165 S. W. 675. In this case one tenant vacated on Saturday evening and another was to move in the following Monday but the house burned in the interval condition was: "Insurance will not be carried upon unoccupied buildings unless covered by a vacancy permit."

Nor is a policy for several years on premises to be occupied by tenants, rendered void by short vacancies caused by the lapse of a reasonable time in changing tenants.[2] And the rule is, that if a policy upon leased premises contains a condition prohibiting vacation of occupation without the written consent of the insurer, a reasonable time must be allowed to carry out a change of tenants or occupancy, without imposing upon the insured the penalty of either an intended or permitted vacation of the insured premises.[3] A building is not vacant or unoccupied where a tenant has only partially moved out his furniture the day preceding the fire, leaving a portion thereof remaining in the building.[4]

§ 2225a. "Vacant, unoccupied and uninhabited:" "vacant, unoccupied or uninhabited."—The words "vacant, unoccupied and uninhabited" mean that if the house insured should cease to be used as a place of human habitation, or for living purposes, there would be a forfeiture.[5] The term "uninhabited" should be used in its ordinary sense as not being a place of abode, a dwelling, a habitation.[6] The meaning of the terms "vacant, unoccupied or uninhabited" is a question of law, but whether at the time of the fire it was "vacant," etc., is a question of fact.[7] No recovery can be had under a policy stipulating that the policy shall be void if the property insured shall become vacant, unoccupied, or uninhabited without the consent of the insurer, where the loss by fire occurred while the building was vacant without the knowledge or consent of the insurer.[8] So merely storing furniture and going only occasionally to the house to look after the same and to do unimportant acts, not looking to the protection of the property, does not save a forfeiture under a condition voiding the policy if the house is vacant, unoccupied, and uninhabited.[9]

On vacancy during change of tenant as violation of vacancy clause in fire policies covering rented premises, see note in L.R.A.1915B, 844.

[2] Worley v. State Ins. Co. 91 Iowa, 150, 51 Am. St. Rep. 334, 50 N. W. 16. Condition was: "or if there is any change in the occupant or occupancy of the premises insured, or if they become vacant."

[3] Doud v. Citizens' Ins. Co. 141 Pa. St. 47, 23 Am. St. Rep. 263, 21 Atl. 505. See § 2225c herein.

[4] Liverpool & London & Globe Ins. Co. v. Buckstaff, 38 Neb. 146, 41 Am. St. Rep. 724, 56 N. E. 695. See German American Ins. Co. v. Buckstaff, 38 Neb. 135, 136, 56 N. W. 692.

[5] Home Ins. Co. v. Boyd, 19 Ind. App. 173, 49 N. E. 285.

[6] Gash v. Home Ins. Co. of N. Y. 153 Ill. App. 31, 33, Shirley, J.

[7] Gash v. Home Ins. Co. of N. Y. 153 Ill. App. 31.

[8] Germania Fire Ins. Co. v. Werner, 76 Ohio St. 543, 12 L.R.A.(N.S.) 456, 81 N. E. 980.

[9] Home Ins. Co. v. Boyd, 10 Ind. App. 173, 49 N. E. 285.

§ 2225b. "Untenanted or vacant."—Where the clause is used "if the premises become untenanted or vacant" a synonymous word is "unoccupied" according to its usual acceptation and "untenanted" means "not occupied by a tenant; not inhabited." And absence from personal occupation for a short time, such as three days, would not be fatal. Such a condition, however, imports habitual actual residence in the house and the requisite incidental care, protection or supervision of the property insured. Such a condition is also a proper and reasonable one but a house is untenanted where the occupant discontinues residing therein for several weeks, and only sleeps there twice during such non-occupation even though furniture and clothing are left in said house and a person goes to the house for domestic purposes.[10]

§ 2225c. Temporary vacancy or absence: owner, tenant or occupant.—It may be broadly stated as a general rule that a mere temporary vacancy or absence of the owner, tenant, or occupant, or a temporary period of non-user, which is reasonable in view of the contemplated uses of the property and of all the circumstances, and which is evidenced by some act or acts fairly showing not only an intent to return but also an intent not to vacate or give up occupancy or use of the premises nor to abandon them for the purposes of their use, will not of itself operate as a breach of a condition as to vacancy or non-occupation, even though the doing of some act may have been commenced which when completed will constitute such a vacancy or non-occupancy. But this general rule must be governed by the wording of the particular condition or conditions of the policy, the character of the occupancy as well as of that of the premises insured, or of the purposes for which they were intended to be used, having also in view the object to be accomplished and the degree of protection to be effected or necessitated by the particular condition or conditions involved and applicable and by the insurance of the property.[11] So where a tenant, intending to remove,

[10] Boardman v. North Waterloo Ins. Co. 31 Ont. 525, 20 Canadian L. T. 126.

On effect of sleeping on premises to prevent their becoming vacant or unoccupied within insurance policy, see note in 40 L.R.A.(N.S.) 58.

[11] Arkansas.—Burlington Ins. Co. v. Lowery, 61 Ark. 108, 54 Am. St. Rep. 196, 32 S. W. 383. See Planter's Fire Ins. Co. of Little Rock v. Steele, 119 Ark. 597, 178 S. W. 910, 46 Ins. L. J. 617 (considered under § 2230a herein).

Illinois.—Home Ins. Co. v. Mendenhall, 144 Ill. 458, 36 L.R.A. 374, 45 N. E. 1078; Gash v. Home Ins. Co. of N. Y. 153 Ill. App. 31.

Indiana.—Ohio Farmers' Ins. Co. v. Vogel, 166 Ind. 239, 3 L.R.A. (N.S.) 966, 117 Am. St. Rep. 382, 76 N. E. 277; Insurance Co. of North America v. Coombs, 19 Ind. App. 331, 49 N. E. 471.

Iowa.—Walrod v. Des Moines Ins. Co. 159 Iowa, 121, 140 N. W. 218, 42 Ins. L. J. 732; Worley v. State Ins. Co. 91 Iowa, 150, 51 Am. St. Rep.

goes away to meet his wife, leaves two of his children in the house, with instructions to remain there until he returns, and he removes only a small portion of the furniture, such temporary absence does not constitute a breach of a condition against the premises becoming vacant and unoccupied.[12] Other instances of the application of this rule and the qualifications thereof, or exceptions thereto, are given under the following sections covering the particular condition governing the decision. Cases, however, to which the above rule applies are those wherein the question is whether or not the condition has been broken, and not those where there has been a temporary breach and whether the policy has thereby been forfeited, or its operation merely suspended, although the underlying principle of the above rule may be involved in some degree in the latter question.[13]

§ 2225d. Vacancy, etc.: several buildings or kinds of property: entirety or divisibility of risk.—The vacancy of a house alone does not avoid a policy of insurance prohibiting vacancy of the "premises" and covering both such house and a barn.[14] So a policy

334, 59 N. W. 16; Eddy v. Hawkeye Ins. Co. 70 Iowa, 472, 59 Am. Rep. 444, 30 N. W. 808.

Kentucky. — Farmers' Mutual Equity Ins. Soc. v. Smith, 158 Ky. 459, 54 L.R.A.(N.S.) 844n, 165 S. W. 675.

Massachusetts.—Johnson v. Norwalk Fire Ins. Co. 175 Mass. 529, 56 N. E. 569, 29 Ins. L. J. 371; Ring v. Phoenix Ins. Co. 145 Mass. 426, 14 N. E. 525.

Michigan.—Shackleton v. Sun Fire Ins. Co. 55 Mich. 288, 54 Am. Rep. 379, 21 N. W. 343.

Minnesota.—Kampsen v. Farmers' Mutual Fire Ins. Co. 116 Minn. 68, 138 N. W. 163, 41 Ins. L. J. 115.

Missouri.—Norman v. Missouri Town Mutual Fire, Lightning, Tornado, Cyclone & Wind Ins. Co. 74 Mo. App. 456, 1 Mo. App. Rep. 259.

Nebraska.—Omaha Fire Ins. Co. v. Cinnott, 54 Neb. 522, 74 N. W. 955; Liverpool & London & Globe Ins. Co. v. Brickstaff, 35 Neb. 146, 41 Am. St. Rep. 724, 56 N. W. 692; Springfield Fire & Marine Ins. Co. v. McLimans, 28 Neb. 846, 45 N. W. 171.

New Hampshire.—Stone v. Granite State Fire Ins. Co. 69 N. H. 438, 45 Atl. 235, 29 Ins. L. J. 250. ("It is plain that a temporary absence of the character appearing in this case cannot be held to be within the condition as a matter of law," Blodgett, C. J.).

New Jersey.—Hampton v. Hartford Fire Ins. Co. 65 N. J. L. 265, 52 L.R.A. 344, 47 Atl. 433, 30 Ins. L. J. 141; Laselle v. Hoboken Fire Ins. Co. 43 N. J. L. 468.

New York.—Johnson v. New Bowery Fire Ins. Co. 39 Hun (N. Y.) 410.

Pennsylvania.—Doud v. Citizens' Ins. Co. 141 Pa. St. 47, 23 Am. St. Rep. 263, 21 Atl. 505; Franklin Fire Ins. Co. v. Kepler, 95 Pa. St. 492.

Texas.—Agricultural F. Ins. Co. v. Owens, — Tex. Civ. App. —, 132 S. W. 828.

See note L.R.A.1915B, 844–851.

On effect of temporary vacancy ceasing before loss under provisions against vacancy, see notes in 10 L.R.A.(N.S.) 740, and 28 L.R.A. (N.S.) 593.

[12] Burlington Ins. Co. v. Lowery, 61 Ark. 108, 54 Am. St. Rep. 196, 32 S. W. 383.

[13] See §§ 2239, 2240 herein, as to policy being suspended.

[14] Worley v. State Ins. Co. 91 Iowa, 150, 51 Am. St. Rep. 334, 59

which covered a "ten tenement frame block," which consisted of flats, was held not to be unoccupied while two of the tenements were in actual use and occupation as residences.[15] And if several buildings are insured by one policy conditioned to be void in case "the premises" become unoccupied, the word "premises" is held to cover the entire property insured, and so long as any building continues to be occupied, the policy is not avoided.[16] And where each of the insured buildings, although located independently of each other, is a part of a single plant or system, each necessary for its complete operation, and the description of the "property" or "mill," or "building," refers to the system or plant as a whole, and not to any particular building, and there is not a breach of the warranty or condition as to vacancy "or" nonoccupation where the operations are continued throughout the entire plant, only closing down a building as necessity requires.[17] So a policy issued upon several buildings for one gross sum as the consideration, the amount of the policy being apportioned among the different buildings, which is conditioned that if the premises "become vacant or unoccupied, then so long as the same shall remain vacant and unoccupied this policy shall cease and be of no force," it is not avoided by the vacancy of one of the buildings.[18]

But where a single premium is paid for a policy against fire and wind, the insurance is distributed in specific amounts over a house, hay and grain, and a cornerib, and there is a condition against the premises becoming vacant, there can be no recovery on the policy for a destruction of the cornerib by a wind storm after the tenant of the land, who occupied the house, has moved away.[19] So where a policy, covers sixteen tenement houses, with a separate valuation on each, provides that if the premises become unoccupied, and so remain for twenty days, without the consent of the insurer, the policy shall be void, no recovery can be had, in case of total loss, for such of the houses as have remained vacant beyond the prescribed time without the consent of the insurer after the insurance attached.[20] It is held in Texas, that if the policy is conditioned to

N. W. 16, condition was: "or if there is any change in the occupant or occupancy of the premises insured, or if they become vacant."

On divisibility of insurance, see notes in 19 L.R.A. 212, and 51 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1050.

[15] Harrington v. Fitchburg Fire Ins. Co. 124 Mass. 126.

[16] Herman v. Adriatic Fire Ins. Co. 85 N. Y. 162, 39 Am. Rep. 644.

[17] Central Montana Mines Co. v. Firemen's Fund Ins. Co. 92 Minn. 223, 99 N. W. 1120, 100 N. W. 3, 33 Ins. L. J. 745. See also Capital Fire Ins. Co. v. Carroll, 26 Okla. 286, 109 Pac. 535, 39 Ins. L. J. 1258.

[18] McQueeny v. Phœnix Ins. Co. 52 Ark. 257, 5 L.R.A. 744, 20 Am. St. Rep. 179, 12 S. W. 498.

[19] Republic County Mutual Fire Ins. Co. v. Johnson, 69 Kan. 146, 105 Am. St. Rep. 157, 76 Pac. 419. Condition was: "become vacant."

[20] Connecticut Fire Ins. Co. v.

be "entirely void in toto, as to every part and parcel, subject and divisions thereof," if a building described in the policy be or become vacant or unoccupied and so remain for ten days, the policy is forfeited if any one of the three insured buildings becomes and remains vacant and unoccupied for more than ten days where, although the contract recognizes the property insured as separate structures with occupation of a different character, still the evidence leaves no doubt that the three are so situated with reference to each other as to constitute but one risk.[1] So where the building insured consisted of a house and two barns, and the house was only occupied a part of the time during the currency of the policy, it was held that there was not an occupancy of the premises within the meaning of the condition.[2] And if both a building and personal property therein contained are insured and the building becomes vacant and unoccupied, such breach wholly voids the policy so that no recovery can be had for loss of the personal property.[3] This question however, as to entirety or divisibility of risk has been considered elsewhere herein.

§ 2225e. Premises untenantable or unfit for occupancy: vacancy enforced.—Where a tenant is compelled by a flood or overflow of water to vacate the premises, such enforced, unavoidable, absence does not vitiate a condition forfeiting the policy if the premises become "vacant, unoccupied, or uninhabited" without insurer's consent, where the tenant after the water has subsided attempts to prepare the house for occupation and before this can be done the loss by fire occurs.[4] And if there is a partial loss of the insured building so that it becomes unfit for occupancy, it is not within the intent of the parties that it should be occupied by a tenant or anyone else, and in such case there is no breach of the vacancy clause where assured permits the building to remain unoccupied with assurer's knowledge.[5] And a vacancy while repairs are being made may be justified under a grant of a privilege to make such repairs.[6] But where abandonment to insurer is precluded, a vacancy caused

Tilley, 88 Va. 1024, 29 Am. St. Rep. 770, 14 S. E. 851.

[1] Mecca Fire Ins. Co. v. Coughlin, — Tex. Civ. App. —, 134 S. W. 266, 40 Ins. L. J. 816, relying upon Bills v. Hibernia Ins. Co. 87 Tex. 547, 29 L.R.A. 706, 47 Am. St. Rep. 121, 29 S. W. 1063.

[2] Bishop v. Norwich Union Fire Ins. Co. 25 Nova Scotia, 472.

[3] Agricultural Ins. Co. v. Hamilton, 82 Md. 88, 30 L.R.A. 633, 51 Am. St. Rep. 457, 33 Atl. 429. Condition was: "vacant or unoccupied."

[4] Gash v. Home Ins. Co. of N. Y. 153 Ill. App. 31.

[5] Schmidt v. Williamsburgh City Fire Ins. Co. 98 Neb. 61, 151 N. W. 920. Condition here was: "vacant or unoccupied."

[6] Chamberlain v. British America Assur. Co. 80 Mo. App. 589, 2 Mo. App. 748.

by fire and continuing over the time limit therefor under the policy, avoids the contract and precludes recovery for a subsequent fire, and this is so held notwithstanding an option to repair where it is not exercised before said second loss.[7]

§ 2226. Provision as to notice in case premises become vacant or unoccupied: permit.—A provision in a policy of insurance that if the premises become vacant or unoccupied notice must be given to the company, or else the policy shall be void, is binding, and in such case if notice is not given, the policy is avoided. Where a policy provided that if the house should be "left unoccupied" without giving immediate notice to the company "the policy shall cease and be of no force and effect," it was held that the absence of the occupant of the house for a period of six weeks, no notice being given, would avoid the policy.[8] And if a policy provides that insurer shall not be liable for loss "if the premises hereby insured becomes vacated by the removal of the owner or occupant without immediate notice to the company and consent indorsed thereon," notice must be given within a reasonable time after vacancy, and if so given the policy remains in force until consent is refused by the insurer. In such case immediate notice must be construed to mean notice within a reasonable time, in view of the circumstances and positions of the parties in respect to means of communication with each other. What would be reasonable time as between parties living in the same city or having ready means of communication, would be very unreasonable if applied to an insured who lives a considerable distance from a postoffice, or a railroad, or the agent of the company who has placed the insurance.[9] But if immediate notice is given, and the company does not cancel the policy it has been held that the insured may recover for a loss subsequently occurring, though no indorsement has been made on the policy.[10] The failure of the insured to give notice in such a case for such a period of time is inexcusable neglect.[11] But it has been held that notice is not necessary where there is only a temporary interruption incidental to changed tenants.[12] And it is also held that it is only when the change in the occupancy of the premises, containing property insured, increases the hazard, that the assured is under an obligation

[7] Kupfersmith v. Delaware Ins. Co. 84 N. J. L. 271, 86 Atl. 399, 45 L.R.A.(N.S.) 847. Condition here was: "vacant or unoccupied."

[8] Paine v. Agricultural Ins. Co. 5 Thomp. & C. (N. Y.) 619.

[9] Strunk v. Fireman's Ins. Co. 160 Pa. St. 345, 40 Am. St. Rep. 721, 28 Atl. 779.

[10] Wakefield v. Orient Ins. Co. 50 Wis. 532, 7 N. W. 647.

[11] Alston v. Old North St. Ins. Co. 80 N. C. 326.

[12] Alston v. Old North St. Ins. Co. 80 N. C. 326.

to inform the company thereof.[13] And the removal from a building in process of construction of mechanics, who have been in possession under a permit from the insurance company, does not create a forfeiture under a clause of the policy making it void in case the premises become vacant by the removal of the owner or occupant, since the permit for their presence refers to the clause relating to increase of risk, and is not a waiver of the provision against vacancy.[14] So a provision voiding the policy if the building becomes and remains vacant for five days, unless continued by consent of the insurer, and that it shall be the duty of the owner to report a vacancy within five days of such occurrence and as often as every ten days thereafter, applies only when no permit for vacancy has been issued.[15] If a vacancy permit has expired prior to the fire, recovery is precluded in the absence of waiver and estoppel or an extension of the time covered by said permit.[16] A permit or privilege granted to make repairs may justify vacating the premises while they are being made.[17] Where a policy required notice in case the premises became vacant for more than thirty days without notice to the company, it was held that the policy was avoided where the premises were vacated on January 12th, and so remained until February 13th, when a fire occurred.[18] A policy which provided that if premises insured should "become vacant or unoccupied, and so remain without notice to and consent from this company in writing . . . this policy is void," was held to be avoided where a tenant of the property covered by the policy vacated the building, and it remained unoccupied for seventeen days, no notice being given to the company.[19] Where a policy provided that if the insured premises become vacant notice of "the particulars of such vacation or removal" must be given to the company, or else the policy should be void, it was held that the policy was avoided by

[13] Snell v. Atlantic Fire & Marine Ins. Co. 98 U. S. 85, 25 L. ed. 52.

[14] Harris v. North American Ins. Co. 190 Mass. 361, 4 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1137, 77 N. E. 493.

On building in process of erection as vacant, see note in 4 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1137.

[15] Duncan v. National Mutual Fire Ins. Co. 44 Colo. 472, 20 L.R.A. (N.S.) 340, 98 Pac. 634.

[16] Maness v. Sun Ins. Co. — Tex. Civ. App. —, 32 S. W. 326. As to liability of executor in such case for failure to have vacancy permit extended, see Henderson Trust Co. v. Stuart, 108 Ky. 167, 48 L.R.A. 49, 55 S. W. 1082. See Planters Fire Ins. Co. of Little Rock v. Steele. 119 Ark. 597, 178 S. W. 910, 46 Ins. L. J. 617 (considered under § 2230a herein).

[17] Chamberlain v. British American Assur. Co. 80 Mo. App. 589, 2 Mo. App. 748.

[18] Hartford Fire Ins. Co. v. Webster, 69 Ill. 392.

[19] Dennison v. Phœnix Ins. Co. 52 Iowa, 457, 3 N. W. 500. Compare American Ins. Co. v. Foster, 92 Ill. 334, 34 Am. Rep. 134.

the removal of the occupant with substantially the whole of his household goods, notice being given to the company that the occupant was going away on a visit, but that his household goods were to remain in the building.[20]

An oral agreement to the effect that a vacancy permit will be granted whenever a future vacancy may occur, cannot be enforced so as to abrogate a stipulation as to vacancy, where it is unsupported by a new consideration, as there must be a consideration for a modification of a contract to give it force.[1]

§ 2227. "Unoccupied premises."—A fire policy which provides that so long as the insured premises shall be "unoccupied . . . these presents shall cease and be of no force and effect," is not absolutely void in case of nonoccupancy; the policy is only suspended, and will revive when the premises become occupied again.[2] It has been held that a stipulation in a policy that a house is to be "occupied all the year round" is satisfied if permanent occupation is resumed so long before the fire that the temporary absence of the occupant plainly appears to have had no connection with the loss.[3] In an action upon a policy upon a trip-hammer shop and machinery therein, the policy providing that it should be void if the premises remained unoccupied more than thirty days, it was held that the following instructions to the jury were correct: "It is not sufficient to constitute occupancy that the tools remained in the shop, and that the plaintiff's son went through the shop almost every day to look around to see if things were right, but some practical use must have been made of the building."[4] A provision in the policy upon a manufacturing establishment that the policy shall be void if the premises become unoccupied refers to more than a merely temporary suspension of business. Thus, where a mill stopped work for five days, it was held that the premises were not unoccupied,[5] and the premises were held not to be unoccupied where there was a temporary cessation of business occasioned by a prevalence of yellow fever.[6] The condition in a policy of insurance that if the house insured shall cease to be occupied, or shall be unoccupied at the time of effecting insurance and is not so stated in the ap-

[20] Hill v. Equitable Marine & Fire Ins. Co. 58 N. H. 82.

[1] Patterson v. American Ins. Co. 164 Mo. App. 157, 148 S. W. 448, 41 Ins. L. J. 1473.

[2] Ætna Ins. Co. v. Meyers, 63 Ind. 238. See §§ 2239, 2240 herein.

[3] Ring v. Phœnix Assurance Co. 145 Mass. 426, 14 N. E. 525. See §§ 2239, 2240 herein.

[4] Keith v. Quincy Mutual Fire Ins. Co. 10 Allen (92 Mass.) 228.

[5] Albion Lead Works v. Williamsburg City Ins. Co. 2 Fed. 479. See §§ 2239, 2240 herein.

[6] Poss v. Western Assur. Co. 7 Lea (75 Tenn.) 704, 40 Am. Rep. 68.

plication, the policy shall be void, is intended to protect the company against an increase of risk by reason of the house being vacant. Hence, it is not broken when a house which is insured as "unoccupied" is temporarily occupied and then vacated by a tenant before it is burned.[7] A dwelling house and barn are unoccupied, within the meaning of an insurance policy which provides that buildings unoccupied shall not be covered by the policy, where the house is only used by the insured and his servants for the purpose of taking their meals there, when engaged in carrying on a contiguous farm, and the barn is only used for the purpose of storing hay and farming tools.[8] A dwelling house is unoccupied where the tenant removes to another farm a considerable distance away, leaving only a few small articles of furniture in the insured building, and making only occasional visits to the same.[9] But vacancy of premises from Saturday to the following Monday pending change of tenants does not avoid a five-year policy of insurance thereon, which provides that insurance "will not be carried upon unoccupied buildings unless covered by a vacancy permit."[10] So a warranty that the insured house was and should continue to be occupied, is not as matter of law, broken by reason of the fact that a tenant had commenced to remove the furniture therefrom at the time of the loss, while some of the furniture still remained, and a jury finding that the house was not unoccupied will stand.[11] But a policy which provides that it shall be void in case the insured building is unoccupied for more than thirty days is avoided where the insured and tenant have abandoned the property for more than that period. So, the fact that the building is occupied by a person will not protect the policy if the person has no authority to occupy it and pays no rent.[12] Where a summer dwelling-house was insured against fire, and it was provided that it was "not to be left unoccupied any portion of the year," and at the time the policy was issued S., an employee of the former owner, with his family, occupied four rooms in one wing, and in March [7] Bennett v. Agricultural Ins. Co. 106 N. Y. 243, 12 N. E. 609.

[8] Ashworth v. Builders' Mutual Fire Ins. Co. 112 Mass. 422, 17 Am. Rep. 117.

[9] Hartshorn v. Agricultural Ins. Co. 50 N. J. L. 427, 14 Atl. 615, 13 Cent. Rep. 132.

[10] Farmers' Mutual Equity Ins. Soc. v. Smith, 158 Ky. 459, L.R.A. 1915B, 844n, 165 S. W. 675. See Eureka Fire & Marine Ins. Co. v. Baldwin, 17 Ohio C. C. 143, 9 Ohio C. D. 118, house held not "unoccupied," exact words of conditions do not appear.

On vacancy during change of tenants as violation of vacancy clause in fire policy covering rented premises, see note in L.R.A.1915B, 844.

[11] Omaha Fire Ins. Co. v. Sinnott, 54 Neb. 522, 74 N. W. 955, exact wording of clause does not appear.

[12] Western Assurance Co. v. McPike, 62 Miss. 740.

of that year, the plaintiff employed H., a gardener, to take charge of the place, who was to take S's quarters when he moved out, and S. moved out the 5th of April, and on March 22d H. went to the place alone, in consequence of his wife's sickness, and took board at a neighbor's and continued there, having charge of the place and the keys of the house after S. moved out, and on April 19th the house was destroyed by fire, it was held that the policy was avoided.[13] So a policy which provides that it shall be void if the building becomes unoccupied is void the instant such building is unoccupied, and no recovery can be had for a loss occurring a few hours after the occupant has removed.[14] A building is still unoccupied though it is let to a tenant who has placed certain articles therein for the purpose of cleaning, but has not taken up his residence in the building.[15]

§ 2228. "Vacant" premises.—The mere temporary absence of the occupant of a building will not avoid a policy conditioned to be void in case the building becomes "vacant." To render the building vacant there must be a permanent removal from the house, and an abandonment of the same as a place of residence.[16] And a mere temporary absence from one's dwelling house with intent to return and occupy the premises is not a vacancy.[17] A house is not vacant so as to avoid a policy if, on the same day on which a tenant moves from the building, the insured remains in and about the premises, and also on the same day makes preparation to move into the insured building, and leaves a man in charge of it while he is so doing.[18] And a house is not vacant which is occupied by a tenant as a residence and for a restaurant, where he commences to move his furniture, but being unable to complete the moving leaves a substantial part thereof in the building, intending to finish the removal the next day, and although his family did not sleep there

[13] Sonneborn v. Manufacturers' Ins. Co. 15 Vroom (44 N. J. L.) 220, 43 Am. Rep. 365.

[14] Bennett v. Agricultural Ins. Co. 51 Conn. 504. See also Insurance Co. of North America v. Garland, 108 Ill. 220; Dennison v. Phœnix Ins. Co. 52 Iowa, 457, 3 N. W. 500; Cook v. Continental Ins. Co. 70 Mo. 610, 35 Am. Rep. 438, 9 Ins. L. J. 887; Farmers' Ins. Co. v. Wells, 42 Ohio, 519.

[15] Litch v. North British & Mercantile Ins. Co. 136 Mass. 491. See Barry v. Prescott Ins. Co. 35 Hun (N. Y.) 601; Johnson v. The New York Bowery Fire Ins. Co. 39 Hun (N. Y.) 410, where it is held that the building was not "vacant or unoccupied."

[16] Springfield Fire & Marine Ins. Co. v. McLimans, 28 Neb. 846, 45 N. W. 171; Cummins v. Agricultural Ins. Co. 67 N. Y. 260, 23 Am. Rep. 111. See § 2225c herein.

[17] Kampson v. Farmers' Mutual Fire Ins. Co. 116 Minn. 68, 133 N. W. 163, 41 Ins. L. J. 115.

[18] Doud v. Citizens' Ins. Co. 141 Pa. 47, 28 Wkly. Not. Cas. 20, 23 Am. St. Rep. 263, 21 Atl. 505.

that night he retained the key.[19] And a farm dwelling house and barn are held not to be vacant even though no one slept at night in the house and meals are only occasionally eaten there.[20] Where a house that has been rented has been vacated by the tenant, and the owner, intending to occupy it himself, takes possession the next day, has it papered and painted, moves his furniture, etc., into it, keeps his employees in and about the house from six in the morning till seven or eight in the evening, preparing it for occupancy, and the day before he expects to move in the house is destroyed by fire, it will not be considered as vacant within the meaning of a policy declaring that the insured shall not be liable for any loss or damage occurring while the insured property is vacant or unoccupied.[1] And in another case, where the tenant moved out and the landlord immediately moved his things in and began preparations for his own occupancy of the building, it was held that the building was not "vacant," and that he could recover for a loss occurring while he was away on a business trip and before he had slept in the house.[2] If a policy provides that it shall be void in case the premises are vacated, the fact that the use of the premises for the purpose for which they were used when the insurance was affected has ceased will not defeat the policy, where the insured continues to reside on the premises,[3] or about which he constantly has men, and also uses it as a place of deposit for his papers.[4]

But where the occupants of an insured building moved to another town, taking all of the wearing apparel and part of the furniture, it was held that the premises must be considered as "vacated" within the meaning of the policy.[5] A policy of insurance which provides that it shall be void if the premises become vacant without the written consent of the insurer indorsed on the policy is avoided where the buildings are unoccupied and the furniture removed therefrom, some fodder only being left in one of the outer buildings.[6] Where a policy containing a condition as to vacancy was

[19] Norman v. Missouri Town Mutual Fire, Lightning, Tornado, Cyclone & Wind Ins. Co. 74 Mo. App. 456, 1 Mo. App. Rep. 259. Condition was: "as soon as buildings become vacant the insurance should be void."

[20] Robinson v. Mennonite Mutual Fire Ins. Co. 91 Kan. 850, 139 Pac. 420. Condition was: "becomes and remains vacant."

[1] Eddy v. Hawkeye Ins. Co. 70 Iowa, 472, 59 Am. Rep. 444, 30 N. W. 808.

[2] Shackleton v. Sun Fire Ins. Co. 55 Mich. 288, 54 Am. Rep. 379, 21 N. W. 343.

[3] Kimball v. Monarch Ins. Co. 70 Iowa, 513, 30 N. W. 862.

[4] Williams v. North-German Ins. Co. 24 Fed. 625.

[5] Sleeper v. New Hampshire Ins. Co. 56 N. H. 401. See also American Ins. Co. v. Padfield, 78 Ill. 167.

[6] Watertown Fire Ins. Co. v. Cherry, 84 Va. 72, 3 S. E. 876.

issued upon a schoolhouse, and the school was discontinued, and the building was subsequently occupied as a dwelling until April, and was then vacated until the 14th of October, when it was burned while unoccupied, it was held that the insurance was forfeited.[7] Where the insured who, upon renewing his policy, had been in the habit of receiving merely a receipt therefor, but on this occasion was given a new form of policy, which contained a new vacancy clause, being changed from a thirty-day clause to a ten-day one, it was held that he was presumed to know the contents of the new policy, and that equity would not relieve him from a forfeiture where the premises had been vacant for over ten days prior to the loss.[8] So a policy conditioned to be void if the premises become vacant will be avoided where they become vacant by the removal of the tenant without the knowledge or consent of the insured.[9] It is also decided that a house is vacant where the family is away for recreation or health and only a servant with a family is left in charge who lived a short distance away and stayed in the house every night.[10] It is held error to take from the jury the question whether the premises had in fact become vacant, under a condition voiding the policy if the premises became and remained vacant, etc., where although it appeared that the house had been abandoned without intent to return, still there had been a return and occupation within the policy limit of time, before the fire.[11]

§ 2228a. Vacant by removal: personally unoccupied.—The condition as to vacancy by removal should have a reasonable interpretation according to the ordinary acceptation of the language used, or as such clause would be reasonably understood, and the terms "absence" and "removal" when applied to the occupant of a dwelling house, do not convey the same, but a widely different meaning so that as a matter of law the premises must not only have been vacant for more than the time permitted under the contract, but it must have been occasioned by the removal of the occupant therefrom, under a clause voiding the policy if the premises shall become vacant by the removal of the owner or occupant and

[7] American Ins. Co. v. Foster, 92 Ill. 334, 34 Am. Rep. 134.

[8] Thomson v. Southern Mutual Ins. Co. 90 Ga. 78, 15 S. E. 652.

[9] McClure v. Watertown Fire Ins. Co. 90 Pa. St. 277, 35 Am. Rep. 656.

On effect on vacancy clause of tenant's removal without owner's knowledge, see note in 3 L.R.A.(N.S.) 966.

[10] Lester v. Mississippi Home Ins. Co. — Miss. —, 19 So. 99. Exact wording of condition does not appear. But compare decisions under §§ 2229, 2230 herein.

On effect of sleeping on premises to prevent their becoming vacant and unoccupied, see note in 40 L.R.A. (N.S.) 58.

[11] Roach v. Aetna Ins. Co. 108 Minn. 127, 121 N. W. 613, under Minnesota standard form.

so remain, etc., and the question of vacancy and whether temporary absence is a "removal" is for the jury.[12] So a mere temporary absence of the occupant on business, does not render the premises vacant by removal,[13] and a temporary vacancy by an occupant, there being an intention to return, is held not to be a "removal." [14]

But the policy is avoided by a vacancy continuing more than one year.[15] So buildings are vacant, or personally unoccupied, within the meaning of a clause in an insurance policy making it void in case they become so, where, because of sickness, the occupant moves his family to a nearby village for medical attention, with the intention of returning when the sick recover, although he himself is at the house nearly every day in carrying on the work about the place.[16] A standard insurance policy which by its terms, becomes void by vacancy of the premises, is not revived by reoccupancy of the property before loss.[17] A provision in an insurance policy rendering it void in case the premises "become vacant by the removal of the owner or occupant," has no application to a policy issued on a building in process of erection, which because not fully fitted for occupancy, is never occupied prior to the fire.[18]

§ 2229. Conditioned to be void if premises become "vacant and unoccupied."—As we have stated in a preceding section,[19] if a policy is conditioned to be void in case the premises become "vacant and unoccupied," the premises must not only be vacant, but unoccupied. Both conditions must exist. Thus, where a person procured an insurance on his summer dwelling, and removed from it in November, leaving the furniture in it, and leaving it in care of

[12] Stone v. Granite State Fire Ins. Co. 69 N. H. 438, 45 Atl. 235, 29 Ins. L. J. 250.

[13] Johnson v. Norwalk Fire Ins. Co. 175 Mass. 529, 56 N. E. 569, 29 Ins. L. J. 371.

[14] Cummins v. Agricultural Ins. Co. 67 N. Y. 260, 23 Am. Rep. 111. See § 2225c herein.

[15] Baldwin v. German Ins. Co. 105 Iowa, 379, 75 N. W. 326, 8 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. N. S. 664, 27 Ins. L. J. 794. Conditions were: "If the premises insured shall be vacated without the consent," etc., and: "If the premises hereby insured shall become vacant by the removal of the owner or occupant and so remain vacant," etc.

[16] Knowlton v. Patrons' Androscoggin Mutual Fire Ins. Co. 100 Me. 481, 2 L.R.A.(N.S.) 517n, 62 Atl. 289. Condition was: "If the buildings . . . shall become vacant by the removal of the owner or occupant, or shall become personally unoccupied . . . without the consent," etc.

[17] Dolliver v. Granite State Fire Ins. Co. 111 Me. 275, 50 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1106, 89 Atl. 8. Condition was: "If the premises . . . shall become vacant by removal of the owner or occupant."

[18] Harris v. North American Ins. Co. 190 Mass. 361, 4 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1137n, 77 N. E. 493.

On building in process of erection as vacant, see note in 4 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1137.

[19] See § 2225 herein.

a person residing near it, intending to re-occupy it the next spring, it was held that the dwelling was not thus "vacant and unoccupied," and the insurance was not void.[20] A dwelling house was held not to become "vacant and unoccupied" when the tenant and his family left it for twelve days to visit a sick daughter, and another person, at his request, visited it daily and looked after it.[1] A building used for manufacturing purposes is not "vacant and unoccupied" where a company temporarily stops work and makes repairs, but retains the night and day watchman on duty up to the time of the fire, the plant and some manufactured material not being disturbed.[2] Where active work in a sawmill is temporarily discontinued from causes incident to the business, the premises are not thereby "vacant and unoccupied."[3] But a vessel which is beached, the furniture being removed and there being no occupant thereon, is "vacant and unoccupied."[4] And an insured building is "unoccupied," within the meaning of an insurance policy stipulating that it shall be void if the premises are "vacant and unoccupied" for a certain length of time, in a case where the tenant, who occupies the building as a store, closes and abandons it before the end of the term, leaving therein only a small amount of merchandise of nominal value, although he retains the key to the building at the request of the insured.[5] So the mere use of a store building as a place in which to store a few articles of personal property, no other business being carried on therein, renders the building "vacant and unoccupied" within the meaning of those words as used in an insurance policy.[6] So a condition against vacancy of an insured dwelling house is not complied with by the placing of farm implements therein by the insured after the removal of a tenant therefrom.[7] And an insured building used by a tenant as a store and cigar factory, is rendered "vacant and unoccupied" when the tenant, upon the expiration of his lease, removes with [20] Herman v. Merchants' Ins. Co. 81 N. Y. 184, 37 Am. Rep. 488.

[1] Stupetski v. Trans-Atlantic Fire Ins. Co. 43 Mich. 373, 38 Am. Rep. 195, 5 N. W. 401.

[2] Brighton Manufacturing Co. v. Redding Fire Ins. Co. 33 Fed. 232; Brighton M. Co. v. Fire Assoc. of Philadelphia, 33 Fed. 234; Brighton Mfg. Co. v. Reliance Ins. Co. 33 Fed. 235; Brighton Mfg. Co. v. Fire Ins. Co. of Pennsylvania, 33 Fed. 236; American Fire Ins. Co. v. Brighton Manufacturing Co. 125 Ill. 131, 17 N. E. 771, 15 West. Rep. 180.

[3] Whitney v. Black River Ins. Co. 72 N. Y. 117, 28 Am. Rep. 116.

[4] Reid v. Lancaster Fire Ins. Co. 19 Hun (N. Y.) 284.

[5] Home Ins. Co. v. Scales, 71 Miss. 975, 42 Am. St. Rep. 512, 15 So. 134.

[6] Limburg v. German Fire Ins. Co. 90 Iowa, 709, 28 L.R.A. 99, 48 Am. St. Rep. 468, 57 N. W. 626.

[7] Martin v. Rochester German Ins. Co. 86 Hun (N. Y.) 35, 33 N. Y. Supp. 404.

most of his stock from the building, and leaves stored therein, without the landlord's consent or knowledge, only a counter for sale and a few articles belonging to himself and another, and retains a key to the premises in order to show intending purchasers the counter while the landlord is seeking another tenant.[8]

If the policy has become void by reason of a violation of a condition against nonoccupancy without the consent of the insurer indorsed on the policy it is not revived when occupation of the premises is subsequently resumed.[9] So in Texas, if the policy provides that vacancy without the consent of the company will avoid the policy, and the unearned premium will be returned, a temporary vacancy without the knowledge of the owner avoids the policy, and subsequent re-occupancy of the building does not revive the policy, unless the forfeiture has been waived.[10]

§ 2230. Conditioned to be void if the premises become "vacant or unoccupied."—Under a condition containing these words, it is not necessary that the premises should be both vacant and unoccupied. The existence of either condition will avoid the policy.[11] The meaning of the term "vacant or unoccupied," as used in a policy, and its construction with other clauses, is a question of law. But whether a building is vacant or unoccupied within the meaning of an insurance policy, at the time a loss by fire occurs, is a question of fact for determination by the jury.[12]

Occupancy implies actual use of a dwelling house as such, and an insurer has a right, under a policy employing such word, to the care and supervision of the insured premises involved in such an occupancy.[13] So occupancy of a dwelling house means that some one is living therein and if not it is unoccupied, but a watchman or caretaker may occupy a house even though it is not their place of residence or abode.[14] Again, to constitute occupancy of a dwelling house within the meaning of a fire policy, it need not be used continuously. The family may be absent for health, pleasure, busi-

[8] Limburg v. German Fire Ins. Co. 90 Iowa, 709, 23 L.R.A. 99, 48 Am. St. Rep. 468, 57 N. W. 626. See also Robinson v. Aetna Ins. Co. 18 Ky. L. Rep. 865, 38 S. W. 693, 26 Ins. L. J. 823, exact wording of clause does not appear.

[9] Moore v. Phœnix Ins. Co. 62 N. H. 240, 13 Am. St. Rep. 556. See §§ 2239, 2240 herein.

[10] East Texas Ins. Co. v. Kempner, 87 Tex. 229, 47 Am. St. Rep. 99, 27 S. W. 122.

[11] See § 2225 herein.

[12] Schuermann v. Dwelling-House Ins. Co. 161 Ill. 437, 52 Am. St. Rep. 377, 43 N. E. 1093.

[13] Limburg v. German Fire Ins. Co. 90 Iowa, 709, 711, 23 L.R.A. 99, 48 Am. St. Rep. 468, 57 N. W. 626. Condition here was: "vacant or unoccupied."

[14] Walton v. Phoenix Ins. Co. 162 Mo. App. 316, 141 S. W. 1138, 41 Ins. L. J. 413. Condition was: "vacant or unoccupied." See also Weidert v. State Ins. Co. 19 Oreg. 261, 20 Am. St. Rep. 809, 24 Pac. 242.

ness, or convenience for reasonable periods, and it will not therefore be considered as unoccupied upon its ceasing to be used as a family residence, where the household goods remain ready for use, and it continues to be occupied by one or more members of the family, who have access to the entire building for the purpose of caring for it, and who do care for it and make some use of it as a place of abode.[15] So occupation of a house implies its actual use as a dwelling house; and that of a barn, its use as ordinarily incident to a barn belonging to an occupied house.[16]

The general and usual condition against vacancy in insurance policies on property occupied by the owner, which is inserted in a policy on a building occupied by a tenant, will not operate to avoid the policy immediately upon the removal of the tenant, of which the owner has no notice or reasonable opportunity to obtain it.[17] And if insurance is taken on tenement property, a provision for forfeiture, in case the premises become vacant, will operate only after a reasonable time has elapesd in which to obtain other tenants.[18]

A condition that if the premises become "vacant or unoccupied, or not in use," the policy shall be void, cannot be made to depend upon the insured's knowledge of the fact of such vacancy.[19]

Altering or repairing a building does not constitute occupancy within the meaning of an insurance policy, which provides that mechanics may be employed for a certain number of days in such work.[20]

§ 2230a. Same subject: when premises "vacant or unoccupied:" instances.—A house used as a dwelling which is merely in charge of and not actually occupied by a person living in the same inclosure is vacant.[1] So a policy is forfeited where the premises on [15] Moody v. Amazon Ins. Co. 52 Ohio St. 12, 26 L.R.A. 313, 49 Am. St. Rep. 699, 38 N. E. 1011. Condition was: "no liability shall exist under this policy for loss or damage on vacant or unoccupied buildings unless consent," etc.

[16] Stoltenberg v. Continental Ins. Co. 106 Iowa, 565, 568, 68 Am. St. Rep. 323, 76 N. W. 835, Ladd, J., condition was: "vacant or unoccupied."

[17] Ohio Farmers' Ins. Co. v. Vogel, 166 Ind. 239, 3 L.R.A.(N.S.) 966n, 76 N. E. 977. Condition was "vacant or unoccupied."

On effect on vacancy clause of tenant's removal without owner's knowledge, see note in 3 L.R.A.(N.S.) 966.

[18] Ohio Farmers' Ins. Co. v. Vogel, 166 Ind. 239, 3 L.R.A.(N.S.) 966, 117 Am. St. Rep. 382, 76 N. E. 977. Condition was "vacant or unoccupied."

[19] Schuermann v. Dwelling House Ins. Co. 161 Ill. 437, 52 Am. St. Rep. 377, 43 N. E. 1093, aff'g 57 Ill. App. 200. See also Farmers' Ins. Co. v. Wells, 42 Ohio St. 519.

[20] Limburg v. German Fire Ins. Co. 90 Iowa, 709, 23 L.R.A. 99, 48 Am. St. Rep. 468, 57 N. W. 626. Condition here was: "vacant or unoccupied."

[1] Burmer v. German American Ins. Co. 103 Ky. 370, 20 Ky. L. Rep. 71, 31 Chic. Leg. N. 18, 45 S. W. 109, 27 Ins. L. J. 732.

which insured buildings stand are leased to and cultivated by one who lives near by, but does not occupy nor make any use of such buildings, and they are not occupied by anyone else.[2] A dwelling house is vacant or unoccupied in the sense in which those terms are employed in a policy, when it is used otherwise than a fixed abode, although employees occasionally sleep there and some provisions are kept in the house, which is visited to obtain them.[3] And the fact that after a dwelling house became vacant the insured, or his hired men, or some member of his family, visited the house every day to see that things were all right, is not an occupancy.[4] A vacancy beyond the time limit, without a permit or consent, forfeits the policy.[5] So an insured dwelling which has been abandoned as a dwelling two days before its loss by fire, and with no intention to return, is in law vacant within the meaning of an insurance policy providing that it shall be void if at any time the house shall become vacant or unoccupied.[6] And where property is insured as a private dwelling and is leased to tenants and a vacancy permit is procured and the tenant returned, but again removed after the vacancy permit had expired, and the property burned before the owner could again occupy the same as he intended to do and would have done except for the fire, the policy is avoided. The distinction between "vacant" and "unoccupied," and "vacant and unoccupied" and "vacant or unoccupied" not being discussed as the condition here was "vacant or unoccupied," and in addition, whatever might be the effect as to the intent that rented premises may become vacant at times, such intent did not apply as the property was insured as a private dwelling.[7] If a house is left for an entire season with no one in it, a policy containing a condition that it shall be void if the premises become "vacant or unoccupied" is avoided, though the furniture be left therein.[8] And where the family removes to another locality, tak-

[2] Stoltenberg v. Continental Ins. Co. 106 Iowa, 565, 68 Am. St. Rep. 323, 76 N. W. 835. Condition was: "vacant or unoccupied."

[3] Agricultural Ins. Co. v. Hamilton, 82 Md. 88, 30 L.R.A. 633, 51 Am. St. Rep. 457, 33 Atl. 429. Condition was: "vacant or unoccupied."

On effect of sleeping on premises to prevent their becoming vacant or unoccupied, see note in 40 L.R.A. (N.S.) 58.

[4] Weidert v. State Ins. Co. 19 Oreg. 261, 20 Am. St. Rep. 809, 24 Pac. 242.

[5] Piscataqua Savings Bank v. Traders' Ins. Co. 8 Kan. App. 241, 55 Pac. 496. Examine Phoenix Ins. Co. v. Burton, — Tex. Civ. App. —, 39 S. W. 319.

[6] Richards v. Continental Ins. Co. of New York, 83 Mich. 508, 21 Am. St. Rep. 611, 47 N. W. 350.

[7] Planters Fire Ins. Co. v. Steele, 119 Ark. 597, 178 S. W. 910, 46 Ins. L. J. 617. See Covey v. National Union Fire Ins. Co. — Cal. App. —, 161 Pac. 35. ("Vacant or unoccupied," tenancy).

[8] Herman v. Adriatic Fire Ins. Co.

ing most of the furniture and refurnishing the new dwelling in part, and remains away for more than the specified time limit in the policy, and does not reoccupy the old residence, even though occasional visits are made to that locality, there is such vacancy as forfeits the policy.[9] Fire insurance policies contemplate the use and occupancy of the insured property as a normal school and dwelling and make the same a condition to the acceptance and continuance of the risk, where one of the policies insures the premises as a "normal school and dwelling" and the other insures it "occupied, and only while occupied, as a normal school and dwelling," both policies further providing that they shall be void in case of change of use or occupants except change of occupants without increase of hazard, or if the building become vacant or unoccupied.[10]

Insured buildings appearing to have been recently vacated by a tenant before the loss are presumed to continue vacant, unless shown to have been subsequently occupied.[11] And there is a forfeiture if the tenant in possession had vacated such building a short time before the loss and it was not subsequently occupied by a tenant or other occupant.[12] If a policy provides that it shall be void in case the premises become wholly or partially vacant or unoccupied, it is avoided by the removal of a tenant, and the fact that the owner visits the building each day and some tools are kept there will not preserve the policy.[13] And merely leaving furniture where the building is unoccupied at night, is insufficient, even though a hired man has general oversight of the property and frequently inspects the same.[14] So a dwelling or tenement house is vacant and unoccupied if the occupant or occupants have moved out, although some trifling articles of furniture of little value are left in one of the rooms.[15] But it is declared in an Indiana case

85 N. Y. 162, 39 Am. Rep. 644. See also Alston v. Old North State Ins. Co. 80 N. C. 326; Fitzgerald v. Connecticut Fire Ins. Co. 64 Wis. 463, 25 N. W. 785.

[9] Norris v. Connecticut Fire Ins. Co. 115 Md. 174, 80 Atl. 960.

[10] Connecticut Fire Ins. Co. v. Buchanan, 141 Fed. 877, 73 C. C. A. 111, 4 L.R.A.(N.S.) 758.

[11] Stoltenberg v. Continental Ins. Co. 106 Iowa, 565, 68 Am. St. Rep. 323, 76 N. W. 835. Condition was: "vacant or unoccupied."

This point as to vacancy being presumed to continue, etc., ought, it would seem to depend primarily upon what constitutes vacancy. See § 2225 and other sections herein on vacancy.

[12] Stoltenberg v. Continental Ins. Co. 106 Iowa, 565, 68 Am. St. Rep. 323, 76 N. W. 835. Condition was: "vacant or unoccupied."

[13] Feshe v. Council Bluffs Ins. Co. (Fehse v. Council Bluffs Ins. Co.) 74 Iowa, 676, 39 N. W. 87. See also Franklin Savings Inst. v. Central Mutual Fire Ins. Co. 119 Mass. 240.

[14] Hanscom v. Home Ins. Co. 90 Me. 333, 38 Atl. 324, 27 Ins. L. J. 19.

[15] Schuermann v. Dwelling-House Ins. Co. 161 Ill. 437, 52 Am. St. Rep. 377, 43 N. E. 1093.

that: "We think it may be fairly said that in the cases in which dwelling houses have been held to be vacant by removal of tenants therefrom, where they have left a portion of their property, the articles were either so inconsiderable in value as to preclude the idea that the owner would return for them, or that they were left with the consent of the landlord without a definite time for their removal." [16]

A policy containing a provision that it shall be void if the premises become vacant or unoccupied is avoided where the tenant, being notified to leave, does so with the consent and knowledge of the owner of the premises,[17] and it is held that a policy containing such a condition is avoided by the permanent removal of the tenant, though made without the landlord's knowledge.[18] Conditions in fire insurance policies that they shall be void if the use of the insured building be changed or if it become vacant or unoccupied, are broken and no recovery can be had in an action on the policy where, at the time of the loss, the building was used for the temporary storage of the library and a portion of the household effects of a teacher formerly living therein, but its use for school purposes had been suspended for an indefinite period, although a lease contemplating the establishment of a new school of the same character had been negotiated, but the tenant had not arrived or taken possession.[19]

§ 2230b. Same subject: when premises not "vacant or unoccupied:" instances.—A vacancy for less than the specified time limit does not avoid the policy,[20] nor does a temporary absence of members of the family constitute a vacancy.[1] And an insured building is not "vacant or unoccupied" from the mere absence of the insured from the building for a few days in order to attend a funeral, though no occupant is left in the house,[2] nor by the absence of the family from the house for several days for the purpose of making a visit,[3] or by the absence of the occupants of the insured house on

[16] Insurance Co. of North America v. Coombs, 19 Ind. App. 338, Comstock, J. Condition was: "vacant or unoccupied."

[17] Richards v. Continental Ins. Co. of New York, 83 Mich. 508, 21 Am. St. Rep. 611, 47 N. W. 350.

[18] Farmers' Ins. Co. v. Wells, 42 Ohio St. 519. See Schuermann v. Dwelling House Ins. Co. 161 Ill. 437, 52 Am. St. Rep. 377, 43 N. E. 1003, aff'g 57 Ill. App. 200.

[19] Connecticut Fire Ins. Co. v. Buchanan, 141 Fed. 877, 4 L.R.A. (N.S.) 758, 73 C. C. A. 111.

[20] Phoenix Ins. Co. v. Burton, — Tex. Civ. App. —, 39 S. W. 319.

[1] Georgia Home Ins. Co. v. Brady, — Tex. Civ. App. —, 41 S. W. 513.

[2] Franklin Fire Ins. Co. v. Kepler, 95 Pa. St. 492.

[3] Johnson v. New York Bowery Fire Ins. Co. 39 Hun (N. Y.) 410; O'Brien v. Commercial Fire Ins. Co. 6 Jones & S. (N. Y.) 517.

the night of the fire.[4] Nor does absence during the summer for health, even though continued over the time limit, preclude recovery, where the household goods and a general oversight of the premises is undertaken by a neighbor.[5] And where the house is temporarily vacated to obtain medical treatment for insured's wife, and it is, with the exception of a few days at a time, occupied by insured to sleep in and cooking is done there, and during such absence some supervision is had of the house by a neighbor with whom the key is left, the policy is not voided for nonoccupancy.[6] And a house is not vacant where, although a greater part of the furniture is moved out, it is occupied by the husband and his hired man for sleeping nights and the horses and part of the furniture are left there.[7] So where a policy issued upon a building occupied as a store and dwelling house was conditioned to be void in case it became vacant or unoccupied, it was held that the policy was not avoided by the insured ceasing to occupy it as a dwelling-house, where he continued to occupy it as a store.[8] Again, the fact that a previous policy on the same property did not contain any condition against the property being vacant or unoccupied does not prevent such condition from being operative when there is no pretense of fraud or mistake, and the assured had ample opportunity to examine his policy and learn its contents.[9] So although a house is built for a dwelling-house, the fact that the insured lodges and eats in an adjacent house, but uses the former building for cooking and general work in connection with the latter, does not make the former "vacant or unoccupied." [10] It is also held that the premises are not "vacant or unoccupied" where the person, who is engaged in repairing the buildings, sleeps there nightly.[11]

A building leased to a woman for a boarding house does not become vacant or unoccupied within the meaning of a clause in an insurance policy rendering it void under such circumstances, if, after the tenant has removed the most of her furniture to another building, her husband and his man continue to occupy the build-

[4] Laselle v. Hoboken Fire Ins. Co. 43 N. J. L. 468.

[5] Phoenix Ins. Co. v. Burton, — Tex. Civ. App. —, 39 S. W. 319.

[6] Home Fire Ins. Co. v. Peyson, 54 Neb. 495, 74 N. W. 960.

[7] Seubert v. Fidelity-Phoenix Ins. Co. of N. Y. 29 S. Dak. 261, 40 L.R.A.(N.S.) 58, 136 N. W. 103, 41 Ins. L. J. 1203.

On effect of sleeping on premises to prevent their becoming vacant or unoccupied, see note in 40 L.R.A. (N.S.) 58.

[8] Burlington Ins. Co. v. Brockway, 138 Ill. 644, 28 N. E. 799, aff'd 39 Ill. App. 43.

[9] England v. Westchester Fire Ins. Co. 81 Wis. 583, 29 Am. St. Rep. 917, 51 N. W. 954.

[10] Dwelling House Ins. Co. v. Osborn, 1 Kan. App. 197, 40 Pac. 1099.

[11] Hartford Fire Ins. Co. v. Smith, 3 Colo. 422.

ing nights, looking after his stock, which remains on the premises.[12] And where insurance is to cover the premises, only while they are occupied by a tenant, as a private dwelling, and that the policy shall be void in case of vacancy or non-occupation for more than ten days, whether intended for occupancy by the owner or tenant, it is not avoided and the house is occupied where, after the removal of a tenant, occupation, control and actual possession is taken by a person who moves in at assured's request and remains there every night, with the exception of not more than four days at any one time, up to the time of loss, and this is so, even though only one room in the house is furnished, occupied or used during said time.[13] So a house out of which a tenant has moved, but in which some trifling articles of his still remain, while other goods of his are in a smokehouse a few steps away, and into which an incoming tenant has moved a portion of his effects, including a stove in which he has built a fire, and into which he would have brought his family except for rain, may be found, as a question of fact, not to be vacant and unoccupied within the meaning of an insurance policy.[14] Nor are the premises "vacant or unoccupied' where the tenant commenced the removal of his household effects in the morning, but the fire occurred during his absence with intent to return on the afternoon of the same day for the remainder of his goods.[15] So where a tenant moved out of an insured house on Tuesday, the owner took possession on Wednesday, and until Friday evening was engaged in preparing the house for his own occupation, intending to move into it on Saturday, and on Friday night the house was burned, it was held that the policy was not invalidated on the ground that the house was vacant or unoccupied.[16] Again, where the tenant moved out on March 15th and on May 5th the premises were burned, it was held that the building was not "vacant or unoccupied" when during the interval, the owner had visited [12] Seubert v. Fidelity-Phenix Ins. Co. 29 S. Dak. 261, 40 L.R.A.(N.S.) 58n, 136 N. W. 103.

[13] Agricultural Ins. Co. v. Owens, — Tex. Civ. App. —, 132 S. W. 828.

[14] Home Ins. Co. v. Mendenhall, 164 Ill. 458, 36 L.R.A. 374, 45 N. E. 1078, aff'g 64 Ill. App. 30. Condition was: "vacant and unoccupied."

[15] Insurance Co. of North America v. Coombs, 19 Ind. App. 331, 49 N. E. 471, citing:

Illinois.—Phoenix Ins. Co. v. Tucker, 92 Ill. 64, 34 Am. Rep. 106.

Indiana.—Continental Ins. Co. v. Kyle, 124 Ind. 132, 9 L.R.A. 81, 19 Am. St. Rep. 77, 24 N. E. 727.

Iowa.—Eddy v. Hawkeye Ins. Co. 70 Iowa, 472, 59 Am. St. Rep. 444, 30 N. W. 808.

Nebraska.—Liverpool Ins. Co. v. Buckstuff, 38 Neb. 146, 41 Am. St. Rep. 724, 56 N. W. 695.

New Hampshire.—Moore v. Phoenix Ins. Co. 64 N. H. 140, 10 Am. St. Rep. 584, note 390, 6 Atl. 27.

Pennsylvania.—Doud v. Citizens' Ins. Co. 141 Pa. St. 47, 21 Atl. 505.

[16] Eddy v. Hawkeye Ins. Co. 70 Iowa, 472, 59 Am. Rep. 444, 30 N. W. 808.

the house frequently, and had had one of her servants sleep there every night.[17]

A policy upon a mill conditioned to be void in case the "premises shall become vacant or unoccupied" is not avoided by a temporary suspension of business.[18] Where an insured manufacturing establishment is leased by the insured, and the tenant thereafter ceases business, leaving the building closed and in charge of one who lives in a house upon the premises about fifteen feet from the factory, who is intrusted with the keys and visits the premises three or four times a week, the premises are unoccupied within the meaning of a condition that the policy shall be void in case of the premises becoming vacant or unoccupied.[19]

§ 2230c. Same subject: watchman acting under legal process.—Where the condition was "be or become vacant or unoccupied and so remain for ten days" and the policy covered a building "occupied as a saloon" and it was contended that the word "occupied" should be given its ordinary and popular meaning, and as applied to said building meant such occupancy as ordinarily attends or is exercised over a saloon building, while being used as such, it was held that this contention was untenable in that it was not provided that the building should be devoted to saloon purposes and that the words "occupied as a saloon" were words of description only, and, therefore, since the object to be attained was a protection against an increase of hazard by reason of nonoccupancy, the possession of a watchman acting under a sheriff under legal process would be sufficient to satisfy the burden imposed upon assured, the burden of proving nonoccupancy being upon the assurer. The court, however, per Gose, J., declared that there was a conflict of authorities upon the point as to the possession of a watchman being an occupancy, and that an attempt to harmonize them would be futile, and that each case must be determined largely upon its own peculiar circumstances. The question of continuing warranty is, however, considered herein under the chapter on warranties.[20]

[17] Traders' Ins. Co. v. Race, 29 N. E. 846, 21 Ins. L. J. 363, aff'd 142 Ill. 338, 31 N. E. 392.

[18] City Planing & Shingle Mill Co. v. Merchants' Ins. Co. 72 Mich. 654, 16 Am. St. Rep. 552, 40 N. W. 777.

[19] Halpin v. Ætna Fire Ins. Co. 118 N. Y. 165, 19 Ins. L. J. 459, 23 N. E. 988.

[20] Silver v. London Assurance Corp. 61 Wash. 593, 112 Pac. 666, 40 Ins. L. J. 479, the court considers the following cases:

Illinois.—Traders Ins. Co. v. Race, 29 N. E. 846, aff'd 142 Ill. 338, 31 N. E. 392; Burlington Ins. Co. v. Brockway, 138 Ill. 644, 28 N. E. 799.

Michigan.—Shackleton v. Sun Fire Ins. Co. 55 Mich. 288, 54 Am. Rep. 379, 21 N. W. 343.

Minnesota.—Stensgaard v. National Fire Ins. Co. 36 Minn. 181, 30 N. W. 468.

Nebraska. — German Ins. Co. v. Davis, 40 Neb. 700, 59 N. W. 698.

§ 2231. Waiver of condition as to premises being vacated.—These conditions, like all of the others which are inserted for the benefit of the insurer, may be waived by the insurer, either by some acts dispensing with a performance of the conditions, or by some act which constitutes a waiver of a forfeiture incurred as a consequence of a breach of the conditions. In such a case the insurer is estopped from setting up a breach of such conditions in defense to an action upon the policy.[1]

Where the policy was conditioned to be void if the premises became vacant and so remained for twenty days, the issuance of the policy upon unoccupied premises is not a waiver of the condition, as by the terms thereof the insured is bound to have the house occupied with a period of twenty days.[2] Waiver of condition against a building continuing vacant for ten days, will not be presumed, from the mere fact that it was vacant when the insurance was effected, when nothing whatever occurred or took place between the parties upon this subject at the time or thereafter before the loss.[3] And the terms of an insurance policy making it void in case of vacancy of a building cannot be changed by implied waiver in the issuance of a policy on a building known to be unoccupied, since the provision refers to a possible future, and not a present, use of the property.[4] A waiver of forfeiture resulting from a breach occasioned by change in occupancy of a building increasing the risk extends not only to breaches occasioned by the occupancy before such waiver, but to those resulting from a continuation of such occupancy.[5] If at the date of the policy, and subsequently, the insurer knew that the building was vacant and unoccupied, and so remained, it is presumed that the condition as to vacancy is waived.[6] A permission to remove a building does not constitute a waiver of the vacancy clause where notice is given assured after the removal that the condition will be in force.[7] And

Pennsylvania.—Doud v. Citizens Ins. Co. 141 Pa. 47, 23 Am. St. Rep. 263, 21 Atl. 505.

[1] Viele v. Germania Ins. Co. 26 Iowa, 9, 96 Am. Dec. 83. See also Coursin v. Pennsylvania Ins. Co. 46 Pa. St. 323; Hansen v. Home Ins. Co. Co. 90 Me. 333, 38 Atl. 324, 27 Ins. L. J. 19 (defense precluded); Quinsigamond Lake Steamboat Co. v. Phoenix Ins. Co. 172 Mass. 367, 52 N. E. 531, 28 Ins. L. J. 211 (insurer not estopped).

[2] Connecticut Fire Ins. Co. v. Tilley, 88 Va. 1024, 29 Am. St. Rep. 770, 14 S. E. 851, 21 Ins. L. J. 558.

[3] England v. Westchester Fire Ins. Co. 81 Wis. 583, 29 Am. St. Rep. 917, 51 N. W. 594.

[4] Harris v. North American Ins. Co. 190 Mass. 361, 4 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1137, 77 N. E. 493.

[5] Viele v. Germania Ins. Co. 26 Iowa, 9, 96 Am. Dec. 83.

[6] West Coast Lumber Co. v. State Investment & Ins. Co. 98 Cal. 502, 33 Pac. 258.

[7] Firemen's Fund Ins. Co. v. Lyon, — Tex. Civ. App. —, 171 S. W. 801.

where insurer is notified of the vacancy and is asked for a permit, it is bound either to issue the permit or cancel the policy, and return the unearned premium. It cannot retain the premium and so affirm the contract and then repudiate it after a loss.[8] So where insurer knew that an elevator had not been in use for hoisting and that it would not be again used for that purpose, but that it was at the time of the fire used as a storehouse for machinery and tools preparatory to their removal to a new plant and the engine was, after the policy was issued, removed from said elevator, it is not vacant or unoccupied within the forfeiture clause relating thereto.[9] And where insurer knows that the house insured is to be occupied by tenants and such is the intent of the parties it will be held that that is the agreement and a provision in the policy has no application where it provides that it shall be void if the insured building shall "become vacant, or unoccupied, or occupied by tenants."[10] Again, if a policy of insurance is void at its inception because it contains a warranty that the premises were occupied, when in fact they were vacant, a subsequent notice to the insurer that they were vacant at the time of the giving of the notice cannot give life to the policy; and the consent of the insurer to the vacancy will not constitute a waiver by it of the forfeiture caused by the premises not being occupied when the policy was issued, unless such consent was given with full notice of all the facts.[11] Where a policy was issued upon a building in the course of construction, and there was a vacancy permit for a period of thirty days indorsed on the policy, and it appeared that the agent of the insurers promised to renew this indorsement if the building was not completed at the end of that time, and to continue making such renewal until completed, and such renewal was twice indorsed by the agent, but omitted a third time by inadvertence, it was held that the provision declaring the policy void if the building was unoccupied for a period of ten days had been waived.[12] Issuance by an insurer of a vacancy permit with knowledge that the building has been vacant, waives a forfeiture because of such vacancy.[13] An insurance company with-

[8] Patterson v. American Ins. Co. 164 Mo. App. 157, 148 S. W. 448, 41 Ins. L. J. 1473.

[9] Clifton Coal Co. v. Scottish Union & National Ins. Co. of Edinburgh, 102 Iowa, 300, 71 N. W. 433, 26 Ins. L. J. 1007.

[10] Ohio Farmers Ins. Co. v. Vogel, 166 Ind. 239, 3 L.R.A.(N.S.) 966, 117 Am. St. Rep. 382, 76 N. E. 977.

[11] Boyd v. Vanderbilt Ins. Co. 90 Tenn. 212, 25 Am. St. Rep. 676, 16 S. W. 270.

[12] Dupuy v. Delaware Ins. Co. 63 Fed. 680, 24 Ins. L. J. 161.

[13] Duncan v. National Mutual Fire Ins. Co. 44 Colo. 472, 20 L.R.A. (N.S.) 340, 98 Pac. 634.

On vacancy permit as waiver of previous vacancy, see note in 47 L.R.A.(N.S.) 619.

out knowledge of the breach of a condition against vacancy until after a fire has occurred may, if it does not waive the forfeiture, insist upon the same.[14] The fact that the custodian had access to only one room of a house did not render it vacant so as to avoid a policy of insurance on it, where the agent was notified that the owner's family was to be absent, and agreed that it would be sufficient to have a man in the yard, the furniture being left in the building, and the custodian occupying an adjoining building only thirty feet away, and part of the time sleeping in the room to which he had access.[15] Where a policy of fire insurance provided that it should be void if the building insured became vacant without the indorsed consent of the insurer, that no agent had power to waive any condition, that no waiver of a condition was valid unless indorsed, and that any person other than the insured who procured an insurance to be taken by the company was deemed the agent of the insured, and not of the insurer, and a building insured thereunder became vacant with the knowledge of the agent authorized to receive and issue policies, but not of the company, and the insured presented proofs of a loss occurring during such vacancy, and the company, without raising the objection of vacancy, required further proofs, which the insured furnished at an expense to himself, it was held that the insured was entitled to recover on the policy.[16] If the company or its agent when the policy is issued has knowledge that the premises are vacant or unoccupied, it is held that the issuance of the policy under such conditions will be a waiver of any cause therein as to non-occupancy or vacancy.[17] So a temporary absence does not constitute vacancy of a dwelling

[14] Schmidt v. Williamsburgh City Fire Ins. Co. 95 Neb. 43, 51 L.R.A. (N.S.) 261, 144 N. W. 1044.

[15] Home Ins. Co. v. Hancock, 106 Tenn. 513, 52 L.R.A. 665, 62 S. W. 145.

On effect on provisions as to vacancy of agent's representations or knowledge, see note in 4 L.R.A. (N.S.) 758.

[16] Gans v. St. Paul Fire & Marine Ins. Co. 43 Wis. 108, 28 Am. Rep. 535.

[17] Illinois.—Commercial Ins. Co. v. Spankneble, 52 Ill. 53, 4 Am. Rep. 582; Germania Fire Ins. Co. v. Klewer, 27 Bradw. (Ill. App.) 590.

Iowa.—Jordan v. State Ins. Co. 64 Iowa, 216, 19 N. W. 917.

Maine.—Hilton v. Phoenix Ins. Co. 92 Me. 272, 42 Atl. 212, 28 Ins. L. J. 309.

Missouri.—Chamberlain v. British American Assur. Co. 80 Mo. App. 589, 2 Mo. App. Rep. 748; German Ins. Co. v. Frederick, 57 Neb. 538, 77 N. W. 1106.

New York.—Haight v. Continental Ins. Co. 92 N. Y. 51; Sentell v. Oswego County Farmers' Ins. Co. 16 Hun (N. Y.) 516.

South Carolina.—Wilson v. Commercial Assur. Co. 51 S. Car. 540, 64 Am. St. Rep. 700, 29 S. E. 245.

Tennessee.—Home Ins. Co. v. Hancock, 106 Tenn. 513, 62 S. W. 145.

Wisconsin.—Devine v. Home Ins. Co. 32 Wis. 471.

See Short v. Home Ins. Co. 90 N. Y. 16, 43 Am. Rep. 138; Williams v.

house although a part of the building is not occupied at all, such nonoccupation being known to the assurer's agent.[18] And where assurer's agent, from whom the policy had been received, was given the policy to obtain a vacancy permit, informs insured that it had been given insurer, is bound.[19] And although the adjuster declares that he does not waive the breach as to vacancy, still if he proceeds to adjust the loss and requires from assured statements of loss, and expense is incurred by the latter by reason thereof, there is a waiver of the forfeiture.[20] So a forfeiture for vacancy is waived where assurer's authorized local agent assents to the continuance of the policy in force upon being notified by the owners of such vacancy.[1] And the term "vacant or unoccupied," relating to a clause of forfeiture of insurance on a dwelling "to be occupied by the assured or tenant," has not such a definite signification that the assured is not entitled to rely on the statement of the agent that the policy would remain valid for thirty days after a tenant removed.[2]

§ 2232. Restrictions in life policy as to residence: travel, etc.: waiver.—A condition ordinarily inserted in policies of life insurance is that imposing a restriction upon the insured as to the limits within which he may reside or travel. The companies may prescribe certain limits for travel or residence in life policies, and where such conditions exist, they are binding upon the insured, and a violation thereof will avoid the policy.[3] A policy of life insurance providing that it shall be null and void if a condition therein in regard to residence is violated, is not absolutely void upon the happening of such event, but merely voidable, at the election of the company.[4] And a mere temporary or transitory stay in prohibited limits, does not breach a condition prohibiting residing in or removal thereto, as "residing" implies a legal residence or domicil and a removal applies to removal of residence. So a member of a benefit society who goes south of the line permit-

Niagara Fire Ins. Co. 50 Iowa, 561. See chapters on agency herein.

[18] Walrod v. Des Moines Ins. Co. 159 Iowa, 121, 140 N. W. 218, 42 Ins. L. J. 732 (wording of clause does not appear).

[19] Morgan v. Illinois Ins. Co. 130 Mich. 427, 90 N. W. 40.

[20] German American Ins. Co. v. Evans, 25 Tex. Civ. App. 300, 61 S. W. 536.

[1] Home Fire Ins. Co. v. Wilson, 118 Ark. 442, 176 S. W. 688. See §§ 565, 566 herein.

[2] Hotchkiss v. Phœnix Ins. Co. 76 Wis. 269, 20 Am. St. Rep. 69, 44 N. W. 1106. See § 2225a herein.

[3] Nightingale v. State Mutual Ins. Co. 5 R. I. 38.

On character of residence or sojourn in prohibited place which will avoid policy, see note in L.R.A. 1915F, 1056.

[4] Germania Life Ins. Co. v. Koehler, 168 Ill. 293, 61 Am. St. Rep. 108, 48 N. E. 297.

ted by his contract, to secure work, and stays there a few months, leaving his family at his former place of residence, does not forfeit his certificate under the provisions of the order that no certificate shall be granted to one residing outside of a specified section of country, and that any member who shall remove therefrom shall forfeit his benefit.[5]

Where a person escaped from imprisonment from New York, and went to Vigo, Spain, which was beyond the limits stated in the policy, it was held that the policy was avoided, and that the insured could not claim a paid-up policy.[6]

This condition restricting the right of the insured as to travel and residence may, like other conditions, be waived by the insurer or his agents. Thus, where the agent of the insurer received premiums from the insured with knowledge of the violation of this condition, it was held that the forfeiture was waived.[7] And if a person holding a policy of life insurance violates a condition therein respecting residence, under penalty of a forfeiture and a local agent empowered to receive premiums, receives a premium from him after knowledge of the breach of condition, the transmission of the premium to the company, and the retention thereof by it, operates as a waiver by the company of the breach.[8] But the receipt of a premium by an agent, with knowledge of the previous residence of the assured within a prohibited district, is not a waiver of the forfeiture incurred thereby, where there is no evidence of a disregard of the condition as to the residence of the assured in any previous year, and the insurer directed a return of the premiums as soon as it was informed of the facts.[9] And where a party had

[5] Lane v. Grand Fraternity, 132 Tenn. 235, L.R.A.1915F, 1056, 177 S. W. 941.

[6] Douglas v. Knickerbocker Life Ins. Co. 55 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 104.

[7] Wing v. Harvey, 23 L. J. Ch. 511, 5 De G. M. & G. 265, 18 Jur. 394, 2 W. R. 370; Girdlestone v. North British Mercantile Ins. Co. 11 L. R. Eq. Cas. 197.

[8] Germania Life Ins. Co. v. Koehler, 168 Ill. 293, 61 Am. St. Rep. 108, 48 N. E. 297.

[9] Globe Mutual Life Ins. Co. v. Wolff, 95 U. S. 326, 24 L. ed. 387. Cited in:

United States. — Supreme Lodge Knights of Pythias v. Kalinski, 163 U. S. 289, 298, 41 L. ed. 163, 166, 16 Sup. Ct. 1047.

Connecticut.—McGurk v. Mutual Life Ins. Co. 56 Conn. 528, 540, 1 L.R.A. 563, 567, 16 Atl. 263.

District of Columbia.—McElhone v. Massachusetts Ben. Assoc. 2 App. D. C. 297, 402.

Illinois.—Germania Life Ins. Co. v. Koehler, 168 Ill. 293, 303, 61 Am. St. Rep. 108, 48 N. E. 297.

Indiana. — Northwestern Masonic Aid Assoc. v. Bodurtha, 23 Ind. App. 121, 127, 77 Am. St. Rep. 414, 53 N. E. 787.

Kansas.—Bingler v. Mutual Benefit Life Ins. Co. 10 Kan. App. 6, 8, 61 Pac. 673.

New York.—Quinn v. Mutual Life Ins. Co. 41 N. Y. Supp. 1060, 10 App. Div. 483, 486.

West Virginia. — Medley v. Ger-forfeited his policy by residing within prescribed limits without a permit, and after his death, but before knowledge of the fact, an agent of the company gave a receipt to a friend of the insured for the money to pay for a permit, but the company never issued the permit, and the agent upon hearing of the death tendered back the money, it was held that there was no waiver of the forfeiture.[10]

The attempt of the grand secretary of a fraternal society to suspend a member for taking up his residence out of the permitted territory is without effect where, by the laws of the order, such power is vested only in the general council or board of directors.[11]

§ 2233. Same subject: construction of phrase "settled limits of the United States."—The phrase in a policy "settled limits of the United States," has been construed as meaning the geographical limits or boundaries of the United States, without regard to the fact as to whether such portions are all inhabited or not.[12] The contention was made in this case by the company that this phrase referred to the region of settlements. Upon this point the court said: "What are we to understand by the 'region of settlements,' and when can a man be said to be within or beyond them? How quickly must or how sparsely may any given section of country be populated to come clearly within the scope of these terms? We have in the very heart of this state a vast region almost entirely untenanted by a man, . . . it is far enough beyond the region of settlements, and yet it would be a rather startling proposition man Alliance Ins. Co. 55 W. Va. 351, 47 S. E. 101; Maupin v. Scottish Union National Ins. Co. 53 W. Va. 557, 590, 45 S. E. 1003.

[10] Bennecke v. Connecticut Mutual Life Ins. Co. 105 U. S. 355, 26 L. ed. 990.

Cited in: United States.—Supreme Lodge Knights of Pythias v. Kalinski, 163 U. S. 289, 298, 41 L. ed. 163, 166, 16 Sup. Ct. 1047; Supreme Lodge Knights of Pythias v. Wellenvoss, 119 Fed. 671, 676, 56 C. C. A. 287, 292; Georgia Home Ins. Co. v. Rosenfield, 95 Fed. 358, 368, 37 C. C. A. 96, 106; Hubbard v. Mutual Reserve Fund Life Assoc. 80 Fed. 681, 682; Olsen v. Hunter-Benn, 54 Fed. 530, 532; Ball & Sage Wagon Co. v. Aurora Fire & Marine Ins. Co. 20 Fed. 232, 235.

Georgia.—United Benevolent Soc. v. Freeman, 111 Ga. 355, 360, 36 S. E. 764.

Iowa.—Garretson v. Equitable Mutual Life & Endowment Assoc. 93 Iowa, 402, 412, 61 N. W. 952.

Maryland. — Baltimore Life Ins. Co. v. Howard, 95 Md. 244, 259, 52 Atl. 397.

Michigan.—Moore v. Mutual Reserve Fund Life Assoc. 133 Mich. 526, 533, 95 N. W. 573.

New York.—Wyman v. Phoenix Mutual Life Ins. Co. 45 Hun, 184, 186.

Oregon.—Whigham v. Independent Foresters, 44 Oreg. 553, 554, 75 Pac. 1067.

Utah.—Reed v. Union Central Life Ins. Co. 21 Utah, 295, 310, 61 Pac. 21.

[11] Lane v. Grand Fraternity, 132 Tenn. 235, L.R.A.1915F, 1056, 177 S. W. 941.

[12] Casler v. Connecticut Mutual Life Ins. Co. 22 N. Y. 427 (three judges dissenting).

that anyone who should happen to have such a policy as this, and who for the purposes of relaxation, amusement, or the love of adventure should penetrate that great wilderness, would by that act run the risk of forfeiting all his interest in the policy. . . . Considerations like these seem inevitably to lead to the conclusion that the language of the policy must have been used to indicate the established boundaries of the country, and such, on the whole, I am satisfied is the interpretation that shall be given to them." If an indemnity policy of insurance covers only injuries received "within the United States (not including its parts beyond the seas), Mexico and Canada," there is no liability for an injury to, and the death of, the insured occurring in the Canal Zone on the Isthmus of Panama.[13]

§ 2234. Restriction as to travel: construction of permit to go beyond prescribed limits.—A permit to travel beyond the limits prescribed by the policy is held to be an independent agreement, unless it be indorsed on the policy when the policy is issued, in which case it is considered a part of the contract.[14] Where a permit is couched in unambiguous terms, it must be strictly complied with by the insured.[15] Thus, where a person whose life was insured within the United States had permission to go to California and return home around Cape Horn, or by Vera Cruz, and, being taken sick in California, he returned home by way of Panama and Chagres, without the United States, and soon after died, it was held that the policy was thereby avoided, although there was then no usually traveled route by Vera Cruz, and although he returned the shortest and safest way.[16] If, however, the permit is expressed in language which is not perfectly clear, and a doubt arises, then it is to be construed strictly against the insurer so as to prevent a forfeiture.[17] So where the insured was granted a permit to go to Cuba, "he to take his own risk of epidemics," and while there he died of yellow fever, it was held that as yellow fever was not prevalent during the season in which he died, the company was liable.[18] And an insured

[13] Currie v. Continental Casualty Co. 147 Iowa, 281, 140 Am. St. Rep. 300, 126 N. W. 164.

[14] Rainsford v. Royal Ins. Co. 52 N. Y. 626.

[15] Hathaway v. Trenton Mutual Life Ins. Co. 11 Cush. (65 Mass.) 448; Rainsford v. Royal Ins. Co. 52 N. Y. 626, s. c. 33 N. Y. Sup. Ct. 453.

[16] Hathaway v. Trenton Mutual Life Ins. Co. 11 Cush. (65 Mass.) 448.

[17] Notman v. Anchor Assurance Co. 4 Com. B. (N. S.) 476, 27 L. J. C. P. 275, 4 Jur. N. S. 712; Converse v. Knights Templars' & Masons' Life Indemnity Co. 93 Fed. 148, 60 U. S. App. 288, 28 Ins. L. J. 481, certiorari denied 175 U. S. 726, 44 L. ed. 338, 20 Sup. Ct. 1022.

[18] Pohalski v. Mutual Life Ins. Co. 45 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 504.

person who has a permit to go by sea between certain ports "on first-class decked vessels," does not forfeit his policy by taking a steerage passage.[19] A permit to reside or travel in a prohibited territory, where it is intended to secure a present right or privilege, will, though it is post-dated, operate according to the intent of the parties.[20] If the insured by the terms of the application and the policy is described as residing in a certain locality, he has the right, without further permission, to continue his residence in that place, and the indorsement of a permit in such a case cannot restrict his rights.[1] Where stipulations as to residence and travel in the United States gave permission to reside in settled portions north of a certain parallel of latitude at all seasons of the year, and south of that parallel at all times except during certain months and "to pass as a passenger by the usual routes of public conveyance, to and from any port or place within the foregoing limits" but if he shall "pass beyond or be without the foregoing limits" the policy "shall become null and void," the words "foregoing limits" have the same meaning with reference to all seasons and embrace as a unit all regions in which residence is permitted at any season in both hemispheres. The right to travel is permitted by any of the usual routes of conveyance in or through the region where residence is permitted and is not limited to any part of the year. And "foregoing limits" in the second clause have a wider scope than in the clause preceding as they extend beyond the regions of permitted residence and include the usual routes of travel to and from ports and places in that region. The meaning is that the policy shall be void if assured shall pass beyond or be without the regions in which residence is permitted except to go, as a passenger, by the usual lines of conveyance between ports or places within those regions. The rights "to pass as a passenger by the usual routes of conveyance" does not mean that assured is bound to be in constant conveyance on the line of his journey from start to end, but he is entitled as a traveler to reasonable stops on the way for whatever reasonable purpose consistent with the character of a traveler, whether such stop be for business, pleasure, health, or sickness, but he may not stay on his way long enough to become a sojourner.[2]

§ 2235. Where insured is prevented by sickness from returning within time limited by permit.—There are two cases in New York

[19] Taylor v. Ætna Ins. Co. 13 Gray (79 Mass.) 434.

[20] Walsh v. Ætna Ins. Co. 30 Iowa, 133, 6 Am. Rep. 664.

[1] Forbes v. American Mutual Life Ins. Co. 15 Gray (81 Mass.) 249, 77 Am. Dec. 360.

[2] Converse v. Knight Templars' & Masons' Life Indemnity Co. 93 Fed. 148, 35 C. C. A. 232, 28 Ins. L. J. 481, certiorari denied, 175 U. S. 726, 44 L. ed. 338, 20 Sup. Ct. 1022, 1023, for facts of this case see § 2235 herein.

in which this question has arisen. In the earlier case[3] the facts were as follows: The insured was by an indorsement upon the policy permitted "to reside and travel on land in any part of the United States or by any of the regular steamers, to be north of the south bounds of Virginia by the tenth day of July, 1854." While in Florida, the insured was taken sick on June 11th, and died there on July 20th, being unable at any time during his sickness to return. The company was held liable, on the ground that absolute performance of the condition was excused by sickness, which was the act of God. Chief Justice Bosworth says: "As the policy in question is one upon the life of the deceased, I think the terms of the license or consent should be so construed as not to require him to attempt to return north of the south bounds of Virginia by the 10th of July, when in consequence of sickness suddenly and unexpectedly contracted or developed an attempt to do so would be certain, so far as the human mind can foresee results, to produce the death of the insured. . . . He was taken and became so sick and ill in body as to be unfit and unable to travel and to start on his return home; and continued so until he died. I do not think the consent or license should be so construed as to require him to start in that condition with the certainty that if he did start he would die, in consequence of his sickness and of such acts on his part south of the south bounds of Virginia before the 10th of July, or north of those bounds immediately thereafter; that it could not have been the intention of the parties that the insured, under the state of facts established by the special verdict, should do acts which would make his death inevitable, in order to a proper performance on his part of his duty as prescribed and disclosed in such license and consent." In a later case[4] in the same state the insured, under a permit to go to New Orleans and remain there until July 1, 1870, went to that place, but remained there until his death on March 18, 1872. The plaintiff claimed that the insured became so sick and feeble that he was unable to return north, and consequently such return being rendered impossible by the act of God, he was excused from so doing, and the policy was not avoided. It appeared from the evidence that he was in feeble health when he went south. It did not, however, appear that he was unable at any time before July 1, 1870, to return north. The court, however, did not decide it upon this ground, though it considered it. The basis of the decision was that "he was feeble when he went, and he could not go so far south that he could not return, and, after remaining there until he was too feeble to return, enable the holder of the policy to claim that his return was rendered impossible by the act of God, and that thus the breach of the condition was executed." These two cases are not in conflict. In one the insured left the north in good health and was taken suddenly ill, and was unable to return, while in the other instance it appeared that he had left the north in feeble health. The rule to be drawn from the one case is, that if an insured person in good health, by permit, goes to a locality prohibited by the policy, and while there is taken ill, or becomes unable to return, the policy is not forfeited, as performance is rendered impossible by the act of God. In the other case, which does not deny this rule, it is held that if an insured person, while in feeble health obtains a permit and goes to prohibited localities, he does so at his own risk, and cannot allege that his return is rendered impossible by the act of God.[5] In a Federal case, the contract stipulation as to residence and travel in the United States, gave permission to reside in settled portions north of a certain parallel of latitude at all times of the year and south of that parallel at all times, except during certain months, and "to pass as a passenger by the usual routes of public conveyance, to and from any part or place within the foregoing limits." It also provided that if assured should "pass beyond or be without the foregoing limits" the policy "shall become null and void." It appeared that assured removed from a place in Michigan to W. in the pine regions of Mississippi, a few miles south of the above stated parallel of latitude, but assurer had consented that he should reside in the pine regions of Mississippi subject to the exception that if he should there die of yellow fever it would not be liable upon the policy. It further appeared that being in poor health, assured went, with his wife,

[3] Baldwin v. New York Life Ins. Co. 3 Bosw. (N. Y.) 530.

[4] Evans v. United States Life Ins. Co. 64 N. Y. 304, s. c. 3 Hun (N. Y.) 587, cited in Douglas v. Knickerbocker Life Ins. Co. 83 N. Y. 492, 502, to the point that where an ocean voyage was taken without a permit in violation of the express terms of the policy it was avoided and there was nothing for a court of equity to act upon and relieve from the forfeiture though assured returned in safety to this country.

[5] The Baldwin case first above noted in the text, was cited and relied on by appellant in Wheeler v. Connecticut Mutual Life Ins. Co. 82 N. Y. 543, 37 Am. Rep. 594, and it was declared by the court that it involved no question as to the nonpayment of the premium and had no application to the case before the court, and it was remarked incidentally, and not otherwise, that it was overruled by the Evans case without any evident intent that such brief statement should have any weight as an authority because there was no discussion, and as above stated it was expressly declared that the point was not involved, and the binding force of any statement by the court in its opinion must be limited in its application to the issues before it. In addition said Baldwin case is not mentioned at all by the court in the Evans case, noted in the text, either as being overruled or otherwise.

from his said home in W. to L. B., also in the pine regions of said state, going by the usual route of travel. A few days thereafter, he went from L. B. to New Orleans, to consult a physician, but returned on the same day to L. B. His condition of health, however, grew constantly worse, and shortly thereafter he started, with his wife, to return to his home in W., arriving en route by the usual course of travel, at New Orleans, he went at once to see his physician, and on his advice went to the house of his friend and associate in business, and shortly thereafter died there. It was held, that assured was not bound to be in constant conveyance on the line of his journey from the start to the end; but, like a traveler, he was entitled to stop on the way for whatever reasonable purpose was consistent with the character of a traveler, and as a passenger or traveler is to be expected to do, for any purpose of business, health or pleasure, but that he might not stay on his way so long, and under such circumstances as to become a sojourner, and if by reason of sickness he was compelled to interrupt his journey it could not be said that on that account his policy became void, and whether in this instance the interruption in the journey was improper, was, in the view most favorable to assurer, a question of fact, or of mixed law and fact, to be submitted to the jury on proper instructions.[6]

§ 2236. Prohibiting change of occupation: prohibited occupations: hazardous and extra hazardous: construction of clauses as to.—A frequent condition in a life policy is one prohibiting the insured from engaging in a more hazardous occupation or employment than the one which he is engaged in at the time of the issuance of the policy, or in contemplation of which the risk is assumed. This prohibition as to a change of occupation does not refer to work which the insured may be merely temporarily or casually engaged in, and such work will not avoid the policy. It refers to work which the insured may be employed in as a regular or usual business.[7] So engaging temporarily, accidentally, or casually in another business, or vocation, with no intention of abandoning that specified in the contract, but to return thereto, does not con-

[6] Converse v. Knight Templars' & Masons' Life Indemnity Co. 93 Fed. 148, 35 C. C. A. 232, 28 Ins. L. J. 481, certiorari denied 175 U. S. 726, 44 L. ed. 338, 20 Sup. Ct. 1022.

[7] Stone v. United States Casualty Co. 34 N. J. L. 371; North American Life & Accident Ins. Co. v. Burrows, 69 Pa. St. 43, 8 Am. Rep. 212. See also Guiltinan v. Metropolitan Life Ins. Co. 69 Vt. 469, 38 Atl. 315, 27 Ins. L. J. 93. Compare Malicki v. Chicago Guaranty Fund Life Soc. 119 Mich. 151, 77 N. W. 690, 28 Ins. L. J. 216 (both the Vermont case and this case are considered under § 2236b herein).

Occupation of insured: loss of time; change of occupation, see § 2870 herein.

stitute a change of business or vocation within the intent of those words in a condition requiring notice to and consent of the society in case of such change to prevent a forfeiture.[8] And the rule, that a temporary change of occupation, as where one engages incidentally or occasionally in other pursuits, does not avoid the policy,[9] applies where a foreman, in charge of construction of a lock or dam, occasionally, and in connection therewith, did diving work inspecting a cofferdam, but received no extra pay therefor, and it was held that there was no such change of occupation as avoided the policy.[10] So a person who for a short time engages in hunting for a recreation is not engaged even temporarily in a prohibited occupation even though the policy prohibits engaging temporarily or otherwise in certain occupations.[11] And it is held no breach of such a condition that the assured, who was a teacher

[8] Taylor v. Illinois Commercial Men's Assoc. 84 Neb. 799, 24 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1174n, 122 N. W. 41.

On temporary pursuit of other activities as change of occupation within meaning of accident insurance policy, see note in 24 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1174.

On effect of temporary violations of condition as to occupation in policy of life insurance, ceasing before loss, see note in 50 L.R.A.(N.S.) 592.

On provision for forfeiture or reduction of benefit in event of injury while engaged in more hazardous occupation, or variations of that provision, as applied to occasional or temporary acts, see note in L.R.A.1915D, 312.

[9] Southern Ins. Co. v. Anderson, 130 Tenn. 482, 172 S. W. 318, 45 Ins. L. J. 393; Gottfredson v. German Commercial Accident Co. 218 Fed. 582, 134 C. C. A. 319, 45 Ins. L. J. 525. See § 2870 herein.

[10] Southern Ins. Co. v. Anderson, 130 Tenn. 482, 172 S. W. 318, 45 Ins. L. J. 393. The court said: "The rule is that, where one casually or incidentally engages in activities other than those immediately connected with his regular employment, such a temporary change of his ordinary pursuits is not a change of occupation, within the prohibition of insurance policies. While there are provisions in the policy sued on against a change in occupation to one more hazardous, such provisions will not be held to apply to a case like this." —Green, J., citing and considering:

Illinois.—Union Mutual Accident Assoc. v. Frohard, 134 Ill. 228, 10 L.R.A. 383, 23 Am. St. Rep. 664, 25 N. E. 642; Travelers' Preferred Accident Assoc. v. Kelsey, 46 Ill. App. 371.

Iowa.—Holiday v. American Mutual Accident Assoc. 103 Iowa, 178, 64 Am. St. Rep. 170, 72 N. W. 448.

Michigan.—Hess v. Preferred Masonic Mutual Accident Assoc. 112 Mich. 196, 30 L.R.A. 444, 70 N. W. 460.

New Jersey.—Stone v. United States Casualty Co. 34 N. J. Law, 371.

North Carolina. — Hoffman v. Standard Life Co. 127 N. Car. 337, 37 N. E. 466.

Pennsylvania — North American Life & Accident Ins. Co. v. Burroughs, 69 Pa. 43, 8 Am. Rep. 212.

Wisconsin. — Stevens v. Modern Woodmen of America, 127 Wis. 606, 107 N. W. 8, 7 Ann. Cas. 566, and note to Taylor v. Illinois Commercial Men Assoc. 84 Neb. 799, 122 N. W. 41, 24 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1174, supra.

[11] Union Mutual Accident Assoc. v. Frohard, 134 Ill. 228, 23 Am. St. Rep. 664, 10 L.R.A. 383, 25 N. E. 642.

and so described in the policy, occupied himself while out of professional employment in superintending the erection of a couple of buildings designed for his own use. Such superintending did not make him a builder.[12]

§ 2236a. Same subject.—A condition in a fraternal benefit certificate is reasonable and binding which classifies certain occupations as hazardous and provides that if any one of them is entered upon after the certificate is issued, the liability of the society shall be limited or extinguished, and also exempting the society from any and all liability in case of certain hazardous occupations on account of death directly traceable thereto.[13] So engaging in a prohibited occupation in violation of the conditions avoids the policy.[14] But the liability of a beneficial association may be limited to an amount rated according to the hazardous occupation in which assured was engaged at the time of his injury.[15] And unless a policy by express terms restricts the company's liability to accidents occurring in that occupation in which the insured was engaged when the insurance was effected, a change in occupation, as to that of a brakeman from that of a switchman, will not avoid the policy.[16]

If a person procures a permit to engage in an occupation prohibited by the policy, and continues in such occupation beyond the time allowed by the permit, the policy will be avoided.[17]

It is held that a certificate of a benefit society is not rendered void by a change of occupation to one which is denominated as extra hazardous under a by-law of the society, where certain conditions [12] Stone v. United States Casualty Co. 34 N. J. L. 371.

On what amounts to a breach of warranty as to business profession or occupation of the insured in a policy of life or accident insurance, see note in L.R.A.1916F, 1030.

As to time covered by provision or representation with respect to the habits or occupation of insured, see note in 5 L.R.A.(N.S.) 283.

[13] Modern Woodmen of America v. Weekley, 42 Okla. 25, 139 Pac. 1138.

As to amendments or change of by-laws in such cases, see §§ 379d et seq. herein.

[14] North Western Mutual Life Ins. Co. v. Ammerman, 119 Ill. 329, 59 Am. Rep. 799, 10 N. E. 225.

[15] Railway Officials & Employees Accident Assoc. v. Bradley, 97 Ill. App. 355. See also Union Mutual Accident Assoc. v. Frohard, 134 Ill. 228, 10 L.R.A. 383, 23 Am. St. Rep. 664, 25 N. E. 642.

[16] Provident Life Ins. Co. v. Fennell, 49 Ill. 180.

[17] Ayers v. New England Mutual Life Ins. Co. 109 Mass. 430. If a case is fairly left to the jury, a new trial will not be granted for "not directing the jury that the deceased was engaged at the time of his death in braking cars, which occupation was more hazardous than that of a shoemaker," the deceased being described as a shoemaker in his application, and his death being caused by accident while braking cars: Day v. Dominion Safety Fund Life Assoc. (N. B. S. C. 1894) 14 Can. L. T. 349.

are specified in the certificate and application, for a violation of which the contract shall be void, and this is not one of the conditions named.[18] If a condition in a fraternal benefit certificate totally exempts the society from any and all liability on account of the death of a member directly traceable to employment in a classified hazardous occupation such as "linemen in the employment of electric light company, or power or electric light company," and such condition prohibits entering upon said hazardous occupation at any time after the certificate is issued, entering upon such hazardous occupation does not render the certificate void, but the society is exempt from liability on account of death of the member by accident or disease directly traceable to said hazardous employment; the certificate however remaining in full force and effect, and the associations liability continuing from any other cause.[19]

§ 2236b. Engaging in liquor or saloon business.—It may be stated as a general rule, subject to certain qualifications or exceptions, principally dependent upon such questions as the form thereof, or amendments thereto, or changes therein,[20] that a by-law prohibiting engaging in the retail liquor business is not unreasonable.[1] And it is held that provisions are not self-executing which prohibit the admission and retention as members of those engaging in the sale of intoxicating drinks.[2] So it is held that a by-law of a benefit society providing that any member engaging in the saloon business, shall stand suspended from that date and forfeit all interest in the beneficiary fund, operates, without any formal suspension or notice, to forfeit the certificate of one who engaged in such business before the passage of the by-law, where at the time he became a member, the by-laws prohibited members from engaging in the saloon business, but provided in such case for formal suspension and notice thereof, and his application for membership contained a stipulation that he would comply with all the laws, rules, and usages of the association which were then in force or which might thereafter be adopted, since the new by-law creates no new ground of forfeiture but operates merely to repeal the provisions of the prior by-law as to the manner of proceeding in case of a violation of rules.[3] The determination of this last point as to self-execution

[18] Hobbs v. Iowa Mutual Benefit Assoc. 82 Iowa, 107, 31 Am. St. Rep. 466, 11 L.R.A. 299, 20 Ins. L. J. 434, 47 N. W. 983.

[19] Modern Woodmen of America v. Weekley, 42 Okla. 25, 139 Pac. 1138.

[20] See §§ 368 et seq., 379e herein.

[1] Grand Lodge Ancient Order United Workmen v. Burns, 84 Conn. 356, 80 Atl. 157, 40 Ins. L. J. 1676, 1682.

[2] Steinert v. American Brotherhood of Carpenters & Joiners of America, 91 Minn. 189, 97 N. W. 668.

[3] Moerschbaecher v. Supreme Council Royal League, 188 Ill. 9, 52 L.R.A. 281, 59 N. E. 17. Compare § 379e herein.

and provisions however, is dependent upon the same principles as govern in other cases of forfeiture, which depend largely upon the wording of the particular condition and the intent of the parties as evidenced by their contract, as is instanced by provisions expressly declaring that the member shall be ipso facto suspended from all rights in the society or order, if he has entered, or shall thereafter enter, the retail liquor business.[4]

In applying, so far as are deducible from the decisions, such rules as govern this prohibitory condition there are in general three classes of cases: those wherein the prohibition relates to the admission and retention of members; those which preclude such subsequent business or occupation; and those which determine whether certain persons and their occupation come within the prohibition.

The adoption, by a fraternal insurance order, of a by-law declaring that no person shall be admitted or retained as a member who is engaged in the sale of intoxicating liquors, does not, in the absence of a specific provision to that effect, avoid the beneficiary certificate of a member who is already engaged in that business in a state where it is not unlawful, who continues therein, and against whom no action is taken.[5] And a provision in a life policy that the insured shall not be connected with the liquor business, unless so specified in his application or a written permit be given, refers wholly to the insured's occupation after the contract of insurance has taken effect.[6] So it is decided that a by-law of a fraternal order which provides that any member who shall, after the date of its adoption, have entered, or who shall thereafter enter, into the business of selling intoxicating liquors, shall stand suspended from his rights to participate in the beneficial fund, and that his certificate shall become void from the date of his engaging in such occupation, does not in terms, apply to a member who, before the adoption of such by-law, was engaged in such business, and who has remained in it continuously thereafter.[7] But re-entering the retail liquor business is within a by-law suspending all who have entered, or thereafter enter such business.[8]

By-laws of a fraternal society excluding from membership or

[4] Meister v. Boetcher (Pa.) 59 Pitts. L. J. 391.

[5] Grand Lodge Ancient Order United Workmen v. Haddock, 72 Kan. 35, 1 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1064n, 82 Pac. 583.

On effect of adoption of by-laws by fraternal insurance order upon benefit certificates already issued, see note in 1 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1065.

[6] McGurk v. Metropolitan Life Ins. Ins. Co. 56 Conn. 528, 1 L.R.A. 563, 16 Atl. 263.

[7] Grand Lodge Ancient Order United Workmen v. Haddock, 72 Kan. 35, 1 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1064n, 82 Pac. 583.

[8] Meister v. Boetcher (Pa.) 59 Pitts. L. J. 391.

benefits those engaged in the sale of intoxicating liquors, either as proprietor or agent, apply to an administrator who operates a saloon for the benefit of a deceased member's estate.[9] But an employee in a bonded warehouse engaged in bottling aged whisky is not within a provision in a by-law of a mutual benefit society making void certificates of all members engaged in the manufacture or sale of intoxicating liquor as a beverage in the capacity of proprietor, stockholder, agent, or employee.[10] Nor does one who owns only a half interest in a saloon "keep" it within the meaning of a condition prohibiting such keeping, and providing that only the reserve value of the policy should be paid in case of his death during or by reason of the violation of the condition, and this is so even though he had kept a saloon up to the time of becoming an invalid.[11] Nor is a person, who does not himself personally sell or serve liquors, within the meaning of a prohibition specifying a "barkeeper or other person who sells or serves intoxicating liquors." [12] This point involves also that of temporary or occasional occupation, considered under a preceding section [13] so the word "engaged" means "occupied" and does not relate to an occasional act outside of one's regular employment, and this applies to an employee of a hotel, who is employed generally to do what he is called upon to do and who occasionally, and as no part of his general employment, but not out of the ordinary line of his duties, by direction of his employer or otherwise, furnishes the guests with intoxicating liquors and receives pay for them. In such case he is not engaged in the sale thereof. If, however, he sells alcoholic beverages as a part of his regular employment to guests as they called for them, he would be engaged in such sale.[14] But as bearing upon this question, one who attends bar while his regular bartender is absent at his meals and on other occasions, is held to falsify a representation that his bar trade is attended to exclusively by his clerk.[15]

[9] National Council Junior Order United American Mechanics' v. Thompson, 153 Ky. 636, 45 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1148, 156 S. W. 132.

As to who is engaged in the liquor business within the meaning of an insurance contract, see note in 45 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1144.

[10] Brackett v. Modern Brotherhood of America, 154 Ky. 340, 45 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1144, 157 S. W. 690.

[11] Union Central Life Ins. Co. v. Hughes, Admr. 110 Ky. 26, 22 Ky. L. Rep. 1549, 60 S. W. 850.

[12] Supreme Council Royal Arcanum v. Urban, 137 Ill. App. 292.

[13] § 2236 herein.

[14] Guiltinan v. Metropolitan Life Ins. Co. 69 Vt. 469, 38 Atl. 315, 27 Ins. L. J. 93.

[15] Malicki v. Chicago Guaranty Fund Life Soc. 119 Mich. 151, 77 N. W. 690, 28 Ins. L. J. 216. See § 2074 herein.

§ 2236c. Prohibited occupations: waiver and estoppel.—If assured in a fraternal order engages in prohibited occupation of saloon keeper, the breach may be waived by slight evidence of an intention to do so, as where knowledge of the fact is shown to have been had by the supreme lodge and a forfeiture by reason of the same act cannot be thereafter enforced, even though the statute restricts the power of subordinate lodges to waive forfeitures unless the supreme lodge has notice of the breach.[16] So an acceptance and retention by officers of a grand lodge, of assessments paid, with knowledge that the member had forfeited his rights by engaging in the liquor business operates as an estoppel against claiming a forfeiture even though it is ultra vires under the by-laws for the association to waive forfeitures.[17] But the receipt of assessments after re-entering the retail liquor business contrary to the prohibitory condition, does not prevent suspension of the member as stipulated.[18] And a fraternal society is not estopped from setting up a breach of a condition against engaging in the liquor business, by reason of the fact that the local lodge had knowledge of the facts constituting the breach, where said local lodge in the application made by it for the certificate agreed to make no claim for benefits on the death of anyone engaging in such business, and the certificate was conditioned to pay the local lodge the specified benefit only on condition that the member was not engaged in said business.[19] And where it constitutes no part of the duty of the recorder of a local lodge to decide when a certificate was annulled, nor to ascertain by inquiries or otherwise outside the lodge when not engaged in his official duties in what business the members were engaged, and he is not required to record the fact that a member was engaged in the retail liquor business or to report the same to the grand lodge, the receipt assessments from insured up to the time of his death does not preclude the right to enforce a forfeiture by reason of the knowledge on the part of said recorder of the occupation of assured.[20] If an occupation is specially classified as hazardous and prohibited under a condition in a fraternal benefit certificate which

[16] Thompson v. Modern Brotherhood of America, 189 Mo. App. 15, 176 S. W. 706; Laws 1911, p. 292; act March 30, 1911, sec. 22.

[17] Peterson v. Grand Lodge Ancient Order United Workmen, 36 S. Dak. 539, L.R.A.1916F, 751, 156 N. W. 70. See also Taylor v. American Patriots, 152 Ill. App. 578.

On waiver of provision as to change of occupation by continued receipt of dues, see notes in 27 L.R.A.(N.S.) 446, and L.R.A.1916F, 755.

[18] Meister v. Boetcher (Pa.) 59 Pitts. L. J. 391.

[19] National Council Junior Order United American Mechanics v. Thompson, 153 Ky. 636, 45 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1148, 156 S. W. 132.

[20] Grand Lodge Ancient Order United Workmen v. Burns, 84 Conn. 356, 80 Atl. 157, 40 Ins. L. J. 1676.

also exempts the society from any and all liability on account of death directly traceable to employment in such hazardous occupation, when entered into after the policy is issued and the member's death is so traceable the society is not estopped from denying liability by reason of the fact that the member's dues and assessments for a permissible occupation are accepted and retained up to and until the time of the death.[1]

§ 2237. Prohibition as to entering military or naval service.—If a provision is inserted in a life policy that it shall be void in case the insured shall enter the military or naval service without the consent of the company, such a stipulation includes such service as will render the insured liable to duty as a combatant, and has been held not to include a mere clerical occupation, as that of a clerk in the office of an adjutant-general who does not engage in an active service against the enemy.[2] So also it was held that service under the military authorities in the construction of a bridge was not within the meaning of such a provision.[3] If, however, the insured engages in military service in violation of the policy conditions it will be avoided although the service may be involuntary.[4]

§ 2237a. Same subject: subsequently enacted prohibitory law by successor society.—In a California case which involved as a controlling point the binding force of a by-law subsequently enacted by a successor or assignee society rather than the question of a noncompliance with a prohibition as to entering the military or naval service, it is decided that, where said order after assured became a mem-

[1] Modern Woodmen of America v. Weekley, 42 Okla. 25, 139 Pac. 1138.

[2] New York Life Ins. Co. v. Hendren, 24 Gratt. (Va.) 536, 540.

[3] Welts v. Connecticut Mutual Life Ins. Co. 48 N. Y. 34, 8 Am. Rep. 518.

[4] Dillard v. Manhattan Ins. Co. 44 Ga. 119, 9 Am. Rep. 167. In this case one of the conditions on which the policy was to become void, was that if assured should enter "into any military or naval service whatever, the militia not in actual service excepted," another condition was as to nonpayment of premiums. Assurer refused payment claiming that the policy was of no force because of a breach of the conditions. Upon demurrer the cause was dismissed and judgment was affirmed. It was urged by counsel for the plaintiff in error that the war excused payment of premiums, which were unpaid between 1862 and March 1866, and that when the war ended the contract revived, and that being in the military service was no breach, because it was compulsory and that the Post Quartermaster's place, to which assured was appointed, and which was accepted to avoid conscription, did not increase the risk and was immaterial. These points were in issue and contested. But the court, per McCay, J., while declaring that, "We recognize fully the doctrine contended for by the plaintiff in error," discussed only the effect of nonpayment of the premiums because of the war and the illegality of such payment by reason of the act of Congress, and as above stated dismissed the case and affirmed the judgment on demurrer sustaining thereby the ground of demurrer, including that with relation to entering the military service.

ber and after it had obtained a new charter, assuming all the liabilities and obligations of the order of which assured was a member and without his knowledge or consent, enacted a law or rule prohibiting engaging in the army or navy service in time of war, assured was not bound thereby and owed no duty or obligation to the new corporation of the existence of which he knew nothing, even though he had agreed to be governed by thereafter enacted laws of the original order, and therefore a judgment for a recovery for the amount of said certificate was affirmed although assured had entered into active military service of the United States and was killed in the Philippines at the hands of Spanish forces.[5]

[5] Richter v. Supreme Lodge Knights of Pythias, 137 Cal. 8, 69 Pac. 483, 31 Ins. L. J. 1060. It was declared, per curiam: "It appears that the charter of the corporation existing when Richter became a member had not expired either by limitation or dissolution, when the new corporation was formed. Plaintiff contends that defendant, having assumed all obligations of the corporation whose certificate he held, could not, without his consent, adopt any law affecting or forfeiting his contract as a member of the existing corporation; that defendant is a different entity, and, while the old organization might transfer its funds to the new upon the latter agreeing to pay its obligations, it could not delegate power to make laws as to existing contracts. Defendant's only reply is that, where one seeks the benefits under a contract, he must first perform all of the obligations and conditions devolving upon him. But Richter's obligation was 'compliance with all the laws governing this rank (endowment rank) now in force, or that may hereafter be enacted by the Supreme Lodge Knights of Pythias of the world.' He did not agree to comply with all the laws governing this rank which some other corporation, as assignee of the certificate, might enact. Richter did not have actual knowledge or notice that defendant existed, nor that his obligation had been assigned to defendant, nor that any law had been passed by defendant forfeiting his certificate should he enter active military service in time of war. How can he, as a member of the endowment rank under the old corporation, be held to constructive notice of laws passed by the new corporation, of whose existence he was in entire ignorance? How can he be held to have forfeited his certificate for an act which was not forbidden under his contract? How, in conscience, can defendant, as assignee of the contract, claim a forfeiture because of Richter's violation of a condition which the assignee imposed without his knowledge or consent? It seems to us too plain for argument that, before the successor in interest of these obligations held by the old company could pass laws affecting their substance, the holders of certificates should, by some act, or by some conduct, consent to be governed by the new company, and should agree to be bound by its laws. We do not think Richter was bound by the law now sought to be enforced, of which he had no knowledge, and that was passed by a corporation to which he owed no duty or obligation. Defendant assumed and agreed to pay the policy, but Richter agreed to nothing with defendant beyond his original obligation to the corporation with which he contracted. The correctness of this view seems to us too obvious to call for further comment."

§ 2237b. Same subject: armed resistance or insurrection in territory of United States.—Where liability was limited to the reserve on the policy in case of death where notice was not given and an extra premium paid for war hazard at the time the risk was incurred under a provision also permitting insured to serve in the military or naval service of the United States in time of war by giving notice and paying an extra premium for war risk, it was held that the company was not liable for more than said reserve, where insured, without paying the required extra premium, enlisted in the service of the United States and was killed on the island of Mindanao, one of the Philippines, after those islands became by treaty with Spain a part of the territory of the United States, and while they were in a state of insurrection against our government, said hostile opposition being in the nature of a civil war beginning by insurrection, said insurrection not having ended, so far as the island of Mindanao was concerned at the time when insured was there killed, and, therefore, the peril to which insured was exposed as a soldier was increased in the service of the United States. It was claimed that the place where assured was killed was in a region where there was no armed resistance against the forces of the United States, but the court decided as above.[6]

§ 2238. Change in possession, title, or interest.—The word "interest" in the clause as to change of interest, title, or possession, is limited to an insurance of an interest less than ownership of the title,[7] that is, it has application only where the insured owns and insures an interest less than title, and has no application where the insured owns the full title.[8] And where the policy provides that it shall be void if any change takes place in the interest, title, or pos-

See chapter as to change of by-laws, amendments, etc., §§ 377 et seq. herein.

As to change of plan of company or society, consolidation, merger, etc., see §§ 350m et seq. herein.

[6] La Rue v. Kansas Mutual Life Ins. Co. 68 Kan. 539, 75 Pac. 494, 33 Ins. L. J. 370. Another point decided was that the court would take judicial notice that said islands became a part of our territory under the treaty with Spain of Dec. 10, 1898, and also that the insurrection had not ended in the island of Mindanao in 1902.

[7] Pomeroy v. Aetna Ins. Co. 86 Kan. 214, 38 L.R.A.(N.S.) 142n, 120 Pac. 344, 41 Ins. L. J. 475; Garner v. Milwaukee Mechanics' Ins. Co. 73 Kan. 127, 4 L.R.A.(N.S.) 654, 117 Am. St. Rep. 460, 84 Pac. 717.

[8] Garner v. Milwaukee Mechanics' Ins. Co. 73 Kan. 127, 4 L.R.A.(N.S.) 654, 117 Am. St. Rep. 460, 84 Pac. 717.

As to the validity of this provision it is said that: "It may be admitted that such stipulations and provisions against change of interest, title and possession as the policy in question contains have been upheld by this court:" German Fire Ins. Co. v. Duncan, 140 Ky. 27, 130 S. W. 804, 39 Ins. L. J. 1598, 1602, Clay, C., citing McKinney v. Western Assurance Co. 97 Ky. 479, 17 Ky. L. Rep. 325, 30 S. W. 1004.

session of the subject of insurance, such provision has reference to change subsequent to the time of effecting the insurance.[9] If the policy is conditioned to be void in case of any change in title or possession, a conveyance by deed absolute, which is in fact a mortgage, in order to enable the mortgagor's father to obtain a loan, is not such a change in title or possession as will avoid the policy.[10] And an increase of the risk or hazard is not shown by the mere fact of the levy of attachments and executions upon property.[11] But leasing the property and surrendering possession to the lessee is a change in the possession.[12] If a policy is conditioned to be void in case "any change takes place in the interest, title, or possession of the subject of insurance, whether by legal process or judgment, or by voluntary act of the insured, or otherwise," an assignment for the benefit of the creditor will avoid the policy.[13]

§ 2239. Effect of temporary increase of risk: temporary violation of condition.—Is the policy rendered absolutely void from that instant by a temporary increase of risk, or is it merely suspended during such temporary increase, again reviving, without the mutual consent of the parties, upon the cessation of such temporary increase? Must the increase of risk exist at the time of loss, irrespective of the fact whether the loss is occasioned thereby or not? The difficulty of formulating any positive rule governing this point is apparent from the decisions and opinions given in the note below. This question is, in reality, independent of the consideration whether a breach of condition or warranty avoids the policy from the in-

What does and does not amount to an alienation, sale, transfer, change of title, see §§ 2290, 2291 herein.

On contract to convey as breach of condition against change in title or interest, see note in 3 L.R.A.(N.S.) 107.

On delivery of deed in escrow as such change, see note in 38 L.R.A. (N.S.) 142.

[9] Morotock Ins. Co. v. Rodefer, 92 Va. 747, 53 Am. St. Rep. 84, 24 S. E. 93.

[10] German Ins. Co. v. Gibe, 162 Ill. 251, 44 N. E. 490.

On mortgage as affecting change of title or interest in insured property, see note in 38 L.R.A. 562.

[11] Herman v. Katz, 101 Tenn. 118, 41 L.R.A. 700, 47 S. W. 86. See §§ 2276 et seq. herein.

On levy of execution, attachment, or other process upon insured property as change in interest, title, or possession, see note in 24 L.R.A. (N.S.) 803.

[12] Wenzel v. Commercial Ins. Co. 67 Cal. 438, 7 Pac. 817. See Planters' Mutual Ins. Assoc. v. Dewberry, 69 Ark. 295, 86 Am. St. Rep. 195, 62 S. W. 1047, 30 Ins. L. J. 913, 918.

[13] Orr v. Hanover Fire Ins. Co. 158 Ill. 149, 49 Am. St. Rep. 146, 41 N. E. 859. See § 2341 herein.

On effect of bankruptcy and insolvency proceedings or assignment for benefit of creditors on fire insurance, see note in 15 L.R.A.(N.S.) 827.

On sale of insured property by judicial proceedings as change in title, interest, or possession, see note in 24 L.R.A.(N.S.) 807.

On judgment as change of interest to title, see note in 50 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1164.

stant of the breach, except where a breach of such condition also involves an increase of the risk. The most important factor is, What is meant by a temporary increase of risk?[14] Has the word "temporary" a mere reference to time, or to a substantial increase materially enlarging the risk to the injury of the assurer, or is the injury to assurer of importance? or does the word "temporary" have reference to any increase of risk not existing at the time of loss. Again, it would seem a pertinent inquiry whether the increase of risk was such a substantial one as that the insurer might have forfeited the policy at the time, had he been aware of it. If the increase is of such a character as to justify a forfeiture at the time, can it not be justly held that the insurer is injured thereby if the policy be deemed merely suspended, and the insurer is subsequently compelled to pay the amount of the insurance, simply because, without his fault, he had no knowledge at the time that his right to declare a forfeiture existed? Is this injury, if it be one, to the insurer offset by his nonliability during the existence of the increase of risk? Irrespective of the question of the breach of condition, it would seem that a mere temporary increase of risk can rarely be such a substantial, material increase as that the insurer might, upon the ground of increase of risk alone, have avoided the policy had he known the facts at the time. Therefore, time is an important factor, as well as the factors of substantial and material increase, since in determining the latter points the duration of the increase would in most cases have a bearing of greater or less weight, according to the circumstances. Again, the injury to the insurer cannot necessarily and of itself determine whether there is a substantial, material increase of risk. And we are inclined to the opinion that whatever temporary injury to the insurer may arise from a mere temporary, unsubstantial, and immaterial increase of risk, it is offset by the nonliability of the insurer in case of loss arising during said time. In this connection it may be added that if it be true that something more than a mere temporary increase of risk is necessary to justify a forfeiture, then the risk is merely suspended, and the question of revival of a forfeited policy is unimportant. Again, it may reasonably be argued that if the words of the contract are clear and unambiguous, the courts ought not to ingraft by construction upon the express terms of the policy a contract which the parties themselves have failed to incorporate, and which no legitimate rules of construction will show to have been intended, for conditions are not to be enlarged or extended in favor of assured or assurer contrary to the plain import of the words used.

[14] Temporary is defined thus: "1. Lasting for a time only; 2. Existing or continuing for a time only; 3. Not permanent:" Century Dictionary; Webster's Dictionary; Webster's New International Dictionary. "1. Lasting for a time only; 2. Transient; 3. Not in perpetuity:" Stormouth's Dictionary (Harper's, 1885). "1. Lasting for a time only; 2. Intended to be used for a time only; 3. Not permanent:" Standard Dictionary (Funk & Wagnalls, 1895). "Temporary removal with intention to return and reoccupy same as a homestead." Construed in Blackburn v. Lake Shore Traffic Co. 90 Wis. 362, 366, 63 N. W. 289,—Winslow, J.

We conclude, therefore, that the weight of authority sustains the following: (1) that a mere temporary increase of risk, or a mere casual or accidental violation of the exact terms of the policy, operates only to suspend the risk: (2) if a loss occurred during such suspension, the insurer would be released; (3) a mere temporary increase of risk would rarely be a substantial, material one; (4) the temporary increase of risk must be such a material and substantial increase as that the insurer could, had he known of it at the time, have declared a forfeiture therefor; (5) if it is a sufficiently substantial and material increase to justify a forfeiture at the time, the policy is avoided, and the increase of risk has become something more than a temporary one; (6) in such case as this last the question whether the increase of risk has ceased to exist at the time of loss is unimportant, unless involved in the question whether the policy has been revived by consent or waiver; (7) in determining whether the violation is a substantial and material one, the fact that it extends continuously over a considerable period of time ought to be an important factor, although there might be a mere temporary increase of risk occurring at infrequent intervals. (8) If the temporary increase has contributed to the loss the policy would be avoided. In such case it would be an increase material to the risk.[15] Certain standard forms of policies, however, qualify conditions as to forfeiting the policy for a breach thereof, by the proviso that the loss occurs during the continuance of the breach, or that such breach shall be the primary or contributory cause of the loss, or that assured may establish that the failure to observe and comply with such provisions and conditions did not contribute

[15] See Ohio Farmers' Ins. Co. v. Burget, 65 Ohio St. 119, 55 L.R.A. 125, 61 N. E. 712, 31 Ins. L. J. 75.

On effect of temporary condition which ceased before loss under general provision against increase of risk or specific provision against certain conditions, see notes in 10 L.R.A. (N.S.) 736; 28 L.R.A.(N.S.) 593; 32 L.R.A.(N.S.) 340; and 48 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1221.

As to distinction between forfeitures and suspension, see Adair v. Southern Mutual Ins. Co. 107 Ga. 297, 45 L.R.A. 204, 73 Am. St. Rep. 122, 33 S. E. 78, 28 Ins. L. J. 510, 515.—Lewis, J.

The question as to forms of warranty, distinctions, the effect of a breach and non-revival of the policy are discussed under the consideration of that subject. See §§ 1949 et seq., 1970–1976 herein.

to the loss, or in case of the property being vacant and unoccupied and so continuing until the time of fire.[16]

[16] Cronin v. Fire Association of Philadelphia, 123 Mich. 277, 6 Det. L. N. 1048, 82 N. W. 45, 29 Ins. L. J. 564, considered under § 2240 herein.

Opinions of text-writers.—Mr. Wood is of opinion that "while it is true that the tendency of the cases, and perhaps justly, is to hold that the policy is only suspended, and not in fact vitiated, by the increase of risk during its continuance, and that it is revived as an operative instrument when such increase in the hazard ceases, yet it is not necessary that the loss should have resulted from such hazardous use:" 1 Wood on Fire Ins. (2d ed.) 593. Mr. Biddle says: "It is submitted that logically a recovery cannot be had on the policy if the risk be increased, though such increase may not exist at the loss. . . . Though in certain courts, apparently, a temporary increase not existing at loss will not avoid. But in any event it has been held that a clause against an increase of risk within the control of the insured contemplates a permanent increase by an act of the insured, and will not apply to a mere act of negligence, as an omission to repair an airpump: 2 Biddle on Ins. (ed. 1893) 714. Mr. Ostrander, referring to the condition in reference to occupancy, says, substantially, that occupation at the time of the loss is sufficient, but adds: "This construction, while just, is somewhat strained and exceedingly liberal toward the insured. When the policy stipulates that it shall become void if the building insured is left without an occupant, it is not clearly apparent how the dead policy can be again restored to life without some affirmative act of the insurer. While it appears to us that this is the better legal view, it must be admitted that it is sustained by no equitable consideration:" Ostrander on Fire Ins. (ed. 1892) p. 330, sec. 141. Mr. Griswold states this rule, which bears upon the subject: "The change in the occupancy of a building must be a permanent one; a mere temporary exercise therein of a more hazardous trade or vocation will not affect the validity of the policy, in the absence of specific stipulations against such temporary occupancy." He also says: "Where there are no express stipulations in the policy to the contrary, unauthorized use of the property after insurance, by which the hazard is increased, suspends the insurance during the continuance of such 'unauthorized use:'" Griswold's Fire Underwriters (ed. 1872) pp. 372, 373, secs. 1117, 1121. Mr. Parsons considers that the doctrine is doubtful that the policy may attach as soon as a ship becomes seaworthy, if the deficiency is temporary and easily remedied, but that if the policy has attached and there is a breach of this warranty, as in case of the master's neglect to repair in the first port, such breach may only suspend the liability; that the insurers are discharged for a loss from the unseaworthiness during such suspension, but not for a loss from other causes: 1 Parsons on Marine Ins. (ed. 1868) 377, 378, 381–83. This statement must, however, be considered in relation to the point whether the implied warranty of seaworthiness is extended beyond the commencement of the voyage. See c. 62, on seaworthiness, herein. Mr. Phillips' opinion has been noted in part under the quotation above given from Allen, J., in Hinckley v. Germania Ins. Co. 140 Mass. 38, 54 Am. Rep. 445, 1 N. E. 737. There may, however, be added as pertinent the following general rule stated by that author, "namely, that the forfeiture is to be extended only far enough to put the other party, that is, the insurer in this case, in the same condition as he would have been had the stipulation been

§ 2240. Same subject: authorities.—In view of the above conclusion the following authorities are pertinent. A change of use means a permanent change or habitual use, as distinguished from a single circumstance of change or use, providing the loss does not result therefrom.[17] So in a Pennsylvania case it was held that a change of the use of the property after the contract, which increases the hazard, suspends the insurance during its continuance.[18] There was an express stipulation in this case, but the court says: "Without this stipulation, such is the nature of the contract." Under an Ohio case where the clause is "if any change takes place in the location of the property" the policy shall become void unless upon written consent, etc., of the insurer, and the property is removed without such consent, assured is not exempt if the hazard of the new location is not operative at the time of loss, so that if after the first removal there is another change of location with assurer's consent complied with. This rule will always operate in favor of the insurer and against the assured, but only commensurately with the noncompliance on the part of the latter:" 1 Phillips on Ins. (3d ed.) p. 541, sec. 975. Mr. Richards says: "Where, as in case of the New York Standard fire policy, it is expressly provided that the entire contract shall be avoided by breach of a condition or warranty, it is held by the weight of reason and by the better authority, that a temporary breach avoids . . . though in many courts the opposite view prevails." And he notes also that certain statutes and other standard policies permit forfeiture only for loss during the breach, etc. Richards on Ins. (3d ed.) p. 309, sec. 247. Mr. Cooley says: "It is a principle established by weight of authority that a temporary breach of a stipulation or condition in a policy, to which there is not attached a specific forfeiture, and which breach did not exist at the time of the fire and of the loss, will not defeat a recovery upon the policy." Although he states that the application of the principle to the particular conditions of the policy is difficult and that the law is unsettled. 2 Cooley Briefs on the Law of Ins. (ed. 1905) pp. 1883 et seq. Mr. Clement states, that a temporary increase of risk suspends the policy but if a loss occurs during the increased hazard a recovery will be defeated, and if the temporary increase ceases and it has not affected the risk when the loss occurs, there is no reason for a forfeiture. 2 Clement on Fire Ins. (ed. 1905) p. 296. Mr. Elliott says: "The weight of authority seems to support the view that a violation of a condition that works a forfeiture of the policy merely suspends the insurance during the violation, and if the violation is discontinued during the life of the policy and does not exist at the time of the loss, the policy revives and the company is liable, although it had never consented to the violation of the conditions in the policy, and such violation has been such that the company could, had it known of it at the time, have declared a forfeiture therefor. But the decisions are not uniform. Elliott on Ins. (ed. 1907) p. 170, sec. 205.

[17] Shaw v. Robberds, 6 Ad. & El. 75; 1 N. & P. 279, W. W. & D. 94; 6 L. J. K. B. 106; 1 Jur. 6; State Ins. Co. v. Hughes, 10 Lea (78 Tenn.) 461; Williams v. People's Ins. Co. 57 N. Y. 274.

[18] Cumberland Valley Mutual Protection Co. v. Schell, 29 Pa. St. 31.

and a loss there occurs, the first removal does not avoid the policy.[19] And in the same state where the condition of the insured premises, used for manufacturing, was substantially the same at the time of loss as when the policy was delivered and the risk assumed by assurer, the clauses as to vacancy and non-operation were held not to defeat the policy.[20] And where it was claimed that the policy on a creamery should not be held void if the machinery was being operated within the ten days immediately preceding the fire, even though there might otherwise be a forfeiture for ceasing operations contrary to the condition relating thereto, it was declared that such was not the law, "we have frequently held that the breach of such a condition renders the policy void. . . . This has now been changed by statute as to Michigan standard policies." [1] In a New Hampshire case the procurement, contrary to a policy condition, of other insurance, which expired before the fire, was held to avoid the policy.[2] So where further insurance was obtained, but before the loss the amount was brought within the limit allowed by the policy by the cancelation of some other policies, it was held a suspension only during the continuance of the overinsurance, but that the policy was not avoided and the company was held liable.[3] Upon a time policy covering a steamboat, in which the navigation of certain waters was excepted, and the boat made a trip upon those waters, returning in safety, and was subsequently burned, it was held that the navigation of those waters only constituted an exception to the perils covered and not a warranty; that the risk was merely suspended, and upon the vessel's safe return the insurers were liable under the policy.[4] Again, where a tugboat was insured against fire, under a clause requiring it to navigate within certain limits, it was held that the insurer was not relieved from liability for loss occurring after the tug had returned to or while she was within the specified limits. In this case the policy contained nothing expressly stipulating that it should be void in case it navigated

[19] Ohio Farmers' Ins. Co. v. Burget, 65 Ohio St. 119, 55 L.R.A. 825, 87 Am. St. Rep. 596, 61 N. E. 712, 31 Ins. L. J. 75. See § 1747 herein.

On temporary absence of insured property from location stated in the policy, see note in 22 L.R.A.(N.S.) 848.

[20] National Union Fire Ins. Co. v. Gump, 34 Ohio Cir. Ct. R. 36, aff'd (mem.) 86 Ohio St. 325, 99 N. E. 1130. The point is, however, not made very clear in the report of this case either from the evidence or otherwise.

[1] Cronin v. Fire Association of Philadelphia, 123 Mich. 277, 6 Det. L. N. 1048, 82 N. W. 45, 29 Ins. L. J. 564, Hooker, J. Comp. Laws sec. 5182.

[2] Fabyan v. Union Mutual Fire Ins. Co. 33 N. H. 203.

[3] Overmeyer v. Globe Mutual Ins. Co. 43 Mo. 573, Alb. Law Jour. 15, p. 324, 5 Benn. F. I. Cas. 235.

[4] Greenleaf v. St. Louis Ins. Co. 37 Mo. 25.

without the limits.[5] If a policy is issued on a sawmill, specifying its size, and it is so used, but an addition is built thereon, but with no partition between the two parts, and machinery is placed for a sash and blind factory in a larger portion of the entire building, there is no such misdescription or change as to avoid the policy, where the use of the sash and blind factory has been discontinued at the time of the fire.[6]

So the use of gasolene for light, it being named as increasing the risk, does not avoid the policy, where it was removed and subsequently the building was burned.[7] The court in this case placed stress upon the fact that there was no provision in the policy making it void for temporary increase of risk ipso facto, but that such increase rendered the policy liable to be avoided if a loss arose therefrom, but that, "in the absence of a stipulation to this effect, the validity of the policy necessarily depends on the state of the premises at the time of the loss." [8] So the temporary introduction of benzine is not keeping it.[9] And the policy is only suspended by the keeping or use of gasolene in a quantity in excess of that permitted, where such excess has been removed from the premises before the fire and there is no provision voiding the policy for such temporary breach, but only a condition for nonliability for loss while the hazard is increased by said keeping or use.[10] And recovery on a fire insurance policy is not prevented by the fact that prohibited articles were kept upon the premises during the life of the policy, if such practice was discontinued prior to the loss and did not contribute thereto, and insurer had taken no steps to forfeit the policy and premiums were paid and renewal receipts issued after the discontinuance.[11] The mere temporary use in an insured barn of a gasolene engine to thresh grain is not within a provision in the policy making it void if the situation or circumstances affecting the risk shall be so altered as to cause an increase of the risk.[12]

[5] Hennesey v. Manhattan Fire Ins. Co. 28 Hun (N. Y.) 98.

[6] Garrison v. Farmers' Mutual Fire Ins. Co. 56 N. J. L. (27 Vroom) 235, 28 Atl. 8.

On effect of the unauthorized use of mill or factory which has been abandoned before loss, see note in 45 L.R.A.(N.S.) 127.

[7] Mutual Fire Ins. Co. v. Coatesville Shoe Factory, 80 Pa. St. 407.

[8] Mutual Fire Ins. Co. v. Coatesvill Shoe Factory, 80 Pa. St. 407, 412.

On effect of temporary presence of prohibited articles on premises, see notes in 3 B. R. C. 7, and L.R.A. 1917C, 278.

[9] Maryland Fire Ins. Co. v. Whiteford, 31 Md. 219, 1 Am. Rep. 45.

[10] O'Neill v. Caledonian Ins. Co. of Edinburgh, Scotland, 166 Cal. 310, 135 Pac. 1121.

[11] McClure v. Mutual Fire Ins. Co. 242 Pa. 59, 48 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1221n, 88 Atl. 921.

[12] Bouchard v. Dirigo Mutual Fire Ins. Co. 113 Me. 17, L.R.A.1915D, 187n, 92 Atl. 899.

On use of engine on farm premises as violation of general provisions in

Under a Georgia decision mere temporary changes on the use and occupation of the premises are not within a provision in a fire insurance policy for forfeiture by any change in the use or condition of the property, by which the risk is increased, so that a mere temporary use of a threshing machine operated by an engine for a few hours on premises where insured property is located, will not per se work either a forfeiture or a suspension of the policy. If, however, the use and occupancy is so materially increased by an act or acts whch would not be done in the use of ordinary care and diligence under the circumstances, or there is a material increase of the hazard so great as to be apparent to any person of ordinary intelligence, made by some temporary change in the use of the property, the insurer would be relieved from liability for loss thereby caused.[13]

In a Maryland case it is held that making repairs or alterations or additions to or erecting adjacent building will not prevent a recovery, although the risk is materially increased thereby, unless the loss is produced wholly or in part in consequence thereof, provided the policy contains no condition avoiding the same therefor.[14]

Where assured had at the time the policy was issued a license to keep a billiard or pool table, or a bowling-alley for hire, under a statute requiring the same, and after the expiration of the license, during the life of the policy, he used the property without a renewal of the license for a short time, it was held that such temporary illegal use only suspended the policy during the continuance of said use. Such temporary use being uncontemplated at the time of taking out the policy, and it not appearing that the insurer was or could be in any way affected injuriously thereby after the illegal use had ceased, and the insurer had the benefit of the temporary suspension of the risk without rebate of premium. And this is true even though the policy provides against the keeping of certain specified articles, "or other articles subject to legal restriction." [15] In this case the court, per Allen, J. says: "There is no rule of law preventing a revival of a policy of insurance after a temporary suspension. 'The doctrine that the risk may be sus-policy against increase of risk or specific provisions relating to engine, see note in L.R.A.1915D, 187.

[13] Adair v. Southern Mutual Ins. Co. 107 Ga. 297, 42 L.R.A. 204, 73 Am. St. Rep. 122, 33 S. E. 78, 28 Ins. L. J. 510. Rule on last point approved in same case, Southern Mutual Ins. Co. v. Hudson, 113 Ga. 434, 38 S. E. 964, 30 Ins. L. J. 733, s. c. 115 Ga. 638, 42 S. E. 60.

[14] Washington Fire Ins. Co. v. Dawson & Symington, 30 Md. 92.

[15] Hinckley v. Germania Ins. Co. 140 Mass. 38, 54 Am. Rep. 445, 1 N. E. 737. Explained in Harris v. North American Ins. Co. 190 Mass. 361, 371, 4 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1137, 77 N. E. 493.

pended and again revived without an express provision on that subject seems to be within the strictest judicial principles.' . . . And in Worthington v. Bearse,[16] it was held on great consideration that if assured in a marine policy temporarily parts with his interest in the property insured, and afterward buys it again, the policy will revive if there are no express provisions making it void and there is no increase of risk. . . . It is not the necessary meaning of the word 'void,' as used in policies of insurance, that it shall, under all circumstances, imply an absolute and permanent avoidance of a policy that has once begun to run; but the meaning of the word is sufficiently satisfied by reading it as void or inoperative for the time being. In Phillips on Insurance[17] it is said: 'After it (the policy) has begun so that the premium is become due, it surely is but equitable that a temporary noncompliance should have effect only during its continuance. To carry it farther is to inflict a penalty upon the assured and decree a gratuity to the insurer, who is thus permitted to retain the whole premium when he has merited but part of it. A forfeiture certainly ought not to be extended beyond the grounds on which it is incurred. . . . And there does not appear to be any good reason why, in the absence of all fraud and of all prejudice to the underwriter, the same doctrine should not be applicable to express stipulations in the nature of warranties or conditions, unless by the circumstances or the express provisions of the policy such application is excluded.' In accordance with this doctrine, a provision of the policy that it should be void and be surrendered to the directors of the company to be canceled in case of alienation of the property by sale or otherwise, was held to mean that it should be inoperative for the time being; and the assured, upon regaining title after a sale of the property by him, was held entitled to recover.[18] So where a policy provided that 'in case of any transfer or termination of the interest, either by sale or otherwise, without such consent i. e., of the company, this policy shall from henceforth be void and of no effect,' it was held that after such sale the policy revived upon the assured's acquiring again the title and holding it at the time of the fire.[19] The same rule of construction has been applied to provisions against other insurance.[20] The court in Illinois has gone so far as to apply it also to a provision against [16] 12 Allen (94 Mass.) 382, 90 Am. Dec. 152.

[17] Sec. 975.

[18] Citing Lane v. Maine Ins. Co. 12 Me. 44, 28 Am. Dec. 150.

On effect of sale of insured property in case of reconveyance before loss, see note in 10 L.R.A.(N.S.) 738.

[19] Citing Power v. Ocean Ins. Co. 19 La. (O. S.) 28, 36 Am. Dec. 665, 10 La. (N. S.) 23.

[20] Citing Obermeyer v. Globe Ins. Co. 43 Mo. 573.

an increase of risk which has ceased before loss." [1] It is noteworthy that in both the Maine case, above noted, and in the case in which the above opinion is given, the question was one concerning the continuance of insurable interest, and the court remarked, per Parris, J., in Lane v. Maine Insurance Company: [2] "The party insured must, in all cases of fire insurance, have an interest in the property at the time of insuring and at the time the fire happens." While in the Louisiana case above noted the court, per Murphy, J., says: "It is sufficient if the insured has an interest in the subject matter of insurance at the time of insuring and at the time the fire happens." In the Obermeyer case, also above noted, the court declared,[3] per Bliss, J.: "that the policies relied on to avoid the one containing the covenant of forfeiture should exist and be in force at the time of the loss." In New England Insurance Company v. Schettler,[4] it was held that if such other insurance had ceased to exist at the time of the loss, the right or recovery would not be defeated. And in Mitchell v. Lycoming Insurance Company,[5] the court, per Agnew, J., says,[6] referring to the other policies, "if they were void at the time of the loss they constituted no obstacle." In the case of Schmidt v. Peoria Insurance Company,[7] cited by the Massachusetts court above, it was expressly provided that "if, after insurance is effected, the risk be increased by any means or the premises occupied in any way so as to render the risk more hazardous than at the time of insuring, such insurance shall be void and of noneffect, and the question was whether the use of certain stoves therein, not in the building when the policy was issued, and in which fires had been used at a time more or less remote from the time of the loss, avoided the policy within the exception. The court, per Lawrence, J., who delivered the opinion, said: "This is a very material provision in the policy. . . . This language admits of no controversy as to its meaning, and the only question under it is, Was there such increased risk in consequence of these stoves at the time of the fire? This court held in New England Fire and Marine Insurance Company v. Wetmore,[8] that the true construction of a clause like this was, that the policy became inoperative only while the increased risk was in existence and when it terminated the liability of the company would recommence. . . . The point for the consideration

[1] Citing Schmidt v. Peoria Ins. Co. 41 Ill. 295; Insurance Co. of North America v. McDowell, 50 Ill. 120, 129, 99 Am. Dec. 497.

[2] 12 Me. 44, 47, 28 Am. Dec. 150.

[3] Id. 578.

[4] 38 Ill. 166.

[5] 51 Pa. St. 402.

[6] Id. 409.

[7] 41 Ill. 295.

[8] 32 Ill. 221, 245.

of the jury was, not whether an increase of the number of fires in a building does or does not ordinarily increase the risk, but whether, in the case then before the court, the risk to the building at the time it was destroyed, at 11 o'clock at night, was or was not increased by the two stoves, in one of which there had been no fire for eight days and in the other none after 8:30 o'clock of the preceding morning. Was the risk to this particular building at the time it was burned greater in consequence of the presence of these two stoves, placed as they were and used in the manner shown by the witnesses." This case is cited in North British and Mercantile Insurance Company v. Steiger,[9] when at the time the insurance was effected a steam drier was used, and subsequently a fire drier was substituted, and the court, per McCulloch, P. J.,[10] says: "It is peculiarly within the province of the jury to determine, under proper instruction, whether or not there was an actual increase of risk, or whether or not the cause of such increase of risk was in operation at the time of the destruction of the building." The principal case was also cited in Aurora Fire Insurance Company v. Eddy,[11] which case, together with the principal one and that last above noted, covered questions really of continuing warranties. In this last decision it was held that a substantial compliance as to keeping buckets filled with water in the building was necessary. The principal case is also cited in Insurance Company of North America v. Garland,[12] where the condition was that "if assured shall allow the building herein insured to become vacant and unoccupied and so remain," and the court, per Mulkey, J., says: "It is well settled that if the company should not exercise this power, that is upon notice of the breach to declare the policy forfeited, and the premises should again become occupied, its right to do so would cease and its liability on the policy would again attach." The Massachusetts decision above noted also cites Insurance Company of North America v. McDowell,[13] which was a case of increase of hazard from repairs, and it was held that such increase only suspended the policy during its continuance, but that the insurer's liability was restored when the increase terminated.[14]

In another Massachusetts case a condition in a policy of insurance that it should become void if the situation or circumstances

[9] 13 Ill. App. 482, 484.

[10] Citing also North Eastern Fire & Marine Ins. Co. v. Wetmore, 32 Ill. 221.

[11] 55 Ill. 213, 221.

[12] 108 Ill. 220.

[13] 50 Ill. 120, 129, 99 Am. Dec. 497.

[14] Citing Schmidt v. Peoria Marine & Fire Ins. Co. 41 Ill. 295; New England Fire & Marine Ins. Co. v. Wetmore, 32 Ill. 245.

affecting the risk shall be so altered as to cause an increase thereof is not ordinarily violated by a mere temporary change increasing the risk, but a change existing continuously during the working hours of nearly a month is not temporary and is continued sufficiently long to be deemed a change in the situation and circumstances affecting the risk.[15] A temporary increase of hazard, which ceases before loss, will not prevent recovery on a fire insurance policy which provides that it shall be void if the hazard is increased.[16] And it is held that a policy on goods against loss by fire is not avoided by the use for a single night of the building in which they are stored as a shelter for the crew of a vessel, where the ship had filled with water, and the insurers are liable for a loss occasioned by the crew's making a fire, contrary to the express directions of the insured, in a stove which was in an unsafe condition at the time.[17] So a change of use of an insured building increasing the hazard will not prevent recovery, where such use has been abandoned without the declaration of a forfeiture by the company before a loss occurs, and such an increase of hazard in no way affects the risk at the time of the loss; but if an increase exists at such time, the discontinuance of such use will not entitle the assurer to recover. In other words, a clause voiding the policy in case of change of use of the property increasing the risk, will cease to operate when the more hazardous use ceases, so that a recovery may be had for a loss subsequently occurring to which the more hazardous use did not contribute.[18] Again, a policy prohibiting assignment without consent was held suspended merely, and not avoided, where an assignment, made without consent of company and objected to by their agent, was afterward so altered to a special assignment as to be acceptable to the agent.[19]

Under a provision that the policy shall be void in case the premises shall be vacant or unoccupied, the contract is held only suspended during the time the premises are vacant.[20] The condition here was: "This entire policy, unless otherwise provided by agreement indorsed hereon or added hereto, shall be void . . . if any change take place in the interest, title, or possession of the subject of insurance, except change of occupants without vacancy

[15] First Congregational Church v. Holyoke Mutual Fire Ins. Co. 158 Mass. 475, 19 L.R.A. 587, 35 Am. St. Rep. 508, 33 N. E. 572.

[16] Sumter Tobacco Warehouse Co. v. Phœnix Ins. Co. 76 S. Car. 76, 10 L.R.A.(N.S.) 736n, 56 S. E. 654.

[17] Loud v. Citizens' Mutual Ins. Co. 2 Gray (68 Mass.) 221.

[18] Traders' Ins. Co. v. Catlin, 163 Ill. 256, 35 L.R.A. 595, 45 N. E. 255.

[19] Manley v. Insurance Co. of North America, 1 Lans. (N. Y.) 20, 5 Ben. F. I. Cas. 241.

[20] Schuermann v. Dwelling House Ins. Co. 57 Ill. App. 200, 201.

or unoccupancy or other increase of hazard, whether by legal process or judgment or by voluntary act of the insured or otherwise . . . or if the building herein described, whether intended for occupancy by owner or tenant, be or become vacant or unoccupied or not in use." So a temporary suspension of some parts of the business, or a temporary suspension of all work for want of materials, is not a breach of condition as to being "vacant and unoccupied."[1] Where the policy stipulated that it should be void in case the building should become vacant and unoccupied for more than ten days without the company's consent indorsed on the policy, it was held that the policy was terminated upon a breach of the condition and could not be revived without the consent of both parties to the contract, and that it was immaterial, then whether the loss of the buildings was due to unoccupancy or some other cause.[2] The court, per Smith, J., says: "The defendants might have waived the condition altogether or might have waived its breach, but having had no opportunity before the loss to make their election to waive the breach, their refusal to pay when notified of the loss and unoccupancy was an effectual election that they insisted upon the condition in the policy." In Washington it is held that a contention that a vacancy for a period exceeding the time permitted under the policy, terminates the policy, and that its operative force is not restored by reoccupancy will not be sustained as the question is no longer an open one in that state.[3] Where a house was vacant for several weeks, it was held that if there was no intentional abandonment, but the insured was using reasonable diligence to obtain a tenant, there was no forfeiture.[4] Where a building was insured to be occupied as a dwelling house, it was held that a temporary use of a part of the building, which was terminated before any loss occurred, would not avoid the policy if the building had not ceased to be occupied as a dwelling house, and the temporary change of use in a part of the building had in no way contributed to the loss.[5] Reoccupation, before the fire

[1] American Fire Ins. Co. v. Brighton Cotton Manufacturing Co. 125 Ill. 131.

[2] Moore v. Phœnix Ins. Co. 62 N. H. 240, 13 Am. St. Rep. 556.

[3] Silver v. London Assurance Corp. 61 Wash. 593, 112 Pac. 666, 40 Ins. L. J. 479. Following Port Blakely Mill Co. v. Springfield Fire & Marine Ins. Co. 59 Wash. 501, 110 Pac. 36, 28 L.R.A.(N.S.) 596n, 140 Am. St. Rep. 863, 39 Ins. L. J. 447 (s. c. 56 Wash. 681, 28 L.R.A.(N.S.) 593n, 106 Pac. 194, 40 Ins. L. J. 352; Port Blakely Mill Co. v. Royal Ins. Co. 186 Fed. 716, 108 C. C. A. 586, 40 Ins. L. J. 1610).

[4] Gamwell v. Merchants' Ins. Co. 12 Cush. (66 Mass.) 167, cited in Albion Lead Works v. Williamsburgh City Fire Ins. Co. 2 Fed. 479, 488.

[5] Kircher v. Milwaukee Mechanics' Mutual Ins. Co. 74 Wis. 470, 5 L.R.A. 779, 43 N. W. 487.

occurs of an insured building after vacancy, sufficient to avoid a policy under a condition against vacancy, revives the policy, so as to permit a recovery in case the fire occurs during the occupancy.[6] A temporary vacation of insured premises for four days, occurring upon a change of tenants and to suit the convenience of the departing tenant, is not such a cessation of occupancy as will avoid a policy, under a condition voiding it if the building insured shall "become vacant or unoccupied, or not in use," and provided also that the loss occurred during such vacation.[7] But it is also decided that permitting insured property to become vacant without consent of the insurer immediately forfeits the insurance, under a penalty providing that it shall be null and void in case of nonoccupancy without consent indorsed on the policy; and the policy cannot be revived, without consent, by reoccupancy before loss occurs.[8] Under a comparatively recent decision in Maine, where the question is "raised sharply for the first time" in that state, it is held that a reoccupation of the premises after a vacancy, continued without further permission, after a permit therefor had expired, does not reinstate or revivify the policy but avoids it under the standard policy form of that state providing that the policy shall be void if the premises insured shall become vacant by the removal of the owner or occupant and so remaining vacant for more than thirty days without assurers consent "in writing or in print" and it is declared that it is not a question whether the insurer has been injured by the breach of the contract but whether the contract has itself been broken, and if it has, it is then rendered "void" by its own terms, which word "void" is neither ambiguous nor technical and should under the statute be "construed according to the common meaning of the language." [9]

[6] Insurance Co. of North America v. Pitts, 88 Miss. 587, 7 L.R.A. (N.S.) 627, 117 Am. St. Rep. 756, 41 So. 5. Condition was: "Vacant or unoccupied."

See also Silver v. London Assur. Corp. 61 Wash. 593, 112 Pac. 666, 40 Ins. L. J. 479. Clause was: "Be or become vacant and unoccupied and so remain for," etc.

[7] Roe v. Dwelling-House Ins. Co. 149 Pa. St. 94, 34 Am. St. Rep. 595, 23 Atl. 718.

[8] German Ins. Co. v. Russell, 65 Kan. 373, 58 L.R.A. 234, 69 Pac. 345. Condition was: "Vacant or unoccupied."

[9] Dolliver v. Granite State Fire Ins. Co. 111 Me. 275, 50 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1106, 89 Atl. 8, 43 Ins. L. J. 234. Citing and considering or explaining:

United States.—Imperial Fire Ins. Co. v. Coos County, 151 U. S. 452, 38 L. ed. 231, 14 Sup. Ct. 379; Georgia Home Ins. Co. v. Rosenfield, 95 Fed. 358, 37 C. C. A. 96.

Connecticut.—Lounsbury v. Protection Ins. Co. 8 Conn. 458, 21 Am. Dec. 686.

Georgia.—Athens Mutual Ins. Co. v. Toney, 1 Ga. App. 492, 57 S. E. 1013.

Illinois.—Traders' Ins. Co. v. Catlin, 163 Ill. 256, 35 L.R.A. 595, 45 N. E. 255; Germania Fire Ins. Co. v.

Under a Nebraska decision recovery under a fire insurance policy is not prevented by a conveyance of the property in violation of its conditions, if, prior to the loss, the property is reconveyed to the insurer.[10] If one procures a chattel mortgage on property contrary to the policy conditions, but at the time of the fire the property is free from the mortgage lien, there may be a recovery on the policy and the rule applies as to any incumbrance.[11] In North Carolina a chattel mortgage was given on an insured automobile, including other personal property, but said mortgage was satisfied and canceled before loss, and it was held that the policy was revived and in force when the loss occurred as the title of Klewer, 129 Ill. 599, 22 N. E. 489; Insurance Co. of North America v. Garland, 108 Ill. 220; New England Fire & Marine Ins. Co. v. Wetmore, 32 Ill. 221.

Iowa.—Born v. Home Ins. Co. 110 Iowa, 379, 80 Am. St. Rep. 300, 81 N. W. 676.

Kansas.—German Ins. Co. v. Russell, 65 Kan. 373, 58 L.R.A. 234, 69 Pac. 345.

Kentucky.—Phœnix Ins. Co. v. Lawrence, 4 Metc. (Ky.) 9, 91 Am. Dec. 521.

Maine.—Carleton v. China Mutual Ins. Co. 109 Me. 79, 39 L.R.A. (N.S.) 95, 82 Atl. 649; Knowlton v. Patrons' Androscoggin Fire Ins. Co. 100 Me. 481, 2 L.R.A.(N.S.) 517, 62 Atl. 389; Bigelow v. Granite State Fire Ins. Co. 94 Me. 39, 46 Atl. 808; Jones v. Granite State Fire Ins. Co. 90 Me. 44, 37 Atl. 326; White v. Phœnix Ins. Co. 85 Me. 97, 26 Atl. 1049; Thayer v. Providence Ins. Co. 70 Me. 531; Cannell v. Phœnix Ins. Co. 59 Me. 582.

Maryland.—Reynolds v. German-American Ins. Co. 107 Md. 110, 15 L.R.A.(N.S.) 345, 68 Atl. 262; United States Fire & Marine Ins. Co. v. Kimberly, 34 Md. 224, 6 Am. Rep. 325.

Massachusetts.—Stuart v. Delaware Ins. Co. (Stuart v. Reliance Ins. Co.) 179 Mass. 434, 60 N. E. 929; Hill v. Middlesex Mutual Assurance Co. 174 Mass. 542, 55 N. E. 319; Wainer v. Mulford Mutual Fire Ins. Co. 153 Mass. 335, 11 L.R.A. 598, 26 N. E. 877; Kyte v. Commercial Union Ins. Co. 149 Mass. 116, 3 L.R.A. 508, 21 N. E. 361; Ring v. Phœnix Assurance Co. 145 Mass. 426, 14 N. E. 525; Hinckley v. Germania Fire Ins. Co. 140 Mass. 38, 54 Am. Rep. 445, 1 N. E. 737.

Mississippi.—Insurance Co. of North America v. Pitts, 88 Miss. 587, 7 L.R.A.(N.S.) 624, 41 So. 5, 9 Ann. Cas. 54.

Missouri.—Hoover v. Mercantile Town Mutual Ins. Co. 93 Mo. App. 111, 69 S. W. 42.

New Hampshire.—Moore v. Phœnix Ins. Co. 62 N. H. 240, 13 Am. St. Rep. 56.

New Jersey.—Jersey City Ins. Co. v. Nichol, 35 N. J. Eq. 291, 40 Am. Rep. 625.

New York.—Mead v. Northwestern Ins. Co. 4 N. Y. 530.

Pennsylvania.—Hardiman v. Fire Association of Philadelphia, 212 Pa. 383, 61 Atl. 900; Bemis v. Harborcreek Mutual Fire Ins. Co. 200 Pa. 340, 49 Atl. 769.

Texas.—East Texas Fire Ins. Co. v. Kempner, 87 Tex. 229, 47 Am. St. Rep. 99, 27 S. W. 122.

[10] German Mutual Fire Ins. Co. v. Fox, 4 Neb. (Unof.) 833, 63 L.R.A. 334, 96 N. W. 652.

[11] Omaha Fire Ins. Co. v. Dierks, 43 Neb. 473, 61 N. W. 740, reaffirming State Ins. Co. v. Schrenk, 27 Neb. 527, 6 L.R.A. 524, to the same point.

assured at the time of the loss was the same as when the policy was delivered and that the deed of trust in no way contributed to the loss; but while the mortgage exists there can be no recovery and the above construction is not against public policy.[12] But it is held that a policy is not merely suspended during the continuance of a chattel mortgage, which is paid off before the loss occurs, but it is absolutely avoided by giving such mortgage contrary to a provision avoiding the policy if it becomes encumbered by a chattel mortgage.[13] In Iowa the payment of a mortgage before loss revives the policy and permits recovery even though it is conditioned to be forfeited if mortgaged without assurer's consent.[14]

Where a policy was issued upon a building to be used for storage purposes only, conditioned to be void in case it was used for any other purpose, and during a part of the term of the policy the building was used for canning purposes, but active work ceased before issuance of the renewal, it was held upon a fire being built in the furnace after the policy was renewed, for the purpose of emptying the water out of the pipes and boiler, that the insurers were liable for a loss occurring after such act.[15] In another case the policy contained a condition prohibiting the appropriation or use of the premises for the exercise of certain specified trades, including those of "cooper, carpenter, cabinetmaker," except under special agreement in writing in or on the policy. The premises at the time the insurance was effected were used for making and storing barrels. Subsequently, small circular saws and a workbench were introduced, and boxes were manufactured, but this work had ceased from two to four months when a loss by fire occurred. The saws and workbench had remained in the building, and a lathe had been put up the day preceding the fire, for the purpose of making broomhandles and brushblocks. In an action upon the policy it was held that the policy was suspended during the prohibited use of the premises, but was revived when the use ceased to [12] Cottingham v. Maryland Motor Car Ins. Co. 168 N. Car. 259, L.R.A. 1915D, 344, 84 S. E. 274, 45 Ins. L. J. 491.

[13] German American Ins. Co. v. Humphrey, 62 Ark. 348, 35 S. W. 428, 25 Ins. L. J. 658. Contra, Weiger v. Council Bluffs Ins. Co. 104 Iowa, 410, 73 N. W. 862, 27 Ins. L. J. 260; Johanson v. Home Fire Ins. Co. 54 Neb. 548, 74 N. W. 866, 27 Ins. L. J. 610; Tompkins v. Hartford Fire Ins. Co. 49 N. Y. Supp. 184, 22 App. Div. 380. Examine Insurance Co. of North America v. Wicker, 93 Tex. 390, 55 S. W. 740, 29 Ins. L. J. 790.

[14] Born v. Home Ins. Co. 110 Iowa, 379, 80 Am. St. Rep. 300, 81 N. W. 676.

[15] Krug v. German Fire Ins. Co. 147 Pa. 272, 30 Am. St. Rep. 729, 23 Atl. 572.

exist, and that there was no such "appropriation" of the premises at the time of the fire to a prohibited use as was contemplated in the policy or as prevented a recovery.[16] In this case Brent, J., said: "There is no doubt that the insured could not have recovered if the premises had been used for the manufacture of boxes at the time of the fire. The parties, however, have contracted that such use destroys the effect of the policy 'so long as the premises shall be appropriated or used' for any of the prohibited purposes. The plain meaning is that it is to have no effect only during the time that the premises are so used."[17] In Delaware, if the risk is changed or increased, and no notice thereof is given according to the requirements of the contract, the policy is forfeited.[18] In a case in the supreme court of the United States,[19] it was held that the alteration and repairs of the insured premises without conforming to the requirements of the policy in respect thereto avoided the contract, that the fact that the increase of risk did not continue to the time of the loss was immaterial, and that insurer was not responsible to assured for damage and injury to the insured premises after such repairs and alterations, although not happening in consequence of the repairs. The court, per Jackson, J., considers the case of Kyte v. Commercial Union Assurance Company,[20] and quotes from the court therein, and follows the same. It also says: "The court below proceeded upon the theory that the fire having occurred after the employment of the mechanics had ceased, such employment and the making of the alterations and repairs described did not constitute a breach at the time of the fire; that the increased risk which was necessary to render the policy void must be found to have existed at the time of the fire, and not at any preceding date. In Ferree v. Oxford Fire and Life Insurance Company,[1] the policy contained the provision that it should not 'be assignable without the consent of the company indorsed thereon. In case of assignment without such consent, whether of the whole policy or of any interest in it, the liability of the company in virtue of said policy shall thenceforth cease.' The assured assigned the policy, and the court held that the condition was a perfectly legal one and that the company was not liable, although the plaintiff had redeemed the policy previously

[16] United States Fire & Marine Ins. Co. v. Kimberly, 34 Md. 224, 6 Am. Rep. 325.

[17] See also, Shaw v. Roberts, 6 Ad. & E. 75, 1 Nev. & P. 279; Moore v. Protection Ins. Co. 29 Me. 97, 48 Am. Dec. 514; Leggett v. Ætna Ins. Co. 10 Rich. Law (S. C.) 202.

[18] Lattomus v. Farmers' Mutual Fire Ins. Co. 3 Houst. (Del.) 404.

[19] Imperial Fire Ins. Co. v. Coos County, 151 U. S. 452, 465, 38 L. ed. 231, 14 Sup. Ct. 379.

[20] 149 Mass. 116, 122, 3 L.R.A. 508, 21 N. E. 361.

[1] 67 Pa. St. 373, 5 Am. Rep. 436.

assigned and was the holder thereof at the time of the suit. In Moore v. Phoenix Insurance Company,[2] the policy contained, among other provisions, the following conditions: 'If the above mentioned premises shall become vacant or unoccupied for a period of more than ten days without the assent of the company indorsed hereon, then and in every such case this policy shall be void.' At the time the premises were destroyed they were occupied, but for a period of at least three months prior to that time they were unoccupied, although without the knowledge of the insured or insurer. The court held that the condition of the policy had been broken by the unoccupancy of the premises, and that 'the contract once being terminated could not be revived without the consent of both the contracting parties. It is immaterial, then, whether the loss of the buildings is due to unoccupancy or to some other cause.'" It is held in New Hampshire that if there is a stipulation that the policy shall be avoided by the use of an article expressly named, and there is nothing in the policy from which a permission to use the article in a partial, limited, or temporary way can be inferred, full effect is usually given to the prohibitive clause by a forfeiture of the policy for its violation.[3]

Again, an increase of risk from means, "within the control of the assured" refers to a permanent change purposely undertaken in the structure, use or occupation of the premises, and not to a mere negligence of assured, as in case of a failure to repair a pump.[4] So the condition that "if the hazard be increased by any means within the control or knowledge of the insured" the policy will be void, is intended obviously to protect the property during the life of the policy from fire by change in structure, methods of heating, addition of new outbuildings on the premises, and like means within assured's knowledge or control whereby the hazard might be increased.[5] It is held in Wisconsin, that if a clause in a policy provides that "it shall be void" upon the breach of a specified condition, the insurer's exemption from liability becomes absolutely fixed as soon as that condition is broken, and does not depend on whether he notifies or omits to notify the insured, after such breach, what action he intends to take in regard to the continuance of forfeiture of the policy.[6] But it is also held in that state that a provision or condition avoiding a

[2] 62 N. H. 240, 13 Am. St. Rep. 556.

[3] Wheeler v. Traders' Ins. Co. 62 N. H. 450, 13 Am. St. Rep. 582.

[4] Albion Lead Works v. Williamsburgh City Fire Ins. Co. 2 Fed. 479.

[5] Collins v. London Assur. Co. 165 Pa. St. 298, 305, 30 Atl. 924.

[6] Carey v. German-American Ins. Co. 84 Wis. 80, 20 L.R.A. 267, 36 Am. St. Rep. 907, 54 N. W. 18.

policy if the risk is increased, means that the insured shall not allow or permit a change to be made in the structure, nature, or habitual use of the insured property materially different from that which the insurer has agreed to undertake. But trivial or temporary variations in the risk, incident to the ordinary use of the property, are presupposed by the contracting parties to be likely to occur.[7] In a case before the United States supreme court the condition against increase of risk and alteration occurring in the same clause are held, nevertheless, distinct. Thus it is declared that if a policy stipulates that it shall be void in case "mechanics are employed in building, altering, or repairing the premises" without notice to or permission of the insurer, it is not necessary to show that the alterations and repairs increased the risk, but the fact that they are made without insurer's consent avoids the policy, even though the policy also provides against increase of risk, such condition being an independent stipulation.[8] But it is also held that the completion of alterations before loss will not preclude avoiding the policy where such alterations materially increase the risk and are a breach of a condition voiding the policy therefor.[9] In Massachusetts, if a policy of insurance is conditioned to be void in case of any increase of risk, and the risk is increased in violation of such condition, it is held that the policy is avoided though the increase may be only temporary.[10] In this case the court said: "An increase of risk which is substantial and which is continued for a considerable period of time is a direct and certain injury to the insurer and changes the basis upon which the contract of insurance rests; and since there is a provision that in case of an increase of risk which is consented to or known by the assured and not disclosed and the assent of the assurer obtained, the policy shall be void, we do not feel at liberty to qualify the meaning of these words by holding that the policy is only suspended during the continuance of such increase of risk." In New York it has been held that such a use will avoid the policy.[11]

[7] Seimers v. Meeme Mutual Home Protection Ins. Co. 143 Wis. 114, 139 Am. St. Rep. 1083, 126 N. W. 669.

[8] Imperial Fire Ins. Co. v. Coos County, 151 U. S. 452, 38 L. ed. 231, 14 Sup. Ct. 379.

[9] Hill v. Middlesex Mutual Fire Ins. Co. 174 Mass. 542, 55 N. E. 319, 29 Ins. L. J. 185.

[10] Kyte v. Commercial Ins. Co. 149 Mass. 116, 3 L.R.A. 508, 21 N. E. 361; Lyman v. State Ins. Co. 14 Allen (96 Mass.) 329. (These two cases are explained in Harris v. North American Ins. Co. 190 Mass. 361, 371, 4 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1137, 77 N. E. 493); Jennings v. Chenango County Mutual Ins. Co. 2 Denio (N. Y.) 75; Mead v. Northwestern Ins. Co. 7 N. Y. 530. See § 2372 herein.

[11] Mead v. North Western Ins. Co. 3 Seld. (N. Y.) 530, overruling Gates v. Madison County Mutual Ins. Co. 5 N. Y. 469, 55 Am. Dec. 360.

In this case Welles, J., said: "It is settled by numerous decisions that if the warranty is violated it avoids the policy, and that it is immaterial whether the breach affects the risk or is connected with the loss or not. It would seem in theory that it was equally immaterial whether the act or thing to which the warranty related continued up to the time of the loss or had ceased or had been discontinued before . . . I incline to the opinion . . . that the only safe rule is to hold the contract of insurance at an end the moment the warranty is broken, and that it cannot be revived again without the consent of both parties, unless the insurer has by some act waived the breach of the warranty."[12] So in Minnesota, a policy of fire insurance provided that if the insured buildings should be "altered, added to, or enlarged" due notice must be given and consent indorsed on the policy. A by-law, made part of the contract, provided that whenever a building should be "altered, enlarged, or appropriated to any other purposes than those mentioned, or the risk be otherwise increased," without the consent of the insurer first obtained, the policy should be void. Under these provisions in the policy, notice to the insurer and consent to a material enlargement of the building are required, although the risk be not in fact thereby increased. A written permission in such policy "to make necessary alterations and repairs" does not authorize a material enlargement of the building by an addition twelve feet wide and two hundred feet long.[13] Other cases bearing upon this point may be found throughout this chapter. We have not noted cases of deviation herein in marine risks, for they do not rest upon the principle of increase of risk, as appears from what has elsewhere been said. Such cases, therefore, are inapplicable.[14]

[12] See also State Ins. Co. v. Hughes, 10 Lea (78 Tenn.) 461; Gaty v. Phœnix Ins. Co. 30 Mo. 56; Glen v. Lewis, 8 Exch. 607, 22 L. J. Ex. 228, 17 Jur. 842.

[13] Frost's Detroit Lumber Wooden Ware Works Co. v. Millers' Mutual Ins. Co. 37 Minn. 300, 5 Am. St. Rep. 846, 34 N. W. 35.

[14] See §§ 2365 et seq. herein.

CHAPTER LXIV.

ALIENATION.

§ 2246. Alienation: generally.
§ 2246a. Conditions as to alienation change of title, etc., valid.
§ 2247. Conditions as to alienation: construction of.
§ 2248. Consent to transfer or sale and assignment: notice to company.
§ 2248a. Notice continued: sale, transfer or mortgage: mortgage clause.
§ 2248b. Alienation: encumbrance: statutes.
§ 2249. Void sale deed of insured property.
§ 2250. Voidable and set-aside sale no alienation.
§ 2251. Sale of part of subject of insurance where policy contains no condition as to alienation.
§ 2252. Sale of part of property insured where policy stipulates against alienation or transfer of subject of insurance.
§ 2252a. Sale or deed with reservation of interest: reversion of title.
§ 2253. Alienation of part where contract severable.
§ 2254. Alienation of part: whether contract entire or severable.
§ 2255. Conclusion: alienation of part of subject of insurance.
§ 2255a. Alienation: where title or possession does not pass, or is not intended to pass.
§ 2256. Changes by encumbrances on property.
§ 2257. Meaning of clause "encumbrance in any way:" liens created by operation of law.
§ 2258. Lease of insured property.
§ 2259. Conveyance by deed of property as collateral.
§ 2260. Sale of insured property with mortgage back: change of interest or title.
§ 2261. Sale and mortgage back where policy prohibits alienation of interest.
§ 2261a. Conveyance and reconveyance.
§ 2262. Deed and reconveyance in trust to secure payment of purchase money.
§ 2263. Trustee, purchaser at his own sale under power of sale in mortgage: no alienation.
§ 2263a. Conveyance from mortgagor to mortgagee.
§ 2264. Mortgage not alienation, sale or transfer of title.
§ 2264a. Same subject: decisions contra.

§ 2264b. Same subject: effect of accumulated interest on mortgage.
§ 2265. When mortgage not encumbrance.
§ 2266. Mortgage under different conditions in different policies.
§ 2267. Mortgage an "alteration."
§ 2268. Chattel mortgage under alienation clause.
§ 2269. Chattel mortgage by partner: change of interest.
§ 2270. Commencement of foreclosure proceedings.
§ 2270a. Same subject: validity and construction of clause: "knowledge" "be commenced."
§ 2270b. Same subject: advertisement for sale: "proceedings on sale:" notice of sale.
§ 2270c. Same subject: when policy avoided, when not: instances.
§ 2271. "Entry of a foreclosure of a mortgage:" advertisement and sale: construction.
§ 2272. Decree of foreclosure: sale thereunder.
§ 2273. Notice may operate as consent to mortgage.
§ 2274. Judgment generally: mechanic's lien: judgment lien.
§ 2275. Sale of equity of redemption: where policy assigned to mortgagee.
§ 2275a. Expiration of time limit for redemption not an alienation.
§ 2275b. Transfer of equitable title.
§ 2276. Writ of attachment: "process."
§ 2277. "Levied on:" "taken into possession or custody:" construction.
§ 2278. Levy of execution: sale on execution.
§ 2279. Waiver of forfeiture: sheriff's sale.
§ 2280. Effect of dissolution of partnership: receiver.
§ 2281. Accident insurance on lives of partners: dissolution.
§ 2282. Sale between tenants in common: cotenants.
§ 2283. Partition of insured property: effect of.
§ 2284. Executory contract of sale: conditional sale.
§ 2284a. Option contract.
§ 2284b. Contract to exchange property.
§ 2284c. Unconsummated sale in satisfaction of mortgage.
§ 2284d. Bill of sale.
§ 2285. Acts of vendor where person holds under contract of purchase.
§ 2286. Where sale not confirmed as required.
§ 2286a. Judicial sale confirmed.
§ 2286b. Administrator's sale confirmed.
§ 2287. Where insurance on changing stock of goods.
§ 2288. Effect of bankruptcy or insolvency.
§ 2288a. Same subject: appointment of receiver.
§ 2289. Death of insured: descent of title to heirs.
§ 2290. What amounts to an alienation, sale, transfer, or change of title: instances.
§ 2291. What does not amount to an alienation, sale, transfer, or change of title: instances.

§ 2291a. Alienation, change of title, etc.: waiver.
§ 2292. Change in possession.
§ 2293. Sales by partner: alienation, assignment, and change of title or possession clauses.
§ 2293a. Sale by one partner to another: introduction of new partner: Federal decisions.
§ 2293b. Sale by one partner to another: Alabama.
§ 2293c. Sale by partner to third party: California.
§ 2293d. Sale by one partner to another: Colorado.
§ 2293e. Introduction: new partner: Connecticut.
§ 2293f. Introduction of new partner: Florida.
§ 2293g. Sale with reservation of interest to partner: mortgage of entire interest: Georgia.
§ 2293h. Sale to partner or third person: Illinois.
§ 2293i. Sale by one partner to another: Indiana.
§ 2293j. Sale with reservation of interest to partner: sale by one partner to another: division of goods: Iowa.
§ 2293k. Sale by one partner to another: Louisiana.
§ 2293l. Sale by one partner to another and mortgage back: Massachusetts.
§ 2293m. Introduction of new partner: Michigan.
§ 2293n. Sale by one partner to another: Mississippi.
§ 2293o. Sale by one partner to another: mortgage back: Missouri.
§ 2293p. Sale by one partner to another: Nebraska.
§ 2293q. Sale by one partner to another: New Hampshire.
§ 2293r. Sale by one partner to another: introduction of new partner: New York.
§ 2293s. Introduction of new partner: North Carolina.
§ 2293t. Sale by one partner to another: introduction of new partner: Ohio.
§ 2293u. Sale by one partner to another: Pennsylvania.
§ 2293v. Sale by one partner to another: business sold but continued under trade name: Tennessee.
§ 2293w. Sale by one partner to another: sale with mortgage back: sale with vendor's lien: Texas.
§ 2293x. Sale by one partner to another: bequest by partner: Virginia.
§ 2293y. Agreement for partnership not consummated: Washington.
§ 2293z. Sale by one partner to another: Wisconsin.
§ 2294. Summary of decisions.
§ 2295. Conclusion.

§ 2246. Alienation: generally.—Although a policy of fire insurance contains a provision avoiding it in case of alienation of the insured property, nevertheless it may be avoided, in the absence of any such clause, where at the time of loss the original insured has no interest in the subject matter of the insurance. The contract of fire insurance is a personal one, and does not run with the land. It is a contract to indemnify the person named in the policy against loss upon property in which he has an insurable interest, existing both at the time of the issuance of the policy and at the time of loss.[15] If assured parts with his insurable interest in the property, the contract is at an end. Where the policy forbids an alienation, it may be suspended or avoided in the absence of any consent, waiver or estoppel. Therefore, an absolute assignment or sale of insured property after the insurance is made devests the insurable interest of the vendor, and creates a bar to the right of action on the policy, unless by some means its existence has been preserved for the benefit of the assignee.[16] If the policy contains no provision against alienation, the transfer of the entire interest in the property covered will not render the contract void, but simply inoperative during the period of suspension, and subject to a revival upon the insurable interest being again vested in the person named in the policy as insured.[17] The fact that a transfer or sale of the property insured is merely voidable will not aid the insured where it has not been set aside prior to the loss. Such a sale is held to be an alienation or sale within the meaning of the clause, and to avoid the policy.[18] A voluntary conveyance and change of title, without assurer's consent, avoids the contract when so stipulated.[19]

§ 2246a. Conditions as to alienation, change of title, etc., valid.—Conditions forfeiting the policy in case of alienation, change of interest, title, or possession, and the like, without assurer's consent may be lawfully inserted in the policy and are reasonable, valid and enforceable and are within the rule that parties may insert in the policy such conditions as they choose and will be bound thereby provided such conditions are not contrary to law or public

[15] Wilson v. Hill, 3 Met. (44 Mass.) 66; Lane v. Maine Mutual Fire Ins. Co. 12 Me. 44, 45, 28 Am. Dec. 150; Cummings v. Cheshire Mutual Fire Ins. Co. 55 N. H. 457; Lucena v. Crawford, 2 Bos. & P. N. R. 269, 300, 3 Bos. & P. 101, 6 R. R. 623, 13 Eng. Rul. Cas. 151.

[16] Morrison v. Tennessee Marine & Fire Ins. Co. 18 Mo. 262, 59 Am. Dec. 299.

[17] Home Mutual Fire Ins. Co. v. Hauslein, 60 Ill. 521, 1 Ins. L. J. 818; Mount Vernon Manufacturing Co. v. Summit County Mutual Fire Ins. Co. 10 Ohio St. 347. See also § 903 herein.

On effect of sale of insured property in case of reconveyance before loss, see note in 10 L.R.A.(N.S.) 738.

[18] Worthington v. Bearse, 12 Allen (94 Mass.) 382, 90 Am. Dec. 152. See also Lane v. Maine Mutual Fire Ins. Co. 12 Me. 44, 28 Am. Dec. 150; Hooper v. Hudson River Fire Ins. Co. 17 N. Y. 424.

[19] Ritchie County Bank v. Firemen's Ins. Co. 55 W. Va. 261, 47 S. E. 294.

policy.[20] So conditions prohibiting encumbrances and liens upon insured property, without the consent of the insurer inserted in the policy and declaring it to be void in case of a breach thereof, are not only legal and conformable to public policy, but also reasonable and proper.[1]

§ 2247. Conditions as to alienation: construction of.—Conditions as to alienation and the like are not in most policies absolute, but are qualified in this, that the assurer's consent is required in case of alienation, etc. Where such qualifying clause is inserted, however, it is held that the effect is not to render the policy absolutely void, but only voidable at the option of the company.[2]

A merely nominal change of interest will not, it is held, avoid a policy containing a provision against any sale, transfer, or change of title in the property insured; but a transfer which increases the temptation on the part of the insured to defraud the underwriter or lessen assured's interest in preventing a destruction of the property will avoid the contract. The insured must be divested of all insurable interest in the property by the transfer.[3]

If the policy enumerates changes of title which will render it void, only such changes as are enumerated will invalidate it, [20] Alabama.—Bozeman v. Sun Ins. Co. 170 Ala. 373, 54 So. 178; Liverpool & London & Globe Ins. Co. v. Lavine, 5 Ala. App. 392, 59 So. 336, 41 Ins. L. J. 1621.

District of Columbia.—Dumas v. Northwestern Mutual Ins. Co. 12 App. D. C. 245, 40 L.R.A. 358.

Florida. — J. I. Kelly Co. v. St. Paul Fire & Marine Ins. Co. 56 Fla. 456, 47 So. 472, 38 Ins. L. J. 215, 229.

Michigan.—Jaspulski v. Citizens' Mutual Fire Ins. Co. 131 Mich. 603, 92 N. W. 98, 32 Ins. L. J. 244 (condition was: "transfer, incumbering . . . increased hazard without notice," etc.); Olney v. German Ins. Co. 88 Mich. 94, 26 Am. St. Rep. 281, 13 L.R.A. 684, 50 N. W. 100 (chattel mortgage).

Missouri. — Cummins v. Mutual Fire Ins. Co. 8 Mo. App. 291 (condition reasonable, valid and enforceable which prohibits change of title except by inheritance).

Nebraska.—Farmers' & Merchants' Ins. Co. v. Jansen, 56 Neb. 284, 44 L.R.A. 861, 76 N. W. 577, 58 Neb. 522, 78 N. W. 1054.

Texas.—Hartford Fire Ins. Co. v. Clayton, 17 Tex. Civ. App. 644, 43 S. W. 910.

Vermont.—Findlay v. Union Mutual Fire Ins. Co. 74 Vt. 211, 93 Am. St. Rep. 885, 52 Atl. 429, 31 Ins. L. J. 986 (commencement of foreclosure proceedings).

See § 2190 herein.

[1] Dover Glass Works v. American Fire Ins. Co. 1 Marv. (Del.) 32, 65 Am. St. Rep. 264, 29 Atl. 1039.

[2] Grant v. Elliot & Kittery Mutual Fire Ins. Co. 75 Me. 196.

[3] Ayres v. Hartford Ins. Co. 17 Iowa, 176, 85 Am. Dec. 553. In this case the court said: "If the real ownership remains the same, if there is no change in the fact of title, but only in the evidence of it, and if this latter change is merely nominal and not of a nature calculated to increase the motive to burn, or diminish the motive to guard, the property from loss by fire, the policy is not vitiated."

provided the insured does not alienate his entire interest in the property insured, and if the alienation is not a change specified in the policy, and is not entire, the insured may recover for such interest as he suffers damage for in case of loss.[4]

A stipulation avoiding the policy, if any change takes place in the title, interest, location, or possession of the property without consent of the company indorsed on the policy, applies only to such changes as arise after the delivery of the policy in the ownership of the property, and not to an existing state or condition of the property at the time the policy was issued, except as material facts were misstated or concealed.[5] In other words, conditions as to alienation, change of title or possession, of the class here under consideration, refer to alienation, changes, etc., subsequent to the execution and issuance of the policy and not to those made prior thereto nor to those made after the loss.[6] A change or transfer of the interest of the insured which will avoid a policy, under a condition therein declaring it shall become void if such a change takes place without the consent of the insurer, must be of such a character as is calculated to make him less watchful in caring for and preserving the property insured; but if the real ownership remains the same, though there is a change in the evidence of title, such change being merely nominal, and not of a nature calculated to diminish the motives of the assured to guard it from loss, the policy is not violated.[7] Under a condition in a fire insurance policy that it shall be void if any change other than by death of the insured takes place in the "interest, title, or possession of the subject of the insurance," the word "interest" has the same meaning as in the legal phrase "right, title and interest," and means a proprietary or insurable interest, and not a mere sentimental interest. Such condition is not broken so long as the insured continues to be the sole owner of the property insured.[8] A policy

[4] Judge v. Connecticut Fire Ins. Co. 132 Mass. 521.

[5] Hoose v. Prescott Ins. Co. 87 Mich. 309, 11 L.R.A. 340, 32 Cent. L. J. 226, 47 N. W. 587. See Hall v. Niagara Fire Ins. Co. 93 Mich. 184, 32 Am. St. Rep. 407, 18 L.R.A. 135, 53 N. W. 727.

[6] Alabama.—Cowart v. Capital City Ins. Co. 114 Ala. 356, 62 So. 574, 27 Ins. L. J. 246.

Illinois.—Allemania Fire Ins. Co. v. Peck, 113 Ill. 220, 23 Am. St. Rep. 610, 24 N. E. 538.

South Carolina. — Steinmeyer v. Steinmeyer, 64 S. Car. 413, 59 L.R.A. 319, 42 S. E. 184.

Virginia.—Morotock Ins. Co. v. Rodefer, 92 Va. 747, 53 Am. St. Rep. 846, 24 S. E. 393.

Washington.—Pioneer Savings & Loan Co. v. Providence-Washington Ins. Co. 17 Wash. 175, 38 L.R.A. 397, 49 Pac. 231, 27 Ins. L. J. 144.

[7] Georgia Home Ins. Co. v. Bartlett, 91 Va. 305, 50 Am. St. Rep. 832, 21 S. E. 476.

[8] Stenzel v. Philadelphia Fire Ins. Co. 110 La. 1019, 98 Am. St. Rep. 481, 35 So. 271.

conditioned to be void in case of change of title is not avoided by the payment of the mortgage and the assignment of the policy to the owner with the company's consent indorsed thereon.[9] A clause forbidding "change of title or possession" is held to refer to the right of possession, and not to the occupancy of the insured property.[10] The word "occupants" in the provision of a policy making it void for change of interest, title, or possession, "except change of occupants without increase of hazard," is not limited to real property, but applies to personal property also.[11] So it is held that the letting of an insured house to tenants is not a change of possession within the meaning of the clause.[12]

Conditions against alienations, clearly expressed, in policies of insurance, must, however, be strictly construed, the court having in view the object of the insurance company in inserting them.[13] Many forms of these clauses in regard to alienation are inserted in policies. Though they may be in substance the same, yet there is much difference in the particular wording of these conditions. Many of the policies enumerate changes in title which will avoid them, while others contain stipulations against change of title framed in general terms of prohibition.[14] In all cases where the policy contains a condition as to alienation, the exact language of such condition must be carefully examined in order to ascertain the intent of the parties and their rights under the contract.[15]

§ 2248. Consent to transfer or sale and assignment: notice to company.[16]—If the property has been conveyed without assurer's required consent in the manner and form specified in the policy, the right of recovery is precluded.[17] This general rule is, however,

[9] Kimball v. Monarch Ins. Co. 70 Iowa, 513, 30 N. W. 862.

[10] Poor v. Hudson Ins. Co. 2 Fed. 432, 9 Ins. L. J. 428.

[11] Herman v. Katz, 101 Tenn. 118, 41 L.R.A. 700, 47 S. W. 86.

[12] Rumsey v. Phœnix Ins. Co. 17 Blatchf. (U. S. C. C.) 527, 1 Fed. 396.

[13] Commercial Union Assurance Co. v. Scammon, 126 Ill. 355, 9 Am. St. Rep. 607, 18 N. E. 562. See §§ 220 et seq. herein.

[14] The clause in the New York Standard fire policy provides that it shall be void "if the subject of the insurance be personal property, and be or become encumbered by a chattel mortgage; or if, with the knowledge of the insured, foreclosure proceedings be commenced or notice given of sale of any property covered by this policy by virtue of any mortgage or trust deed; or if any change, other than by the death of an insured, take place in the interest, title, or possession of the subject of insurance (except change of occupants without increase of hazard), whether by legal process or judgment or by voluntary act of the insured, or otherwise." Laws 1886, c. 488, am'd 1887, c. 429; L. 1901, c. 513; L. 1903, c. 106; L. 1909, c. 240; L. 1910, chaps. 168, 638, 668; L. 1913, c. 181.

[15] See §§ 209 et seq. herein.

[16] That part of this section in the first edition which included waiver is transferred to § 2191a herein.

[17] East v. New Orleans Ins. Assoc.

subject to such stipulations as protect the mortgagee against the acts of the mortgagor or owner.[18] And under conditions in a policy of fire insurance prohibiting encumbrances and levies on the insured property without the consent of the insurer, and declaring the policy to be void in case of a breach thereof, the act of the insured in giving mortgages, confessing judgments, and suffering levies of execution against the insured property without the consent or waiver of the insurer, constitutes a breach of such conditions and avoids the policy at the election of the insurer.[19] But if the insurer consents to the transfer or the sale of the property and the assignment of the policy, this will constitute a valid confirmation, so that the vendee may recover upon the policy. It is not necessary that the consent be given before the sale of the property, as a recognition of the policy by the insurer as a valid instrument, after knowledge of a breach of a condition in the policy as to a sale or transfer of the insured premises, binds the insurer and renders the policy valid and operative.[20] Where a policy contains a condition that it shall become void if the property "shall be sold or conveyed," and it is taken upon mortgaged property, after which it is assigned to, and the property delivered to, the mortgagee with the consent of the company, such transfer of the possession and control of the property is not of itself such sale and conveyance as will invalidate the policy.[1] If a company has given its consent to a sale of insured property, it has been held by such act to have also assented to the terms of the sale.[2] But although consent of insurer is given for one transfer of the property, subse-

76 Miss. 697, 26 So. 691; Bates v. Equitable Fire & Marine Ins. Co. 10 Wall. (77 U. S.) 33, 19 L. ed. 882, cited in Smith v. Union Ins. Co. 120 Mass. 90, 91. See also cases throughout this chapter.

On effect of variance between assignment or transfer of property and insurer's consent thereto, see note in 42 L.R.A.(N.S.) 173.

[18] Flint v. Westchester Fire Ins. Co. 207 Mass. 337, 92 N. E. 646, 40 Ins. L. J. 508. See also §§ 2248a, 2795 herein.

[19] Dover Glass Works Ins. Co. v. American Fire Ins. Co. 1 Marv. (Del.) 32, 65 Am. St. Rep. 264, 29 Atl. 1039.

[20] Illinois.—Illinois Fire Ins. Co. v. Stanton, 57 Ill. 354.

Iowa.—Clifton Coal Co. v. Scottish Union Fraternal Ins. Co. 102 Iowa, 300, 71 N. W. 433, 26 Ins. L. J. 1007.

Maine.—Grant v. Eliott & Kittery Mutual Fire Ins. Co. 75 Me. 196.

New Hampshire. — Sanders v. Hillsborough Ins. Co. 44 N. H. 238.

New York. — Buchanan v. Exchange Fire Ins. Co. 61 N. Y. 26.

Rhode Island.—Gilliat v. Pawtucket Ins. Co. 8 R. I. 282, 91 Am. Dec. 229.

But see Davis v. German-American Ins. Co. 135 Mass. 251.

[1] Washington Ins. Co. v. Hayes, 17 Ohio St. 432, 93 Am. Dec. 628. See §§ 2264 et seq. herein.

[2] Farmers' Ins. Co. v. Ashton, 31 Ohio St. 477.

quent sales without consent avoid the contract.[3] And a clause in a policy, directing payment to a certain person "as his interest may appear," does not amount to an assent by the insurer to a subsequent encumbrance given by the insured to the same person.[4] Nor is insurer charged with notice by the registration of a chattel mortgage, and in the absence of facts, sufficient to put said insurer on inquiry, there must be actual notice.[5] But notice of the advertisement of a sale by the sheriff is held unnecessary where insurer has had notice of the entry of a judgment and that an execution has been issued thereon.[6] Again, the words "payable in case of loss to" a certain designated person indorsed on the policy by the insured, where it provided that a sale of the premises without the consent of the insurer indorsed on the policy should avoid it, are not notice of a sale of the property to the insurer, to whom the insured forwarded the policy after making their indorsement thereon, and in such a case the words written under the foregoing by the insurer, "consent is hereby given to the above indorsement," is not a consent to the sale of the property, since this indorsement does not imply that the insurer had any knowledge of the sale or intended to consent to it. It is a mere transfer of the right to collect the amount, which may be done under the policy in case of loss.[7]

[3] Queen of Arkansas Ins. Co. v. Pendola, 94 Ark. 594, 128 S. W. 559. See also Pennsylvania Fire Ins. Co. v. Faires, 13 Tex. Civ. App. 111, 35 S. W. 55. Examine Hartford Fire Ins. Co. v. Liddell, 130 Ga. 8, 14 L.R.A.(N.S.) 168, 60 S. E. 104.

[4] Hartford Fire Ins. Co. v. Liddell, Co. 130 Ga. 8, 14 L.R.A.(N.S.) 168, 60 S. E. 104. Examine Atlas Reduction Co. v. New Zealand Ins. Co. 138 Fed. 497, 71 C. C. A. 21, 9 L.R.A. (N.S.) 433; Fenton v. Cascade Mutual Fire Assoc. of Wash. 60 Wash. 389, 111 Pac. 343, 39 Ins. L. J. 1699.

[5] United States Ins. Co. v. Moriarty, — Tex. Civ. App. —, 36 S. W. 943.

[6] Ulysses Elgin Butter Co. v. Hartford Fire Ins. Co. 20 Pa. Super. Ct. 384.

[7] Bates v. Equitable Fire & Marine Ins. Co. 10 Wall. (77 U. S.) 33, 19 L. ed. 882. Cited in:

United States. — Atlas Reduction Co. v. New Zealand Ins. Co. 121 Fed. 929, 931; Delaware Ins. Co. v. Greer, 120 Fed. 916, 919, 57 C. C. A. 188, 191, 61 L.R.A. 137, 139; Friemansdorf v. Watertown Ins. Co. 1 Fed. 68, 70, 9 Biss. (U. S. C. C.) 169.

Colorado. — Scania Ins. Co. v. Johnson, 22 Colo. 476, 478, 45 Pac. 431.

Maine.—Brunswick Savings Institution v. Commercial Union Ins. Co. 68 Me. 313, 315, 28 Am. Rep. 56.

Massachusetts.—Bullman v. North British & Mercantile Ins. Co. 159 Mass. 118, 122, 34 N. E. 169.

Michigan.—Guiterman v. German American Ins. Co. 111 Mich. 626, 627, 70 N. W. 135; Clay Fire & Marine Ins. Co. v. Huron Salt & Lumber Manufacturing Co. 31 Mich. 346, 356.

Missouri. — Kempf v. Farmers' Mutual Fire Ins. Co. 41 Mo. App. 27, 34.

New Hampshire. — Baldwin v. Phoenix Ins. Co. 60 N. H. 164, 166.

Where pending litigation had been terminated in insured's favor for some time prior to the fire and had not contributed in any way to the loss, the failure to give notice to insurer of such pending action or suit does not avoid the contract.[8]

Where a company which had issued a policy reinsured in another company, and the policy of reinsurance provided that in case of a change of title the policy should be void, but further provided, by a rider attached to a policy, that the reinsurance was subject to such risks, conditions and assignment as might be assumed by the reinsured, it was held that a consent to a transfer given by the company originally insuring was binding upon the reinsurers.[9]

§ 2248a. Notice continued: sale, transfer or mortgage: mortgage clause.—The failure of a mortgagee to notify insurer of a conveyance of the property, as required by the policy, will not preclude recovery in the absence of any provision voiding the policy for that reason.[10] And the rule supported by the better authority is that the contract of insurance with a mortgagee is separate and distinct from that of the owner of the premises and it is contemplated that a change of title may occur and that a mortgagee or a third person may become owner and, therefore, it is declared that the ordinary stipulation as to notice to insurer of a change of title is not so far a substantive part of the contract that a forfeiture will lie for its violation but that it constitutes merely a subsequent breach of the contract for which insurer if injured has an action in damages.[11] So a provision in a mortgage clause under which the mortgagee's interest is not invalidated by any acts of the mortgagor or owner, provided said mortgagee or trustee shall notify insurer of any change of ownership, or increase of hazard which shall come to his knowledge, and also that permission be given for such change or increase indorsed on the policy is directory only, where there is no provision that the failure to give such notice shall avoid the policy and the failure to give the

New Jersey.—Milliken v. Woodward, 64 N. J. L. 444, 450, 45 Atl. 796.

Examine Bachelor v. People's Fire Ins. Co. 40 Conn. 56.

[8] Sprigg v. American Central Ins. Co. 101 Ky. 185, 19 Ky. L. Rep. 363, 40 S. W. 575. See §§ 2239, 2240 herein.

[9] Manufacturers' Fire & Marine Ins. Co. v. Western Assurance Co. 145 Mass. 419, 14 N. E. 632. Examine Flint v. Westchester Fire Ins. Co. 207 Mass. 337, 92 N. E. 646, 40 Ins. L. J. 508.

[10] Phenix Ins. Co. v. Omaha Loan & Trust Co. 41 Neb. 834, 25 L.R.A. 679, 60 N. W. 133.

[11] Pioneer Savings & Loan Co. v. Providence-Washington Ins. Co. 17 Wash. 175, 38 L.R.A. 397, 49 Pac. 231, 27 Ins. L. J. 144. In this case it was provided that the acts of the mortgagor or owner should not invalidate the mortgagee's interest. See §§ 2270b, 2273, 2295 herein.

notice is material only where it increases the risk or hazard, and especially is there no forfeiture in such case where notice of change of title is given to one who had been agent of insurer and who was still believed to be such agent.[12] And although the owner does not occupy when completed an insured house under construction, the policy is not avoided as to the mortgagee, under the union mortgage clause, by failure to notify assurer of such non-occupation. In the case so deciding, the payee and mortgagee under the policy was the owner, but the person named as insured had an insurable interest and it was also held that upon reformation of the policy said interest passed out of the latter so that the named mortgagee under the reformed policy was not obligated to report under the clause requiring notice by the mortgagee to assurer of any change of ownership or occupancy.[13] If foreclosure proceedings are commenced and thereafter the mortgagee insures the premises, and during the pendency of such suit, said policy was issued, and the mortgagor deeded the property to the mortgagee with the agreement that title should pass only on condition of approval thereof by the mortgagee attorneys and upon the condition also that the foreclosure proceedings be dismissed and the mortgage debt discharged, and the proceedings had not been dismissed at the time of loss, such transfer is not absolute but only conditional, so that the policy is not avoided by a failure to notify assurer of a change of ownership, the policy also providing that no acts of the mortgagor owner should affect the mortgagee's interest.[14] It is also held that under the clause protecting the mortgagee, the provision requiring the mortgagee to notify insurer of any change of ownership which should come to his knowledge, has reference to a transfer to a third person of the title or possession, to changes resulting from the acts of the mortgagor or owner, and not to a transfer from the mortgagor to the mortgagee through a foreclosure.[15] If a policy is payable to a mortgagee "as interest may appear" and a second mortgage is made to the [12] Whitney v. American Ins. Co. 16 Cal. Unrep. 220, 56 Pac. 50, 28 Ins. L. J. 254, aff'd 127 Cal. 464, 59 Pac. 897.

[13] Western Assur. Co. v. Hillyer-Deutsch-Jarratt Co. — Tex. Civ. App. —, 167 S. W. 816.

[14] Pioneer Savings' & Loan Co. v. Providence-Washington Ins. Co. 17 Wash. 175, 38 L.R.A. 397, 49 Pac. 231, 27 Ins. L. J. 144.

[15] Pioneer Savings & Loan Co. v. St. Paul Fire & Marine Ins. Co. 68 Minn. 170, 70 N. W. 979, 26 Ins. L. J. 826; Washburn Mill Co. v. Fire Association of Philadelphia, 60 Minn. 68, 72, 51 Am. St. Rep. 500, 61 N. W. 828.

On acquisition by mortgagee of title to property covered by policy protecting mortgagee's interest, as breach of condition against sale or transfer of title, see note in 23 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1147.

same mortgagee but without insurer's consent the insurance is not avoided under a requirement of notice to insurer since the words "as interest may appear" refer to the mortgagee's interest at the time of loss, even though except for such modification the giving of a second mortgage without notice to insurer as required by the policy would forfeit the insurance.[16]

It is decided, however, that if the mortgagee, under the usual mortgage clause has knowledge of an absolute conveyance by insured and fails to notify insurer as required by said clause, the policy is avoided where it is so conditioned, even though the legal title had, prior to effecting insurance, been transferred by deed as security to a creditor.[17] So where the mortgagor died and the administrator, under order of court, sold the land, and the widow executed a quit-claim deed to the purchaser, who redeemed from a foreclosure sale and took an assignment of the mortgagee's interest in the policy, which had been made payable to him "as his interest may appear," it was held that there was such an alienation or transfer as avoided the policy no notice having been given assurer of the sale and there being no clause protecting the mortgagee against acts of the mortgagor or owner.[18] Again, where the policy required that insured give insurers notice of any mortgage made on the property, it was held that insured was bound to give actual notice, and the sending of notice by mail was insufficient, unless it was actually received by the company.[19]

Consent to one chattel mortgage does not authorize a second one and constitute notice thereof.[20]

§ 2248b. Alienation: encumbrances: statutes.—Where the state statute provides that an alienation of property insured and a transfer of the policy, without the consent of the insurer, voids the insurance, but the hypothecation or creation of a lien thereon does not void, it is held that a deed to a creditor to secure a debt, with [16] Fenton v. Cascade Mutual Fire Assoc. of Wash. 60 Wash. 389, 111 Pac. 343, 39 Ins. L. J. 1699. Examine Hartford Fire Ins. Co. v. Liddell Co. 130 Ga. 8, 14 L.R.A.(N.S.) 168, 60 S. E. 104; Atlas Reduction Co. v. New Zealand Ins. Co. 138 Fed. 497, 71 C. C. A. 21, 9 L.R.A. (N.S.) 433.

[17] Continental Ins. Co. v. Anderson, 107 Ga. 541, 33 S. E. 887, 28 Ins. L. J. 936.

[18] Jaspulski v. Citizens' Mutual Fire Ins. Co. 131 Mich. 603, 92 N. W. 48, 32 Ins. L. J. 244.

When mortgagee's insurance not affected by mortgagor's acts, see § 2795 herein.

[19] Plath v. Minnesota Farmers' Mutual Ins. Co. 23 Minn. 479, 23 Am. Rep. 697. But see §§ 1163, 1279, 1335, 1336, and § 3300.

[20] Pennsylvania Fire Ins. Co. v. Faires, 13 Tex. Civ. App. 111, 35 S. W. 55. See Queen of Arkansas Ins. Co. v. Pendola, 94 Ark. 594, 128 S. W. 559.

reservation of balance, and the right to redeem the pledge by payment, is not such alienation.[1] Though a policy provides that if an incumbrance shall be placed on the property without notice to or consent by, the insurer, the policy shall become void, no recovery can be had if the condition is violated, though such violation does not increase the risk, and though a statute of the state requires every insurer before issuing a policy to examine the building or structure insured and the insurable value thereof, and that in the absence of any change increasing the risk without the consent of the insurer, and also of intentional fraud, in case of total loss, the whole amount mentioned in the policy shall be recovered.[2]

§ 2249. Void sale: deed of insured property.—A void sale of the insured property will not avoid the policy, although it contains a clause forbidding alienation or change of title. Such sale does not operate as a change or transfer of title in any way, and is in no way an alienation of the property. The insured stands in the same position, in respect to his rights against the insurer, as before the sale.[3] So where a husband alone executes a deed of property, which is void because without the wife's signature, it is held that no rights are forfeited under the policy.[4] And where a deed of trust was given, which was void, and consequently rendered a subsequent sale and deed of the property by the trustee thereunder void, it was held that there was no transfer of the interest of the insured, and that the policy was not vitiated.[5] Nor under such clause is the policy avoided by the insured's giving a deed of the property which is invalid owing to the fact that the grantor is incompetent to make such a deed.[6] And if a sale, with change of possession, is made, but it is invalid for want of power in the grantor or vendor to make the same, there is no such change of occupation as to avoid the contract, especially where the jury so finds.[7] And where a deed fails to designate the grantee there is no such change of ownership as to justify a forfeiture.[8] In Kansas,

[1] Nussbaum v. Northern Ins. Co. 37 Fed. 524, 1 L.R.A. 704.

[2] Webster v. Dwelling-House Ins. Co. 53 Ohio St. 558, 30 L.R.A. 719, 53 Am. St. Rep. 658, 42 N. E. 546.

[3] Jackson v. Ætna Ins. Co. 16 B. Mon. (Ky.) 242; Copeland v. Mercantile Ins. Co. 6 Pick. (23 Mass.) 198; School District v. Ætna Ins. Co. 62 Me. 330; Pitney v. Glens Falls Ins. Co. 65 N. Y. 6.

[4] German Ins. Co. v. York, 48 Kan. 488, 30 Am. St. Rep. 313, 29 Pac. 586. See also Commercial Ins. Co. v. Spanknable, 52 Ill. 53, 4 Am. Rep. 582.

[5] Commercial Union Ins. Co. v. Scammon, 133 Ill. 627, 12 N. E. Rep. 324, 6 Ill. App. 551.

[6] Gerling v. Agricultural Ins. Co. 39 W. Va. 689, 20 S. E. 691, 24 Ins. L. J. 385.

[7] Seaman v. Anchor Fire Ins. Co. 149 Iowa, 583, 128 N. W. 934, 40 Ins. L. J. 370.

[8] Westchester Fire Ins. Co. v. Jennings, 70 Ill. App. 539.

the conveyance of a homestead made by a husband alone, and which is therefore void, cannot affect the policy.[9] And since a valid conveyance is contemplated a deed void for usury does not preclude recovery even though no agreement permitting such transfer is endorsed on or added to the policy as stipulated therein.[10] Nor does a deed to secure a creditor invalidate the policy where said deed is void.[11] And where an executor holds under the will all the real and personal property insured, in trust, subject to his life estate therein, and he has no power or authority whatsoever to sell or dispose of any of the property, an attempted contract of sale made by him before the will is even probated does not invalidate the policy.[12] Again, a decree setting aside an illegal sale under a power in a mortgage which was involuntary as to mortgagor, avoids the sale from the beginning, so as to enable the mortgagor to enforce his insurance policies notwithstanding provisions against change of title, even as to losses which occurred before the rendition of the decree.[13]

§ 2250. Voidable and set-aside sale no alienation.—Where one clause of a condition in a policy on premises provides that "if the property be sold or transferred, or any change takes place in title or possession, whether by legal process or judicial decree, or voluntary transfer or conveyance . . . in every such case this policy shall be void," and another clause provides that "when property has been sold and delivered, or otherwise disposed of, so that all interest or liability on the part of the assured herein named has ceased, this insurance on said property shall immediately terminate," the latter clause will be held to have been intended to explain and qualify the meaning of the words of the former, and the sale or disposition of the property intended will be construed to be such as caused all interest of the assured in or control over the property to cease. And in such case a sale of the property insured which is voidable and is afterward set aside is not such an alienation as will avoid the policy.[14] There is no change of title

[9] German Ins. Co. v. York, 48 Kan. 488, 30 Am. St. Rep. 313.

[10] Phœnix Ins. Co. v. Asbury, 102 Ga. 565, 27 S. E. 667 (held contra in s. c. 95 Ga. 792, but at subsequent trial usury was shown) followed in Athens Mutual Ins. Co. v. Evans, 136 Ga. 584, 71 S. E. 892.

[11] Athens Mutual Ins. Co. v. Evans, 136 Ga. 584, 71 S. E. 892. See § 2259 herein.

[12] Seaman v. Anchor Fire Ins. Co. 149 Iowa, 583, 128 N. W. 934, 40 Ins. L. J. 370.

[13] Niagara Fire Ins. Co. v. Scammon, 144 Ill. 490, 19 L.R.A. 114, 28 N. E. 919, 32 N. E. 914.

[14] In this case a trust deed was made of property to secure a debt. Afterward, the maker of the deed effected insurance upon the same property under the clauses above noted, and the trustee, without his consent and against his protest, sold within the meaning of an insurance policy which is to be forfeited if the title is changed, by reason of a sale under a power in a mortgage, which is voidable because the mortgagee was indirectly the purchaser, where the mortgagor has repudiated the sale and remains in possession claiming ownership. And a voidable sale of real estate under a power in a mortgage, although treated as a transaction to which the mortgagor is a party, will become void from the time he notifies the purchaser of a refusal to recognize the latter's title, so as to entitle the mortgagor to enforce his insurance policies notwithstanding provisions against alienation of title, as to losses which subsequently occur, if he remains in possession and promptly institutes proceedings to have the sale set aside.[15]

§ 2251. Sale of part of subject of insurance where policy contains no condition as to alienation.—If the policy contains no condition avoiding it in case of the alienation of the insured property, it has generally been held that an alienation which does not divest the insured of his entire interest in the property will not render the policy void as to the interest retained by him. The assured must have parted with his entire interest in the policy in order to render it inoperative. If he retains any interest thereunder, of which he is possessed at the time of loss, he may recover to the extent of that interest.[16]

§ 2252. Sale of part of property insured where policy stipulates against alienation or transfer of subject of insurance.—If the policy in express terms prohibits an alienation or transfer in any way, either in whole or in part, of the interest of the insured in the prop-

the property to the cestui que trust, the maker of the trust deed being in possession and so remaining until after the sale, and until the property was destroyed by fire, denying the validity of the sale and asserting his right to possession and ownership, and within a reasonable time instituted proceedings to set the sale aside. The relief asked was granted. Commercial Union Assur. Co. v. Scammon, 126 Ill. 355, 9 Am. St. Rep. 607, 18 N. E. 562.

[15] Niagara Fire Ins. Co. v. Scammon, 144 Ill. 490, 19 L.R.A. 114, 28 N. E. 919, 32 N. E. 914. Examine Seaman v. Anchor Fire Ins. Co. 149 Iowa, 583, 128 N. W. 934, 40 Ins. L. J. 370.

[16] Iowa.—Ayres v. Home Ins. Co. 21 Iowa, 185, 193.

Massachusetts.—Jackson v. Massachusetts Mutual Fire Ins. Co. 23 Pick. (40 Mass.) 418, 34 Am. Dec. 69; Lazarus v. Commonwealth Ins. Co. 5 Pick. (22 Mass.) 76.

New Hampshire.—Folsom v. Belknap County Mutual Fire Ins. Co. 30 N. H. 231.

New York.—Masters v. Madison County Mutual Ins. Co. 11 Barb. (N. Y.) 624.

Pennsylvania.—Norcross v. Franklin Fire Ins. Co. 17 Pa. St. 429, 55 Am. Dec. 571.

England.—Sparkes v. Marshall, 2 Bing. (N. C.) 761, 3 Scott, 172; Rice v. Provincial Ins. Co. 7 U. C. C. P. 548.

erty, such condition will prevent an alienation of a part of the insured's interest thereunder. But the policy may stipulate only that it shall be void in case of the "alienation or transfer of the property insured." Under a clause of this nature it is held that an alienation of a part of the property insured will not invalidate the policy so long as the insured retains an interest in the property, and in such a case he may recover to the extent of the interest remaining in him.[17] So where the policy provided that if the insured should make any other insurance on the property, or any part thereof, or if the property should be sold or transferred, or any change should take place in the title or possession thereof without the company's consent, the policy should be void, and that when the property had been sold or otherwise disposed of, so that all the interest on the part of the insured had ceased, the insurance on such property should terminate, it was held that the insurance on the entire property was not by these provisions forfeited by a sale of a portion of the property.[18] Under a provision in a fire policy on a barn and its contents, that it shall be void if the risk is increased in any manner, or the property sold or any change made in the title, or if the property be encumbered or used for other purposes without consent, a change of title or encumbrance by a sale of parts of the tract upon which the insured building is situate and the purchase of other land will not avoid the policy unless it increases the risk or decreases the security.[19] And if a policy insuring a house and barn against loss by fire, provides that it shall be void if the property is sold without the consent of the insurer, a sale of the barn does not affect the right to recover for the loss of the house. The condition applies only upon the sale

[17] United States.—Scanlon v. Union Fire Ins. Co. 4 Biss. (U. S. C. C.) 511, Fed. Cas. No. 12,436.

Illinois.—Commercial Ins. Co. v. Spanknable, 52 Ill. 53, 4 Am. Rep. 582.

Iowa.—Cowan v. State Ins. Co. 40 Iowa, 551, 20 Am. Rep. 583; Ayres v. Home Ins. Co. 21 Iowa, 185, 193.

Louisiana.—McCarty v. Connecticut Ins. Co. 17 La. 365.

Maryland.—Citizens' Fire Ins. Security & Land Co. v. Doll, 35 Md. 89, 6 Am. Rep. 360.

Massachusetts.—Lazarus v. Commercial Ins. Co. 5 Pick. (22 Mass.) 76; Stetson v. Massachusetts Ins. Co. 4 Mass. 330, 3 Am. Dec. 217.

New York.—Manley v. Insurance Co. of North America, 1 Lans. (N. Y.) 20; Courtney v. New York Ins. Co. 28 Barb. (N. Y.) 116; Tyler v. Ætna Ins. Co. 12 Wend. (N. Y.) 507.

Ohio.—Blackwell v. Miami Valley Ins. Co. 48 Ohio St. 533, 29 Am. St. Rep. 574, 14 L.R.A. 431, 29 N. E. 278.

Pennsylvania.—West Branch Ins. Co. v. Helfenstein, 40 Pa. St. 289, 80 Am. Dec. 573.

[18] Quarrier v. Peabody Ins. Co. 10 W. Va. 507, 27 Am. Rep. 582.

[19] Russell v. Cedar Rapids Ins. Co. 78 Iowa, 216, 4 L.R.A. 538, 42 N. W. 654.

of the entire property, though, after the sale of the barn, its former owner cannot recover for its subsequent destruction because of his want of insurable interest at that time.[20] So a policy insuring both real and personal property, and providing that if "the property" shall thereafter become mortgaged the policy shall become void, must be regarded as treating the property insured as a whole, since it does not provide a forfeiture for mortgaging "any of the property," and consequently mortgaging the personal property does not forfeit or avoid the policy.[1] In another case however, where a part of the property had been sold, it was held that such a sale would avoid the policy, unless it could be said as a matter of law that the remaining risk was not thereby increased.[2]

§ 2252a. Sale or deed with reservation of interest: reversion of title.—A deed of insured premises, reserving a life estate in a house, is not such a sale of the house as will defeat the insurance on the grantor's life interest, under a clause in the policy making the insurance void "if the said property be sold," as a complete transfer of the entire interest of the insured is necessary to defeat the insurance thereon.[3] But a sale and conveyance in fee, without insurer's consent, of an undivided half interest in the land on which the insured building is located with a reservation of first title to said building with the right to remove the same without let or hindrance from the grantee, constitutes such a change in interest and title as avoids the policy.[4] If a marriage contract vests title in the wife, it constitutes a breach of the condition against change of title, even though it provides for a reversion of the title in case she should not survive the grantor, or prove unfaithful to him, and the fact that her husband divorced her after the loss does not aid a recovery on the policy.[5]

§ 2253. Alienation of part where contract severable.—Where a policy covers different classes of property, describing each class separately or different items of the same class, and specifying a distinct and separate sum on each, the policy is generally held, in case of an alienation of a part of the property insured, to be only inoperative as to that part.[6] So an alienation of one of two houses

[20] Clinton v. Norfolk Fire Ins. Co. 176 Mass. 486, 50 L.R.A. 833, 79 Am. St. Rep. 325, 57 N. E. 998.

[1] Born v. Home Ins. Co. 110 Iowa, 379, 80 Am. St. Rep. 300, 81 N. W. 676.

[2] Baldwin v. Hartford Fire Ins. Co. 60 N. H. 422, 49 Am. Rep. 324 (one judge dissenting).

[3] Clinton v. Norfolk Mutual Fire Ins. Co. 176 Mass. 486, 50 L.R.A. 833, 79 Am. St. Rep. 325, 57 N. E. 998.

[4] Watts v. Phœnix Ins. Co. 134 Ga. 717, 68 S. E. 479.

[5] Cummins v. National Fire Ins. Co. 81 Mo. App. 291.

[6] Hartford Fire Ins. Co. v. Walsh, 54 Ill. 164, 5 Am. Rep. 115; Commercial Ins. Co. v. Spanknable, 52 insured in the same policy, but valued and insured separately, avoids the policy only as to the house so alienated, where the charter of the company provides that "the alienation of any property" shall avoid the "policy thereon."[7] A policy upon personal property, though the items are not specifically named, may also come within the same rule. So where a policy was issued upon all the personal property of the insured without specifically naming it, an alienation or transfer of a part thereof was held not to avoid the whole contract, but only to affect the particular property alienated.[8]

§ 2254. Alienation of part: whether contract entire or severable.—There is another class of cases in addition to the foregoing in which it is held that if the contract is entire, then an alienation as to part of the property insured will invalidate the policy. In some of these cases the question as to whether the contract is entire or not has been held dependent upon the manner in which the premium has been paid, and that if the premium is single and entire, then the policy will be avoided by a sale of a part of the property, notwithstanding the insurance is distributed among several items in the policy.[9] But it would seem that other facts are to be considered, in determining the entirety of the contract, in addition to the premium.[10] In Loomis v. Rockford Insurance Company,[11]

Ill. 53, 4 Am. Rep. 582; German Ins. Co. v. Fairbank, 32 Neb. 750, 29 Am. St. Rep. 459, 49 N. W. 711; State Ins. Co. v. Schreck, 27 Neb. 527, 6 L.R.A. 524, 43 N. W. 340; Bodle v. Chenango Mutual Ins. Co. 2 Comst. (N. Y.) 53.

[7] Clark v. New England Mutual Fire Ins. Co. 6 Cush. (60 Mass.) 342, 53 Am. Dec. 44.

[8] State Ins. Co. v. Schreck, 27 Neb. 527, 6 L.R.A. 524, 43 N. W. 340.

[9] Plath v. Minnesota Farmers' Mutual Fire Ins. Co. 23 Minn. 479, 23 Am. Rep. 697. See also Barnes v. Union Mutual Fire Ins. Co. 51 Me. 110, 81 Am. Dec. 562; Lovejoy v. Augusta Ins. Co. 45 Me. 472; Brown v. People's Mutual Ins. Co. 11 Cush. (Mass.) 280; Kimball v. Howard Fire Ins. Co. 8 Gray (65 Mass.) 33; Gottsman v. Pennsylvania Ins. Co. 56 Pa. St. 210. See § 1931 herein.

[10] In McGowan v. People's Mutual Fire Ins. Co. 54 Vt. 211, 41 Am. Rep. 843, the court said: "This is a question of great importance, as a large proportion of insurance contracts embrace more than one item of property insured. The decisions are apparently conflicting, but we think are easily reconciled by referring to the plain principles which should govern them. The general rule, 'void in part, void in toto,' should apply to all cases where the contract is affected by some all-pervading vice, such as fraud or some unlawful act condemned by public policy or the common law; cases where the contract is entire and not divisible, and all those cases where the matter that renders the policy void in part, and the result of its being so rendered void, affects the risk of the insurer upon the other items in the contract . . . a recovery should be had in all those cases where the contract is divisible to different properties insured for separate sums, and the risk unaffected by the cause that renders the policy void in part."

three houses and their contents, situate on different farms, were insured, each for a separate amount, by a policy stating the premium as a gross sum, and the contract was held divisible, and that if there was a breach of condition as to one of the houses, by its conveyance without the assent of the insurer, the policy was not thereby avoided as to the other houses, and it was declared that a recovery should be had in all those cases where the contract is divisible and the different properties are insured for separate sums, and the risk upon some of the property is not affected by the clause which renders the policy void in part; that although insurance is distributed to the different items of insured property, the contract is indivisible if its breach as to one item of the property affects, or may reasonably be supposed to affect, the other items, by increasing the risk thereon. If a part of insured's personal property is mortgaged, a recovery is not precluded for that part which is not so encumbered, where the insurance is for a gross amount, and each class has a separate valuation with a maximum limit for recovery in case of loss in that class, as in such case the risk is divisible.[12]

§ 2255. Conclusion: alienation of part of subject of insurance.—From a consideration of the cases upon this subject, as in all other cases of contract, the intent of the parties must control. In order, therefore, to deduce any definite rule the exact conditions of the contract as to alienation must be carefully examined in connection with the entire contract to ascertain whether there exists an intent that the contract should be entire, and if it is obvious that it was intended that an alienation of a part of the property insured should avoid the entire contract, then such intention will prevail. If, however, no such intention can be gathered from the terms of the contract, coupled with such surrounding circumstances as the rules of evidence permit to be shown, then it would seem that though a part of the subject of insurance has been alienated, the contract will still be operative as to that part remaining where by such alienation the insurer has suffered no damage, and the risk which he has assumed has been in no way increased thereby.[13]

[11] 77 Wis. 87, 20 Am. St. Rep. 96, 8 L.R.A. 834, 45 N. W. 813.

[12] Tompkins v. Hartford Fire Ins. Co. 49 N. Y. Supp. 184, 22 App. Div. 380.

[13] Merrill v. Agriculture Ins. Co. 73 N. Y. 452, 29 Am. Rep. 184.

See also the following cases:

Illinois.—Hartford Fire Ins. Co. v. Walsh, 54 Ill. 164; Howard Fire & Marine Ins. Co. v. Cornick, 24 Ill. 455.

Kentucky.—Phœnix Ins. Co. v. Lawrence, 4 Met. (Ky.) 9.

Massachusetts.—Clark v. New England Mutual Fire Ins. Co. 6 Cush. (60 Mass.) 342, 53 Am. Dec. 44.

§ 2255a. Alienation: where title or possession does not pass, or is not intended to pass.—If in negotiating an exchange of property, a deed is made by assured to one whom the real estate agents represented was a purchaser, but who was in fact only one with whom said agents hoped to effect a sale, there is no change of title, possession, or interest unless the title passed by the deed out of assured.[14] And the execution of a mortgage between father and son for the purpose of evading creditors without intent that it should be enforced until recorded which was done after the loss does not invalidate the insurance.[15] But the intent not to pass title is sufficient to prevent a forfeiture, even though the deed is recorded, as where a deed was made to a wife by her husband for the purpose of avoiding creditor's claim.[16]

§ 2256. Changes by encumbrances on property.—A condition in a policy that it shall be void, unless consent in writing is indorsed thereon by the company, if the assured is not the sole and unconditional owner of the property, relates only to changes arising after the execution and acceptance of the policy, and does not apply to an existing state or condition of the property at the time of the issuance of the policy.[17] A covenant avoiding the policy if the property insured shall become encumbered by mortgage, judgment, or otherwise without the company's consent, is broken, when an encumbrance falls upon the property, whether with or without the actual knowledge of the insured.[18] A condition against increase of encumbrances on the insured property without notice thereof to the company is not violated by a change, which is not an increase, of encumbrances known to the company at the time the insurance was effected.[19] So when the insured, when applying for the insurance, informs the insurer of the amount of encum-

Wisconsin.—Schumitsch v. American Ins. Co. 48 Wis. 26, 3 N. W. 59, 9 Ins. L. J. 56.

England.—Date v. Gore District Mutual Fire Ins. Co. 14 U. C. C. P. 549. Under the code of California it is provided that a change of interest in one or more several distinct things, separately insured by one policy, does not avoid the insurance as to the others: Deering's Annot. Civ. Code Cal. sec. 2555.

[14] Camden Fire Ins. Assoc. v. Bomar, — Tex. Civ. App. —, 176 S. W. 156.

[15] Western Assur. Co. v. Kilpatrick-Koch Dry Goods Co. 54 Neb. 241, 74 N. W. 592.

[16] Hogodone v. Grange Mutual Fire Ins. Co. 133 Mich. 339, 10 Det. L. News, 171, 94 N. W. 1045.

[17] Hall v. Niagara Fire Ins. Co. 93 Mich. 184, 32 Am. St. Rep. 497, 18 L.R.A. 135, 53 N. W. 727. See § 2247 herein.

[18] Hench v. Agricultural Ins. Co. 122 Pa. St. 128, 9 Am. St. Rep. 74, 15 Atl. 671.

On mortgage as affecting change of title or interest in insured property, see note in 38 L.R.A. 562.

[19] Kister v. Lebanon Mutual Ins.

brances then existing upon the property, and the latter issues the policy with knowledge of such encumbrances, the conditions against encumbrances is not violated if their amount never subsequently exceeds the amount stated.[20] And where there is a known encumbrance on the property a change merely in the form thereof without adding thereto, will not avoid the policy.[1]

§ 2257. Meaning of clause "encumbrance in any way:" liens created by operation of law.—Many policies stipulate that in case of an "encumbrance in any way" upon the insured property the policy shall be void. In the absence of any further provision it has been held that liens, whether by judgment or otherwise, when created by operation of the law are not within the meaning of this condition, since the plain intent of the parties is only to prevent voluntary encumbrances. To construe it as extending to and including encumbrances created by operation of the law and in invitum, would defeat the contract of insurance in many cases where it would be contrary to the intention of the parties.[2] Where a policy stipulates that "if the property shall hereafter become mortgaged or encumbered this policy shall become null and void," such provision will be regarded as relating only to liens voluntarily placed upon the property by the assured, and not as applying to judgments or other liens created by law.[3] In an Iowa case, however, the contract stipulated that "when the property insured shall become alienated the policy thereon shall become void unless assigned by the consent of the president and secretary to the alienee;" the property was sold under a decree of foreclosure, and a decree was had to correct a mistake in the description in the mortgage. The time of redemption had also expired. The defense of a breach of the above condition was set up, it being averred that the property was alienated by operation of law, and that there was no assignment to the alienee, and it was held that the policy was avoided.[4]

§ 2258. Lease of insured property.—The giving of a lease of insured property is not an alienation or transfer, and will not avoid

Co. 128 Pa. St. 553, 15 Am. St. Rep. 696, 5 L.R.A. 646, 18 Atl. 447.

[20] Gould v. Dwelling-House Ins. Co. 134 Pa. St. 570, 19 Am. St. Rep. 717, 19 Atl. 793. See Houdeck v. Merchants' & Bankers' Ins. Co. 102 Iowa, 303, 71 N. W. 354.

[1] Farmers' & Merchants' Ins. Co. v. Newman, 58 Neb. 504, 78 N. W. 933; Koshland v. Home Mutual Ins. Co. 31 Ore. 321, 50 Pac. 567, 27 Ins. L. J. 304, s. c. 49 Pac. 864, 26 Ins. L. J. 940, s. c. 31 Oreg. 362, 49 Pac. 865, 26 Ins. L. J. 943.

On effect of condition against encumbrances upon renewal, substitution or alteration of encumbrance upon insured property, see note in 20 L.R.A. 400.

[2] Baley (Bailey) v. Homestead Fire Ins. Co. 80 N. Y. 21, 36 Am. Rep. 570, aff'g 16 Hun (N. Y.) 503.

[3] Phœnix Ins. Co. v. Pickel, 119 Ind. 155, 12 Am. St. Rep. 393, 21 N. E. 546.

[4] McKissick v. Mill Owners' Mutual Fire Ins. Co. 50 Iowa, 116.

the policy, unless it is prohibited by the terms thereof.[5] The fact that a lessee is in possession of property under a contract of purchase will not avoid a policy of insurance thereon which provides that "if the property be sold or transferred, or any change take place in title or possession, whether by legal process, judicial decree, voluntary transfer, or conveyance," the policy shall be void. The clause in regard to possession is construed as meaning not the occupancy of the property, but the possessory right. In such a case the possession of the lessee is considered as that of the insured.[6] So where insured property was leased for five years, the lessee having the privilege of buying the property for a specified sum at any time during said term, it was held that this would not avoid the policy, as the owner had not parted with his interest in the property, since the lessees had not purchased it.[7] Where the policy is upon an unfinished building issued with knowledge that it is to be occupied by a tenant, letting a tenant into possession of property under an agreement to rent the same for five years, and then to buy it, is not, prior to the expiration of the five years, a violation of the condition of an insurance policy thereon, making the policy void in case of a transfer of title or possession of the property, where provision is made in the application for occupancy by a tenant, although insurer had no notice of the agreement to purchase.[8] If the wife of the insured, after his death, leases the property without the insurer's consent, and surrenders possession to the tenant, this is such a change of possession as avoids the policy, conditioned that it shall be void in case of change in possession or occupancy of the property without the consent of the insurer.[9]

§ 2259. Conveyance by deed of property as collateral.—Under a condition in the policy that in case of any sale, transfer, or change of title in the property insured such insurance shall be void and cease, it has been held that a merely nominal transfer as collateral security for debts which are liens on the property will not avoid the policy.[10] In a case in the Federal courts, where the condition

[5] Lane v. Marine & Fire Ins. Co. 12 Me. 44, 28 Am. Dec. 150.

[6] Rumsey v. Phœnix Ins. Co. 1 Fed. 396, 2 Fed. 429. See also Smith v. Phœnix Ins. Co. 91 Cal. 323, 25 Am. St. Rep. 191, 13 L.R.A. 475, 27 Pac. 738, 33 Cent. L. J. 397, rev'g 3 Cal. Unrep. Cases, 244, 23 Pac. 383. But see Fire Assoc. of Philadelphia v. Flournoy, 84 Tex. 632, 31 Am. St. Rep. 89, 19 S. W. 793.

[7] Planters' Mutual Ins. Co. v. Rowland, 66 Md. 236, 7 Atl. 257.

[8] Smith v. Phœnix Ins. Co. 91 Cal. 323, 13 L.R.A. 475, 25 Am. St. Rep. 191, 27 Pac. 738.

[9] Planters' Mutual Ins. Assoc. v. Dewberry, 69 Ark. 295, 86 Am. St. Rep. 195, 62 S. W. 1047.

[10] Ayres v. Hartford Ins. Co. 17 Iowa, 176, 85 Am. Dec. 553; Virginia Fire & Marine Ins. Co. v. Feagin, 62 Ga. 515. But see Westin the policy was, "If the property be sold or transferred, or any change takes place in title or possession, the policy shall be void," it was held that a deed pledging the property as security for a debt, the debtor retaining possession and control of the property, did not invalidate the policy in the absence of any precise provision forbidding a transaction of that nature.[11] Though the insured may give a deed of the property covered by the policy which is absolute in its terms, it has been held that if given as security for a debt, the insured retaining possession, it will only be considered as a mortgage and no alienation.[12] And such seems to be the rule under the alienation clause of the New York standard fire policies.[13] Under a policy containing a clause prohibiting "any transfer of the interest of the insured, by sale or otherwise," without the consent of the insurer, a deed assigning a constructive possession of the insured goods to certain parties in trust for the benefit of creditors does not terminate the interest of the insured nor avoid the policy.[14] Where the mortgagor, under a policy for one year, conveyed the property as security for a debt, but reacquired the title, and the loss occurred about two years after the reconveyance, all subsequent policies are not thereby avoided.[15]

§ 2260. Sale of insured property with mortgage back: change of interest or title.—If the policy stipulates that if the property insured be sold or transferred, or any change takes place in title or possession, without the consent of the insurers, the policy shall be void, a sale or conveyance of the property without the required consent avoids the policy, although simultaneously therewith a mortgage is executed back by the purchaser for a part of the purchase money.[16] And this seems to be the rule in all cases where the policy provides that it shall be void in case of a "change of interest." In the earlier New York cases it was held that such a transfer with mortgage back did not avoid the policy.[17] But the ern Massachusetts Ins. Co. v. Riker, 10 Mich. 279.

On delivery of deed in escrow as a change of title or interest, see note in 38 L.R.A.(N.S.) 142.

[11] Nussbaum v. Northern Ins. Co. 37 Fed. 524, 1 L.R.A. 704. See also Athens v. Mutual Ins. Co. 136 Ga. 584, 71 S. E. 892.

[12] Holbrook v. American Ins. Co. 1 Curt. (U. S. C. C.) 193, Fed. Cas. No. 6,589.

[13] Barry v. Hamburg-Bremen Fire Ins. Co. 110 N. Y. 1, 17 N. E. 405.

[14] Phœnix Ins. Co. v. Lawrence, 4 Met. (61 Ky.) 9, 81 Am. Dec. 521.

[15] Commonwealth Fire Ins. Co. v. Obenchain, — Tex. Civ. App. —, 151 S. W. 611, 42 Ins. L. J. 271.

[16] Savage v. Howard Ins. Co. 52 N. Y. 502, 11 Am. Rep. 741. See also Home Mutual Fire Ins. Co. v. Hauslein, 60 Ill. 521; Miner v. Judson, 5 Thomp. & C. (N. Y.) 46, 2 Hun (N. Y.) 441; Burger v. Farmers' Mutual Fire Ins. Co. 71 Pa. St. 422.

[17] Kitts v. Massasoit Ins. Co. 56 decision in Savage v. Howard Insurance Company [18] established a different rule.

§ 2261. Sale and mortgage back where policy prohibits alienation of interest.—A different rule from that stated under the last section seems to prevail where the policy simply stipulates that an alienation of the interest of the insured shall avoid the policy.[19] The sale and mortgage back in these cases constitute one act, it is said, and although it is a change of title and interest, it is not an alienation, since the insured has an interest in the property. The interest is simply changed from an absolute to a defeasible one.[20]

§ 2261a. Conveyance and reconveyance.—A policy is not avoided under the alienation clause by a conveyance to a third person and reconveyance simultaneously executed and delivered, made in order to avoid attachment, and this applies, even though the deeds are not recorded.[1] And where property is sold under contract and upon default in its conditions it is reconveyed to the holder of the legal title, which was the title insured, there is no such change of interest or title as avoids the policy, as such a transfer invests the entire estate, both the legal and equitable interest, in assured, and

Barb. (N. Y.) 177; Hitchcock v. Northwestern Ins. Co. 26 N. Y. 68; Fernandez v. Great Western Ins. Co. 3 Rob. (N. Y.) 457.

[18] 52 N. Y. 502, 11 Am. Rep. 741. Here the court said: "The condition is not capable of two readings, and the courts have no right, under the pretense of interpretation, to nullify a material provision inserted for the reasonable protection of the insurers, and thus exercise a dispensing power in favor of the insured. It cannot be said that a conveyance of the fee and the taking back of a mortgage for the purchase money is not as well a sale or transfer or a change of title. It is sufficient to put an end to the policy that there has been a change of title, and no one can say that a conveyance of the fee and substituting the interest of a mortgagee in the assured is not a substantial change in the title. The fact that, to preserve equities and exclude liens which might otherwise defeat purchase money liens, courts regard a deed of conveyance and purchase money mortgage as simultaneous, and the rights of the parties as if the title to the amount of the mortgage interest had never passed out of the grantor, does not aid in construing this contract, or tend to establish the claim of the respondent that there has been no transfer of the property." The policy in this case contained the following condition: "If the property be sold or transferred, or any change takes place in title or possession, whether by legal process or judicial decree, or voluntary transfer or conveyance, without the consent of the company indorsed hereon, the policy shall be void."

[19] Stetson v. Massachusetts Ins. Co. 4 Mass. 330, 336, 3 Am. Dec. 217; Howard Fire Ins. Co. v. Bruner, 23 Pa. St. 50.

[20] Hitchcock v. Northwestern Ins. Co. 26 N. Y. 68. But see Tittemore v. Vermont Mutual Ins. Co. 20 Vt. 546.

[1] Wiley v. London & Lancashire Fire Ins. Co. 89 Conn. 35, 92 Atl. 678.

On effect of sale of insured property in case of reconveyance before loss, see note in 10 L.R.A.(N.S.) 738.

increases assured's interest.[2] But a conveyance by an insured and his wife of the insured property to their son, by warranty deed, and a reconveyance by him of the premises by warranty deed to the wife of the insured, in pursuance of an agreement between the husband and the wife that the latter shall hold the title to the insured property in trust for her husband, is such a change in the title as to terminate the contract, under a provision of the policy that it shall cease to be in force "in case any change shall take place in the title of the assured." [3]

§ 2262. Deed and reconveyance in trust to secure payment of purchase money.—An insured who has conveyed insured property retains an insurable interest, and may recover his actual loss, not exceeding the amount insured, when the grantee at the time of the conveyance reconveys the property to a third person, as trustee for the insured, to secure the payment of the purchase money.[4]

§ 2263. Trustee, purchaser at his own sale under power of sale in mortgage: no alienation.—A trustee under a mortgage containing a power of sale cannot become purchaser at his own sale, either directly or indirectly, and if he does so become the purchaser, the rights of the mortgagor will remain precisely the same as though no sale had been made, and such a sale will not constitute an alienation within the meaning of a clause against alienation in an insurance policy.[5]

§ 2263a. Conveyance from mortgagor to mortgagee.—A conveyance from the mortgagor to the mortgagee prior to the date of the fire, which is not accepted until after that date, will not avoid a policy of insurance on the property for change of title, since the mortgagor may keep his mortgage alive and prevent its merging in the title if it is to his interest to do so.[6] A mortgagee after condition broken has a right of entry and of collecting the rents and if he enters and does not rent he is bound to account to the mort-

[2] Foiles v. Detroit Fire & Marine Ins. Co. 175 Mich. 716, 141 N. W. 879, 42 Ins. L. J. 1143.

[3] Farmers' & Merchants' Ins. Co. v. Jensen, 56 Neb. 284, 44 L.R.A. 861, 76 N. W. 577, 58 Neb. 522, 78 N. W. 1054.

[4] Morrison v. Tennessee Marine & Fire Ins. Co. 18 Mo. 262, 59 Am. Dec. 299.

[5] Commercial Union Assurance Co. v. Scammon, 126 Ill. 355, 9 Am. St. Rep. 607, 18 N. E. 562.

[6] Pioneer Savings & Loan Co. v. Providence Washington Ins. Co. 17 Wash. 175, 38 L.R.A. 397, 49 Pac. 231. As to notice and transfer from mortgagor to mortgagee under foreclosure, see Pioneer Savings & Loan Co. v. St. Paul Fire & Marine Ins. Co. 68 Minn. 170, 70 N. W. 979, 26 Ins. L. J. 826, considered under § 2248a herein.

On acquisition by mortgagee of title to property covered by policy protecting mortgagee's interest as breach of condition against sale or transfer of title, see note in 23 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1147.

gagor as legal owner for the rental value and a deed from the mortgagor to the mortgagee and delivery of possession, where said deed is not delivered but left in escrow, does not constitute such a transfer of title as to avoid a policy issued to the mortgagor, as the possession of the mortgagee is not conclusive of title nor inconsistent with his position as mortgagee and until delivery of the deed the policy is valid.[7]

§ 2264. Mortgage not alienation, sale, or transfer of title.—A condition imposing a forfeiture is, as we have stated, construed strictly. Therefore, unless the policy by its terms indicates the intention that a mortgage will invalidate the policy, it will not so operate. The word "alienation" is construed as meaning a conveyance of one's entire estate. Consequently, a provision in a policy avoiding it in case of "alienation by sale or otherwise" does not apply to a conveyance by way of mortgage while the mortgagor remains in possession and there has been no entry for foreclosure,[8]

[7] Walton v. Phœnix Ins. Co. 162 Mo. App. 316, 141 S. W. 1138, 41 Ins. L. J. 413.

On delivery of deed in escrow as a change in title or interest, see note in 38 L.R.A.(N.S.) 142.

[8] Jackson v. Massachusetts Mutual Fire Ins. Co. 23 Pick. (39 Mass.) 418, 34 Am. Dec. 69.

See also the following cases:

United States. — Holbrook v. American Ins. Co. 1 Curt. (U. S. C. C.) 193, Fed. Cas. No. 6,589; Friezen v. Allemania Fire Ins. Co. 30 Fed. 352.

Illinois.—German Ins. Co. v. Gibe, 162 Ill. 251, 44 N. E. 490; Aurora Fire Ins. Co. v. Eddy, 55 Ill. 213.

Iowa.—Eddy v. Hawkeye Ins. Co. 70 Iowa, 472, 59 Am. Rep. 444, 39 N. W. 808.

Maine.—Pollard v. Somerset Fire Ins. Co. 42 Me. 221.

Massachusetts.—Bryan v. Traders' Ins. Co. 145 Mass. 389, 14 N. E. 454; Judge v. Connecticut Fire Ins. Co. 132 Mass. 521.

New Hampshire.—Shepherd v. Union Mutual Fire Ins. Co. 38 N. H. 232; Folsom v. Belknap County Mutual Fire Ins. Co. 30 N. H. (Fost.) 231.

New York.—Barry v. Hamburg-Bremen Fire Ins. Co. 110 N. Y. 1, 17 N. E. 405; Conover v. Marine Fire Ins. Co. 3 Denio (N. Y.) 254, s. c. 1 Const. (N. Y.) 290; Allen v. Hudson River Mutual Ins. Co. 19 Barb. (N. Y.) 442.

Ohio.—Sun Fire Office v. Clark, 53 Ohio St. 414, 42 N. E. 248; Byers v. Farmers' Ins. Co. 35 Ohio St. 606, 35 Am. Rep. 623.

Oregon.—Koshland v. Hartford Fire Ins. Co. 31 Oreg. 402, 49 Pac. 866, 26 Ins. L. J. 945.

Utah.—Peck v. Girard Fire & Marine Ins. Co. 16 Utah, 121, 67 Am. St. Rep. 600, 51 Pac. 255, 27 Ins. L. J. 265.

West Virginia.—Seylen v. British America Ins. Co. 72 W. Va. 120, 77 S. E. 555, 42 Ins. L. J. 739; Nease v. Ætna Ins. Co. 32 W. Va. 283, 9 S. E. 233.

Wisconsin.—Wolf v. Theresa Village Mutual Fire Ins. Co. 115 Wis. 402, 91 N. W. 1014, 32 Ins. L. J. 139. But see McCullogh v. Indiana Mutual Fire Ins. Co. 8 Blackf. (Ind.) 50. See § 2264a herein. See note 38 L.R.A. 562.

On mortgage as affecting change of title or interest in insured property, see note in 38 L.R.A. 562.

and a mortgage is not a violation of a clause in the policy against the sale, conveyance, alienation, or transfer of the property.[9] A conveyance of the subject-matter of a policy does not bar recovery by insured to the extent of his actual loss, provided it does not exceed the sum insured, if the conveyance be in the nature of a mortgage, or in trust with a resulting trust to the insured.[10] After effecting insurance the insured cannot escape liability for the premium by executing a mortgage upon the property, notwithstanding the policy is conditioned to be void if the title is transferred without the consent of the company, for giving a mortgage does not change or transfer the title.[11]

§ 2264a. Same subject: decisions contra.—Notwithstanding the above rule it is decided in North Carolina that a mortgage given without assurer's consent subsequent to the issue of the policy decreases the interest of assured and increases the hazard to insurer and that it is well settled in that state that such a change in the interest and title forfeits the policy. It is also declared, per Brown, J., that many "cases hold that, in this as well as other states, the common law prevails, and a mortgage deed passes the legal title at once, defeasible by a subsequent performance of its conditions." [12]

§ 2264b. Same subject: effect of accumulated interest on mortgage.—The mere accumulation of interest on a mortgage, of which an insurer was notified at the time of issuing the policy on real estate, will not work a forfeiture of the insurance.[13]

[9] Commercial Ins. Co. v. Spanknable, 52 Ill. 53, 4 Am. Rep. 582. See also Quarier v. Peabody Ins. Co. 10 W. Va. 507, 27 Am. Rep. 582.

[10] Morrison v. Tennessee Marine & Fire Ins. Co. 18 Mo. 262, 59 Am. Dec. 299.

[11] Hartford Steam-Boiler Ins. Co. v. Lasher Stocking Co. 46 Vt. 439, 44 Am. St. Rep. 859, 29 Atl. 629.

On mortgage or instrument given as security as breach of condition as to sole and unconditional ownership, see note in L.R.A.1915D, 812.

[12] Watson v. North Carolina Home Ins. Co. 160 N. Car. 11, 75 S. E. 1105, 41 Ins. L. J. 1817. The court cites no cases from other states, but does cite a number of decisions in that state and declares that the first case there so deciding is Sossaman v. Pamlico Banking & Ins. Co. 78 N. Car. 145. The policy sued on in the principal case was in the standard form (under Rev. sec. 4760), containing the usual provision forfeiting the policy in case of a change in interest or title a second mortgage was given. See also McCullough v. Indiana Mutual Fire Ins. Co. 8 Blackf. (Ind.) 50; Olney v. German Ins. Co. 88 Mich. 94, 13 L.R.A. 684, 26 Am. St. Rep. 281, 50 N. W. 100 (chattel mortgage) Firemen's Fund Ins. Co. v. Barker, 6 Colo. App. 535, 41 Pac. 413; Torrup v. Imperial Fire Ins. Co. 34 N. B. 113, 26 Can. C. S. 585. See note 38 L.R.A. 562.

[13] Fitzgibbons v. Merchants' & Bankers' Mutual Fire Ins. Co. 126 Iowa, 52, 70 L.R.A. 243, 101 N. W. 454.

§ 2265. When mortgage not encumbrance.—The renewal of mortgages existing on property at the time it is insured does not vitiate the policy, nor cause a breach of its condition against future encumbrances during the term of the policy and before loss without notice to and the consent of the company.[14] A mortgage paid but not discharged is not an encumbrance within the meaning of an insurance contract.[15] A policy of fire insurance containing a provision which reads: "It is stipulated and agreed if the property or any part thereof shall hereafter become mortgaged or encumbered . . . without written consent hereon, then this policy shall be null and void," will not be rendered invalid by a mortgage upon the insured premises, unless it is a valid and subsisting lien upon the property. In such a case, where the insured executed a mortgage for the purpose of securing a promissory note, payable more than a year after date, for rent expected to become due under a lease, where the term does not commence for five months in the future, and the insured property is destroyed by fire before the commencement of the term under the lease, such mortgage will not be an encumbrance within such provision of the policy.[16]

§ 2266. Mortgage under different conditions in different policies.—If a policy provides that it shall be void by alienation or sale in whole or in part of the insured property, it has been held that a mortgage is within the prohibition.[17] If there is a stipulation against "alienation or mortgage," a mortgage will avoid the policy.[18] But even though the execution of a mortgage would violate a condition that if the property be sold or transferred or a change takes place in the title or possession, still to avoid the policy it must have been executed subsequently to the writing or execution of the policy.[19] A mortgage is a conveyance of an interest in the property, within the meaning of a clause providing that it shall become void by a change in the interest of the assured, whether by sale, transfer, or conveyance,[20] though where the policy provided that "if the property shall hereafter become mortgaged or encumbered

[14] Kansas Farmers' Fire Ins. Co. v. Saindon, 52 Kan. 486, 39 Am. St. Rep. 356, 35 Pac. 15.

[15] Smith v. Niagara Fire Ins. Co. 60 Vt. 682, 6 Am. St. Rep. 144, 1 L.R.A. 216, 15 Atl. 353.

[16] Rowland v. Home Ins. Co. 82 Kan. 220, 136 Am. St. Rep. 104, 108 Pac. 118.

[17] Abbott v. Hampden Mutual Fire Ins. Co. 30 Me. 414. See §§ 2252 et seq. herein.

[18] Atherton v. Phœnix Ins. Co. 109 Mass. 32.

[19] Cowart v. Capital City Ins. Co. 114 Ala. 356, 62 So. 574, 27 Ins. L. J. 246. See also Pioneer Savings & Loan Co. v. Providence-Washington Ins. Co. 17 Wash. 175, 38 L.R.A. 397n, 49 Pac. 231, 27 Ins. L. J. 144. See § 2247 herein.

[20] East Texas Fire Ins. Co. v. Clarke, 79 Tex. 23, 11 L.R.A. 293, 15 S. W. 166.

this policy shall be null and void," it was held that a mortgage of a part of the property would not defeat the policy, as the words "the property" meant the entire property covered by the policy.[1] If an insurance policy on real and personal property is conditioned to be void if the property shall be mortgaged, and the real estate is mortgaged, the policy is void unless the properties are insured for separate sums, and the risk on the personalty is not affected by the mortgage.[2] A mortgage will also come within the clause rendering the policy void in case of "any encumbrances."[3] Under such a clause it has been held that only voluntary encumbrances are meant, and not such encumbrances as tax liens or judgments.[4] Where the policy contains the provision that an "alienation by mortgage sale or otherwise" will avoid the policy, it has been held that the mortgage will not avoid it until the title has been entirely divested by foreclosure proceedings;[5] and the same is true where the policy stipulates against any change of title by sale, mortgage, or otherwise.[6] If the policy does not contain a clause protecting the mortgagee against acts of the mortgagor or owner, the fact that the mortgagee had not forfeited his rights, does not aid him, where the mortgagor had broken the condition against alienation by a transfer without notice, even though the loss is made payable to said mortgagee as his interest may appear.[7] But the violation by an insured of a provision in the policy that a transfer of the property, without the company's consent will avoid the policy, does not avoid it as to a mortgagee to whom the loss is payable, where there is a further provision that where an interest exists in favor of a mortgagee the conditions of the policy shall apply in the manner expressed in such provisions relating to the interest as shall be written upon, attached, or appended hereto, and there are no such

[1] Phenix Ins. Co. of Brooklyn v. Lorenz, 7 Ind. App. 266, 33 N. E. 444, 34 N. E. 495.

[2] McGowan v. People's Mutual Fire Ins. Co. 54 Vt. 211, 41 Am. Rep. 843. See 38 Am. Rep. 228; 29 Am. Rep. 184; 26 Am. Rep. 373. See also German Ins. Co. v. Fairbank, 32 Neb. 750, 49 N. W. 711.

[3] Edes v. Hamilton Mutual Ins. Co. 3 Allen (85 Mass.) 362; Hankins v. Rockford Ins. Co. 70 Wis. 1, 35 N. W. 34.

[4] Hosford v. Hartford Fire Ins. Co. 127 U. S. 399, 404, 32 L. ed. 196, 8 Sup. Ct. 1199; Baley v. Homestead Fire Ins. Co. 80 N. Y. 21, 36 Am. Rep. 570. But see Hicks v. Farmers' Ins. Co. 71 Iowa, 119, 60 Am. Rep. 781, 32 N. W. 201.

[5] Atherton v. Phœnix Ins. Co. 109 Mass. 32.

[6] Shepherd v. Union Mutual Ins. Co. 38 N. H. 232.

[7] Jaspulski v. Citizens' Mutual Fire Ins. Co. 131 Mich. 603, 92 N. W. 98, 33 Ins. L. J. 244. See § 2248a herein.

On effect of breach of policy of insurance by a mortgagor on rights of mortgagee, see notes in 18 L.R.A. (N.S.) 197; 25 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1226; and L.R.A.1915C, 758.

provisions.[8] Where one holding the legal title to a vessel mortgages her for repairs, and advances upon her, given without knowledge or consent of her equitable owner, and in good faith by the mortgagee, without notice of any limitation of the mortgagor's right and authority, a policy of insurance conditioned to be void in case it or the interest insured by it should be sold, assigned, transferred, or pledged without previous consent of the insurers, it will be held void.[9] The giving of a deed of insured property by the owner to a third person, who gives back a defeasance, has been held to constitute a mortgage, and, as such, is not an alienation.[10] If, however, there has been a failure to record the defeasance, the giving of the deed by the insured will avoid the policy.[11] The fact that a fire policy is made payable to a third person, who is mortgagee, as his or her "interest may appear" does not render such third party the insured, and, therefore, if the mortgagor subsequently sells the property to the mortgagee, without notice to the company or its consent, this will be in violation of the condition forbidding any change in the title or possession of the subject of insurance, and will render the policy void, both as to the mortgagor and mortgagee.[12] A provision in a policy to which is attached a slip, making the loss payable to a mortgagee, that the conditions against alienation and change of possession shall apply "in manner expressed in such provisions and conditions of insurance relating to such interest as shall be written upon, attached or appended hereto," does not prevent such provisions being applicable to the mortgagee, although the manner in which they are to be applied is not expressly stated in some writing indorsed upon or attached to the policy, since, in the absence of special agreement indorsed on the policy, all its provisions apply as against a mere appointee of the right of the insurer to the proceeds.[13]

A mortgage given on property by the insured does not effect a change of interest, in violation of a policy which prohibits such change. A "change" of interest or title means a transfer, not an [8] Oakland Home Ins. Co. v. Bank of Commerce, 47 Neb. 717, 36 L.R.A. 673, 66 N. W. 646. See § 2795 herein.

[9] Atherton v. Phœnix Ins. Co. 109 Mass. 32.

[10] Smith v. Monmouth Mutual Fire Ins. Co. 50 Me. 96.

[11] Smith v. Monmouth Mutual Fire Ins. Co. 50 Me. 96; Tomlinson v. Monmouth Mutual Fire Ins. Co. 47 Me. 232.

[12] Scania Ins. Co. v. Johnson, 22 Colo. 476, 45 Pac. 431.

[13] Brecht v. Law Union & Crown Ins. Co. 160 Fed. 399, 87 C. C. A. 351, 18 L.R.A.(N.S.) 197n. See Oakland Home Fire Ins. Co. v. Bank of Commerce, 47 Neb. 717, 36 L.R.A. 673, 66 N. W. 646.

encumbrance.[14] The risk is not increased as a matter of law so as to avoid the insurance by the execution of a mortgage, but whether there has been an increase of risk or not, from the fact that property has been mortgaged since its insurance, is a question of fact for the jury, to be determined by them from the evidence, upon proper instructions from the court.[15]

A mortgage, although in the form of an absolute deed, does not make any change in the title, interest, or possession, of the property of the insured, within the meaning of a provision in a policy that it shall be void in case of such change.[16]

If a policy provides that it shall become forfeited if the property is thereafter mortgaged without the consent of the company, the fact that the property is so mortgaged does not avoid the policy, provided the mortgage is paid off and satisfied prior to the loss, as such payment operates to restore the property to the protection of the policy.[17]

§ 2267. Mortgage an "alteration."—A policy may prohibit any alteration in the title or ownership. Where a clause of this nature is inserted, it has been held that a mortgage will constitute an alteration within the meaning of the clause.[18] So where a policy provided that "all alienations and alterations in the ownership, situation, or state of the property, . . . in any material particular, shall make void the policy," it was held that a mortgage would come within the prohibition, it being an alteration, in that it changed the ownership from a legal title to an equitable one.[19]

§ 2268. Chattel mortgage under alienation clause.—The general principles stated in the preceding sections as to mortgages and their effect upon the policy are much the same in the case of a chattel mortgage. The exact language of the conditions must be carefully considered and construed. A chattel mortgage given upon insured personal property will not avoid a policy containing a provision that the policy shall be void "if any change takes place in title or possession,"[20] provided the insured does not part with the [14] Peck v. Girard Fire & Marine Ins. Co. 16 Utah, 121, 67 Am. St. Rep. 600, 51 Pac. 255.

[15] Collins v. Merchants & Bankers' Ins. Co. 95 Iowa, 500, 58 Am. St. Rep. 438, 64 N. W. 602.

[16] Sun Fire Office v. Clark, 53 Ohio St. 414, 38 L.R.A. 562, 42 N. E. 248; Barry v. Hamburg-Bremen Fire Ins. Co. 110 N. Y. 1, 17 N. E. 405; Peck v. Girard Fire & Marine Ins. Co. 16 Utah, 121, 67 Am. St. Rep. 600, 51 Pac. 255, 27 Ins. L. J. 265; Wolf v. Theresa Village Mutual Fire Ins. Co. 115 Wis. 402, 91 N. W. 1014, 32 Ins. L. J. 139.

[17] Born v. Home Ins. Co. 110 Iowa, 379, 80 Am. St. Rep. 300, 81 N. W. 676. See §§ 2239, 2240 herein.

[18] Hutchins v. Cleveland Mutual Ins. Co. 11 Ohio St. 477.

[19] Edmands v. Mutual Safety Ins. Co. 1 Allen (83 Mass.) 311, 79 Am. Dec. 746.

[20] Taylor v. Merchants and Bankers' Ins. Co. 83 Iowa, 402, 49 N. W.

possession of the property insured.[1] It is held to stand upon the same grounds as the mortgage of the realty, until the insured parts with the possession of the property.[2]

So a condition avoiding the policy if the property insured shall become encumbered by a chattel mortgage is reasonable and valid.[3]

A mortgage on land with all improvements situate thereon, does not constitute a breach of a condition prohibiting an encumbrance by a chattel mortgage of personalty where the insured property is a fixture.[4] So a mortgage upon real estate, machinery and fixtures which are part of the real estate and which is upon its face a real estate mortgage and in the granting part uses the form usually employed in a deed or mortgage of real estate and which is recorded as such under the statute, is not a chattel mortgage within the meaning of that term so as to avoid a policy under a prohibition against so encumbering property.[5] Under the clause that if the property be or become encumbered by a chattel mortgage, a bond or obligation to become effective on the non-payment of rent, is not such a mortgage within the meaning of said provision.[6]

Under a Canada decision, giving a chattel mortgage is a "change of title" avoiding the policy, although it is not a "transfer or change."[7] But a chattel mortgage is also there held to change insured's interest under a condition voiding the policy where interest in property is changed.[8] There is not such joint ownership of insured property as to take a chattel mortgage executed thereon by 994; Hanover Fire Ins. Co. v. Connor, 20 Ill. App. 297; Hennesey v. Manhattan Fire Ins. Co. 28 Hun (N. Y.) 98.

"Chattel mortgage" and "pledge" defined and distinguished, see Palmer v. Mutual Life Ins. Co. of N. Y. 114 Minn. 1, 130 N. W. 250.

[1] Nusbaum v. Northern Ins. Co. 37 Fed. 524; Rice v. Tower, 1 Gray (67 Mass.) 426; Tallman v. Atlantic Fire & Marine Ins. Co. 29 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 71, rev'd 3 Keyes (42 N. Y.) 87, 4 Abb. Dec. 345, 33 How. Pr. 400.

[2] Holbrook v. American Ins. Co. 1 Curt. (U. S. C. C.) 193, Fed. Cas. No. 6,589; Phœnix Ins. Co. v. Lawrence, 4 Met. (61 Ky.) 9, 81 Am. Dec. 521; Van Deusen v. Charter Oak Ins. Co. 1 Rob. (55 N. Y.) 55.

[3] Olney v. German Ins. Co. 88 Mich. 94, 26 Am. St. Rep. 281, 13 L.R.A. 684, 50 N. W. 100. See § 2246a herein.

[4] Rawls v. American Central Ins. Co. 97 S. Car. 189, 81 S. E. 505.

[5] Humboldt Fire Ins. Co. v. W. H. Ashley Silk Co. 185 Fed. 54, 107 C. C. A. 274, 40 Ins. L. J. 757. See Morotock Ins. Co. v. Rodefer, 92 Va. 747, 53 Am. St. Rep. 846, 24 S. E. 393.

[6] Ranlet v. Northwestern National Ins. Co. 157 Cal. 213, 107 Pac. 292, 39 Ins. L. J. 742.

[7] Citizens' Ins. Co. v. Salterio, 23 Supr. Ct. Rep. (Can.) 155, 14 Can. L. T. 274. See Salterio v. Citizens' Ins. Co. (N. S. S. C. 1895) 14 Can. L. T. 403; Salterio v. London (N. S. S. C. 1894) 14 Can. L. T. 476, aff'd 14 Can. L. T. (Can. Supr. Ct.) 274.

[8] Torrup v. Imperial Fire Ins. Co. 26 Can. C. S. 585, 34 N. B. 113.

the insured, out of the operation of a covenant in the policy against encumbrances, where the mortgage was given to a creditor from whom part of the insured property was purchased, upon the insured's interest in the rest of the property.[9] Again, a chattel mortgage to secure a debt operates as an increase of risk.[10] So a policy upon articles of personal property by the owner, made payable to purchase-money creditors, who had retained title to the separate articles sold by them, to secure payment of the purchase price, is forfeited under a clause providing therefor if the property became encumbered by chattel mortgage, where the owner executes to one of the creditors a chattel mortgage upon his interest in the property purchased from another.[11]

§ 2269. Chattel mortgage by partner: change of interest.—The execution of a chattel mortgage by a partner on the partnership chattels, and insured for the benefit of the firm, is such a "change in the interest" in the subject of insurance as will render it void.[12]

§ 2270. Commencement of foreclosure proceedings.—Unless the policy by its terms provides that it shall be void in case of the commencement of foreclosure proceedings, such proceedings will not defeat a recovery thereon if a loss occurs before the actual alienation of the property. The mere fact that foreclosure proceedings have been commenced is not an alienation of the insured's interest, within the meaning of the condition rendering the policy void in case of "change of ownership," [13] or upon a sale or alienation of the insured property.[14] A condition in a policy that it shall be void if, with the knowledge of the insured, foreclosure proceedings be commenced against the subject of insurance, means the institution of suit or judicial proceedings for the enforcement of the mortgage, and waiver of legal delays, or other waiver of a nature to facilitate and expedite legal proceedings when begun does not of itself constitute the institution of judicial proceedings.[15] The phrase "foreclosure proceedings" has been held to refer only to the ordinary proceedings to foreclose a mortgage. Thus, where there was a mechanic's lien filed after the issuance of a policy, and

[9] Hartford Fire Ins. Co. v. Liddell Co. 130 Ga. 8, 14 L.R.A.(N.S.) 168, 60 S. E. 104.

[10] Security Ins. Co. v. Laird, 182 Ala. 121, 62 So. 182.

[11] Hartford Fire Ins. Co. v. Liddell Co. 130 Ga. 8, 14 L.R.A.(N.S.) 168, 60 S. E. 104.

[12] Olney v. German Ins. Co. 88 Mich. 94, 26 Am. St. Rep. 281, 13 L.R.A. 684, 50 N. W. 100. See also East Texas Fire Ins. Co. v. Clarke, 79 Tex. 23, 11 L.R.A. 293, 15 S. W. 166.

[13] Phenix Ins. Co. v. Union Mutual Life Ins. Co. 101 Ind. 392.

[14] Marts v. Cumberland Ins. Co. 44 N. J. L. 478.

[15] Stenzel v. Philadelphia Fire Ins. Co. 110 La. 1019, 98 Am. St. Rep. 481, 35 So. 271.

in an action brought to enforce the same, a judgment was rendered and an execution issued, in pursuance of which the premises were advertised for sale, it was held that this was an exceptional statutory proceeding, and not within the meaning of the phrase.[16]

Where the policy is forfeited under such a provision, the company may, of course, waive the forfeiture. So where the company had notice of such proceedings, and thereafter required the insured to appear and be examined under oath in accordance with the provision of the policy, it was held that this act on the part of the company constituted a waiver of the forfeiture.[17] The policy may, however, expressly provide that the "commencement of foreclosure proceedings" shall avoid the policy, and, when it is so provided, such proceedings will, subject to certain qualifications or exceptions, have that effect.[18]

§ 2270a. Same subject: validity and construction of clause: "knowledge:" "be commenced."—The clause voiding the policy, if with assured's knowledge foreclosure proceedings are commenced, or notice be given of sale by virtue of any mortgage, etc., is reasonable, valid, binding and enforceable.[19] So a condition that the policy shall be void if the property is alienated without the consent of the insurer, and that the commencement of foreclosure proceedings shall be deemed an alienation, is not void as against public policy.[20] It is generally conceded that as a rule, in case foreclosure proceedings are commenced because of inability to redeem, the temptation is increased to realize upon the property by destroying it, and from the funds obtained thereby to pay off the encumbrance and, therefore, the moral hazard in such cases has become an important consideration with insurers as it has an appreciable effect upon losses and consequently upon the insurance business, and furnishes an important consideration in determining whether such risks shall be continued.[1]

[16] Colt v. Phœnix Fire Ins. Co. 54 N. Y. 595.

[17] Titus v. Glens Falls Ins. Co. 81 N. Y. 410, 8 Abb. N. C. (N. Y.) 315.

[18] Meadows v. Hawkeye Ins. Co. 62 Iowa, 387, 17 N. W. 600; Quinlan v. Providence-Washington Ins. Co. 61 Hun (N. Y.) 618, 15 N. Y. Supp. 317, 21 Ins. L. J. 650, 39 N. Y. St. Rep. 820, aff'd 133 N. Y. 356, 28 Am. St. Rep. 645, 31 N. E. 31.

[19] Liverpool & London & Globe Ins. Co. v. Lavine, 5 Ala. App. 392, 59 So. 336, 41 Ins. L. J. 1621. See § 2246a herein.

[20] Findlay v. Union Mutual Fire Ins. Co. 74 Vt. 211, 93 Am. St. Rep. 885, 52 Atl. 429.

[1] Liverpool & London & Globe Ins. Co. v. Lavine, 5 Ala. App. 392, 59 So. 336, 41 Ins. L. J. 1621, 1623; J. I. Kelly Co. v. St. Paul Fire & Marine Ins. Co. 56 Fla. 456, 47 So. 472, 38 Ins. L. J. 215, 229; Hartford Fire Ins. Co. v. Hollis, 58 Fla. 268, 50 So. 985, 39 Ins. L. J. 381, 389; Findlay v. Union Mutual Fire Ins. Co. 74 Vt. 211, 93 Am. St. Rep. 885, 52 Atl. 429, 31 Ins. L. J. 986.

The words "knowledge" and "notice," in the clause avoiding the policy if with the knowledge of assured foreclosure proceedings be commenced or notice given of sale of the property by virtue of any lien or encumbrance, qualify said condition, and are construed against insurer and mean actual knowledge and actual notice, and the words are not synonymous.[2] So where assured has neither actual nor constructive knowledge of the foreclosure proceedings in question, the policy is not avoided.[3] And a condition that a policy shall be void "unless otherwise provided by agreement indorsed thereon or added thereto, if, with the knowledge of insured, foreclosure proceedings be commenced, or notice given of any property covered by this policy, by virtue of any mortgage or trust deed," has reference to the acquisition of knowledge by assured that foreclosure proceedings have been commenced and not to the time when such knowledge may be obtained, if acquired before the loss occurs; and whenever he acquired knowledge of the proceeding, and not before, the policy is avoided if he fails to obtain assurer's consent thereto in accordance with the contract stipulations.[4] Nor is this condition limited to foreclosure proceedings of which the insured had notice at the time or before they were commenced, but covers all such proceedings of the commencement of which he acquired knowledge at any time before the loss occurred.[5] Said condition has, however, reference only to the future, and the insurance is not forfeited where such proceedings were pending when the policy was issued.[6] And where at the time of the application no such proceeding had been commenced, but between the time thereof and the date of the issuance of the policy proceedings of this nature were instituted, it was held that they did not come within the provision of the policy as to foreclosure proceedings, as they were not commenced after the issuance of the policy.[7]

Again, knowledge of such proceedings need not antedate or coexist with their commencement, but is required only when the papers are served, and the forfeiture takes effect at that time.[8] So where the code provides that an action is commenced by the service

[2] Funk v. Anchor Fire Ins. Co. 171 Iowa, 331, 153 N. W. 1048.

[3] Foiles v. Detroit Fire & Marine Ins. Co. 176 Mich. 79, 141 N. W. 879, 42 Ins. L. J. 1143.

[4] Schroeder v. Imperial Ins. Co. 132 Cal. 18, 84 Am. St. Rep. 17, 63 Pac. 1074, J. I. Kelly Co. v. St. Paul Fire & Marine Ins. Co. 56 Fla. 456, 47 So. 742, 38 Ins. L. J. 215, 230.

[5] Delaware Ins. Co. v. Greer, 120 Fed. 916, 57 C. C. A. 188, 61 L.R.A. 137.

[6] Orient Ins. Co. v. Burrus, 23 Ky. L. Rep. 656, 63 S. W. 453.

[7] Day v. Hawkeye Ins. Co. 72 Iowa, 597, 34 N. W. 435.

[8] Norris v. Hartford Fire Ins. Co. 55 S. Car. 450, 74 Am. St. Rep. 765, 33 S. E. 566.

of summons, then, in so far as knowledge or notice of such action is concerned, it is commenced by service on defendant, and is within a condition voiding the policy if foreclosure proceedings are begun with assured's knowledge, and this is so even though the code also provides that an attempt to commence an action is equivalent to the commencement thereof when the summons is delivered to the sheriff with the intent that it shall be actually served.[9] A suit in foreclosure is commenced when a petition is served on the insurer, within the meaning of a condition in a policy making it void on the commencement of such suit;[10] and the service of the petition, and not the entry of the suit in court, constitutes commencement of foreclosure proceedings.[11]

§ 2270b. Same subject: advertisement for sale: "proceedings on sale:" notice of sale.—Insurer is liable for a loss, although the property insured is advertised for sale under a trust deed before the fire and loss, provided the insured has no notice or knowledge of such advertised sale, except such as is obtained from reading the advertisement before the fire, which advertisement the agent of the insurer has also seen, and the policy has not been canceled nor any part of the unearned premium returned to the insured prior to the fire.[12] But it is also held that where the property is advertised for sale under the mortgage soon after the insurance, the policy is terminated.[13] And if a policy upon mortgaged property expressly provides that it shall become absolutely void upon the commencement of proceedings for the foreclosure of the mortgage, without the written consent of the insurance company, and the mortgage, by its terms, is subject to foreclosure if the taxes on the mortgaged property are permitted to become delinquent, the policy becomes void when the property is advertised for sale on account of such default, unless the breach is waived.[14] In the case deciding as above, the court, per Burgess, J., considers a Michigan decision,[15] and says: "In that case, as in the case at bar, the only step taken towards foreclosure of the mortgage was to advertise the property for sale in accordance with its provisions; and the supreme

[9] Norris v. Hartford Fire Ins. Co. 55 S. Car. 450, 33 S. E. 566, 28 Ins. L. J. 757.

[10] Findlay v. Union Mutual Fire Ins. Co. 74 Vt. 211, 93 Am. St. Rep. 885, 52 Atl. 429.

[11] Findlay v. Union Mutual Fire Ins. Co. 74 Vt. 211, 52 Atl. 429, 93 Am. St. Rep. 885, 31 Ins. L. J. 986.

[12] Horton v. Home Ins. Co. 122 N. Car. 498, 65 Am. St. Rep. 717, 29 S. E. 944.

[13] Hayes v. United States Fire Ins. Co. 132 N. Car. 702, 44 S. E. 404, 32 Ins. L. J. 764.

[14] Springfield Steam Laundry Co. v. Traders' Ins. Co. 151 Mo. 90, 74 Am. St. Rep. 521, 52 S. W. 238.

[15] Michigan State Ins. Co. v. Lewis, 30 Mich. 41.

court, in its opinion, in passing upon the question as to whether or not the advertisement of the property for sale was a 'proceeding for sale' within the meaning of the policy said: 'The words seem to us to be satisfied by confining them to the actual offer of the premises for sale at the time specified in the notice. In strictness, it may be said that such an offer is the first proceeding for a sale. The previous notice is only a step which is to put it in the power of the mortgagee to make a sale at the time fixed upon if payment shall not sooner be made. The notice, in a certain sense, is undoubtedly a proceeding for a sale, and so would be a commencement of a suit in equity. Either proceeding may possibly result in a sale; but while either method of foreclosure is in progress, and before the right to make a sale has been reached, it is, in substance, rather a proceeding for the collection of the mortgage moneys than a proceeding for a sale; and it can never be known, until the day fixed in the notice shall arrive without actual payment being made, that a sale can take place at all.' " The court, however, while it approves said rule, distinguishes that case from the one before it. So the service upon insured before loss of a notice of sale under a deed of trust, avoids the policy under a condition so providing.[16] But a condition in a policy that it shall be void if, with the knowledge of the insured, notice of sale of any of the insured property shall be given by virtue of any mortgage or trust deed, has reference to extrajudicial enforcement of a mortgage by means of notice to the mortgagor, and is inoperative in a state where such mode of enforcing mortgages is not known to its law.[17]

§ 2270c. Same subject: when policy avoided, when not: instances. —The institution of foreclosure proceedings against the real estate only, will not work a forfeiture of an insurance policy covering real and personal property, which provides that it shall be forfeited by the institution of foreclosure proceedings against the "property insured." [18] And the mere fact of the commencement of foreclosure proceedings does not, as a matter of law, constitute such a substantial increase of risk that the contract will be avoided under a clause having reference generally to any increase of risk; [19] nor does an action to foreclose, brought without insured's consent, breach a condition as to involving the property in litigation without notice

[16] Medley v. German Alliance Ins. Co. 55 W. Va. 342, 47 S. E. 101.

[17] Stenzel v. Philadelphia Fire Ins. Co. 110 La. 1019, 98 Am. St. Rep. 481, 35 So. 271.

[18] Fitzgibbons v. Merchants' & Bankers' Mutual Fire Ins. Co. 126 Iowa, 52, 70 L.R.A. 243, 101 N. W. 454.

[19] Liverpool & London & Globe Ins. Co. v. Lavine, 5 Ala. App. 392, 59 So. 336, 41 Ins. L. J. 1621.

to or consent of assurer.[20] And neither the existence of a vendor's lien on insured property, nor the institution of proceedings to foreclose it, avoids the policy under a clause making it void if the interest of the insured be other than unconditional or sole ownership, or if foreclosure proceedings be commenced with notice of sale by virtue of any mortgage or trust deed.[1] And where the property is mortgaged with assurer's consent, the commencement of foreclosure proceedings only confirms the lien so consented to, creates no new lien and does not avoid the policy.[2] Where insurance is taken on mortgaged property with knowledge that the mortgage is overdue, and through an accidental omission on the part of the agent the insurance is not made payable to the mortgagee, the insured being ignorant of the English language and relying upon the agent, the mere commencement of foreclosure proceedings will not avoid the policy, notwithstanding it provides that it shall become void if any proceedings are taken to foreclose a lien upon the property.[3] And the policy is not voided in the hands of the mortgagee by commencement of foreclosure proceedings under a mortgage clause, providing that the policy will not be avoided by any act or neglect of the mortgagor or owner of the property.[4] So where the loss is payable to the mortgagee under a policy to the mortgagor and it is stipulated that the former's interest is protected against acts of the latter or the owner, a liberal construction will be given to such mortgage clause so that a breach of terms relating especially to the risk between mortgagor and insurer will not invalidate the policy in a suit by the mortgagee, unless the condition violated is consistent with said clause, and the commencement of a suit to foreclose and the appointment of a receiver does not avoid the policy as the forfeiture clause is inapplicable to the risks as between insurer and mortgagee whose interest is not impaired by such proceedings.[5] And no duty is imposed upon the mortgagee in so far [20] Farmers' & Merchants' Ins. Co. v. Newman, 58 Neb. 504, 78 N. W. 533.

[1] Southern Ins. Co. v. Estes, 106 Tenn. 472, 52 L.R.A. 915, 62 S. W. 149.

[2] Funk v. Anchor Fire Ins. Co. 171 Iowa, 331, 153 N. W. 1048.

[3] Butz v. Ohio Farmers' Ins. Co. 76 Mich. 263, 15 Am. St. Rep. 316, 42 N. W. 1119.

[4] Jones v. Phœnix Ins. Co. 94 Kan. 235, 46 Pac. 354. See § 2795 herein.

[5] Lancashire Ins. Co. v. Boardman, 58 Kan. 339, 49 Pac. 92, 27 Ins. L. J. 470. "Insurer must have known when attaching the mortgage clause that it must become necessary for the mortgagee, in order to protect his interest under the mortgage, to commence foreclosure proceedings; but this would not have a tendency to diminish the interest of the mortgagee in the property, but rather to increase it. It is settled that an increase of the interest of the assured is no ground of forfeiture of the policy." Id.—Allen, J. See also § 2248a herein.

as the mortgagor and his policy is concerned to obtain assurer's consent to foreclose.[6]

Where a mortgage clause is attached to a policy, making the loss payable to the mortgagee, as his interest may appear, and providing that, as to his interest, the policy shall not be invalidated by any act or neglect of the mortgagor, and the policy also contains a condition that, upon commencement of proceedings to foreclose, or upon a sale under a deed of trust, or if any change takes place in the title or possession, whether by legal process, judicial decree, or voluntary transfer, the policy shall be void, such condition is to be construed as operating against the mortgagor only, and not as avoiding the policy as against the mortgagee on the commencement of a suit by him to foreclose his mortgage, nor by the appointment of a receiver in such suit to take possession of the mortgaged premises.[7] If a policy of insurance declares that if an interest shall exist under it in favor of a mortgagee, the conditions thereof shall apply in the manner expressed in such provision of the insurance relating to such interest as shall be written upon, or attached, or appended thereto, and such policy is by an indorsement made payable to the mortgagee as his interest may appear, his right to recover is not affected by a condition in the policy that it shall be void, if, with knowledge of the assured, foreclosure proceedings shall be commenced.[8] Again, a mortgage clause that the loss, if any, shall be payable to the mortgagee as his interest may appear, "subject to the terms and conditions of the policy," does not relieve the insurer from liability upon a policy containing a condition that it shall be avoided by proceedings to foreclose any mortgage on the property; the insuring of a mortgage lien being sufficient indication that the company must have contemplated a possible or probable foreclosure. When an insurance contract prepared by the insurer contains ambiguous or inconsistent provisions, it will be construed so as to uphold rather than defeat the indemnity.[9] If the policy is assigned to the mortgagee to whom the loss is payable, to whom the policy conditions apply, and he commences foreclosure proceedings, the insurance is forfeited.[10] And the commencement of foreclosure proceedings defeats the interest of a mortgagee in a policy of insurance on the mortgaged property, containing a mortgage clause making

[6] Findlay v. Longe, 81 Vt. 523, 71 Atl. 829.

[7] Lancaster Ins. Co. v. Boardman, 58 Kan. 339, 62 Am. St. Rep. 621, 49 Pac. 92.

[8] Christenson v. Fidelity Ins. Co. 117 Iowa, 77, 94 Am. St. Rep. 286, 90 N. W. 583.

[9] Citizens' State Bank of Chautauqua v. Shawnee Fire Ins. Co. 91 Kan. 18, 49 L.R.A.(N.S.) 972n, 137 Pac. 78.

[10] Algase Co. v. Corporation of Royal Exchange Assur. of London, England, 68 Wash. 173, 122 Pac. 986.

the loss, if any, payable to the mortgagee as his interest might appear, but providing that the entire policy should be void if, with the knowledge of the insured, foreclosure proceedings should be commenced, although another clause provided that if, with the consent of the company, an interest under the policy should exist in favor of a mortgagee, the conditions thereinbefore contained should apply in the manner expressed in such provisions relating to such interest as should be written upon or attached to the policy, and there was no stipulation attached which declared that the insurance in favor of the mortgagee was subject to the same terms and conditions as that of the mortgagor.[11] And, where an insured mortgagor endeavored to make arrangements to postpone the institution of proceedings to foreclose the mortgage upon the insured property, and was notified of the commencement of the foreclosure proceedings the day they were commenced, a failure to procure from insurer an agreement to be indorsed on or added to the policy giving insurer's consent to a continuation of the risk notwithstanding the foreclosure proceedings renders the policy void in the absence of a waiver.[12]

§ 2271. "Entry of a foreclosure of a mortgage:" advertisement and sale: construction.—The clause that "entry of a foreclosure of a mortgage" will avoid the policy is held not to import a consummated foreclosure or transaction. So where a policy of fire insurance on personal property contained a proviso that "if the title of the property is transferred or changed . . . this policy shall be void, and the entry of a foreclosure of a mortgage . . . shall be deemed an alienation of the property, and this company shall not be holden for loss and damage thereafter," it was held that notice of foreclosure having been duly served, certified, and recorded when the fire occurred, the policy was avoided.[13]

[11] Delaware Ins. Co. v. Greer, 120 Fed. 916, 57 C. C. A. 188, 61 L.R.A. 137. See § 2795 herein.

[12] J. I. Kelly Co. v. St. Paul Fire & Marine Ins. Co. 56 Fla. 456, 47 So. 742, 38 Ins. L. J. 215.

[13] MacIntyre v. Norwich Ins. Co. 102 Mass. 230, 3 Am. Rep. 458. In this case the court said: "The parties in their contract have taken pains to avoid saying simply that 'the foreclosure of a mortgage' shall be deemed an alienation. There would be no occasion for them to say that, inasmuch as the law would plainly have said it for them. The meaning of the policy, in our judgment, is that something short of an actual and complete foreclosure shall be considered for the purposes of their contract as a transfer or change of title, and that an entry for foreclosure, or an act which of itself and without any further formality or process on the part of the mortgagee will deprive the insured of all right and title in the property unless he pay the debt, shall be deemed sufficient to terminate the risk." Compare Stainer v. Royal Ins. Co. of Liverpool, 13 Pa. Super. Ct. 25.

If the risk is stipulated to be avoided by the entry of a decree of foreclosure, the advertisement and sale, under a power contained in the mortgage, is not a violation of the contract, where a decree must be ratified by the court to pass title. The sale contemplated is a consummated transaction, by which the interest of the assured is devested.[14]

§ 2272. Decree of foreclosure: sale thereunder.—A mortgagee's interest in property insured by him is increased, instead of diminished, by foreclosure, and hence the foreclosure is not a breach of the condition in the policy that it is forfeited by a change in title to the property insured.[15] Where a policy conditioned to be void in case of alienation of the property declared that "a judgment in foreclosure proceedings" should be deemed an alienation, it was held that a decree in a foreclosure suit without further proceedings was not an alienation.[16] The mere rendition of a judgment against a property owner, does not change his interest in the property, within the meaning of an insurance policy which is to become void if any change takes place in the interest, title, or possession of the subject of insurance, although the judgment is entered in a foreclosure proceeding.[17] If it is stipulated that if the property be sold or transferred, or if any change of title or possession takes place, either by legal process, judicial decree, or voluntary transfer, the policy shall be void, it is held that the subsequent execution and statutory foreclosure of a mortgage will not defeat a recovery upon the policy for a loss which occurs before the time for redemption has expired.[18] The general rule seems to be, under such a clause as this, that until the actual delivery of the deed or the expiration of the period for redemption by which the foreclosure proceedings became absolute, the policy is not avoided. So long as the mortgagor retains the equity of redemption, there is no sale, transfer, or alienation of the property, and he may recover under the policy.[19] By the delivery of the deed, however, the policy is avoided.[20] Where [14] Hanover Fire Ins. Co. v. Brown, 77 Md. 64, 39 Am. St. Rep. 386, 27 Atl. 314, 29 Atl. 989.

[15] Esch v. Home Ins. Co. 78 Iowa, 334, 16 Am. St. Rep. 443, 43 N. W. 229.

[16] Kane v. Hibernia Mutual Ins. Co. 38 N. J. Law, 441, 20 Am. Rep. 409.

[17] Kelley (use of Chisholm) v. People's National Fire Ins. Co. 262 Ill. 158, 50 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1164, 104 N. E. 188.

On judgment as change of interest or title, see note in 50 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1164.

[18] Loy v. Home Ins. Co. 24 Minn. 315, 31 Am. Rep. 346.

[19] McKissick v. Mill Owner's Fire Ins. Co. 50 Iowa, 116; Strong v. Manufacturers Ins. Co. 10 Pick. (27 Mass.) 40, 20 Am. Dec. 507; Sussex County Mutual Ins. Co. v. Woodruff, 26 N. J. L. 541; Marts v. Cumberland Ins. Co. 44 N. J. Law, 478; Haight v. Continental Ins. Co. 92 N. Y. 51.

[20] Bishop v. Clay Fire Ins. Co. 45

the policy is issued to the mortgagee, it is held that a foreclosure by him and the vesting of the entire title in him will not affect his rights under the policy;[1] but where the policy was to the mortgagor, and assigned by him, with the consent of the company, to the mortgagee, it was held that foreclosure proceedings by the mortgagee would avoid the policy.[2] A mortgage clause that the loss, if any, shall be payable to the mortgagee as his interest may appear, "subject to the terms and conditions of the policy," does not relieve the insurer from liability, upon a policy containing a condition that it shall be avoided by proceedings to foreclose any mortgage on the property, although the mortgagee foreclosed and caused the property to be sold and was holding a certificate of purchase, the period of redemption having expired since the fire, the issuing of a mortgage lien being sufficient indication that the company must have contemplated a possible or probable foreclosure.[3] Where the mortgage contained a power to sell upon breach of condition and it is foreclosed and the mortgagee becomes the purchaser at the sale, the policy is avoided, although the policy is payable to the mortgagee as his interest may appear.[4]

§ 2273. Notice may operate as consent to mortgage.—The sale of the property insured, and the assent of the insurer thereto, together with notice to the local agent, of a purchase money mortgage, is sufficient to operate as an assent on the part of the insurer to the giving of the mortgage, though the policy of insurance contains a provision that if the property shall be thereafter mortgaged without the consent of the company being indorsed thereon, it shall become null and void, and that no agent shall have power to alter Conn. 430; Commercial Ins. Co. v. Scammon, 102 Ill. 46.

[1] Bailey v. American Central Ins. Co. 4 McCrary (U. S. C. C.) 221, 13 Fed. 250; Humphrey v. Hartford Fire Ins. Co. 15 Blatchf. (U. S. C. C.) 504, Fed. Cas. No. 6875; Esch v. Home Ins. Co. 78 Iowa, 334, 16 Am. St. Rep. 443, 43 N. W. 229; Bragg v. New England Fire Ins. Co. 25 N. H. 289; Heaton v. Manhattan Fire Ins. Co. 7 R. I. 502.

[2] Brunswick Saving Inst. v. Commercial Ins. Co. 68 Me. 313, 28 Am. Rep. 56. See also Gaskin v. Phœnix Ins. Co. 6 Allen (11 N. B.) 429.

[3] Citizens' State Bank v. Shawnee Fire Ins. Co. 91 Kan. 18, 49 L.R.A. (N.S.) 972, 137 Pac. 78.

[4] Boston Co-operative Bank v. American Central Ins. Co. 201 Mass. 350, 23 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1147n, 87 N. E. 594, 38 Ins. L. J. 599.

As to notice to insurer and conveyance from mortgagor to mortgagee under foreclosure, see Pioneer Savings & Loan Co. v. St. Paul Fire & Marine Ins. Co. 68 Minn. 170, 70 N. W. 979, 26 Ins. L. J. 826, considered under § 2248a herein.

On acquisition by a mortgage of title to property covered by a policy protecting mortgagee's interest as breach of condition against sale or transfer of title, see note in 23 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1147.

or change the terms of the policy, or make any indorsement thereon.[5]

§ 2274. Judgment generally: mechanic's lien: judgment lien.—The policy may provide that if any judgment is obtained against the insured the policy shall be void, unless the consent of the company is given to the continuance of the policy. Such a provision will be binding upon the insured,[6] and the mere entry of judgment will avoid the policy, though in fact no execution could be issued upon such judgment,[7] and though the entry was made without the actual knowledge of the insured.[8] If, however, there is no provision in the policy against liens or judgments, it has been held that no lien placed upon the property will avoid the policy.[9] The entry of a judgment setting aside, in favor of creditors, a voluntary deed, does not change the ownership of the grantee from sole and unconditional, within the meaning of a policy of insurance in favor of the grantee, which is to be void in case the assured has not such ownership.[10] Conditions in a fire policy prohibiting encumbrances and levies without the consent of the insurer, and declaring the policy to be void in case of a breach thereof, apply only to voluntary liens and levies, and not to involuntary encumbrances, such as tax liens and judgments procured in invitum. The violation of such conditions does not render the policy absolutely void, but voidable only at the election of the insurer.[11] Judgment liens against the property at the time the insurance is effected are not within the meaning of the provision avoiding the policy, "if there be a mortgage, bill of sale, or other lien" on the property insured, without the fact being indorsed on the policy.[12] So where the insured property is of such a character, as where it constitutes part of a homestead, that judgment liens will not attach, the insurance is not forfeited by judgments against insured.[13] The filing of a

[5] German Ins. Co. v. York, 48 Kan. 488, 30 Am. St. Rep. 313, 29 Pac. 586. Examine Pennsylvania Fire Ins. Co. v. Faires, 13 Tex. Civ. App. 111, 35 S. W. 55.

[6] Egan v. Mutual Ins. Co. 5 Denio (N. Y.) 326.

On judgment as change of interest or title, see note in 50 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1164.

[7] Seybert v. Pennsylvania Mutual Fire Ins. Co. 103 Pa. St. 282.

[8] Pennsylvania Mutual Fire Ins. Co. v. Schmidt, 119 Pa. 449, 13 Atl. 317, 21 W. N. C. 258, 45 L. J. 362, 5 Lanc. Rev. 315, 5 Pa. (L. ed.) 557, 11 Cent. Rep. 845.

[9] Hosford v. Hartford Fire Ins. Co. 127 U. S. 404, 32 L. ed. 198, 8 Sup. Ct. 1202.

[10] Steinmeyer v. Steinmeyer, 64 S. Car. 413, 59 L.R.A. 319, 42 S. E. 184.

[11] Dover Glass Works Co. v. American Fire Ins. Co. 1 Marv. (Del.) 32, 65 Am. St. Rep. 264, 29 Atl. 1039.

[12] Georgia Home Ins. Co. v. Schild, 73 Miss. 128, 19 So. 94.

[13] Smith v. Continental Ins. Co. 108 Iowa, 382, 79 N. W. 126, 28 Ins. L. J. 534.

mechanic's lien will not avoid a policy conditioned to be void in case of "encumbrances."[14] Changes in the form of an existing lien, do not, as a matter of law, amount to an increase of hazard.[15] Where the policy provided that in case the property should be "levied on or taken into possession or custody under any proceeding in law or equity" it should be void, it was held that the filing of a mechanic's lien, the rendering of a judgment thereon, the issuing of the execution, and the advertising of the property for sale were not acts avoiding the policy, within the meaning of the conditions, and that the insured could recover for a loss occurring subsequent to such acts but before the day of sale.[16] If property against which mechanics' liens have been filed is insured, the policy forbidding "a change in the interest, title, or possession of the subject of insurance, whether by legal process or judgment, or by voluntary act of the insured, or otherwise," a foreclosure of the liens, a sale of the property under execution, and the issuance of a certificate of purchase to the judgment creditor, before the loss, do not change the interest of the insured, nor show any increase of hazard where the period of redemption had not expired at the time of the fire.[17]

§ 2275. Sale of equity of redemption: where policy assigned to mortgagee.—If an owner of insured property, after executing a mortgage thereon and assigning the policy to the mortgagee with the consent of the company, subsequently sells the equity of redemption, such sale will avoid a policy which is conditioned to be void in case of "an alienation or a sale" of the insured property,[18] unless the mortgagee has become liable for the assessments.[19]

§ 2275a. Expiration of time limit for redemption not an alienation.—If property is insured for the benefit of the mortgagee, as his interest may appear, after the mortgage on the property has been duly foreclosed, and before the time for redemption has expired and the premium is paid by the mortgagee, the expiration of the time in which redemption may be made from the mortgage sale does not work an alienation of the premises so as to avoid the policy, although the policy provides that the mortgagee shall notify the [14] Green v. Homestead Ins. Co. 17 Hun (N. Y.) 467. But see Redmon v. Phœnix Ins. Co. 51 Wis. 292, 37 Am. Rep. 830, 8 N. W. 226.

[15] Greenlee v. North British Ins. Co. 102 Iowa, 427, 63 Am. St. Rep. 455, 71 N. W. 534, 26 Ins. L. J. 801.

[16] Manufacturers' & Merchants' Ins. Co. v. O'Maley, 82 Pa. St. 400, 22 Am. Rep. 769.

[17] Greenlee v. North British Ins. Co. 102 Iowa, 427, 63 Am. St. Rep. 455, 32 N. E. 1063, 26 Ins. L. J. 801.

[18] Lawrence v. Holyoke Ins. Co. 11 Allen (93 Mass.) 387; Smith v. Union Ins. Co. 120 Mass. 90; Hoxsie v. Providence Ins. Co. 6 R. I. 517.

[19] Francis v. Butler Mutual Fire Ins. Co. 7 R. I. 159.

insurer of any change of ownership of the insured property, and that such change shall be noted on the policy.[20]

§ 2275b. Transfer of equitable title.—A transfer of the equitable title to property will avoid a policy of insurance thereon, which provides that it shall become void if any change takes place in the title or possession of the property, in a state where the beneficial interest passes with the equitable title.[1]

§ 2276. Writ of attachment: "process."—A condition against change of possession by legal "process" is broken when an officer takes exclusive possession of the property by virtue of a writ of attachment issued according to law, even though it afterward appears that there was no ground for issuing such a writ and the attachment was dissolved after loss. Such a condition includes an involuntary as well as a voluntary change of possession by writ or process.[2]

But the levy of attachments and subsequent executions on property without increasing the hazard does not avoid an insurance policy, which provides that it shall be void for change of interest, title, or possession, except change of occupants without increase of hazard.[3] Nor does the levy of an attachment upon land without change of possession, the buildings appurtenant thereto being insured, constitute such a change of interest, title or possession as to avoid the insurance.[4] The exception of change of occupants without increase of hazard, in a clause voiding the policy if any change other than by death of assured take place in the interest, title or possession, applies to insurance of personalty as well as realty so that a levy of attachment and possession of the officer thereunder followed by subordinate constructive levy of an execution and by appointment of a receiver under the attachment proceedings, who never obtained possession is not in the absence of proof or inference that the hazard was increased such a change as avoids the policy.[5]

§ 2277. "Levied on:" "taken into possession or custody:" construction.—The phrases "levied on" and "taken into possession or [20] Washburn Mill Co. v. Fire Association of Philadelphia, 60 Minn. 68, 51 Am. St. Rep. 500, 61 N. W. 828.

[1] Cottingham v. Firemen's Fund Ins. Co. 90 Ky. 439, 9 L.R.A. 627, 14 S. W. 417.

[2] Carey v. German-American Ins. Co. 84 Wis. 80, 36 Am. St. Rep. 907, 20 L.R.A. 267, 54 N. W. 18.

[3] Herman v. Katz, 101 Tenn. 118, 41 L.R.A. 700, 47 S. W. 86.

[4] O'Toole v. Ohio German Fire Ins. Co. 159 Mich. 187, 24 L.R.A. (N.S.) 802n, 123 N. W. 795.

On levy of execution, attachment, or other process upon insured property as change in interest, title, or possession, see note in 24 L.R.A. (N.S.) 803.

[5] Herman Bros. v. Katz Bros. 101 Tenn. 118, 41 L.R.A. 700, 47 S. W. 86.

custody" have the same meaning in the clause of an insurance policy conditioned that the insurance shall cease at the time the "property shall be levied on or taken into possession or custody," and mean an actual levy and change of possession. Mere notice of levy without taking possession of goods will not defeat the policy.[6] "Levied on" does not ordinarily refer to the proceedings commenced by a company for a sale of property. It has more than a technical meaning. It is held to refer to an actual seizure and change of possession.[7] So the mere levying of an attachment on land, without change of possession, does not effect such a change of interest or title as to avoid a policy of insurance on the buildings located thereon.[8] So in Kentucky, it has been held that it must be such a levy as devests the insured of his title.[9] And the issuing of an execution and its levy upon personal property do not constitute such a change in the interest, title, or possession of the assured as avoids the policy under a condition declaring that it shall be void if any change other than by the death of the assured takes place in the interest, title, or possession of the subject of the insurance, whether by legal process or judgment, or by voluntary act of insured or otherwise.[10] If an officer seizes and possesses himself of chattels under a writ of attachment, in such a manner as to enable him to maintain trespass or replevin against a wrongful taker, he takes exclusive possession and effects a change of possession by legal process within a forfeiture clause of the policy if any change takes place in the title or possession by sale, legal process, or judicial decree.[11] If the levy is a wrongful one, being made upon the property as that of another person, it will not avoid the policy upon such property.[12] The word "attached" in a forfeiture clause of an insurance policy on a dwelling-house and barn, providing that the insurance shall cease "if the property hereby insured shall be mortgaged, levied on, attached, or taken into possession or custody under any proceeding at law or equity, or change takes place in title or possession;" has special reference to personal property,

[6] Commonwealth Ins. Co. v. Berger, 42 Pa. St. 285, 82 Am. Dec. 504.

[7] Manufacturers' & Merchants' Ins. Co. v. O'Maley, 82 Pa. St. 400, 22 Am. Rep. 769; Rice v. Tower, 1 Gray (67 Mass.) 426.

[8] O'Toole v. Ohio German Fire Ins. Co. 159 Mich. 187, 24 L.R.A.(N.S.) 802n, 123 N. W. 795.

[9] Pennebaker v. Tomlinson, 1 Tenn. Ch. 598.

[10] Walradt v. Phœnix Ins. Co. 136 N. Y. 375, 32 Am. St. Rep. 752, 32 N. E. 1063.

[11] Carey v. German American Ins. Co. 84 Wis. 80, 20 L.R.A. 267, 54 N. W. 18.

[12] Philadelphia Fire & Life Ins. Co. v. Mills, 44 Pa. St. 241, 84 Am. Dec. 437.

and the insurance on the house and barn, though attachments have been levied on the property, does not cease until title to the land has been devested by a sale on execution prior to a loss.[13] Where the policy provided that it should be void in case of "the issuing or levy of an execution without actual possession against any kind of property insured," it was held that real estate was not intended by the prohibition.[14]

§ 2278. Levy of execution: sale on execution.—A levy of execution on insured property is not an alienation avoiding the insurance, under a provision in a charter against alienation, where a right of redemption still remains to the insured.[15] So the constructive possession of insured goods by the sheriff under an execution is not such a change of possession as avoids the policy.[16] So levy upon and sale by the sheriff under execution of a stock of goods in a store is not such a change of ownership as avoids the policy, where the stock is not removed, but is repurchased by insured on the day after the sale, who thereafter continued business in the same building and in the same way as prior to said levy.[17] And the sale of real estate on execution, the owner having a term for redemption, is not a change in the title or possession, within the meaning of the insurance policy, where the loss occurs during that term,[18] but if the loss occurs after the expiration of the term, there can be no recovery as from the date of expiration; there is then an alienation.[19] Where the policy upon the mortgagor's interest provided that in case the estate was alienated or encumbered by sale, assignment, or otherwise it should be void, it was held that the seizure of the equity of redemption and a sale on a writ of execution was an encumbrance within the meaning of the policy.[20] Under a statutory or code provision that a judg-

[13] Tefft v. Providence Washington Ins. Co. 19 R. I. 185, 61 Am. St. Rep. 761, 32 Atl. 914.

[14] Shafer v. Phœnix Ins. Co. 53 Wis. 361, 10 N. W. 381. See also Colt v. Phœnix Ins. Co. 54 N. Y. 595; Manufacturers' & Merchants' Ins. Co. v. O'Maley, 82 Pa. St. 400, 22 Am. Rep. 769.

[15] Clark v. New England Mutual Fire Ins. Co. 6 Cush. (60 Mass.) 342, 53 Am. Dec. 44.

[16] Phœnix Ins. Co. v. Lawrence, 4 Met. (61 Ky.) 9, 81 Am. Dec. 521. See also Franklin Fire Ins. Co. v. Findlay, 6 Whart. (Pa.) 483, 37 Am. Dec. 430.

[17] Weisberger v. Western Reserve Ins. Co. 250 Pa. 155, 95 Atl. 402, 46 Ins. L. J. 721; Hooker v. Hudson River Fire Ins. Co. 15 Barb. (N. Y.) 413.

On sale of insured property by judicial proceeding as change in title, interest, or possession, see note in 24 L.R.A.(N.S.) 807.

[18] Hammel v. Queen's Ins. Co. 54 Wis. 72, 41 Am. Rep. 1, 11 N. W. 349.

[19] Campbell v. Hamilton Mutual Ins. Co. 51 Me. 69.

[20] Campbell v. Hamilton Mutual Ins. Co. 51 Me. 69.

ment debtor is not devested of his title to real property by a sale thereof under execution until the expiration of the period of redemption, such a sale will not render void a policy of insurance conditioned to be void in case the interest of the insured be other than that of unconditional and sole owner, or in case any change takes place in the interest, title, or possession of the subject of insurance by legal process or judgment, unless the period for the redemption of the property has expired.[1]

§ 2279. Waiver of forfeiture: sheriff's sale.—It is competent for an insurance company to waive forfeiture of a policy caused by a sheriff's sale of the property insured, and it is an express waiver in writing of such forfeiture where the company, having notice of such sale, issues a new policy as an extension of the previous one forfeited.[2]

§ 2280. Effect of dissolution of partnership: receiver.—A voluntary dissolution of the partnership and division of the property avoids the policy in Missouri.[3] In New York, it is held that, in an action to dissolve a partnership, the appointment of one of the copartners as a receiver pendente lite is not such a sale or transfer of the property, or change in title or possession as will avoid the policy.[4] If a policy of fire insurance, issued upon a partnership's property, is conditioned to be void if there be a sale or transfer of the property or any change in title or possession whether voluntary or involuntary, the appointment of a receiver during the pendency of the action does not avoid the policy.[5] But upon the entering of a decree that the firm shall be dissolved and the property sold it is held that the insurer is then discharged.[6]

§ 2281. Accident insurance on lives of partners: dissolution.—Where a member of a copartnership was insured against accident as such member, the amount being payable to the surviving representative of the firm, subject to the stipulation that the insurance should cease as to the person of a member leaving the firm, and the insured ceased to be a partner before his death by drowning and the dissolution was duly registered, but the jury found that he retained "a continued and active interest in the business," it was held that upon said dissolution the insurance ceased as to

[1] Wood v. American Fire Ins. Co. 149 N. Y. 382, 385, 52 Am. St. Rep. 733, 44 N. E. 80 (N. Y. C. A. 1896), 44 N. E. 80, aff'g 29 N. Y. Supp. 250.

[2] Elliott v. Ashland Mutual Fire Ins. Co. 117 Pa. St. 548, 2 Am. St. Rep. 703, 12 Atl. 676.

[3] Dreher v. Ætna Ins. Co. 18 Mo. 128. See §§ 2293 et seq. herein.

[4] Keeney v. Home Ins. Co. 71 N. Y. 396, 27 Am. Rep. 60.

[5] Keeney v. Home Ins. Co. 71 N. Y. 396, 27 Am. Rep. 60.

[6] Keeney v. Home Ins. Co. 71 N. Y. 396, 27 Am. Rep. 60.

insured, and that no action could be sustained by the surviving partners notwithstanding insured's continued interest in the concern.[7]

§ 2282. Sale between tenants in common: cotenants.—In Connecticut it has been held that a transfer from one tenant in common to another is not within the meaning of a clause in the policy rendering it void in case of an alienation by sale or otherwise.[8] And in Pennsylvania a contrary rule has been held.[9] And a verbal agreement whereby owners of an undivided half interest undertake to convey such interest to their other co-owners on repayment by the latter to the former of certain sums paid by the former to their vendors conveys no title legal or equitable, said conditional agreement never having been executed beyond the mere condition of the co-owners to use and occupy the property.[10]

§ 2283. Partition of insured property: effect of.—A partition of insured property in pursuance of an order of court, has been held to constitute a change of title. So where a policy was conditioned to be void "when the title of any property insured shall be changed by sale, mortgage, or otherwise," it was held that a partition of the premises, made pursuant to a judgment on the petition of the cotenant would be within the prohibition; though the partition of the property was not an alienation, it was construed as a material change in the title.[11] But it is also held that a legal sale in partition followed by another sale constitutes a change in title and

[7] McLachlan v. Accident Ins. Co. of North America (Montr. L. Rep.) 4 Sup. Ct. Rep. 365. Upon appeal, however (35 L. C. Jur. [Q. B.] 43, 6 Q. B. 39) a new trial was ordered upon the ground that the real question whether insured had quitted the firm was not passed upon by the jury. See §§ 2293 et seq. herein.

[8] Lockwood v. Middlesex Mutual Assurance Co. 47 Conn. 553. Here Carpenter, J., said: "The alienation contemplated in the clause in the policy is a sale to a party not insured. Any transfer of interest between the parties insured by the policy is not an alienation within the meaning of the charter. If a party parts with his entire interest, the insurance as to him ceases, and the purchaser, if a stranger to the policy, is not insured; but if formerly a party to the policy, the insurance inures to his benefit." From this opinion, however, Pardee and Loomis, JJ., dissented. See Royal Ins. Co. v. Sockman, 15 Ohio C. C. 105.

[9] Buckley v. Garrett, 47 Pa. St. 204.

On provisions against alienation or change in interest, title, or possession as applying to interest of cotenant, see note in L.R.A.1917A, 32.

[10] Liverpool & London & Globe Ins. Co. v. Cochran, 77 Miss. 348, 26 So. 932, 29 Ins. L. J. 374, although the principle applies here, the case was one of misrepresentation as to sale and unconditional ownership.

[11] Barnes v. Union Mutual Fire Ins. Co. 51 Me. 110, 81 Am. Dec. 562. See also Plath v. Minnesota Fire Ins. Co. 23 Minn. 479, 23 Am. Rep. 697; Hoffmann v. Ætna Ins. Co. 1 Rob. (N. Y.) 501.

therefore avoids the policy.[12] A change in the title of property resulting from its partition among its co-owners avoids a policy of insurance thereon containing a condition that it shall become void if any other change than death takes place in the interest, title, or possession of the subject of the insurance, whether by legal possession or judgment or by voluntary act of the assured or otherwise.[13] But where the parties insured applied for a partition of the property, and in pursuance of an order to that effect the property was sold, it was held that there was no alienation until the sale was confirmed.[14]

§ 2284. Executory contract of sale: conditional sale.—The fact that the insured has made a contract to sell the insured property does not of itself constitute an alienation within the meaning of the policy; the sale must be actually consummated and there must be such a transfer as to devest the insured of his title. A mere change of possession under such a contract will not invalidate the policy unless it so provides.[15] The acceptance of a proposition to buy real property, which is definite in nothing except the amount to be paid, does not defeat insurance thereon under a policy pro-

[12] Hartford Fire Ins. Co. v. Ransom, — Tex. Civ. App. —, 61 S. W. 144.

[13] Trabue v. Dwelling-House Ins. Co. 121 Mo. 75, 42 Am. St. Rep. 523, 23 L.R.A. 719, 25 S. W. 848.

[14] Gates v. Smith, 4 Edw. Ch. (N. Y.) 702.

[15] Iowa.—McCoy v. Iowa State Ins. Co. 107 Iowa, 80, 77 N. W. 529, 28 Ins. L. J. 162; Erb v. German-American Ins. Co. 98 Iowa, 606, 40 L.R.A. 845, 67 N. W. 583; Kempton v. State Ins. Co. 62 Iowa, 83, 17 N. W. 194.

Maryland.—Washington Fire Ins. Co. v. Kelly, 32 Md. 421, 3 Am. Rep. 149.

Massachusetts. — Worthington v. Bearse, 12 Allen (94 Mass.) 382, 90 Am. Dec. 152; Boston & Salem Ice Co. v. Royal Ins. Co. 12 Allen (94 Mass.) 381, 90 Am. Dec. 151; Davis v. Quincy Mutual Fire Ins. Co. 10 Allen (92 Mass.) 113.

Michigan. — Wyandotte Brewing Co. v. Hartford Fire Ins. Co. 144 Mich. 440, 6 L.R.A.(N.S.) 852, 115 Am. St. Rep. 458, 108 N. W. 393, 35 Ins. L. J. 804.

New Jersey.—Nelson v. Bound Brook Mutual Fire Ins. Co. 43 N. J. Eq. 256, 5 Am. St. Rep. 308, 11 Atl. 681, 10 Cent. Rep. 219.

New York.—Browning v. Home Ins. Co. 71 N. Y. 508, 27 Am. Rep. 86; Clinton v. Hope Ins. Co. 45 N. Y. 454; Gilbert v. North American Ins. Co. 23 Wend. (N. Y.) 42, 43, 35 Am. Dec. 543; Masters v. Madison County Mutual Ins. Co. 11 Barb. (N. Y.) 624.

Ohio.—Trumbull v. Portage Mutual Fire Ins. Co. 12 Ohio, 305.

Pennsylvania. — Farmers' Mutual Ins. Co. v. Graybill, 74 Pa. St. 17, 23; Perry County Ins. Co. v. Stewart, 19 Pa. St. 45.

Virginia.—Fire & Marine Ins. Co. v. Morrison, 11 Leigh (Va.) 354, 36 Am. Dec. 385.

On contract to convey as breach of condition against change in title or interest, see note in 3 L.R.A.(N.S.) 107.

On outstanding contract for sale of property as defeating sole and unconditional ownership by vendor, see note in 52 L.R.A.(N.S.) 670.

viding that it shall be void if the interest of the assured becomes other than "the entire, unconditional, unencumbered, and sole ownership."[16] And no change has taken place in the interest, title, or possession of the holder of a fire insurance policy where, at the time of the loss, the insured owns the title of the subject of the insurance, although he has made an executory contract to convey the property, and the consideration has been fully paid, when no transfer, either of the title or possession, has been actually made.[17] An insurance upon goods will not be discharged by an executory contract for sale thereof, though there has been a receipt for a portion of the purchase money, if the title to the goods at the time of the loss remains in the person insured, and his right to recover will not be limited to the balance of purchase money remaining due.[18] If the owner of insured premises makes an executory agreement to convey the premises and the vendee under such agreement takes possession and pays a part of the purchase money, this is a breach of the condition avoiding the policy in case any change take place in the interest of the insured.[19] A mere contract to sell insured wool does not avoid the policy, as there must be in addition to this some act done which passes the property and devests the insured of his title.[20] So under the provisions of a fire insurance policy that it should be void, "if the interest of the assured became other than the entire, unconditional unencumbered, and sole ownership," the policy is not avoided because the insured entered into an executory contract in writing to sell, where no deed passed and no possession was given.[1] Where the policy is conditioned to be void in case of any sale, transfer, or change of possession, a mere executory contract of sale, there being no change of possession, will not avoid it.[2] And where present possession of the buildings is retained by the vendor but a contract of sale is made giving possession of part of the realty but nothing has been paid on the purchase price at the time of loss

[16] Arkansas Fire Ins. Co. v. Wilson, 67 Ark. 553, 48 L.R.A. 510, 77 Am. St. Rep. 129, 55 S. W. 933.

[17] Garner v. Milwaukee Mechanics' Ins. Co. 73 Kan. 127, 4 L.R.A.(N.S.) 654, 84 Pac. 717.

[18] Boston & Salem Ice Co. v. Royal Ins. Co. 12 Allen (94 Mass.) 381, 90 Am. Dec. 151. See also Haley v. Manufacturers' Fire Ins. Co. 120 Mass. 292; Hill v. Cumberland Valley Protection Ins. Co. 59 Pa. St. 474.

[19] Gibb v. Fire Ins. Co. 59 Minn. 267, 50 Am. St. Rep. 405, 61 N. W. 137.

On vendee under executory contract as owner, where vendor holds legal title, see note in 20 L.R.A. (N.S.) 775.

[20] Pitney v. Glens Falls Ins. Co. 61 Barb. (N. Y.) 335.

[1] Arkansas Fire Ins. Co. v. Wilson, 67 Ark. 553, 48 L.R.A. 510, 77 Am. St. Rep. 129, 55 S. W. 933.

[2] Browning v. Home Ins. Co. 71 N. Y. 508, 27 Am. Rep. 86.

and the vendor might have avoided his obligation to convey upon satisfying the stipulated damages, there is no breach of the condition as to change of title, etc.[3] So where a guardian of infant heirs agreed to sell certain property as soon as he had obtained the proper authority, and in pursuance of the contract gave the vendee possession of the property as tenant, it was held that there was no sale within the meaning of the clause, "to be void if the property insured shall be sold or assigned."[4] But a written agreement to sell and convey in fee insured premises to a tenant in possession, upon payment of the stipulated price, a portion of which is paid, causes a change in the interest, title, and possession of the subject of the insurance, sufficient to avoid the policy under a condition that: "If any change, other than by the death of an insured, takes place in the interest, title, or possession of the subject of insurance (except change of occupants without increase of hazard), whether by legal process, or judgment, or by voluntary act of the insured, or otherwise, the entire policy shall be void."[5] If property is sold under contract and payments are defaulted and the property reconveyed thereby transferring to the original vendor all the purchaser's equitable interest under said contract and the insurance is placed upon the property with full knowledge on the part of insurer of such interest and it had indorsed its agreement to that effect there is no forfeiture as such transfer increased insured's interest in the property by giving her both the legal and equitable interest.[6] A contract for sale of land completed by paying the unpaid balance of the purchase price, after the fire, and thereupon receiving a deed, does not avoid the policy.[7] The owner of land on which there is a building insured against loss by fire is not deprived of the right to recover on the policy by the fact that, before loss, he agreed to transfer the premises, which agreement was consummated subsequent to the destruction of the building; since the doctrine of relation will not operate to carry the transfer of real property back to the agreement to which it is referable, for the benefit of strangers to the transaction.[8] Again, where a vendor, who has placed his deed in escrow awaiting performance of conditions precedent to the de-

[3] Pringle v. Des Moines Ins. Co. 107 Iowa, 742, 77 N. W. 521, 28 Ins. L. J. 138.

[4] Clinton v. Hope Ins. Co. 45 N. Y. 454, s. c. 51 Barb. (N. Y.) 647.

[5] Grunauer v. Westchester Fire Ins. Co. 72 N. J. Law, 289, 3 L.R.A. (N.S.) 107n, 62 Atl. 418.

[6] Foiles v. Detroit Fire & Marine Ins. Co. 175 Mich. 716, 141 N. W. 879, 42 Ins. L. J. 1143.

[7] O'Neil v. Franklin Fire Ins. Co. 145 N. Y. Supp. 432, 159 App. Div. 313, 43 Ins. L. J. 388.

[8] Evans v. Crawford County Farmers' Mutual Fire Ins. Co. 130 Wis. 189, 9 L.R.A.(N.S.) 485, 100 N. W. 952.

livery, and has let the vendee into possession, has a fire insurance policy on a house situated on the premises, and the house is destroyed by fire while so occupied, and before the conditions of the escrow are performed, the hazard from fire not being increased, the right to recover on the contract of insurance is not forfeited.[9] Where one who owns the title of property procures a policy of insurance thereon which provides that it shall be void "if any change takes place in the interest, title, or possession of the subject of insurance," a forfeiture does not result from his making a contract to convey the property, under which he receives the consideration but does not actually transfer the title or the possession.[10] Such a contract to sell is not of itself a change of title" that will avoid the policy within the meaning of a provision forbidding such a change.[11] Nor has any change taken place in the interest, title, or possession of the holder of a fire insurance policy where, at the time of the loss, the insured owns the title of the subject of the insurance, although he has made an executory contract to convey the property, and the consideration has been fully paid, when no transfer, either of the title or possession, has been actually made.[12] So where, under an executory contract of sale, the title is not to pass unless the vendee makes certain deferred payments, the condition as to change of title is not avoided,[13] though there may be a part of the purchase money paid.[14] The giving of a bond for the conveyance of land upon a certain condition being complied with at a certain specified time does not constitute an encumbrance upon insured premises.[15]

In Iowa it has been held that a contract for the purchase and sale of real estate, under which the purchaser has taken possession, and upon which nothing remains to be done but making the deed and paying a balance due on the price, constitutes a breach of a condition in an insurance policy against selling, conveying, or encumbering, notwithstanding the contract is to become void upon default in making payments at the times agreed, and the abandon-

[9] Pomeroy v. Ætna Ins. Co. 86 Kan. 214, 38 L.R.A.(N.S.) 142, 120 Pac. 344.

On delivery of deed in escrow as a change of title or interest, see note in 38 L.R.A.(N.S.) 142.

[10] Garner v. Milwaukee Mechanics' Ins. Co. 73 Kan. 127, 4 L.R.A.(N.S.) 654, 117 Am. St. Rep. 460, 84 Pac. 717.

[11] Browning v. Home Ins. Co. 71 N. Y. 508, 27 Am. Rep. 86.

[12] Garner v. Milwaukee Mechanics' Ins. Co. 73 Kan. 127, 4 L.R.A. (N.S.) 654, 117 Am. St. Rep. 460, 84 Pac. 717.

[13] Home Ins. Co. of New York v. Bethel, 142 Ill. 537, 32 N. E. 510, s. c. 42 Ill. App. 475.

[14] Grable v. German Ins. Co. 32 Neb. 645, 49 N. W. 713.

[15] Newhall v. Union Ins. Co. 52 Me. 180; Trumbull v. Portage Mutual Fire Ins. Co. 12 Ohio, 305.

On effect of bond for title to defeat unconditional and sole ownership, see note in 2 L.R.A.(N.S.) 512.

ment of the contract will not save a forfeiture of the policy.[16] We think this case is not in harmony with other decisions governed by analogous principles. It would seem that so long as the insured had not actually parted with his title to the property and a part of the purchase money remains unpaid, that he has an insurable interest and may recover to the extent of the balance due him from the vendee. The dissenting opinion [17] is more in line with what the true rule should be in such cases. A conditional sale of insured property is not an alienation, but merely suspends the risk during the existence of the condition, and the reversion of the property to the vendor upon the failure of the condition revives the risk and entitles the vendor to all the rights possessed by him before the property was transferred.[18] Under a Maryland decision by a contract for the sale of insured property, the policy is avoided when it provides that it shall be void if any change, other than by death, takes place in the interest, title, or possession of the subject of the insurance.[19] And where there is a conditional sale of the [16] Davidson v. Hawkeye Ins. Co. 71 Iowa, 532, 60 Am. Rep. 818, 32 N. W. 514.

On vendor's lien as affecting sole and unconditional ownership, see note in 7 L.R.A.(N.S.) 627.

[17] "The contract between plaintiff and Luit was an executory agreement for the sale and conveyance of the property. Plaintiff was bound upon the performance of his undertaking by Luit to convey the land. But a failure of the latter to pay any instalment at the stipulated time would work a forfeiture of all interest in the land and of all sums paid under the contract; and the agreement provided that upon such failure the vendee would surrender possession of the premises. What was the extent of right or interest acquired by Luit under this contract? He did not acquire the ownership of the property, but the right to be invested with the ownership when he had performed his undertaking in the contract. Until that was done both the title and ownership remained in the plaintiff, for by the terms of the agreement Luit would be entitled to the property only after a strict performance of its condition. In Kempton v. State Ins. Co. 62 Iowa, 83, 17 N. W. 194, it was held that the policy, which contained a provision similar to that in question, was not defeated by a contract for the sale of the property. It is not material that the difference between that case and this was that there the purchaser was not entitled to possession until certain payments had been made, and in this case the purchaser was in possession when the fire occurred. The ground of the holding in that case is, that the insured was not devested of the ownership of the property by the contract, and that is the case here."

[18] Power v. Ocean Ins. Co. 19 La. 28, 36 Am. Dec. 665. See also Gordon v. Massachusetts Ins. Co. 2 Pick. (19 Mass.) 249; Jackson v. Massachusetts Ins. Co. 23 Pick. (40 Mass.) 418, 34 Am. Dec. 69; Tittemore v. Vermont Mutual Fire Ins. Co. 20 Vt. 546; Wyandotte Brewing Co. v. Hartford Fire Ins. Co. 144 Mich. 440, 6 L.R.A.(N.S.) 852, 115 Am. St. Rep. 458, 108 N. W. 393.

[19] Skinner & Sons Ship-Building & Dry-Dock Co. of Baltimore City v. Houghton, 92 Md. 68, 84 Am. St. Rep. 485, 48 Atl. 85. See Excelsior property and the vendee was carrying out his part of the agreement at the time of the fire and which sale was then so far completed that the agreement therefor could not have been arbitrarily canceled by the assured as seller there is such a change other than by the death of insured in the interest, title, and possession of the insured property as to avoid the policy under a condition voiding the policy in case of such change in the interest and title.[20] And although the title is not to pass until the vendee of goods who has given notes for the purchase price has paid the same, and although the vendee who is placed in possession with authority to sell said goods at retail sale still he is obligated to make certain periodical statements as to the amount of sales there is such a change of interest as to avoid the policy.[1] A contract for sale, conveying an equitable title, under which the purchaser enters into possession, avoids the policy, even though the right of reentry on default of payments is reserved with an option to retain the amounts paid as and for use and occupation or to foreclose the vendee's interest.[2] So where a policy provided that it should be void if the property "shall be sold or conveyed, or the interest of the parties therein changed," it was held that a contract under seal for the sale of the insured premises and a receipt of part of the purchase money avoided it.[3]

Where personal property is sold, the title to remain in the vendor as security for payment, and a policy thereon is also retained, and thereafter the seller receives a mortgage of the vendee's land and his note for the purchase price of said personalty, there is an absolute sale with a reservation of title and the policy is avoided by a change of title under a statute making such reservations of title a chattel mortgage.[4] So where the insured holds the property under a conditional sale, he cannot on its destruction by fire, recover for the full value of the property, but only the sum which he has paid under the contract of sale, if it stipulates that the title shall remain in the vendor until full payment has been made, and there is nothing to show that the purchaser has suffered any damage other than the loss of his payments.[5]

Foundry Co. v. Western Assur. Co. 135 Mich. 467, 98 N. W. 9; Gorsch v. Niagara Fire Ins. Co. of N. Y. 68 Misc. 344, 123 N. Y. Supp. 877, 39 Ins. L. J. 1320.

[20] Fire Association of Phila. v. Perry, — Tex. Civ. App. —, 185 S. W. 374.

[1] Phenix Ins. Co. v. Quinette, 36 Okla. 384, 128 Pac. 722.

[2] Brickell v. Atlas Assurance Co. Ltd. 10 Cal. App. 17, 101 Pac. 16.

[3] Germond v. Home Ins. Co. 5 Thomp. & C. (N. Y.) 120, 2 Hun (N. Y.) 540.

[4] Hamilton v. Firemen's Fund Ins. Co. — Tex. Civ. App. —, 177 S. W. 173 (case of sale of automobile). Rev. Stat. art. 5654.

[5] Tabbut v. American Ins. Co. 185

§ 2284a. Option contract.—A contract in the nature of an option, where nothing has been done thereunder at the time of the fire, does not avoid the policy.[6] An agreement for the sale and purchase of real property amounting only to an option to purchase, and under which the insured remains entitled to free access to the property and its management in every respect as though all work done thereunder by the option-holder were being done by the assured, and that if the purchase money is not paid within a time specified, all payments made on the purchase price shall be forfeited, does not constitute a breach of condition against a change of interest or possession of the insured premises.[7] An option contract for sale on which a part of the purchase money is paid, to be forfeited if the sale is not consummated, and under which nothing was decided at the time of the fire, does not pass any title and is not a breach of a condition against change of title.[8]

§ 2284b. Contract to exchange property.—An agreement by the insured to exchange the insured property for land, the exchange to take place not later than a given date, is not, where the agreement is never executed, within the meaning of a provision avoiding the policy "if any change take place in the interest, title, or possession of the subject of insurance."[9] Where there is an agreement to exchange property, but there is no actual transfer of land, the deeds, mortgages and assignments being signed, placed in escrow until the conditions were performed, although the occupancy had been changed by both parties, but under such conditions that each could have recovered back the occupancy of his own property, and the insured house is destroyed by fire before the conditions of the escrow are performed, the hazard from fire is not increased, and the right to recover is not precluded.[10] If assured in negotiating an exchange of property makes out a deed to another to whom real estate agents hope to effect a sale, and also assigns the policy with the knowledge and consent of assurer's agents to the same party, there is no change of title, interest, or

Mass. 419, 102 Am. St. Rep. 353, 70 N. E. 430.

[6] House v. Security Fire Ins. Co. 145 Iowa, 462, 121 N. W. 509, 38 Ins. L. J. 875.

[7] Mackintosh v. Agricultural Fire Ins. Co. 150 Cal. 440, 119 Am. St. Rep. 234, 89 Pac. 102.

[8] House v. Security Fire Ins. Co. 145 Iowa, 875, 121 N. W. 509, 38 Ins. L. J. 875.

[9] Erb v. German-American Ins. Co. 98 Iowa, 606, 40 L.R.A. 845, 67 N. W. 583.

[10] Pomeroy v. Aetna Ins. Co. 86 Kan. 214, 38 L.R.A.(N.S.) 142 (annotated on delivery of deed in escrow as a change of title or interest), 120 Pac. 344, 41 Ins. L. J. 475.

possession, where the deed did not pass title, nor, even if it did, is there such change because of assurer's consent.[11]

§ 2284c. Unconsummated sale in satisfaction of mortgage.—If an agreement, under which a mortgagee is to receive a conveyance of insured premises in satisfaction of the mortgage debt, is not consummated prior to loss under the policy, there is no change in the legal title to the property, so as to constitute a ground for the avoidance of the policy.[12]

§ 2284d. Bill of sale.—A mere paper transfer called a bill of sale, without consideration and without delivery of possession of the property, does not constitute a change of title, or an encumbrance within the meaning of an insurance policy containing conditions as to title and encumbrances, even if it was intended to defraud creditors.[13]

§ 2285. Acts of vendor where person holds under contract of purchase.—Where a policy issued upon the interest of a person holding under a contract of purchase is conditioned to be void in case of a "change of interest" in the insured property, it is held that a mortgage given by the vendor which creates any obligation upon the vendee for its payment affects the vendee's interest within the meaning of the condition and will avoid the policy.[14]

§ 2286. Where sale not confirmed as required.—Where a sale of property of a decedent which is in the hands of the administrator must be confirmed before it is complete, then there is no alienation until such sale has been confirmed. So where property was sold at an orphan's court sale, it was held that the administrator could recover for a loss occurring after the time of the sale and before it was confirmed.[15]

§ 2286a. Judicial sale confirmed.—A condition in a policy of insurance declaring that it shall be void if, without consent in writing or printing the property shall be sold, is not violated by a judicial sale of the property and its confirmation, if payment of the purchase price is not made and no bill of sale is executed.[16]

§ 2286b. Administrator's sale confirmed.—A confirmed administrator's sale of insured property is within a provision of the policy making it void if any change takes place in the interest, title,

[11] Camden Fire Ins. Assoc. v. Bomar, — Tex. Civ. App. —, 176 S. W. 156.

[12] Magoun v. Firemen's Fund Ins. Co. 86 Minn. 486, 91 Am. St. Rep. 370, 91 N. W. 5.

[13] Forward v. Continental Ins. Co. 142 N. Y. 382, 25 L.R.A. 637, 37 N. E. 615.

[14] Hoose v. Prescott Ins. Co. 84 Mich. 309, 11 L.R.A. 340, 32 Cent. L. J. 226, 47 N. W. 587.

[15] Farmers' Mutual Ins. Co. v. Graybill, 74 Pa. St. 17, 23.

[16] International Wood Co. v. National Assur. Co. 99 Me. 415, 105 Am. St. Rep. 288, 59 Atl. 544.

or possession of the subject of insurance by legal process, voluntary act of the insured, or otherwise, although no deed has been delivered or money paid, since the equitable title passed when the sale was confirmed, where the statute provides that when certain facts are shown to the court it shall make an order confirming the sale and directing conveyances to be executed, and such sale from that time shall be confirmed and valid.[17]

§ 2287. Where insurance on changing stock of goods.—A condition in the policy of insurance that it shall be void in case of the alienation or sale of the property insured does not refer to the sale of goods which are kept for sale. The policy is not an insurance upon the identical articles in the store at the time the insurance is effected. The insured may sell and replace his stock as often as is necessary, and the policy will cover such property as may be on hand at the time of the loss.[18] Though the policy may provide that it shall be void if the title is changed in any way it does not apply to such a case.[19] And the rule applies by analogy to a stock of goods in a store which is levied upon and sold under execution and repurchased the day after said sale by insured who continues business in the same building, and in the same way, and in such case there is no such change of ownership as avoids the policy for in such or like cases where the entire stock is sold and the title regained before loss the risk is merely suspended.[20] So where a policy was issued "on a stock of looking-glasses" in a certain store, it was held that the policy covered all looking-glasses, etc., of the insured which should be in his store during the year, and that a sale of the entire stock only suspended the policy.[1]

§ 2288. Effect of bankruptcy or insolvency.—The rule seems to be settled that an assignment in bankruptcy or insolvency, whether voluntary or involuntary, devests the insured of his insurable interest in the property, and is such an alienation as will avoid the policy.[2] So an assignment of property under voluntary insolvency

[17] Moller v. Niagara Fire Ins. Co. 54 Wash. 439, 24 L.R.A.(N.S.) 807, 103 Pac. 449, 38 Ins. L. J. 1073, 132 Am. St. Rep. 1115. Under Ballinger's Ann. Codes & Stat. sec. 6274; Pierce's Code sec. 2582.

[18] Wolfe v. Security Ins. Co. 39 N. Y. 49. See also Commercial Ins. Co. v. Spanknable, 52 Ill. 53, 4 Am. Rep. 582; Power v. Ocean Ins. Co. 19 La. 28, 36 Am. Dec. 665; Clark v. New England Ins. Co. 6 Cush. (60 Mass.) 342, 53 Am. Dec. 44; Lane v. Maine Mutual Fire Ins. Co. 12 Me. 44, 28 Am. Dec. 150.

[19] Biggs v. North Carolina Home Ins. Co. 88 N. C. 141.

[20] Weisberger v. Western Reserve Ins. Co. 250 Pa. 155, 95 Atl. 402, 46 Ins. L. J. 721.

[1] Hooper v. Hudson River Fire Ins. Co. 15 Barb. (N. Y.) 413.

[2] United States.—Hibbler Machine Supply Co., In re (U. S. D. C.) 192 Fed. 741, 27 Am. B. Rep. 612; Starkweather v. Cleveland Ins. Co. 2 proceedings is an alienation, within a provision of the policy of a mutual insurance company that "when any property insured by this company shall be taken possession of by a mortgagee or in any way be alienated the policy shall be void."[3] And where a policy of fire insurance was conditioned to be void if any change should take place "in the title or possession of the property, whether by legal process or judicial decree or voluntary transfer," and the insured was declared a bankrupt in involuntary proceedings, and his property was assigned by the registrar to the assignee in bankruptcy, and afterward the insured property was destroyed by fire, it was held that the policy had become void under the condition,[4] though by the terms of the policy the loss was made payable to the mortgagee.[5]

An exception to the above rule has been made in Massachusetts, in which state it is held that if the assignment for the benefit of the creditors does not release the assured from all liability for any balance due after the distribution of the assets the policy is not avoided, and he may recover to the full extent of the loss.[6] So under a Louisiana decision filing a petition in voluntary bankruptcy, on which the petitioner was adjudged a bankrupt, does not work such a change in his interest, title or possession as renders void a policy of fire insurance on his stock of merchandise, which was destroyed on the day following the filing of the petition, but before either a receiver or a trustee was appointed, where, in view of the loss of merchandise, the creditors deemed it to their interest to make a com-

Abb. (U. S. C. C.) 67, Fed. Cas. No. 13,308.

Connecticut.—Birdsey v. City Fire Ins. Co. 26 Conn. 165.

Illinois.—Orr v. National Fire Ins. Co. 158 Ill. 431, 41 N. E. 1009; Orr v. Hanover Fire Ins. Co. 158 Ill. 149, 49 Am. St. Rep. 146, 41 N. E. 854.

Maine. — Adams v. Rockingham Mutual Fire Ins. Co. 29 Me. 292.

Maryland. — Reynolds v. Mutual Fire Ins. Co. 34 Md. 280, 6 Am. Rep. 337.

New York. — Perry v. Lorillard Fire Ins. Co. 61 N. Y. 214, 19 Am. Rep. 272. See Fuller v. Jamieson, 90 N. Y. Supp. 456, 98 App. Div. 53, aff'd 184 N. Y. 605, 77 N. E. 1187; Keeney v. Home Ins. Co. 3 Thomp. & C. (N. Y.) 478.

Ohio.—Ohio Farmers Ins. Co. v. Waters, 65 Ohio St. 157, 161, 61 N. E. 711, 31 Ins. L. J. 71.

Wisconsin.—Milwaukee Trust Co. v. Lancashire Ins. Co. 95 Wis. 192, 70 N. W. 81.

On effect of bankruptcy or insolvency proceedings or assignment for benefit of creditor on fire insurance, see note in 15 L.R.A.(N.S.) 827.

[3] Young v. Eagle Fire Ins. Co. 14 Gray (80 Mass.) 150, 74 Am. Dec. 673.

[4] Perry v. Lorillard Fire Ins. Co. 61 N. Y. 214, 19 Am. Rep. 272.

[5] Perry v. Lorillard Fire Ins. Co. 61 N. Y. 214, 19 Am. Rep. 272; Hazard v. Franklin Mutual Fire Ins. Co. 7 R. I. 429. But see Appleton Iron Co. v. British-American Ins. Co. 46 Wis. 23, 50 N. W. 1100.

[6] Lazarus v. Commercial Ins. Co. 19 Pick. (36 Mass.) 81. See Fuller v. Jamieson, 90 N. Y. Supp. 456, 98 App. Div. 53, aff'd 184 N. Y. 605, 77 N. E. 1187.

position with the bankrupt, and depend upon his personal obligation to them, and did so.[7] And the destruction of the property after an adjudication in bankruptcy but prior to the vesting of the estate in the trustee does not constitute such a sale or transfer as to void the policy.[8]

§ 2288a. Same subject: appointment of receiver.—The appointment of a receiver and the taking of actual possession by him in a suit to take possession and control of certain personal property, prevents recovery of loss sustained under a fire insurance policy on the property, which provides that, if any change take place in the interest, title, of possession of the property, "whether by legal process of judgment, or otherwise," the policy shall be wholly void.[9] It is held, however, that the appointment of a receiver to take charge of property does not constitute such a change of possession as to vitiate the policy since the receiver's possession is taken under order of court as an officer thereof and is for the benefit of those interested.[10] So, under a Virginia decision the appointment of a receiver is not such a change in the title or possession of property as avoids a policy of insurance containing a condition that it shall become void if any change takes place in the title or possession of the property, whether by sale or judicial decree, without notice to the insurer and its consent indorsed thereon.[11] And it is held in Pennsylvania that no change in the interest, title, or possession of insured property is effected within the meaning of a provision in the policy avoiding it in case of such change, by the appointment of a receiver in bankruptcy proceedings, who, without dispossessing the owner, places a watchman upon the property, effects insurance thereon, and advertises the personal property for sale.[12] And where a policy runs to a receiver in a designated suit, a mere change of receiver does not involve a change in title or possession.[13]

[7] Gordon v. Mechanics' & Trust Ins. Co. 120 La. 441, 15 L.R.A.(N.S.) 827n, 45 So. 384, 22 Am. B. R. 649.

[8] Fuller v. New York Fire Ins. Co. 184 Mass. 12, 67 N. E. 879.

[9] Bronson v. New York Fire Ins. Co. 64 W. Va. 494, 19 L.R.A.(N.S.) 643, 63 S. E. 283, 38 Ins. L. J. 201. See also Farmers' Fire Ins. Co. v. Baker, 94 Md. 545, 51 Atl. 184.

On effect of appointment of receiver of insured on fire insurance, see note in 19 L.R.A.(N.S.) 643.

[10] Lancashire Ins. Co. v. Boardman, 58 Kan. 339, 49 Pac. 92, 27 Ins. L. J. 470, citing Thompson v. Phenix Ins. Co. 136 U. S. 287, 34 L. ed. 408, 10 Sup. Ct. 1019.

[11] Georgia Home Ins. Co. v. Bartlett, 91 Va. 305, 50 Am. St. Rep. 832, 21 S. E. 476.

[12] Marcello use of South Side Trust Co. v. Concordia Fire Ins. Co. 234 Pa. 31, 39 L.R.A.(N.S.) 366, 82 Atl. 1090, 41 Ins. L. J. 1163.

[13] Thompson v. Phenix Ins. Co. 136 U. S. 287, 34 L. ed. 408, 10 Sup. Ct. 1019. Cited in Small v. Westchester Fire Ins. Co. 51 Fed. 789, 795; Georgia Home Ins. Co. v. Bartlett, 91 Va. 305, 312, 50 Am. St. Rep. 832, 21 S. E. 476; Gerling v. Agri-

§ 2289. Death of insured: descent of title to heirs.—If a policy is conditioned t become void upon alienation by the assured, it is not avoided by his death and the consequent change and control of the property by his administrator or by the descent to his heirs.[14] So a condition voiding the policy in case of any change in title or possession is not broken by death of assured before loss.[15] The death of the insured, and the descent of the property insured to his wife and children, do not work such a change in the title or possession of the property as to avoid the policy of insurance.[16] If, however, a policy is conditioned to be void if the interest of the insured shall be changed in any manner, whether by act of the insured or by operation of the law, it has generally been held that the death of the insured will avoid the policy.[17] So where a fire policy was conditioned to be void "if, without the written consent of the company first had and obtained, the said property shall be sold or conveyed and the interest of the parties therein be changed in any manner, whether by the act of the parties or by operation of law, or the property shall become encumbered by mortgage, judgment, or otherwise," and the insured died intestate as to all his property, it was held that the policy was void by change of interest.[18] Where the policy is conditioned to be void "in case of any sale, transfer, or change of title in the property insured," it is held that the policy ceases to have any force upon the death of the insured, and the vesting of the title in his heirs at law.[19] Under the alienation clause of the New York standard fire policy the death of the insured will not void the policy.[20] In some policies the stipulation as to alienation excepts "succession by reason of the death of the insured."

cultural Ins. Co. 39 W. Va. 689, 700, 20 S. E. 691.

[14] Burbank v. Rockingham Ins. Co. 24 N. H. 550, 57 Am. Dec. 300. See also Pfister v. Gerwig, 122 Ind. 567, 23 N. E. 1041; Westchester Fire Ins. Co. v. Dodge, 44 Mich. 420, 6 N. W. 865; Georgia Home Ins. Co. v. Kinnier, 28 Gratt. (Va.) 88. See Appeal of Nichols, 128 Pa. St. 428, 5 L.R.A. 597, 18 Atl. 333. See Towle v. Dirigo Mutual Fire Ins. Co. 107 Me. 317, 78 Atl. 374.

[15] Forest City Ins. Co. v. Eaton, 86 Ill. App. 463.

[16] Planters' Mutual Ins. Assoc. v. Dewberry, 69 Ark. 295, 86 Am. St. Rep. 195, 62 S. W. 1047.

[17] Richardson's Admr. v. German Ins. Co. 89 Ky. 571, 8 L.R.A. 800, 13 S. W. 1, 12 Ky. L. R. 37; Matter of Hine v. Woolworth, 93 N. Y. 75, 45 Am. Rep. 176; Sherwood v. Agricultural Ins. Co. 73 N. Y. 447, 29 Am. Rep. 180; Hine v. Homestead Fire Ins. Co. 29 Hun (N. Y.) 84; Robinson v. Pacific Fire Ins. Co. 18 Hun (N. Y.) 395; Phelps v. Gebhard Fire Ins. Co. 9 Bosw. (N. Y.) 404.

[18] Sherwood v. Agricultural Ins. Co. 10 Hun (N. Y.) 593, 29 Am. Rep. 180, aff'd 73 N. Y. 447.

[19] Lappin v. Charter Oak Fire & Marine Ins. Co. 58 Barb. (N. Y.) 325.

[20] The policy provides that it shall be void for change of interest "other than by the death of the insured."

Such a clause will also prevent a forfeiture of the policy, at least as to the heirs or administrators.[1]

§ 2290. What amounts to an alienation, sale, transfer, or change of title: instances.—A conveyance absolute in form by the insured is a transfer or change in title avoiding the policy, although there is a written defeasance dehors the deed or an equivalent contemporaneous oral agreement.[2] A conveyance of insured premises by a husband to a third person, and by that third person to the wife of the insured, will avoid a policy providing that in case the premises are "sold or conveyed in whole or in part" the policy shall be void, though the conveyances are intended as one transaction, and though the husband retains an interest in the land as tenant by curtesy.[3] So, also, in case of a conveyance to the daughter of the insured and by her to the wife;[4] and where the husband and wife conveyed property to a third person, who executed at the same time a conveyance to the wife which vested the legal title in her, a policy containing the usual clause against the transfer of the property will be avoided, though there was no intention to devest the husband of his interest and control.[5] So a transfer of homestead property from the husband to the wife is a change of title avoiding the policy.[6] If a policy is issued to the mortgagor of the property covered by it and is made payable to the mortgagee, it is held that in such case a subsequent transfer of the entire property to the mortgagee will avoid a policy conditioned to be void if the property "be sold."[7] So, also, where the mortgagor obtained a policy upon the property, and with the consent of the company it was assigned to L., being indorsed, "In case of loss pay the within to L. to secure his mortgage," and he

[1] Quarles v. Clayton, 87 Tenn. 308, 3 L.R.A. 170, 10 S. W. 505. In this case the court said: "The policy contained the stipulation that it should become void 'in case any change shall take place in title or possession, except by succession by reason of death of the assured.' That these provisions are reasonable is obvious, when we consider that the contract is one for the personal indemnity of the assured against a loss affecting his interest in the property covered by the policy. But this policy was not annulled by the change of title which occurred at the death of the insured; it expressly excepts a defeat of the policy where it occurs 'by succession by reason of the death of the assured.' The legal effect of this exception is to continue and extend the policy notwithstanding the change of title by reason of the death of the assured."

[2] Barry v. Hamburg-Bremen Fire Ins. Co. 110 N. Y. 1, 17 N. E. 405.

[3] Oakes v. Manufacturing Ins. Co. 131 Mass. 164; Walton v. Agricultural Ins. Co. 116 N. Y. 317, 5 L.R.A. 677, 22 N. E. 443.

[4] Baldwin v. Phœnix Ins. Co. 60 N. H. 164.

[5] Langdon v. Minnesota Farmers' Mutual Fire Ins. Co. 22 Minn. 193.

[6] Milwaukee Mechanics' Mutual Ins. Co. v. Ketterlin, 24 Bradw. (Ill.) 188.

[7] Dailey v. Westchester Fire Ins. Co. 131 Mass. 173.

subsequently obtained another policy from the same company, which he assigned with the consent of the company to a purchaser of the property, to whom the insured conveyed his entire interest in the property, it was held that the consent of the insurer thus given would not prevent a forfeiture of the first policy, which was conditioned to be void "in case the insured shall convey either in whole or in part; but it might be continued for the benefit of the purchaser with the company's assent, to be evidenced by a certificate of the fact or by indorsement on the policy." [8] A sale of a business conducted under a trade name, avoids the policy where assured has no notice thereof and the policy is not transferred, even though the business is carried on under the same name.[9] A sale to a tenant in possession who continues the same, paying no rent and who makes alterations on the premises, and pays interest on deferred purchase money payments, avoids the policy.[10] A conveyance to secure payment of a debt for construction of the building made without insurer's consent, invalidates the policy.[11] And a conveyance to a purchaser together with a transfer to him of a tenant in possession, constitutes such a change in the title, interest or possession as avoids the policy.[12]

§ 2291. What does not amount to an alienation, sale, transfer, or change of title: instances.—Where goods upon which there was a mortgage were insured, and the policy provided that it should be void in case of a sale of the insured property, it was held that a subsequent surrender of the possession of such goods to the mortgagee was not a sale within the meaning of the condition.[13] The mortgagor of a vessel, selling his remaining interest and stipulating with the purchaser that he, the seller, will pay off the mortgage, if he fails to comply with the stipulation so that the bargain is given up and the title reconveyed to him, may recover on a policy of insurance issued to him before his agreement of sale for a loss of the vessel after reconveyance, and this whether the contract be construed to have passed title or not.[14] A mere agreement between the [8] Loring v. Manufacturing Ins. Co. 8 Gray (74 Mass.) 28.

[9] American-Steam Laundry Co. v. Hamburg-Bremen Fire Ins. Co. 121 Tenn. 13, 21 L.R.A.(N.S.) 442n, 113 S. W. 394.

On formation of partnership or change in personnel of firm as affecting a change of title or ownership, see note in 21 L.R.A.(N.S.) 442.

[10] Sewell v. Home Ins. Co. 115 N. Y. Supp. 345, 131 App. Div. 131.

[11] Athens Mutual Ins. Co. v. Evans, 132 Ga. 703, 64 S. E. 993.

[12] Northern Assurance Co. v. City Savings' Bank, 18 Tex. Civ. App. 721, 45 S. W. 737.

[13] Washington Ins. Co. v. Hayes, 17 Ohio St. 432, 93 Am. Dec. 628.

[14] Worthington v. Bearce, 12 Allen (94 Mass.) 382, 90 Am. Dec. 152.

owner of property insured and another person to represent to the creditors of the owner, in order to prevent attachments, that it had been sold to such other person does not avoid the policy, although the policy is upon condition that the insurance shall be void "in case of any sale, transfer, or change of title." [15] A policy conditioned to be void in case of a change of possession or title is not avoided by the insured leaving an agent in charge of the premises, as this is not a change of possession within the meaning of the provision.[16] If an alienation occurs after a loss, it will not avoid the policy upon the property, though it may appear that neither party had knowledge of the loss when the conveyance was made.[17] So a policy conditioned to be void in case of a sale or transfer of the insured property is not avoided by the execution of a trust deed,[18] or by a sale of the land upon which the insured buildings stand, the buildings being reserved.[19] A transfer of the legal title to property to another for the mere purpose, not however accomplished, of having him negotiate a loan upon it for the grantor, does not show a breach of the condition in an insurance policy against sale, transfer, or change of title.[20] Where there was a series of conveyances for the purpose of vesting the complete title in the insured, it was held that the condition in the policy against a sale of the property was not violated.[1] In this case the wife of the insured held a tax title upon the property, and conveyances were made by the wife of the insured and the insured to a third person, who immediately reconveyed the entire estate to the insured. The word "interest" includes both legal and equitable right, and therefore what might be a change of interest might not be a change of title.[2] And there is no such change of interest, title or possession nor such an increase of risk as to avoid the policy, where property insured in the building where it is located is there left with one as bailee only, who became the occupant after the property was insured.[3] Appointment of a trustee to take the place of other trustees who held the property in [15] Orrell v. Hampden Ins. Co. 13 Gray (79 Mass.) 431.

[16] Shearman v. Niagara Fire Ins. Co. 46 N. Y. 526.

[17] Duncan v. Great Western Ins. Co. 3 Keyes (N. Y.) 394, s. c. 1 Abb. Dec. (N. Y.) 562, 5 Bosw. (N. Y.) 378 note, 19 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 312; Farmers' Mutual Ins. Co. v. Graybill, 74 Pa. St. 17, 23.

[18] Nease v. Ætna Ins. Co. 32 W. Va. 283, 9 S. E. 233, 18 Ins. L. J. 541.

[19] Washington Mill Emery Manufacturing Co. v. Connecticut Ins. Co. 135 Mass. 503, 12 Ins. L. J. 181.

[20] New Orleans Ins. Co. v. Gordon, 68 Tex. 144, 3 S. W. 718.

[1] Kyte v. Commercial Union Assur. Co. 144 Mass. 43, 45, 10 N. E. 518.

[2] Gibb v. Fire Ins. Co. 59 Minn. 267, 50 Am. St. Rep. 405, 61 N. W. 137.

[3] Lingelbach v. Theresa Village Mutual Fire Ins. Co. 154 Wis. 595, 143 N. W. 688.

trust when the insurance was effected, is not a change in the title or possession, within the meaning of a condition in a policy making it void if a change takes place in the title or possession without the consent of the insurer.[4] A clause avoiding a policy if the property is sold, or any change takes place in title or possession, has no application where, in addition to insuring the interest of the assured in the whisky, as owner and upon commission, the company also assumed the risk of his interest because of the tax on it; and, the whisky having been burned, liability for the tax attached.[5] Change of title by deed from mortgagor to mortgagee in the interval between the application by the mortgagee for insurance on the property and delivery of the policy, will not render the insurance void for false description of the property as belonging to the mortgagor, if the facts of the existence of the mortgage and the pendency of foreclosure proceedings are stated in the application.[6] And a fire policy, which provides that it shall be void if the risk is increased in any manner; or if the property is sold, or any change takes place in the title; or if the premises are used for any other purpose than is mentioned in the application,—is not avoided by a sale of parts of a 280-acre tract upon which the insured building is situated and the purchase of other lands, nor by any change made in the use of the insured premises, unless the risk is increased, or the insurer's security is decreased, thereby.[7] The execution and delivery of a deed and papers relating to the title to the United States District Attorney in compliance with a contract for sale, does not constitute a transfer or devestment of the title, where such title was not to pass until final acceptance by the government, and where at the time of the fire the required conditions of sale and acceptance had not been complied with and the sale was not consummated until after the fire. In such case the District Attorney was only the agent of the government for the transmission of the papers to the attorney general who alone was authorized to pass upon their sufficiency.[8] A sale by, and resale to, the owner of property insured, all being one transaction and without change of possession, do not violate a condition in the policy, that any change in either the title or possession of the subject matter of the insurance

[4] Georgia Home. Ins. Co. v. Bartlett, 91 Va. 305, 50 Am. St. Rep. 832, 21 S. E. 476.

[5] Germania Fire Ins. Co. v. Thompson, 95 U. S. 547, 24 L. ed. 487.

[6] Pioneer Savings & Loan Co. v. Providence Washington Ins. Co. 17 Wash. 175, 38 L.R.A. 397, 49 Pac. 231.

[7] Russell v. Cedar Rapids Ins. Co. 78 Iowa, 216, 4 L.R.A. 538, 42 N. W. 654.

[8] German Fire Ins. Co. v. Duncan. 140 Ky. 27, 130 S. W. 804, 39 Ins. L. J. 1508.

shall render the policy void.[9] Dealings with insured property not calculated to produce changes in ownership, or supply a motive to destroy or weaken the interest of the insured, will not ordinarily avoid the policy.[10] The fact that insurer is a mutual company and that its constitution provides that whoever sells or exchanges his property leaves the company by such acts and loses his rights does not save it from liability upon a policy issued to a husband on his wife's property, as provisions for forfeiture must be strictly construed against the insurer and the issue and acceptance of such a policy does not conflict with but is consistent with such provision.[11]

§ 2291a. Alienation, change of title, etc.: waiver.—If it is stipulated that assent of the company must be indorsed in writing on the policy before transfer of the property is made, or the policy shall be void, a waiver by the company of such provision, in order to be effective, must be an intentional one; a mere notice of the transfer to the company, or a failure by the company to notify the insured of its disapproval, is not a sufficient waiver.[12] In order to recover in such a case, the insured must show some actual waiver of the condition requiring written consent, or else a parol consent.[13] Notice of the sale of property insured, and the assent of the insurer thereto, together with notice to the local agent of a mortgage taken to secure the payment of a portion of the purchase price, is sufficient to operate as an assent on the part of the insurer to the giving of the mortgage, though the policy of insurance contains a provision that if the property shall be thereafter mortgaged without the consent of the company being endorsed thereon, it shall become null and void, and that no agent shall have power to alter or change the terms of the policy, or make any indorsement thereon.[14] And where the evidence clearly shows that before the policy was issued by insurer's agent, who wrote and delivered the same, was informed by assured and knew of the existence of the mortgage in question, there is no violation of the condition against sale or transfer of the property or change in the interest, title, or possession. In addition

[9] Schloss & Kahn v. Westchester Fire Ins. Co. 141 Ala. 566, 109 Am. St. Rep. 58, 37 So. 701.

[10] Schloss & Kahn v. Westchester Fire Ins. Co. 141 Ala. 566, 109 Am. St. Rep. 58, 37 So. 701.

[11] Kludt v. German Mutual Fire Ins. Co. 162 Wis. 637, 45 L.R.A. (N.S). 1131, 140 N. W. 321, 42 Ins. L. J. 725.

[12] Armstrong v. Agricultural Ins. Co. 130 N. Y. 560, 29 N. E. 991, 21 Ins. L. J. 431; Gibbs v. Richmond County Mutual Ins. Co. 9 Daly (N. Y.) 203; Girard Fire & Marine Ins. Co. v. Hebard, 95 Pa. St. 45.

[13] Lett v. Guardian Ins. Co. 125 N. Y. 82, 20 Ins. L. J. 176, 25 N. E. 1088.

[14] German Ins. Co. v. York, 48 Kan. 488, 30 Am. St. Rep. 313, 29 Pac. 586.

such clause has reference only to subsequent violations.[15] A breach of condition as to change of title by chattel mortgage is waived where assurer's agent had knowledge thereof and so steps are taken to avoid or cancel the policy or return the premium.[16] So knowledge of assurer's agent of the facts as to the sale of the property and that the delivery of the deed, in escrow, would be made on payment of the purchase money with a request that he be notified when the transaction was consummated, operates as a waiver of forfeiture.[17] If the approval of the secretary of a mutual company is required to validate a sale or assignment of the policy, and before such approval can be obtained by the purchaser of property insured in said company, a loss by cyclone occurs the contract is terminated although the vendor had assigned the policy to the vendee, and the approval thereof was given after the loss, it being held that such subsequent approval was against public policy and the insurance could not reattach.[18] The statement of insurer's secretary, made after the fire, that this clause as to forfeiture for commencement of foreclosure proceedings would not be relied on, is not such a consent as to constitute a waiver of the right to claim a forfeiture, as the policy was then void and could not be thereby revived.[19] The indorsement upon an insurance policy of a clause, "subject to all the conditions of the policy, loss payable to" a certain person named "as his interest may appear," is not sufficient, although the person named is the mortgagee, to show consent to a chattel mortgage, where, by the terms of the policy, it is to become void if the property becomes encumbered by such mortgage, and no provision of the policy can be waived unless such waiver shall be written upon the policy, while the person named has an interest as mortgagee of the real estate sufficient to support the indorsement.[20] Nor is the forfeiture waived in case of an absolute conveyance and change of title by the acceptance by the agent of insurer of the purchaser's notes in payment of the premium and the collection thereof without assurer's knowledge, consent or ratification.[1]

§ 2292. Change in possession.—A condition in a policy of insurance that it shall become void by any change in the possession of

[15] Cowart v. Capital City Ins. Co. 114 Ala. 356, 62 So. 574, 27 Ins. L. J. 246.

[16] Hamilton v. Fireman's Fund Ins. Co. — Tex. Civ. App. —, 177 S. W. 173.

[17] British America Assur. Co. v. Francisco, 58 Tex. Civ. App. 75, 123 S. W. 1144.

[18] Harper v. Michigan Mutual Tornado, Hail & Windstorm Ins. Co. 173 Mich. 459, 139 N. W. 27.

[19] Findlay v. Union Mutual Fire Ins. Co. 74 Vt. 211, 93 Am. St. Rep. 885, 52 Atl. 429, 31 Ins. L. J. 986.

[20] Atlas Reduction Co. v. New Zealand Ins. Co. 138 Fed. 497, 71 C. C. A. 21, 9 L.R.A.(N.S.) 433.

[1] Ritchie County Bank v. Firemen's Ins. Co. 55 W. Va. 261, 47 S. E. 94.

the property insured must be held to refer to some change in the possession during the term of the policy, and not to one made before the application for the policy.[2] Change in the possession of the premises insured will not avoid a policy of insurance made payable to a mortgagee, if he was not aware of such change and the policy provided that it should not affect him unless he should fail to give notice thereof after the change became known to him.[3] Though the policy may provide that in case of the sale of the subject of the insurance written notice must be given to the company and its assent to such sale indorsed on the policy, and if the company cancels the policy, it shall refund a ratable proportion of the premium; yet, if the company having the policy in its possession is orally notified of a sale and orally consents thereto, and does not offer to return the unearned premium, this will operate as a waiver of the conditions as to consent and notice.[4]

§ 2293. Sales by partner: alienation, assignment, and change of title or possession clauses.—The question whether a sale by one partner to another of his interest in the partnership property is in violation of the conditions that if the insured property be "alienated by sale or otherwise," or if the "property be sold or conveyed," the policy shall be void has been the subject of frequent consideration by the courts, and is so unsettled that no definite conclusive rule applicable to all the states can be deduced; that is, if the rule stare decisis be adhered to by the several courts. The decisions upon this point, as well as those covering sales by a partner to a third person, or those relating to taking in a new partner, etc., will be considered under the next following sections.

§ 2293a. Sale by one partner to another: introduction of new partner: Federal decisions.—Where the policy provided that it should be void "if the property insured be sold or transferred, or any change take place in the title except by succession by reason of the death of the insured, whether by legal or judicial process or voluntary transfer or conveyance," it was held that the sale or transmutation of the various interests of the partners between themselves alone did not avoid the policy, but that the introduction of a new partner with an investiture of interest in him which he did not before have would defeat a recovery.[5] But in an earlier case it was held that a condition that the policy should be void if the property "be sold or conveyed" was not broken by the subsequent formation of a co-partnership between insured and third parties, and the placing of the insured property in the copartnership assets. The policy still covered the interest remaining in the assured.[6] And an agreement under which one is merely to participate in the profits of a partnership, does not pass such an interest in the property of the firm as will invalidate a policy of insurance which provides against a transfer or change of title or possession against the real intention of the parties.[7] But where the original policy was issued to the sole owner of the property insured and continued by renewals to a period beyond the time of loss and some time prior thereto a partnership had existed between insured and his sons of which firm he was a silent partner but he had turned over the business to them as active partners and surrendered the custody of the goods in their entirety to them, so that by said change assured ceased to be the sole owner of the goods described in the renewal policy and the firm became the owners of which facts no notice was given assured prior to the loss, it was held that there was such a change as to the goods insured, as to avoid the policy under a provision that the policy should cease to be in force as to any property insured which should pass from insured to any other person except by operation of law unless notice be given assurer.[8]

[2] Allemania Fire Ins. Co. v. Peck, 133 Ill. 220, 23 Am. St. Rep. 610, 24 N. E. 538. See also Cowart v. Capital City Ins. Co. 114 Ala. 356, 22 So. 574, 27 Ins. L. J. 246; Pioneer Savings & Loan Assoc. v. Providence-Washington Ins. Co. 17 Wash. 175, 38 L.R.A. 397, 49 Pac. 231, 27 Ins. L. J. 144.

[3] National Bank v. Union Ins. Co. 88 Cal. 497, 22 Am. St. Rep. 324, 26 Pac. 509.

[4] Moffitt v. Phenix Ins. Co. 11 Ind. App. 233, 38 N. E. 835, 24 Ins. L. J. 154.

§ 2293b. Sale by one partner to another: Alabama.—In Alabama, if the policy contains a provision that the assignment of the same, or any interest therein or an alienation of the property without the assent of the company indorsed thereon, avoids it, such a sale, and the assignment by the retiring partner to his copartners, who con-

[5] Drennen v. London Assur. Co. 20 Fed. 657, rev'd 113 U. S. 51, 28 L. ed. 919, 5 Sup. Ct. 341, aff'd 116 U. S. 461, 29 L. ed. 688, 6 Sup. Ct. 442.

On effect of transfer by one partner of his interest in insured property to other members of firm as a prohibited change or alienation of interest, see note in 18 L.R.A.(N.S.) 482.

On formation of partnership as affecting a change of title or ownership, see note in 21 L.R.A.(N.S.) 442.

[6] Scanlon v. Union Fire Ins. Co. 4 Biss. (U. S. C. C.) 511, Fed. Cas. No. 12,436.

[7] London Assurance Corp. v. Drennen, 116 U. S. 461, 26 L. ed. 688, 6 Sup. Ct. 442. Cited in Paul v. Cullum, 132 U. S. 539, 544, 33 L. ed. 432, 10 Sup. Ct. 151; Duden v. Maloy, 63 Fed. 183, 188, 11 C. C. A. 123, 26 U. S. App. 187; Baker v. Safe Deposit & Trust Co. 90 Md. 744, 759, 78 Am. St. Rep. 463, 45 Atl. 1028; Cannon v. Brush Electric Co. 96 Md. 446, 469, 94 Am. St. Rep. 598, 54 Atl. 121; Heye v. Tilford, 37 N. Y. Supp. 751, 2 App. Div. 350.

[8] Royal Ins. Co. v. Martin, 192 U. S. 149, 164, 48 L. ed. 385, 24 Sup. Ct. 247.

tinue the business, of his interest in the policy, does not avoid it.[9] In another case in this state where a policy was issued on a debtor's life for the benefit of his creditor, a copartnership, and there was a stipulation against assignment except with the insurer's consent, it was held that the transfer without the company's approval by one partner to another of the former's interest did not operate to defeat the right of action of the transferee. It appeared, however, that the transferring partner died before action brought, which was held to vest in the surviving partner the sole right to sue.[10]

§ 2293c. Sale by partner to third party: California.—In California, the transfer by one partner to a third party without the stipulated assent of the insured avoids the policy.[11]

§ 2293d. Sale by one partner to another: Colorado.—In Colorado, the transfer between partners is not a breach of the condition.[12]

§ 2293e. Introduction: new partner: Connecticut.—If a policy upon partnership property provides that it shall be void if there is a change in interest, title, or possession, it is held that the taking in of a new partner will be such a change, within the meaning of the condition, as will avoid the policy.[13]

§ 2293f. Introduction of new partner: Florida.—If a policy is issued conditioned to be void if there be a sale or transfer of the insured property, or any change in the title, or possession, the admission of a stranger to the firm, who is simply to have a certain interest in the profits of the business, but no interest in the properties of the firm, is not within the prohibition.[14]

[9] Burnett v. Eufaula Home Insurance Company, 46 Ala. 11, 7 Am. Rep. 581, criticised as carrying the "doctrine farther than was warranted by the cases to which it referred as authority, and farther than the rules of fair construction would permit," etc. 1 Wood on Fire Ins. (2d ed.) p. 739.

[10] Piedmont & Arlington Life Ins. Co. v. Young, 58 Ala. 476, 29 Am. Rep. 770.

[11] Shuggart v. Lycoming Fire Ins. Co. 55 Cal. 408.

[12] Sun Fire Office v. Wich, 6 Colo. App. 103, 39 Pac. 587.

Citing and following: Louisiana.—Dermani v. Home Mutual Insurance Co. of New Orleans, 26 La. Ann. 69, 21 Am. Rep. 544.

Massachusetts.—Powers v. Guardian Fire & Life Ins. Co. 136 Mass. 108, 49 Am. Rep. 20.

Mississippi.—New Orleans Ins. Assoc. v. Hollberg, 64 Miss. 51, 8 So. 175.

New Hampshire.—Pierce v. Nashua Fire Ins. Co. 50 N. H. 297, 9 Am. Rep. 235.

New York. — Hoffman v. Aetna Fire Ins. Co. 32 N. Y. 405, 407, 88 Am. Dec. 337.

Ohio.—West v. Citizens' Ins. Co. 27 Ohio St. 1, 22 Am. Rep. 294.

Texas.—Texas Banking & Insurance Co. v. Cohen, 47 Tex. 407.

Virginia.—Virginia Fire & Marine Ins. Co. v. Vaughan, 88 Va. 832, 14 S. E. 754.

[13] Malley v. Atlantic Fire & Marine Ins. Co. 51 Conn. 222.

[14] Hanover Fire Ins. Co. v. Lewis,

§ 2293g. Sale with reservation of interest to partner: mortgage of entire interest: Georgia.—A mere agreement of sale between partners made during the term of the insurance and before loss does not vitiate a policy taken out by partners in their firm name upon partnership personalty, notwithstanding, that by such contract one of the partners sells his interest in the insured property to the other partner, where there is also a reservation of the title until payment of the purchase price, and it appearing that at the time of loss payment in full had not been made, and that the selling partner still retained a half interest in said property.[15] In the case so deciding the policy was stipulated to be void if there should be a mortgage, bill of sale, or other lien upon the property, or any part of it, either prior or subsequent to the issuance of said policy without the fact being indorsed thereon, or if any change should take place in the title or possession of the property, whether by sale, transfer, conveyance, legal process, or judicial decree, or if the policy before loss be assigned without insurer's consent, or if the insured was not the sole, absolute, and unconditional owner of said property. In another case, one partner, after the policy was issued, gave to another partner a mortgage, not on his undivided interest in the partnership property, but upon the whole of it, that is upon the entire stock of goods insured, including not only the mortgagor's interest, but also that of a third partner, and it was held that said mortgage did not constitute such an encumbrance as to avoid the policy under a stipulation voiding it for encumbering personal property by a chattel mortgage, and it was declared by the court, per Simmons, C.J., that the mortgage contemplated by this clause was a mortgage by the partnership, or perhaps a mortgage by one partner with the consent of the others to a stranger or mortgagee without any interest in the partnership assets. The court also briefly makes a distinction between said clause and one forbidding alienation. It further appeared in the statement of facts, although not discussed as a point in the opinion, that said mortgage was canceled by record, and that the firm dissolved leaving said mortgagor the surviving member to whom the policy was regularly assigned before the loss occurred.[16]

§ 2293h. Sale to partner or third person: Illinois.—In Illinois, a condition in a policy of insurance requiring notice to be given to the company of any contract to sell the property insured must be held to apply only to contracts of sale between insured and third parties, and can have no application to contracts between insured themselves for the sale or transfer of their respective interests as partners or joint owners, so long, at least, as the party selling retains an insurable interest in the property insured.[17] In the case so deciding the court said: "The preponderance of authority in this country is clearly to the effect that such condition is not broken by a sale by one partner to another of his joint interest, at least, so long as the party selling retains an insurable interest. . . . The actual interests of partners in the firm property are necessarily fluctuating, and there seems to be no particular reason why the insurers should wish to keep the ownership unchanged as between them, so long as all retain an insurable interest." This opinion refers to Dix Mercantile Insurance Company,[18] and says: "The court . . . held that the assignment by a partner to his copartners of all his interest in the property insured was a breach of the condition of the policy in that case. It should be observed, however, that said condition provided that the policy should be void in case of 'any transfer or change of title of the property insured, or of any undivided interest therein,' a condition which may well be construed as applying even to a sale, by one partner to the other partners, of his interest in the partnership property." In this last case the condition was, "in case of any transfer or change of title in the property insured by this company, or of any undivided interest therein, such insurance shall be void and cease." There was a transfer of an undivided interest, and in the opinion the court said: "The intention of the company was manifestly as urged, that no stranger should come into the management and care of the property without their consent. Knowing the parties with whom they were contracting, relying upon the fidelity and circumspection of each and every one of them, they were willing to take the risk at the premium stipulated. It was an object of the first importance with them to secure for the property the guardianship and care of faithful and trustworthy men, and for this they were willing, for the premium, to intrust the property to the care of Sinclair, Dicks, and Harris, but not to the care of Dicks and Harris alone. Is it not plain that the insured may be as greatly prejudiced by removing one to whom, with others, they had trusted the guardianship of valuable property, as by the introduction of a stranger? The one removing from the concern may have been [17] Allemania Fire Insurance Company v. Peck, 133 Ill. 220, 23 Am. Rep. 610, 24 N. E. 538.

28 Fla. 209, 10 So. 297, 21 Ins. L. J. 316.

[15] Georgia Home Insurance Company v. Hall, 94 Ga. 630, 21 S. E. 828.

[16] Alston v. Phoenix Ins. Co. 100 Ga. 287, 27 S. E. 981, 27 Ins. L. J. 77.

[18] 22 Ill. 272.

the very one in whose vigilance, fidelity, and care the greatest share of confidence was reposed, and by his so removing the hazard is increased to the assurer without any corresponding increase of premium."

§ 2293i. Sale by one partner to another: Indiana.—In Indiana, where the policy was to be void "in case of any sale, transfer, or change of title of any property insured by this company or of any undivided interest therein," it was held that a sale by one partner to another of his interest in partnership property would avoid the policy.[19]

§ 2293j. Sale with reservation of interest to partner: sale by one partner to another: division of goods: Iowa.—If the policy stipulates against any change of possession, it is avoided, and there is a change of possession if not of title, where it is made to a firm which as such owns and has possession of the stock insured, and the firm dissolves, the remaining partner taking possession of the entire stock and giving his notes therefor, doing the business in his name, although the retiring partner reserves the right to see that the stock is kept to its value at the time the change took place, and, if there was a failure to pay on time, said retiring partner's interest to continue until payment was made.[20] Under an early case in this state a transfer of goods by the owner to a firm of which he is one of the partners is not such an alienation as avoids the contract under a condition which voids the policy in case of any transfer or change of title, since a partner by a sale of the partnership property to the firm does not actually part with the interest which he actually holds in such property.[1] This last case is distinguished in a later one in the same state where the condition was "if the title of the property is transferred, encumbered or changed" and it was held that said condition was broken and the contract terminated by the sale and transfer by one partner to another of his interest in the firm property; but here, before the loss occurred the partnership was dissolved and one partner brought the interest of the other and continued to carry on the business. Some stress was also placed by the court upon the word "changed" as used in the above condition, [19] Hartford Fire Ins. Co. v. Ross, 23 Ind. 179, 180, 85 Am. Dec. 452.

[20] Jones v. Phoenix Ins. Co. 97 Iowa, 275, 66 N. W. 169.

[1] Cowan v. Iowa State Ins. Co. 40 Iowa, 551, 20 Am. Rep. 583. The court per Beck, J., says that in certain cases "doctrines are found inconsistent with the conclusion we have reached, but we do not think the decisions themselves are in conflict therewith. It will readily be seen that by the transfer of the interest of a partner in the joint property of his copartner and his withdrawal from the firm, the parties in interest under the policy are changed. In the case before us they remain the same; the change only affecting the property covered—the extent of the lia-

it being declared that: "We are bound to presume that the parties intended by its use to express some provision or condition which was not otherwise expressed."[2] This last decision is followed in another case in the same state which also approves the distinction made between the two preceding cases. The condition here was: "if the property be sold or transferred or any change takes place in the title or possession," by "voluntary transfer or conveyance," etc.; the property was orally sold and delivered by two of the partners to the other who assumed all the obligations of the partnership and the policy was issued to the partnership in its name as partners and not to them separately.[3] But a division of goods belonging to a partnership, made in contemplation of a dissolution thereof, but not otherwise completed, does not constitute a change of title, interest, or possession, even though, as part of the arrangement, one half the goods are removed the remaining one half being burned while in the sole custody of one of the partners.[4]

§ 2293k. Sale by one partner to another: Louisiana.—In a case which arose in Louisiana, the policy contained the following condition: "This policy is not assignable unless by consent of this corporation manifested in writing, and in case of any transfer by sale, or otherwise, without such consent, this policy shall from thenceforth be void and of no effect." The court held that this did not apply to the sale by one partner to his copartner of his interest in the firm, and in this connection said: "Was it the understanding of the parties that the plaintiff could not buy out his partner and continue the business without the consent of the defendants on pain of forfeiting the policy? The prohibitory clause must be construed strictly. And if its application to the case before us be doubtful, the doubt must be construed against the defendants, the obligors in the contract of insurance. It is true the clause expressly prohibits the transfer, by sale or otherwise, of the policy, but it does not expressly prohibit a change of interest among the partners, nor does it expressly prohibit the assignment of the interests of one partner to the other. If the defendants had intended to place such a limitation upon the rights of the assured, the intention should have been expressed in the instrument, and not left to inference, because a prohibitory clause cannot be extended by implication. . . . In the course of business, partners often become dissatisfied and change the firm by one partner transferring bility of defendant under the policy, in case of a loss and without abridging that liability."

[2] Hathaway v. State Ins. Co. 64 Iowa, 229, 52 Am. Rep. 438, 20 N. W. 164, Reed, J.

[3] Oldham v. Anchor Mutual Fire Ins. Co. 90 Iowa, 225, 57 N. W. 861.

[4] Runkle v. Hartford Ins. Co. 99 Iowa, 414, 68 N. W. 712, 26 Ins. L. J. 320.

his interest to the other, as was done in this case. This occurrence is so common that the parties are presumed to have contracted, knowing it might arise during the period of the insurance; and if it was desirable to put a limitation upon the right of the assured in this respect, a stipulation to that effect should have been inserted in the instrument. By the assignment no new party is introduced into the contract whom the defendants might not be willing to trust.[5]

§ 2293l. Sale by one partner to another and mortgage back: Massachusetts.—In Massachusetts, it is held that a sale by one partner to his copartner and a mortgage back of the seller's share of the partnership property will not avoid a policy of insurance issued to the partnership and conditioned to be void, if without the written consent of the insurer "the said property shall be sold," or "the situation or circumstances affecting the risk shall, by or with the advice, agency, or consent of the insured, be so altered as to cause an increase of risk." [6]

§ 2293m. Introduction of new partner: Michigan.—If the policy forbids a change of title, the forming of a partnership between the sole owner and a stranger is held to avoid the policy.[7]

§ 2293n. Sale by one partner to another: Mississippi.—In Mississippi, it is held that a fire policy, conditioned to be void in case of the sale of insured property, is not avoided by a sale by one partner to the other of his interest in the property insured.[8]

§ 2293o. Sale by one partner to another: mortgage back: Missouri.—In a case decided in the Missouri appellate court, S and N were partners. They obtained a policy of insurance upon their property conditioned to be void if the property "be sold or transferred or any change take place in the title or possession," and subsequently admitted K to the partnership, and before loss S sold his partnership interest to N and K and took a chattel mortgage back; it was held there was such a change in title and possession as to avoid the policy.[9] So a dissolution of partnership before loss and a division of the goods, so that each partner owns distinct portions, is held to avoid a policy conditioned to be void in case of "any transfer or change of title in the property insured." [10] Another case indirectly decides that a sale between partners avoids the policy in

[5] Dermani v. Home Mutual Ins. Co. of New Orleans, 26 La. Ann. 69, 21 Am. Rep. 544.

[6] Powers v. Guardian Fire & Life Ins. Co. 136 Mass. 108, 49 Am. Rep. 20.

[7] McEwan v. Western Ins. Co. 1 Mich. N. P. (Brown's) 118.

[8] New Orleans Ins. Assoc. v. Holberg, 64 Miss. 51, 8 So. 175.

[9] Card v. Phoenix Ins. Co. 4 Mo. App. 424.

[10] Dreher v. Aetna Ins. Co. 18 Mo. 128.

this that it is held that there was a waiver by reason of an inquiry being made of insurer's agent, by a partner who was negotiating a sale of his interest, whether such a sale would affect his policy and the agent advised him that it would not.[11]

§ 2293p. Sale by one partner to another: Nebraska.—A sale or transfer of insured property and of his interest by one partner to another, is not within the meaning of an inhibition in the policy against a sale transfer, or alienation of the insured property without the consent of the insurer.[12] And a conveyance by one partner to the other of his interest in partnership real estate, is not a conveyance within the meaning of a fire insurance policy making the policy void in case of a conveyance of the property.[13]

§ 2293q. Sale by one partner to another: New Hampshire.—In New Hampshire, a sale by one partner to another of his joint interest in the property insured is not such an alienation as will avoid a policy conditioned to be void in case of alienation by sale or otherwise.[14]

§ 2293r. Sale by one partner to another: introduction of new partner: New York.—Where policy issued to D and C insuring partnership property, was conditioned to be void "by the sale or transfer of any change in title or possession of the property insured," it was held that the dissolution of the partnership and the transfer of C's interest in the property to D, and the giving of a chattel mortgage by D, did not work such a transfer of interest as to avoid the policy.[15] In another case, where a policy held by partners in common was conditioned that "when the property insured shall be alienated by sale or otherwise the policy shall be void," a conveyance by one partner to the other partners without the company's assent, was held a voidance of the policy so far as the third partner's rights had not intervened.[16] In Hoffman v. Aetna Fire Insurance Company,[17] the question was exhaustively considered and the New York decisions were carefully reviewed. In this case there had been a policy issued to the firm covering partnership goods and goods held in trust or on commission. The policy provided that "if said property be sold or conveyed" the policy should be void. One of the partners retired subsequently to the issuance of the [11] Millis v. Scottish Union & National Ins. Co. 95 Mo. App. 211, 68 S. W. 1066.

[12] Phenix Ins. Co. v. Holcombe, 57 Neb. 622, 73 Am. St. Rep. 532, 78 N. W. 300, 28 Ins. L. J. 238.

[13] German Mutual Fire Ins. Co. v. Fox, 4 Neb. (Unof.) 833, 63 L.R.A. 334, 96 N. W. 652.

[14] Pierce v. Nashua Fire Ins. Co. 50 N. H. 297, 9 Am. Rep. 235.

[15] Dresser v. United Firemen's Ins. Co. 45 Hun (N. Y.) 298.

[16] Tillou v. Kingston Mutual Ins. Co. 5 N. Y. 405.

[17] 32 N. Y. 405, 88 Am. Dec. 337.

policy and transferred his interest to the remaining members of the firm. After his retirement a loss occurred, and the company refused to pay, alleging a violation of this condition. A verdict was found for the plaintiff in the lower court and was affirmed on appeal. In this case the court said: "The weight of judicial authority in this state is against the doctrine that a policy issued to a firm is forfeited by a transfer of interest as between the parties assured." And again, after reviewing the cases, the court continues: "It is quite apparent, therefore, that in this state there is a decisive preponderance of judicial authority against the recognition of a sale by one to another of the assured as cause for forfeiture within the meaning of the proviso. But if the authorities were in equipoise, and the solution of the question depended on general reasoning and the application of settled and familiar principles of law, our conclusion would be in accordance with that of the court below." Under another decision in the same state it is held that the taking of a partner by the assured, and the transfer to him of an interest in the property, avoids a policy containing a provision against sale, transfer, or any change in title or possession, though the policy states that insurer will make good to insured, his heirs, etc., all immediate loss that results from destruction from the perils insured against.[18] In this case the policy was issued to a sole trader, who subsequently took in a partner and the condition was that the policy should be avoided in case "the property be sold or transferred, or any change takes place in title or possession." The court in this case said: "The right of the insurance company was in no wise invaded when this court held that a sale by one partner to another of his interest, where both were insured, did not avoid the policy. It is only when a stranger is brought into contractual relations with the insurance company that the consent of the latter is essential." In a later case in this state it is held that if a policy is issued to a firm upon partnership property, and provided that it shall be void if the interest of the insured be other than the sole and unconditional ownership, one of the members of the firm may assign his interest therein without affecting the sole and unconditional ownership.[19] And the interest of partners in partnership property continues the same after dissolution of the partnership until such interest is disposed of in some manner, and where there was a change in the firm name in contemplation of dissolution but [18] Germania Fire Insurance Company v. Home Insurance Co. 114 N. Y. 195, 43 Am. St. Rep. 749, 26 L.R.A. 591, 39 N. E. 77, 24 Ins. L. J. 382.

[19] Wood v. American Fire Ins. Co. 149 N. Y. 382, 385, 52 Am. St. Rep. 733, 44 N. E. 80, aff'g 78 Hun, 109, 29 N. Y. Supp. 250.

the business was continued with reference to past transactions and present assets under assured's management with the same materials or property and the same books until formal dissolution and thereafter there was a partial loss it was held that there was no such change of title as to forfeit the insurance.[20] And under the standard form of policy it is held that the rule is not changed by which prior thereto a policy was not forfeited by a transfer of interest between the assured parties and therefore a policy issued to a firm on partnership property was not avoided by a dissolution and a transfer of all the copartnership assets to one of the partners who thereafter continued the business alone but under the firm name illegally using the word "company" contrary to the statute.[1]

§ 2293s. Introduction of new partner: North Carolina.—If the policy stipulates that a sale of the property will avoid it, the admission of a new member is within the condition.[2]

§ 2293t. Sale by one partner to another: introduction of new partner: Ohio.—A condition against sale or transfer is not broken by a sale of a part of the interest of the insured therein; as where he takes a partner, and the property becomes vested in the partnership. After such sale the partner insured may maintain an action in his own name, but can recover only to the extent he has been damaged.[3] In the case so deciding the stipulation was: "If . . . said assured should sell or transfer the property thereby insured, that said policy should become null and void." The court said: "It was competent for the policy to provide expressly that a sale for a part of the property or of an interest therein should avoid the policy. . . . It was competent for the parties to provide in unambiguous terms that if the assured received into the business without the consent of the insurer a partner, the policy should become void. This was not done, and we think . . . that the sale and transfer resulting from the reception of a partner did not avoid the policy."[4] It was held under an earlier decision that when the policy provides that the assignment of some or of any interest therein without the consent of the company indorsed thereon avoids it, such a sale and the assignment by the retiring partner to his copartners, who continue the business, of his inter-

[20] Roby v. American Central Ins. Co. 120 N. Y. 510, 24 N. E. 808.

[1] Loeb v. Firemens Ins. Co. 79 N. Y. Supp. 510, 78 App. Div. 113, aff'g 77 N. Y. Supp. 106, 38 Misc. 107.

[2] Biggs v. North Carolina Home Ins. Co. 88 N. Car. 141, 144.

[3] Blackwell v. Miami Valley Ins. Co. 48 Ohio St. 533, 14 L.R.A. 431, 29 Am. St. Rep. 574, 29 N. E. 278.

[4] Blackwell v. Miami Valley Ins. Co. 48 Ohio St. 533, 14 L.R.A. 431, 29 Am. St. Rep. 574, 29 N. E. 278.

est in the policy, does not avoid it.[5] The code, however, allowed the parties in interest to sue in their own names.

§ 2293u. Sale by one partner to another: Pennsylvania.—In Pennsylvania, while it was held that a transfer by one tenant in common to a cotenant, or from one partner to another, against a condition to that effect, would avoid the policy, it was also held that if the policy was to run "so long as the yearly payments stipulated are continued," and after an assignment, which was approved by the company, one of the partners insured transferred his interest to his copartner, who thereafter for several years made the yearly payments, but gave no notice to the company of the transfer. It was further held that the policy was not necessarily avoided, but that it was a question for the jury as to the company's knowledge in the matter showing their agreement to the alienation, and thereby a waiver.[6] But a sale upon dissolution of the partnership by one partner to another of his interest in the business constitutes an alienation by "sale or otherwise." [7]

§ 2293v. Sale by one partner to another: business sold but continued under tradename: Tennessee.—In Tennessee, it has been held that where two partners take an insurance upon their stock of goods and the policy is conditioned to be void in case of an assignment, "whether of the whole policy or of any interest therein," and during the continuance of the policy one of said partners sells and assigns his interest in said stock of goods to the other, the risk continues as to the interest of the assignee in the goods which he owned at the time of the insurance, and he may recover in an action brought in the name of the firm for his use and loss of his original interest, but not for a loss to the interest of his co-partners so assigned to him; for that has ceased to be covered by the policy.[8] The fact that property is insured in the tradename under which the business is conducted by one procuring the insurance, does not prevent a change in the personnel of the members of the concern from effecting a change in the title or ownership of the property, within the meaning of a clause of the policy avoiding it in case of such change, although the tradename is continued by the new owners of the business. The contract being a personal one the policy is forfeited by such sale.[9]

[5] West v. Citizens' Ins. Co. 27 Ohio St. 1, 22 Am. Rep. 294.

[6] Buckly v. Garrett, 47 Pa. St. 204. And see also opinion of Loomis, J., in Lockwood v. Middlesex Mutual Ins. Co. 47 Conn. 553, 555.

[7] Finley v. Lycoming County Mutual Ins. Co. 30 Pa. St. 311, 72 Am. Dec. 705.

[8] Hobbs v. Memphis Ins. Co. 1 Sneed (33 Tenn.) 444.

[9] American Steam Laundry Co. v.

§ 2293w. Sale by one partner to another: sale with mortgage back: sale with vendor's lien: Texas.—In this state, where a policy issued to a partnership of three persons, provided that it was "not assignable unless by consent of this corporation manifested in writing, and, in case of any transfer, by sale or otherwise, without such consent, this policy shall from thenceforth be void and of no effect," it was held not to be avoided by the sale by one partner to his copartner of his interest in the partnership property.[10] A mortgage taken by a retiring partner who sells the insured property to his remaining copartner who continues in the business and gives him a purchase money mortgage is not within a condition invalidating insurance for a chattel mortgage or prohibiting a change of interest without consent of insured since the principle applies that if assured retains any interest in the property legal or equitable it remains operative to the extent so retained.[11] A sale of an interest in a partnership to the others, accepting part of the purchase money, and putting one of the vendees in charge of a part of the property is such a sale as to constitute a breach of a condition against a change in interest title or possession, even though a vendor's lien for the unpaid portion of the purchase price is retained.[11a]

§ 2293x. Sale by one partner to another: bequest by partner: Virginia.—In Virginia, where one partner in insured property transfers his interest therein to the other partner, recovery for loss thereof is not barred by reason of a clause in the policy forbidding any change in the title or interest of insured.[12] And where one of the assured firm was a married woman whose interest therein was managed by her husband and she died bequeathing her property to him, remainder to her son, and by the testators' direction and consent of all parties interested in the business it went on the same as before, it was decided that there was no such change as avoided the policy under a prohibition against any change in title or interest of assured in or to the property in any way without notice.[13]

§ 2293y. Agreement for partnership not consummated: Washington.—In this state a mere agreement to form a partnership and the Hamburg-Bremen Fire Ins. Co. 121 Tenn. 13, 21 L.R.A.(N.S.) 442n, 113 S. W. 394.

[10] Texas Banking & Insurance Co. v. Cohen, 47 Tex. 406, 26 Am. Rep. 298.

[11] Delaware Ins. Co. v. Hill, — Tex. Civ. App. —, 127 S. W. 283.

[11a] Mechanics' & Traders' Ins. Co. v. Davis, — Tex. Civ. App. —, 167 S. W. 175. "The legal title, by reason of the sale, immediately vested in his partners, and they could have enforced the contract against him." Id. 176—Rice, J.

[12] Virginia Fire & Marine Ins. Co. v. Vaughn, 88 Va. 832, 14 S. E. 754; Virginia Fire & Marine Ins. Co. v. Saunders, 84 Va. 215, 4 S. E. 584.

[13] Virginia Fire & Marine Ins. Co. v. Thomas, 90 Va. 658, 19 S. E. 457.

performance of acts consistent with the existence of the partnership agreed upon will not invalidate the policy where the partnership is in fact never entered upon.[14]

§ 2293z. Sale by one partner to another: Wisconsin.—In a Wisconsin case, where a policy was originally issued to partners, and provided that if the property insured should be "sold or conveyed without the consent of the company obtained in writing on the policy, it should be void," it was held that a sale by one partner to the other avoided the policy.[15] And where two of the partners bought out a third and the case turned upon the question of waiver by acts of the agent it was held under the facts that there was no waiver of such breach of condition against change of interest, title or possession with consent of assurer.[16]

§ 2294. Summary of decisions.—It is only possible to make a general summary of the decisions in the several states, as the particular conditions in each case have necessarily influenced the opinions of the courts. It may, however, be generally stated that a sale between partners avoids the policy in Illinois (where the entire interest is transferred), in Indiana, Iowa, Missouri, Pennsylvania, Texas (even though a vendor's lien is retained), Wisconsin, and in a Federal case. Such sale does not avoid in Alabama, Colorado, Iowa (case distinguished in later cases there) Louisiana, Mississippi, Nebraska, New Hampshire, New York, Ohio, Texas, Virginia, and under one Federal case and this conclusion seems more in accord with governing principles. In Tennessee it avoids as to the interest of an assignee before transfer. A sale between partners with a reservation of interest avoids in Iowa and Missouri, but not in Georgia and Illinois. In Massachusetts, Georgia, New York and Texas a sale between partners with a mortgage back does not avoid. In Iowa a division of goods in view of dissolution does not avoid. The introduction of a new partner avoids in Connecticut, Michigan, New York, North Carolina, and under one Federal case, but not in Florida, and in one Federal case where the new partner had an interest in the profits but not in the property, nor in Ohio, nor under one Federal case; while in Washington an agreement to take a new partner, which is not consummated, does not avoid. A sale to third parties avoids in California, and Illinois; and also in Tennessee although the business is continued under the trade name. The interest of partners continues after non-completed dissolution of the partnership in New York, but a sale by one partner to another upon dissolution avoids in Pennsylvania. A division of goods in view of dissolution does not avoid in Iowa. A bequest by a deceased partner to a person acting for deceased during her lifetime with direction to continue the business does not avoid in Virginia.[17]

[14] Pencil v. Home Ins. Co. 3 Wash. St. 485, 28 Pac. 1031.

[15] Keeler v. Niagara Ins. Co. 16 Wis. 523, 84 Am. Dec. 714; Keith v. Royal Ins. Co. of Liverpool, 117 Wis. 531, 94 N. W. 295, 31 Ins. L. J. 1043 (so conceded).

[16] Keith v. Royal Ins. Co. of Liverpool, 117 Wis. 531, 94 N. W. 295.

[17] Opinions of Text-writers.—Mr. Angell says: "When underwriting for a firm the insurer is presumed to know and to be satisfied with each and every one of its members. He is presumed to know that on the death of either of two partners the survivor, for all purposes, becomes the sole legal, and, on a favorable state of account, the sole equitable, owner of the partnership assets. The insurer, too, knows that on a voluntary dissolution of the firm the other will thereby have been made the sole owner of the assets remaining," and cites a New York case to the effect that a transfer of interest from one partner to another is within the original understanding, and will not prevent a recovery: Angell on Fire and Life Ins. (ed. 1855) p. 666, sec. 200a, citing Wilson v. Genesee Mutual Ins. Co. 16 Barb. (N. Y.) 511. Mr. Bates expresses no opinion, merely noting the cases, although he says: "It is to be wished that these distressing complications might be set at rest by the companies themselves, or by appropriate legislation:" 1 Bates on Partnership (ed. 1888) secs. 270 et seq., Mr. May says: "It has also been held that where such a change of property has been made, recovery can be had only for the loss of so much as has not been transferred, i. e., the interests of the remaining parties, but upon principle it seems to be reasonable that the plaintiffs, being owners at the time of the insurance, and thence to the loss, should recover the entire loss, and such seems to be the weight of authority:" 1 May on Ins. (3d ed.) sec. 279. Mr. Ostrander says: "When, however, the policy stipulates only against a change of title or ownership, it has generally been held that any change between the partners does not discharge the insurer; but the rule is otherwise when a stranger is received into the firm," although the head-notes to subsequent sections are, "a sale by one partner to his associate voids the policy. . . . When a partnership is dissolved and the property divided the insurance terminates:" Ostrander on Fire Ins. (ed. 1892) pp. 251, 257, secs. 106, 108, 109. Mr. Parsons says that "the better opinion is that where a partner conveys his interest to a copartner, the policy is not avoided under such a clause. The same reasoning would seem to apply to a conveyance of his interest by a partner to a third person. The partnership alone can transfer a chattel; the partner transfers only his right to account. There is some authority for such a rule, but the prevailing view would seem to be that the policy is avoided by such a transfer:" Parsons on Partnership (4th ed.) p. 235, sec. 180. Mr. Wood says: "As a general rule, it may be said that the tendency of the courts is to hold that unless the language of the policy is such as to clearly prohibit a sale of the interest of one joint owner to another in the joint property, and the policy can fairly be upheld in the face of such a prohibition, or if there is any doubt as to whether it was intended to apply to such a sale, the prohibition will be held not to apply in such cases, but will be restricted to the case of sales to a stranger." He is also of opinion that a decree of dissolution of the firm and division of the property releases the insurer: 1 Wood on Fire Ins. (2d ed.) 744, 745, 748. Mr. Clement, Mr. Cooley, and Mr. Elliott agree substantially upon the point that the sale or transfer by the partner to another of his interest in the copartnership does not avoid the policy, Mr. Clement and Mr. Cooley also state that the introduction of a new partner avoids the insurance. 2 Clements Fire Ins. (ed. 1905) p. 231; 2 Cooley's Briefs on Ins. (ed. 1906) pp. 1726 et seq.; Elliott on Ins. (ed. 1907) sec. 273, p. 266. Mr. Richards says: "Where the insured are joint owners of the property, or jointly interested in it, as, for example, in the case of partners or trustees, a transfer from one to another without the introduction of any new person, is held, by the weight of authority, to be no violation of the alienation clause." Richard's on Ins. (3d ed.) sec. 266, p. 350.

§ 2295. Conclusion.—It is evident from the decisions and opinions above given that the general rule may be deduced, and it is supported by the weight of authority and of reasoning, that a sale between partners is not such a transfer as will avoid the policy; and a question may fairly be raised whether it is within a stipulation against a change of possession. The above rule must, however, be necessarily subject to change in those cases where the policy expressly, in clear terms and not by construction or implication alone, prohibits a transfer or sale between partners. A sale between partners with a reservation of interest ought not to avoid; nor does a sale between partners with a mortgage back avoid the contract, but a sale to third parties or the introduction of a partner avoids the policy. So a voluntary completed dissolution of the partnership and a division of the profits and property would avoid the contract.

CHAPTER LXV.

ASSIGNMENT AND TRANSFER OF POLICY.

§ 2304. Assignment of policies: fire insurance.
§ 2305. Assignment of fire policies: "loss if any payable to."
§ 2306. Assignment of fire policies: consent: generally.
§ 2306a. Same subject: statutes.
§ 2306b. Distinction between assignment and executory contract: covenant to keep property insured.
§ 2307. Sale of property does not transfer policy to purchaser.
§ 2307a. Adoption of policy by vendee: "for account of whom it may concern."
§ 2308. Assignment: legal effect of assent to in fire policy.
§ 2309. Manner of procuring assent to assignment of policy: same: mutual company.
§ 2309a. Consent by assurer's agent.
§ 2309b. Agreement of vendor to obtain insurer's consent to assignment.
§ 2310. Notice of assignment: fire: marine.
§ 2311. What constitutes equitable assignment of fire policy.
§ 2312. Indorsements upon policy.
§ 2313. Fraud in making assignment: in procuring assent thereto.
§ 2314. Assignment to mortgagee: rights of mortgagee.
§ 2314a. Same subject: instances.
§ 2314b. Assignment by mortgagee: form of: effect of.
§ 2315. Assignment of fire policy as collateral.
§ 2316. Assignment to partner.
§ 2317. By-laws of mutual company as affecting assignment of policy.
§ 2318. Rights of creditor of assignor attaching subsequently to assignment of fire policy.
§ 2319. Effect of acts of assignor upon rights of assignee: generally.
§ 2320. Effect of acts of assignor upon rights of assignee who is mortgagee.
§ 2321. Effect of acts of mortgagor after loss upon rights of assignee.
§ 2322. Legal effect of assignment after loss.
§ 2323. Assignment of void policy.
§ 2324. Limitation clauses: assignment.
§ 2325. Clause as to assignment: waiver of breach thereof: forfeiture.
§ 2325a. Same subject: agent's acts or knowledge.

§ 2326. Assignment of life policies: generally: written assignment: parol assignment.
§ 2326a. Life policies: right to assign.
§ 2326b. Life policies: nature of assignment: construction.
§ 2326c. Life policies: consideration for assignment.
§ 2326d. Life policies: valid and invalid: assignments.
§ 2326e. Life policies: material alteration of assignment.
§ 2326f. Life policies: executory contract to assign.
§ 2326g. Life policies: equitable assignment.
§ 2326h. Life policies: assignment by assignee: generally.
§ 2326i. Assignment to undertaker, tradesmen, etc.
§ 2326j. Life policies: rights of assignee: generally.
§ 2326k. Life policies: reassignment.
§ 2326l. Life policies: gift.
§ 2327. No assignment by insured where interest in policy has vested in beneficiary.
§ 2327a. Distinction between assignment and change of beneficiary.
§ 2328. No assignment if policy forbids.
§ 2329. Notice of assignment: life policy.
§ 2330. What is sufficient notice: life.
§ 2331. Assignment of life policy: consent.
§ 2331a. Same subject: manner or mode of assignment.
§ 2332. Delivery of assignment of life policy.
§ 2333. Possession of policy: life.
§ 2334. Assignment of mutual benefit certificate.
§ 2335. Fraud in procuring or making assignment of life policy.
§ 2335a. Assignment: mental capacity: undue influence.
§ 2336. Absolute assignment of life policy to creditor: agreement to retain only amount due.
§ 2336a. Assignment of life policy to creditor: amount recoverable: continued.
§ 2337. Assignment of life policy as collateral.
§ 2337a. Power of attorney: pledge of policy: loan obtained by forgery: set-off.
§ 2338. Assignment of policy payable to executors, administrators, or assigns: estate.
§ 2339. Assignment of policy to trustees.
§ 2340. Assignment of policy pro tanto.
§ 2341. Effect of insolvency or bankruptcy upon policy: assignment for benefit of creditors: rights of assignee or trustee.
§ 2342. Rights of company where policy assigned.
§ 2343. Assignment by husband to wife of life policy.
§ 2344. Assignment of life policy to wife or dependents by insolvent bankrupt: creditors' rights.

§ 2345. Right of husband to assign policy issued for benefit of wife or children.
§ 2346. Right of guardian to assign policy issued for benefit of ward.
§ 2347. Right of wife to assign a policy on life of husband.
§ 2347a. Same subject: where wife has contingent interest only.
§ 2348. Assignment by wife of policy on husband's life: continued.
§ 2349. Assignment by husband and wife jointly of policy on husband's life: joint assignment by husband, wife and children.
§ 2349a. Assignment to husband and wife: joint ownership: survivor's rights.
§ 2349b. Assignment of employers' liability policy.
§ 2350. Assignment and transfer of marine policy: generally.
§ 2351. Assignment of marine policy where assignor has parted with entire interest in property insured.
§ 2352. Assignment of marine policy subsequent to absolute sale and transfer of subject of insurance.
§ 2353. Assignment of marine policy: delivery to assignee.
§ 2354. Notice of assignment of marine policy.
§ 2355. Prohibition in marine policy as to assignment.
§ 2356. Rights of insurers to set-off against assignee.
§ 2357. What constitutes assignment: cases generally.
§ 2358. What is not an assignment: cases generally.

§ 2304. Assignment of policies: fire insurance.—A policy of fire insurance is a personal contract, and in the absence of the consent of insurer, it cannot be assigned so as to permit the assignee to sue thereon in his own name. The contract is that the assured shall sustain no damage to the extent of the amount named in the policy, and though it is an insurance on the property, still it does not pass with the sale thereof, and is considered only as a contract of indemnity to the person named in the policy.[18] The insurer may, however, where the property has been sold, give its consent to an assignment of the policy, and when so given the contract is a new one between the assignee of the original insured and the company.[19] In the absence, however, of any provision in the policy as to assignment, fire policies cannot be assigned without consent of insurer so as to give any rights thereunder against the company to the assignee, as they are not negotiable instruments. So long as the property remains in the original insured, he may recover upon the [18] See § 23 herein. See also Swaine v. Teutonia Fire Ins. Co. 222 Mass. 108, 109 N. E. 825, 46 Ins. L. J. 709. See American Bonding & Trust Co. v. Baltimore & Ohio Southwestern Ry. Co. 124 Fed. 866, 882, 60 C. C. A. 52, 68.

[19] Donnell v. Donnell, 86 Me. 518, 20 Atl. 67, 24 Ins. L. J. 371; Folsom v. Belknap County Mutual Fire Ins. Co. 30 N. H. 231, 240; Rollins v. Columbian Mutual Fire Ins. Co. 25 N. H. 200, 207. See also § 2308 herein.

policy, but if he parts with the subject matter of the insurance, the policy, being a personal contract between him and the company to cover property owned by him alone, is at an end, as he has no interest in the property insured and the assignee has no rights thereunder, as a fire policy, being a personal contract, cannot be assigned so as to transfer the obligation thereunder to another without the consent of all the parties.[20] The insurance may, however, by agreement of the parties be made to follow the title to the property.[1]

§ 2305. Assignment of fire policies: "loss if any payable to."—In addition to the class of assignments which we have mentioned in the preceding section, there is another species, which is similar to that of the assignment of a chose in action. We refer to those cases where the policy is issued to one person, "loss if any payable to" another, or "in case of loss pay the amount to ———." Concerning this class of cases, Shaw, C. J., says:[2] "It is a contingent order or assignment of the money, should the event happen upon which money will become due on the contract. If the insurer assents to it, and the event happens, such assignee may maintain an action in his own name, because upon notice of assignment the insurer has agreed to pay the assignee instead of the assignor;[3] but the original contract remains; the assignment and assent to it form a new and derivative contract out of the original. But the contract remains as contract of guarantee to the original assured. He must have an insurable interest in the property, and the property must be his at the time of the loss. The assignee has no insurable interest prima facie in the property burnt, and does not recover as the party insured, but as the assignee of a party who has an insurable interest and a right to recover, which right he has transferred to the [20] United States. — Columbia Ins. Co. v. Lawrence, 10 Pet. (35 U. S.) 507, 512, 9 L. ed. 512; Columbian Ins. Co. v. Lawrence, 2 Pet. (27 U. S.) 25, 7 L. ed. 335.

Iowa.—Davis v. Bremen County Farmers' Mutual Fire Ins. Assoc. 154 Iowa, 326, 134 N. W. 860; Simeral v. Dubuque Mutual Fire Ins. Co. 18 Iowa, 319.

Maine. — Adams v. Rockingham Ins. Co. 29 Me. 292.

Massachusetts.—Tate v. Citizens' Ins. Co. 13 Gray (79 Mass.) 79; Loring v. Manufacturers' Ins. Co. 8 Gray (74 Mass.) 28.

Missouri.—Jecko v. St. Louis Fire & Marine Ins. Co. 7 Mo. App. 308.

New Hampshire.—Rollins v. Columbian Fire Ins. Co. 5 Fost. (25 N. H.) 200, 204.

Tennessee. — Mutual Protection Ins. Co. v. Hamilton, 5 Sneed (37 Tenn.) 269.

England.—Sadlers Co. v. Badcock, 2 Atk. 556; Lynch v. Dalzell, 4 Brown Parl. C. 431, per Lord Chancellor King.

[1] Carpenter v. Providence Ins. Co. 16 Pet. (41 U. S.) 495, 501, 10 L. ed. 1044.

[2] Fogg v. Middlesex Mutual Fire Ins. Co. 10 Cush. (64 Mass.) 337.

[3] Citing Mowry v. Todd, 12 Mass. 281.

assignee with the consent of the insurers."[4] An assignment of a policy results from an indorsement thereon of "loss, if any, payable to" a named person "as interest may appear," and if they are mortgagees of the property insured, they are entitled to recover for a loss not exceeding the amount of their debt.[5] But it is held that where the "loss if any" is made payable to a certain person it constitutes an assignment to him of all beneficial interest under the policy.[6] An insurance policy making loss payable to another than assured must be regarded as having been at its inception assigned to such other person with the consent of the company, and it is not necessary for him to obtain a transfer of the policy from the assured, assented to by the company, as in ordinary cases.[7] A provision that a loss shall be payable to a mortgagee or his assign as his interest may appear, operates only as a conditional appointment to pay so much of the proceeds of the policy as may be equal to the amount of the mortgage at the time of a loss under the policy. Such provision does not amount to an assignment of the policy, so that in case of loss the mortgagee alone may sue and recover for it. The right of action is still in the mortgagor.[8]

§ 2306. Assignment of fire policies: consent: generally.—In accordance with what we have stated,[9] an assignment of a fire policy without the knowledge and consent of the company avoids the policy.[10] And under a policy for the mortgagees' benefit a requirement

[4] See also the following cases:

United States.—Aldrich v. Equitable Safety Ins. Co. 1 Woodb. & M. (U. S. C. C.) 272, Fed. Cas. No. 155.

Iowa.—Mershon v. National Ins. Co. 34 Iowa, 87.

New York.—Pratt v. New York Ins. Co. 64 Barb. (N. Y.) 589, aff'd 55 N. Y. 505, 14 Am. Rep. 304.

Rhode Island. — Brown v. Roger Williams Ins. Co. 5 R. I. 394.

Texas.—German Ins. Co. v. Gibbs Wilson & Co. 42 Tex. Civ. App. 407, 92 S. W. 1068, 96 S. W. 700.

Wisconsin. — Keeler v. Niagara Fire Ins. Co. 16 Wis. 523, 84 Am. Dec. 714.

[5] Hanover Fire Ins. Co. v. Brown, 77 Md. 64, 39 Am. St. Rep. 386, 25 Atl. 989, 27 Atl. 314. Examine Towle v. Dirigo Mutual Fire Ins. Co. 107 Me. 317, 78 Atl. 374.

[6] American Smelter Co. v. Manchester Fire Assurance Co. 71 Mo. App. 63.

[7] National Fire Ins. Co. v. Crane, 16 Md. 260, 77 Am. Dec. 289.

[8] Williamson v. Michigan Fire & Marine Ins. Co. 86 Wis. 393, 39 Am. St. Rep. 906, 57 N. W. 46. See Franklin Ins. Co. v. Wolff, 23 Ind. App. 549, 54 N. E. 772, see s. e. § 2308 herein. See §§ 2314, 2314b herein.

[9] § 2304 herein.

[10] Carpenter v. Providence Washington Ins. Co. 16 Pet. (41 U. S.) 495, 10 L. ed. 1044 (mortgagor and mortgagee: assignment: rights of assignee and of mortgagor).

Cited in: United States.—Bates v. Equitable Fire & Marine Ins. Co. 3 Cliff. (U. S. C. C.) 220, Fed. Cas. No. 1,101.

Indiana.—Insurance Co. of North America v. Martin, 151 Ind. 209, 51 N. E. 361.

Massachusetts.—Stetson v. Massachusetts Mutual Fire Ins. Co. 4 Mass. 330, 339, 3 Am. Dec. 217.

of insurer's consent to an assignment to a grantee of the mortgagor must be complied with.[11] And it constitutes no excuse for not obtaining the required assent of insurer that such consent was difficult to obtain.[12] But the fact that insured has attempted to assign the policy will not render it void, unless he has at the same time parted with his interest in the property insured.[13] And when it is stipulated that an assignment before loss will void the policy, a mere promise to assign or a subsequent statement that the policy has been assigned is insufficient to avoid it where there has been no legal assignment, no actual transfer by actual delivery or in writing. A policy may, however, be assigned by written assignment or by a delivery which vests in the assignee such a title as to enable him to sue thereon.[14]

Where a policy has been assigned under seal, it implies a consideration, against which an unsupported denial of a consideration will be of no avail.[15] And the actual consideration for the assignment may be shown by parol where it is stated to be for value received.[16]

The assignment of a policy covers only such interest as the insured may have in the property at the time of the insurance and of the loss. The rights of the assignee cannot be more extensive than the rights of the assignor.[17] And if the assignment of the policy has been made before the loss, but between the time of making it and the delivery thereof a loss has occurred, it will not

Pennsylvania.—Girard Fire & Marine Ins. Co. v. Hebard, 95 Pa. 45, 37 Phila. Leg. Int. 349; Ferree v. Oxford Fire Ins. Co. 28 Phila. Leg. Int. 141, 8 Phila. 512.

West Virginia.—Bentley v. Standard Fire Ins. Co. 40 W. Va. 729, 737, 23 S. E. 584.

See also Bartling v. German Mutual Lightning & Tornado Ins. Co. of F. of M. 154 Iowa, 335, 134 N. W. 864, s. c. — Iowa, —, 123 N. W. 63, 39 Ins. L. J. 60; Guerin v. Manchester Fire Ins. Co. 19 Canadian L. T. 1, 29 Can. Sup. Ct. 139.

[11] Insurance Co. of North America v. Martin, 151 Ind. 209, 51 N. E. 361.

[12] Davis v. Bremer County Farmers' Mutual Fire Ins. Assoc. 154 Iowa, 326, 134 N. W. 860.

[13] Smith v. Monmouth Ins. Co. 50 Me. 96.

[14] Manufacturers' Mutual Fire Ins. Co. v. Swaney, 53 Ind. App. 429, 101 N. E. 843, 42 Ins. L. J. 1123.

Citing Lazrus v. Commonwealth Ins. Co. 5 Pick. (22 Mass.) 76; Griffey v. New York Central Ins. Co. 100 N. Y. 417, 53 Am. Rep. 202, 3 N. E. 309; Mahr v. Bartlett, 53 Hun, 388, 7 N. Y. Supp. 143.

[15] Mutual Protection Ins. Co. v. Hamilton, 5 Sneed (37 Tenn.) 269.

[16] Rawls v. Central Ins. Co. 97 S. Car. 189, 81 S. E. 805 (assignment of mortgage).

[17] Smith v. Union Ins. Co. 25 R. I. 260, 105 Am. St. Rep. 882, 55 Atl. 715, 32 Ins. L. J. 1000; Towle v. Dirigo Mutual Fire Ins. Co. 107 Me. 317, 78 Atl. 374. See §§ 901 et seq. herein.

defeat a recovery thereon, as the assignment will take effect only from its delivery, and, in such a case, will constitute an assignment after loss.[18] Though the insured is required to set forth the nature of his interest in the property, it is held that this rule does not apply to the assignment of policies in force.[19] Under an early Massachusetts form of policy no one could avail himself of a contract of fire insurance except the parties thereto or their legal representatives, except where the transfer is a valid one, assented to by the insurer.[20] It has been held in Wisconsin that the assignor may, where he is incapacitated by drunkenness at the time of the assignment, maintain an action to recover the policies, or the value of the same, and that he need not first resort to equity in order to have the assignment set aside.[1]

§ 2306a. Same subject: statutes.—An assignment of a policy may be made before but not after loss within the intent of a statute permitting the assignment of instruments for the payment of money.[2] Policies may also be assigned the same as any chose in action under a statute permitting an assignment of his interest by the obligee of any written instrument non-negotiable by the law merchant.[3]

§ 2306b. Distinction between assignment and executory contract: covenant to keep property insured.—A distinction is made between an assignment of the policy in praesenti and an executory contract, as where it was claimed that the policy was void because of an assignment before loss in violation of a condition providing for a forfeiture in such case. And it appeared that the claimed violation consisted of a covenant in a mortgage by which it was agreed that the mortgagor should keep the property insured for the benefit of the mortgagee and "that this section shall be construed and taken to be an assignment of the said first party's interest in and to any and all insurance policies thereon for the use and benefit of the holders of said bonds in case of loss," the mortgage having been given to secure bonds, and it was held that

[18] Watertown Fire Ins. Co. v. Grover & Baker Sewing Machine Co. 41 Mich. 131, 32 Am. Rep. 146, 1 N. W. 961.

[19] Lycoming Ins. Co. v. Mitchell, 48 Pa. St. 67; Cumberland Valley Mutual Protection Ins. Co. v. Mitchell, 48 Pa. St. 374.

[20] Carroll v. Boston Ins. Co. 8 Mass. 515.

[1] Bursinger v. Watertown Bank, 67 Wis. 75, 58 Am. Rep. 848, 30 N. W. 290.

[2] Davis v. Bremer County Farmers' Mutual Fire Ins. Assoc. 154 Iowa, 326, 134 N. W. 860. Under Code secs. 3044, 3046.

[3] Prentice v. Security Ins. Co. — Tex. Civ. App. —, 153 S. W. 925; Rev. Stat. 1895, art. 308. See also Southern Mutual Life Ins. Co. v. Durdin, 132 Ga. 495, 64 S. E. 264, 131 Am. St. Rep. 210, 38 Ins. L. J. 648. Civ. Code 1895, secs. 2116, 3077.

there was no assignment in contravention of said stipulation as there was no devestment of interest by said so-called assignment clause in the mortgage; that the stipulation was made as collateral security to a mortgagee and creditor and that there was retained not only a possible but real interest in the contract of indemnity. "It was not an out and out assignment such as we must hold was contemplated by the parties in an agreement which involved a forfeiture. Such agreements are always construed against the party in whose favor the forfeiture is claimed." [4]

§ 2307. Sale of property does not transfer policy to purchaser.—A policy of fire insurance is, as we have stated, strictly a personal contract, and as such cannot be assigned, so as to introduce a new party into it, without the consent of the insurer; consequently, the policy does not pass to the purchaser of the property insured, so as to substitute him for the originally insured, without the company's consent. It is not an incident of the subject of insurance.[5] Though the property may not be sold until after a loss, this does not vary the rule, in the absence of an assignment of the policy.[6] Though a policy of insurance on partnership property may be one of the choses in action of the firm, still it does not pass with the sale of the property, unless it appears that it was the manifest intention of the parties that it should.[7]

§ 2307a. Adoption of policy by vendee: "for account of whom it may concern."—Although a sale by assured of the property insured does not pass the policy to the purchaser of said property, and even though such sale is made without assurer's consent, nevertheless if the policy is taken out "for account of whom it may concern" it is sufficient that insured intended to protect the interest that afterwards passed to the person injured by loss, nor is it essential that assured should have in mind any specific individual, and if such is the intent the policy may be afterwards adopted

[4] Humboldt Fire Ins. Co. v. W. H. Ashley Silk Co. 185 Fed. 54, 107 C. C. A. 274, 40 Ins. L. J. 757. As to similar covenant, see Craig v. Insurance Co. of State of Pennsylvania, 162 Mich. 657, 127 N. W. 757; Grange Mill Co. v. Western Assur. Co. 118 Ill. 396, 9 N. E. 274.

Rule as to Construction, see §§ 220 et seq. herein.

[5] Iowa.—Davis v. Bremer County Farmers' Mutual Fire Ins. Assoc. 154 Iowa, 326, 134 N. W. 860.

Louisiana. — King v. Preston, 11 La. Ann. 95.

New Hampshire.—Lahiff v. Ashuelot Ins. Co. 60 N. H. 75.

New York.—Lett v. Guardian Fire Ins. Co. 34 N. Y. St. Rep. 411, 20 Ins. L. J. 176, 125 N. Y. 82, 25 N. E. Rep. 1088.

England. — Lynch v. Dalzell, 4 Brown Parl. Cas. 431.

[6] Pierce v. National Ins. Co. 50 N. H. 297, 9 Am. Rep. 235.

[7] Kitts v. Massasoit Ins. Co. 56 Barb. (N. Y.) 177.

by one who subsequently becomes the sole or partial owner of the interest, even though unknown to insured or insurer at the time of effecting insurance, and this is so even though a printed condition is inconsistent with such right, under the rule that the written control the printed clauses, and this applies to one who purchases a part interest in the property and adopts the insurance.[8]

§ 2308. Assignment: legal effect of assent to, in fire policy.—An assignment of a policy of fire insurance may be made with the consent of insurer, and such assignment will pass with it everything necessary to carry the purpose of the assignment into effect, though an actual assignment of the original indebtedness is not made.[9]

If the insured property is sold and the policy assigned to the purchaser with insurer's consent, the original parties to the contract have become changed, and it is a new contract and the assignee is recognized as the assured party, or to state the rule in other words; where a fire policy is by consent of insurer assigned and transferred by the original holder a new and independent contract is created equivalent to the original issuance of the policy by insurer to the assignee.[10] So the legal effect of a transfer of a

[8] Hagan v. Scottish Union & National Ins. Co. (U. S. D. C.) 98 Fed. 129, 29 Ins. L. J. 666, aff'd 186 U. S. 423, 46 L. ed. 1229, 22 Sup. Ct. 862. See §§ 619, 1692, 3609 herein.

[9] Stout v. City Fire Ins. Co. of New Haven, 12 Iowa, 371, 79 Am. Dec. 539. See also §§ 560, 561 herein.

As to alienation and consent to transfer or sale and assignment: notice to insurer: mortgage: mortgagee clause, see §§ 2248–2248b, 2795 herein.

[10] United States.—Ellis v. Insurance Co. of North America, 32 Fed. 646.

Georgia. — Northwestern Mutual Life Ins. Co. v. Montgomery, 116 Ga. 799, 43 S. E. 79, 32 Ins. L. J. 254, 261.

Illinois.—City Fire Ins. Co. v. Mark, 45 Ill. 482.

Indiana.—Manchester Fire Assur. Co. v. Glenn, 13 Ind. App. 365, 55 Am. St. Rep. 225, 40 N. E. 926, 41 N. E. 847.

Kentucky.—Niagara Fire Ins. Co. v. Layne, 162 Ky. 665, 172 S. W. 1090.

Maine.—Tremblay v. Aetna Life Ins. Co. 97 Me. 347, 94 Am. St. Rep. 521, 55 Atl. 509; Donnell v. Donnell, 86 Me. 518, 20 Atl. 67; Stimpson v. Monmouth Fire Ins. Co. 47 Me. 379.

Maryland.—Hanover Fire Ins. Co. v. Brown, 77 Md. 64, 39 Am. St. Rep. 386, 25 Atl. 989.

Massachusetts. — Swaine v. Teutonia Fire Ins. Co. 222 Mass. 108, 109 N. E. 825, 46 Ins. L. J. 709; Fogg v. Middlesex Mutual Fire Ins. Co. 10 Cush. (64 Mass.) 337; Wilson v. Hill, 3 Met. (44 Mass.) 66—Shaw, C. J.; Mowry v. Todd, 12 Mass. 281.

Michigan.—Bonenfant v. American Fire Ins. Co. 76 Mich. 653, 43 N. W. 682.

Missouri.—Standard Life & Accident Ins. Co. v. Bambrick Bros. Construction Co. 163 Mo. App. 504, 143 S. W. 845.

New Hampshire. — Cummings v. Cheshire County Mutual Fire Ins. Co. 55 N. H. 457, 460; Barnes v. Union fire policy is the same as the direction to pay to another, in the case of loss, and, in the absence of any prohibition in the policy or by-laws, either method may be properly taken to produce the result.[11] Such consent of insurers operates as a reissue of the policy to a substituted party upon the same terms and conditions as when originally issued.[12] It also operates by way of novation to discharge the rights and obligations incident to the original parties.[13] So where the policy has been so assigned, the assignee becomes liable for the premiums and the assignor is discharged from his liability therefor.[14]

The assignee has the same rights thereunder as the original insured, and in an action upon a policy is held to be subject to the same defenses as the assignor would have been.[15] And if insured had no insurable interest by reason of having no valid title to the property, insurer's consent to an assignment of the policy to a mortgagee while validating the transfer does not obligate insurer to the assignee.[16] It is also held that such consent will not, if the policy was originally void, render it a valid one.[17] So the consent of assurer's assistant secretary creates no new rights so as to validate an assignment made after loss by assured, who had parted with all his insurable interest at the time of loss by a sale of the property.[18]

An assignment, however, with assurer's consent to a mortgagee

Ins. Co. 45 N. H. 21; Folsom v. Belknap County Mutual Fire Ins. Co. 30 N. H. 231, 240.

New York.—Wolfe v. Security Ins. Co. 39 N. Y. 49; Hooper v. Hudson River Fire Ins. Co. 15 Barb. (N. Y.) 413, s. c. 17 N. Y. 424; Hayes v. Saratoga & Washington Fire Ins. Co. 80 N. Y. Supp. 888, 81 App. Div. 287, aff'd 179 N. Y. 535, 71 N. E. 1131.

Pennsylvania. — Buckley v. Garrett, 47 Pa. St. 204.

Texas.—National Fire Ins. Co. v. J. W. Caraway & Co. 60 Tex. Civ. App. 566, 130 S. W. 458, 39 Ins. L. J. 1466; Fire Association of Phila. v. Flournoy, 84 Tex. 632, 31 Am. St. Rep. 89, 19 S. W. 793.

[11] Merrill v. Colonial Mutual Fire Ins. Co. 169 Mass. 10, 61 Am. St. Rep. 268, 47 N. E. 439.

[12] Insurance Co. of North America v. Garland, 108 Ill. 220, appealed from 9 Bradw. (Ill.) 571.

[13] Swaine v. Teutonia Fire Ins. Co. 222 Mass. 108, 109 N. E. 825, 46 Ins. L. J. 709.

[14] Cleveland v. Clapp, 5 Mass. 201.

[15] Matthews v. General Ins. Co. 9 La. Ann. 590, 591; Commonwealth v. National Ins. Co. 113 Mass. 514; Bidwell v. St. Louis Floating Dock & Ins. Co. 40 Mo. 42; Reed v. Windsor Mutual Ins. Co. 54 Vt. 413. See Smith v. Union Ins. Co. 25 R. I. 260, 105 Am. St. Rep. 882, 55 Atl. 715; Towle v. Dirigo Mutual Fire Ins. Co. 107 Me. 317, 78 Atl. 374. See §§ 901 et seq. herein.

[16] Stanstead & Sherbrooke Mutual Fire Ins. Co. v. Gooley, 9 Rap. Jud. Q. B. R. 324.

[17] Eastman v. Carroll County Mutual Ins. Co. 45 Me. 307. See, however, City Fire Ins. Co. v. Mark, 45 Ill. 482.

[18] Davis v. Bremer County Farmers' Fire Ins. Assoc. 154 Iowa, 326, 134 N. W. 860.

loss payable as interest may appear, does not create a new contract but he is held obligated by the conditions in the original policy, as in case of other insurance.[19] But although the policy may provide that no assignment will be valid unless the consent of the company is given thereto, an objection that such provision has not been complied with can only be raised by the company.[20]

Though the policy may require assent to be given before assignment, a forfeiture may be waived by subsequent consent thereto;[1] and a purchaser of property insured, to whom the policy is assigned with the consent of insurer, is not affected by a forfeiture of the policy occurring previous to the assignment.[2] The company cannot, after it has assented to an assignment, set up in defense to an action by the assignee fraud in the original application.[3] And if a policy contains a provision that it shall be void if assigned, before a loss without the consent of the insurer indorsed thereon, and the insurer places on it an indorsement making the loss, if any, payable to a third person, this indorsement operates as a ratification of a prior agreement of the insured to the same effect made without the previous consent of the insurer.[4] When an insurance company without reservation consents to the assignment of a policy, representing upon its face an unearned value, to the purchaser of the insured property, who in good faith pays value for such an assignment, the company will not be allowed to set up mental reservations or prior breaches, which were unknown to either party, in avoidance of its liability on the policy.[5]

§ 2309. Manner of procuring assent to assignment of policy: same: mutual company.—The by-laws of a mutual company may require that the transfer of the policy shall be ratified and approved by the directors. Under such by-law it is held that a formal vote of ratification is not necessary where it may be fairly presumed from the acts of their authorized agents or their own acquiescence.[6] And it has been held that, in the absence of any [19] Franklin Ins. Co. v. Wolff, 23 Ind. App. 549, 54 N. E. 772. See also Holbrook v. Baloise Ins. Co. 117 Cal. 561, 49 Pac. 555, 27 Ins. L. J. 639. See § 2314 herein.

As to right of mortgagor and mortgagee to each sue in his own name for recovery to extent of his interest, see Swaine v. Teutonia Fire Ins. Co. 222 Mass. 108, 109 N. E. 825, 46 Ins. L. J. 709.

[20] Leinkauf v. Coleman, 110 N. Y. 50; Insurance Co. of Pennsylvania v. Trask, 8 Phila. (Pa.) 32.

[1] Shearman v. Niagara Fire Ins. Co. 46 N. Y. 526, 7 Am. Rep. 380.

[2] Continental Ins. Co. v. Munns, 120 Ind. 30, 5 L.R.A. 430, 22 N. E. 78.

[3] Ellis v. Council Bluffs Ins. Co. 64 Iowa, 507, 20 N. W. 782.

[4] Gould v. Dwelling House Ins. Co. 134 Pa. St. 570, 19 Am. St. Rep. 517, 19 Atl. 793.

[5] Hall v. Niagara Fire Ins. Co. 93 Mich. 184, 32 Am. St. Rep. 497, 18 L.R.A. 135, 53 N. W. 727.

[6] Durar v. Hudson Ins. Co. 24 N.

express provision making it the duty of some other officer to assent to assignments, the assent of the secretary will bind the insurer, though the charter requires all policies to be signed by the president.[7] If the policy contains a provision that it shall be void in case of the alienation of the property, but that the directors may ratify an assignment within thirty days, it has been held that the policy is simply voidable, and not void, from the fact of alienation, and the directors may, after the expiration of thirty days, assent to such an assignment, and in case they do, they cannot, in the absence of mistake or fraud, recede from their action.[8] And if the policy provides that the assignee may, by making application to the directors of the company within a certain period of time, procure the assent of the company to the assignment, it cannot refuse its consent without just cause.[9] Though the clause in the policy makes an assignment without consent void, the agent of the company may, by an oral agreement that the policy shall remain in force, bind the company until it has certified its consent to the assignment.[10] A charge to the jury is proper: that a policy may be assigned in writing or by a delivery, which vests in the assignee such a title as to enable him to sue thereon.[11] If an insurer issues a policy of "permanent insurance" by which it agrees to be and remain "forever" liable to assured, his heirs and assigns, and which provides that any assignment of the policy shall be brought to the company's office to be entered and "allowed," it cannot refuse to enter and allow an assignment solely because it has decided not to consent to the transfer of old policies.[12] Again, assured has the right to assume that the required transfer or assignment of the policy has been made in the proper manner and form when made by the authorized officer or insurer, even though the blank form

J. L. (4 Zab.) 171. In this case it was held that the fact that the secretary of the company had assented to the transfer as agent of the company, and indorsed it on the policy, was sufficient to bind the company. See also Phillips v. Merrimack Mutual Fire Ins. Co. 10 Cush. (64 Mass.) 350; Farmers' Mutual Ins. Co. v. Taylor, 73 Pa. St. 342. See, however, Loring v. Manufacturers' Ins. Co. 8 Gray (74 Mass.) 28.

[7] New England Marine Ins. Co. v. De Wolf, 8 Pick. (25 Mass.) 56. Examine Davis v. Bremer County Farmers' Fire Ins. Assoc. 154 Iowa, 326. 134 N. W. 860, considered under § 2308 herein.

[8] Grant v. Eliott & Kitterly Mutual Fire Ins. Co. 75 Me. 196.

[9] Boynton v. Farmers' Ins. Co. 43 Vt. 256, 5 Am. Rep. 276.

[10] Illinois Mutual Fire Ins. Co. v. Stanton, 57 Ill. 354. See §§ 560, 561 herein.

[11] Manufacturers' Mutual Fire Ins. Co. v. Swaney, 53 Ind. App. 429, 101 N. E. 843, 42 Ins. L. J. 1123.

[12] Marshall v. Franklin Fire Ins. Co. 176 Pa. 628, 38 Wkly. N. C. 473, 34 L.R.A. 159, 35 Atl. 204.

therefor on the policy has not been filled out nor the transfer signed by the assignor.[13]

The manner prescribed in the policy of procuring consent must generally be complied with, unless circumstances show a waiver by the company of such mode, or unless the company is estopped by acts of its duly authorized agent to set up the breach of such conditions.

§ 2309a. Consent by assurer's agent.—An authorized agent of insurer may undoubtedly indorse its consent to an assignment of the policy. This rule has been applied and based upon the principle that an assignment of a policy with assurer's consent is in legal effect a new contract, so that an agent with authority to make contracts of insurance may consent to an assignment of such contract.[14] Since the consent of insurer's authorized agent to an assignment is sufficient, the claim that the agency had been revoked will not aid insurer, where no such notice was given thereof as was reasonably necessary to inform a person of ordinary prudence that said agency had terminated.[15] And the agent's consent by a separate writing to an assignment will obligate insurer, especially so where no objection is made thereto for a period of about a year and up to time of the loss, during which period premiums were accepted and retained.[16] If insurer demands an additional premium where an existing policy of fire insurance is about to be transferred on account of a change of ownership of the property, and such additional premium is paid to the agent, who forwards the policy by mail to the company for the purpose of having indorsed thereon its consent to such transfer, the company is answerable where the property is destroyed by fire on the following day before such indorsement is made. And it may be shown by letters to insurer from its agent, that it consented to the assignment.[17]

§ 2309b. Agreement of vendor to obtain insurer's consent to assignment.—If a vendor executes and delivers a deed and assignment to the vendee of his policy covering his interest in the buildings on the property conveyed, and receives the purchase price, [13] Davis v. Farmers' Mutual Fire Ins. Assoc. 134 N. Car. 60, 45 S. E. 955. See § 2312 herein.

On variance between assignment of policy and insurer's consent thereto, see note in 42 L.R.A.(N.S.) 173.

[14] Sheets v. Iowa State Ins. Co. 153 Mo. App. 620, 135 S. W. 80, 40 Ins. L. J. 955, 961.

As to agent's powers: assignment, see §§ 560, 561 herein.

[15] Gragg v. Home Ins. Co. of N. Y. 139 Ky. 472, 32 Ky. L. Rep. 988, 107 S. W. 321. Termination of agency as to assured; notice, see §§ 720, 721 herein.

[16] Home Ins. Co. of N. Y. v. Myers, 32 Ky. L. Rep. 999, 107 S. W. 719.

[17] Medearis v. Anchor Mutual Fire Ins. Co. 104 Iowa, 88, 65 Am. St. Rep. 428, 73 N. W. 495.

his agreement to obtain insurer's consent to said assignment cannot, upon non-performance thereof and the loss by the property by fire, be enforced and the amount of insurance recovered from the vendor as said agreement is without consideration.[18]

§ 2310. Notice of assignment: fire: marine.—If the assignment of a marine policy does not vary the risk insured against, it has been held, in the absence of any provision as to notice to the insurer, that notice is not necessary.[19] A different rule would prevail, however, in the assignment of fire policies. Here, as has been stated,[20] the consent of the insurer, though the policy may contain no provision forbidding assignment, has generally been held necessary to render the assignment valid. Consequently, it would be necessary to notify the office of an assignment of a fire policy, in order to obtain its consent and to render the assignment of any validity. If the policy provides that in case of an assignment of the policy notice must be given to the insurers, such provision must, like the other provisions as to transfer of the policy, be complied with by the assignor or assignee.[1] An application to the insurer for consent to the assignment of the policy has been held a good notice under a provision requiring notice to be given.[2] If the charter of an association requires notice to the assurer and its consent to an assignment without complying with said requirement there can be no recovery.[3]

§ 2311. What constitutes equitable assignment of fire policy.—Though an assignment of a right to the proceeds in a fire policy may not be a valid legal assignment of the policy, it may, however, operate as an equitable assignment, vesting in the assignee an equitable interest in the proceeds. An equitable assignment, the policy itself not being assigned, will not defeat the policy under the general clause forbidding an assignment thereof, unless it is specially prohibited by the terms of the contract.[4] The assignee

[18] So held in Brawn v. Lyford, 103 Me. 362, 69 Atl. 544.

[19] Earle v. Shaw, 1 Johns. Cas. (N. Y.) 314, 1 Am. Dec. 117.

As to alienation and consent to transfer or sale and assignment: notice to company: mortgage: mortgage clause, see §§ 2248–2248b herein.

[20] Mutual Protection Ins. Co. v. Hamilton, 5 Sneed (37 Tenn.) 269.

[1] McEvers v. Lawrence, 1 Hoff. Ch. (N. Y.) 172.

[2] Hooper v. Hudson River Fire Ins. Co. 17 N Y. 424.

[3] Kamm & Schellinger Brewing Co. v. St. Joseph County Village Fire Ins. Co. 168 Mich. 606, 134 N. W. 999.

[4] California.—Bergson v. Builders' Ins. Co. 38 Cal. 541.

Illinois. — New England Fire & Marine Ins. Co. v. Wetmore, 32 Ill. 221.

Massachusetts.—Hall v. Dorchester Mutual Fire Ins. Co. 111 Mass. 53, 15 Am. Rep. 1; Foster v. Equitable Mutual Ins. Co. 2 Gray (68 Mass.) 216; Wakefield v. Martin, 3 Mass. 558.

of the interest of the vendor in a contract of a sale of real estate, by which the vendee agrees to keep the premises insured for the benefit of the vendor, is equitably entitled to the proceeds of a policy after loss to the extent of his assignor's interest, and the insurance company, with notice of such assignee's claim, is liable for his share of the proceeds, even if the whole amount has been paid over after such notice to the insured.[5] In the absence, however, of any knowledge of the company of the rights of an equitable assignee, the company is not bound, though such an assignment is good as between the immediate parties thereto; so in case of a loss occurring after the execution of a contract of sale of insured property, but before delivery of the deed of the property, the vendor recovers from the company as trustee for the vendee, the latter being entitled to the money.[6] If insured instructs insurer's authorized agent to change his life policy, payable to his estate, so as to make his wife the beneficiary an equitable assignment of the policy is effected even though the change is not made during assured's lifetime.[7]

§ 2312. Indorsements upon policy.—Where the policy provides that an assignment shall avoid it unless some officer of the company has approved of such assignment and indorsed the approval of consent on the policy, an indorsement of such approval and consent made by the president on a separate piece of paper, and attached by a wafer to the policy, has been held a sufficient indorsement.[8] And if the policy is stipulated to be void if consent of insurer, an association, is not indorsed thereon, it is not avoided by insured's writing upon the policy, when mortgaging the property, that the proceeds of the policy, in case of loss, are to be paid to the mortgagee as his interest may appear.[9] So an intention to transfer to the person therein named is sufficiently evidenced by indorsement on the policy that it "is hereby assigned to" said person.[10] An

New York.—Cromwell v. Brooklyn Fire Ins. Co. 44 N. Y. 42, 4 Am. Rep. 641.

Pennsylvania.—Gourdon v. Insurance Co. of North America, 3 Yeates (Pa.) 327.

[5] Cromwell v. Brooklyn Fire Ins. Co. 44 N. Y. 42, 4 Am. Rep. 641. See § 2306b herein.

[6] Shotwell v. Jefferson Ins. Co. 5 Bosw. (N. Y.) 247; Reed v. Lukens, 44 Pa. St. 400, 84 Am. Dec. 425.

[7] State v. Tomlinson, 16 Ind. 662, 59 Am. St. Rep. 335, 45 N. E. 1116. See §§ 740 et seq. herein.

On effect of death of assured before contemplated change of beneficiary is complete, see notes in 34 L.R.A. (N.S.) 277, and L.R.A.1915A, 580.

[8] Pennsylvania Ins. Co. v. Bowman, 44 Pa. St. 89. See Davis v. Farmers' Mutual Fire Ins. Assoc. 134 N. Car. 60, 45 S. E. 955, considered under § 2309 herein.

[9] Henderson v. Abbeville-Greenwood Mutual Ins. Assoc. 96 S. Car. 430, 81 S. E. 171.

[10] Rines v. German Ins. Co. of Freeport, 78 Minn. 46, 80 N. W. 839, 29 Ins. L. J. 183.

indorsement upon a policy, "pay under the within policy to J. S., or order," is only an order to pay the amount due to such person in case of loss, and is not an assignment within the clause avoiding the policy if assigned without the consent of the company.[11] Nor does an indorsement "in case of loss pay to ———," together with delivery of policy to the designated payee, constitute an assignment.[12]

§ 2313. Fraud in making assignment: in procuring assent thereto.—If a company assents to an assignment of the policy on the false representation that the insured has parted with his interest in the property insured to the assignee of the policy, and such assignment is in reality in fraud of the creditors of the assignor, the liability of the company is held to be terminated under a clause rendering the policy void in case of misrepresentation of interest in the property.[13] Though the assignment is voidable if procured by fraud, the insurer may nevertheless, after knowledge of the same, by acts of his own waive the fraud. So the levying upon the receipt of assessments from the assignee after knowledge thereof is held to be a sufficient waiver of fraud.[14] If a policy is assigned in fraud of a vendor's rights, the assignee who takes with knowledge thereof and recovers for a loss, cannot retain the money, but holds it in trust for the vendor, and recovery may be had of said amount from the assignee.[15]

§ 2314. Assignment to mortgagee: rights of mortgagee.—The direction on the policy to pay to the mortgagee is not an assignment of the policy. Its legal effect is that of a direction in advance as to the mode of payment, which when made is performance in the manner agreed to by the insured. Under such a direction, if assented to by the insurer, the person in whose favor the appointment is made acquires equitable rights, which the insurer is bound to regard, but the contract with the insured is not thereby merged or extinguished.[16] It is, as it was before the insertion of this clause, [11] Minturn v. Manufacturers' Ins. Co. 10 Gray (76 Mass.) 501.

[12] Ross v. Waldo Mutual Ins. Co. 52 Me. 187.

[13] Phenix Ins. Co. v. Willis, 70 Tex. 12, 6 S. W. 825.

[14] Cumberland Valley Mutual Protection Ins. Co. v. Mitchell, 46 Pa. St. 374.

[15] Craig v. Insurance Co. of State of Pennsylvania, 162 Mich. 657, 127 N. W. 757.

[16] Union Building & Loan Assoc. v. Rockford Ins. Co. 83 Iowa, 647, 14 L.R.A. 248, 32 Am. St. Rep. 323, 49 N. W. 1032; Franklin Savings Institution v. Central Mutual Fire Ins. Co. 119 Mass. 240; Milliken v. Woodward, 64 N. J. L. 444, 45 Atl. 796; Martin v. Franklin Fire Ins. Co. 38 N. J. L. 140, 20 Am. Rep. 372; Grosvenor v. Atlantic Fire Ins. Co. 5 Duer (N. Y.) 517. See also citations under next following note. As to assignment to mortgagee of thing insured, see Deering's Annot. Civ. Code Cal. sec. 2541.

"We think it clear that the stipua contract of indemnity to the mortgagor, being an insurance upon his interest, and is not a contract of indemnity to the mortgagee. The latter's right of recovery may be defeated by subsequent acts of the mortgagor prior to the loss.[17] This rule is qualified, or an lation in the policy for payment to the mortgagees in case of loss was but a provisional assignment of the contingent proceeds of the contract, and had not the effect to substitute the mortgagees for the mortgagor as the party insured. 'It is still', said the supreme court of Wisconsin in the discussion of a similar provision 'the owner of the premises who is insured and the contract of the company is with him alone, and the continued validity of the policy is dependent upon the performance by him of the conditions embraced in it.' Williamson v. Michigan Fire & Marine Ins. Co. 86 Wis. 393, 395, 396, 39 Am. St. Rep. 906, 57 N. W. 46;" Holbrook v. Baloise Fire Ins. Co. 117 Cal. 561, 49 Pac. 555, 27 Ins. L. J. 639—Britt, C., citing also Moore v. Hanover Fire Ins. Co. 141 N. Y. 219, 36 N. E. 191, note 28 Am. Law Reg. (N. S.) pp. 221–243.

[17] United States.—Bates v. Equitable Mutual Ins. Co. 10 Wall. (77 U. S.) 33, 19 L. ed. 882.

California.—Holbrook v. Baloise Fire Ins. Co. 117 Cal. 561, 49 Pac. 555, 27 Ins. L. J. 639.

Illinois.—Continental Ins. Co. v. Hulman, 92 Ill. 145, 34 Am. Rep. 122; Illinois Mutual Fire Ins. Co. v. Fix, 53 Ill. 151, 5 Am. Rep. 38.

Indiana.—Franklin Fire Ins. Co. v. Wolff, 23 Ind. App. 549, 54 N. E. 772.

Louisiana.—Monroe Building & Loan Assoc. v. Liverpool & London & Globe Ins. Co. 50 La. Ann. 1243, 24 So. 238, 28 Ins. L. J. 266.

Maine.—Brunswick Savings Institution v. Commercial Ins. Co. 68 Me. 313, 28 Am. Rep. 56.

Maryland.—Agricultural Ins. Co. v. Hamilton, 82 Md. 88, 51 Am. St. Rep. 457, 30 L.R.A. 633, 33 Atl. 424.

Massachusetts. — McCluskey v. Providence Ins. Co. 126 Mass. 306; Hale v. Mechanics' Mutual Ins. Co. 6 Gray (72 Mass.) 169, 66 Am. Dec. 410.

Michigan.—Jaskulski v. Citizens Mutual Fire Ins. Co. 131 Mich. 603, 92 N. W. 98, 32 Ins. L. J. 244; Cronin v. Fire Association of Phila. 123 Mich. 277, 6 Det. L. N. 1048, 82 N. W. 45, 29 Ins. L. J. 564.

Missouri.—Griswold v. American Central Ins. Co. 1 Mo. App. 97, aff'd 9 Ins. L. J. 254.

Nebraska.—Antes v. State Ins. Co. 61 Neb. 55, 84 N. W. 412.

New Hampshire.—Breeyear v. Rockingham Farmers' Mutual Fire Ins. Co. 71 N. H. 445, 52 Atl. 860, 31 Ins. L. J. 972 (act of mortgagor held within the rule but mortgage saved by protective clause); Baldwin v. Phœnix Ins. Co. 60 N. H. 164, 10 Ins. L. J. 34.

New Jersey.—Martin v. Franklin Ins. Co. 9 Vroom (38 N. J. Law) 140, 20 Am. Rep. 372.

New York.—Grosvenor v. Atlantic Fire Ins. Co. 17 N. Y. 391.

Pennsylvania.—State Mutual Fire Ins. Co. v. Roberts, 31 Pa. St. 438.

Tennessee.—Hocking v. Virginia Fire & Marine Ins. Co. 99 Tenn. 729, 39 L.R.A. 148, 42 S. W. 451.

Texas. — Hamburg-Bremen Fire Ins. Co. v. Ruddell, 37 Tex. Civ. App. 30, 82 S. W. 826. But compare Security Co. v. Panhandle National Bank, 93 Tex. 575, 57 S. W. 22; Panhandle National Bank v. Security Co. 18 Tex. Civ. App. 96, 44 S. W. 18.

Wisconsin.—Keith v. Royal Ins. Co. of Liverpool, 117 Wis. 531, 94 N. W. 295, 32 Ins. L. J. 1043.

On effect of breach of policy by grantor on rights of mortgagee to whom policy has been assigned, see notes in 18 L.R.A.(N.S.) 197; 25

exception exists thereto, to such extent as the mortgagee's interest is protected by a stipulation in the policy, or where it is provided that his insurance shall not be invalidated by the mortgagor's or owner's acts, in which case these protective stipulations will govern the contract.[18] But in Mississippi, before there was any statute upon the subject, it was held that the mortgage clause constituted a new and independent contract and the mortgagee might recover as to his interest without reference to any condition imposed upon the owner by the policy.[19]

L.R.A.(N.S.) 126; 31 L.R.A.(N.S.) 455, and L.R.A.1915C, 758.

[18] United States.—Syndicate Ins. Co. v. Bohn, 65 Fed. 165, 12 C. C. A. 531, 27 L.R.A. 614.

Florida.—Glens Falls Ins. Co. v. Porter, 44 Fla. 568, 33 So. 473, 32 Ins. L. J. 577 (principle stated fully).

Georgia.—Southern Home Building & Loan Assoc. v. Home Ins. Co. 94 Ga. 167, 27 L.R.A. 844, 21 S. E. 375, 26 Ins. L. J. 524.

Illinois.—Queen Ins. Co. v. Dearborn Savings, Loan & Bldg. Assoc. 75 Ill. App. 371, aff'd 175 Ill. 115, 51 N. E. 717 (principle applied, but whether applicable in this case see § 3304 herein).

Iowa.—People's Savings Bank v. Retail Merchants' Mutual Fire Ins. Co. 146 Iowa, 536, 31 L.R.A.(N.S.) 455, 123 N. W. 198, 39 Ins. L. J. 76.

Massachusetts.—Amory v. Reliance Ins. Co. 208 Mass. 378, 94 N. E. 677, 40 Ins. L. J. 1224; Whiting v. Burkhardt, 178 Mass. 535, 52 L.R.A. 788, 60 N. E. 1, 30 Ins. L. J. 666; Hardy v. Lancashire Ins. Co. 166 Mass. 210, 33 L.R.A. 241, 44 N. E. 209.

Minnesota.—Magonn v. Firemen's Fund Ins. Co. 86 Minn. 486, 91 Am. St. Rep. 370, 91 N. W. 5, 31 Ins. L. J. 805 (principle stated).

Mississippi.—Bacot v. Phœnix Ins. Co. 96 Miss. 223, 25 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1226, 50 So. 729, 39 Ins. L. J. 214.

Nebraska.—Phenix Ins. Co. v. Omaha Loan & Trust Co. 41 Neb. 834, 25 L.R.A. 679, 60 N. W. 133.

New Hampshire.—Breeyear v. Rockingham Farmers' Mutual Fire Ins. Co. 71 N. H. 445, 52 Atl. 860, 31 Ins. L. J. 972.

New Jersey.—Reed v. Firemen's Ins. Co. 81 N. J. L. 523, 35 L.R.A. (N.S.) 343, 89 Atl. 462.

New York.—Eddy v. London Assur. Corp. 143 N. Y. 311, 25 L.R.A. 686, 38 N. E. 307. See also as to principle: Hastings v. Westchester Fire Ins. Co. 73 N. Y. 141.

Rhode Island. — Smith v. Union Ins. Co. 25 R. I. 260, 55 Atl. 715, 32 Ins. L. J. 1000 (principle stated).

England.—Liverpool & London & Globe Ins. Co. v. Agricultural Savings & Loan Co. 33 Can. S. C. 94, 1 B. R. C. 593.

See § 2795 herein, and examine §§ 2248a, 2248b herein.

As to effect of acts of assignor upon rights of assignee who is mortgagee, see § 2320 herein. As to effect of acts of mortgagor after loss upon rights of assignee, see § 2321 herein.

[19] Bacot v. Phenix Ins. Co. 96 Miss. 223, 25 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1226, 50 So. 729, 39 Ins. L. J. 214, 224, citing East v. New Orleans Ins. Assoc. 76 Miss. 697, 26 So. 691; principal case decided under Code 1906, sec. 2596. See Queen Ins. Co. v. Dearborn Savings, Loan & Bldg. Assoc. 175 Ill. 115, 51 N. E. 717; Senor v. Western Millers Mutual Fire Ins. Co. 181 Mo. 104, 79 S. W. 687, 33 Ins. L. J. 455; Security Co. v. Panhandle National Bank, 73 Tex. 575, 57 S. W. 22; Boyd v. Thuringia Ins. Co. 25 Wash. 447, 55 L.R.A. 165, 65 Pac. 785. See § 2795 herein.

A mortgagee to whom a fire policy is assigned as security, who appears in an action to recover for a loss under the policy, and disclaims all interest in it, estops himself from ever claiming under the policy, and enables insured to maintain the action.[20]

§ 2314a. Same subject: instances.—A mortgage clause making the loss under the policy payable to a mortgagee as his interest may appear, does not amount to an assignment of the insurance nor of the insurance policy;[1] nor is a new contract created, but the mortgagee is held obligated by the original policy conditions where assignment is made to him loss payable as interest may appear;[2] and in so far as not limited by express language in a mortgage clause attached to a policy at the time of its execution, the plain provisions of the policy as between the insured mortgagor and the insurance company must prevail and be observed.[3] If the mortgagee, holding a policy issued to the mortgagor and by him assigned to the mortgagee, obtains a judgment upon the policy in case of loss, the mortgagor is held entitled to the benefit of such judgment where the mortgagee has foreclosed the mortgage.[4] Again, a mortgagee to whom insurance is made payable as his interest may appear, but who is not entitled to the whole insurance, need not be made a party to, or given notice of, an appraisement of damages to the property insured.[5] And an open mortgage clause attached to a fire policy, which merely provides that loss, if any, shall be paid to a mortgagee as his interest may appear, does not create any contract relations between the mortgagee and insurer, or give the mortgagee the right to participate in arbitration proceedings to fix the amount of loss; and, therefore, he will be bound by the award, although he was given no opportunity to be heard.[6] But where a policy assigned to a mortgagee contains a clause that upon the request of either party the amount of loss

[20] Worley v. State Ins. Co. 91 Iowa, 150, 51 Am. St. Rep. 334, 59 N. W. 16.

[1] Erie Brewing Co. v. Ohio Farmers' Ins. Co. 81 Ohio St. 1, 25 L.R.A. (N.S.) 740n, 135 Am. St. Rep. 735, 89 N. E. 1065.

[2] Franklin Ins. Co. v. Wolff, 23 Ind. App. 549, 54 N. E. 772. See also Holbrook v. Baloise Ins. Co. 117 Cal. 561, 49 Pac. 555, 27 Ins. L. J. 639.

[3] Erie Brewing Co. v. Ohio Farmers' Ins. Co. 81 Ohio St. 1, 25 L.R.A. (N.S.) 740n, 135 Am. St. Rep. 735, 89 N. E. 1065.

[4] Robert v. Traders' Ins. Co. 17 Wend. (N. Y.) 631.

[5] Chandos v. American Fire Ins. Co. 84 Wis. 184, 19 L.R.A. 321, 54 N. W. 390. Compare Bergman v. Commercial Union Assur. Co. 92 Ky. 494, 15 L.R.A. 270, 18 S. W. 122; Brown v. Hartford Fire Ins. Co. 5 R. I. 394.

[6] Collinsville Savings Soc. v. Boston Ins. Co. 77 Conn. 676, 69 L.R.A. 924, 60 Atl. 647.

On effect of award under terms of policy upon mortgagee not a party thereto, see note in 25 L.R.A.(N.S.) 740.

shall be left to arbitrators, it has been held that the mortgagor and insurer cannot, where the mortgage is unpaid, submit the question for award without the consent of the mortgagee.[7] It is also decided that the rights of a mortgagee in a policy payable to him "as his mortgage interest may appear" cannot be defeated by an accord and satisfaction between the insurer and the owner of the premises, who procured the policy in his own name.[8] Where the policy is made payable to a person as mortgagee, insurer cannot terminate a contract of insurance prior to its designated term without notice to the mortgagee, and, in the absence of a waiver of repayment, a tender of a ratable proportion of the premium.[9] If a debtor at or immediately after execution or assignment of a mortgage on his property to a creditor transfers to him a policy of insurance against fire on the mortgaged premises, though nothing be expressed at the time, or it is transferred as collateral security generally, it is a conclusion of law that the policy is to be held by the creditor as collateral security for the mortgage, and it requires an express agreement to authorize the assignee to apply the insurance money, in case of loss, to any other debt or liability, and the jury should be so instructed.[10]

If, the policy is assigned to the mortgagee, and he gives a new premium note therefor and contracts to pay all future assessments on the policy, agreeing that there shall exist the same lien upon the policy for the payment of assessments as before, this constitutes, it is held, a new contract between the insurer and the mortgagee, and as such it cannot be affected by subsequent acts of the mortgagor.[11] And if a policy is payable to a mortgagee as his interest may appear, and he also has a lien on the property in excess of the policy amount, he is entitled to the entire proceeds where the mortgage debt remains unpaid and there has been no release of the property.[12]

Insurers consent to an assignment to a mortgagee cannot be ex-

[7] Bergmann v. Commercial Union Assurance Co. 92 Ky. 494, 15 L.R.A. 270, 18 S. W. 122; Brown v. Roger Williams Ins. Co. 5 R. I. 394. See Erie Brewing Co. v. Ohio Farmers' Ins. Co. 81 Ohio St. 1, 25 L.R.A. (N.S.) 740n, 89 N. E. 1065. Examine Union Institution for Savings v. Phœnix Ins. Co. 196 Mass. 230, 14 L.R.A.(N.S.) 459, 81 N. E. 994; Reed v. Firemen's Ins. Co. 81 N. J. L. 523, 35 L.R.A.(N.S.) 343, 80 Atl. 462. See § 3249 herein.

[8] Hathaway v. Orient Ins. Co. 134 N. Y. 409, 17 L.R.A. 514, 32 N. E. 40.

[9] Lattin v. Royal Ins. Co. 45 N. J. L. 453.

[10] Buckley v. Garrett, 60 Pa. St. 333, 100 Am. Dec. 564.

[11] Foster v. Equitable Mutual Ins. Co. 2 Gray (68 Mass.) 216.

[12] Pan Handle National Bank v. Security Co. 18 Tex. Civ. App. 98, 33 S. W. 15. Compare Security Co. v. Panhandle National Bank, 93 Tex.

tended so as to cover other mortgages on the property held by the same mortgagee and of which it had no notice or knowledge.[13]

§ 2314b. Assignment by mortgagee: form of: effect of.—The form of an assignment of the mortgagee's interest is sufficient to transfer the same where he states that he transfers all his rights and title to the note and mortgage without recourse for value received, and the actual consideration may in such case be shown by parol evidence.[14] But the contract of insurance is not transferred by an assignment of the mortgage where the written transfer limits the transfer to the mortgage without undertaking, in terms, to assign said contract, and in such case the assignee of the mortgage cannot recover for a loss by action at law as mortgagee.[15] And it does not constitute such an assignment without assurer's consent as to avoid a policy with a mortgage clause, for the mortgagee to deposit it as collateral security with an assignee of the mortgage note.[16]

Where a mortgagee, to whom the policy is payable, in case of loss, as his interest may appear, assigns, not his policy but his rights as mortgagee to the insurance money in case of loss, the original assured mortgagor continues to be the owner and custodian of the property insured unless he has otherwise parted with his interest, and if he has so parted with his interest, without assurer's consent as stipulated, the policy will be avoided as to the mortgagor and his grantee, but if the mortgagee is protected as to his 575, 57 S. W. 22; Hamburg-Bremen Fire Ins. Co. v. Ruddell, 37 Tex. Civ. App. 30, 82 S. W. 826.

[13] Towle v. Dirigo Mutual Fire Ins. Co. 107 Me. 317, 78 Atl. 374. Examine Amory v. Reliance Ins. Co. 208 Mass. 378, 94 N. E. 677, 40 Ins. L. J. 1224. As to consent see §§ 2308, 2309 herein.

[14] Rawls v. American Central Ins. Co. 97 S. Car. 189, 81 S. E. 505.

As to release and requirement as to assignment etc., under Massachusetts statute, see Amory v. Reliance Ins. Co. 208 Mass. 378, 94 N. E. 677, 40 Ins. L. 1224. Mass. Standard form.

[15] Weinberger v. Agricultural Ins. Co. 80 N. J. L. 202, 76 Atl. 343. See also Kupfer & Smith v. Delaware Ins. Co. 80 N. J. L. 191, 76 Atl. 329, 81 N. J. L. 664, 80 Atl. 561, 40 Ins. L. J. 1938. In this last case (81 N. J. L.) the court, per Bergen, J., says: "In our opinion, where, as in this case, the deed of assignment of a bond and mortgage does not, in terms, transfer a policy of insurance held as collateral to the mortgage, or a chose in action growing out of a fire loss assured by the policy, and where neither party intended that the policy or the chose in action should be transferred, a contract different from that made by the written agreement cannot be read into it, to give it a more extensive meaning than that expressed nor can it be interpreted to include a right or security incidental to the mortgage assigned, but not disclosed in the deed of assignment, in order to support an action at law. Martin v. Insurance Co. of North America, 57 N. J. L. 623, 31 Atl. 213."

[16] Key v. Continental Ins. Co. 101 Mo. App. 344, 74 S. W. 162.

interests against the acts of the mortgagor by a policy stipulation, his rights and those of subsequent transferees of said rights only, as above stated, are not affected by such conveyance by the mortgagor.[17] If a policy is issued to mortgagors, payable to the mortgagee as his interest may appear, the assignment by the latter of his interest in the policy is not a violation of a condition against the assignment of the policy where the policy stipulations protect the assignee against the mortgagor's acts.[18]

If his entire interest is assigned before loss by a mortgagee to whom the loss is payable as interest may appear, he cannot after loss aid the assignee or confer any right of action upon him by an attempted transfer of his prior rights.[19] So where the contract of insurance is between a mortgagee himself and insurer and he transfers his insurable interest, an attempt to assign all his interest in the contract after loss to a subsequent holder of the mortgage transfers no interest upon which an action at law can be maintained by the transferee for the assignor has then no interest to assign.[20]

If the loss under a policy to a mortgagor, is payable to a mortgagee and "its assigns" and said mortgagee's interest is also protected by stipulation against acts of the mortgagor, and a purchaser of the premises assumes payment of the mortgage, the mortgagor has a right as surety independent of contract to become "its assigns" by paying the mortgagee's debt.[1] But where a mortgagee assigns his mortgage, containing a covenant on the part of the mortgagor to keep the premises insured, and that the mortgagee may procure such insurance upon the failure of the mortgagor to insure, and in his assignment guarantees the payment of the mortgage indebtedness, and subsequently the assignor of the mortgage becomes the owner of the premises and insures them in his own name to the full amount of the insurable interest of the mortgaged property, and a loss occurs while he is guarantor of the mortgage debt, the assignee of the mortgage has an equitable lien on the proceeds of the policy to the extent of his interest in the loss.[2]

[17] Breeyear v. Rockingham Farmers' Mutual Fire Ins. Co. 71 N. H. 445, 52 Atl. 860, 31 Ins. L. J. 972.

[18] Whiting v. Burkhardt, 178 Mass. 535, 52 L.R.A. 788, 86 Am. St. Rep. 503, 60 N. E. 1, 30 Ins. L. J. 666.

[19] Guerin v. Manchester Fire Assurance Co. 29 Can. S. C. 139, 19 Canadian L. T. 1. See also as to same principle, Davis v. Bremer County Farmers' Mutual Fire Ins. Co. 154 Iowa, 326, 134 N. W. 860.

[20] Weinberger v. Agricultural Ins. Co. 80 N. J. L. 202, 76 Atl. 343. See also Kupfersmith v. Delaware Ins. Co. 80 N. J. L. 191, 76 Atl. 329, 81 N. J. L. 664, 80 Atl. 561, 40 Ins. L. J. 1938.

[1] Merchants Ins. Co. v. Story, 13 Tex. Civ. App. 124, 35 S. W. 68.

As to subrogation; insurer, mortgagor, mortgagee, see §§ 3556 et seq., 3563 et seq. herein.

[2] Hyde v. Hartford Fire Ins. Co.

Finally: it would seem to be a self-evident proposition that a mortgagee can neither convey, transfer nor assign any greater rights than he himself possesses, whether the question relates to the extent of his interests or rights under one form of policy or another.[3]

§ 2315. Assignment of fire policy as collateral.—A provision of the policy making it void in case of an assignment without the company's assent does not embrace a transfer by way of collateral security for a debt.[4] And as the consent of the insurer that a policy may be assigned to a designated person does not require that such assignment be absolute, an assignment absolute in form, but intended as collateral security for a debt due from the assignor to the assignee, is valid; and does not avoid the policy, where such an assignment is not prohibited therein nor by the by-laws of the insurance corporation, and no misrepresentation of facts was made to the insurer, its assent being given without inquiry on its part.[5] If, however, the policy expressly provides that it shall be void in case of an assignment of the entire interest, or of any interest whatever under the policy, a transfer by way of collateral security is within such prohibition, and renders it void.[6] So also a condition expressly forbidding the assignment or transfer of a policy as collateral security will prevent the person holding the same as collateral from maintaining an action thereon.[7] Since a policy may be transferred as collateral security, therefore, in the absence of any stipulation therein or any regulation of the insurer by which the assured or his assignee may be bound, the assignee may collect any sum which may become payable by the insurer by process in the assignee's own name if the insurer has assented to 70 Neb. 503, 113 Am. St. Rep. 796, 97 N. W. 629.

[3] See Carpenter v. Providence-Washington Ins. Co. 16 Pet. (41 U. S.) 495, 10 L. ed. 1044, per Story, J. Cited in Smith v. Union Ins. Co. 25 R. I. 260, 55 Atl. 715, 32 Ins. L. J. 1000, 1003,—Douglas, J.

[4] Griffey v. New York Central Ins. Co. 100 N. Y. 417, 53 Am. Rep. 202, 3 N. E. 309, Earl, J., dissenting; True v. Manhattan Fire Ins. Co. 26 Fed. 83; Scottish Union & National Ins. Co. v. Andrews & Matthews, 40 Tex. Civ. App. 184, 89 S. W. 419, 35 Ins. L. J. 37. "It seems to be well settled that a clause in a policy of insurance which in general terms prohibits its assignment before loss should be construed as only intending to prohibit a complete and absolute divestiture of title by the insured and not a mere conditional transfer to a creditor, which in effect would only give the creditor a lien upon the proceeds of the policy, in event of loss to secure his unpaid indebtedness."—Id. Pleasants, J.

[5] Merrill v. Colonial Mutual Fire Ins. Co. 169 Mass. 10, 61 Am. St. Rep. 268, 47 N. E. 439.

[6] Ferree v. Oxford Fire Ins. Co. 8 Phila. (Pa.) 512. See Lynde v. Newark Fire Ins. Co. 139 Mass. 57, 29 N. E. 222.

[7] Lynde v. Newark Fire Ins. Co. 139 Mass. 57, 29 N. E. 222.

the assignment; otherwise, in the name of the assured. The assignment, if it leaves the assignor with an interest in the contract and in the loss, does not make the insurance void, because the assignee had no insurable interest in the property.[8] And if after the assignment of the policy as collateral a loss occurs, the assignee will have an equitable lien upon the proceeds of the policy as against the assignor or persons claiming under him, though the assignee may have no interest in the property insured and the consent of the insurer to the assignment has never been obtained.[9] The right of a person holding the policy as collateral is merely a defeasible one, of which he is devested by the payment of the debt.[10] Where a policy was assigned "as collateral security only first to A, then to B and assigns," A and B holding the first and second mortgages, respectively, the assignment was held to give A and B a joint right of action, and it was also held that the amount recovered should be applied to the payment of A's mortgage first and then to B's.[11] The assignee of a policy as collateral security for a debt is held subject to all defenses available against the assignor.[12] The insurers may set up in defense the fact that the policy is violated by the transfer as collateral security, but in such a case they must show that it was in fact so transferred, as the mere possession of the policy by another than the insured is not prima facie proof of a pledge.[13] So the assignment of property and the insurance thereon as security for a debt renders the policy void under a provision in the policy making it void if the interest of insured is other than unconditional ownership or if any change takes place in his interest, title, or possession; and it is immaterial that the insurer consents to assignment of the property to the trustee for the creditor, if the consent is based upon ownership by the assignee, and not upon the fact that he is trustee for a creditor.[14] But an assignment or hypothecation of a fire policy to a creditor, as collateral security for an extension of time on a debt of only about one-seventh the face value of the policy, does not constitute or amount to an as-

[8] Merrill v. Colonial Mutual Fire Ins. Co. 169 Mass. 10, 61 Am. St. Rep. 268, 47 N. E. 439.

[9] Bibend v. Liverpool & London Fire & Life Ins. Co. 30 Cal. 78; Wakefield v. Martin, 3 Mass. 558; Cromwell v. Brooklyn Fire Ins. Co. 44 N. Y. 42, 4 Am. Rep. 641.

[10] Robert v. Traders' Ins. Co. 17 Wend. (N. Y.) 631, s. c. 9 Wend. (N. Y.) 474.

[11] Marts v. Cumberland Mutual Fire Ins. Co. 44 N. J. L. 478.

[12] East Texas Fire Ins. Co. v. Coffee, 61 Tex. 287.

[13] Lazarus v. Commercial Ins. Co. 5 Pick. (22 Mass.) 76; People v. Beigler, Lalor's Supp. Hill & D. (N. Y.) 133.

[14] Smith v. Retail Merchants' Fire Co. 29 S. Dak. 332, 42 L.R.A.(N.S.) 173, 137 N. W. 47.

On variance between assignment of policy and insurer's consent thereto, see note in 42 L.R.A.(N.S.) 173.

signment of the policy, in violation of the stipulation contained therein, to the effect that the policy shall be void if "assigned before loss."[15] If a mortgagee under a policy payable to him as his interest may appear, assigns, not the policy, but his rights under the mortgage to another, and said second assignee transfers his rights as security for a loan, the acts of the mortgagor by a conveyance in breach of a policy condition would avoid it, but if the mortgagee is protected by a policy stipulation such protection will extend to the last assignee although the conveyance is made to the assignor, of the said creditor after the assignment to him.[16] An assignment of a policy may be proved by parol evidence to have been given and accepted as collateral security for a debt due from the assignor to the assignee, though the fact that the assignment was intended as collateral security was not communicated to the insurer.[17]

§ 2316. Assignment to partner.—If the policy contains a provision that the assignment of the same, or any interest therein, without the assent of the company indorsed thereon, avoids it, such a sale and the assignment by the retiring partner to his copartners, who continue the business, of his interest in the policy does not avoid it.[18] Where a policy of fire insurance conditioned not to be assignable without the written consent of the insurer, and to be void in case of transfer by sale or otherwise without such consent, was issued to a partnership of three persons, and subsequently during the term one partner retired without assigning his interest in the policy, but selling his interest in the partnership to his copartners, who continued the business, a fire subsequently having destroyed the property insured, it was held that the two remaining

[15] Allen v. Phœnix Assurance Co. 12 Idaho, 653, 8 L.R.A.(N.S.) 903, 88 Pac. 245. See G. Obler & Sons Co. v. Buttorff Mfg. Co. 145 Ala. 625, 40 So. 278.

[16] Breeyear v. Rockingham Farmers' Mutual Fire Ins. Co. 71 N. H. 445, 52 Atl. 860, 31 Ins. L. J. 972. Examine Amory v. Reliance Ins. Co. 208 Mass. 578, 94 N. E. 677, 40 Ins. L. J. 1224.

[17] Merrill v. Colonial Mutual Fire Ins. Co. 169 Mass. 10, 61 Am. St. Rep. 268, 47 N. E. 439. See G. Obler & Sons Co. v. Buttorff Mfg. Co. 145 Ala. 625, 40 So. 278 (debt was about one third); Imperial Ins. Co. v. Wolf, 21 Ohio Cir. Ct. 202.

[18] West v. Citizens' Ins. Co. 27 Ohio St. 1, 22 Am. Rep. 294. See also Dermani v. Home Mutual Ins. Co. 26 La. Ann. 69, 21 Am. Rep. 544; Wilson v. Genesee Mutual Fire Ins. Co. 16 Barb. (N. Y.) 511; Hoffman v. Ætna Ins. Co. 1 Rob. (24 N. Y.) 501, aff'd in 32 N. Y. 405, 88 Am. Dec. 337; Texas Banking & Ins. Co. v. Cohen, 47 Tex. 406, 26 Am. Rep. 298. But see Buckley v. Garrett, 47 Pa. 204; Hobbs v. Memphis Ins. Co. 1 Sneed (33 Tenn.) 444. See §§ 2293 et seq. herein.

copartners could recover on the policy.[19] The amount of the remaining partner's recovery in case of assignment is not limited to the extent of their interest before loss, but they may recover to the full extent of the loss.[20] A policy on a building and stock of merchandise therein, issued to a partnership and to one of its members, reciting that the former are the owners of the building and that such member is the owner of such merchandise, is, in effect, two different contracts of insurance, and an assignment of the policy by such member affects only his interest in the merchandise.[1]

§ 2317. By-laws of mutual company as affecting assignment of policy.—As we have stated the condition inserted in the policy of insurance as to the manner of making the assignment must, in the absence of a waiver of such condition, be strictly complied with. So any provision in the charter or by-laws of a mutual company stating certain things as requisite for a valid assignment must also be complied with where such charter and by-laws are made a part of the policy.[2] So where there is a provision in the by-laws that upon a transfer of the policy the assignee must give his note in place of that of the person originally insured; it is essential to the validity of the transfer that such note be given, and it is not a waiver of such requirement that the secretary indorses his consent to the assignment upon the policy where he retains the same until the new note is given.[3] And where assigns are not included but only members, their heirs and executors under the laws of a mutual company, an assignee cannot acquire any rights without such company's consent to the assignment.[4] It is held, however, that an equitable title is transferred even though the assignment is not in writing as required under the by-laws and the contract, but the assignee can only be received as a member upon compliance with the company's laws relating thereto and some recognition on his part of liability as such member.[5]

[19] Texas Banking & Ins. Co. v. Cohen, 47 Tex. 406, 26 Am. Rep. 298.

[20] West v. Citizens' Ins. Co. 27 Ohio St. 1, 22 Am. Rep. 294.

[1] Manchester Fire Assur. Co. v. Koerner, 13 Ind. App. 372, 55 Am. St. Rep. 231, 40 N. E. 1110, 41 N. E. 848.

[2] Simeral v. Dubuque Mutual Fire Ins. Co. 18 Iowa, 319.

[3] Cranberry Mutual Fire Ins. Co. v. Hawk, (N. J.) 14 Atl. 745, 13 Cent. Rep. 107.

[4] Davis v. County Farmers' Mutual Fire Ins. Assoc. 154 Iowa, 326, 134 S. W. 860.

[5] Cannon v. Farmers' Mutual Fire Assoc. 58 N. J. Eq. 102, 43 Atl. 281.

On transferees of policy or property as members of mutual fire insurance company, see note in 32 L.R.A. 482.

§ 2318. Rights of creditor of assignor attaching subsequently to assignment of fire policy.—An assignment of a policy of fire insurance before loss, with the consent of the company, to the vendee or mortgagee of the insured property, or as security for debt, is good as against subsequently attaching creditors.[6] And where the policy has been assigned to a mortgagee, a creditor attaching subsequently to such assignment cannot defeat it by any defects in the mortgage.[7] Where after a loss a written assignment of a fire policy has been made by the holder, and notice of such assignment served on the company, but no delivery of the policy made, it has been held to be a valid assignment, which a subsequent attaching creditor cannot defeat, and such assignment need not be recorded under a statutory requirement that, in case of the sale or mortgage of personal property, the transfer must be recorded where the vendor or mortgagor retains possession.[8]

§ 2319. Effect of acts of assignor upon rights of assignee: generally.—If the property insured is sold and the policy assigned with the consent of the company, it constitutes a new contract between the purchaser of the property and the insurer, and the former is not affected by any acts of the assignor, and the company is estopped to deny its validity either for want of consideration or on the ground of ignorance.[9] But if the policy is merely assigned as collateral security, it would seem that the insurer might avail itself as a defense of any acts of the assignor in violation of the conditions in the policy. The contract is one of indemnity to the insured. By such an assignment no new party assumes any obligation to the company; no new consideration moves from the assignee to the insurer. The policy is merely assigned for security, the assignor, after the assignment, occupying the same relation to the insurer as before. It is his interest which is covered. The company, by consent to such an assignment, does not waive all rights to claim a forfeiture for violation of the express condition of a policy. They stand in the same relation as affecting the validity of the policy as before, and any subsequent violation of conditions will defeat

[6] Walters v. Washington Ins. Co. 1 Iowa, 404, 63 Am. Dec. 451; Glover v. Lee, 140 Ill. 102, 29 N. E. 680. See Greenwich Ins. Co. v. Columbia Mfg Co. 73 Ill. App. 560. Examine Fritchie v. Miller's Pennsylvania Extract Co. 197 Pa. St. 401, 47 Atl. 351 (garnishee; employers liability); Anoka Lumber Co. v. Fidelity & Casualty Co. 63 Minn. 286, 30 L.R.A. 689, 65 N. W. 353 (garnishee; employers liability); Freis v. Little Black Farmers' Mutual Ins. Co. 120 Wis. 590, 98 N. W. 522.

[7] Leinkauf v. Calman, 110 N. Y. 50, 17 N. E. 389.

[8] Aultman v. McConnell, 34 Fed. 724. See Iowa Code, sec. 1923, for the statute.

[9] Ellis v. Insurance Co. of North America, 32 Fed. 646. See § 2308 herein.

a recovery where no new consideration moves from the assignee to the insurer.[10] Under an assignment of this nature the assignee is subject to the same defenses as might have been made against the mortgagor.[11] So fraud in the application may be availed of by assurer against an assignee of the policy, even though the assignment was made with assurer's consent where it then had no knowledge of said fraud.[12] It has been held, however, in a few cases that subsequent acts of the assignor will not defeat the policy where assigned with the consent of the company.[13] A stipulation in a policy against its assignment can be taken advantage of by the insurer only, and does not enable an assignee to avoid his assignment.[14]

§ 2320. Effect of acts of assignor upon rights of assignee who is mortgagee.—If a fire policy is assigned as collateral to a mortgage with the consent of the company, the assignee takes it subject to the conditions thereof, and no recovery can be had merely in consequence of the equities of the assignee if the assignor loses the right to recover by violating the terms of the contract.[15] So a [10] Connecticut.—Birdseye v. City Fire Ins. Co. 26 Conn. 165.

Illinois.—Home Mutual Fire Ins. Co. v. Hauslein, 60 Ill. 521.

Massachusetts.—Young v. Eagle Ins. Co. 14 Gray (80 Mass.) 150, 74 Am. Dec. 673; Hale v. Mechanics' Mutual Ins. Co. 6 Gray (72 Mass.) 169, 66 Am. Dec. 410.

New Jersey.—Warbasse v. Sussex County Mutual Ins. Co. 42 N. J. L. 203.

New York.—Grosvenor v. Atlantic Ins. Co. 17 N. Y. 391.

Pennsylvania.—State Mutual Fire Ins. Co. v. Roberts, 31 Pa. St. 438.

Wisconsin.—Pupke v. Resolute Fire Ins. Co. 17 Wis. 378, 84 Am. Dec. 754.

England.—Kanady v. Gore Dist. Mutual Fire Ins. Co. 44 U. C. Q. B. Rep. 261.

[11] Reed v. Windsor County Mutual Fire Ins. Co. 54 Vt. 413. See § 2314 herein.

[12] Northwestern Mutual Life Ins. Co. v. Montgomery, 116 Ga. 799, 43 S. E. 79.

[13] New England Fire & Marine Ins. Co. v. Wetmore, 32 Ill. 221; Pollard v. Somerset Mutual Fire Ins. Co. 42 Me. 221; Boynton v. Clinton & Essex Mutual Ins. Co. 16 Barb. (N. Y.) 254; Burton v. Gore District Mutual Fire Ins. Co. 12 Grant Ch. (U. C.) 156. See Grosvenor v. Atlantic Ins. Co. 17 N. Y. 391; Buffalo Steam Engine Works v. Sun Mutual Ins. Co. 17 N. Y. 401. But examine Charleston Ins. & Trust Co. v. Neve, 2 McMull. (S. C.) *p. 237.

[14] Spencer v. Myers, 150 N. Y. 269, 34 L.R.A. 175, 55 Am. St. Rep. 675, 44 N. E. 942. See Reliance Ins. Co. of Philadelphia v. Dalton, — Tex. Civ. App. —, 178 S. W. 966; Ramsay v. Myers, 60 Pa. Dist. R. 468.

[15] Illinois Mutual Fire Ins. Co. v. Fix, 53 Ill. 151, 5 Am. Rep. 38; Tomlinson v. Monmouth Mutual Fire Ins. Co. 47 Me. 232; Loring v. Manufacturers' Ins. Co. 8 Gray (74 Mass.) 28; Buffalo Steam Engine Works v. Sun Mutual Ins. Co. 17 N. Y. 401; Grosvenor v. Atlantic Ins. Co. 17 N. Y. 391. These last two cases overrule Traders' Ins. Co. v. Roberts, 9 Wend. (N. Y.) 404; Viall v. Genesee Mutual Ins. Co. 19 Barb. (N. Y.) 440; Tillou v. Kingston Mutual Ins. Co. 5 N. Y. 405, s. c. 7 Barb.

mortgagee of land cannot recover on a policy taken out by the mortgagor, payable to the mortgagee "as his interest may appear," where the mortgagor burned the insured building for the purpose of realizing on the policy.[16] Nor is an assignment to a mortgagee retroactive so as to protect said transferee and enable him to recover where assured's title to the property was invalid so that he had no insurable interest.[17] So a subsequent conveyance of the property by the insured in violation of the conditions of the policy, which require the consent of the company, will forfeit the policy.[18] And the assignment by one of the mortgagors of his interest in insured property, does not avoid the right of the mortgagee to recover on a policy payable to him, where said policy provides that the act of no one other than himself, or those claiming under him, shall affect his right to recover in case of loss.[19] The fact that the statute of limitations has barred a personal action against the assignor of a mortgage on his guaranty of its payment, when suit is commenced by the assignee to establish a claim to the proceeds of a policy on the property taken out by such assignor, after becoming the owner of the property, does not release or impair the assignee's equitable lien upon such proceeds.[20] The mortgagee may, however, take upon himself the payment of the premiums, and in such a case acts of the mortgagor will not defeat the policy.[1] So where there is an agreement when the policy is assigned "that the mortgagee shall pay any and all assessments upon the property, provided the original insured shall not pay the same on demand," subsequent acts of the mortgagor will not defeat a recovery on the policy in the interest of the mortgagee.[2] If a policy by its mort-

(N. Y.) 570. See §§ 2314, 2314a herein.

On effect on assignee of assignor's acts of forfeiture, see note in 18 L.R.A. 136.

[16] Hocking v. Virginia Fire & Marine Ins. Co. 99 Tenn. 729, 39 L.R.A. 148, 42 S. W. 451.

On effect of breach of policy by grantor on rights of mortgagee to whom policy has been assigned, see notes in 18 L.R.A.(N.S.) 197; 25 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1226; 31 L.R.A.(N.S.) 455; and L.R.A.1915C, 758.

[17] Stanstead & Sherbrooke Mutual Fire Ins. Co. v. Gooley, 9 Rap. Jud. Q. B. R. 324.

[18] Home Mutual Fire Ins. Co. v. Hauslein, 60 Ill. 521; Hale v. Mechanics' Mutual Fire Ins. Co. 6 Gray (72 Mass.) 169, 66 Am. Dec. 410; Swenson v. Sun Fire Office Ins. Co. 68 Tex. 461, 5 S. W. 60; Moulthrop v. Farmers' Ins. Co. 52 Vt. 123.

[19] Whiting v. Burkhardt, 178 Mass. 535, 52 L.R.A. 788, 86 Am. St. Rep. 503, 60 N. E. 1, 30 Ins. L. J. 666.

[20] Hyde v. Hartford Fire Ins. Co. 70 Neb. 503, 113 Am. St. Rep. 796, 97 N. W. 629.

[1] Brannin v. Mercer County Ins. Co. 28 N. J. L. 92.

[2] Francis v. Butler Mutual Fire Ins. Co. 7 R. I. 159. See also Foster v. Equitable Mutual Fire Ins. Co. 2 Gray (68 Mass.) 216; Boynton v. Clinton & Essex Mutual Ins. Co. 16 Barb. (N. Y.) 254.

gage clause provides that it shall not, as to the interest of the mortgagee, be invalidated by any act on the part of the mortgagor or owner, the mortgagee may recover for a loss, though the mortgagor may have voluntarily destroyed the property.[3]

§ 2321. Effect of acts of mortgagor after loss upon rights of assignee.—The mortgagor cannot after a loss has occurred, by any agreement with the insurer as to the amount due upon the policy, affect the rights of the mortgagee, who is assignee of the policy or designated payee in case of loss,[4] nor can he by an assignment of his claim against the company, or by any release given to the company, defeat the rights of such assignee or payee.[5]

§ 2322. Legal effect of assignment after loss.—A policy of insurance is, after loss has happened, assignable like any other debt, although such policy contains a provision that it shall not be assignable without the consent of the company expressed by indorsement made thereon.[6] After a loss has occurred the right of the assured to the indemnity becomes a fixed and vested right. It is an obligation or debt due from the company to the assured, and as such is assignable, and is not within the clause requiring notice of the assignment of the policy to be given to the company. It is, however, subject to such claims, demands, or defenses as the insurer would be entitled to make against the original insured.[7] A

[3] Hartford Fire Ins. Co. v. Williams, 63 Fed. 925, 11 C. C. A. 503, 27 U. S. App. 493.

[4] Brown v. Hartford Fire Ins. Co. 5 R. I. 394. Compare Collinsville Savings Soc. v. Boston Ins. Co. 77 Conn. 676, 69 L.R.A. 924, 60 Atl. 647; Chandos v. American Fire Ins. Co. 84 Wis. 184, 19 L.R.A. 321, 54 N. W. 390 (both cases considered under § 2314a herein).

[5] Chowne v. Baylis, 31 Beav. 351, 31 L. J. Ch. 757, 8 Jur. (N. S.) 1028, 8 L. T. 39, 11 W. R. 5. See Amory v. Reliance Ins. Co. 208 Mass. 378, 94 N. E. 677, 40 Ins. L. J. 1224.

[6] Walters v. Washington Ins. Co. 1 Iowa, 404, 63 Am. Dec. 451.

[7] Alabama.—Perry v. Merchants' Ins. Co. 25 Ala. 355.

Georgia.—Co-operative Fire Assoc. v. Borchardt & Co. 123 Ga. 181, 51 S. E. 429, 34 Ins. L. J. 778.

Iowa.—Bartling v. German Mutual Lightning & Tornado Ins. Co. of F. of M. & W. 154 Iowa, 335, 134 N. W. 864, s. c. — Iowa, —, 123 N. W. 63, 39 Ins. L. J. 60; Carter v. Humboldt Fire Ins. Co. 12 Iowa, 287.

Louisiana. — Matthews v. General Ins. Co. 9 La. Ann. 590, 591.

Maryland.—Consolidated Real Estate & Fire Ins. Co. v. Cashow, 41 Md. 59.

Massachusetts.—Hall v. Dorchester Mutual Fire Ins. Co. 111 Mass. 53, 15 Am. Rep. 1; Wilson v. Hill, 3 Met. (44 Mass.) 66.

Michigan.—Gourlay v. Insurance Co. of North America, 181 Mich. 286, 148 N. W. 258 (equally divided court); Bonenfant v. American Fire Ins. Co. 76 Mich. 653, 654, 43 N. W. 682; Roger Williams Ins. Co. v. Carrington, 43 Mich. 252, 5 N. W. 303.

Missouri.—Archer v. Merchants' & Manufacturers' Ins. Co. 43 Mo. 434.

New Jersey.—Combs v. Shrewsbury Mutual Fire Ins. Co. 32 N. J. Eq. 512.

provision in the policy prohibitng an assignment after a loss has occurred has been held to be void, as against public policy.[8] If, however, the property insured is transferred before loss, but the policy is not assigned therewith, it cannot be transferred after loss so as to give the purchaser any rights thereunder. The holder of the policy, having parted with his interest in the property, has no rights at the time of loss, and the loss having occurred, he has no claim or debt against the company to assign.[9] And where the policy holder has parted with her insurable interest by a sale of the property before the loss, she has no interest which can be transferred after the loss, even though consent is given thereto by insurer's assistant secretary.[10]

It is not necessary to transfer the claim in writing after loss to constitute a valid assignment; a parol assignment of the right of action will be sufficient to transfer the cause of action.[11]

If an assignment is made before loss, but is not delivered until after loss, it will operate as an assignment after loss, since the assignment does not take effect until delivery.[12] Where after loss

New York.—Carroll v. Charter Oak Ins. Co. 38 Barb. (N. Y.) 402, s. c. 40 Barb. (N. Y.) 292, s. c. 1 Abb. Dec. (N. Y.) 316; Brichta v. Lafayette Ins. Co. 2 Hall (N. Y.) 403; Rogers v. Traders' Ins. Co. 6 Paige (N. Y.) 583.

Pennsylvania.—Imperial Fire Ins. Co. v. Dunham, 117 Pa. St. 460, 475, 2 Am. St. Rep. 686, 12 Atl. 668; West Branch Ins. Co. v. Helfenstein, 40 Pa. St. 289, 80 Am. Dec. 573.

Tennessee.—Pennebaker v. Tomlinson, 1 Tenn. Ch. 598.

Wisconsin.—Dogge v. Northwestern Ins. Co. 49 Wis. 501, 5 N. W. 589. See § 904 herein.

[8] Georgia.—Georgia Co-operative Fire Assoc. v. Borchardt & Co. 123 Ga. 181, 51 S. E. 429, 34 Ins. L. J. 778.

Iowa.—Carter v. Humboldt Ins. Co. 12 Iowa, 287; Walters v. Washington Ins. Co. 1 Iowa, 404, 63 Am. Dec. 451.

Pennsylvania.—West Branch Ins. Co. v. Helfenstein, 40 Pa. St. 289, 80 Am. Dec. 573.

Wisconsin.—Alkan v. New Hampshire Fire Ins. Co. 53 Wis. 136, 10 N. W. 91.

See also Spare v. Home Mutual Ins. Co. 9 Saw. (C. C.) 142, 17 Fed. 568; G. Obler & Sons Co. v. Buttorff Mfg. Co. 145 Ala. 625, 40 So. 278; Carroll v. Charter Oak Ins. Co. 38 Barb. (N. Y.) 402; Courtney v. New York City Ins. Co. 28 Barb. (N. Y.) 116; Goit v. National Protection Ins. Co. 25 Barb. (N. Y.) 189. In Dey v. Poughkeepsie Ins. Co. 23 Barb. (N. Y.) 463, it was held that if the parties chose to insert such a provision in the policy, they must be bound by it, as the courts would not interfere. This case is, however, overruled by the cases just cited. See § 904 herein.

[9] Lynch v. Dalzel, 4 Brown Parl. c. 431.

[10] Davis v. Bremer County Farmers' Mutual Fire Ins. Assoc. 154 Iowa, 326, 134 N. W. 860.

[11] Bennett v. Maryland Ins. Co. 14 Blatchf. (U. S. C. C.) 422, Fed. Cas. No. 1321.

[12] Watertown Fire Ins. Co. v. Grover & Baker Sewing Machine Co. 41 Mich. 131, 32 Am. Rep. 146, 1 N. W. 961.

the insured places the policy in the hands of an attorney for collection, instructing him to apply the proceeds in payment of the insured's debt to a third person, it is held that this is not an assignment to the creditor.[13] An order given to a creditor by the insured after loss directing the company to pay him the amount due on the policy makes him assignee of the cause of action, and, under a statute requiring actions to be brought by the real party in interest, the assignee is entitled to sue on the policy.[14]

Although an assignment of a policy is within a statute permitting assignment of instruments for the payment of money, an assignment after loss is not permissible thereunder.[15] If an assignee under a written assignment after loss is given full power to collect the policy proceeds, his rights thereto cannot be questioned as between him and the assignor.[16]

§ 2323. Assignment of void policy.—Where a policy is void in the hands of the assured by reason of misrepresentations, it will be equally void in the hands of an assignee, although the company assents to the assignment.[17] So if a person obtains insurance upon property which he has already conveyed to another, such policy is void in his hands, and the consent of the company to a conveyance of all his title and interest in the policy to the grantee will not create a valid, new, and independent contract between the company and the grantee.[18]

§ 2324. Limitation clauses: assignment.—Policies of fire insurance generally contain a clause forbidding an assignment of the policy without the consent of the insurer, and imposing a forfeiture for a violation of this restriction. A provision of this nature is enforceable in the courts,[19] as it is not an unlawful restraint upon the right to transfer property.[20] Such a provision will be strictly construed.[1] So a clause in a policy of insurance prohibiting assign-

[13] Aultman v. McConnell, 34 Fed. 724.

[14] Spratley v. Hartford Ins. Co. 1 Dill. (U. S. C. C.) 392, Fed. Cas. No. 13,256.

[15] Davis v. Bremer County Farmers' Mutual Fire Ins. Assoc. 154 Iowa, 326, 134 N. W. 860; Code secs. 3044, 3046.

[16] Freis v. Little Black Farmers Mutual Ins. Co. 120 Wis. 590, 98 N. W. 522.

[17] Citizens' Fire Ins. Security Co. v. Doll, 35 Md. 89, 6 Am. Rep. 360; Eastman v. Carroll County Mutual Ins. Co. 45 Me. 307. See Northwestern Mutual Life Ins. Co. v. Montgomery, 116 Ga. 799, 43 S. E. 79.

[18] McCluskey v. Providence-Washington Ins. Co. 126 Mass. 306.

[19] Stolle v. Ætna Fire Ins. Co. 10 W. Va. 546, 27 Am. Rep. 593.

[20] Lazarus v. Commonwealth Ins. Co. 5 Pick. (22 Mass.) 76.

[1] Lazarus v. Commonwealth Ins. Co. 5 Pick. (22 Mass.) 76; Courtney v. New York City Ins. Co. 28 Barb. (N. Y.) 116; West Branch Ins. Co. v. Helfenstein, 40 Pa. St. 289, 80 Am. Dec. 573. See §§ 220 et seq. herein.

ment thereof without consent in writing of the company does not apply to a deposit of the policy by way of pledge, and such deposit gives the creditor a lien on the proceeds of the policy, which lien is binding upon the underwriters, the assured, and all persons who with notice of such lien take an interest in the policy from the assured.[2]

§ 2325. Clause as to assignment: waiver of breach thereof: forfeiture.—A condition in a policy that no assignment can be made without the consent of the company may be waived, and the company thus prevented from setting up in defense breach of such condition.[3] A clause of this nature rendering the policy void in case certain conditions as to the manner of making the assignment are not complied with is for the benefit of the insurers. They may insist upon a forfeiture or not as they may desire, and though the conditions as to assignment may be clearly violated, still if the assurers desire, they may elect to waive the violations of such conditions and treat the policy as a valid subsisting contract of insurance.

So a requirement as to the manner or mode of assignment or of obtaining consent may be waived.[4] Though the policy may become suspended under the by-laws for nonpayment of an assessment, if the company assents to an assignment of the policy thereafter, such act on its part is held to be a waiver of its right to insist on the objection,[5] and if an insurance company has paid the proceeds of a life policy into court for the lawful owner, it has waived any objection it might have to any transfer of the policy by the insured in his lifetime, and such objection is not available to the personal representative of the deceased or other person interested in his estate.[6] Again, if a policy is conditioned to be void where assigned

[2] Ellis v. Kreutzinger, 27 Mo. 311, 72 Am. Dec. 270. See also Griffey v. New York Central Ins. Co. 30 Hun (N. Y.) 299, s. c. 100 N. Y. 417, 53 Am. Rep. 202, 3 N. E. 309.

[3] Illinois.—City Fire Ins. Co. v. Mark, 45 Ill. 482.

Iowa.—Furbush v. Consolidated Patrons' & Farmers' Mutual Ins. Co. 140 Iowa, 240, 118 N. W. 371.

Missouri.—Borchers v. Barckers, 158 Mo. App. 267, 138 S. W. 555.

New York.—Pratt v. New York Central Ins. Co. 55 N. Y. 565, 14 Am. Rep. 304; Northam v. International Ins. Co. of N. Y. 61 N. Y. Supp. 45, 45 App. Div. 177.

Virginia.—Wheeling Ins. Co. v. Morrison, 11 Leigh. (Va.) 354.

[4] McGlynn v. Curry, 81 N. Y. Supp. 855, 82 App. Div. 431; Furbush v. Consolidated Patrons' & Farmers' Mutual Ins. Co. 140 Iowa, 240, 118 N. W. 371.

[5] Hale v. Union Mutual Fire Ins. Co. 32 N. H. 295, 64 Am. Dec. 370.

[6] Opitz v. Karel, 118 Wis. 527, 62 L.R.A. 982, 99 Am. St. Rep. 1004, 95 N. W. 948. But see as to principle governing question of waiver or estoppel by payment of fund into court, §§ 746c et seq. herein.

without indorsement of the company's assent thereon, and it is assigned, but several days thereafter the company indorses its consent, the forfeiture is thereby waived.[7] And consent to a transfer or assignment waives a prior breach of conditions.[8] There is no estoppel against an assignor's right under a life policy to set up title against his assignee.[9] And insurer cannot, after it has assented to an assignment, set up in defense misrepresentations of assured of which it had knowledge and of which it had failed to notify said holder, but continued to accept premiums.[10]

If a policy is assignable and the assignee assigns it to another the last assignee takes it subject to the equities of the first assignor in the absence of facts creating an equitable estoppel against said assignor but the mere fact that the first assignment was absolute in form will not create such an estoppel. An estoppel will, however, be created in such case by laches of the first assignor and his practical abandonment of the policy by leaving it in the possession of his assignee for years during which time it would have lapsed except for the payment of premiums by said assignee.[11] And the insurer's assent to an assignment of a policy does not waive a clause rendering an assigned policy void as to all above the debt due the assignee.[12] Nor is there any waiver where there is nothing in the record to show that either the grantee or his transferee was induced by any word or act of insurer or its agent to neglect to have assigned the policy of their predecessor in title, and which was payable to still another party as mortgagee, or that either of them in consequence thereof failed to insure his interest by a new policy; nor is there any waiver where it also appears that the plaintiff's name was not made known either to insurer or its agent, that the policy was at no time taken to either of them before the loss, that the agent did not know of the existence of the policy, and that neither of them knew, other than by general information, that the title had been or has to be conveyed.[13]

[7] Imperial Fire Ins. Co. v. Dunham, 117 Pa. St. 460, 2 Am. St. Rep. 686, 12 Atl. 668.

[8] North British & Mercantile Ins. Co. v. Gunter, 12 Tex. Civ. App. 598, 35 S. W. 715. See also Rines v. German Ins. Co. 78 Minn. 46, 80 N. W. 839.

[9] Locke v Bowman, 168 Mo. App. 121, 151 S. W. 468.

[10] Union National Bank v. Manchester Life Ins. Co. of N. Y. 52 La. Ann. 36, 26 So. 800, 30 Ins. L. J. 50.

[11] Brown v. Equitable Life Assur. Soc. of U. S. 75 Minn. 412, 79 N. W. 968, 1126, 28 Ins. L. J. 843, rev'g 78 N. W. 671, which granted rehearing in 78 N. W. 103, 28 Ins. L. J. 315.

[12] McQuillan v. Mutual Reserve Fund Life Assoc. 112 Wis. 665, 56 L.R.A. 233, 87 N. W. 1069.

[13] Swaine v. Teutonia Fire Ins. Co. 222 Mass. 108, 109 N. E. 825, 46 Ins. L. J. 709.

§ 2325a. Same subject: agent's acts or knowledge.—The insurer's local agent may consent to an assignment even though it is stipulated that only a specified officer has power to waive any of the policy conditions.[14] So where a policy provided that it should be void in case of assignment before loss without the consent of the company indorsed thereon, and the secretary of the company told the assured that he could assign the policy without such consent, it was held that this waived the condition.[15] And if a policy is renewed by an agent of the company with knowledge that it has been assigned, the breach of condition is waived by the renewal.[16] But the fact that a director of a mutual company had knowledge of the assignment and received premiums from the assignee's agent does not operate as a waiver of the required notice and consent.[17] So where the agent of the assignee had knowledge of a forfeiture, it was held that the consent of the company did not constitute a waiver.[18] And where an assignee has not complied with the requirements necessary to becoming a member of a mutual company, and he has not recognized any liability as a member, insurer is not estopped to assert non-membership by reason of the acts and declarations of its officers made after loss, especially so when the same are not relied on in inducing subsequent action.[19] Where certain acts are required to be performed to make an assignment operative as to insurer and it is claimed that there is a waiver by reason of the acts of the authorized officer of insurer, and evidence is offered tending to sustain such a claim the question of waiver may be one for the jury, or the court may instruct the jury as to the legal effect of the evidence according to its character.[20]

[14] Sheets v. Iowa State Ins. Co. 153 Mo. App. 620, 135 S. W. 80, 40 Ins. L. J. 955.

That agent may waive conditions notwithstanding inhibition in policy, see § 439 herein.

As to agent's powers; assignment: see § 560 herein. See also as to agent's powers as to waiver or estoppel, §§ 533 et seq. herein.

[15] Stolle v. Ætna Fire & Marine Ins. Co. 10 W. Va. 546, 27 Am. Rep. 593. See Furbush v. Consolidated Patrons' & Farmers' Mutual Ins. Co. 140 Iowa, 240, 118 N. W. 371.

[16] Bilson v. Manufacturers' Ins. Co. 3 Phila. 547, Fed. Cas. No. 1410, 16 Leg. Int. 228, 7 Am. L. Reg. 661.

[17] Kamm & Schellinger Brewing Co. v. St. Joseph County Village Fire Ins. Co. 168 Mich. 606, 134 N. W. 999.

[18] Fire Assoc. of Philadelphia v. Flourney, 84 Tex. 632, 31 Am. St. Rep. 39, 19 S. W. 793.

[19] Cannon v. Farmers' Mutual Fire Assoc. 58 N. J. Eq. 102, 43 Atl. 281.

[20] Corcoran v. New York Mutual Life Ins. Co. 183 Pa. 443, 41 W. N. C. 469, 39 Atl. 50. If the evidence is direct and certain, presenting no question of credibility, and leaving no sufficient ground for inconsistent inference of fact, the court may be asked to instruct the jury as to its legal effect. But if it is uncertain, if it depends upon the credibility of witnesses, and if there is room for drawing from it different inferences of fact, it must go to the § 2326. Assignment of life policies: generally: written assignment: parol assignment.—The rule that fire policies cannot be assigned without the consent of the insurer does not control in the assignment of policies of life insurance.[1] Under the strict rules of common law, laid down in the earlier cases as to assignments, policies of life insurance are not assignable at law so as to give the assignee any rights thereunder in a court of law, but equity recognized such an assignment, and would compel the assignor to permit the use of his name in an action to recover as trustee for the assignee.[2] Policies of life insurance have, however, under later decisions, been held to be governed by the principles controlling choses in action and assignable by indorsement and delivery, vesting the entire right in the assignee.[3] Such acts even have been held unnecessary to constitute a valid assignment. With the gradual extension of the principles as to assignment of choses in action, courts of law now recognize an assignment thereof to the extent of vesting the assignee with an equitable interest, and permitting him to recover for his own benefit in the name of his assignor. And this rule is now said to control as to the rights of the assignees of life policies.[4]

Although it is decided that in order to vest the legal title to a jury. They must clear up the doubts, settle questions of credibility, draw the correct inferences, and give final shape to the findings of fact. Id.

[1] New York Life Ins. Co. v. Flack, 3 Md. 341, 56 Am. Dec. 742; Mutual Protection Ins. Co. v. Hamilton, 5 Sneed (37 Tenn.) 269. See §§ 916, 918 herein.

[2] See Wright v. Wright, 1 Ves. Sr. 409, where it was declared by Lord Chancellor Hardwicke in case of a devise of lands to daughters, their heirs and assigns that: "There was a wise reason of the law's not allowing a right to sue to be assigned: that it tended to champerty and maintenance to pass debts into the hands of the more powerful and to oppress lower people. Yet it is now established in this court, that a chose in action may be assigned for a valuable consideration." Decided 1749–50.

[3] Indiana.—Harley v. Heist, 86 Ind. 196, 45 Am. Rep. 285; Bushnell v. Bushnell, 92 Ind. 503. State v. Tomlinson, 16 Ind. App. 602, 59 Am. St. Rep. 335, 45 N. E. 1116.

Maryland.—Fitzgerald v. Rawlings Implement Co. 114 Md. 470, 79 Atl. 915, 40 Ins. L. J. 1565; New York Life Ins. Co. v. Flack, 3 Md. 341, 56 Am. Dec. 742.

Massachusetts.—Palmer v. Merrill, 6 Cush. (60 Mass.) 282, 52 Am. Dec. 782.

Minnesota.—Brown v. Equitable Life Assur. Soc. 75 Minn. 103, 79 N. W. 968, 78 N. W. 103.

New York.—McNevin v. Prudential Ins. Co. 57 Misc. 608, 108 N. Y. Supp. 745. See Russell v. Grigsby, 168 Fed. 577, 94 C. C. A. 61, rev'd upon point of insurable interest in Grigsby v. Russell, 222 U. S. 149, 56 L. ed. 133, 32 Sup. Ct. 58, 36 L.R.A.(N.S.) 642. See §§ 914, 918 herein.

On validity of assignment of interest in life insurance policy to one paying premium, see notes in 3 L.R.A.(N.S.) 935, and 33 L.R.A. (N.S.) 949.

[4] Palmer v. Merrill, 6 Cush. (60 life policy in an assignee, it is essential that the assignment should be in writing,[5] nevertheless the assignment of a life policy need not be in writing to be valid;[6] but it is governed by the rules applicable to ordinary simple written contracts.[7] So life insurance policies may be validly assigned by parol;[8] and a parol assignment accompanied by delivery is valid.[9] Also a parol assignment of a policy, made by the insured to his wife, is valid, if the policy does not declare an assignment without the consent of the company void.[10] Nor does an oral assignment by assured to his mother, to whom he is indebted financially, invalidate it even though he took out the policy intending it for his administrator's benefit.[11] So, as between an assignor and assignee, a parol assignment of a policy by the beneficiary is valid, where the policy does not forbid it nor provide in what manner the assignment may be made, and especially so where insurer does not object thereto.[12] But although the policy prohibits oral assignments, the validity thereof can only be questioned by assurer.[13] If a contingent interest in a life policy, such as a right to its cash surrender at the expiration of a specified time, is assigned, such assignment is sufficient, although not in writing, if the policy is deposited as collateral security and retained, with the consent of the pledgor, as such by the assignee, until maturity of assured's rights when Mass.) 282, 52 Am. Dec. 782, per Shaw, C. J. See American Bonding & Trust Co. v. Baltimore & Ohio Southwestern Ry. Co. 124 Fed. 866, 882, 60 C. C. A. 52, 68.

[5] Steele v. Gatlin, 115 Ga. 929, 59 L.R.A. 129, 42 S. E. 253. Compare Southern Mutual Life Ins. Co. v. Durdin, 132 Ga. 495, 131 Am. St. Rep. 210, 64 S. E. 264, 38 Ins. L. J. 648, Ga. Civ. Code, 1895, secs. 2116, 3077.

[6] Colburn's Appeal, 74 Conn. 463, 92 Am. St. Rep. 231, 51 Atl. 139; Steward v. Gwynn, 41 Ind. App. 320, 82 N. E. 1000; Macauley v. Central National Bank, 27 S. C. 215, 3 S. E. 193; Nashville Trust Co. v. First National Bank, 123 Tenn. 617, 134 S. W. 311, 40 Ins. L. J. 664, 669. See Gledhill v. McCoombe, 110 Me. 341, 45 L.R.A.(N.S.) 26, 86 Atl. 247.

[7] Nashville Trust Co. v. First National Bk. 123 Tenn. 617, 134 S. W. 311, 40 Ins. L. J. 664, 669.

[8] McNevins v. Prudential Ins. Co. 57 Misc. 608, 108 N. Y. Supp. 745; Thompson v. Equitable Life Assurance Soc. of U. S. 95 S. Car. 16, 78 S. E. 439; Barron v. Williams, 58 S. Car. 280, 79 Am. St. Rep. 840, 36 S. E. 561; Nashville Trust Co. v. First National Bank, 123 Tenn. 617, 134 S. W. 311, 40 Ins. L. J. 664; Hancock v. Fidelity Mutual Life Ins. Co. — Tenn. Ch. —, 53 S. W. 181.

[9] Hancock v. Fidelity Mutual Life Ins. Co. — Tenn. Ch. —, 53 S. W. 181; Box v. Lanier (Lanier v. Box) 112 Tenn. 393, 64 L.R.A. 458, 79 S. W. 1042.

[10] State v. Tomlinson, 16 Ind. App. 662, 59 Am. St. Rep. 335, 45 N. E. 1116.

[11] Hancock v. Fidelity Mutual Life Ins. Co. — Tenn. Ch. —, 53 S. W. 181.

[12] Rahders, Merritt & Hagler v. People's Bank of Minneapolis, 113 Minn. 496, 130 N. W. 16, 40 Ins. L. J. 675.

[13] Embry's Admr. v. Harris, 107 Ky. 61, 52 S. W. 958.

the policy may be surrendered and its proceeds applied to the debt.[14]

We have already discussed the question of the necessity of an insurable interest in the assignee of life insurance policies, and refer to those sections.[15]

§ 2326a. Life policies: right to assign.—A person whose life is insured has a right to realize upon his policy by its assignment.[16] And if a policy is by statute assignable, the right to assign cannot be limited by a policy clause making it nonassignable, and even if such a prohibition were valid it cannot be availed of where it is waived.[17] And policy stipulations against assignment cannot aid an assignor if the insurer declines to take advantage of them and pays the money into court.[18]

An insured may assign a life policy payable to his "legal representatives." [19] And where at the expiration of a stated period a life policy has a cash surrender value, assured's right thereunder constitutes such a sufficient contingent interest as to be validly assignable before the expiration of said specified period.[20]

But the option of surrendering a policy for its cash value cannot be assigned to a creditor by one who has insured his life for the benefit of his children.[1]

§ 2326b. Life policies: nature of assignment: construction.—An assignment of a policy is a contract separate and distinct from the contract of insurance.[2] But an insurance policy is not an independent right of property capable of being transferred separately from the notes which it is given to secure, so that one person can hold the principal obligation, another the policy.[3] Though the payment of a life policy is not made until after the death of insured, his assignment of it is not testamentary in [14] Cornell v. Mutual Life Ins. Co. of N. Y. 179 Mo. App. 420, 165 S. W. 858.

[15] See §§ 914–19 herein.

On validity of assignment of life insurance policy to one having no insurable interest, where the assignment is not made by way of cover for a wager policy, see note in 6 L.R.A.(N.S.) 128.

[16] Steinback v. Dispenbrock, 158 N. Y. 24, 70 Am. St. Rep. 424, 44 L.R.A. 417, 52 N. E. 662.

[17] Doty v. Dickey, 29 Ky. L. Rep. 900, 96 S. W. 544, 36 Ins. L. J. 73. As to stipulations contrary to statute see §§ 176, 194(g), 194(h) herein.

[18] Spencer v. Myers, 150 N. Y. 269, 34 L.R.A. 175, 44 N. E. 942.

[19] Hurst v. Mutual Reserve Fund Life Assoc. 78 Md. 59, 20 L.R.A. 761, 26 Atl. 596.

[20] Cornell v. Mutual Life Ins. Co. of N. Y. 179 Mo. App. 420, 165 S. W. 858.

[1] McCutchen v. Townsend, 127 Ky. 230, 16 L.R.A.(N.S.) 316 and note, 105 S. W. 937.

[2] New York Life Ins. Co. v. Dunlevy, 214 Fed. 1, 130 C. C. A. 473, 44 Ins. L. J. 335.

[3] Stone v. Sargent, 220 Mass. 445, 107 N. E. 1014. Examine Tower v. Stanley, 220 Mass. 429, 107 N. E. 1010, 45 Ins. L. J. 561.

character.[4] A policy issued in a foreign state by insurer is held to be governed by the laws of such state as to assignments.[5] The assignability of insurance contracts is, however, held not affected by the question whether the policy was issued by a corporation created under the laws of the state in which the controversy arises.[6]

§ 2326c. Life policies: consideration for assignment.—Love and affection between parent and child constitute a good consideration for an assignment, not only for an executed, but also for an executory contract, and this applies to an assignment of the policy to assured by his wife and children even though the policy provides that it is not assignable.[7] Where an assignment of a life policy purports to be for a valuable consideration, it will be presumed that a sufficient consideration existed.[8] And it is held that an assignment of a paid up policy is made in good faith and for a valuable consideration even though the original policy amount is over five times that paid for it, and the evidence as to its fair cash value is that paid for it, and also that it is worth over double the amount paid.[9] One who procures from a member of a partnership a loan of the firm's money by misrepresentation, is, after such member has made good to his firm the loss resulting to the firm, under a moral obligation to repay him, and this obligation will support an assignment of the policy upon his life made for the purpose of indemnifying such person for the loss he had thus sustained.[10]

An agreement to marry constitutes a sufficient consideration for an assignment of a paid up policy by assured to the affianced wife.[11] And the same consideration will, in the absence of prior

[4] Southern Mutual Life Ins. Co. v. Durdin, 132 Ga. 495, 131 Am. St. Rep. 210, 64 S. E. 264.

[5] Western Life Indemnity Co. v. Rupp, 147 Ky. 489, 144 S. W. 743, 41 Ins. L. J. 863; Wilde v. Wilde, 209 Mass. 205, 95 N. E. 295, 40 Ins. L. J. 1538. See §§ 225 et seq. herein.

On conflict of laws as to assignment of policy, see notes in 63 L.R.A. 858; 23 L.R.A.(N.S.) 978; and 52 L.R.A.(N.S.) 281.

[6] Brick v. Campbell, 122 N. Y. 337, 10 L.R.A. 259, 25 N. E. 493.

[7] Doty v. Dickey, 29 Ky. L. Rep. 900, 96 S. W. 544, 36 Ins. L. J. 73; Northwestern Mutual Life Ins. Co. v. Wright, 153 Wis. 252, 140 N. W. 1078 (love and affection between insured and his mother and sister sufficient).

[8] Colburn's Appeal, 74 Conn. 463, 92 Am. St. Rep. 231, 51 Atl. 139.

[9] Morschauser's Admr. v. Pierce, 72 N. Y. Supp. 328, 64 App. Div. 558.

[10] Robinson v. Hurst, 78 Md. 59, 67, 20 L.R.A. 761, 44 Am. St. Rep. 266, 26 Atl. 959.

[11] Graves v. Von Below, 160 Mich. 408, 125 N. W. 379. See Tepper v. New York Life Ins. Co. 151 N. Y. Supp. 1049, 89 Misc. 224, 45 Ins. L. J. 568.

creditors' rights, sustain an assignment of an ordinary life policy.[12] But even though an agreement to marry is a good consideration for an assignment such consideration becomes of no force if the assignee was then a married woman.[13] Again, an assignment of a policy as collateral security based upon a valuable consideration, is good against a subsequent assignment made in consideration of an agreement to marry, although assured did not deliver possession of the policy to the first assignee, and such assignment for value is good against every one except a purchaser in good faith for value.[14]

A policy issued to a person in his own name, payable to his representatives, is assignable by him with effect to enable the assignee on the death of the insured to recover the sum named in the policy, whether he has paid a full consideration therefor or not.[15]

§ 2326d. Life policies: valid and invalid: assignments.—A policy payable to insured's wife and children may be assigned to him by them, even though it provides that it is not assignable, and an assignment thereof by him to a second wife is valid.[16] If assured agrees to assign a policy to his niece if she will pay the premiums, and her husband gives his notes therefor but does not pay them because of the refusal of assured to sign a request that the policy be so rewritten as to make her the payee, said assignment is not invalidated by the refusal to pay said notes before insured's death, where the liability thereon continues in favor of insurer's agent who had remitted the amount of the premium to the company.[17] And a secretary of a building and loan association is not prevented by his relation to the association from acquiring by assignment an insurance policy taken out by a member on his life for the benefit of the association, contrary to public policy, so as to prevent his compelling the association to account in case it receives the proceeds of the policy.[18] If a person is unable on the ground of public policy to take an assignment he is not qualified so to do, nor aided in this respect by reason of a statute making insurance policies and other obligations assignable though not negotiable at common law.[19] But while this propo-

[12] Howe v. Hagan, 97 N. Y. Supp. 86, 110 App. Div. 392.

[13] Howe v. Hagan, 97 N. Y. Supp. 86, 110 App. Div. 392.

[14] Howe v. Hagan, 97 N. Y. Supp. 86, 110 App. Div. 392.

[15] St. John v. American Mutual Life Ins. Co. 13 N. Y. 31, 64 Am. Dec. 529.

[16] Doty v. Dickey, 29 Ky. L. Rep. 900, 96 S. W. 544, 36 Ins. L. J. 73. See §§ 837 et seq. herein.

[17] McFarlane v. Robertson, 137 Ga. 132, 73 S. E. 490.

[18] Tate v. Commercial Building Assoc. 97 Va. 74, 45 L.R.A. 243, 33 S. E. 382.

[19] Russell v. Grigsby, 168 Fed.

sition of itself seems sound the case so deciding was reversed, so that it is at least qualified or modified to the extent that the reversing case holds that a clause in a life policy that any claim against the company arising under any assignment of the policy shall be subject to proof of interest does not diminish the rights of an assignee with no insurable interest, as against the personal representatives of the insured, if there is no rule of law to that effect, and the company sees fit to pay.[20]

An assignment by an administratrix at private sale of a policy on intestate's life, is illegal and cannot be validated by order of the ordinary of a court which has no authority to approve of such transfer.[1]

If the validity of an assignment depends upon a state statute which has been construed by the courts of the state of its enactment said construction will govern in the Federal court.[2]

§ 2326e. Life policies: material alteration of assignment.—While an assignment which is completed but is thereafter altered materially may avoid the policy, still if an assignment is given for amounts actually loaned and it is incomplete and executed in blank by the borrower, and the original assignee thereafter fills in the name of another as assignee and as attorney without authority from assured, and said assignee acted in good faith and believed that the first transferee to whom the assignment and policy had been delivered and who had them in his possession had the right to deal with the assignment in filling in the blank, a contention that said assignment was invalid is precluded, but as to subsequent loans and acts of the original pledgee after the assignment had ceased to be an instrument in blank the facts may be of such a character as not to estop assured from denying the authority of said pledgee to borrow money or pledge the policy.[3]

§ 2326f. Life policies: executory contract to assign.—An executory contract to assign is distinguished from an assignment, and this applies, and an agreement is within the former class where the beneficiary, being induced thereto by representations of deceased's son, that she is not entitled to the proceeds of the policy, enters into a contract to divide said proceeds with him and his 577, 94 C. C. A. 6; Shannon's Tenn. Code, sec. 3516.

[20] Griggsby v. Russell, 222 U. S. 149, 56 L. ed. 133, 32 Sup. Ct. 58, 36 L.R.A. 642.

[1] Empire Life Ins. Co. v. Mason, 140 Ga. 141, 78 S. E. 935, 42 Ins. L. J. 1421.

[2] New York Life Ins. Co. v. Dunlevy, 214 Fed. 1, 130 C. C. A. 473, 44 Ins. L. J. 335.

[3] Tower v. Stanley, 220 Mass. 429, 107 N. E. 1010, 45 Ins. L. J. 561. Examine Stone v. Sargent, 220 Mass. 445, 107 N. E. 1014.

brothers and sisters, whose names as well as his own he signed to said contract although as to them he had no authority.[4]

§ 2326g. Life policies: equitable assignment.—Insured's instructions by letter to the general agents of insurer to make the policy payable to his wife, effects an equitable assignment though not made until after assured's death.[5] But a mere statement to creditor without offering to assign the policy to secure his particular debt, does not operate as an equitable assignment, nor does an entry in a pocket memorandum without date and without any description of the policy so operate.[6] And if a benefit certificate is issued to a member, and the by-laws of the association declare that no assignment shall be deemed binding on it unless made upon application to it and accompanied by the payment of a specific fee and the certificate already issued, such by-laws do not prevent the creation of equitable interest in the fund to be collected; and if an assignment is made, though not in the manner specified, the assignee is entitled, in a controversy between him and the administrator of the assignor, to receive the benefit.[7]

§ 2326h. Life policies: assignment by assignee: generally.—An assignee of an assignee of a life policy takes such rights and only such rights as his assignor had.[8] An indorser of a promissory note holding an assignment of a policy as collateral, may transfer such assignment to the holder of the note to secure the same debt for which he is secured, and his said assignee or transferee becomes vested with the title to such extent as is necessary to enable him to hold the policy as collateral security for the debt and to sustain an action thereon.[9] An assignee is estopped to claim against a subsequent bona fide assignee without notice, where he has not taken the requisite action as to insurer to protect himself, and does not have possession of the policy even though such possession was not obtained by reason of false representations by assured's agent.[10]

[4] Banholzer v. Grand Lodge Ancient Order United Workmen, 119 Mo. App. 177, 95 S. W. 953.

[5] State v. Tomlinson, 16 Ind. App. 662, 59 Am. St. Rep. 335, 45 N. E. 1116. As to distinction between assignment and change of beneficiary, see § 2327a, and examine §§ 744 et seq. herein.

[6] Little v. Berry, — Ky. —, 113 S. W. 902.

[7] Brierly v. Equitable Aid Union, 170 Mass. 218, 64 Am. St. Rep. 297, 48 N. E. 1090.

On right of one to whom policy of life or benefit insurance was assigned by insured to proceeds where provisions as to change of beneficiary were not complied with, see note in L.R.A.1916A, 877.

[8] Locke v. Bowman, 168 Mo. App. 121, 151 S. W. 468.

[9] Corcoran v. New York Mutual Life Ins. Co. 183 Pa. 443, 39 Atl. 50.

[10] Herman v. Connecticut Mutual Life Ins. Co. 218 Mass. 181, 105 N. E. 450.

§ 2326i. Assignment to undertaker, tradesmen, etc.—An assignment in violation of a statute, of a policy issued for the payment of burial benefits or other expenses of deceased members, by a company or association engaged in such business or engaged in the business of providing any other kind of insurance, is void when made to any designated undertaker or undertaking concern, or to any particular tradesman or business man.[11]

§ 2326j. Life policies: rights of assignee: generally.—The assignee of a life policy takes it subject to such defenses as existed in the hands of the assignor when it was assigned.[12] But an assignee of a life policy who pays premiums thereon, is entitled to reimbursement therefor out of the proceeds of the policy, with interest.[13] So where there are no restrictions as to assigning a policy on assured's life payable to his executors, administrators, or assigns, and he assigns it with assurer's consent to a third party and said assignee pays the premiums, he may recover the proceeds upon assured's death.[14] So an endowment policy on which the full annual premiums have been paid and which is payable to assured, his executors, administrators, and assigns, is assignable and the assignee will have the same rights as assured.[15] And even though an assignment is void for want of the beneficiary's consent thereto, the assignee is entitled to a lien on the policy and its proceeds for premiums advanced at request of the assured and the beneficiary.[16] An assignee is also entitled to relief in equity although he does not have possession of the policy where a subsequent assignment has been made by assured to another.[17] And an assignee who has not obtained possession of the policy is entitled to redeem upon payment of the debt to a subsequent assignee of insured.[18]

[11] Robbins v. Hennessey, 86 Ohio St. 181, 99 N. E. 319; Rev. Stat. sec. 289, am'd April 9, 1908, 99 Ohio Genl. L. p. 131. See § 797a herein.

[12] Dormay v. Borradaile, 10 Beav. 335. Cited in Northwestern Life Ins. Co. v. Montgomery, 116 Ga. 799, 810, 43 S. E. 79, secs. 2326, 2308 at p. 810.

[13] Insurance Co. v. Dunscomb, 108 Tenn. 724, 58 L.R.A. 694, 91 Am. St. Rep. 641, 69 S. W. 234.

[14] Prudential Ins. Co. of America v. Liersch, 122 Mich. 436, 81 N. W. 258.

[15] Eisenbach v. Mutual Life Ins. Co. of N. Y. 147 N. Y. Supp. 462, 162 App. Div. 595, 44 Ins. L. J. 144.

[16] Morgan v. Mutual Benefit Life Ins. Co. 16 Cal. App. 85, 116 Pac. 385. See also Morgan v. Mutual Benefit Life Ins. Co. 116 N. Y. Supp. 989, 132 App. Div. 455. See Morgan v. Mutual Benefit Life Ins. Co. 189 N. Y. 447, 82 N. E. 438, 38 Ins. L. J. 464, 197 N. Y. 607, 91 N. E. 1117. See § 842 herein.

[17] Herman v. Connecticut Mutual Life Ins. Co. 218 Mass. 181, 105 N. E. 450.

[18] Herman v. Connecticut Mutual Life Ins. Co. 218 Mass. 181, 105 N. E. 450.

§ 2326k. Life policies: reassignment.—Where the consideration for an assignment fails, as in case of a nonperformance of a contract, and the assignment is qualified by the words "as interest may appear" and such words are inserted to enable the original assignee to recover such sums as he might advance in performing the consideration, an action lies to compel a reassignment of the policy even against a second assignee, who holds an absolute assignment from the first assignee given for a nominal and other considerations.[19] But a formal reassignment to an assignee by insured under a tontine policy is unnecessary as against legatees and distributees upon assured's survival of the tontine period, where he has requested that the policy continue for the assignee's benefit and thereafter he pays an increased premium up to the time of his decease.[20]

§ 2326l. Life policies: gift.—Provided that insured has power to transfer the policy on his life under the law and the terms of his contract, he may dispose of it by gift, and when such transfer meets the requirements of the law relating to gifts, the title to the fund at its maturity is vested in the donee.[1] When a gift of life policy is consummated, the donee's right and interests become absolute, and all possibility of a devolution of benefits under the policy to the personal representatives of the insured named in the policy as beneficiaries is at an end.[2] If a life policy, payable to the personal representative of insured, merely provides that if assigned, the assignment must be in writing, and that the company shall not be required to notice such assignment, until the original or a duplicate thereof is filed in the home office, the company assuming no responsibility for its validity, such policy may be the subject of a parol gift inter vivos, without notice to the insurance company and to the exclusion of the beneficiaries named in the policy.[3]

§ 2327. No assignment by insured where interest in policy has vested in beneficiary.—The insured, where the policy is made payable to one in whom the interest becomes vested as beneficiary, cannot thereafter assign the policy to another so as to defeat the rights of the beneficiary first named, unless he consents thereto. No action will lie to compel the performance of an agreement to [19] Bohleber v. Waelden, 150 N. Y. 405, 44 N. E. 104.

[20] Sanson Estate (Pa.) 63 Leg. Int. 200, 15 Dist. R. 296.

[1] Opitz v. Karel, 118 Wis. 527, 62 L.R.A. 982, 99 Am. St. Rep. 1004, 95 N. W. 948.

[2] Opitz v. Karel, 118 Wis. 527, 62 L.R.A. 982, 99 Am. St. Rep. 1004, 95 N. W. 948.

[3] Opitz v. Karel, 118 Wis. 527, 62 L.R.A. 982, 99 Am. St. Rep. 1004, 95 N. W. 948.

make such an assignment.[4] And the above rule also applies to a combination life and endowment policy.[5] So an assignment executed by a person whose life is insured, but not by the beneficiary, is inoperative.[6] If, however, the policy so stipulates, or, the right to assign is reserved, the consent of the beneficiary is not necessary.[7]

§ 2327a. Distinction between assignment and change of beneficiary.—A distinction is made between an assignment and a change of beneficiary in that an assignment is the transfer by one of his rights or interest in the property, rests upon contract and generally requires the delivery of the thing assigned, while the right to change the beneficiary is the power to appoint which must be exercised in the manner specified in the contract.[8] There is also a distinction in that a substituted beneficiary is not an assignee, at least, not so as to come within a statute prohibiting certain testimony by parties sustaining certain relations to each other.[9] If a policy designates a beneficiary and also provides a certain mode for its assignment and it is assigned not in the manner provided but by parol and delivery as a gift to another who retains possession and assists in paying the premiums thereon, such assignee cannot recover as against the designated beneficiary especially where the stipulation as to the manner of changing the beneficiary is not complied with. And it was also provided substantially that so far as assured was concerned the right of an absolute beneficiary was vested during assured's lifetime, so that the question of assignment cannot in this case be disassociated from that of the right to change the beneficiary.[10]

[4] Johnson v. New York Life Ins. Co. 56 Colo. 178, L.R.A.1916A, 868, 138 Pac. 414; Potter v. Spilman, 117 Mass. 322; Cornell v. Mutual Life Ins. Co. 179 Mo. App. 420, 165 S. W. 858; Sullivan v. Maroney, 76 N. J. Eq. 104, 73 Atl. 842. As to assignment by beneficiary, see §§ 837 et seq. herein. As to change of beneficiary and vested interest reserved right to change, etc., see §§ 730 et seq. 740 et seq. herein.

[5] Breard v. New York Life Ins. Co. 138 La. 774, 70 So. 799.

[6] Tremblay v. Aetna Life Ins. Co. 97 Me. 547, 94 Am. St. Rep. 521, 55 Atl. 509.

[7] Cornell v. Mutual Life Ins. Co. of N. Y. 179 Mo. App. 420, 165 S. W. 858. See Johnson v. New York Life Ins. Co. 56 Colo. 178, L.R.A. 1916A, 868, 138 Pac. 414.

On power of insured to destroy rights of beneficiary, see note in 49 L.R.A. 737.

[8] Mutual Benefit Life Ins. Co. v. Swett, 222 Fed. 200, 137 C. C. A. 640, 46 Ins. L. J. 111.—Sater, D. J. See Howe v. Fidelity Trust Co. 28 Ky. L. Rep. 485, 89 S. W. 521.

[9] Crowell v. Northwestern National Life Ins. Co. 140 Iowa, 258, 118 N. W. 412, Code sec. 4604.

[10] Johnson v. New York Life Ins. Co. 56 Colo. 178, L.R.A.1916A, 868n, 138 Pac. 414.

On right of one to whom policy of § 2328. No assignment if policy forbids.—There can be no assignment of a life insurance policy if the policy by its terms expressly forbids the same.[11]

§ 2329. Notice of assignment: life policy.—In life insurance the same principles as to notice of assignment do not control as in the case of fire insurance. In life insurance where there is no provision in the policy as to notice of an assignment of the policy, or as to the consent of the insurer being necessary thereto, it may be assigned without any notice of such act being given to the company.[12] And such assignment is good as between assignor and assignee, but it has been held that it is necessary to give notice to the company in order to constitute an assignment valid as against a subsequent assignee, and free from acts of an assignor as to surrender of the policy to the office.[13] In Mutual Protective Insurance Company v. Hamilton,[14] the court said: "The assent of the assurer to the assignment of the policy or notice of such assignment is not indispensible in order to entitle the assignee of the policy to recover the money from the insurer. We are of the opinion, therefore, that as between the insurer and the assignee of the life policy notice of assignment is not required to complete the right of the latter to receive the insurance money from the former. Upon this principle, as it seems to us, the right of the assignee must be held to be perfect, and in a case like the present, by force of the assignment alone." The policy may, however, provide that notice must be given to the company, and in such a case the provision should be complied with to render the assignment a valid one.[15] Noncompliance therewith will not, however, render the policy void, unless it is so stipulated by express words.[16] The policy may simply provide that in case of assignment notice is to be given to the company, not specifying any particular time within which it shall be given. Under such a provision notice of assignment of an insurance policy is sufficiently early when given two days subsequent to the assignment, but after the death of the assured.[17] If a life policy is assigned to life or benefit insurance was assigned by insured to proceeds where provisions as to change of beneficiary were not complied with, see note in L.R.A.1916A, 877.

[11] Unity Mutual Life Assur. Assoc v. Dugan, 118 Mass. 219. Compare § 2322 herein.

[12] New York Life Ins. Co. v. Flack, 3 Md. 341, 56 Am. Dec. 742. See §§ 914–16, 2331a herein.

[13] Stocks v. Dobson, 4 De G. M. & G. 11, 22 L. J. Ch. 884, 17 Jur. 539.

[14] 5 Sneed (37 Tenn.) 269.

[15] Stevens v. Warren, 101 Mass 564.

[16] Marcus v. St. Louis Ins. Co. 68 N. Y. 625.

[17] New York Life Ins. Co. v. Flack, 3 Md. 341, 56 Am. Dec. 742.

secure a certain indebtedness and thereafter assured by letter directs the application of the balance to the proceeds to a satisfaction of further liability, then in so far as said direction is an additional assignment it is effective, even though no written notice thereof is given assurer, as the requirement of such a written notice is for assurer's protection and cannot be set up by another to defeat an assignment made without compliance therewith.[18]

§ 2330. What is sufficient notice: life.—No special form or mode is necessary to constitute a sufficient notice. A notice to the company in any form or to any agent of the company authorized to receive notice is good,[19] except where the agent has an interest in the policy.[20] If the policy does not require notice to be in writing, a verbal notice is sufficient.[1] Though no special form of words is necessary to constitute a sufficient notice, still the words used and the manner of their use must be such as would necessarily convey the knowledge to the insurers. A mere casual and incidental mention of the fact of assignment to an agent or officer of the company, or in a casual conversation, has been held insufficient as against a subsequent assignee.[2]

§ 2331. Assignment of life policy: consent.—Life policies may expressly provide that they are not assignable without the consent of the company issuing them, and in such a case the provision must be complied with the same as when inserted in any other policy of insurance, to give the assignee any right thereunder as against the company.[3] It is held, however, that a life insurance policy payable to the estate of the assured, may be assigned without the consent of the insurer.[4] Where a mutual company, the object of which is to protect the families of the insured members, issues a policy forbidding assignment without consent of the company, it is held that the fact that the company has received assessments from the assignee since insured's death is no waiver of the breach of the condition.[5] If the requirements as to making an assignment are complied with, an endorsement thereof on

[18] Mutual Benefit Life Ins. Co. v. Swett, 222 Fed. 200, 137 C. C. A. 640, 46 Ins. L. J. 111.

[19] Gale v. Lewis, 9 Q. B. 730, 16 L. J. Q. B. 119.

[20] Browne v. Savage, 4 Drew. 635, 5 Jur. (N. S.) 1020.

[1] Wells v. Archer, 10 Serg. & R. (Pa.) 412, 13 Am. Dec. 682; North British Assur. Co. v. Hallett, 9 Week. Rep. 880.

[2] Edwards v. Scott, 2 Scott (N. R.) 266, 1 Man. & G. 962, 10 L. J. C. P. 11; Ex parte Stright, 2 Deac. & Chit. 314; Edwards v. Martin, 1 L. R. Cas. 122.

[3] Unity Mutual Life Ins. Co. v. Dugan, 118 Mass. 219.

[4] Southern Mutual Life v. Durdin, 132 Ga. 495, 131 Am. St. Rep. 210, 64 S. E. 264, Civ. Code 1895, sec. 2116.

[5] National Mutual Aid Soc. v. Lupold, 101 Pa. St. 111.

the policy by assurer, made after assured's death, but without knowledge on its part, of such fact, will not be set aside where its rights are not prejudiced thereby.[6] If an assignment is upon a blank prepared and furnished by the insurer, and its receipt is acknowledged by him, with a statement that it is placed on file "for such attention as it may deserve when such policy becomes a claim," he cannot subsequently defend on the ground that he did not consent to the assignment.[7] But it is also decided that sending to the assignee a written receipt of assignments of the policy, stating also that they had been filed, does not operate as an acknowledgment of liability to him.[8]

§ 2331a. Same subject: manner or mode of assignment.—If the assignment is only required to be executed in duplicate and sent to insurer, mere informalities; such as the attestation of the genuineness of the notary's signature to the acknowledgment, do not invalidate it.[9] Nor is an assignment invalid by reason alone of the fact that a request that it be rewritten was not signed by assured, nor by the fact that it was not delivered after being rewritten.[10] And failure of the beneficiary to indorse an assignment to assured on the policy as required does not render it invalid.[11] So it is unnecessary that an assignment of a life policy be attached thereto.[12] Nor is an assignment of a policy void because of failure to affix a revenue stamp under Act of Congress requiring stamps to be affixed to certain documents.[13] And it is decided in Kentucky that an assignment of a policy by a husband to his wife does not constitute an assignment or transfer between them of such a character as is required by statute of that state to be acknowledged and recorded.[14] And where there is an assignment of a partial interest a delivery to insurer of one of the duplicate assignments constitutes a sufficient delivery to the assignee even though possession of the policy is retained by assured.[15]

[6] Thompson v. Equitable Life Assurance Soc. of the U. S. 95 S. Car. 16, 78 S. E. 439.

[7] Tremblay v. Aetna Life Ins. Co. 97 Me. 547, 94 Am. St. Rep. 521, 55 Atl. 509.

[8] Morrill v. Manhattan Life Ins. Co. 183 Ill. 260, 55 N. E. 656, 29 Ins. L. J. 481, aff'g 82 Ill. App. 410.

[9] Burges v. New York Life Ins. Co. — Tex. Civ. App. —, 53 S. W. 602.

[10] McFarlane v. Robertson, 137 Ga. 132, 73 S. W. 490.

[11] Doty v. Dickey, 29 Ky. L. Rep. 900, 96 S. W. 544, 36 Ins. L. J. 73.

[12] Tower v. Stanley, 220 Mass. 429, 107 N. E. 1010, 45 Ins. L. J. 561. See Herman v. Connecticut Mutual Life Ins. Co. 218 Mass. 181, 105 N. E. 450.

[13] Steeley's Creditors v. Steeley, 23 Ky. L. Rep. 996, 64 S. W. 642. See §§ 33, 2525 herein.

[14] Steeley's Creditors v. Steeley, 23 Ky. L. Rep. 996, 64 S. W. 642. See also Morehead's Admr. v. Mayfield, 100 Ky. 51, 58 S. W. 473, 22 Ky. L. Rep. 580.

[15] Northwestern Mutual Life Ins.

Again, an intention to assign the tontine as well as the life benefits of a policy is sufficiently shown by a recital in the assignment, that for value received the policy upon the assignor's life is assigned and all the dividend therefrom.[16]

In the absence of fraud or mutual mistake, a written assignment complete in itself cannot be shown by extrinsic evidence to be for a special and limited purpose, with a right in the assignors to have the interest revert to them upon the accomplishment of said purpose.[17]

The failure of insured to comply with the rules as to the manner of executing the assignment, cannot be availed of by the assignor's administrator as between him and the assignee, where the assignor actually did execute and deliver an otherwise valid assignment.[18] And the beneficiary named in a life policy, cannot take advantage of provisions in the policy as to methods of its assignment, which were inserted for the benefit of the insurer.[19] And as between insured and his assignee an assignment of a life policy will be valid though not attached or indorsed thereon, and even though no reference thereto appears thereon, nor any notice as required is given assurer.[20]

§ 2332. Delivery of assignment of life policy.—Delivery of an assignment of a life insurance policy is sufficient to vest title in the assignee, and is good against all but the creditors of the assignor when made by the assignor to the representative of the assignee.[1] It is not necessary to constitute a good delivery that the policy be delivered to the assignee. A delivery to a third party as trustee for the assignee will be sufficient.[2] So delivery of the policy to the assignee is held unnecessary to constitute a valid assignment, in the absence of fraud, if it appears that an assignment was in fact made, or where the assignee has after the assignment paid all the premiums due upon the policy. So where the assignee left the policy in the possession of the assignor, it was held that,

Co. v. Wright, 153 Wis. 252, 140 N. W. 1078.

[16] New York Life Ins. Co. v. Dunlevy, 214 Fed. 1, 130 C. C. A. 473, 44 Ins. L. J. 335.

[17] Doty v. Dickey, 29 Ky. L. Rep. 900, 96 S. W. 544, 36 Ins. L. J. 73.

[18] Burges v. New York Life Ins. Co. — Tex. Civ. App. —, 53 S. W. 602.

[19] Brick v. Campbell, 122 N. Y. 337, 10 L.R.A. 259, 25 N. E. 493.

[20] Herman v. Connecticut Mutual Life Ins. Co. 218 Mass. 181, 105 N. E. 450.

[1] New York Life Ins. Co. v. Flack, 3 Md. 341, 56 Am. Dec. 742.

[2] Jones v. Consolidated Investment Assur. Co. 26 Beav. 256, 28 L. J. Ch. 66; Lemon v. Phœnix Ins. Co. 38 Conn. 294; Estate of Trough, 8 Phila. (Pa.) 214.

On validity of assignment of insurance policy to persons to be named in will, see note in 27 L.R.A.(N.S.) 184.

in the absence of fraud, he was entitled to the benefits of the policy, and that delivery was not necessary.[3] So an assignment is valid even though there is no actual delivery thereof to the assignee.[4] And a policy and assignment may be placed so far within the assignee's direction and control that there is a valid delivery and assignment.[5] A life policy payable to the legal representatives of insured may be transferred by mere delivery without written assignment,[6] where there is an intent to transfer.[7] So a parol assignment, accompanied by delivery of the policy, is sufficient to transfer the right to the proceeds of a life insurance policy.[8] So the acceptance of an assignment of a policy of life insurance is sufficiently implied from the failure of the assignee to dissent.[9] Again, a delivery of the policy by assured to his brother with intent to vest the title, constitutes a valid assignment as against the deceased's representatives, even though assurer had not completed the same by indorsement thereof upon the policy.[10] So the delivery of a policy to the mother of a person substituted as beneficiary, on consideration of a promise to marry, constitutes a valid assignment, even though said policy is returned to assured for safe keeping.[11] And where the assignment by assured to his wife is formally executed, recorded by insurer and returned, there is a legal delivery even though said assignment attached to the policy was found, after assured's death, among his papers.[12] If it appears in evidence that an insured during his lifetime had executed a regular assignment in writing and under seal to his wife of insurance policies on his life, and that when on his death bed he informed witnesses that he had

[3] Neale v. Molineaux, 2 Car. & K. 672; Scott v. Dickson, 108 Pa. St. 56, 56 Am. Rep. 192. But see Dexter Savings Bank v. Copeland, 77 Me. 263; Ballou v. Giles, 50 Wis. 614, 7 N. W. 561.

[4] Burgess v. New York Life Ins. Co. — Tex. Civ. App. —, 53 S. W. 602; Colburn's Appeal, 74 Conn. 463, 92 Am. St. Rep. 231, 51 Atl. 139. See Southern Mutual Life Ins. Co. v. Durdin, 132 Ga. 495, 131 Am. St. Rep. 210, 38 Ins. L. J. 648; McNevins v. Prudential Ins. Co. 108 N. Y. Supp. 745, 57 Misc. 608; Howe v. Hagan, 97 N. Y. Supp. 86, 110 App. Div. 392.

[5] Humphry v. Mutual Life Ins. Co. 86 Wash. 672, 151 Pac. 100.

[6] Gledhill v. McCoombs, 110 Me. 341, 45 L.R.A.(N.S.) 26, 86 Atl. 247. See § 2326 herein.

[7] McNevins v. Prudential Ins. Co. 57 Misc. 608, 108 N. Y. Supp. 745.

[8] Box v. Lanier (Lanier v. Box) 112 Tenn. 393, 64 L.R.A. 458, 79 S. W. 1042; Hancock v. Fidelity Mutual Life Ins. Co. — Tenn. Ch. —, 53 S. W. 181.

[9] Colburn's Appeal, 74 Conn. 463, 92 Am. St. Rep. 231, 51 Atl. 139.

[10] Thompson v. Equitable Life Assurance Soc. of the U. S. 95 S. Car. 16, 78 S. E. 439.

[11] Tepper v. New York Life Ins. Co. 151 N. Y. Supp. 1049, 89 Misc. 224, 45 Ins. L. J. 568. See § 2326c herein.

[12] Shorey v. Webb, 122 Md. 209, 89 Atl. 391.

transferred his life insurance to his wife, requesting his brother to get such insurance as soon as possible, as his wife would need the money, and stating that the assignment and policies were in his safe among his private papers, where they were found after his death in an envelope with his wife's name indorsed thereon, the evidence is sufficient to authorize a finding or verdict of an assignment of the policies and a sufficient delivery thereof.[13] And where an intention to pass title to the assignees, under an assignment to them of a partial interest, is clearly shown and such interest is recognized by assurer the assignment is sufficient as to them even though assured retains possession of the policy.[14] And there is a sufficient delivery if in compliance with a requirement of the policy the assignment is made in duplicate to insurer.[15]

While a mere execution of an assignment and a delivery of a copy thereof to insurer without notice to the assignee, the original being held by assured, who continues payment of the premiums thereon, would not in all cases constitute a sufficient assignment, nevertheless, it would be sufficient if the assignee sustained the relation of wife or minor child to assured, since the essentials of a delivery of an assignment are those which accord with the relations between the parties and the nature of the transaction; accordingly so held where it clearly appeared that the assignor intended that an assignment to his daughter, a minor, should operate immediately, and the assignment was made in strict conformity with insurer's requirements, being signed, sealed, acknowledged and lodged with insurer in accordance with its rules.[16]

§ 2333. Possession of policy: life.—Possession of a policy of life insurance is not conclusive proof of the right of the holder to recover the money due on the policy. It is, however, prima facie

[13] Kulp v. March, 181 Pa. St. 627, 59 Am. St. Rep. 687, 37 Atl. 913.

[14] Northwestern Mutual Life Ins. Co. v. Wright, 153 Wis. 252, 140 N. W. 1078.

[15] Burgess v. New York Life Ins. Co. — Tex. Civ. App. —, 53 S. W. 602.

[16] New York Life Ins. Co. v. Dunlevy, 214 Fed. 1, 130 C. C. A. 473, 44 Ins. L. J. 335 (204 Fed. 670), citing and considering:

New York.—McDonough v. Aetna Life Ins. Co. 78 N. Y. Supp. 217, 38 Misc. Rep. 625; Hurlbut v. Hurlbut, 49 Hun, 189, 1 N. Y. Supp. 854.

Pennsylvania.—Turner v. Warren, 160 Pa. 336, 28 Atl. 781; Smith v. Hawthorne, 22 Pa. Co. Ct. R. 519; Appeal of Madeira, 1 Sadler (Pa.) 491, 4 Atl. 908.

Texas.—Burges v. New York Life Ins. Co. — Tex. Civ. App. —, 53 S. W. 602.

Wisconsin.—Northwestern Mutual Ins. Co. v. Wright, 153 Wis. 252, 140 N. W. 1078. Distinguishing, Scott v. Dickson, 108 Pa. 6, 65 Am. Rep. 192, in that no statute was construed.

See Cuyler v. Wallace, 183 N. Y. 291, 76 N. E. 1. Compare Weaver v. Weaver, 80 Ill. App. 370, 31 Chic. Leg. N. 259 (in this case insured informed the donee of the assignment) rev'd 182 Ill. 287, 55 N. E. 338.

evidence that the person holding it has a title to the same, and consequently a right in the proceeds. But it is only prima facie, as the contract is not a negotiable one, and the claim to the money due thereon may be assigned by agreement outside of the policy.[17] Where the person procuring insurance retains possession of the policy, he may, if he desires, change the beneficiary named therein and designate another as beneficiary.[18] Mere possession of policies by an assignee, under an assignment which was voidable because of the legal incapacity of the assignor to make the assignment, and without any affirmative acts of the assignor ratifying or recognizing the validity of such voidable assignment is not sufficient to validate it.[19]

§ 2334. Assignment of mutual benefit certificate.—The right of the holder of a mutual benefit certificate to assign the same is dependent upon the by-laws, charter, or articles of association of the society issuing the certificate. The large majority of these societies are founded for the purpose of protecting persons standing in a certain relation to the insured member. Where the charter and by-laws designate the classes for whose benefit certificates of insurance are to be issued, a member cannot procure a certificate of insurance therein and prior to the death of a member assign the certificate to a person not within the designated class. Nor can the beneficiary so assign it.[20] Where, however, the laws of the society are permissive of an assignment of the certificate, it may be assigned subject to the manner prescribed in the rules and by-laws.[1] It has been held where the certificate provided that "this certificate may be assigned, transferred, or set over by and with the consent of the association," that such provision only authorized the assignment by the beneficiary, and not the original insured.[2] An assignment of a mutual benefit certificate by the beneficiary named therein, no consideration being given, has been held to operate as a gift, and cannot be subsequently defeated by the beneficiary on the ground of want of consideration where it does not appear that there was fraud, duress, or undue influence.[3] An assignment as collateral security will not vest any right in the assignee where the beneficiary is named in the certificate and the [17] Wood v. Phœnix Ins. Co. 22 La. Ann. 617.

[18] Lemon v. Phœnix Ins. Co. 38 Conn. 301. See chapters on Beneficiaries, herein.

[19] Brick v. Campbell, 122 N. Y. 337, 10 L.R.A. 259, 25 N. E. 493.

[20] Bayse v. Adams, 81 Ky. 368. For a consideration of the question of change of beneficiary, see chapter on Beneficiaries, herein.

[1] Jackson v. Anderson, 9 Ky. L. Rep. 165, 4 S. W. 326.

[2] Block v. Valley Mutual Ins. Co. 52 Ark. 340, 12 S. W. 477.

[3] Gary v. Northwestern Masonic charter provides that the certificates shall be for the benefit of a certain class, which includes the beneficiary named and not the assignee.[4] If a benefit certificate provides that the charter and by-laws are a part thereof, the assignee is bound by such provision.[5] Where the by-laws of a mutual benefit society permit a change of beneficiary, but prescribe the manner in which it may be done, there must be a compliance therewith to constitute a valid change. So where the certificate named the wife as beneficiary, and the husband, after the issue of such certificate, executed a paper assigning the policy as collateral security to a creditor, but failed to comply with the rules of the society in regard to making the assignment, and the company had no notice thereof until after the death of the insured, it was held that the creditor had no rights in the certificate, and that the widow was entitled to the proceeds.[6] The fact that a member of a mutual benefit society, who assigned the membership certificate, was insolvent at the time of his death, does not invalidate the assignment where it is not shown that he was insolvent at the time he made the assignment.[7] A certificate of membership in a mutual benefit association, payable to the heirs or legal representatives of the member, which is assigned by him, is payable to the assignee, in the absence of objection by the association, under the Indiana statute providing that such certificates shall be a contract between the association and the insured, and that the beneficiary may be changed by agreement between the parties.[8] If the by-laws of a friendly society permit only the nearest kin, executors, administrators, or legal nominees to receive the policy proceeds the policy cannot be assigned.[9] A person to whom an endowment certificate is payable in case of the death of the assured within the limit of the endowment period, has no assignable interest during that period, while assured is living, when the latter has the right to change his beneficiary.[10] A sale, for a valuable consideration, of mutual benefit certificates insuring a member's life, is void, not only by force of Aid Assoc. — Iowa, —, 50 N. W. 27; Connecticut Mutual Life Ins. Co. v. Ryan, 8 Mo. App. 535.

[4] Dietrich v. Madison Relief Assoc. 45 Wis. 79.

[5] Miller v. Hillsborough Mutual Fire Assurance Assoc. 42 N. J. Eq. 459, 7 Atl. 895.

[6] Hotel Men's Mutual Benefit Assoc. v. Brown, 33 Fed. 11. See chapters herein on Beneficiaries.

On changing designation of beneficiary in benefit certificate otherwise than in prescribed method, see note in 15 L.R.A. 350.

[7] Milner v. Bowman, 119 Ind. 448, 5 L.R.A. 95, 21 N. E. 1094.

[8] Milner v. Bowman, 119 Ind. 448, 5 L.R.A. 95, 21 N. E. 1094.

[9] Caddick v. Highton, 68 L. J. Q. B. (N. S.) 281. See §§ 730 et seq. herein.

[10] Carpenter v. Knapp, 101 Iowa, 712, 38 L.R.A. 128, 70 N. W. 764.

the society's regulations, where they prohibit such sales, but also as against public policy.[11]

§ 2335. Fraud in procuring or making assignment of life policy.—If by fraud or undue influence a beneficiary under a life policy is induced to make an assignment of such beneficial interest in the policy, the assignment may be avoided.[12] So where a husband fraudulently procured his wife's signature to an assignment of certain policies of life insurance in which she was named as beneficiary, the assignment was held invalid.[13] Where a husband procured insurance upon his life for the benefit of his wife, and delivered to her the policy, and afterward, without consideration and without any design to part with her property therein, but by the undue influence and control of her husband, she was induced to execute an assignment of the policy, without any knowledge of the purpose or purport, to a third person, who assigned it to a fourth, and these assignees paid the premiums, it was held in an action on the policy wherein the wife was made a party by order of interpleader that she was entitled to the amount of the insurance, independent of the question whether the policy was assignable under the statute.[14] Fraud on the part of the assignee will vitiate an assignment procured by such means; as where the assignee knew of the dangerous illness of the insured, of which the assignor had no knowledge, and of which the assignee did not inform him, an assignment was held void.[15] So an assignment of a policy made in extremis to a brother-in-law at the latter's solicitation, upon a consideration of fifty per cent of the policy amount, is void for fraud and because unconscionable.[16] A mortgagee who has secured a policy on the life of the mortgagor's wife as security for the debt, by having it issued to her and assigned to him under circumstances amounting to fraud upon the insurer, will not be permitted to collect the proceeds of the policy as administrator of her estate, on the theory that she might secure the policy on her own life, and that the assignment, being void, had not affected the integrity of the policy or the right of her administrator to enforce the contract,—at least where he is to be [11] Stoelker v. Thornton, 88 Ala. 241, 6 L.R.A. 140, 6 So. 680.

[12] Connecticut Mutual Life Ins. Co. v. Westervelt, 52 Conn. 586; Whitridge v. Barry, 42 Md. 140; Eadie v. Slimmon, 26 N. Y. 9, 82 Am. Dec. 395; Barry v. Brune, 71 N. Y. 261, 8 Hun (N. Y.) 395; McCutcheon's Appeal, 99 Pa. St. 133.

[13] Mutual Benefit Life Ins. Co. v. Wayne County Savings Bank, 68 Mich. 116, 35 N. W. 853.

[14] Fowler v. Butterly, 78 N. Y. 68, 34 Am. Rep. 507.

[15] Jones v. Keene, 2 Moody & R. 348.

[16] Prudential Life Ins. Co. of America v. La Chance, 113 Me. 550, 95 Atl. 223.

permitted by the husband to retain the proceeds for his own benefit.[17] If insurer with knowledge that an assignment of a policy payable in instalments was fraudulently obtained continues to pay instalments to the fraudulent assignee, or those claiming under him, it makes such payments at its peril.[18] But insurer may resist payment to the assignee, on the ground of fraud, of the amount due on a policy secured by the holder of a purchase-money mortgage on the life of the mortgagor's wife, who was not bound by the mortgage, to secure his debt, where, knowing that, if the insurer knew the facts, it would not issue a policy in his favor, he procured it to be issued to her, paying the premiums himself, and then took an assignment of it without notice to, and contrary to the rules of the insurer.[19]

§ 2335a. Assignment: mental capacity: undue influence.—It is declared in Missouri that the rules governing mental capacity and undue influence applicable to a testator ought to be applied to an assignment and what constitutes capacity in such case means intelligence sufficient to understand the act the testator is about to perform, the property he possesses, what disposition he is making of it and the persons and objects of his bounty and applying this test to the case before it, it was held that undue influence was not proven.[20] And the inability of a person either through insanity or a long-existing habit of intoxication to act rationally or to understand the consequences of his acts precludes recovery thereunder on an assignment of a policy made by such person even though at the time of making it he was not intoxicated and did not manifest any aberration.[1]

[17] Hinton v. Mutual Reserve Fund Life Assoc. 135 N. Car. 314, 65 L.R.A. 61, 102 Am. Rep. 545, 47 S. E. 474.

[18] Empire Life Ins. Co. v. Mason, 140 Ga. 141, 78 S. E. 935, 42 Ins. L. J. 1421.

[19] Hinton v. Mutual Reserve Fund Life Assoc. 135 N. Car. 314, 65 L.R.A. 61, 102 Am. St. Rep. 545, 47 S. E. 474.

[20] Borchers v. Barckers, 143 Mo. App. 72, 122 S. W. 357, 39 Ins. L. J. 38. See Mutual Reserve Fund Life Assoc. v. Cleveland Woolen Mills, 82 Fed. 508, 27 C. C. A. 212, 54 U. S. App. 290 (not proven); Penn Mutual Life Ins. Co. v. Union Trust Co. (U. S. C. C.) 83 Fed. 891 (what is not undue influence); Andrews v. Laverty, 159 Mich. 26, 16 Det. Leg. N. 820, 123 N. W. 543.

As to mental capacity and undue influence in case of wills, see Mason v. Havens, 78 Conn. 410, 3 L.R.A. (N.S.) 172n, 62 Atl. 615; Slaughter v. Heath, 127 Ga. 747, 27 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1, 57 S. E. 69; Speer v. Speer, 146 Iowa, 6, 27 L.R.A.(N.S.) 294, 123 N. W. 176; Powell, In re, 138 Iowa, 326, 26 L.R.A.(N.S.) 479, 111 N. W. 821; Kirby v. Sellards, 82 Kan. 291, 28 L.R.A.(N.S.) 270, 108 Pac. 73.

[1] Searles v. Northwestern Mutual Life Ins. Co. 148 Iowa, 65, 126 N. W. 801, 29 L.R.A.(N.S.) 405.

§ 2336. Absolute assignment of life policy to creditor: agreement to retain only amount due.—In many instances policies of insurance upon a debtor's life are assigned to creditors to secure such amount as may be due from insured to the creditor, the whole interest being transferred.[2] Under such an assignment, in the absence of any agreement as to the balance recovered over the amount of the debt, it has been held that the creditor was not merely limited to the amount of the debt, but could retain the entire amount of the policy where there did not appear to be such a disproportion between the debt and the amount of the policy as to render it a wagering transaction.[3] There may, however, be an agreement between the debtor and the creditor that the latter shall, after deducting such amount as he might be legally entitled to recover if there were no insurance, deliver the balance of the amount recovered to certain designated persons. So where the debtor made absolute assignment of all rights in the policy to a creditor, and the latter agreed that, in case the debtor died before payment of the debt had been made and the proceeds of the policy were paid to him, he would make such a settlement with the representatives of the debtor as the case might require, it was held that this was an authorization to the creditor to collect the money due on the policy in case the debtor died without having paid the debt, and that after deducting such amount as was due to him the creditor must deliver the balance to those entitled to the same.[4] In brief, therefore, an absolute assignment of a life policy may be held an assignment only as a security for money loaned where such is fairly shown to be the intent.[5] So an assignment to secure a debt, is not absolute where it is not clearly evidenced that it is so intended, especially where

[2] See § 954 herein.

[3] Amick v. Butler, 111 Ind. 578, 60 Am. Rep. 722, 12 N. E. 518; Ruth v. Katterman, 112 Pa. 251, 3 Atl. 833; Warnock v. Davis, 104 U. S. 775, 26 L. ed. 924. See § 954 herein.

[4] Page v. Burnstine, 102 U. S. 664, 26 L. ed. 268.

[5] Page v. Burnstine, 102 U. S. 664, 26 L. ed. 268.

Cited in: United States.—Diack, In re, 100 Fed. 770, 772, 2 N. B. N. Rep. 666; Manhattan Life Ins. Co. v. Hennessy, 99 Fed. 64, 68, 39 C. C. A. 629; Sides v. Knickerbocker Life Ins. Co. 16 Fed. 650, 653; Armstrong v. Mutual Life Ins. Co. 11 Fed. 576, 20 Blatchf. 496.

Georgia.—Exchange Bank v. Loh, 104 Ga. 446, 453, 44 L.R.A. 376, 31 S. E. 459.

Illinois.—Binkley v. Jarvis, 102 Ill. App. 59, 65.

Indiana. — Amick v. Butler, 111 Ind. 578, 581, 60 Am. Rep. 722, 12 N. E. 518; Nye v. Grand Lodge American Order United Workmen, 9 Ind. App. 131, 153, 36 N. E. 429.

Michigan.—Metropolitan Life Ins. Co. v. O'Brien, 92 Mich. 584, 589, 52 N. W. 1012.

Virginia.—Roller v. Moore (Roll-the premiums are charged to the debtor.[6] And an assignment which limits the extent of recovery and which is in effect one for security of advances will operate as a contract of security only.[7] Again, although an assignment is absolute on its face the entire transaction is a matter of inquiry by the court and the interest should be limited to the sum or amount which it was intended should be secured.[8] And an agreement that an assignee of the policy can recover only to the extent of his advances will be so treated where the parties themselves have agreed to comply with such construction.[9] Under an agreement of this nature other creditors of the insured have no rights to the fund remaining unless there is actual fraud or they are actually injured by the transaction.[10] The right of assured to assign a policy payable to his executors, administrators, or assigns, is absolute under the Tennessee statute, as against the claims of his wife and children, to the extent that if such absolute assignment is made to secure a particular debt the legal title is vested in the assignee and if assured, after paying said debt, permits such assignee to retain the policy under the original assignment, as security by way of general collateral, for debts which may be incurred with him from time to time, only an equity remains by virtue of which assured's widow and heirs at law are entitled only to the policy proceeds remaining after satisfying such indebtedness.[11] er v. Beam) 86 Va. 512, 515, 6 L.R.A. 138, 10 S. E. 241.

See also Atkin v. Van Sickle, 187 Mich. 635, 153 N. W. 1070.

[6] Pittman v. Milton, 69 Fla. 304, 68 So. 658.

[7] Crowell v. Northwestern National Life Ins. Co. 140 Iowa, 258, 118 N. W. 412.

[8] Aldrich v. Brinker (U. S. D. C.) 143 Fed. 563.

[9] Crowell v. Northwestern National Life Ins. Co. 140 Iowa, 258, 118 N. W. 412.

[10] Johnson v. Alexander, 125 Ind. 575, 9 L.R.A. 660, 25 N. E. 706.

[11] Nashville Trust Co. v. First National Bank, 123 Tenn. 617, 134 S. W. 311, 40 Ins. L. J. 664. The court per Buckhannan, J. said: "Strictissimi juris, the policy was not pledged or deposited as collateral; it was, on the contrary, absolutely signed. The distinctive characteristics of pledge or deposit of collateral are that the property must be capable of delivery to the pledgee, and must be delivered to him actually or constructively, and under a contract, the essence of which is that the thing delivered is to be held by the pledgee as a security from some debt or engagement of the pledgor. The pledgee does not acquire absolute title by such a contract, but only a special property in the thing pledged, with the right to possession until the object of the pledge be accomplished. If the pledgor make default, the pledgee may file a bill in equity and foreclose, or he may sell without judicial process on reasonable notice to the pledgeor to redeem the pledge. The absolute title to the thing pledged is not devested out of the pledgor until foreclosure or a sale on proper

§ 2336a. Assignment of life policy to creditor: amount recoverable: continued.—A life policy is assignable to secure a debt so as to transfer such portion of the proceeds of the policy as will pay the debt actually due.[12] A creditor of a person having his life insured, who takes an assignment of the policy to secure his debt, is entitled to retain from the proceeds of the policy only sufficient to pay the debt, together with all advances made by the creditor to keep the policy in force.[13] In Maryland a creditor may in good faith and in pursuance of a bona fide effort to secure payment of his debt, validly insure his debtor's life, take the policy in his own name for his own benefit, and so become entitled to the proceeds.[14] But a person procuring insurance upon the life of another, and to whom it is assigned as security for a debt, can hold the policy only as security for what the insured owed him when it was assigned, and such advances as afterwards may have been made on account of it.[15] Where a life policy is assigned notice by the pledgee. This is the law of pledge or deposit of property, as collateral security for a debt. See Johnson v. Smith, 11 Humph. 397, citing Story on Bailments.

"The theory of appellants was that the policy was pledged. The fact was that it was absolutely assigned, leaving no vestige of legal right to it or the proceeds of it in the decedent. So it was, from the date of the assignment, during his life and at his death, an equity, pure and simple, and not a legal right. With this equitable interest as his basis of credit, he contracted the debts shown by the record. If he, during life, had sought to recover the policy, and to cancel his absolute assignment of it without paying these debts, he would have been repelled by a court of equity on the ground that he who would have equity must do equity. His wife and children can have no higher rights than he. The legal right to the policy was not in them, for we have seen that, notwithstanding the statute, written as the policy was, decedent had the right to make absolute assignment of it, and exercised it in such a way as to cut off all their legal rights. They are clothed only with his equity, and as he would have been bound, so they are bound to do equity.

"Aside from the effect of the absolute transfer of the policy, which was in writing, it is well settled that the act of the decedent in permitting the policy which had been so assigned to remain in the hands of the appellee, and oft repeated agreements by him that it should stand as security for any amount in which he might be from time to time indebted to appellee, would have amounted to an estoppel against him, and he, during his life, attempted to secure possession of the policy without payment to the appellee of the indebtedness incurred on the faith and credit of the policy as a security." Shannon's Code, sec. 4030. See §§ 879 et seq., 2338 herein.

[12] Hays v. Lapeyre, 48 La. Ann. 749, 35 L.R.A. 647, 19 So. 821.

[13] Morris v. Georgia Loan, Savings & Banking Co. 109 Ga. 12, 46 L.R.A. 506, 34 S. E. 378. See Bridge v. Connecticut Mutual Life Ins. Co. 167 Cal. 774, 141 Pac. 375.

[14] Fitzgerald v. Rawlings Implement Co. 114 Md. 470, 79 Atl. 915, 40 Ins. L. J. 1565.

[15] Cammack v. Lewis, 15 Wall. (82 U. S.) 643, 21 L. ed. 244.

Cited in: United States.—Warnock v. Davis, 104 U. S. 775, 782, 26 L. ed. 924, 927; Re Slingluff, 106 Fed. 154, 158, 3 N. B. N. Rep. 258; to secure a certain debt, and thereafter assured directs by letter that the assignee apply the proceeds to the payment of said indebtedness and the balance to satisfy another obligation, said assignee is thereby authorized to assign an interest in the policy to accomplish said purpose and the second assignees, or such assignees, become vested with such title as is necessary to enable them to hold the policy as collateral security for an amount sufficient to satisfy their claim and to sue upon the policy.[16] A policy of life insurance having been assigned to a creditor of the assured the policy providing that in such circumstances the whole beneficial interest therein shall vest in the assignee, and that upon the death of the assured the liability of the company shall be limited to the amount due such assignees from the assured and payments made by the former to keep up the policy; and the assignee, after making proof of the death of the assured, having assigned the policy to the widow of the assured, who was the beneficiary named Widaman v. Hubbard, 88 Fed. 806, 812; Sides v. Knickerbocker Life Ins. Co. 16 Fed. 650, 652; Langdon v. Union Mutual Life Ins. Co. 14 Fed. 272, 273; Armstrong v. Mutual Life Ins. Co. 20 Blatchf. (U. S. C. C.) 493, 498, 11 Fed. 573, 577.

Colorado. — Sheets v. Sheets, 4 Colo. App. 450, 453, 36 Pac. 310.

Georgia.—Morris v. Georgia Loan, Savings & Banking Co. 109 Ga. 12, 18, 46 L.R.A. 506, 510, 34 S. E. 378; Exchange Bank v. Loh, 104 Ga. 446, 453, 44 L.R.A. 372, 376, 31 S. E. 459.

Indiana. — Amick v. Butler, 111 Ind. 578, 581, 60 Am. Rep. 722, 12 N. E. 518; Nye v. Grand Lodge Ancient Order United Workmen, 9 Ind. App. 131, 146, 36 N. E. 429; Kessler v. Kuhns, 1 Ind. App. 511, 517, 27 N. E. 980.

Louisiana.—Hays v. Lapeyre, 48 La. Ann. 749, 755, 35 L.R.A. 647, 652, 19 So. 821.

Maryland. — Ritter v. Smith, 70 Md. 261, 266, 2 L.R.A. 844, 846, 16 Atl. 890.

Missouri.—Singleton v. St. Louis Mutual Ins. Co. 66 Mo. 63, 74, 27 Am. Rep. 321; Strode v. Meyer Bros. Drug Co. 101 Mo. App. 627, 634, 74 S. W. 379; Hensner v. Mutual Life Ins. Co. 47 Mo. App. 336, 343.

New Hampshire.—Mechanics' National Bank v. Comins, 72 N. H. 12, 19, 101 Am. St. Rep. 650, 55 Atl. 191.

North Carolina.—Hinton v. Mutual Reserve Fund Life Assoc. 135 N. Car. 314, 324, 65 L.R.A. 161, 166, 102 Am. St. Rep. 545, 47 S. E. 474.

Pennsylvania. — Carson's Appeal, 113 Pa. 438, 57 Am. Rep. 479, 6 Atl. 213.

South Carolina.—Croswell v. Connecticut Indemnity Assoc. 51 S. Car. 103, 107, 28 S. E. 200.

Texas.—Equitable Life Ins. Co. v. Hazlewood, 75 Tex. 338, 351, 7 L.R.A. 217, 16 Am. St. Rep. 893, 12 S. W. 621; Price v. Supreme Lodge Knights of Honor, 68 Tex. 361, 367, 4 S. W. 633.

Virginia. — Tate v. Commercial Building Assoc. 97 Va. 74, 80, 45 L.R.A. 243, 245, 75 Am. St. Rep. 770, 33 S. E. 382; Roller v. Moore (Roller v. Beam) 86 Va. 512, 518, 6 L.R.A. 136, 10 S. E. 241.

Distinguished in Mutual Life Ins. Co. v. Allen, 138 Mass. 24, 32, 52 Am. Rep. 245.

[16] Mutual Benefit Life Ins. Co. v. Swett, 222 Fed. 200, 137 C. C. A. 640, 46 Ins. L. J. 111.

in the policy, but consented to the first assignment,—such widow's interest is limited to the amount due her assignor at the time of the death of her husband and the amount paid by such assignor to keep up the policy.[17] An assignment cannot be extended to cover a new note given for an additional loan in place of the one first secured, where no further assignment is taken, and said assignee is not aided by stating in writing over assured's signature and within his knowledge, that the policy was security therefor.[18] The owner of a life insurance policy having agreed to pay a city for support, furnished him out of its poor fund, the city is his creditor for the value of the support furnished, within the meaning of a clause of the policy providing that, in case of its assignment to a creditor, it shall be valid only to the amount of his claim.[19] If an assigmennt of a life policy is made to secure payment of a note, renewals of said note do not destroy the assignment in the absence of evidence of an intention to the contrary.[20]

§ 2337. Assignment of life policy as collateral.—A policy of life insurance may be assigned as collateral security, and it is not necessary to procure the insurer's consent thereto.[1] So an assignment limiting in its terms the recovery by the assignee to the extent of his interest may be treated as security for advances.[2] But a policy cannot be validly hypothecated upon the forged names of both insured and the named beneficiary.[3] It is held that the word "indebtedness" covers only that existing at the time of making an assignment as collateral security and does not extend to that which may be created in the future.[4] But where the assignment recited an indebtedness of equal amount with that of the policy, and thereafter the assured directs that the balance, over a certain amount, which it is claimed was alone to be protected, be so applied as to relieve assured from his entire indebtedness to [17] McQuillan v. Mutual Reserve Fund Life Ins. Assoc. 112 Wis. 665, 56 L.R.A. 233, 88 Am. St. Rep. 986, 87 N. W. 1069.

[18] Herman v. Connecticut Mutual Life Ins. Co. 218 Mass. 181, 105 N. E. 450.

[19] McQuillan v. Mutual Reserve Fund Life Assoc. 112 Wis. 665, 56 L.R.A. 233, 88 Am. St. Rep. 986, 87 N. W. 1069.

[20] Mutual Benefit Life Ins. Co. v. Swett, 222 Fed. 200, 137 C. C. A. 640, 46 Ins. L. J. 111; Corcoran v. New York Mutual Life Ins. Co. 183 Pa. 443, 39 Atl. 50.

[1] Helmetag v. Miller, 76 Ala. 183, 52 Am. Rep. 316.

On validity of assignment of collateral security to one paying premiums, see notes in 3 L.R.A.(N.S.) 951, and 33 L.R.A.(N.S.) 949.

[2] Crowell v. Northwestern National Life Ins. Co. 140 Iowa, 258, 118 N. W. 412.

[3] Lesem v. Mutual Life Ins. Co. of N. Y. 149 N. Y. Supp. 559, 164 App. Div. 507, 45 Ins. L. J. 5.

[4] De Haven's Estate, In re (Battey's Appeal) 236 Pa. 146, 84 Atl. 676. See Ward v. Ward, 154 Ky. 355, 157 S. W. 700.

the assignee, it was held that said direction explained and confirmed the original intent and passed whatever value the policy possessed and that assured was not restricted to a single assignment.[5] So where a resident of Illinois, who had insured his life in a Massachusetts company, the policy being conditioned to be void if assigned without consent of the insurer, delivered the policy as collateral security to the plaintiff, a resident of Massachusetts, it was held in an action by the assignee, he having been appointed ancillary administrator in Massachusetts, that the bringing of a suit by the principal administrator in Illinois was no bar to the present action, and that the ancillary adminstrator was entitled to recover, as he represented the equitable interest and possessory right of the pledgee of the policy.[6] A wife who has obtained a policy upon her husband's life, payable to her or assigns, may assign the same as collateral security.[7] And if a debtor has made an assignment of a policy upon his life as collateral security for a debt, the assignee does not waive his rights in the policy, by reason of having procured an allowance of his claim against the estate, because he has assigned the policy without recourse to the administrator for collection.[8] A son may make a valid assignment of policies of insurance upon his own life as security for debts due from his father to the assignee.[9] A life policy issued to a creditor may be assigned by him as collateral security to one without insurable interest in the life insured, and the assignee may enforce payment of the policy, even though proof of interest is required by the terms of the policy.[10] Assignments as collateral security, as well as absolute ones, are included in a provision in a life insurance policy that, in case of assignment, claims by any creditor or assignee shall not exceed bona fide indebtedness, together with premiums paid and interest, and that the policy, "as to all amounts in excess thereof, shall be null and void."[11] If an assignment of the contingent interest under a life policy with a cash surrender value, maturing at a specified time, is made as collateral security and upon its maturity the policy is surrendered, the debt satisfied and the contract com-

[5] Mutual Benefit Life Ins. Co. v. Swett, 222 Fed. 200, 137 C. C. A. 640, 46 Ins. L. J. 111.

[6] Merrill v. New England Mutual Life Ins. Co. 103 Mass. 245, 4 Am. Rep. 548.

[7] Robinson v. Mutual Benefit Life Ins. Co. 16 Blatchf. (U. S. C. C.) 194, Fed. Cas. No. 11,961.

[8] Hight v. Taylor, 97 Ind. 392.

[9] Bursinger v. Watertown Bank, 67 Wis. 75, 58 Am. Rep. 848, 30 N. W. 290.

[10] Curtiss v. Ætna Life Ins. Co. 90 Cal. 245, 25 Am. St. Rep. 114, 27 Pac. 211.

[11] McQuillan v. Mutual Reserve Fund Life Assoc. 112 Wis. 665, 56 L.R.A. 233, 88 Am. St. Rep. 986, 87 N. W. 1069.

pleted, it is immaterial as between assurer and the original beneficiary, whether or not legal or equitable rights existed under the assignment.[12] The recovery by an assignee is limited to the amount of indebtedness for which the policy is held as collateral security, together with interest and the sum paid by him in premiums, where it is agreed that said security shall be held until the indebtedness is paid, when the policy shall be reassigned and premiums paid by him shall be added to the debt.[13] An assignment may be enforced and the pledge foreclosed by an assignee or pledgee holding lawfully under the policy provisions, even without subsequent authorization or ratification.[14] And the pledgee of a policy of life insurance has the right and power to sell the policy to the highest bidder for the purpose of realizing money to pay the debt which it secures, and both immediate and remote assignees under such a sale take good title to the policy and to its proceeds, although they have no insurable interest in the life insured by the policy.[15] It is not necessary that transfer and ownership be decreed by a judgment of court in order to enable a pledgee of a life policy to exercise the rights of owner. It is sufficient to give such rights that in conformity with the exact terms of the pledge that the policy was sold at public auction after compliance with certain conditions precedent and that the pledgee thereby became owner.[16] A policy of life insurance which was pledged by the insured to secure an indebtedness, having been sold and the proceeds applied to the debt under order of court, in an action by the pledgee against the insured and his wife, the beneficiary, both of whom appeared and admitted the pledge and consented to the trial of the case, the administrator of the estate of the beneficiary is estopped to claim title to the policy on the ground that subsequent assignments of the policy were void because the immediate and remote assignees of the pledgee who bought the policy on the sale, had no insurable interest on the life of the insured.[17]

§ 2337a. Power of attorney: pledge of policy: loan obtained by forgery: set-off.—A power of attorney does not by inference confer upon the agent thereunder the right to hypothecate for his

[12] Cornell v. Mutual Life Ins. Co. of N. Y. 179 Mo. App. 420, 165 S. W. 858.

[13] Ontario Mutual Life Assur. Co. In re, 30 Ont. 666.

[14] Cornell v. Mutual Life Ins. Co. of N. Y. 179 Mo. App. 420, 165 S. W. 858.

[15] Gordan v. Ware National Bank, 132 Fed. 444, 65 C. C. A. 580, 67 L.R.A. 550.

[16] Feliciana Bank & Trust Co. v. Union Central Life Ins. Co. 137 La. 674, 69 So. 91.

[17] Gordon v. Ware National Bank, 132 Fed. 444, 65 C. C. A. 580, 67 L.R.A. 550.

own use his principal's property, and where pledging a policy is not one of the specific powers conferred expressly or impliedly, nor such an act as is necessary to the execution of any power given, such unauthorized pledge by the agent for a loan of money constitutes a breach of trust which will not be tolerated by the court, and this applies where an agent under a power of attorney given by assured and his wife, forges their names to loan papers and obtains from insurer a loan on the policy, and where the latter is ignorant of the existence of such power of attorney or of any agency, it must, in order to defend an action by the wife as beneficiary for the policy amount, or to set off the amount so loaned and so shift the responsibility for the agent's fraudulent act upon the plaintiff, show that an absolute right was conferred on said attorney to hypothecate the policy for his benefit to the beneficiary's injury; and in such case the husband's name having been forged there was no such consent on his part as to validate the assignment under the law of New York.[18]

§ 2338. Assignment of policy payable to executors, administrators, or assigns: estate.—The power of assignment of a life insurance policy is not limited by a provision to pay the sum secured to the "legal representatives," of the insured. but the provision is designed to apply only in case the latter should die without having previously assigned. So where the contract was with the assured, "his executor, administrator, and assigns," and at the bottom of the policy were the words. "N. B.—If assigned, notice to be given to the company," the policy was held assignable.[19] A policy made payable to the insured or his assigns at a certain specified time, or in case of his death before such time to his personal representatives, is likewise assignable, though the insured die before the time specified for payment.[20] So a policy on the life of the assured payable to his legal representative, may be assigned by him with assent of the insurer, and the rights of the assignee are paramount to the claims of the heirs or personal representatives of the assured.[1] And although a life policy provides that it is payable to the "executor or administrator"

[18] Lesem v. Mutual Life Ins. Co. of N. Y. 149 N. Y. Supp. 559, 164 App. Div. 507, 45 Ins. L. J. 5. Cited as to authorization under power of attorney in Keyes v. Metropolitan Trust Co. 155 N. Y. Supp. 888, 892, 169 App. Div. 765.

[19] New York Mutual Life Ins. Co. v. Flack, 3 Md. 341, 56 Am. Dec. 742. See also Winchester v. Stebbins, 16 Gray (82 Mass.) 52; St. John v. American Mutual Life Ins. Co. 13 N. Y. 31, 64 Am. Dec. 259. See § 2336 herein.

[20] New York Mutual Life Ins. Co. v. Armstrong, 117 U. S. 591, 29 L. ed. 997, 6 Sup. Ct. 877.

[1] Robinson v. Hurst, 78 Md. 59, 20 L.R.A. 761, 44 Am. St. Rep. 266, 26 Atl. 956.

of insured, reserving the right to insurer, at its option, to pay the amount of the insurance to any person appearing to insurer to be entitled thereto by reason of having incurred expense in the burial of insured, the policy may be assigned by the latter and the amount thereof recovered by the assignee against insurer, unless the latter has exercised his option thus reserved.[2] Again, if a policy is issued on assured's life, payable to his administrators or assigns, and he afterward, with the consent of insurer, assigns the policy to his children, it must subsequently be given the same construction and effect as if they had originally been named therein as beneficiaries, and it cannot be avoided by any act of the insured which would not have avoided it had they been named in the policy as beneficiaries.[3] Where a policy of life insurance was made payable to the estate of the insured, and he made a written statement that he had that day made application to the company to change the beneficiary from his estate to a person named, stating that if the change was not made during his life he wanted the money paid to such person, who had rendered to him services as a cook during a number of years, for which he owed such person, and where he delivered the policy together with this written statement to the person named, he intending it and she accepting it as an assignment of the policy; and where on the same day he wrote to the company inclosing the amount which it charged for assenting to a change of beneficiary and informing it of the desired change, and that he owed the person mentioned and wished such person to "have something as a gift after I am gone," held, that this operated as a transfer of the policy, and authorized the assignee to bring suit on it after the death of the insured.[4]

§ 2339. Assignment of policy to trustees.—Where a policy was assigned to trustees to hold in trust for the wife of the insured, it was held that though the trustees had become bankrupt, they were entitled to the proceeds of the policy, and not their assigns in bankruptcy.[5] Where a person assigned a policy upon his life for the benefit of his sister and her children, and delivered the assignment but not the policy, which he afterward surrendered for a consideration, it was held in an action by the trustee to have the value of the policy replaced that the assignment was a

[2] Prudential Ins. Co. v. Young, 14 Ind. App. 560, 56 Am. St. Rep. 319, 43 N. E. 253.

[3] Patterson v. Natural Premium Mutual Life Ins. Co. 100 Wis. 118, 42 L.R.A. 253, 69 Am. St. Rep. 899, 75 N. W. 980.

[4] Southern Mutual Life Ins. Co. v. Durdin, 132 Ga. 495, 131 Am. St. Rep. 210, 64 S. E. 264.

[5] North British Ins. Co. v. Hallett, 7 Jur. N. S. 1263, 9 Week. Rep. 880.

valid one, and the assured must give sufficient security for the entire value of the policy.[6] A written assignment of an insurance policy to trustees to be named in the will of the assignor for the benefit of a certain person named, which is not witnessed as required by statute to make it a valid will, is not effectual to transfer title, where no delivery is made to anyone to hold for the trustees, and assignor does not manifest an intention to hold for himself, although the assignment is assented to by the beneficiary.[7] An assignment of an interest in a life policy, payable at the death of insured, to a trustee, for the benefit of the assignor and others, entitles the assignee to such interest on the death of insured, although the assignor died previously.[8]

§ 2340. Assignment of policy pro tanto.—An assignment of an insurance policy pro tanto, by order indorsed thereon directing the insurers to pay a part of the insurance money to the assignee, the policy being retained in the possession of the assured, is not valid and effectual, though notice thereof is given to the insurers.[9] But assured has a right to make a partial assignment as where he reserves to himself the right to exercise certain options in making an assignment of a semi-tontine policy.[10]

§ 2341. Effect of insolvency or bankruptcy upon policy: assignment for benefit of creditors: rights of assignee or trustee.—The proceeds of a life policy which is taken out by an insolvent for the benefit of his parents as a mere gift to them, will be subjected to the claims of his creditors, where he created a valid liability against himself or his estate by giving a check for a part of the premium, which is held as an existing obligation at the time of his death, although no part of the premium is actually paid by him or out of his property, and the check is never presented against his estate, but is paid gratuitously by his administrator out of the latter's own funds.[11] But creditors of an insolvent have no right to the proceeds of his life insurance, made payable to other persons, where he paid the premium therefor only by a

[6] Fortescue v. Barnett, 3 Mylne & K. 36, 2 L. J. Ch. 98.

On validity of assignment of insurance policy to persons to be named in will, see note in 27 L.R.A.(N.S.) 184.

[7] Frost v. Frost, 202 Mass. 100, 27 L.R.A.(N.S.) 184n, 88 N. E. 446.

[8] Hewlett v. Home for Incurables, 74 Md. 350, 17 L.R.A. 447, 24 Atl. 324.

[9] Palmer v. Merrill, 6 Cush. (60 Mass.) 282, 52 Am. Dec. 782; Pedder v. Mosely, 31 Beav. 159, 7 L. T. 205. But see Pomeroy v. Manhattan Life Ins. Co. 40 Ill. 398, where it was held that such an assignment would be protected in equity.

[10] Northwestern Mutual Life Ins. Co. v. Wright, 153 Wis. 252, 140 N. W. 1078.

[11] Lehman v. Gunn, 124 Ala. 213, 51 L.R.A. 112, 27 So. 475.

worthless check, and never put into the insurance anything upon which the creditors could have had any claim.[12] Where a creditor insures the life of his debtor and afterwards assigns for the benefit of his own creditors, but keeps the policy, which after that he transfers to a third person, the administrator of the insured cannot recover the amount from the transferee to whom it was paid on the ground that the first holder could transfer no title after this general assignment, for whether he could or not is no concern of the insured or his administrator.[13]

Where a policy is issued upon the life of a person in his own name, and he thereafter makes an assignment for the benefit of his creditors, it has generally been held that the policy passes to the assignees in bankruptcy, unless there has been a prior valid assignment, and such a policy, it has been held, will pass to the assignees in bankruptcy where the policy has been deposited as security for a debt, no notice being given to the insurers of such deposit and the insured having retained control of the same.[14] In a Massachusetts case an assignment was made for the benefit of creditors payable on a certain date to assured, his executors, administrators, or assigns, or if he should die before that time, then to his children, naming them, if they survived insured, (with power to insured to surrender the policy to insurer) otherwise to insured's executors, administrators, or assigns. The policy was assignable and the amounts of the surrender value which would be paid at the end of successive years was specified. It was held that his right of surrender was a valuable property right, vested in him by the terms of the policy; that all insured's interest and property rights which the creditors could have reached for the satisfaction of their demands by any process legal or equitable, were conveyed to the assignee; that he could not as against said assignee surrender the policy and take the amount of the surrender value for his own benefit, although as against insurer he had that right; and that the childrens' right was subject to assured's unrestricted right of surrender.[15] A policy on the life of [12] Roberts v. Winton, 100 Tenn. 484, 41 L.R.A. 275, 45 S. W. 673.

[13] Shaak v. Meily, 136 Pa. 161, 20 Atl. 515. See also Hurlbut v. Hurlbut, 49 Hun (N. Y.) 189, 1 N. Y. Supp. 854.

[14] Cook v. Black, 1 Hare, 390, 11 L. J. Ch. 268, 6 Jur. 164; Williams v. Thorp, 2 Sim. 257; West v. Reid, 2 Hare, 249, 12 L. J. Ch. 245, 7 Jur. 147; Edwards v. Martin, 1 L. R. Eq. 121, 13 L. T. N. S. 236, 35 L. J. Ch. 188. See §§ 879 et seq. herein.

[15] Blinn v. Dame (Dame v. Blinn) 207 Mass. 159, 93 N. E. 601. 40 Ins. L. J. 458. The court, per Sheldon, J., said: "Under this state of affairs, the elder Dame made his assignment to the predecessors of the plaintiffs in the first action, hereinafter called the plaintiffs. The language of that instrument is broad and sweeping.

a bankrupt, payable to his legal representatives, and having no cash surrender value and no value for any purpose except the con-

It passes all his 'estate, property and effects, real, personal and mixed, of whatever name and nature, legal and equitable; . . . also all claims, debts, choses in action owing to him, whether now or hereafter payable, and all evidences thereof; also any and all other property, real or personal, of or belonging to him, of whatever description and wheresoever the same may be; . . . except such property as is exempt from being taken on execution by law.' This exception does not cover property which could not be taken on a writ of execution at common law; it manifestly refers only to the statutory exemptions stated in Rev. Laws, c. 177, sec. 34. The instrument, we are satisfied, was intended to convey, and does convey to the assignees all the property and property rights of the assignor which the creditors could have reached for the satisfaction of their demands by any process, legal, equitable, or under the provisions of Rev. Laws, c. 168, sec. 10.

"We do not doubt that that right of the assignor under this policy to receive the amount thereof on July 10, 1918, if he shall then be living, and his right to have the same amount paid to his personal representative upon his prior decease if his children shall not survive him, would have been available to his creditors and would have passed under the assignment. Anthracite Ins. Co. v. Sears, 109 Mass. 383; Lord v. Harte, 118 Mass. 271; Brigham v. Home Ins. Co. 131 Mass. 319; Pierce v. Charter Oak Ins. Co. 138 Mass. 151; Haskell v. Equitable Assur. Soc. 181 Mass. 341, 63 N. E. 890; Alexander v. McPeck, 189 Mass. 34, 75 N. E. 88; Biggert v. Straub, 193 Mass. 77, 78 N. E. 770, 118 Am. St. Rep. 449. It seems equally plain that he may not now, as against his assignees, surrender the policy and take the amount of the surrender value for his own benefit. As against the insurance company no doubt he has that right. But it is a right secured to him by his contract with the company, and is a valuable right of property available to his creditors. See the cases last above cited. It is a chose in action which was in existence at the time of the assignment and passed by its terms.

"What we have said is also in our opinion decisive upon the only remaining question in the case. His right of surrender was a valuable property right, vested in him by the language of the policy. It constituted an integral part of the value to him or his estate of the policy itself. That pecuniary value would be very much less either to himself or to any one to whom he might transfer his property rights if this unqualified and paramount right of surrender were not secured to him. There was here an agreement on the part of the company to pay the surrender value to him upon his surrender; this was a contract right given to him by the policy, which materially increased its value to him. This was not merely a right to surrender under the third article or the third clause of the eighth article of the provision attached to the policy. Under the parenthetical clause contained in the promise of the company he had the right to surrender the policy at any time and to receive its surrender value. Moreover this clause was made a part of the conditional limitation or appointment in favor of his children, apparently for the very purpose of saving to him the absolute ownership and control of the policy. The children's right was made subject to his unrestricted right of surrender. This was a valuable property right incident to his general right under the policy such as would pass with an assignment of the latter. It now must be held, in the tingency of its becoming valuable at the death of the bankrupt if the premiums are kept paid, does not vest in the trustee in bankruptcy as assets of the bankrupt's estate.[16] Where a person procured two policies upon his life payable to his legal representatives, and shortly after made an assignment for the benefit of his creditors, informing them of the existence of these policies, to which they made no claim, as they considered them to be of no value, and the insured, after holding them about a year, surrendered them and procured new ones payable to his wife, and he afterward received his discharge in bankruptcy, it was held that his act in surrendering the policies was not fraudulent, there being no intention to defraud, and the policies being of no value as assets, and therefore creditors, whether those prior to his discharge or subsequent thereto, had no claim upon the policies.[17] If a wife joins with her husband in an assignment of a policy on his life under which she is a beneficiary, and there is a reserved power to change the beneficiary, the husband, even without changing the beneficiary, has a transferable interest therein and may assign the same to secure his indebtedness and notwithstanding any assignment made by him and any remaining interest over and above that due the as-opinion of the majority of the court, that it did pass, with the policy itself, under the general language of the assignment.

"We have found no case which seems to us to be quite decisive upon the point raised here, though in some cases the question decided, and in others the reasoning of the courts, approaches it more or less closely. The decisions are not uniform; but the general trend of authority is in favor of our view. See Atlantic Mutual Life Ins. Co. v. Gannon, 179 Mass. 291, 60 N. E. 933; Travelers Ins. Co. v. Healey, 49 N. Y. Supp. 29, 25 App. Div. 53, aff'd in 164 N. Y. 607, 58 N. E. 1093; Steele, In re, (D. C.) 98 Fed. 78; Diack, In re, (D. C.) 100 Fed. 770; Boardman, In re (D. C.) 103 Fed. 783; Slingliff, In re (D. C.) 106 Fed. 154; Welling, In re, 113 Fed. 189, 51 C. C. A. 151; White, In re, 174 Fed. 333, 98 C. C. A. 205, 26 L.R.A.(N.S.) 451; Hettling, In re, 175 Fed. 65, 99 C. C. A. 87; Townsend v. Townsend, 127 Ky. 230, 16 L.R.A.(N.S.) 316, 105 S. W. 937.

"It follows that under his covenant of further assurance it is the duty of Warren S. Dame now to execute in favor of the plaintiffs any written surrender that may be necessary to enable them to collect the surrender value of the policy in question, and the duty of the insurance company upon receiving proper surrender of the policy to pay such surrender value to the plaintiffs and in the first case a decree must be entered for the plaintiff substantially as prayed for. The bill in the second case must be dismissed." There were two bills in equity, the first suit was by the assignees, the second by the children.

[16] Morris v. Dodd, 110 Ga. 606, 50 L.R.A. 33, 78 Am. St. Rep. 129, 36 S. E. 83. See also Bullon, In re (U. S. D. C.) 98 Fed. 86.

[17] Barbour v. Connecticut Mutual Life Ins. Co. 61 Conn. 240, 23 Atl. 154, 21 Ins. L. J. 3.

signee, or even to a sub-assignee will pass to assured's trustee in bankruptcy as of the date of adjudication.[18]

Where there is no policy provision to the contrary and it is not a wager policy and it is assigned by assured to his sister-in-law, his subsequent insolvency and being adjudicated a bankrupt does not constitute a conveyance in fraud of creditors, and the status of the trustee as such, confers upon him no greater rights than those possessed by assured to set aside such transfer.[19]

A fire policy conditioned to be void if assigned without the assent of insurer, is avoided by an assignment for the benefit of creditors.[20] So an absolute assignment for the benefit of creditors avoids the policy.[1] So under a New York decision if insured makes a general assignment for the benefit of his creditors, it constitutes such a change in the title and interest of the insured as will render the policy void, unless it is saved by estoppel or waiver.[2] But an adjudication that a mortgagee is a bankrupt is such an involuntary act as not to avoid the policy upon his interest.[3]

When the subject of fire insurance has been assigned by insured, before a loss, for the benefit of his creditors, and without the company's consent, indorsed upon or added to the policy, a waiver of its conditions as to change of title is not established by evidence that, after the assignment and before the fire, the insured notified the company's agent that the assignment had been made; that the assignee wanted the insurance kept good and promised to pay a balance of premium due, but that he did not have the policy with him; that the agent replied: "I will see that the insurance is all right," and to the effect that the assignee should have the benefit of it; and that the remainder of the premium was not paid before the fire. Nor do such facts authorize the application of the doctrine of estoppel.[4]

Under the Federal Bankruptcy Act it was the purpose of congress to pass to the trustee that sum which was available to the bankrupt at the time of bankruptcy as a cash asset otherwise to leave [18] Mutual Benefit Life Ins. Co. v. Swett, 222 Fed. 200, 137 C. C. A. 640, 46 Ins. L. J. 111. As to vested interest of beneficiary and reserved right to change same, see §§ 730 et seq., 740 et seq. herein.

[19] King v. Cram, 185 Mass. 103, 69 N. E. 1049.

[20] Dube v. Mascoma Mutual Fire Ins. Co. 64 N. H. 527, 1 L.R.A. 57, 15 Atl. 141. See §§ 2288, 2288a herein.

[1] Roper v. National Fire Ins. Co. 161 N. Car. 151, 76 S. E. 869.

[2] Northam v. Dutchess County Ins. Co. 166 N. Y. 319, 82 Am. St. Rep. 655, 59 N. E. 912.

[3] Roper v. National Fire Ins. Co. 161 N. Car. 151, 76 S. E. 869.

[4] Northam v. Dutchess County Ins. Co. 166 N. Y. 319, 82 Am. St. Rep. 655, 59 N. E. 912.

Life insurance as assets of bankrupt or insolvent, see notes in 50 L.R.A. 333; 26 L.R.A.(N.S.) 451; 30 L.R.A.(N.S.) 990; 41 L.R.A. (N.S.) 123; and 46 L.R.A.(N.S.) 148.

to insured the benefit of his life insurance, and the assignee of insured has the same right to retain the policy as the bankrupt has. If the policy has no cash surrender value or if such surrender value is exhausted by a loan by the assignee it does not pass as general property to the trustee but remains the bankrupt's property. Such statute also undertakes to vest in the trustee property which, prior to the filing of the petition, the bankrupt could by any means have transferred or which might have been levied upon or sold under judicial process against him.[5] Again, it is decided that under said Act the only right of a trustee in bankruptcy to the bankrupt's life insurance relates to those policies that have a cash surrender value payable to the bankrupt, his estate or personal representative, and the amount of said cash surrender value on the date of filing the petition in bankruptcy, constitutes the measure of such right, otherwise and in all other respects said policies of life insurance and the avails thereof are not property to which such trustee has any claim, but they remain the property of the bankrupt without any limitation. It follows, therefore, that policy provisions, under which assured is guaranteed payment at some later time, if either the face value of the policy or some other amount of money, are immaterial if said policies are payable to someone other than assured. In such cases the beneficiary has a vested interest requiring his consent to the payment of any cash value if the policy contains nothing contra, and the beneficiaries may have such an interest in the cash value regardless of any statute that said values are not payable to the bankrupt or his estate. Unless exempt by state law, such policies as have, on the date of filing the bankruptcy petition, a cash value payable to the bankrupt, such cash surrender value is the property of the trustee and not that of the bankrupt.[6] In addition to what we have above stated and as there are certain insurance features, rather than insurance principles, connected with bankruptcy of insured we append the following decisions with a brief mention of the points decided in connection therewith.[7]

[5] Burlingham v. Crouse, 228 U. S. 459, 57 L. ed. 920, 33 Sup. Ct. 564, 30 Am. B. 6, 46 L.R.A.(N.S.) 148 & note; bankr. act July 1, 1898, c. 541, sec. 70a, 30 Stat. 565 (Comp. Stat. 1913, sec. 9654).

[6] Eddy, Matter of (referee's decision), 36 Am. B. R. 294, citing Andrews v. Partridge, 228 U. S. 479, 57 L. ed. 929, 33 Sup. Ct. 570, 30 Am. B. R. 4 (rev'g Andrews, In re, 191 Fed. 325, 112 C. C. A. 69, 41 L.R.A. (N.S.) 123n); Everett v. Judson, 228 U. S. 474, 57 L. ed. 927, 32 Sup. Ct. 568, 30 Am. B. R. 1, 46 L.R.A.(N.S.) 154; Burlingham v. Crouse, 228 U. S. 459, 57 L. ed. 920, 33 Sup. Ct. 564, 30 Am. B. R. 6, 46 L.R.A.(N.S.) 148, and note under Fed. bankr. act. Pub. Stat. Vt. sec. 3050.

[7] United States.—Arkin, In re, 231 Fed. 947, 146 C. C. A. 143 (where § 2342. Rights of company where policy assigned.—The assignment of an insurance policy with the consent of the insurer, creates policy is property of bankrupt's wife, and she is sole beneficiary, has paid the premiums, and the property has a cash value, it need not be turned over to trustee so as to deprive her of her interest); Cohen, In re (U. S. D. C.) 230 Fed. 733 (trustee not entitled to cash surrender value of policy making wife beneficiary, even though right reserved to change beneficiary, especially where state law protects her beneficial interest. Federal bankr. act, also Park's Annot. Code Ga. sec. 2498); Flanigan, In re (U. S. D. C.) 228 Fed. 339 (policy does not pass to trustee where policy taken out for wife's benefit or she becomes assignee. Pa. L. April 15, 1868, P. L. 103, sec. 1. If right to change beneficiary exists, right to surrender value passes to trustee. If, however, there has been bona fide assignment to wife of whole policy including right to cash surrender value as well as insurance moneys, or if assignment made for value or before debts contracted by husband. So that policy property of wife trustee could not surrender policy or claim its surrender value); Levy, In re (U. S. D. C.) 227 Fed. 1011 (assignment not listed in schedule; effect of death of bankrupt after discharge; when wife has right to redeem; when trustee not entitled to entire amount of policy); Orear, In re, 178 Fed. 632, 102 C. C. A. 78, 30 L.R.A.(N.S.) 990, and note, 24 Am. B. R. 343 (policy payable to estate with right to change beneficiary passes to trustee); Smith v. Mutual Life Ins. Co. of N. Y. 178 Fed. 510, 158 Fed. 365, 24 Am. B. R. 514 (annuity purchased in fraud of creditors; consideration paid therefor recoverable by trustee who is not bound to trace same); Johnson, In re, 176 Fed. 591, 24 Am. B. R. 277 (policy payable to wife with right to change beneficiary; exemptions; surrender value not recoverable by trustee. Fed. act 1898, also Rev. L. Minn. 1905, secs. 1691, 1692); Hettling, In re, 175 Fed. 65, 99 C. C. A. 87, 23 Am. B. R. 61 (policy with certain options payable to wife if she survives, otherwise to estate with right to change beneficiary; property passes to trustee); Kyte, In re, 174 Fed. 867, 23 Am. B. R. 414 (not fraud to fail to list policies on which full surrender value borrowed and not listed on advice of counsel); White, In re, 174 Fed. 333, 98 C. C. A. 205, 26 L.R.A.(N.S.) 451, 23 Am. B. R. 90 (policy with surrender value payable to wife or assured's estate, trustee has right to surrender value; exemption statute; Domestic Relations Law, N. Y. Consol. L. C. 14, sec. 52, not applicable. Distinguished in Grems v. Traver, 87 Misc. 644, 148 N. Y. Supp. 200, 44 Ins. L. J. 226, 236.—Emerson, J.); Van Kirk v. Vermont Slate Co. (U. S. D. C.) 140 Fed. 38, 15 Am. B. R. 239 (bona fide prior assignee entitled to have value of claim fixed as against trustee; trustee's right to redeem; apportionment); Welling, In re, 113 Fed. 189, 51 C. C. A. 151, 7 Am. B. R. 340 (semi-tontine policy payable to wife passes to trustee although it has technically no surrender value; relative rights of bankrupt and trustee); West Norfolk Lumber Co. In re, 112 Fed. 759, 7 Am. B. R. 648 (proceeds of fire policy belong to pledgee; not part of debtor's estate); Scheld, In re, 104 Fed. 870, 44 C. C. A. 233, 52 L.R.A. 183, 5 Am. B. R. 1602 (policy with cash surrender value passes to trustee unless such value is paid over or secured to trustee notwithstanding state exemption laws as to claims of creditors; specific provisions of sec. 70, Fed. bankr. act, 1898, limits provision of sec. 6, Id.).

Georgia.—Traders' Ins. Co. v. Mann, 118 Ga. 381, 45 S. E. 426, 11 Am. B. R. 269 (trustee holds beneficial interest; policy transferred to a new contract between the latter and the assignee, which is unaffected by any causes of forfeiture previously existing and unknown to either party.[8] But an insurer's consent to an assignment of the policy does not waive a clause rendering an assigned policy void as to all above the debt due the assignee.[9] If insurer issues a policy of "permanent insurance" by which it agrees to be and remain "forever" liable to the assured, his heirs and assigns, and which provides that any assignment of the policy shall be brought to the company's office to be entered and "allowed," it cannot refuse to enter and allow an assignment solely because it has decided not to consent to the transfer of old policies.[10] The insurer may resist payment to the assignee, on the ground of fraud, of the amount due on a policy secured by the holder of a purchase-money mortgage on the life of the mortgagor's wife, who was not creditor after fire and before bankruptcy; reassignment by creditor and surrender of policy to trustee).

Louisiana.—Gordon v. Mechanics' & Traders Ins. Co. 120 La. 441, 15 L.R.A.(N.S.) 827 (annotated on effect of bankruptcy or insolvency proceedings or assignment for benefit of creditors on fire insurance), 45 So. 384, 22 Am. B. R. 649 (fire occurred between adjudication in bankruptcy and appointment of receiver; after receiver appointed composition with creditors was confirmed; held that composition nullified bankruptcy proceedings, and assured's rights under policy were intact notwithstanding condition against change of interest or title).

Massachusetts.—Fuller v. New York Fire Ins. Co. 184 Mass. 12, 67 N. E. 879 (assignable policies pass to trustee; property destroyed between adjudication and appointment of trustee, he may enforce obligation).

Minnesota.—Remley v. Travelers' Ins. Co. 108 Minn. 31, 121 N. W. 230 (fifteen-year endowment policy payable to insured's executors, administrators and assigns; policy delivered to and held by bank; creditors entitled to surrender value; Rev. L. Minn. 1905, secs. 1691, 1692, also Fed. bankr. act; insured did not secure amount to trustee; policy passed to trustee).

Mississippi.—Dreyfus v. Barton, 98 Miss. 758, 54 So. 254 (policy payable to executor or administrator; proceeds and cash surrender value exempt; bankrupt's legal representative had right to exemption; Fed. acts no application to state statutory exemptions; code 1906, sec. 2141).

New York.—Grems v. Traver, 87 Misc. 644, 148 N. Y. Supp. 200, 44 Ins. L. J. 226, 236 (unless the policy is payable to insured, or it has a surrender value payable by the terms of the policy to him alone he has no interest that passes to the trustee. A policy that does not assure to the bankrupt some actual value as an asset does not pass to the trustee, Emerson, J.)

On voidability of assignment of policy within four months of bankruptcy pursuant to executory agreement antedating such period, see note in 17 L.R.A.(N.S.) 939.

[8] Hall v. Niagara Fire Ins. Co. 93 Mich. 184, 18 L.R.A. 135, 53 N. W. 727. See § 2308 herein.

[9] McQuillan v. Mutual Reserve Fund Life Assoc. 112 Wis. 665, 56 L.R.A. 233, 67 N. W. 1069. See § 2325 herein.

[10] Marshall v. Franklin Fire Ins. Co. 176 Pa. 628, 34 L.R.A. 159, 35 Atl. 204.

bound by the mortgage, to secure his debt, where, knowing that, if the insurer knew the facts, it would not issue a policy in his favor, he procured it to be issued to her, paying the premiums himself, and then took an assignment of it, without notice to, and contrary to the rules of, the insurer.[11] Where a policy which provides that all sums due from the insured to the company are to be deducted before payment is assigned, the company consenting thereto and reserving its "rights as expressed in the policy," it is held that the insurer may deduct premium notes given by the assignor subsequent to such assignment where no fraudulent intent to defeat the assignment appears.[12]

§ 2343. Assignment by husband to wife of life policy.—A husband may assign a policy of insurance upon his life to his wife in the absence of a prior assignment. If, however, he has assigned the policy to another by a prior assignment, the subsequent assignment to the wife will fail.[13] If an assignment of a life policy is made by a husband to his wife, the only intention on his part which is to be regarded is that expressed in the assignment, and therefore if his wife dies, his intention cannot be proved to prevent her collateral relatives from taking an interest.[14] The assignment by a man to his wife of his contingent interest in a policy of insurance on his life, which is payable to her should she survive him, but to his personal representatives or assigns in case she dies before he does, devests him of all interest in the policy, so that, he will acquire a right to the proceeds of the policy, if at all, by virtue of his right as surviving husband, and not under the terms of the policy.[15] And if an endowment policy has matured and he would have been entitled to its surrender value and it is payable to his executors, administrators and assigns, insured may validly assign the same and the assignee will take his rights, and where it is assigned to his wife if living, if not then to his child or children, said wife will be entitled to the surrender value and the children do not take during her life.[16] So an endowment policy, which has been pledged to secure a debt, may be validly assigned by insured to his wife, subject to creditor's lien where she pays the premiums

[11] Hinton v. Mutual Reserve Fund Life Ins. Co. 135 N. Car. 314, 65 L.R.A. 161, 47 S. E. 474.

[12] Wiggin v. Suffolk Ins. Co. 18 Pick. (35 Mass.) 145, 29 Am. Rep. 576.

As to deduction of note from loss, see § 1237 herein.

[13] Chapman v. McIlwrath, 77 Mo. 38, 46 Am. Rep. 1; Roberts v. Phœnix Life Ins. Co. 120 U. S. 86, 30 L. ed. 613.

[14] Colburn's Appeal, 74 Conn. 463, 92 Am. St. Rep. 231, 51 Atl. 139.

[15] Box v. Lanier (Lanier v. Box) 112 Tenn. 393, 64 L.R.A. 458, 79 S. W. 1042.

[16] Eisenbach v. Mutual Life Ins. Co. of N. Y. 147 N. Y. Supp. 462, 162 App. Div. 595, 44 Ins. L. J. 144.

which he was unable to pay, and also satisfies certain of his debts, and a creditor who thereafter obtains judgment against him cannot compel satisfaction thereof out of the insurance unless fraud be shown.[17] Where the husband has disposed by will of the proceeds of a policy of insurance on his life, but subsequently to the making of his will assigns the policy to his wife, who pays the assessments thereon, it is held that she may recover in preference to persons named in the will.[18] An assignment will likewise fail if in fraud of the creditors of the husband.[19] But if a policy has no salable value an assignment thereof by a debtor to his wife does not constitute a fraud upon creditors.[20] And if a policy on a husband's life has no cash surrender or market value when he assigns it to his wife, and in addition the premiums are thereafter paid by her, out of funds not derived from him, his creditors have no right in equity as against her to have their claims satisfied out of the policy amount, especially where credit was extended merely on the fact of insured's general representations as to policies being payable to his estate and that said creditors would have the benefit of the proceeds.[1] And an attempted assignment by insured to his wife and daughter will be set aside where it is in fraud of creditors and the entire insurance will be subjected to his creditors' benefit and not merely the cash value thereof where insured dies before judgment setting aside such transfer.[2] Where a statute permitted a father to insure his life for the benefit of a minor child, it was held that such statute was not permissive of an assignment by the father of a policy in his own name to his minor children, he being in debt at the time of the assignment.[3] A husband may by a parol assignment and delivery to the wife create such equitable rights in her as will be good against creditors, unless the assignment is intended to be in fraud of the creditors.[4]

Whether an assignment of policies of life insurance from a husband to his wife, passes the whole interest in it, depends upon the law of the state of their domicil, and if this is Massachusetts the effect is the same as if the assignment were made to her by a third person, to whom the husband had previously assigned the policy.[5]

[17] Bodwell v. Johnson, 152 Ind. 525, 52 N. E. 798.

[18] Swift v. Railway Passenger & Freight Conductors' Mutual Aid & Benefit Assoc. 96 Ill. 309 (one judge dissenting).

[19] Appeal of Elliott's Exrs. 50 Pa. St. 75, 88 Am. Dec. 525.

[20] Steeley's Admr. v. Steeley, 23 Ky. L. Rep. 996, 64 S. W. 642.

[1] Brooke v. Morris, 111 Ga. 879, 36 S. E. 937.

[2] Continental National Bank v. Moore, 82 N. Y. Supp. 302, 83 App. Div. 419.

[3] Friedman v. Fennel, 94 Ala. 570, 10 So. 649.

[4] Chapman v. McIlwrath, 77 Mo. 38, 46 Am. Rep. 1.

[5] Colburn's Appeal, 74 Conn. 463,

§ 2344. Assignment of life policy to wife or dependents by insolvent bankrupt: creditors' rights.—Under a statute permitting a wife to insure her husband's life for her benefit and hold the proceeds as against his creditors—less premiums with interest paid by him, within the statutory period of limitation, with intent to defraud creditors, she may in like manner hold the proceeds of a policy which the husband has procured on his own life and assigned to her when insolvent.[6] So an assignment by an insolvent husband of his life insurance policy to his wife, is valid as against creditors, although the policy was taken out only two years before such assignment and the death of the insured.[7] The fact that a member of a mutual benefit society who assigned the membership certificate was insolvent at the time of his death does not invalidate the assignment where it is not shown that he was insolvent at the time he made the assignment.[8] Again, although it is declared, that there is much diversity of opinion on the question it is held in Massachusetts that a wife and daughter of a bankrupt, to whom paid-up endowment policies are assigned, are entitled to the proceeds thereof less sums paid for premiums in fraud of creditors, and the creditors are entitled to such sums with interest under the statutes of that state governing the rights of a married woman as against the claims of creditors.[9] It is also held in the same state that even on the eve of bankruptcy, the bankrupt can absolutely and unreservedly transfer to his wife all his interest under a policy on his life, notwithstanding both had knowledge of his insolvent or bankrupt condition, as the statute provides that in such case of assignment, or transfer to her of a policy after its issuance it inures to her separate use and benefit, and this applies to an assignment to her of an endowment policy, subject to the reserved right to obtain a loan or surrender the policy for its cash value, where such reserved right is not exercised by reason of assured's death, although the power to surrender could have passed to the trustee in bankruptcy.

92 Am. St. Rep. 231, 51 Atl. 139. As to place of contract, see §§ 225 et seq. herein.

[6] Cole v. Marple, 98 Ill. 58, 38 Am. Rep. 83. See §§ 879 et seq., 2341 herein.

[7] State v. Tomlinson, 16 Ind. App. 662, 59 Am. St. Rep. 335, 45 N. E. 1116.

[8] Milner v. Bowman, 119 Ind. 448, 5 L.R.A. 95, 21 N. E. 1094.

[9] Bailey v. Wood, 202 Mass. 562, 89 N. E. 149, 38 Ins. L. J. 1037; Bailey v. Wood, 202 Mass. 549, 25 L.R.A.(N.S.) 722 (annotated on whether paid-up or endowment policies are within statutes exempting life insurance policies), 89 N. E. 147; Mass. Rev. Laws 1902, c. 118, sec. 73; Id. c. 159, sec. 3, cl. 7; banking act July 1, 1898, c. 541, 30 Stat. 565. U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 3451. Compare Frost v. Frost, 202 Mass. 100, 27 L.R.A.(N.S.) 184, 132 Am. St. Rep. 476, 88 N. E. 446; Conant v. Boston Chamber of Commerce, 201 Mass. 479, 87 N. E. 906. See §§ 2341–2344, 3488 herein.

A distinction was made in this, that the case was not one where the bankrupt had either a general or special title to the policy.[10] If a parol agreement is made by assured with his wife to assign his life policies to her in consideration of a relinquishment of dower rights in property so as to enable him to transfer the same to secure a loan, and the amount of the policies and the value of the dower rights are substantially the same, such agreement vests in her so as to constitute an equitable lien against her husband's trustee in bankruptcy, even though the assignment was not formally made until after he became insolvent, although so made within four months prior to his bankruptcy.[11] In Pennsylvania, however, a distinction is made between a person's taking out a policy on his own life, under the statute, for the benefit of his family and dependent relatives, and taking out a policy on his own life and assigning it to his wife, child or other dependent, the court holding that in the former case the title becomes vested in such beneficiaries to the exclusion of creditor's claims without regard to the question of good or bad faith or fraud upon creditor's rights as such question is precluded. In the latter case, however, the assignee's title may, under the statute, be attacked by the creditors of the assignor if the assignment has been made in fraud of their rights, but no inference is warranted that the assignment is fraudulent as to creditors by the mere fact that the assignor was insolvent when he made the assignment, since it may, nevertheless, have been made in good faith and without fraud.[12] So in an Indiana decision if a [10] Eldredge v. Mutual Life Ins. Co. of N. Y. 217 Mass. 444, 105 N. E. 361, 32 Am. B. R. 530, 44 Ins. L. J. 140. This arises out of the provisions of the Federal bankruptcy act (given in last preceding note) which preserves exemptions given to bankrupts by state laws and of the Mass. Stat. above noted.

[11] J. F. Grandey & Son, In re (U. S. D. C.) 146 Fed. 318.

[12] McCutcheon's Appeal, 99 Pa. 133, 11 Wkly. N. C. 125, 39 Leg. Int. 238, 29 Pitts. L. J. 215; act April 15, 1868, sec. 1, Pamphl. L. 103. In this case A took out a policy on his own life payable to his wife, and becoming subsequently indebted to various parties, induced her by fraud and coercion to assign said policy to B as collateral security for an antecedent debt due from A to B. B was ignorant of the fraud and coercion, and paid several premiums on the policy, and afterwards, A proving insolvent, was active in inducing A's creditors to sign a composition agreement which was accordingly effected. B concealed the fact that the policy had been assigned to him, and there was no evidence that the other creditors of A knew of it. Afterwards A died. In a contest between his widow and B for the amount of the policy, it was held that B was not to be regarded as an innocent purchaser for value, and was therefore entitled only to a return of the premiums paid by him with interest thereon, and that the widow of A was entitled to the fund. It was held further, that as none of A's other creditors had attacked the validity of the assignment to B, it person takes out a policy on his life and subsequently assigns it to his wife, child, or other dependent relative, the mere fact that the assignor is insolvent at the time of making the assignment does not warrant the inference that the assignment was in fraud of his creditors.[13]

§ 2345. Right of husband to assign policy issued for benefit of wife or children.—A policy of insurance taken out by a husband upon his life for the benefit of his wife vests an interest in the wife which the insured cannot devest her of without her consent. And this rule also prevails where the policy is for the benefit of the wife and children of the insured.[14] If, however, after the wife's death the husband assigns the policy which was issued for the benefit of the wife, the assignee will become entitled to such interest as the husband would receive in the distribution of her estate. So where S. insured his life for the benefit of his wife, and paid the premiums until her death, he and two children surviving, and afterward he assigned his interest to H as security, and H paid the premium until S's death, it was held that on the wife's death one-third of the policy went to the husband and two-thirds to the children, and that H could take only the one-third, but that he was entitled to be reimbursed for the premiums he had paid with interest.[15] As a general rule, if the husband assigns such a policy, the assignee was not affected by the circumstance that B concealed the fact of the assignment from such other creditors. Id.

[13] State v. Tomlinson, 16 Ind. App. 662, 59 Am. St. Rep. 335, 45 N. E. 1116. See also Lytle v. Baldinger, 84 Ohio St. 1, 95 N. E. 389; Ohio Rev. Stat. sec. 6343.

[14] Colorado.—Goodrich v. Treat, 3 Colo. 408, 7 Ins. L. J. 269.

Illinois.—Hubbard v. Stapp, 32 Ill. App. 541.

Indiana.—Pence v. Makepeace, 65 Ind. 345.

Kentucky.—Robinson v. Duval, 79 Ky. 83, 42 Am. Rep. 208.

Louisiana.—Pilcher v. New York Life Ins. Co. 33 La. Ann. 322.

Massachusetts.—Unity Mutual Life Assur. Assoc. v. Dugan, 118 Mass. 219.

Minnesota.—Ricker v. Charter Oak Life Ins. Co. 27 Minn. 193, 38 Am. Rep. 289, 6 N. W. 771, 10 Ins. L. J. 143.

Missouri.—Charter Oak Life Ins. Co. v. Brandt, 47 Mo. 419, 4 Am. Rep. 328; Baker v. Young, 47 Mo. 453.

New York.—Ferdon v. Canfield, 104 N. Y. 143, 10 N. E. 146; De Jonge v. Goldsmith, 46 N. Y. Super. Ct. 131; Connecticut Mutual Life Ins. Co. v. Van Campen, 32 N. Y. St. Rep. 1125, 57 Hun, 592, 11 N. Y. Supp. 103.

Tennessee.—Goslin v. Caldwell, 1 Lea (69 Tenn.) 454, 27 Am. Rep. 774.

See contra, Rison v. Wilkerson, 3 Sneed (37 Tenn.) 565.

As to vested interest of beneficiary—change of interest. See §§ 730 et seq., 740 et seq. herein.

On power of insured to destroy rights of beneficiary, see note in 49 L.R.A. 737.

[15] Harley v. Heist, 86 Ind. 196, 44 Am. Rep. 285.

has no rights in the same, but if he pays any premiums after the policy has been assigned to him, he will be entitled to recover the amount of premiums paid.[16] In a case in Indiana it has, however, been held that the assignee cannot even recover the amount of premiums paid except upon the clearest proof of fraud.[17] An assignee of a policy cannot exercise the right of surrender for cash value stipulated for therein at certain periods where the policy is payable to insured's wife, or in case of her death, to his children, and said wife did not join in the assignment. In such case the right of surrender is personal to insured.[18] In Wisconsin, although an assignment by a husband of a policy upon his life, payable to his wife, is made while he is temporarily residing in a state wherein it is invalid, still it is valid in a state where the contract itself was made and in which such an assignment could validly be made.[19]

§ 2346. Right of guardian to assign policy issued for benefit of ward.—A father who is acting as guardian for his children has no right to assign a policy of life insurance running to their benefit.[20]

§ 2347. Right of wife to assign a policy on life of husband.—Statutes are in existence in many of the states providing that policies of insurance may be procured upon the life of a husband which shall inure to the sole use of a wife, or of the wife and children, free from all claims of creditors. The cases decided under these statutes in the different states are not entirely in accord with each other. In some of the states it has been held that such policies are not assignable by the wife, while in the decisions in other states there is the suggestion that where statutes are in existence giving the wife absolute control over her separate personal property, and she has paid the premiums upon the policy of insurance, she ought to be permitted to assign the same.[1] In New York it was early

[16] Pilcher v. New York Life Ins. Co. 33 La. Ann. 322; De Jonge v. Goldsmith, 46 N. Y. S. C. 131.

[17] Pence v. Makepeace, 65 Ind. 345.

[18] Moser v. Connecticut Mutual Life Ins. Co. 134 Ky. 215, 119 S. W. 792.

When policy cannot be surrendered without consent of beneficiary in life policy. See §§ 853 et seq. herein.

On surrender of policy of ordinary life insurance without consent of beneficiary, see note in 35 L.R.A. (N.S.) 844.

[19] Northwestern Mutual Life Ins. Co. v. Adams, 155 Wis. 335, 144 N. W. 1108. See Trovendale v. Highleyman (1908) — Ky. —, 113 S. W. 812. See Henry v. Thompson, 78 N. J. Eq. 142, 78 Atl. 14. See § 232 herein.

[20] Pratt v. Globe Mutual Life Ins. Co. — Tenn. —, 17 S. W. 352.

[1] In many of the states provisions have been made by statute or code for the protection of the interest of wife and children for whose benefit policies have been issued. These laws are in substance the same in all the states. They provide that insurance held [2] that such policies were not assignable, and that any assignment by the wife was void and of no effect. This was decided under the statute of 1840. The reason controlling this case is, that the statute was passed for the special protection of the widow and children of the insured, and that the spirit of the statute is not permissive of any assignment or transfer in any way of the policy. It is not passed for the benefit of the wife while the husband is living, so that she may assign the same, but it is to protect her during her widowhood, or to protect the orphan children after their father's death.[3] And in that state a policy on the life of her husband, issued for the benefit of the wife, or, in case of her death before her husband, of her children, was not assignable by her during the lifetime of her husband until the statute of 1879,[4] and an assignment by a wife without her husband's consent of a policy upon his life, is void.[5] But a married woman is capable of assigning a policy issued upon the life of her husband for her benefit, in those cases only in which, and to the precise extent to which, she has been expressly enabled to assign by statute.[6] So the New York may be procured upon the life of the husband for the benefit of the wife and children, and that such insurance policies shall be free from the claims of the creditors of the insured. It is also generally provided that in case premiums paid out of the estate of the husband exceed a certain amount, the excess with interest shall inure to the benefit of the creditors of the husband. See statutes under § 879 herein.

It has been held in New York that the policy need not specially refer to such a statute or certain provision for the benefit of the children in case the wife dies before the husband, in order to bring it within the operation of the statute: Brummer v. Cohn, 58 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 239.

[2] Eadie v. Slimmon, 26 N. Y. 9, 82 Am. Dec. 395, and note.

[3] See also, in line with this principle, Smith v. Head, 75 Ga. 755; Knickerbocker Life Ins. Co. v. Weitz, 99 Mass. 157; Frank v. Mutual Life Ins. Co. 102 N. Y. 266, 267, 55 Am. Rep. 807, 6 N. E. 667; Wilson v. Laurence, 76 N. Y. 585; Grems v. Travers, 148 N. Y. 200, 44 Ins. L. J. 226; Whitehead v. New York Life Ins. Co. 33 Hun (N. Y.) 425; Frank v. Mutual Life Ins. Co. 12 Daly (N. Y.) 267; Brummer v. Cohen, 6 Abb. N. C. (N. Y.) 409, aff'd 58 How. Prac. 239; Barry v. Equitable Life Assurance Soc. 14 Abb. Prac. N. S. (N. Y.) 385n; Pratt v. Globe Mutual Life Ins. Co. 3 Tenn. Cas. 174, 17 S. W. 352; Bell v. Cureton, 2 Mylne & K. 503.

[4] Brick v. Campbell, 122 N. Y. 337, 10 L.R.A. 259, 25 N. E. 493; N. Y. Laws 1879, c. 248. See Travelers' Ins. Co. v. Healey, 49 N. Y. Supp. 29, 25 App. Div. 53; Fuller v. Kent, 43 N. Y. Supp. 649, 13 App. Div. 529; Dudley v. Fifth Avenue Trust Co. 100 N. Y. Supp. 934, 115 App. Div. 396.

[5] Lesem v. Mutual Life Ins. Co. 149 N. Y. Supp. 559, 164 App. Div. 507, 45 Ins. L. J. 5. See §§ 879 et seq. herein. Compare Dannhauser v. Wallenstein, 169 N. Y. 199, 62 N. E. 160, 31 Ins. L. J. 367, 65 N. Y. Supp. 219, 52 App. Div. 312, 60 N. Y. Supp. 50, 28 Misc. 690.

[6] Brick v. Campbell, 122 N. Y. 337, 10 L.R.A. 259, 25 N. E. 493. See Travelers' Ins. Co. v. Healey, 49 N.

Domestic Relations Law [7] permitting a married woman in her own name or in the name of a third person with his consent as her trustee, to insure her husband's life and providing that the married woman may dispose of such policy by will or written acknowledged assignment to take effect at her death, can only be assigned as specified.[8] This statute as well as that of 1840 was passed for a most beneficial purpose, to effect which, it applies as well to policies negotiated by the husband and payable to her, as to those procured by his wife.[9]

There are other cases, however, some of which hold expressly that in the absence of statutory prohibition, if the statute of the state gives a wife control over her property so that she may transfer the same, that under such power she should be held authorized to transfer a policy of insurance upon her husband's life.[10] The right to assign the policy in these cases is based upon the enabling statutes of the states in which the decisions have been rendered, giving a married woman the right to transfer her sole and separate property and choses in action. Under these decisions such an assignment is not enforceable at law, but is held to constitute an equitable assignment of all rights of the wife in the policy, which the assignee may enforce in a court of equity.

A Connecticut case,[11] while it accepted the doctrine stated in New York as applicable to the state of facts before the court, seemed inclined, however, to modify the rule somewhat. The court said, referring to the New York case: [12] "The reasoning of the court goes so far as to hold that a policy of this description prior to the decease of the husband is absolutely and under all circumstances unassignable by the wife. That such should be the law under a policy, premiums on which were paid by the husband, certainly

Y. Supp. 29, 25 App. Div. 53; Fuller v. Kent, 43 N. Y. Supp. 649, 13 App. Div. 529; Dudley v. Fifth Avenue Trust Co. 100 N. Y. Supp. 934, 115 App. Div. 396.

[7] Domestic Relations Law (Laws 1909, c. 19) sec. 52; Laws 1858, c. 179, am'd L. 1874, c. 277; L. 1866, c. 656; L. 1840, c. 80; L. 1877, c. 278, sec. 2; L. 1879, c. 248.

[8] Dannhauser v. Wallenstein, 169 N. Y. 199, 62 N. E. 160, 65 N. Y. Supp. 219, 52 App. Div. 312, 60 N. Y. Supp. 50, 28 Misc. 690.

[9] Grems v. Traver, 87 Misc. 644, 148 N. Y. Supp. 200, 44 Ins. L. J. 226.

[10] Collins v. Dawley, 4 Colo. 138, 34 Am. Rep. 72; Pomeroy v. Manhattan Life Ins. Co. 40 Ill. 398; Norwood v. Guerdon, 60 Ill. 253; Damron v. Pennsylvania Mutual Life Ins. Co. 99 Ind. 478; Everett v. Oakley, 35 Ind. 188; Merrill v. New England Mutual Life Ins. Co. 103 Mass. 245, 4 Am. Rep. 548; Charter Oak Life Ins. Co. v. Brandt, 47 Mo. 419, 4 Am. Rep. 328; Kerman v. Howard, 23 Wis. 108.

[11] Connecticut Mutual Life Ins. Co. v. Burrows, 34 Conn. 305, 91 Am. Dec. 725.

[12] Eadie v. Slimmon, 26 N. Y. 9, 82 Am. Dec. 395, and note.

seems reasonable and just. While on the other hand, if the wife paid the premiums out of her separate estate, it is difficult to suggest a reason why she should not have the same power to assign her interest in the policy that she has to assign any other chose in action belonging to her." These points were not, however, expressly decided by the court, as the wife died before the husband, and the policy provided that in case of her death before the insured's, the policy should inure to the benefit of the children. In the absence of a provision in the policy or the statutes of the state as to any rights of children in such a policy, the principle as suggested in the Connecticut case [13] might prevail if the policy were made payable to the wife for her sole use. If, however, it clearly appears from the statute or the terms of the policy that the contract, in case of the death of the wife before the husband, is intended to be continued in favor of the children, these facts will constitute a material difference between the policy and ordinary choses in action. In such a case the ordinary rules of law applicable to choses in action will not apply so as to permit a married woman to assign a policy of insurance upon her husband's life, though empowered by statute to transfer her personal property.[14] The words of the Connecticut court [15] are pertinent in this connection: "But it is suggested that the clause in the policy making it payable to the children 'is simply the indication of her purpose at that time to give the sum specified in the policy to them in case she deceased before her husband;' and again, that 'it must be held to be on her part an expressed, but unexecuted intention to give this sum to the children,' which purpose she could abandon at pleasure, and make a different disposition of the fund. The intention was not only expressed, but executed. The contract was complete, and the money, when due, was payable to the children without any further act on her part. But we do not regard the transaction as a gift. The charter of the company and the statute law required the policy to be made as it was, to protect it from the claims of creditors and the representative of the husband. The object of the legislature was to authorize a reasonable provision to be made for the family of the husband for the widow, if living, if not, for the children. Mrs. K., when she purchased this policy, doubtlessly intended to secure the benefits of this statute, not only for herself, in case she survived her husband, but for her children, in case she did not, and to that end

[13] Connecticut Mutual Life Ins. Co. v. Burrows, 34 Conn. 305, 91 Am. Dec. 725.

[14] Eadie v. Slimmon, 26 N. Y. 9, 82 Am. Dec. 395.

[15] Connecticut Mutual Life Ins. Co. v. Burrows, 34 Conn. 305, 91 Am. Dec. 725.

she caused the policy to be made according to the requirements of the statute. Having done so, and the contract relations between the company and the children having thereby become fixed, it was not in her power to defeat the purpose of the legislature, in respect to the children and the manifest intention of the parties to the contract, by an assignment of the policy during the life of her husband." The court also, in this case, held that the instrument could not be considered testamentary in its nature, and therefore revocable by her. In a later Connecticut decision,[16] where a policy upon a husband's life was issued for the benefit of the wife, or the children in case the wife died before her husband, it was held that the rights of the children were not affected by an assignment by her, but that such assignment would have been a valid one in case there had been no children.

From the consideration of the cases upon this subject both under this and the sections next following we think the following principles may be deduced as being sustained by the weight of authority. In the absence of any provision in the policy, or of any statutory provision that the policy shall inure to the benefit of the children as well as the wife, it would seem that the wife, in those states where she is permitted to have absolute control over her sole and separate property, may assign a policy of insurance upon her husband's life issued for her sole benefit. If, however, it is clearly expressed in the policy to be for the benefit of the children as well as the wife, and it is the manifest intention, as declared in the statute, to make such a provision for the children, then they are vested with certain rights, of which they cannot be deprived by an assignment of the policy by the wife or husband.

§ 2347a. Same subject: where wife has contingent interest only.—The assignee of the wife takes only her contingent interest, which will become an absolute title where her husband predeceases her, if, during his life a policy payable to her for her sole use, if living, otherwise to the children.[17] If a wife's interest under the terms of a policy issued to her upon her husband's life, depends upon whether or not she survives him, and it terminates and her children become the beneficiaries if she does not so survive, her interest is only a contingent one so that her assignee can take no greater interest than she possesses, even though the assignment is made with her husband's consent.[18] And when a wife's interest under a policy

[16] Phœnix Mutual Life Ins. Co. v. Dunham, 46 Conn. 79, 33 Am. Rep. 14.

[17] Brown's Appeal, 125 Pa. 303, 11 Am. St. Rep. 900, 17 Atl. 419; Entwhistle v. Travelers' Ins. Co. 202 Pa. 141, 31 Atl. 759.

[18] Hagerman v. Mutual Life Ins. Co. of N. Y. 45 Colo. 459, 103 Pac. 276. See §§ 827–829 herein.

payable to her, is contingent upon her surviving her husband, her assignee, where her husband has not consented to the assignment as required by statute, is not entitled to have an absolute assignment executed to him so as to entitle him to the surrender value of the policy, even though by reason of her husband's indebtedness said assignor had agreed to collect the value and pay over the policy to such assignee. But, however, while he could not hold the policy absolutely and receive the surrender value because of want of power in the wife to assign it to him without her husband's consent, said assignee would be entitled to a delivery of the policy and to a right to her interest therein since she could agree to receive, if she were living, money when due under the policy and hold it for him.[19] If a married woman is permitted by statute to obtain insurance upon her husband's life and to assign the policy if she has no children, or to assign the same with her husband's consent, in any event the policy gives her a contingent interest only, in that it is payable to her if she survives her husband, otherwise to her children. Her assignee, even though her husband consents to the assignment, can take such interest only as she possessed, which interest will terminate if she predeceases her husband.[20] Where a husband insured his life for the benefit of his wife, and in case she died before he did for the benefit of the children, it was held, she having died and also one of her children having died prior to his death, that the grandchild inherited such share in the proceeds of the policy as its parent would have been entitled to if living.[1] If a policy is effected by a wife upon her husband's life payable to her, or in case of her death before his then to their children, without any reserved right to change the beneficiary or to surrender the policies at his option for their cash value, he has no pecuniary interest which he can assign, and the interest of the wife, where both joined in the assignment, will pass to the assignee, but upon the happening of her death before his neither her personal representatives nor assigns acquire any title to the policy proceeds, and their surviving children, not having joined in the assignment, will take, as their rights are not defeated by said prior assignment.[2] If under the terms of the policy, a wife's interest is only a contingent one dependent upon her surviving her husband, so that the assignee, even though the assignment is made with the husband's [19] Rathborne v. Hutch, 85 N. Y. Supp. 775, 90 App. Div. 151, 85 N. Y. Supp. 768, 90 App. Div. 161, 80 N. Y. Supp. 347, 80 App. Div. 115.

[20] Hagerman v. Mutual Life Ins. Co. of N. Y. 45 Colo. 459, 103 Pac. 276. See §§ 827–829 herein.

[1] Continental Life Ins. Co. v. Palmer, 42 Conn. 60, 64, 19 Am. Rep. 530; Connecticut Mutual Life Ins. Co. v. Baldwin, 15 R. I. 106, 23 Atl. 105, 14 Ins. L. J. 813.

[2] Wilde v. Wilde, 209 Mass. 205, 95 N. E. 295, 40 Ins. L. J. 1538.

consent, takes only such interest as the wife possessed, the act of the assignee, after her decease before her husband and the vesting of the policy interest in their children, in obtaining a paid-up policy after lapse for nonpayment of premiums, does not estop assurer, although it had consented thereto from asserting that the assignee had no interest in the policy.[3] But where the sufficiency of an assignment by a husband of his wife's interest under a policy payable to her if living, otherwise to her children, is warranted by her and he expressly consents thereto by an endorsement upon the policy, her interest will pass, even though she died before her husband leaving no children.[4] And where a policy was issued for the benefit of the wife in case she survived her husband, but if not to inure to the benefit of the children, and during the life of the husband she assigned the policy, to be held in trust for the children, it was held that such assignment was a valid one, and could not be defeated by a judgment creditor.[5] In Missouri, under the statute providing that a policy of life insurance for the benefit of a married woman shall inure to her use and benefit and that of her children, it has been held that the clause as to the children refers to the manner of descent and distribution, and does not vest in them any rights which an assignment of the policy by the wife would violate, her rights as to the control of the policy not being restrained in any way. The clause is held to mean that after the money has been reduced to possession by the wife, the proceeds shall go to the children at her decease; the object of the statute is simply to protect her.[6]

§ 2348. Assignment by wife of policy on husband's life: continued.—It has been held that the wife may assign a policy of insurance upon her husband's life where the purpose of such assignment is to procure the necessary means with which to keep the policy alive.[7] So a wife's interest in a policy on her husband's life may be assigned by her as security for his debts.[8] And a policy on a husband's life will stand as collateral for loans actually made to him and his wife at separate times, where the first one is made to the wife on her absolute and general assignment, and the second one is thereafter made to him by the same assignee on his applica-

[3] Hagerman v. Mutual Life Ins. Co. of N. Y. 45 Colo. 459, 103 Pac. 276.

[4] Henry v. Thompson, 78 N. J. Eq. 142, 78 Atl. 14.

[5] Smillie v. Quinn, 25 Hun (N. Y.) 332, 90 N. Y. 492.

[6] Baker v. Young, 47 Mo. 453; Connecticut Mutual Life Ins. Co. v. Ryan, 8 Mo. App. 535, 10 Ins. L. J. 72.

[7] Robinson v. Mutual Benefit Ins. Co. 16 Blatchf. (U. S. C. C.) 194, Fed. Cas. No. 11,961, 9 Ins. L. J. 23.

[8] Herr v. Reinoehl, 209 Pa. 483, 58 Atl. 862, aff'g 21 Lanc. L. Rev. 291.

tion.[9] And if, under a statute, a wife's interest in a policy is her separate estate, and a married woman is permitted by statute to dispose of her separate estate, an assignment by her to secure certain of his notes, where the policy is for her sole use and benefit and she survives him, is such a pledge of her interest as will be enforced.[10] But where the by-laws of the New York Produce Exchange provide for a quarterly fund to be paid to the widow, children, or next of kin, or other dependent upon a member, and it is also provided that nothing in said laws shall be construed to constitute an estate in esse which can be mortgaged or pledged, a member's wife has no such interest in the fund as to enable her to assign it during her husband's life.[11]

A policy for the benefit of assured's legal representatives which is assigned by assured to his wife, and by the latter's administrator is not within a statute necessitating the husband's assent to an assignment or surrender of a policy issued upon husbands' lives for their benefit.[12] So, where a "ten-payment policy" issued originally upon assured's application and payable to his legal representatives, was assigned by him to his wife and thereafter a paid-up policy was issued in lieu thereof, payable to said wife "assignee or her legal representatives," and she assigned the same to a third party, and he in turn assigned the same to his wife, who thereafter made still another assignment thereof, it was held that said original policy was not a "wife's" policy within the New York statute permitting policies upon husbands' lives for the benefit and use of their wives to be assigned by a wife with her husband's written consent, and also that the paid-up policy was not a new contract but simply a continuation of the original contract,—that is, a change in the mere form of the contract provided for by its own terms, and therefore the husband's written consent was not necessary to a valid assignment.[13] And an assignment by a husband to his wife of a policy on his life payable to his legal representative and assigned by her administrator after her death, is not within the statute of New York of 1879, requiring her husband's consent to her assignment of a policy issued to her, etc.[14]

A married woman may sell and convey her right to recover upon [9] Upshaw v. Mutual Loan Assoc. 60 N. Y. Supp. 242, 29 Misc. 143.

[10] Troendle v. Highleyman, — Ky. —, 113 S. W. 912.

[11] McCord v. McCord, 57 N. Y. Supp. 1049, 40 App. Div. 275.

[12] Morschauser's Admr. v. Pierce, 72 N. Y. Supp. 328, 64 App. Div. 558; Laws N. Y. 1879, c. 248.

[13] Dannhausen v. Wallenstein, 169 N. Y. 199, 62 N. E. 160, 31 Ins. L. J. 367 (statutes down to 1879, c. 248, reviewed by the court) 65 N. Y. Supp. 219, 52 App. Div. 312, 60 N. Y. Supp. 50, 28 Misc. 690.

[14] Morschauser Admr. v. Pierce, 72 N. Y. Supp. 328, 64 App. Div. 558.

life policies made payable to her without the intervention of a trustee, under a statute,[15] authorizing her to sell and convey any of her personal property other than that described in said statute [16] with the same effect as though she was unmarried.[17] In Pennsylvania only the contract of indorsement, guaranty, or suretyship is within the intent of a statute forbidding a married woman from becoming an accommodation indorser, maker, guarantor, or surety for another.[18]

The right of a wife to assign a policy on the life of her husband, under the New York Statute of 1879 [19] when the policy is issued for her benefit and the husband gives his written consent, is not limited to policies issued or delivered within the state, but extends to those issued by a foreign company in another state.[20] It is also held that if the statute of the state in which the policy is issued prohibits an assignment of the policy by the wife, no assignment of her interest, though made in another state, will be deemed valid in the state where the policy was issued.[1] And it has been decided that where the policies were issued prior to the enactment of the statute, such statute did not apply to a policy payable to the wife "or her assigns." [2]

§ 2349. Assignment by husband and wife jointly of policy on husband's life: joint assignment by husband, wife and children.—If the policy on the life of the husband is, either under a statute or by the express terms of the policy itself, for the benefit of the children as well as the wife, it cannot be assigned by the joint act of the husband and wife. The interest of the children has become a vested interest, of which they cannot be deprived. The general rules applicable to assignment by the wife alone of such a policy control here, and the decisions upon the right of the wife to assign the policy where the interests of the children are vested contain the same principles of law as involved in the joint act of the husband and wife.[3] It has been held, however, that where the children join

[15] R. I. Pub. Stat. c. 166, sec. 6.

[16] Sec. 5.

[17] Supreme Assembly Royal Society of Good Fellows v. Campbell, 17 R. I. 402, 13 L.R.A. 601, 22 Atl. 307.

[18] Herr v. Reinoehl, 209 Pa. 483, 58 Atl. 862, aff'g 21 Laws Rev. 291, Pa. act June 8, 1893, P. L. 344. Compare Union Central Life Ins. Co. v. Woods, 11 Ind. App. 335, 37 N. E. 189.

[19] N. Y. Laws 1879, c. 248.

[20] Spencer v. Myers, 150 N. Y. 269, 34 L.R.A. 175, 44 N. E. 942. See § 232 herein.

[1] Mutual Life Ins. Co. v. Terry, 62 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 325.

[2] Robinson v. Mutual Life Ins. Co. 16 Blatchf. (U. S. C. C.) 194, Fed. Cas. No. 11,961.

[3] Godfrey v. Wilson, 70 Ind. 50; Appeal of Brown, 125 Pa. St. 303, 11 Am. St. Rep. 900, 17 Atl. 419.

As to vested rights, etc., of beneficiary. See §§ 730 et seq., 740 et seq., 858 et seq. herein.

in such an assignment, the assignee will be entitled to the proceeds in preference to the children.[4] Under a Wisconsin decision if a policy is procured by a person on his life, payable to his wife, or her executors, administrators, or assigns, it may be validly assigned by him and his wife with insurer's consent.[5] In Missouri a life insurance policy taken out by a husband on his own life for the benefit of his wife is assignable during his life, with her consent, as collateral security for his debts where there is no statute directly prohibiting it, and she is debarred by the assignment from recovering the proceeds of the policy.[6] In the Missouri case it appeared that the amount of premiums paid could not bring the case within the statute, but in subsequent cases in that state the right of the wife to assign has been distinctly affirmed.[7] If a wife is a beneficiary under a straight life policy upon her husband's life in which a power is reserved to change the beneficiary and she joins her husband in an assignment of the policy as security for his debts, it is held not necessary that she should receive a consideration therefor in order to bind her, because she has no property right in the policy and parts with nothing of appreciable value by such act and the assignee becomes the qualified owner to the full extent necessary to satisfy the husband's indebtedness out of the proceeds, nor does she, by such assignment, become a surety for him. It was also decided that it was not necessary to determine whether the assignment, in that the debt exceeded the policy amount, was in effect a change of beneficiary, for the reason that they were not the same but different things, in that an assignment is the transfer by one of his rights or interest in property to another, rests upon contract and generally requires the delivery of the thing assigned, while the right to change the beneficiary is the power to appoint which must be exercised in the manner specified in the contract and no change of beneficiary was made, although she was left nothing to take as the assignment absorbed the entire policy proceeds.[8] An indorse-

[4] Ferndon v. Canfield, 39 Hun (N. Y.) 571, Daniels, J., dissenting.

[5] Canterbury v. Northwestern Mutual Life Ins. Co. 124 Wis. 169, 102 N. W. 1096; Rev. Stat. 1878, sec. 2347, as am'd by Laws 1889, c. 271, sec. 1, p. 299.

[6] Charter Oak Life Ins. Co. v. Brandt, 47 Mo. 419, 4 Am. Rep. 328.

[7] Baker v. Young, 47 Mo. 453. See also Ford v. Travelers' Ins. Co. 6 Mackey (D. C.) 384, 13 Cent. Rep. 168, 16 Nash. L. Rep. 382; DeRonge v. Elliot, 23 N. J. Eq. 486, 495; Bayles v. Hillsborough Ins. Co. 27 N. J. L. 163, 166; Archibald v. Mutual Life Ins. Co. 38 Wis. 542. Compare Kase v. Hartford Fire Ins. Co. 58 N. J. Law 34, 32 Atl. 1057; De Jonge v. Goldsmith, 14 Jones & Spen. (46 N. Y. Super.) 131, holding endowment policy payable to wife not assignable, aff'd (mem.) 86 N. Y. 614.

[8] Mutual Benefit Life Ins. Co. v. Swett, 222 Fed. 200, 137 C. C. A. 640, 46 Ins. L. J. 111. But see §§ 730 et seq., 740 et seq., 843, 853, 858 et seq. herein.

ment in blank by a wife on a policy on her husband's life, in order that he may assign the same as collateral security for a certain loan, has been held valid. But if the husband use the indorsement for other purposes of assignment than that specified, it is not binding upon the wife, for any purpose other than that contemplated.[9] And although a policy is assigned by insured, the consent of his wife to the assignment by letter to the assignee is void as to her.[10] And even though assured's wife as beneficiary, joins with her husband in an assignment to secure his debts, and he also, without his wife's knowledge, executes a separate absolute assignment of the policy and delivers the same as collateral security for the payment of certain individual firm debts then due, or which might become due, such assignee can hold as to the wife's interest, no greater amount of the policy proceeds than that of which she had knowledge and for which she understood the assignment was made.[11] Where the wife insured the life of her husband and they joined in an assignment to a trustee for the benefit of the children, it was held that the wife could not question the trustee's right to the fund.[12] And if an assignee holder of policies as collateral security upon their expiration and surrender, obtains with insured renewal policies payable to it, its successors, or assigns, said contract subject to whatever equities insured and his wife may possess, becomes one between insurer and said assignee, and where such renewals recite that they are issued pursuant to the original contract which provides for certain options to exchange for other policies, including endowment policies, such rights are vested in the assignee alone, so that it is entitled to demand specific performance as to the endowment policies without being obligated to show the acquiescence of insured and his wife in the exercise of said options.[13]

Where the insured, the wife and children, including a minor child, joined in an assignment of a policy for the benefit of the wife and children, it was held that the assignee was entitled to the share of the wife and the three children who had reached their majority, but that the interest of the minor child was not transferred by such assignment, but was, however, subject to an equitable charge for one-fifth of the premium paid by the assignees with interest.[14]

[9] Connecticut Mutual Life Ins. Co. v. Westervelt, 57 Conn. 586.

[10] Crawford v. Canadian, 29 Canadian L. T. 638, 13 O. W. R. 957.

[11] Aldrich v. Brinker (U. S. D. C.) 143 Fed. 563.

[12] Bond v. Mutual Benefit Life Ins. Co. 9 Phila. (Pa.) 149, 30 Leg. Int. 304.

[13] State Mutual Bank of Springfield v. United States Life Ins. Co. 238 Ill. 148, 87 N. E. 396.

[14] Scobey v. Waters, 10 Lea (78 Tenn.) 551.

Under the New York laws[15] policies of insurance upon the lives of husbands for the benefit of their wives are "assignable by said wife with the written consent of her husband." Under the statute it is held that the joinder of the husband with the wife in making a written assignment constituted a sufficient consent of the husband. The fact that the children have a contingent interest dependent upon the death of the wife before the husband does not render an assignment void when made under this statute.[16] Under this statute it has also been held that endowment policies payable to the wife may be assigned by the husband and wife jointly.[17]

In Massachusetts, if a policy is effected upon her husband's life payable to her, or in case she predeceases him, then to her children without any reserved right to change the beneficiary or to surrender the policies at his option for their cash value, he has no assignable interest and the interest of the wife, where both join in the assignment, passes to the assignee, but if he survives her, neither her personal representatives nor assigns acquire any title to the policy proceeds, and their surviving children, not having joined in the assignment, will take, as their rights are not defeated by said prior assignment.[18] Under a Pennsylvania decision a life policy provided that the proceeds thereof should be paid to the wife, if she survived her husband, otherwise to the children, but if insured survived wife and children, then to his legal representatives, the balance of the year's premiums and any other indebtedness to insurer, either on the part of the insured or assured, being first deducted therefrom. Another clause provided that the policy could be converted into cash at the option of the holder at any time after the expiration of fifteen years from the date thereof, for the amount indorsed on the back of the policy, corresponding to the age of the insured at the time of such conversion, "provided that the policy shall have been first paid up by the payment of ten full annual premiums." After ten full annual payments had been made, and when the children were living, the husband and wife joined in an assignment of the policy, and the assignee demanded the cash balance on the ground that he was the "holder" of the policy. His demand was refused because the children had an interest. It was decided that not only the wife, but insured's children were the beneficiaries or "holders" of the policy, that neither the husband nor [15] Laws 1879, c. 248. See §§ 2347–2348 herein.

[16] Anderson v. Goldsmith, 103 N. Y. 617, 9 N. E. 495. But compare §§ 2247–2248 herein. See §§ 730 et seq., 740 et seq., 858 et seq. herein.

[17] Brummer v. Cohn, 9 Daly (N. Y.) 36, 58 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 239, 6 Abb. N. C. (N. Y.) 409.

[18] Wilde v. Wilde, 209 Mass. 205, 95 N. E. 295, 40 Ins. L. J. 1358.

the wife, nor both together had power to destroy the children's vested interest; and that the demand of the wife's assignee was properly refused.[19] In another case in that state a New York insurance company issued a policy upon the life of a citizen of Pennsylvania, payable to the wife of the insured for her sole use, but providing that in case of her death before the decease of the insured, the amount of the insurance should be payable to her children. Both the insured and his wife joined in an assignment of the policy, and afterward the wife died, leaving the insured and seven children to survive her. After the death of the insured, the assignee of the policy, and the children of the deceased wife of the insured, made claim to the amount of the policy, and an interpleader was instituted by the company to determine the right to the fund. In such case, the contest being over a fund paid by a foreign corporation into the court of the common domicil of the claimants, its adjudication would depend upon the construction of the policy itself, under which the parties claimed, and not upon the question whether the lex fori or the lex loci ought to prevail; and the wife's interest in the policy having been extinguished by her death in the lifetime of her husband, and her assignee being in no better position than she herself occupied at the time of the assignment, the amount of the insurance was payable to her children.[20]

If the wife joins with her husband in an assignment of the policy and it is otherwise valid, the assignee's rights thereunder are not affected by claimed duress and coercion on the part of the husband to induce her to sign said assignment, where it does not appear that the assignee had any knowledge of said alleged acts of the husband or was in any way connected therewith.[1]

A beneficial association may waive limitations and restrictions in its constitution and laws as to surrender and cancelation of the certificate upon its assignment, so that if the husband and wife, who is the beneficiary, join in assigning the certificate, she is precluded from repudiating her agreement and contesting it as against the assignee who has performed his part thereof, and it also appears that insurer has not contested the assignment but has paid the money into court.[2]

§ 2349a. Assignment to husband and wife: joint ownership: survivor's rights.—A joint ownership is created by the assignment of a policy to a husband and wife and the interest thereunder becomes [19] Entwhistle v. Travelers' Ins. Co. 202 Pa. 141, 31 Atl. 759, rev'g 17 Super. Ct. 180.

[20] Brown's Appeal, 125 Pa. St. 303, 11 Am. St. Rep. 900, 17 Atl. 419.

[1] Ely v. Hartford Life Ins. Co. 128 Ky. 799, 110 S. W. 265.

[2] Kimball v. Lester, 59 N. Y. Supp. 540, 43 App. Div. 27.

vested in the survivor, and if the husband's administrator collects the policy proceeds he is liable to her assignee as for money had and received.[3]

§ 2349b. Assignment of employers' liability policy.—A policy of indemnity insurance cannot be assigned without consent of the insurer,[4] and an assignment with insurer's consent of an employer's liability insurance policy operates as a new contract between it and the assignee, subject to the policy terms.[5] But a class of the transferee's employees which the policy does not include at the time of its execution are not included by a transfer of the policy.[6] Where the policy is solely one of reimbursement to the employer precluding suit against the insurer until the judgment has been paid, the execution of its notes by an insolvent insured in alleged satisfaction of a judgment in favor of the widow of deceased employee, is but a subterfuge when said notes are immediately returned, but an assignment of the indemnity policy given at the same time is not void but only voidable and being voidable the insurer cannot complain.[7]

§ 2350. Assignment and transfer of marine policy: generally.—The strict rules controlling the assignment of policies of fire insurance do not prevail in the assignment of marine policies. The latter is not so strictly a personal contract as is a fire policy. It is not, however, on the other hand, an incident of the property insured, so that it passes to a vendee or successive owners of the property without an express assignment of the policy. The fact that a person is the assignee of the insurable interest is not sufficient. He must also be assignee of the policy, or equitably entitled to the proceeds thereof under an agreement to assign by the insured. It is not necessary to procure the insurer's consent, unless required by the terms of the policy. The reason for the distinction between fire and marine policies is due to commercial necessities and convenience, and the fact, as we have stated above, that mere personal consideration is not such an important factor in marine policies.[7a] In England in the last century, policies were issued in blank to a great extent, and were transferable much the

[3] Arn v. Arn, 81 Mo. App. 133.
As to joint tenancy; tenants in common, see § 874 herein.

[4] White v. Maryland Casualty Co. 122 N. Y. Supp. 840, 137 App. Div. 905, 39 Ins. L. J. 1357.

[5] Standard Life & Accident Ins. Co. v. Bambrick Bros. Construction Co. 163 Mo. App. 504, 143 S. W. 845.

[6] Maryland Casualty Co. v. Little Rock Railway & Electric Co. 92 Ark. 306, 122 S. W. 994.

[7] Davies v. Maryland Casualty Co. 89 Wash. 571, L.R.A.1916D, 395, 154 Pac. 1116, 155 Pac. 1035.

[7a] See American Bonding & Trust Co. v. Baltimore & Ohio Southwestern Ry. Co. 124 Fed. 866, 882, 60 C. C. A. 52, 58.

same as any negotiable instrument, although subsequent statutes were passed requiring the insertion, at the time of the issuance of the policy, of the signature of one or more of the persons interested.[8] The object of such statute was not to interfere with the transfer of the policy, but simply to prohibit the issuance of policies in blank.[9] The marine insurance act of England provides that: "Where assured assigns or otherwise parts with his interest in the subject-matter insured, he does not thereby transfer to his assignee his right under the contract of insurance unless there be an express or implied agreement with the assignee to that effect. But the provisions of this section do not affect a transmission of interest by operation of law." [10]

It is generally considered that policies of marine insurance are assignable, unless an assignment is prohibited by the terms of the policy, but that they do not pass from the mere fact of the sale of the insured property.[11] The liability of the insurers is [8] 25 Geo. III. c. 44, repealed 28 Geo. III. c. 56. See 17 Earl of Halsbury's Laws of England, p. 360.

"A marine policy may be assigned by endorsement thereon or in other customary manner." Marine insurance act 1906 (6 Edw. VII. c. 41) sec. 50(3); Butterworth's Twentieth Century Stat. (1900–1909) p. 411; 15 Chitty's Stats. (1902–1907) p. 893.

[9] See cases decided under this act: Wolf v. Horncastle, 1 Bos. & P. 316, 4 R. R. 808, 13 Eng. Rul. Cas. 265; De Viguier v. Swanson, 1 Bos. & P. 346n, 4 R. R. 825n; Ebbsworth v. Alliance Marine Ins. Co. L. R. 8 Com. P. 596, 29 L. T. 479, 2 Asp. M. 125, 13 Eng. Rul. Cas. 215.

[10] Marine ins. act 1906 (6 Edw. VII. c. 41) sec. 15 (under division relating to insurable interest, "assignment of interest"); Butterworth's Twentieth Century Stats. (1900–1909) p. 401; 15 Chitty's Stats. (1902–1907) p. 884. Citing Powles v. Inness, 11 Mees. & W. 10, 12 L. J. Ex. 163, 63 R. R. 496, 13 Eng. Rul. Cas. 356; North of England Co. v. Archangel Mar. Ins. Co. L. R. 10 Q. B. 249, 13 Eng. Rul. Cas. 360.

[11] United States.—Spring v. South Carolina Ins. Co. 8 Wheat. (21 U. S.) 268, 5 L. ed. 614; Columbian Ins. Co. v. Lawrence, 2 Pet. (27 U. S.) 25, 7 L. ed. 335.

Massachusetts. — Cleveland v. Clapp, 5 Mass. 201; Wakefield v. Martin, 3 Mass. 558.

New York.—Earl v. Shaw, 1 Johns. Cas. (N. Y.) 313, 314, 1 Am. Dec. 117.

Ohio.—Walker v. Fireman's Ins. Co. 2 Handy (Ohio) 256, 12 Ohio Dec. 431.

Pennsylvania.—Wells v. Archer, 10 Serg. & R. (Pa.) 412, 432, 13 Am. Dec. 682; Rousset v. Insurance Co. of North America, 1 Binn. (Pa.) 429.

England.—Delaney v. Stoddard, 1 Term Rep. 22, 1 R. R. 139; Powles v. Innes, 11 Mees. & W. 10, 12 L. J. Ex. 163, 13 Eng. Rul. Cas. 356; Alexander v. Campbell, 41 L. J. Ch. 478, 27 L. J. N. S. 417; Crozier v. Phœnix Ins. Co. 2 Han. (N. B.) 200; Motteaux v. London Assurance Co. 1 Atk. 545, 547, 13 Eng. Rul. Cas. 467; Pellas v. Neptune Marine Ins. Co. 5 C. P. D. 34, 49 L. J. C. P. 153, 42 L. T. 35, 28 W. R. 405, 4 Asp. M. C. 213; Lloyd v. Fleming, L. R. 7 Q. B. 299–302, 41 L. J. Q. B. 93, 25 L. T. 824, 20 W. R. 296, 1 Asp. M. C. 192. See § 904 herein.

"A marine policy is assignable unless it contains terms expressly pro-practically the same as if the assignee had in fact procured the insurance in his own name, though he must sue in the name of his assignor, unless by statute permitted to sue in his own name.[12] When an agent procures an insurance in his own name for the benefit of "whom it may concern," a person to whom the policy is assigned takes it subject to such claims as exist against the assignor at the time of the assignment.[13] The terms of the policy itself or the statutes of a state may permit the assignor to maintain a suit in his own name. Where, however, he is not so authorized, he should, though his rights are equitable in their nature, bring an action in the name of his assignor in a court of law, and recover thereon.[14] The consent by insurer to a transfer of the policy, is a sufficient consideration for an indorsement by the transferee of a note given for the premium.[15] hibiting assignment. It may be assigned either before or after loss." Marine insurance act 1906 (6 Edw. VII. c. 41) sec. 50(2); Butterworth's Twentieth Century Stat. (1900–1909) p. 411; 15 Chitty's Stat. (1902–1907) p. 893.

§ 2351. Assignment of marine policy where assignor has parted with entire interest in property insured.—If the insured parts with his interest in the policy, but agrees with the vendee that he will act as trustee of the subject of insurance, it has been held that he will then hold the policy for the benefit of the assignee.[16] That it is a personal contract is true. It is, however, clearly not subject to the same stringent rules applicable to fire policies. Mere personal consideration is not the controlling element. The policy may in all other cases be assigned without the insurer's consent,

[12] Insurance Co. of Pennsylvania v. Trask, 8 Phila. (Pa.) 32; Tuttle v. Beebe, 8 Johns. (N. Y.) 152.

[13] Waters v. Allen, 5 Hill (N. Y.) 421.

[14] "Where a marine policy has been assigned so as to pass the beneficial interest in such policy, the assignee of the policy is entitled to sue thereon in his own name; and the defendant is entitled to make any defense arising out of the contract which he would have been entitled to make if the action had been brought in the name of the person by or on behalf of whom the policy was effected." Marine ins. act 1906 (6 Edw. VII. c. 41) sec. 50(2); Butterworth's Twentieth Century Stat. (1900–1909) p. 411; 15 Chitty's Stats. (1902–1907) p. 893. The above quoted section is substantially the same wording as sec. 1, c. 86, of policies of marine assurance act 1868 (31 & 32 Vict.) 3 L. Rep. Stat. (1868) p. 610, although this entire act is repealed by the mar. ins. act, Id. sec. 92, 2d sched. Policies of marine insurance act 1868, sec. 1, and difference between two acts, extent of repeal by marine ins. act 1906, and construction of same, considered in Pickersgill & Sons, Ltd. v. London & Provincial Marine & General Ins. Co. Ltd. [1912] 3 K. B. 614, 620, 107 L. T. 305, 82 L. J. K. B. 130, 18 Com. Cas. 1, 57 S. J. 11, 28 T. L. R. 591, per Hamilton, J.

[15] Equitable Marine Ins. Co. v. Adams, 173 Mass. 436, 53 N. E. 883.

[16] Powles v. Innes, 11 Mees. & W. 10, 12 L. J. Ex. 163, 63 R. R. 496, 13 Eng. Rul. Cas. 356.

unless it is expressly required by the terms of the contract. Necessities of trade and commerce and commercial usage have created a distinction between the rules applicable to fire and marine policies. But if the insured not only parts with his interest in the policy, but also delivers to the vendee actual possession of the insured property, can the policy be also assigned, either at the time of the sale or by a subsequent assignment before the loss, so as to permit the assignee to recover thereon? Or does the policy become entirely inoperative from the moment of such sale, both in the hands of the vendor and the vendee? It has been said that the policy of insurance is strictly a personal contract, and that in case of an absolute sale and delivery of a subject of insurance it becomes inoperative, because the vendor has no longer any interest in the contract, and because the insurer did not contract with the vendee. This view is taken by Mr. Parsons.[17]

Mr. Arnould says, in connection with the subject of assignment of marine policies[18] "If after the policy be effected, but before the loss, he assigns away his interest in the thing insured, he cannot sue on the policy except as trustee for the assignee, and that only in cases where the policy is handed over to him on the assignment, or there is an agreement that it shall be kept alive for his benefit." And Mr. Maclachlan says[19] "An absolute sale and transfer by the party originally insured of all his interest in the insured property incapacitates him, or the party who has effected the insurance for him, from recovering on the policy on his account. Nor can he or the party who has so effected the policy sue thereon as trustee, unless there has been either an assignment of the policy, or something which the courts will consider as equivalent thereto, or evidence of an agreement between the vendor and vendee that the policy should be kept alive for the benefit of the latter." And substantially the same statement is made in the last edition of Arnould's treatise.[20] Mr. Duer also says[1] "The purchaser may cover

[17] 1 Parsons on Ins. 56–58.

[18] 2 Arnould on Ins. (Perkins' ed. 1850) 1265.

[19] 1 Arnould on Marine Ins. (Maclachlan's ed. 1887) 115.

[20] 17 Earl of Halsbury's Laws of England, sec. 711, p. 360; Arnould on Marine Ins. (8th ed. Hart & Simey) sec. 178, p. 236, it is there said: "An absolute sale or transfer by the party originally insured of all his interest in the insured property before the loss, incapacitates him, or the party who has effected the insurance for him, from recovering on the policy on his own account; nor can he, or the party who has so effected the policy, sue thereon as trustee for the purchaser, unless there have been either an assignment of the policy, or something which the courts will consider as equivalent thereto, or as evidence of an agreement or understanding between the vendor and vendee that the policy should be kept alive for the benefit of the latter." See also Id. sec. 179–237.

[1] 2 Duer on Ins. (ed. 1846) 55.

the risk he assumes by a new insurance, but has no claim to the benefit of a prior insurance not assigned to him." So Mr. Phillips says[2] "Where the insured interest is assignable, whether in a marine, fire, or life insurance, the policy is assignable in equity to the assignee to whom the subject-matter or interest thereby assured is assigned, provided it contains no provision to the contrary." From a consideration of the foregoing, we find Mr. Phillips declaring that the policy is assignable in such a case, while we have Mr. Arnould, Mr. Duer, and Mr. Maclachlan stating principles as applicable to the assignment of marine policies, in which it may clearly be seen that it is asserted by these learned authors that marine policies in such a case are assignable, and in two cases in the United States the same view was evidently assumed to be law.[3] In Powles v. Innes, Parke, J., said: "If the policy had been handed over with the bill of sale, or there had been an order to the broker to hand it over, the case would be different. Then the parties might sue as trustee for the purchaser." In this case there was an actual transfer of the property insured.

From a consideration of this question it seems clear that where there has been an absolute sale and transfer of the property insured, the policy may at the same time be assigned to the vendee, so that a recovery may be had. While we find no cases expressly declaring that the policy may be so assigned aside from those already examined, yet we find many decisions in which such a rule is assumed to exist, and wherein the conclusions arrived at are evidently based upon such assumption.[4] Under the Marine Insurance Act of England: "Where the assured has parted with or lost his interest in the subject-matter insured, and has not, before or at the time of so doing expressly or impliedly agreed to assign the policy, any subsequent assignment of the policy is inoperative:

[2] 1 Phillips on Ins. (3d ed.) 58.

[3] Spring v. South Carolina Ins. Co. 8 Wheat. (21 U. S.) 268, 5 L. ed. 614; Rousett v. Insurance Co. of North America, 1 Binn. (Pa.) 429; Powles v. Innes, 11 Mees. & W. 10, 12 L. J. Ex. 163, 13 Eng. Rul. Cas. 356.

[4] Spring v. South Carolina Ins. Co. 8 Wheat. (21 U. S.) 268, 5 L. ed. 614; Hibbert v. Carter, 1 Fed. 745; Earle v. Shaw, 1 Johns. Cas. (N. Y.) 313, 1 Am. Dec. 117; Rogers v. Traders' Ins. Co. 6 Paige Ch. (N. Y.) 583; Insurance Co. of Pennsylvania v. Trask, 8 Phila. (Pa.) 32; Roussett v. Insurance Co. of North America, 7 Binn. (Pa.) 429; Gourdon v. Insurance Co. of North America, 3 Yeates (Pa.) 327; Dhegetoff v. London Assur. Co. Mosely, 83; North of England Oil Cake Co. v. Archangel Maritime Ins. Co. 44 L. J. Q. B. 121, L. R. 10 Q. B. 249, 32 L. T. 561, 24 W. R. 162, 13 Eng. Rul. Cas. 360; Powles v. Innes, 11 Mees. & W. 10, 12 L. J. Ex. 163, 13 Eng. Rul. Cas. 356; Sparkes v. Marshall, 2 Bing. N. C. 761, 774, 5 L. J. C. P. 286, 2 Hodges, 44, 42 R. R. 725, 3 Scott, 172; Delany v. Stoddart, 1 Term Rep. 22, 1 R. R. 139.

Provided that nothing in this section affects the assignment of a policy after loss." [5]

§ 2352. Assignment of marine policy subsequent to absolute sale and transfer of subject of insurance.—Another question arises in connection with that raised in the preceding section. Can the vendor, where there has been an absolute sale and transfer of the property insured without any assignment of the policy, subsequently assign the same so that a recovery may be had thereunder? Can the assignor by a subsequent possession of the insurable interest recover on the policy? To recover upon the policy there must be an interest in the insurance and in the property insured. The underwriter contracts for a certain length of time. If during this time the policy is inoperative, because there is no union of interests, the policy not passing by the mere sale of the property, and the vendor having no interest covered by the policy after an absolute sale and transfer, then no recovery can be had. The insurer suffers no damage from the suspension of the policy during that time. It is rather an advantage to him. Consequently, it would not seem that the underwriter could, in the absence of any stipulation in the policy forbidding such a transfer, claim that from the fact of a suspension of the liability the policy is thereby avoided, where it appears that the underwriter has not been prejudiced in any way by such transfer, and that the revival of the policy by the union of the interests would be simply a continuation of the exact risk he assumed. We think that, under such circumstances, the policy would revive, and fully protect the interest of the originally insured upon the ownership of the property being again vested in him. It would seem, therefore, that the insurer would be liable for losses occurring after the revival of the policy by the union of the interest, but not for any occurring during the time the policy was suspended.[6] Consequently, such being the case, the original insured, though he has no interest in the property, still has an interest in the policy; therefore, it would follow that such interest would be assignable in equity to the vendee of the goods, and that the policy would revive exactly the same as if the union of interest was in the vendor. Mr. Phillips says, after considering this question: "I conclude, therefore, that though the subject may have been absolutely transferred pending the risk, and the risk may have been thus interrupted, it will revive by an assignment of the policy to the vendee of the subject, and cover subsequent losses, but not intermediate ones." [7]

[5] Marine insurance act 1906 (6 Edw. VII. c. 41) sec. 51; Butterworth's Twentieth Century Stats. (1900–1909) p. 411; 15 Chitty's Stats. (1902–1907) p. 894. As to assignment after loss, see sec. 50(2) of said act, given in note to § 2350 herein.

[6] Howard v. Albany Ins. Co. 3 Denio (N. Y.) 301, per Bronson, J.; Carroll v. Boston Mutual Ins. Co. 8 Mass. 515; Power v. Ocean Ins. Co. 19 La. 28, 36 Am. Dec. 655. See § 903 herein.

§ 2353. Assignment of marine policy: delivery to assignee.—Though delivery of the policy is not requisite to the validity of the assignment as between the assignor and assignee, yet if the assignee permits the assignor to retain possession, and the latter makes a subsequent assignment thereof to another person who accepts such assignment in good faith with no knowledge of a prior assignment, he will have a superior equity to that of the prior assignee.[7a] In construing the marine insurance act of 1906, of England, which provides that "a marine policy may be assigned by indorsement thereon, or in other customary manner" it is declared that what is a customary method of assignment is a matter of evidence and quære whether an assignment of a policy of marine insurance by mere delivery was a customary method of assignment. The court, per Hamilton, J., considers the statements in the several editions of Arnould on Marine Insurance and concludes: "I am not satisfied in the present case, in the absence of evidence, that it is now, within the words of the marine insurance act, a customary manner of assigning a marine policy simply by handing it over." [8]

§ 2354. Notice of assignment of marine policy.—It is not necessary to render the assignment valid that notice thereof should be given to the insurer. The assignee should, however, for the better security of his own interests, and to prevent any set-off of claims against the assignor accruing subsequently to the assignment, notify the underwriters of the assignment to him. Notice being given, it is held that the rights of the assignee cannot in any way be prejudiced or defeated by subsequent acts of the assignor, and no set-off of any claims accruing prior thereto will be allowed where the underwriter has failed to give notice thereof to the assignee.[9] And where notice has been given, any subsequent release by the assignor will not be binding upon the assignee,[10] nor will payment

[7] 1 Phillips on Ins. (3d ed.) 64.

[7a] Wells v. Archer, 10 Serg. & R. (Pa.) 412, 13 Am. Dec. 682.

[8] Baker v. Adam, 102 L. T. Rep. 248, 15 Ann. Cas. 227, 11 Asp. M. C. 368.

[9] Winchester v. Hackley, 2 Cranch (6 U. S.) 342, 2 L. ed. 299; Mandeville v. Welch, 1 Wheat. (14 U. S.) 233, 4 L. ed. 79, 5 Wheat. (18 U. S.) 277, 5 L. ed. 87; Lyon v. Summers, 7 Conn. 399; Jones v. Witter, 13 Mass. 304; Johnson v. Bloodgood, 1 Johns. Cas. (N. Y.) 51; Weston v. Barker, 12 Johns. (N. Y.) 276. But see Wiggin v. American Ins. Co. 18 Pick. (35 Mass.) 145, 158, 29 Am. Dec. 576.

[10] Andrews v. Beecker, 1 Johns. Cas. (N. Y.) 411; Martin v. Hawks, 15 Johns. Cas. (N. Y.) 405.

to the assignor discharge the insurer.[11] The defense of nondisclosure of material facts as to over-insurances on disbursements by the original assured may be availed of as against a bona fide assignee, for value without notice.[12]

§ 2355. Prohibition in marine policy as to assignment.—Though the assignment of a marine policy without the consent of the company is valid at common law, yet if the policy contains a provision forbidding assignment, and declaring that it shall be void if assigned, such a provision, like any other agreement or stipulation of the contract, is valid, and will be binding.[13] The deposit of the policy as collateral has, however, been held not to be in violation of such a provision where no actual assignment is made.[14] A provision in a policy forbidding assignment of the vessel does not prevent an assignment of the policy.[15]

§ 2356. Rights of insurers to set-off against assignee.—An assignment of a policy assented to by the insurers by a memorandum reserving to themselves all rights expressed therein "regarding premium notes, debts," etc., where by the terms of the policy such assent is made necessary to an assignment, entitles the insurers to deduct from a loss payable to the assignee all premium notes and other debts then due them from the assignor, which according to the provisions of the policy they might have deducted if there had been no assignment.[16] Where there has been an equitable assignment of a right to the proceeds in a policy of insurance, the insurer is, as a general rule, entitled to set off all claims due from insured, and which he might have been entitled to set off against him if there had been no assignment. If, however, the insurer is called upon as to any claims against the insured, and does not disclose them, he is held estopped from claiming a set-off based on any such claims thereafter.[17] If the assured assigns his rights under the [11] Wardell v. Eden, 2 Johns. Cas. (N. Y.) 258.

[12] Pickersgill & Sons' Ltd. v. London & Provincial Marine & General Ins. Co. Ltd. [1912] 3 K. B. 614, 107 L. T. 305, 82 L. J. K. B. 130, 18 Com. Cas. 1, 57 S. J. 11, 28 T. L. R. 591; marine insurance act 1906 (6 Edw. VII. c. 41) sec. 50(2); Butterworth's Twentieth Century Stat. (1900–1909) p. 411.

[13] Lazarus v. Commonwealth Ins. Co. 5 Pick. (22 Mass.) 76.

[14] Hitchcock v. Northwestern Ins. Co. 26 N. Y. 68; Insurance Co. of Pennsylvania v. Phœnix Ins. Co. 71 Pa. St. 31.

[15] Alexander v. Campbell, 41 L. J. Ch. 478, 27 L. T. N. S. 417.

[16] Wiggin v. Suffolk Ins. Co. 18 Pick. (35 Mass.) 145, 29 Am. Dec. 576; Wiggin v. American Ins. Co. 18 Pick. (35 Mass.) 158. As to set-off generally, see §§ 3736, 3737 herein.

[17] Baltimore Ins. Co. v. McFadon, 4 Har. & J. (Md.) 31; Rousett v. Insurance Co. of North America, 1 Binn. (Pa.) 429; Gourdon v. Insurance Co. of North America, 1 Binn. (Pa.) 430, 3 Yeates (Pa.) 327.

policy after a loss, the assignee of the claim takes it subject to the rights of setoff by the company of claims against the assignor.[18]

§ 2357. What constitutes assignment: cases generally.—Where the policy has been assigned, and the assignment forwarded to the office of the company and accepted by it, a copy being kept filed at the office and the original returned and attached to the policy, and notice sent to the assignee of the assignment, this is held to vest the title in the assignee. A delivery to a third person to hold for the assignee will be sufficient, as such a delivery devests the assignor of such possession. It is not necessary to deliver the policy to the assignee or donee.[19] Under a clause in a policy providing that it shall be void, in case of suicide, unless it be in the hands of a bona fide assignee, it has been held that a deposit with a letter agreeing to assign will constitute a valid assignment.[20] An assignee of a life policy who reassigns a portion thereof to the insured, to whom he delivers the policy with the assignment attached thereto in such a manner that it can be easily removed, cannot recover the insurance, as against a bona fide assignee of a paid-up insurance issued by the company, on the surrender of the policy without notice of the former assignment.[1]

§ 2358. What is not an assignment: cases generally.—A delivery of a policy to an attorney after a loss, with the instructions to collect and apply the proceeds to the payment of a debt due to a third person from the insured, is not an assignment of the policy to the creditors.[2] The giving of a chattel mortgage is not an assignment of the policy, and is not in violation of a condition that the policy shall not be assigned without the consent of the company.[3] It has been held that an unexecuted parol or written agreement to assign does not constitute an assignment of the policy,[4] nor does a mere declaration in a letter where no delivery of the policy has been made.[5] An alienation of the property does not operate as an assignment of the policy,[6] though [18] Archer v. Merchants' & Manufacturers' Ins. Co. 43 Mo. 434.

[19] Hurlburt v. Hurlburt, 49 Hun (N. Y.) 189, 1 N. Y. Supp. 854.

[20] In re Styan, 1 Phill. Ch. 105. See also Moore v. Woolsey, 4 El. & B. 243, 3 C. L. R. 207, 24 L. J. Q. B. 40, 1 Jur. (N. S.) 468, 3 W. R. 66, s. c. 28 Eng. L. & Eq. 248; Cook v. Black, 1 Hare, 390, 11 L. J. Ch. 268, 6 Jur. 164.

[1] Bridge v. Wheeler, 152 Mass. 343, 25 N. E. 612.

[2] Altman v. McConnell, 34 Fed. 724.

[3] Prows v. Ohio Ins. Co. 2 Cinc. R. (Ohio) 14, 13 Ohio Dec. 739.

[4] Smith v. Monmouth Mutual Fire Ins. Co. 50 Me. 96; Cromwell v. Brooklyn Fire Ins. Co. 39 Barb. (N. Y.) 227, aff'd 44 N. Y. 42, 4 Am. Rep. 641.

[5] In re Webb's Estate, 49 Cal. 542.

[6] Phillips v. Merrimack Mutual Fire Ins. Co. 10 Cush. (64 Mass.) 350.

coupled with an agreement to assign.[7] The execution of an assignment, which is to be delivered only after the company has given its assent, which the policy requires does not operate as an assignment so as to in any way affect the rights of the parties.[8] Where an executor of an estate placed a policy of insurance on his own life among other papers of the estate in a box, together with a writing stating that the policy was as collateral for a deficiency due from him to the estate, and retained the box and papers in his possession, and upon the trial testified that he thus deposited the policy so that in case he died the estate might receive the benefit of the security, it was held that this did not constitute an assignment to the estate, or give it any lien which would defeat the rights of a creditor.[9] It has been held that where the policy does not expressly provide to the contrary, the owner of insured goods which are in transit may give the carrier the benefit of his policy, and that this action on his part will not be in violation of a provision in the policy forbidding a sale, assignment, pledge, or transfer of interest.[10]

[7] Pierce v. Nashua Fire Ins. Co. 50 N. H. 297, 9 Am. Rep. 235.

[8] Smith v. Monmouth Mutual Fire Ins. Co. 50 Me. 96.

[9] Falk v. James, 49 N. J. Eq. 484, 23 Atl. 813.

[10] Jackson County v. Boylston Mutual Ins. Co. 139 Mass. 508, 52 Am. Rep. 728.

CHAPTER LXVI.

CHANGE OF VOYAGE—DEVIATION—LIBERTY CLAUSES.

§ 2365. Description of the voyage.
§ 2366. Distinction between voyage of ship and voyage insured.
§ 2367. Where course of voyage insured is not fixed by mercantile usage.
§ 2368. Determination as to which of two routes is usual one: case of several routes.
§ 2369. Deviation defined
§ 2370. Effect of deviation and basis of underwriter's discharge.
§ 2371. Insurer liable for prior loss.
§ 2372. Temporary deviation and return to course prior to loss.
§ 2373. Same subject: certain class of cases distinguishable.
§ 2374. Time policy: navigation limited.
§ 2375. Intention to deviate: change of voyage.
§ 2376. Abandonment of voyage: peril not insured against.
§ 2377. Effect of intention fixed at or after sailing to change destination.
§ 2378. Voyage shortened.
§ 2379. Voyage "at and from" port or ports.
§ 2380. Preliminary voyage: completing loading at different ports.
§ 2381. Alternative ports of destination.
§ 2382. The word "thence" from port or ports of discharge in two specified localities will cover either locality.
§ 2383. Election of ports: specified or geographical order of visiting ports of discharge.
§ 2384. Ports of discharge: revisiting or returning to port.
§ 2385. Returning to terminus a quo for clearance.
§ 2386. "near open port" refers to geographical order.
§ 2387. To an island and a market.
§ 2388. To a port in an island or district, thence to a port of advice or discharge.
§ 2389. Vessel captured and carried out of her course: false papers.
§ 2390. Deviation to supply or repair defect in fitting for original voyage.
§ 2390a. Placing vessel in dry-dock without maritime necessity.
§ 2391. Reshipment of goods on the voyage not of itself a deviation under liberty to reship.
§ 2392. Transshipment.

§ 2393. Liberty of port and places: purposes of voyage.
§ 2394. Distinction between purposes of voyage and acts done to insure success of adventure.
§ 2395. When trading, etc., at port may be allowed, although not in furtherance of adventure.
§ 2396. Liberty of ports: course of voyage: change of voyage.
§ 2397. Liberty of ports: trading, discharging, or taking in cargo.
§ 2398. Liberty of ports and to tow and assist vessels.
§ 2399. Liberty to touch and stay or of port or ports may be limited by other words in policy.
§ 2400. Prohibited ports or waters: restricted waters.
§ 2401. Liberty of ports where employment of ship is limited by the policy.
§ 2402. Not touching at privileged port.
§ 2403. River navigation: departure from river channel.
§ 2404. River navigation: vessel may make usual stops for landing and loading goods, etc.
§ 2404a. Vessel constructed for river navigation: trial trips: delay: usual course of voyage.
§ 2405. Masters and mariners: negligence or mismanagement: remote cause.
§ 2406. Departure from course through ignorance of master.
§ 2407. Master's judgment and discretion.
§ 2408. Instructions to master: generally.
§ 2409. Departure from route to avoid seizure in pursuance of instructions.
§ 2410. Liberty of ports for orders: revisiting port.
§ 2411. Visiting port for information or orders.
§ 2412. Delay or departure from route for political information.
§ 2413. Delay to await orders as to port of discharge under permission in policy.
§ 2414. Instructions to deviate: whether must be disclosed.
§ 2415. Whether an act be deviation, change of voyage, or barratry.
§ 2416. Vessel forced to deviate by barratrous acts.
§ 2417. What justifies deviation generally: statutory or Code provisions.
§ 2417. Agreement or clause permitting deviation: "due notice" of deviation.
§ 2418. Effect of usage and exigencies of trade.
§ 2419. Necessity for repairs.
§ 2420. Stress of weather: port of necessity.
§ 2421. Stress of weather: vessel need not return to point whence driven.
§ 2422. Compulsory delay or deviation by superior authority.
§ 2423. Turned away: blockade.
§ 2424. Compulsory delay or deviation by acts of crew.

§ 2425. Departure from route or delay to save life or property.
§ 2426. Delay at port or place or in prosecuting voyage.
§ 2427. Delay for towing vessel.
§ 2428. Vessel turned away, and delay in port which she has entered.
§ 2429. Departure from route or delay to avoid danger, cruisers, or capture.
§ 2430. Vessel delayed by ice.
§ 2431. Deviation to comply with warranty.
§ 2432. Departure from course or delay to seek protection of convoy.
§ 2433. Right to convoy prize under liberty clauses to cruise, capture, etc.
§ 2434. Deviation to recapture vessel.
§ 2435. Letter of marque: cruising and making prizes.
§ 2436. Instructions as to cruising.
§ 2437. Understood purpose for which letters of marque taken is important.
§ 2438. Liberty clauses to cruise, capture, etc.: construction.
§ 2439. Carrying letters of marque no deviation in itself.
§ 2440. Liberty clauses to cruise, capture, etc., for designated time.
§ 2441. Whether the peril which will justify a deviation must be one insured against.
§ 2442. Loss need not be connected with deviation.
§ 2443. Whether any exception exists to last rule.
§ 2444. Waiver of deviation.
§ 2445. Deviation: acts of third person.

§ 2365. Description of the voyage.—The policy should describe the voyage by termini, or by specifying the extremes or places of beginning and termination, which are the terminus a quo and the terminus ad quem; the former being the place whence the ship is to depart, and the latter the place where she is to end the risk and discharge. In time policies the two extremes of the risk are designated by time when the risk attaches and terminates, and this is true whether the risk be on ship or goods. If a deviation under a voyage policy is intended, it should be provided for by apt and proper words. Sometimes the policy specifically prescribes the course of the voyage, which precludes following any other course, even though it be the usual one established by usage.[11] Although the fact that specific termini and certain intermediate ports are mentioned, this does not preclude stopping at intermediate ports other than those mentioned where such stopping is by the usage of trade usually permitted.[12] An insurance "from" a port must be referred to a sailing therefrom; while under a policy "at and from" the risk attaches in port. This form is peculiarly applicable to risks when effecting a policy from an outport, and is adopted at a home port when it is desired to protect the ship in port. The description of the voyage depends, however, largely upon the character of the risk and the voyage. It may be a direct voyage from port to port, or may consist of several passages, or be a trading voyage, or a liberty to call at intermediate ports may be given, or certain ports may be prohibited, or it may be an entire voyage out and home, although there are separate passages. We have, however, fully considered these points elsewhere under the several heads, to which they may be appropriately referred. The purpose for which a voyage is to be conducted, whether as a trading, fishing, or freighting voyage, is often mentioned in the policy. But this designation cannot vary or extend a description, route, or termini of the voyage when definitely specified in the policy, except some usage connected with the particular trade or adventure justifies such change.[13] In certain cases the description of the voyage must be construed with reference to the extent of port or ports and place or places designated, and also with reference to the sense or meaning which certain places have acquired by usage, which is their commercial sense or meaning, as opposed to their geographical sense.[14] If the course of the vessel as insured and its actual course differ, so that the port of destination is not that agreed upon, there is such a deviation as avoids the insurance, even though loss occurs while the vessel is in the course covered by the policy.[15]

[11] See on this last point, Eliot v. table Marine Ins. Co. 126 Mass. 70, Wilson, 7 Brown Parl. C. 459, 4 30 Am. Rep. 654, per Endicott, J. Brown, P. C. 478; Burgess v. Equi-

§ 2366. Distinction between voyage of ship and voyage insured.—A clear distinction exists between the voyage insured and the voyage of the ship. In voyage policies there are designated extremes, being the terminus a quo and the terminus ad quem. This is the voyage insured. The route that is taken to make this voyage is the voyage of the ship, but the route taken may not be identical with, and may differ from, that required by the voyage insured. It is then, nevertheless, the voyage of the ship, for it is the course actually sailed by the ship. In all voyages insured

[12] See McCall v. Sun Mutual Ins. Co. 66 N. Y. 506.

[13] Burgess v. Equitable Marine Ins. Co. 126 Mass. 70, 30 Am. Rep. 654, per Endicott, J. See Child v. Sun Mutual Ins. Co. 3 Sandf. (N. Y.) 26.

[14] See Robertson v. Clark, 1 Bing. 445, 8 Moore, 622, 2 L. J. (O. S.) C. p. 71. See attachment and duration of risk, §§ 1483 et seq., 1562 et seq. herein.

[15] Atlantic & L. S. Co. v. Empress Assur. Corp. (Rap. Jud. Queb.) 15 C. Sup. 469.

in the absence of usage or contrary stipulation, it is an implied binding condition that the ship will follow that usual and regular course which mercantile usage and custom has fixed upon as the safest, most expeditious, and direct course to the place of destination, except a departure therefrom be warranted by necessity, or there is some permissive stipulation or other justifying excuse. If the departure from the usual prescribed course be not warranted by a reasonable and justifiable cause, the insurer is discharged, for the risk is changed and differs from that assumed under the contract. The assured has no right to substitute a different risk without consent of the insurer.[16]

§ 2367. Where course of voyage insured is not fixed by mercantile usage.—If the course of the voyage insured is not fixed by mercantile usage, the ship would nevertheless, by custom and usage, be obligated to reach the place of destination as soon and as safely as possible by the direct course, without being permitted to stop or deviate therefrom without necessity or justifying excuse;[17] but in such case it would seem that the judgment of a [16] "The Ordonnance distinguishes the route from the voyage. It means to speak of the voyage insured and of the route which is proper to this voyage insured. The route may in several cases be changed or altered without the voyage insured being so, and reciprocally the voyage insured may be entirely broken up, although the vessel does not deviate from the route of the voyage indicated in the policy:" Emerigon on Ins. (Meredith's (ed. 1850) c. xiii. sec. 4, p. 548. "The route is the way that one takes to make the voyage insured: est iter viaggi. . . . The word 'iter' is ordinarily employed . . . to designate the route and direction of the voyage insured, rather than to designate the voyage itself. The captain's duty is to reach the place of his destination as soon and as safely as possible. He is bound to follow the direct course, and to make sail recta navigatione without its being permitted to him to stop without necessity. . . . The general rule then is, that the captain should follow the straight course, the customary route, and the most sure:" Emerigon on Ins. (Meredith's ed. 1850) c. xiii. sec. 5, p. 550. "The voyage insured (viaggium) is a transit at sea from the terminus a quo to the terminus ad quem in a prescribed course of navigation (iter viaggii), which is never set out in any policy, but virtually forms part of all policies, and is as binding upon the parties thereto as though it were minutely detailed. The voyage of the ship (iter navis) is the course of navigation on and in which the ship actually sails:" 1 Arnould on Marine Ins. (Perkins' ed. 1850) 339, *333 et seq.; Id. (Maclachlan's ed. 1887) 365 et seq.: Id. (8th ed. Hart & Simey) sec. 369, p. 486. When the voyage contemplated by a policy is described by the places of beginning and ending, the voyage insured is one which conforms to the course of sailing fixed by mercantile usage between the places: Deering's Annot. Civ. Code Cal. sec. 2692. See Burgess v. Equitable Marine Ins. Co. 126 Mass. 70, 30 Am. Rep. 654, per Endicott, J.; Clason v. Simmonds, 6 Term Rep. 533n, 3 R. R. 260, 9 Eng. Rul. Cas. 384.

[17] See Emerigon on Ins. (Mere-master of ordinary skill and discretion must be relied on to determine what shall be the safest, most natural, direct, advantageous, and expeditious route. While this is not so expressly decided, yet such a rule would be in conformity with that which would permit a master, acting in good faith, in case of necessity to conduct the vessel by the safest and shortest course to her destination, or to a port for necessary repairs, and which makes the controlling consideration the safety of lives and the security of property.[18] The rule above stated is, however, substantially that of the California code.[19]

§ 2368. Determination as to which of two routes is usual one: case of several routes.—In determining which of two routes to the port of destination is the usual one, reference must be had to the fact whether one of the routes has acquired by mercantile usage such an ascendency over the other as to have become the customary route. If it has, the master must follow it, unless necessity or other justifiable cause warrants sailing on the other course.[20] But if neither route has acquired such ascendency, the case would probably come within the rule stated under the last section. If there are several routes to the same destination, with certain advantages and disadvantages to each, dependent upon winds, weather, or other circumstances, the master may choose, there being a custom allowing such election.[1]

§ 2369. Deviation defined.—Deviation is the voluntary departure without reasonable necessity or justifying excuse, from the usual and regular course of the voyage insured, or from the usual or agreed mode of proceeding upon or conducting the same, whereby the risk is varied, irrespective of the fact whether or not it is increased thereby. It may also consist of delay in commencing or proceeding on said voyage.[2] dith's ed. 1850) c. xiii. sec. 5, p. 550, noted in note in last section.

[18] Turner v. Protection Ins. Co. 25 Me. 515, 43 Am. Dec. 294; Wiggin v. Amory, 13 Mass. 118.

[19] Deering's Annot. Civ. Code Cal. sec. 2693.

[20] Brazier v. Clapp, 5 Mass. 1.

[1] 1 Marshall on Ins. (ed. 1810) 203 a, 328, citing and reporting Middlewood v. Blakes, 7 Term Rep. 162, 4 R. R. 405. In this case, however, the question of concealment was involved, as well also as that of whether there was a deviation or change of voyage originally intended. See 2 Duer on Marine Ins. (ed. 1846) 491 et seq. 672; 1 Phillips on Ins. (3d ed.) 319, sec. 582, p. 550. See Talcot v. Marine Ins. Co. 2 Johns. (N. Y.) 130; Reade v. Commercial Ins. Co. 3 Johns. (N. Y.) 352, 3 Am. Dec. 495.

[2] United States.—Seamen's Ins. Co. v. Loring, 1 Mason (U. S. C. C.) 127, Fed. Cas. No. 12,583; Oliver v. Maryland Ins. Co. 7 Cranch (11 U. S.) 487, 3 L. ed. 414; Crousillat v. Ball, 3 Yeates (Pa.), 375, 2 Am. Dec. 375, 4 Dall. (4 U. S.) 294, 1 L. ed. 843.

Louisiana.—Bell v. Western Fire

This definition may be also extended to cover lake and river

Ins. Co. 5 Rob. (La.) 423, 39 Am. Dec. 542.

Massachusetts.—Burgess v. Equitable Marine Ins. Co. 126 Mass. 70, 30 Am. Rep. 654, per Endicott, J.; Coffin v. Newburyport Ins. Co. 9 Mass. 436; Cleveland v. Union Ins. Co. 8 Mass. 308.

Pennsylvania.—Merchants' Ins. Co. v. Algeo, 32 Pa. St. 330.

"Any unnecessary or unexcused departure from the usual course or general mode of carrying on the voyage insured by which the risk is altered, though the original terminus ad quem of the voyage insured is still kept in view:" 1 Arnould on Marine Ins. (Perkins' ed. 1850) 347; *341 et seq. See also 2 Id. (Maclachlan's ed. 1887) 450 et seq.; Id. (8th ed. Hart & Simey) secs. 376 et seq.; 2 Parsons on Marine Ins. (ed. 1868) 1.

"Deviation is a departure from the course of the voyage insured" which conforms to the course of sailing fixed by mercantile usage, or in case there is no usual route, then from that course which a master of ordinary skill and judgment would deem the most natural, direct, and advantageous. "Or an unreasonable delay in pursuing the voyage, or the commencement of an entirely different voyage:" Deering's Annot. Civ. Code Cal. secs. 2692–94.

The marine insurance act of England provides: "There is a deviation from the voyage contemplated by the policy (a) Where the course of the voyage is specifically designated by the policy, and that course is departed from; or (b) Where the course of the voyage is not specifically designated by the policy, but the usual and customary course is departed from." Marine insurance act 1906 (6 Edw. VII. c. 41) sec. 46 (2); Butterworth's Twentieth Century Stats. (1900–1909) p. 409; 15 Chitty's Stats (1902–1907) p. 892.

"The term 'deviation' in the law of shipping has at the present day a varied meaning and wide significance. It was originally employed, no doubt, for the purpose its lexicographical definition implies, namely, to express the wandering or straying of a vessel from the customary course of voyage; but it seems now to comprehend in general every conduct of a ship or other vehicle used in commerce tending to vary or increase the risk incident to a shipment. Thus delay in starting a shipment, when unreasonable or unexcused, came to be regarded as a deviation, not because the vehicle employed departed from the usual route of travel, but because the risk of shipment was changed or increased, and became, in effect, not the same as the one with reference to which the parties contracted. 3 Kent's Com. 315; Coffin v. Marine Ins. Co. 9 Mass. 436; Phillips v. Irving, 49 E. C. L. 325; 9 Eng. Rul. Cas. 396; Mount v. Larkins, 8 Bing. 108, 21 E. C. L. 214. The reason for grafting this meaning upon the word is stated in this last case to be:

"'Because the voyage, commenced after an unreasonable interval of time, would have become a voyage at a different period of the year, at a more advanced age of the ship, and, in short, a different voyage than if it had been prosecuted with proper and ordinary diligence; that is, the risk, would have been altered from that which was intended by all parties when the policy was effected.'

"So also for like reasons towing or being towed was added to the list of acts to which is properly imputable an element of risk not contemplated by the contract, and therefore constituting a deviation. Natchez Ins. Co. v. Stanton, 2 Smedes & M. (Miss.) 340, 41 Am. Dec. 592; Scarmonga v. Stamp, 5 C. P. Div. 295; Crocker v. Jackson, 1 Sp. 141, Fed. Cas. No. 3,398; Stewart v. Tennessee Marine Ins. Co. 1 Humph. (Tenn.) 242. In consonance with the enlargement of the meaning of navigation.[3] It is said, however, that a deviation is an increasing or varying the risks insured against without reasonable cause.[4]

'deviation' in maritime law to meet the exigencies of commerce, it seems a just estimate of its present scope that the supreme court of Ohio made in Wilkins v. Ins. Co. 30 Ohio St. 317, 341, 27 Am. Rep. 455, namely:

"'Strictly speaking a "deviation" originally meant only a departure from the course of the voyage, but now it is always understood in the sense of a material departure from or change in the risk insured against, without just cause'—quoting 2 Parsons, Mar. Ins. p. 1.

"The same broad meaning is recognized and sanctioned in Audenreid v. Mercantile Ins. Co. 60 N. Y. 482, 19 Am. Rep. 204:

"'It (deviation) is not confined to a departure from or going out of the direct or usual course of a voyage; but it comprehends unusual or unnecessary delay or any act of the charterer or his agent which, without necessity or just cause, increases or changes the risk included in the policy.'

"And in Bulkley v. Ins. Co. 2 Paine (U. S.) 82, Fed. Cas. No. 2,-118, Thompson, J., said:

"'The shortness of time or distance of deviation is immaterial if voluntary and without necessity, and not justified by usage.'

"A case of value in this discussion is Amsinck v. American. Ins. Co. 129 Mass. 185, 186, where we find the following statement of the law:

"'Any departure from the route named in the policy to a port or place not named, and any delay in prosecuting the voyage, without necessity or just cause, or any delay at a port named in the policy, for the prosecution of business not connected with the business of the voyage, or any unreasonable delay at such port in prosecuting the business of the voyage, is a deviation. Whether the risk is increased thereby is immaterial. The assured has no right to substitute a different voyage from that which is insured, and can only recover for a loss sustained while the ship is prosecuting the voyage named in the policy; and, if she has deviated prior to the loss, she is not then prosecuting the voyage for which she was insured. Whenever, therefore, she departs from the route, or delays in the prosecution of it, it is incumbent on the assured to show that the departure was caused by necessity, or that the delay at a port named in the policy was reasonable under the circumstances in order to accomplish the objects of the voyage. Burgess v. Equitable Ins. Co. 126 Mass. 70, 30 Am. Rep. 654, and cases cited; African Merchants v. British Ins. Co. L. R. 8 Ex. 154.'

"The significance of the term 'deviation' thus developed has peculiar adaptability and relation to the law of insurance. As applied to the relation of carrier and shipper, shorn of all obligation entailed by reason of insurance of cargo or freight, the term is not applied in so strict a sense as will appear further on in the discussion of this controversy. At least, it would seem that there exists in legal contemplation and consequence a difference between a deviation proper, that is, an unwarranted digression from a fixed and contemplated route, or course, and an unnecessary and inexcusable delay or interruption in forwarding freight from point where received to point of destination." The Indrapura, 171 Fed. 929, 38 Ins. L. J. 1163, 1165,—Wolverton, D. J.

[3] See Jolly v. Ohio Ins. Co. Wright (Ohio) 539; Natchez Ins. Co. v. Stanton, 2 Smedes & M. (10 Miss.) 340, 41 Am. Dec. 592; Herman v. Western Marine & Fire Ins. Co. 13 La. 516.

[4] Bell v. Western Ins. Co. 5 Rob. (La.) 423, 39 Am. Dec. 542. And it was held in this case that if a mar-

So far as such a rule extends the meaning of "deviation" to include increasing the risk, it is not justified by authority, nor consistent with the principles upon which a "deviation" is based. A deviation does not avoid the policy because the risk has been increased, but because the risk or voyage insured is ended or varied by the deviation. It thereby becomes a different risk from that assumed under the contract; a different voyage is substituted, and the assurer is discharged, even though the actual risks are diminished by the deviation.[5]

§ 2370. Effect of deviation and basis of underwriter's discharge.—It is an implied warranty that the vessel shall not deviate. Any voluntary deviation is a change of risk and a departure from the contract, discharging insurers from liability for loss happening after said deviation.[6] The assured is protected by his policy while the vessel pursues the usual and customary route described by mercantile usage, but he must not depart therefrom voluntarily by even the smallest deviation, except necessity or some justifying cause warrant it. If he does, the insurer is released from the time of the deviation. The courts have strictly held the insured to a compliance with this implied warranty. The purpose of the voyage must be had in view, however, and those cases where delay constitutes a deviation generally may be referred to the ship's being in port, or at some place or port to which the ship has been permitted to go in pursuit of the business of the voyage, and if the ship is at a place permitted, the delay will not be a deviation if it is necessary and must have been reasonably contemplated as proper in the prosecution of the business of the voyage. These are general governing principles.[7]

shal of the United States takes possession of a boat under a libel filed, and carries her across the river, and puts her in charge of his deputy, it does not constitute a deviation.

[5] See next section herein.

[6] Schroeder v. Schweizer Lloyd Transport Gesellschaft, 66 Cal. 294.

The marine insurance act of England provides: "Sec. 48. In the case of a voyage policy, the adventure insured must be prosecuted throughout its course with reasonable dispatch, and, if without lawful excuse it is not so prosecuted, the insurer is discharged from liability as from the time when the delay became unreasonable." Marine insurance act 1906 (6 Edw. VII. c. 41) sec. 48; Butterworth's Twentieth Century Stats. (1900–1909) p. 410; 15 Chitty's Stats. (1902–1907) p. 893.

[7] United States.—Columbian Ins. Co. v. Catlett, 12 Wheat. (25 U. S.) 383; Martin v. Delaware Ins. Co. 2 Wash. (U. S. C. C.) 254, Fed. Cas. No. 9,161.

Massachusetts.—Burgess v. Equitable Marine Ins. Co. 126 Mass. 70, 30 Am. Dec. 664, per Endicott, J.; Dodge v. Essex Ins. Co. 12 Gray (78 Mass.) 65; Wiggin v. Amory, 14 Mass. 1, 7 Am. Dec. 175; Kettel v. Wiggin, 13 Mass. 68; Coffin v. Newburyport Ins. Co. 9 Mass. 436.

Mississippi.—Natchez Ins. Co. v. Stanton, 2 Smedes & M. (10 Miss.) 340, 41 Am. Dec. 592.

In applying the rule that a deviation avoids the contract, there is no distinction between moral and physical necessity in justifying a departure from the usual route of the voyage insured,[8] and in determining whether a departure from the course constitutes a deviation such as vacates the policy, the motives, ends, and consequences of the act enter as a factor in arriving at a determination.[9] The underwriter is not discharged because the risk is increased. It is not material that the risk is rendered greater by the deviation; no importance is attached to the degree of the risk. The point is that the risk is different. Its nature is altered by the deviation. It is an attempt to substitute another agreement than that undertaken by the contract, and the insurer is released the moment the deviation takes place, and this rule applies without regard to the shortness of time occupied by the deviation, nor does the distance sailed off the usual course affect the contract. The only question is whether the deviation be voluntary or justifiable.[10] So the discharge of underwriters from lia-

New York.—Fernandez v. Great Western Ins. Co. 48 N. Y. 571, 8 Am. Rep. 571; Robertson v. Columbian Ins. Co. 8 Johns. (N. Y.) 491.

Ohio.—Jolly v. Ohio Ins. Co. Wright (Ohio) 539.

Pennsylvania. — Merchants' Ins. Co. v. Algeo, 32 Pa. St. 330.

England.—Brown v. Tayleur, 4 Ad. & E. 241, 5 N. & M. 472, 1 H. & Walms, 578, 5 L. J. K. B. 57; Williams v. Shee, 3 Camp. 469, 14 R. R. 811; Noble v. Kenneway, 2 Doug. 510–13; Middlewood v. Blakes, 7 Term Rep. 162, 4 R. R. 405.

[8] Riggin v. Patapsco Ins. Co. 7 Har. & J. (Md.) 279, 16 Am. Dec. 302. "Between cases of physical and moral necessity as justifications for departure from the course of the voyage, the books make no distinction, and in reason and on principle there is none," per the court.

[9] Enderby v. Fletcher, per Lord Mansfield, cited in 1 Marshall on Ins. (ed. 1810) 205, and 2 Park on Ins. 246; Foster v. Jackson Marine Ins. Co. 1 Edm. Sel. Cas. (N. Y.) 290.

[10] Maryland Ins. Co. v. Le Roy, 7 Cranch (11 U. S.) 26, 3 L. ed. 257, per Johnson, J.; Coffin v. Newburyport Marine Ins. Co. 9 Mass. 436; per Sedgwick, J.; Natchez Ins. Co. v. Stanton, 2 Smedes & M. (10 Miss.) 340, 41 Am. Dec. 592; Winthrop v. Union Ins. Co. 2 Wash. (U. S. C. C.) 7, Fed. Cas. No. 17,901, per Washington, J.; Larabre v. Wilson, 1 Doug. 284, per Lord Mansfield; Hartley v. Buggin, 3 Doug. 39, per Lord Mansfield; Middlewood v. Blakes, 7 Term Rep. 162, 4 R. R. 405, per Ashurst, J., who says: "It was unnecessary to consider whether the risk was or was not materially varied. It is simply on the ground of an alteration of the risk that a deviation discharges the underwriter, so that he may be discharged even where the actual risks are diminished." "Whether the degree or period of the risk is increased is unimportant, as the assured has no right to substitute a different risk:" Burgess v. Equitable Marine Ins. Co. 126 Mass. 70, 30 Am. Rep. 654, per Endicott, J. "It is not the increase of the risk, but the substitution of another risk which governs the case:" Fireman's Ins. Co. v. Lawrence, 14 Johns. (N. Y.) 46–50, per Kent, Ch. "It suffices that there has been a voluntary change of route or voyage in order that the insurers should be discharged from their risks.

bility in case of taking additional cargo, depends, not on the increase of the risk, but wholly on departure from the contract. The consequences of such a deviation are per se a discharge of the underwriters; and the degree of the variation is immaterial.[11]

§ 2371. Insurer liable for prior loss.—The deviation of a vessel does not have a retrospective effect so as to release the insurer from a loss occurring prior thereto. The contract, so far as the deviation is concerned, remains binding upon the assurer up to the moment of deviation.[12]

§ 2372. Temporary deviation and return to course prior to loss.—Where a vessel voluntarily deviates without necessity or justifying excuse, the assurer is none the less released because the vessel subsequently returns to the usual course before a loss occurs, for the risk is not suspended by the temporary deviation; neither the length of time of the deviation nor the distance the vessel goes from the course makes it the less a deviation discharging the underwriter. So Emerigon says the risk is not merely suspended: "the places of the risk once abandoned through a voluntary deviation do not again present themselves to the eyes of the law. A contract once dissolved can be renewed only by the respective consent of the parties. Pothier establishes it as a principle that 'the insurers are not bound for the risks when there is a departure from what is borne by the policy, if it be not with their consent or in case of necessity.' "[13] So a wilful deviation from the usual

From that moment the voyage determined by the contract is definitely broken up:" Emerigon on Ins. (Meredith's ed. 1850) c. xiii. sec. 16, pp. 578, 579.

[11] Maryland Ins. Co. v. LeRoy, 7 Cranch (11 U. S.) 26, 3 L. ed. 257. Cited in:

California.—Schroeder v. Schweizer Lloyd Transport Versicherung's Gesellschaft, 66 Cal. 294, 297, 5 Pac. 478.

Maine.—Turner v. Protection Ins. Co. 25 Me. 515, 524, 43 Am. Dec. 294.

Massachusetts. — Thorndike v. Bordman, 4 Pick. (21 Mass.) 47, 49.

Mississippi.—Natchez Ins. Co. v. Stanton, 2 Smedes & M. 340, 375, 41 Am. Dec. 592.

New Hampshire.—Moore v. Phœnix Ins. Co. 62 N. H. 243, 13 Am. St. Rep. 566.

New York.—Leitch v. Atlantic Mutual Ins. Co. 66 N. Y. 100, 108.

Tennessee.—Stewart v. Tennessee Marine & Fire Ins. Co. 1 Humph. 242, 250.

[12] Richardson v. Maine Fire & Marine Ins. Co. 6 Mass. 102, 4 Am. Dec. 92. "When the master discontinued his voyage, by which is understood an abandonment of it, with an intention in him no further to pursue it, and sailed for his original port, from that time the policy was discharged. For all sea damages happening before, the plaintiffs can recover," per the court. See also Coffin v. Newburyport Ins. Co. 9 Mass. 436, 447; Hare v. Travis, 7 Barn. & C. 14, 15, 9 D. & R. 748, 5 L. J. (O. S.) K. B. 348, 31 R. R. 139; 9 Eng. Rul. Cas. 357; Lee v. Gray, 7 Mass. 349, 352; Green v. Young, 2 Salk. 444, 2 Ld. Raym. 840.

[13] Martin v. Delaware Ins. Co. 2

and customary course of the voyage determines the insurance from the moment of deviation, and it is immaterial from what cause or from what place a subsequent loss happens.[14] Mr. Phillips is of the opinion that if a deviation be temporary without subsequently affecting the risk, the risk is merely suspended, and that the law does not regard such inconsiderable circumstance as the delay of an hour or a deviation of a mile, but is satisfied by reasonable diligence and despatch.[15] Concerning this statement the answer is that the question of deviation does not depend upon whether the risk is increased or not, but whether the risk has been varied and another substituted, and if it did not depend upon such fact, it is difficult to conceive a case where after a temporary deviation everything can be restored to the same order as before, although it might be within the range of possibilities. If the condition has any force, the contract is dissolved by the breach. A different risk has been voluntarily substituted by the assured without the assurer's consent, and without necessity or justifying excuse. Mr. Phillips' statement is also misleading for it may be admitted without changing the rule, that where the question is purely one of delay in port or ports, the law inquires whether the delay is reasonable, and whether it is justified by the nature and purposes of the voyage or the circumstances of the case. A reasonable delay or departure from the course, if warranted by necessity or otherwise legally justified, is not a deviation, but a voluntary departure or delay not justified is declared by a court of high authority to be a deviation avoiding the policy, whether the degree or period of the risk is increased or not, and the discussion of the question of deviation and its effect by the court in this case is of itself impliedly a complete answer in itself of Mr. Phillips' position.[16] We would also add that if in Wash. (U. S. C. C.) 254, Fed. Cas. No. 9,161; Burgess v. Equitable Marine Ins. Co. 126 Mass. 70, 30 Am. Rep. 654; Coffin v. Newburyport Ins. Co. 9 Mass. 449; Emerigon on Ins. (Meredith's ed. 1850) c. 13, sec. 16, pp. 578, 579; Townson v. Guyon, and Fox v. Black, 2 Park Ins. (8th ed.) 620; Beawes, 315, both noted in 1 Marshall on Ins. (ed. 1810) 186; Clason v. Simmonds, cited by Lawrence, J., 6 Term Rep. 533n, 3 R. R. 260, 9 Eng. Rul. Cas. 384.

The marine insurance act of England provides: "Sec. 46 (1) Where a ship, without lawful excuse, deviates from the voyage contemplated by the policy, the insurer is discharged from liability as from the time of deviation, and it is immaterial that the ship may have regained her route before any loss occurs." Marine insurance act 1906 (6 Edw. VII. c. 41) sec. 46(1); Butterworth's Twentieth Cent. Stats. (1900–1909) p. 409; 15 Chitty's Stats. (1902–1907) p. 892.

[14] Elliot v. Wilson, 7 Brown Parl. C. 459.

[15] 1 Phillips on Ins. (3d ed.) 548, sec. 989.

[16] Burgess v. Equitable Marine Ins.

practice a temporary deviation may be allowed by the assurer, yet such practice does not establish the rule of law claimed, unless perhaps the practice is of such a character, and so long continued, as to import under the circumstances the condition that a certain discretion was vested in the master in the particular case.

The above rule, however, does not preclude such reasonable delay in port or ports as may be necessary or justifiable in the proper prosecuting of the business of the voyage, so far as the same may reasonably be presumed to have been contemplated by the parties.[17]

§ 2373. Same subject: certain class of cases distinguishable.—There is, however, a certain class of cases sometimes cited as supporting the doctrine that there may be a temporary deviation, but they differ in principle, and can be readily distinguished from those above noted, and do not impair the force of the rule above given, being time policies or dependent upon special clauses, for "deviation" rests upon the description of the voyage insured, and relates to a departure from the usual course thereof, or mode of conducting the same, or to a delay in commencing or prosecuting said voyage. As an illustration of the class of cases referred to, it is held that an insurance on a tugboat in port and while engaged in towing is not avoided by the going outside of the prescribed limits of the contract, where the boat returns within said limits before loss;[18] and where the contract of insurance on a steamboat stipulates for its continuance for one year, "unless it is terminated or made void by conditions hereinafter expressed," and contains a "permission to navigate the Ohio and Mississippi rivers below Cairo," but contains no condition expressly avoiding the policy for navigating the boat outside of the permitted waters, and the boat makes a trip outside of these permitted waters and returns in safety, but she is afterwards destroyed by fire in no way caused or contributed to by such departure, it is held that the only effect of such deviation was to relieve the insurer from any loss happening outside of the permitted waters, and that said policy was not avoided thereby, and that after temporary departure and return in safety to the permitted waters the insurers were liable for a subsequent loss covered by the policy not caused or contributed to by such deviation.[19] A time policy of insur-

Co. 126 Mass. 70, 30 Am. Rep. 654. —Endicott, J.

[17] Burgess v. Equitable Marine Ins. Co. 126 Mass. 70, 30 Am. Rep. 654, per Endicott, J., and cases cited. See also Tasker v. Cunninghame, 1 Bligh, 87, 100, 20 R. R. 33, per Lord Eldon.

[18] Hennesey v. Manhattan Fire Ins. Co. 28 Hun (N. Y.) 98.

[19] Wilkins v. Tobacco Ins. Co. 30

ance on a ship with permission to navigate all the tributaries of a river except a few named is not avoided by the ships navigating an excepted tributary, so that the insurance company would not be liable for a loss occurring after such tributary had been left, as the exception does not amount to a prohibition or a warranty.[20]

§ 2374. Time policy: navigation limited.—As we have seen, the termini under a purely time policy are fixed by time. The policy limits the vessel to no geographical or prescribed track. It insures no specific voyage within the prescribed term.[1] The nature of the contract, therefore, precludes a deviation, as that term is generally understood. If it covers all voyages within certain limits, there can be no deviation, nor can any particular trip or voyage have the effect of a deviation, unless it be in fraud of the policy,[2] although in case the time is specified the vessel may be limited by the terms of the contract to the navigation of certain waters, or to a trading between certain designated ports or places, and such designation may operate as a limitation of the voyages of the ship within those waters, and not permit of a passage or trading outside the same.[3]

A liberty "to navigate the Atlantic Ocean between Europe and America" includes the right to navigate the Gulf of Mexico, it being a part of the Atlantic Ocean.[4] A liberty given a steamboat insured under a time policy to navigate the Mississippi and such tributaries as are suitable to her class does not permit the towing of vessels, for such business is separate from and not incidental to river navigation by steamboats, and therefore changes the risk assumed by assurers.[5] And if a steamer is insured on time to be used between certain ports by way of a designated bay and its tributaries, it is thereby confined to voyages between the specified places over the designated route.[6] So under a time policy certain waters may be prohibited, and entering such waters is a breach of Ohio St. 317, 27 Am. Rep. 455, overruling 2 Cinc. (Ohio) 204.

[20] Greenleaf v. St. Louis Ins. Co. 37 Mo. 25. And see also Odiorne v. New England Mutual Marine Ins. Co. 101 Mass. 551, 3 Am. Rep. 401, noted in next section; Hathaway v. Sun Mutual Ins. Co. 8 Bosw. (N. Y.) 33; Snow v. Columbian Ins. Co. 48 N. Y. 624, 48 Barb. (N. Y.) 469. See also § 2402 herein; Anon. v. Westmore, 6 Esp. 109.

[1] Bradley v. Maryland Ins. Co. 12 Pet. (37 U. S.) 378, 9 L. ed. 1123.

[2] Keeler v. Fireman's Ins. Co. 3 Hill (N. Y.) 250, per Cowen, J.; Union Ins. Co. v. Tysen, 3 Hill (N. Y.) 118. See Stuart v. Columbian Ins. Co. 2 Cranch (C. C.) 442, Fed. Cas. No. 13,554.

[3] Lippincott v. Louisiana Ins. Co. 2 La. (O. S.) 399, 400.

[4] The Orient, 16 Fed. 916, aff'd 121 U. S. 67, 30 L. ed. 858, 7 Sup. Ct. 821.

[5] Hermann v. Western Marine & Fire Ins. Co. 13 La. (O. S.) 516.

[6] Dallam v. Insurance Co. 6 Phila. (Pa.) 15. See Commonwealth Ins. Co. v. Cropper, 21 Md. 311.

the condition, although the insurers are liable in such case for loss occasioned prior thereto.[7] So where a policy on plaintiff's vessel contained the following clause, "Prohibited from the river and gulf of St. Lawrence, Northumberland Straits, or Cape Breton, and the Black Sea," between specified dates, and the vessel was in one of the prohibited ports soon after the insurance was effected, and was lost at sea many months afterward, it was held that the implied warranty had been broken, and plaintiff could not recover.[8] But where a vessel is insured from Boston to all ports and places on the globe and until her return to Boston, for a period not exceeding two years, no deviation arises from the fact that the vessel arrives in Boston Bay within two years and puts into Salem, and is damaged while there undergoing repairs.[9]

§ 2375. Intention to deviate: change of voyage.—There is, as we have noted, a distinction between deviation and a change of voyage.[10] If a mere intention to deviate is abandoned, and the master holds to the usual course of the voyage insured, the underwriters are not discharged. A mere intention to deviate, or even instructions to deviate where the intention is not carried into effect, does not release the insurer. The policy nevertheless continues in force until the deviation be once begun; that is, until the ship reaches the dividing point.[11] If the voyage is commenced under

[7] Bearns v. Columbian Ins. Co. 48 Barb. (N. Y.) 445.

[8] Odiorne v. New England Mutual Ins. Co. 101 Mass. 551, 3 Am. Rep. 401.

[9] Ellery v. New England Ins. Co. 8 Pick. (25 Mass.) 14.

[10] § 1488 herein.

The marine insurance act of England provides: "sec. 45 (1) Where, after the commencement of the risk, the destination of the ship is voluntarily changed from the destination contemplated by the policy, there is said to be a change of voyage. (2) Unless the policy otherwise provides, where there is a change of voyage, the insurer is discharged from liability as from the time of change, that is to say, as from the time when the determination to change it is manifested; and it is immaterial that the ship may not in fact have left the course of voyage contemplated by the policy when the loss occurs." Marine insurance act 1906 (6 Edw. VII. c. 41) sec. 45; Butterworth's Twentieth Century Stats. (1900–1909) p. 409; 15 Chitty's Stats. (1902–1907) p. 892.

[11] United States. — Maryland Ins. Co. v. Woods, 6 Cranch (10 U. S.) 29, 3 L. ed. 143.

Massachusetts. — Lee v. Gray, 7 Mass. 349.

New York.—Arnold v. Pacific Mutual Ins. Co. 78 N. Y. 7; Henshaw v. Marine Ins. Co. 2 Caines (N. Y.) 274.

South Carolina.—M'Fee v. South Carolina Ins. Co. 2 McCord (S. C.) 503, 13 Am. Dec. 757.

England.—Thellusson v. Fergusson, 1 Doug. 361; Kewley v. Ryan, 2 H. Black. 343, 3 R. R. 408; Heselton v. Allnutt, 1 Maule & S. 46; Foster v. Wilmer, 2 Str. 1249; Hare v. Travis, 7 Barn. & C. 14, 5 L. J. K. B. 348, 9 D. & R. 748, 31 R. R. 139, 9 Eng. Rul. Cas. 357; Emerigon on Ins. (Meredith's ed. 1850) c. 13, sec. 14, pp. 574 et seq.

An intended deviation will not a fluctuating purpose to deviate if certain facts shall be found to exist, the insurers are liable for a loss before actual deviation; as where the master's orders were to go to a certain port for information and she was captured before the dividing line was reached.[12] So the master's intention to put into an intermediate port, the terminus ad quem being kept in view, is merely an intention to deviate, and is not a change of voyage.[13] And if the master intends to deviate by going to a certain port, but is forced to put into such port by necessity this is not a deviation.[14]

If the vessel sails to another destination than that specified at the terminus ad quem of the voyage insured, or if in the execution of an original intention the captain or master ceases to pursue the usual course, and abandons or loses sight of such original destination, or if it appears by the vessel's papers that a different voyage was had in view from the beginning, and the ship is lost before the dividing point is reached, these are cases of a change of voyage, and not merely of intended deviation, and the insurance is void from the time the purpose is definitely formed to change the voyage. The general test is, whether the original destination is still kept in view or lost sight of; if the latter, the identity of the voyage is gone.[15] If a vessel sails to a port within the policy with intent to go to a port not within the policy in case the former should be blockaded, this is not a deviation.[16] avoid a policy until the deviation becomes actual. Marine Ins. Co. v. Tucker, 3 Cranch (7 U. S.) 357, 2 L. ed. 466. Cited in Thames & Mersey Marine Ins. Co. v. O'Connell, 68 Fed. 150, 154, 29 C. C. A. 624, 627, 56 U. S. App. 676; Bearns v. Columbian Ins. Co. 48 Barb. (N. Y.) 445, 453; Lawrence v. Ocean Ins. Co. 11 Johns. (N. Y.) 241, 261; Snow v. Columbian Ins. Co. 48 N. Y. 624, 630, 8 Am. Rep. 578. Distinguished in Merrill v. Boylston Fire & Marine Ins. Co. 3 Allen (85 Mass.) 247, 252.

The marine insurance act of England provides: "The intention to deviate is immaterial; there must be a deviation in fact to discharge the insurer from his liability under the contract." Marine insurance act 1906 (6 Edw. VII. c. 41, sec. 46 (3); Butterworth's Twentieth Century Stats. (1900–1909) p. 409; 15 Chitty's Stats. (1902–1907) p. 892.

[12] Heselton v. Allnutt, 1 Maule & S. 46.

[13] Hobart v. Norton, 8 Pick. (25 Mass.) 159. See Henshaw v. Marine Ins. Co. 2 Caines (N. Y.) 274; Silva v. Low, 1 Johns. (N. Y.) 184.

[14] Hobart v. Norton, 8 Pick. (25 Mass.) 159.

[15] New York Firemen's Ins. Co. v. Lawrence, 14 Johns. (N. Y.) 46; Henshaw v. Marine Ins. Co. 2 Caines (N. Y.) 274; Silva v. Low, 1 Johns. (N. Y.) 184, criticized in 1 Phillips on Ins. (3d ed.) 558, sec. 1001; Merchants' Ins. Co. v. Algeo, 32 Pa. St. 330; Wooldridge v. Boydell, 1 Doug. 16 a, per Lord Mansfield; Emerigon on Ins. (Meredith's ed. 1850) c. 13, sec. 14, pp. 574 et seq. See marine insurance act of England, under first note to this section.

[16] Maryland Ins. Co. v. Woods, 6 Cranch (10 U. S.) 29, 3 L. ed. 143 (cited in Bearns v. Columbian Ins.

It is apparent, therefore, that if the ship in a voyage "from" sails on an entirely different voyage from that insured, the risk never attaches, whatever may be the intention, and assured in such case would not be aided by the fact that the intention to abandon, so manifested, is changed, and the ship sails thereafter into the usual route of the voyage insured, and then proceeds to the destination designated in the policy. But where the intention at the time of sailing is to deviate at some future time from the usual route, and the ship sails on the voyage insured and pursues the customary course, keeping in view the terminus ad quem specified, the insurance, having attached, remains in force until there is a departure from said course, or, in the usual words, until the dividing point is reached. Again, a policy may be "at and from," but a delay in port in preparation for a different voyage and the taking of a cargo for a different destination substitutes another risk which the assurers did not assume, and they are therefore discharged.[17]

In determining, however, whether at the time of loss there is an intent definitely formed whereby the terminus ad quem is definitely lost sight of or abandoned, the circumstances are to be taken as evidence, and undoubtedly there must be clearer evidence than a mere meditated change of voyage. While the intention is manifested by the acts of the insured or his authorized agent

Co. 48 Barb. (N. Y.) 445, 453); M'Fee v. Insurance Co. 2 McCord (S. C.) 503, 13 Am. Dec. 757; Coffin v. Newburyport Ins. Co. 9 Mass. 436; Winter v. Delaware Ins. Co. 30 Pa. St. 334.

[17] The above illustrations, as well as others, are supported by the following authorities:

United States.—Marine Ins. Co. v. Tucker, 3 Cranch (7 U. S.) 357, 2 L. ed. 466.

Massachusetts.—Stocker v. Harris, 3 Mass. 409; Merrill v. Boylston Fire & Marine Ins. Co. 3 Allen (85 Mass.) 247.

New York.—New York Firemen's Ins. Co. v. Lawrence, 14 Johns. (N. Y.) 46; Lawrence v. Ocean Ins. Co. 11 Johns. (N. Y.) 241; Forbes v. Church, 3 Johns. Cas. (N. Y.) 159; Henshaw v. Marine Ins. Co. 2 Caines (N. Y.) 274.

Pennsylvania. — Winter v. Delaware Mutual Ins. Co. 30 Pa. St. 334.

Virginia. — Marine Ins. Co. v. Stras, 1 Munf. (Va.) 408.

England.—Tasker v. Cunningham, 1 Bligh, 87, 20 R. R. 33, per Lord Eldon; Way v. Modigliani, 2 Term Rep. 30, 1 R. R. 412; Sellar v. McVicar, 4 Bos. & P. 23, 1 Bos. & P. (N. R.) 23, 8 R. R. 744; Bottomley v. Bovill, 5 Barn. & C. 210, 7 D. & R. 702, 4 L. J. (O. S.) K. B. 237, 29 R. R. 221; Foster v. Wilmer, 2 Strange, 1249; Hall v. Brown, 2 Dow Parl. C. 367. See also authorities under this section, and § 1488 herein. But Emerigon says Roccus is of opinion that "the voyage is changed so soon as the captain freights his vessel for another place; vel convenerit aspotare alias merces in alium locum. I am not of this opinion, and I consider that if before the departure of the vessel the captain, abandoning his new project, holds to the voyage determined by the policy, all returns into order, and the before the voyage is commenced, the determination of the point is comparatively clear of ascertainment.[18]

§ 2376. Abandonment of voyage: peril not insured against.—It may be stated as a general rule that the insured is not justified in an abandonment of the voyage to avoid a peril not insured against, and in substituting therefor an entirely different one.[19]

§ 2377. Effect of intention fixed at or after sailing to change destination.—In case the ship sails on her voyage and the intention to go to another terminus ad quem is then formed, but the ship is lost before the dividing point is reached, the United States supreme court has held that this is substantially an intention to deviate, and not a change of voyage. In brief, that the assurer is liable until the intention is consummated by some act changing the risk.[20] In a New York case, however, a vessel was insured from New York to Gothenburg, and thence to a port of discharge in the Baltic Sea. The vessel sailed from Gothenburg with the intention of proceeding to St. Petersburg, which had been elected as the port of discharge. She was, however, forced into Carlsand, whence the assured's agent directed her to proceed to Stockholm, which port was reached by a route common to that to St. Petersburg for a part of the way. Before the vessel arrived at the point of divergence she was captured, and it was held that there was an abandonment, and not an intention to deviate.[1] So in a Massachusetts case the insurance was under a time policy on a fishing vessel, wherein she was prohibited from sailing on a voyage from insurance remains in force:" Emerigon on Ins. (Meredith's ed. 1850) c. xiii. sec. 14, p. 575. And see Taylor v. Lowell, 3 Mass. 331, 3 Am. Dec. 441; Merchants' Ins. Co. v. Clapp, 11 Pick. (28 Mass.) 56; Henkle v. Royal Exch. Assur. Co. 1 Ves. 317; Kewley v. Ryan, 2 H. Black. 343; Planchette v. Fletcher, 1 Doug. 251.

[18] See Tasker v. Cunningham, 1 Bligh, 87, 100, 2 L. ed. 466, per Lord Eldon; Marine Ins. Co. v. Tucker, 3 Cranch (7 U. S.) 357, 20 R. R. 33; Marsden v. Reid, 3 East, 572, 7 R. R. 516; Wooldridge v. Boydell. 1 Doug. 16; Hall v. Brown, 2 Dow Parl. C. 367; Silva v. Low, 1 Johns. (N. Y.) 184, criticized as being only a case of intended deviation in 1 Phillips on Ins. (3d ed.) 558, sec. 1001.

[19] Lee v. Gray, 7 Mass. 349. See King v. Delaware Ins. Co. 6 Cranch (20 U. S.) 71, 3 L. ed. 155, aff'd 2 Wash. (U. S. C. C.) 300; Richardson v. Maine Marine & Fire Ins. Co. 6 Mass. 102, 4 Am. Dec. 92.

[20] Marine Ins. Co. v. Tucker, 3 Cranch (7 U. S.) 357, 2 L. ed. 466. See also Winter v. Delaware Mutual S. Ins. Co. 30 Pa. St. 334, 15 L. I. 172, 5 P. L. I. 274.

[1] Firemen's Ins. Co. v. Lawrence, 14 Johns. (N. Y.) 46. Examine Winthrop v. Union Ins. Co. 2 Wash. (U. S. C. C.) 7, Fed. Cas. No. 17,901; Lawrence v. Ocean Ins. Co. 11 Johns. (N. Y.) 241; Silva v. Low, 1 Johns. (N. Y.) 184; Smith v. Steinbach, 2 Caines Cas. (N. Y.) 158, 172; Henshaw v. Marine Ins. Co. 2 Caines (N. Y.) 274; 3 Kent's Commentaries (5th ed.) 317.

beyond E after a certain date. She sailed to E after the date for the purpose of procuring "bait" for a fishing trip, and was lost before reaching E, and the court rested the decision upon the point whether the vessel left G with the intent to proceed beyond E, or merely to go to E, and holding that the assured must show that the ship was not on a prohibited voyage. The court also determined that in this case the word "voyage" meant enterprise.[2] The United States supreme court case first above noted is also opposed to the English rule as stated by Mr. Arnould and Mr. Maclachlan, according to whom, if the assured either before the ship sails had a determination to abandon the original port of destination and fix upon another, the underwriter is thereby discharged in case of loss happening after such purpose becomes fixed, even though the loss occurs while the vessel is on the common route of both voyages, or even under a policy "at" and "from" before she sails from the port of commencement of the risk.[3] The main difficulty in formulating a positive rule arises from the fact that the route to the original and changed destination is over the same course for that part of the voyage on which the vessel is sailing when lost, and before the intention to abandon is consummated by some act. If the question be held to be one of intention merely, there would be some force in the argument that there was room for repentance before the dividing line was reached, whether the intention be to abandon or to deviate, except perhaps where the master is sailing under instructions.[4] If, however, it is clear that from all the circumstances the intention has been definitely fixed to change the destination, the vessel might reasonably be held to be sailing on the voyage to the changed destination, even though the route is over the same course a part of the way. It would seem, therefore, as heretofore stated[5] that it would be a question of evidence whether the terminus ad quem of the original voyage has been so far lost sight of as to constitute a change of voyage.[6]

[2] Friend v. Gloucester, 113 Mass. 326. See also Merrill v. Boylston Fire & Marine Ins. Co. 3 Allen (85 Mass.) 247.

[3] 1 Arnould on Marine Ins. (Perkins' ed. 1850) 357, *351 et seq.; Id. (Maclachlan's ed. 1887) 457–59; Id. (8th ed. Hart & Simey) sec. 385, p. 505, citing Tasker v. Cunningham, 1 Bligh, 87–100, 20 R. R. 33, per Lord Eldon.

[4] See as to instructions to master, Middlewood v. Blakes, 7 Term Rep. 162, 4 R. R. 405, per Lord Kenyon; New York Firemen's Ins. Co. v. Lawrence, 14 Johns. (N. Y.) 46, per Kent, Ch.

[5] § 2375 herein.

[6] See 2 Parsons on Marine Ins. (ed. 1868) 41, who says: "In general, that if the proposed change in the voyage was sufficient in extent, quantity, and importance to make it a change of the whole voyage, then here was an abandonment of the voyage intended, and the substitution of another." Otherwise it is only an intended deviation, and this writer is § 2378. Voyage shortened.—If the assured has commenced the voyage insured, but voluntarily and without necessity or justifying excuse returns to the place of sailing, the insurers would probably be discharged.[7] Mr. Arnould, relying upon Emerigon, says that a mere shortening of the voyage does not avoid the policy where the voyage is not abandoned at the outset by a change of destination, and he adds that where the ship is insured to successive ports, she may terminate the voyage at a nearer port without vitiating the policy, but if the voyage is to a single port, she sails with an intent to go to a nearer, which is done, the contract is avoided.[8]

§ 2379. Voyage "at and from" port or ports.—If a voyage is to commence "at and from" a specified port, with liberty to touch at other ports, such liberty does not permit the assured to begin the adventure at any one of said ports. The voyage must commence at the terminus a quo designated, or at some place that is properly a part thereof, otherwise it will not be the voyage insured. This rule is subject to such exceptions as may arise from usage, or which may exist in case of an island or district with several ports.[9] But if an insurance is on goods "at and from" a designated port, and all or any of the ports in said district, even though said port be out of the usual or direct course between the port named and the port of final destination, going to said port of also inclined to the opinion that sailing with an intention to go to another than the original terminus of the insured voyage, even though the vessel sails over a larger part of the same course, is an abandonment, or change of voyage.

[7] Emerigon on Ins. (Meredith's ed. 1850) c. xiii. sec. 12, p. 571.

[8] 1 Arnould on Marine Ins. (Perkins' ed. 1850) 359, *353; Id. (Maclachlan's ed. 1887) 460. The rule differs somewhat in Mr. Maclachlan's edition from that given in Mr. Perkins' edition, (citing Emerigon on Ins. c. xiii. sec. 12, see Id. [Meredith's ed. 1850] p. 570). See Id. (8th ed. Hart & Simey) secs. 388 et seq., pp. 508 et seq. See Hadkinson v. Robinson, 3 Bos. & P. 388, 7 R. R. 786; Lubbock v. Rowcroft, 5 Esp. 50, 8 R. R. 830; Middlewood v. Blakes, 7 Term Rep. 162, 4 R. R. 405.

[9] Murray v. Columbian Ins. Co. 4 Johns. (N. Y.) 443; Maryland Ins. Co. v. Bossiere, 9 Gill & J. (Md.) 121; Park v. Hammond, 6 Taunt. 495, 4 Camp. 344, 1 Holt, 80, 2 Marsh. 189. As to attachment and duration of risk, see §§ 1483 et seq., 1562 et seq. herein.

"(1) Where the subject-matter is insured by a voyage policy 'at and from' or 'from' a particular place it is not necessary that the ship should be at that place when the contract is concluded, but there is an implied condition that the adventure shall be commenced within a reasonable time, and then if the adventure be not so commenced the insurer may avoid the contract. (2) The implied condition may be negatived by showing that the delay was caused by circumstances known to the insurer before the contract was concluded, or by showing that he waived the condition." Marine insurance act 1906 (6 Edw. VII. c. 41) sec. 42; 2 Butterworth's Twentieth Century Stats. (1900–1909) p. 409; 15 Chitty's Stats. (1902–1907) p. 892.

loading is not a deviation.[10] A policy containing the following clause: "At and from Teneriffe to Havana, and from thence to New York," held, the taking in of a cargo at Havana did not avoid the contract.[11]

§ 2380. Preliminary voyage: completing loading at different ports.—A deviation may arise from a preliminary voyage, as in case where a risk is an indivisible one "at and from" a port where the vessel is lying to another, and there is a departure from the port on a voyage other than that insured. This is illustrated by the following case: A policy of insurance was issued on a vessel undergoing repairs in New York, "at and from" New York to Havana. On the completion of the repairs the vessel went on a trial trip to Elizabethport, sixteen miles distant, to take in coal. She returned to New York and sailed thence to Havana. It was held a deviation so as to avoid the policy.[12] If the risk is to commence from the ship's port of loading under a policy "at and from," it is a deviation for the vessel to go to a different port and there complete her loading commenced at the port designated, unless such second place of loading be within the limits of a port or the first port; as in the case of moving from one pier or wharf at the same port or place, but sailing to a place seven miles distant although in the same bay, is a deviation, though the vessel returns to the port of loading and sails therefrom.[13]

§ 2381. Alternative ports of destination.—If a voyage is described as "at and from" a specified port to ports in the alternative, as A or B, it constitutes a deviation for the vessel to go to both ports, except it be warranted by usage so certain, uniform, and notorious as to raise the presumption that the contract was made in view thereof.[14]

§ 2382. The word "thence" from port or ports of discharge in two specified localities will cover either locality.—If a vessel be insured "at and from" to all or any ports or places in two specified localities, "thence home," the word "thence" will refer to ports or places in either locality, and permit her after she has left the port in one of the specified localities to return a second time to a [10] Bragg v. Anderson, 4 Taunt. 229, 13 R. R. 584; Lambert v. Liddard, 5 Taunt. 480, 1 Marsh. 149, 15 R. R. 557. See §§ 1483 et seq., 1562 et seq. herein.

[11] Hughes v. Union Ins. Co. 8 Wheat. (21 U. S.) 294, 5 L. ed. 620.

[12] Fernandez v. Great Western Ins. Co. 48 N. Y. 571, 8 Am. Rep. 571.

[13] Brown v. Tayleur, 4 Ad. & E. 241, 5 Nev. & M. 472, 1 H. & Walms. 578, 5 L. J. K. B. 57.

[14] Bulkley v. Protection Ins. Co. 2 Paine (U. S. C. C.) 82, Fed. Cas. No. 2,118; Dodge v. Essex Ins. Co. 12 Gray (78 Mass.) 65.

port in the other specified locality, in order to complete her lading for the home voyage, for the word "thence" is of general application.[15]

§ 2383. Election of ports: specified or geographical order of visiting ports of discharge.—If several ports or places are specifically named in the policy, and the assured intends to visit but one of them, that one is at his election. If, however, he purposes to stop at more than one, the ship must go to those intended to be visited in the order specified in the policy, with reference to the route to the ulterior port of destination selected, unless, perhaps, there is a usage to the contrary. This rule does not preclude dropping some of the places specified. If there is no order designated by the policy, then the ports of discharge must be visited in their geographical order as governed by their relative distance from the port of departure, reference also being had to the route to the ulterior port of destination selected, unless the geographical order be controlled and varied by usage, in which case the order established by usage may be followed.[16] Thus in case of an insurance policy to A, thence to C, the vessel may go directly to C, and is not obligated to stop at A.[17]

[15] Ashley v. Pratt, 16 Mees. & W. 471, 17 L. J. Ex. 135, aff'd 1 Exch. 257. See Perkins v. Augusta Banking Ins. Co. 10 Gray (76 Mass.) 312, 71 Am. Dec. 654. Contra, Marine Ins. Co. v. Stras, 1 Munf. (Va.) 408. The rule in the text seems the better one, however.

[16] Hale v. Merchants Mutual Ins. Co. 6 Pick. (23 Mass.) 172; Kane v. Columbian Ins. Co. 2 Johns. (N. Y.) 264; Hunter v. Leathley, 10 Barn. & C. 858, 873, 8 L. J. (O. S.) K. B. 274, aff'd 5 M. & P. 457, 7 Bing. 517, per Tindall, C. J.; Beatson v. Haworth, 6 Term Rep. 531, 3 R. R. 258, 9 Eng. Rul. Cas. 385, and opinion of Lord Ellenborough therein; Marsden v. Reed, 3 East, 517, 7 R. R. 516; Clason v. Simmonds, 6 Term Rep. 533n, 3 R. R. 260, 9 Eng. Rul. Cas. 384; Gardiner v. Senhouse, 3 Taunt. 16, 12 R. R. 573. But see Marine Ins. Co. v. Stras, 1 Munf. (Va.) 408.

The marine insurance act of England provides: "sec. 47 (1) Where several ports of discharge are specified by the policy, the ship may proceed to all of them, but, in the absence of any usage or sufficient cause to the contrary, she must proceed to them, or such of them as she goes to, in the order designated by the policy. If she does not there is a deviation. (2) Where the policy is to 'ports of discharge,' within a given area, which are not named, the ship must, in the absence of any usage or sufficient cause to the contrary, proceed to them, or such of them as she goes to, in their geographical order. If she does not there is a deviation." Marine insurance act 1906 (6 Edw. VII. c. 41) sec. 47; Butterworth's Twentieth Century Stats. (1900–1909) p. 410; 15 Chitty's Stats. 1902–1907) p. 892.

[17] Kane v. Columbian Ins. Co. 2 Johns. (N. Y.) 264, 265. See Stone v. Ocean Marine Ins. Co. of Gothenburg, 1 Exch. Div. 81, 45 L. J. Ex. 361, 34 L. T. 490, 24 W. R. 55, 3 Asp. M. C. 152; Hale v. Merchants Ins. Co. 6 Pick. (23 Mass.) 172.

Cases of the character indicated by this rule are to be distinguished from those where it is evident that the specification of port is descriptive of the limits of the voyage, rather than of the order in which the ports are to be visited.[18] And if the policy be "at and from," with liberty to touch at all or any of a group of islands, the vessel is not obligated to visit them in their geographical order, but may go from island to island for purposes connected with the voyage;[19] unless some one of said islands be elected as the port of discharge.[20] It is not a deviation, however, if the ship be compelled by necessity or other justifying cause to alter the order of visiting ports or places.[1]

§ 2384. Ports of discharge: revisiting or returning to port.[2]—In the absence of an express or implied liberty so to do in the policy, or implied by construction from the character of the voyage or nature of the risk as described in the policy, a ship insured to ports of discharge, and having elected her port of discharge, may not sail backward and forward, nor revisit a port at which she has touched in the direct course of the voyage, or return to one she has passed in proceeding to a port elected as the port of discharge.[3] A return to a port on a voyage, owing to stress of weather, the ultimate destination not being abandoned and the route not being departed from, is not a change of risk releasing the insurers.[4]

Where a vessel was insured from certain loading ports at and to ports and places to discharge freight, it being contemplated that the only deviations would be stoppages at intermediate ports between the last place of landing and that of the terminus, to discharge cargo, and that when the vessel was there safely anchored the risk insured against would be determined, it constitutes a deviation not covered by the policy, in the absence of a subsequent consent by insurer, if the vessel departs from said terminus for the purpose of delivering freight, and is wrecked, although it was intended that she would return.[5]

[18] See Ashley v. Pratt, 16 Mees. & W. 471, 17 L. J. Ex. 135, affirmed 1 Exch. 257, per Denman, J. Examine Commonwealth Ins. Co. v. Cropper, 21 Md. 311.

[19] Metcalf v. Parry, 4 Camp. 125, 15 R. R. 734.

[20] Gairdner v. Senhouse, 3 Taunt. 16, 12 R. R. 573.

[1] 1 Marshall on Ins. (ed. 1810) *191; Driscoll v. Bovil, 1 Bos. & P. 313.

[2] See §§ 2387, 2388 herein.

[3] Gairdner v. Senhouse, 3 Taunt. 16, 12 R. R. 573; Clason v. Simmonds, 6 Term Rep. 533n, 3 R. R. 260; Andrews v. Mellish, 5 Taunt. 496, per Gibbs, C. J., explaining the last case cited; 16 East, 312, 2 Maule & S. 27, 15 East, 4. See also Burgess v. Equitable Marine Ins. Co. 126 Mass. 70, 30 Am. Rep. 654.

[4] Winter v. Delaware Mutual Safety Ins. Co. 30 Pa. 334.

[5] Alaska Banking & Deposit Co. v. Maritime Ins. Co. (U. S. D. C.) 156 Fed. 710.

§ 2385. Returning to terminus a quo for clearance.—If a vessel is insured "at and from" a designated port to an island, thence to a specified port in an island, she may be warranted by usage in returning to the terminus a quo for clearance, where none can be obtained at the island or place of loading, and such act is not a deviation. This was so held in a case of insurance at and from Callao to the Chincha Islands, thence to New York.[6] But where a vessel was insured "at and from" Port Plata to New York, it was held a deviation to go to Susa, from whence the ship would have been obligated to return to Port Plata for clearance, although Susa was a bay or open road distant four leagues east of La Plata, but a part of the district of Port Plata.[7] And it is a deviation for the vessel to go out of her course to obtain sailing papers.[8]

§ 2386. "Near open port" refers to geographical order.—The term "near open port" must be construed with reference to the geographical order of the ports, exclusive of such ports as are closed or which may not be safely entered. But the facility of reaching a more distant port than the one geographically near, by reason of favorable winds or currents, does not of itself make such distant port a "near open port." The construction of this term has arisen under policies giving liberty to proceed to such a port if turned away from the specified destination, and an attempt to make a more distant port when one is nearer, in the sense above stated, constitutes a deviation.[9]

§ 2387. To an Island and a market.—If the vessel is insured to an island in the West Indies and a market, she may sail bona fide from island to island or place to place, backward and forward, in search of a market, and is not compelled to visit them in their geographical order, nor is it a deviation in such case though the vessel revisits or returns to a place.[10]

The master of a vessel insured "to Kingston and market in Jamaica" was ordered when off the east end of the island, if in season to fulfil a contract to deliver goods at Port Maria, to proceed thither, otherwise to put into Kingston. She went to Port Maria and not to Kingston and was lost on her return voyage, [6] Parsons v. Manufacturers' Ins. Co. 16 Gray (82 Mass.) 463; Moxon v. Atkins, 3 Camp. 200, 13 R. R. 789, 13 Eng. Rul. Cas. 590.

[7] Vos v. Robinson, 9 Johns. (N. Y.) 192.

[8] Stocker v. Harris, 3 Mass. 409.

[9] Tenet v. Phœnix Ins. Co. 7 Johns. (N. Y.) 363, cited in 1 Daly 16; Ferguson v. Phœnix Ins. Co. 5 Binn. (Pa.) 544. See Snowden v. Phœnix Ins. Co. 3 Binn. (Pa.) 457.

[10] Houston v. New England Ins. Co. 5 Pick. (22 Mass.) 89; De Blois v. Ocean Ins. Co. 16 Pick. (33 Mass.) 303, 28 Am. Dec. 245; Maxwell v. Robinson, 1 Johns. (N. Y.) 333. See § 2384 herein.

and it was held that there was an inception of the voyage insured, and no deviation.[11]

A vessel insured to a certain port and a market need not stop at said port.[12] In a policy on a vessel, the terms "at and from" an island authorize her to sail from port to port of the island to complete her cargo.[13]

§ 2388. To a port in an Island or district, thence to a port of advice or discharge.—If a vessel is insured to a port in an island or district, thence to a port of advice or discharge, she may not, after visiting a port in said island or district and discharging her cargo, depart to another port therein, obtain a cargo, and proceed thence to a port of discharge within the limits originally specified; such act constitutes a deviation.[14]

§ 2389. Vessel captured and carried out of her course: false papers.—It is said that a deviation may arise from the vessel's being captured and carried out of her course by reason of carrying false papers.[15]

§ 2390. Deviation to supply or repair defect in fitting for original voyage.—It is assumed that the vessel must be seaworthy for her voyage, and if a vessel is not properly fitted for her voyage and sails in such a condition under a policy "from," a deviation to supply such defects is not justifiable, as the ship should have been properly fitted for the voyage at the time of sailing.[16] So where a policy was issued on a codfishing vessel for the voyage from Plymouth to the Banks and back, and, after arriving at the Banks, the vessel got out of bait and put into St. Peters, the nearest practicable port, for a supply, it was held, in the absence of proof of usage, a fatal deviation.[17] Again, a steamboat was insured for a voyage between two ports, with liberty to "touch and stay at any

[11] Houston v. New England Ins. Co. 5 Pick. (22 Mass.) 89.

[12] Houston v. New England Ins. Co. 5 Pick. (22 Mass.) 89.

[13] Dickey v. Baltimore Ins. Co. 7 Cranch (11 U. S.) 327, 3 L. ed. 360. Cited in Equitable Safety Ins. Co. v. Hearne, 20 Wall. (87 U. S.) 488, 490, 22 L. ed. 395; Hearne v. New England Mutual Marine Ins. Co. 3 Cliff. 318, 325, Fed. Cas. No. 6,301.

[14] Hearne v. Marine Ins. Co. 20 Wall. (87 U. S.) 488, 22 L. ed. 395.

[15] Goix v. Low, 1 Johns. (N. Y.) 341, 346, per Kent, J. Examine Maryland Ins. Co. v. Bathurst, 5 Gill & J. (Md.) 159; Livingston v. Maryland Ins. Co. 7 Cranch (11 U. S.) 506, 3 L. ed. 421, per Marshall, C. J.; Galbraith v. Gray, 1 Wash. (U. S. C. C.) 191, 192, Fed. Cas. No. 6,117.

[16] Cruder v. Philadelphia Ins. Co. 2 Wash. (U. S. C. C.) 339, Fed. Cas. No. 3,452; Kettell v. Wiggin, 13 Mass. 68; Copeland v. New England Marine Ins. Co. 2 Met. (43 Mass.) 432, 444; Wolff v. Claggett, 3 Esp. 257, 6 R. R. 830; Forshaw v. Chabert, 3 Brod. & B. 158, 6 J. B. Moore, 369, 23 R. R. 596.

[17] Burgess v. Equitable Marine Ins. Co. 126 Mass. 70, 30 Am. Rep. 54.

ports and places if thereunto obliged by stress of weather or other unavoidable accident." On her voyage she stopped at an intermediate port to repair a defect in her chimney, which existed and which was known to her owners before she left the port of departure. While thus waiting for repairs she was destroyed by a peril insured against, and it was held that the stoppage was such a deviation as to avoid the policy.[18]

But where a vessel was insured from Stockholm to New York, having on board a cargo of sheep for which she had not taken sufficient provender for the voyage, it being understood that she was to touch at Elsinore, where she stopped for convoy and to pay sound dues, and while there, and without delaying the voyage, she obtained sufficient provender, it was held no deviation.[19] There is a question, however, whether a slight defect in the vessel's seaworthiness may not be remedied before loss; so also in cases of a policy "at and from." These points have, however, been discussed fully elsewhere.[20] But it is held no deviation to put into port to unload where the vessel is overloaded,[1] or, having insufficient ballast, to put into the nearest port to remedy the defect.[2]

Such a rule as that first above stated would not, however, be applicable to a case where a port is called at to obtain a pilot according to usage;[3] nor to a case where the vessel runs short of water, and being fairly in need thereof puts into a port to obtain a necessary supply, the vessel having originally been fitted out with a sufficient quantity of water, such as an ordinary voyage of the character of that insured would require;[4] nor where the vessel puts ashore for provisions, being compelled to delay the voyage by head winds;[5] nor would the rule apply to a case where the vessel, having sailed with a sufficient crew for the voyage, but needing two more men for the purposes of fishing, proceeded to another port to complete the fishing crew in accordance with a usage justifying such act, although it was also held that stopping for more men would be a deviation except for the usage;[6] nor to a case where [18] Audenreid v. Mercantile Mutual Ins. Co. 60 N. Y. 482, 19 Am. Rep. 204.

[19] Cormack v. Gladstone, 11 East, 347, 10 R. R. 518.

[20] See §§ 2166, 2181–83 herein.

[1] Weir v. Aberdein, 2 Barn. & Ald. 320, 20 R. R. 450; Chase v. Eagle Ins. Co. 5 Pick. (22 Mass.) 51.

[2] Gilbert v. Redshaw, reported in 1 Marshall on Ins. (ed. 1810) 208. The above were the facts, although the grounds on which this decision rested was a necessity for repairs.

[3] Pouverin v. Louisiana State Ins. Co. 4 Rob. (La.) 234.

[4] Wood v. Plessants, 3 Wash. (U. S. C. C.) 201, Fed. Cas. No. 17,961.

[5] Thomas v. Royal Exch. Assur. Co. 1 Price, 195.

[6] Folsom v. Merchants' Ins. Co. 38 Me. 414; Cruder v. Pennsylvania Ins. Co. 2 Wash. (U. S. C. C.) 339, Fed. Cas. No. 3,452. See § 2166 herein.

all the superior officers of a ship on a long voyage have died;[7] nor to a departure from the route to procure men to supply a deficiency as to the numbers of a crew originally sufficient, brought about by sickness, disability, or death.[8]

§ 2390a. Placing vessel in dry-dock without maritime necessity.—It constitutes a deviation for the owner of a vessel laden with transshipped cargo, covered by marine insurance, to place the vessel, at the port where the cargo was received, in dry dock, without maritime necessity, to have her bottom painted. In such case, where the cargo is lost by fire, through the negligence of the officers and crew, while the vessel is in dry dock, the vessel is liable, unless it is shown affirmatively that the deviation was not the contributory cause, to an assignee of assured, but such recovery must be had on the right of the shipper against the carrier and not by virtue of any contractual relation based upon the contract of insurance, although the governing principle is that the usual and customary course to the port of delivery, or the course agreed upon in the contract must be followed without unnecessary deviation or delay.[9]

§ 2391. Reshipment of goods on the voyage not of itself a deviation under liberty to reship.—The reshipment of goods on the voyage to be carried in another vessel to the port of destination is not of itself a deviation avoiding the policy, where liberty is given by the contract to reship at all times and places. It might be a question, however, whether the point of delay or abandonment of the voyage would not be a defense.[10]

§ 2392. Transshipment.—If a cargo is insured in a voyage direct from one port to another, a transshipment before reaching the port of destination is a deviation, and releases the insurers if they have not contracted with reference thereto, and it is immaterial whether such transshipment is authorized by the bill of lading or not. This rule would, however, be subject to such exceptions as arise in cases of transshipment occasioned by necessity;[11] but the vessel, when compelled to return to her port of lading for repairs, is held justified in unloading her cargo and then shipping

[7] Winthrop v. Union Ins. Co. 2 Wash. (U. S. C. C.) 1, Fed. Cas. No. 11,948.

[8] Wolff v. Claggett. 3 Esp. 257, 6 R. R. 830, per Lord Eldon.

[9] The Indrapura (U. S. D. C.) 171 Fed. 929, 38 Ins. L. J. 1163. This case is also noteworthy for its thorough discussion of the points as to a shipowner's duty, liability and his statutory exemptions.

[10] Fletcher v. St. Louis Mutual Ins. Co. 18 Mo. 193.

[11] Schroeder v. Schweitzer Lloyd Transport Gesellschaft, 66 Cal. 294, 60 Cal. 467, 44 Am. Rep. 61; Settle v. St. Louis Perpetual Ins. Co. 7 Mo. 379; Bold v. Rotheram, 8 Q. B.

it by land to another port, not on the direct course for passage, and going there subsequently to take it.[12]

§ 2393. Liberty of port and places: purposes of voyage.—The clauses under which a liberty to stop at or use ports and places is given are various, but the scope of the permission depends not so much upon the construction of the clauses themselves as upon the purposes of the voyage, and, as a general rule, the permission in a policy to go to, or to touch at, or to call at, or to touch and stay at, certain ports and places must be construed with reference to the real objects and purposes of the voyage contemplated, and accordingly these clauses will not be literally construed and confined to the exact meaning of the terms used, irrespective of what must have been clearly intended as within the scope and purpose of that particular voyage covered by that policy.[13]

So, where a policy upon a whaling voyage permitted a vessel "to stop at all ports and places for trade, refreshment, and recruits," it appeared that taking sea elephants was within the scope of such a voyage, and it was held that the clause did not restrict her from going into bays and along coasts and islands and staying there to take them.[14] So a liberty to proceed to certain islands for salt does not justify the vessel, after she has arrived at one of the said islands where salt may be obtained, in going thence to another island for the purpose of earning freight, even though she would have been compelled to wait four or five weeks for her turn in taking a cargo of salt, and by undertaking the voyage for freight she would be enabled to expedite her original voyage.[15] Although 781, 797, 15 L. J. Q. B. 274, 1 Car. & K. 360, 10 Jur. 875; Salisbury v. St. Louis Ins. Co. 23 Mo. 553, 66 Am. Dec. 687. See §§ 1594–96, 1769 herein.

[12] Wiggin v. Amory, 13 Mass. 118.

[13] Columbian Ins. Co. v. Cattlett, 12 Wheat. (25 U. S.) 383, 6 L. ed. 664; Seccomb v. Provincial Ins. Co. 10 Allen (92 Mass.) 305; Child v. Sun Mutual Ins. Co. 3 Sand. (N. Y.) 26; Metcalf v. Parry, 4 Camp. 125, 15 R. R. 734; Williams v. Shee, 3 Camp. 469, 14 R. R. 811, per Lord Ellenborough; Phillips v. Irving, 7 Man. & G. 325, 8 Scott (N. R.) 3, 13 L. J. C. P. 145, 9 Eng. Rul. Cas. 396; Bottomley v. Bovill, 5 Barn. & C. 210, 7 Dowl. & R. 702, 4 L. J. (O. S.) K. B. 237, 29 R. R. 221; Urquhart v. Barnard, 1 Taunt. 450, 10 R. R. 574; Noble v. Kenneway, 2 Doug. 510–13; Hammond v. Reid, 4 Barn. & Ald. 72, 22 R. R. 629, 9 Eng. Rul. Cas. 372. See also United States v. Shearman, Pet. (U. S. C. C.) 98, Fed. Cas. No. 16,012; Perkins v. Augusta, etc., Ins. Co. 10 Gray (76 Mass.) 312, 71 Am. Dec. 654; Burgess v. Equitable Marine Ins. Co. 126 Mass. 70, 30 Am. Rep. 654, per Endicott, J.; Chase v. Eagle Ins. Co. 5 Pick. (22 Mass.) 51; Thorndike v. Boardman, 6 Pick. (26 Mass.) 375.

[14] Child v. Sun Mutual Ins. Co. 3 Sand. (N. Y.) 26.

[15] Kettell v. Wiggin, 13 Mass. 68. Mr. Phillips, however, criticizes this case as one for the jury rather than the court, and says the opinion has not "predominating weight" for said reason: 1 Phillips on Ins. (3d ed.)

it is not a deviation to touch at a port at which the vessel has liberty to touch,[16] yet a liberty to touch, or to touch for all purposes, means a purpose connected with the voyage or in furtherance of the objects of the adventure, even though the port or place touched at be within the terms of the policy.[17]

§ 2394. Distinction between purposes of voyage and acts done to insure success of adventure.—As substantially stated elsewhere, in all trading voyages the ship is, as a general rule, confined to the ports, places, or coasts designated in the policy, and cannot depart to other places merely because she can better prosecute the trade elsewhere. There is a difference between departure as the result of a necessity, or for the purposes of the voyage, and a departure from the route to insure the success of a trading adventure, or the success of any mercantile or fishing voyage; such latter departure is not permitted, and, in the absence of a provision so to do in the policy, permission cannot be implied.[18]

In Massachusetts it is held that a vessel which had sailed from Plymouth on a fishing voyage to the Banks was not justified in departing to St. Peters, the nearest available port, for that purpose, in order to procure bait, though she returned again to the Banks and did not suffer loss until after her return, and that such deviation avoided the policy. The case was distinguished by the court from those where the deviation is justified by necessity, and also from cases of delay in port or ports named or permitted in the policy, or delay necessary to accomplish the objects of the voyage.[19]

580, sec. 1026. Notwithstanding this criticism, the case seems clearly one of deviation. The voyage undertaken was not for any purpose connected with the voyage insured and contemplated by the parties. The departure changed the risk, and substituted another voyage. Again, a departure cannot be justified to insure the success of the adventure. See Burgess v. Equitable Marine Ins. Co. 126 Mass. 70, 30 Am. Rep. 654.

[16] Cross v. Shutliffe, 2 Bay (S. C.) 220, 1 Am. Dec. 645.

[17] Sully v. Whittemore, 5 Barn. & A. 45 (compare this case with Armet v. Innes, 4 J. B. Moore, 150); Langhorne v. Allnott, 4 Taunt. 511, 519, 12 R. R. 660, per Gibbs, J.; Hammond v. Reed, 4 Barn. & Ald. 72, 22 R. R. 629; Violet v. Allnutt, 3 Taunt. 419, 13 R. R. 676; Williams v. Shee, 3 Camp. 469, 14 R. R. 811, per Lord Ellenborough.

[18] Burgess v. Equitable Marine Ins. Co. 126 Mass. 70, 30 Am. Rep. 654, per Endicott, J., citing Kettell v. Wiggin, 13 Mass. 68; Robertson v. Columbia Ins. Co. 8 Johns. (N. Y.) 491.

[19] Burgess v. Equitable Marine Ins. Co. 126 Mass. 70, 30 Am. Rep. 654, per Endicott, J., citing Columbian Ins. Co. v. Cattlett, 12 Wheat. (25 U. S.) 383, 6 L. ed. 664; Folsom v. Merchants' Ins. Co. 38 Me. 414; Clark v. United Ins. Co. 7 Mass. 365, 5 Am. Dec. 50; Elton v. Brogden, 2 Str. 1264, 9 Eng. Rul. Cas. 413; Driscol v. Passmore, 1 Bos. & P. 200, 4 R. R. 782; Driscol v. Bovil, 1 Bos. & P. 313; Phillips v. Irving, 7 Man. &

§ 2395. When trading, etc., at port may be allowed, although not in furtherance of adventure.—There is a distinction between stopping at a port for a purpose not connected with or in furtherance of the main objects or purposes of the original adventure, and a case where the stopping was justified in the first instance, but some act is subsequently done which is foreign to the purposes of the main voyage or adventure. In the latter case, the rule may be thus generally stated: If a vessel under a liberty sufficiently broad, or through necessity, or for the purpose of necessary repairs and supplies, or for other sufficient cause, is so far justified, under the terms of the policy, in stopping at a port or place that such act is not a deviation or change of voyage, she may subsequently, whether the insurance is on the ship, goods, or freight, engage at said port or place in trade, load, or discharge goods and the like during such period as the purposes justifying her visit permit her to lawfully stay at said port or place, and this is so even though said acts of trading, etc., are not connected with or in furtherance of the main objects of the original adventure, nor within the express permission of the policy. In determining, however, whether such acts of trading, etc., are justified, it must be carefully considered whether the risk was thereby increased in whole or in part, or whether the stay was in whole or in part protracted thereby beyond the time during which the vessel would otherwise have been justified in remaining at such port or place. If there is any increase of risk or additional delay occasioned thereby, the policy is avoided, and it would also be proper, in ascertaining whether the risk has been increased, to weigh all the advantages and disadvantages, and if it was increased in one particular, but diminished in another of equal or greater degree, the policy might not be avoided.[20] But if a vessel which has been carried by capture

G. 325, 8 Scott (N. R.) 3, 13 L. J. C. P. 145, 9 Eng. Rul. Cas. 396; Noble v. Kenneway, 2 Doug. 510–13.

[20] In Lapham v. Atlas Ins. Co. 24 Pick. (41 Mass.) 1, it appeared that a vessel was insured from West Indies to "port of discharge in the United States." The vessel sailed from West Indies for Savannah for the purpose of disposing of her cargo. She sustained some damage, stopped at Savannah, but did not discharge the cargo, but took on instead forty bales of cotton, and sailed for Boston, as a port of discharge. The court said: "It appears that while the vessel was at Savannah the master took on board forty bales of cotton on freight, and this, it is urged, released the defendants from their responsibility, but it has been settled by this court that the mere fact of putting goods on board a vessel at a port where she has a right to touch, if it neither increase the risk nor occasion delay, does not discharge the underwriter:"

United States.—Hughes v. Union Ins. Co. 3 Wheat. (16 U. S.) 159, 4 L. ed. 357; Kingston v. Girard, 4 Dall. (4 U. S.) 274, 1 L. ed. 831.

Massachusetts. — Chase v. Eagle Ins. Co. 5 Pick. (22 Mass.) 51.

into a port remains there for the purposes of trading, and for a longer time than is necessary to prepare for her voyage, it is a deviation.[1]

§ 2396. Liberty of ports: course of voyage: change of voyage.—A liberty of ports is also governed by the principle that the vessel in visiting a port or ports must be confined to those properly in the course of the voyage described and embraced in the termini specified, as well also as for purposes connected with the objects of the voyage, and however general the liberty given may be as to its terms, it does not authorize changing the voyage.[2] And a liberty of ports and places does not justify making a distinct intermediate voyage, however wide the terms of such clauses may be.[3]

The general words of the policy may extend the liberty to both the outward and the homeward voyage, and to all places whatsoever in the usual course thereof to and from the place mentioned,[4] or the permission to stop at uncertain ports may be limited to the homeward voyage by the terms of the policy, and by the words in which the permission is indorsed on the policy.[5] The liberty may be of such a character, in connection with the words of the policy,

New York.—Kane v. Colorado Ins. Co. 2 Johns. (N. Y.) 264.

England.—Inglis v. Vaux, 3 Camp. 447; Delaney v. Stoddart, 1 Term Rep. 22, 1 R. R. 139; Laroche v. Oswin, 12 East, 131, 11 R. R. 337; Raine v. Bell, 9 East, 195, 9 R. R. 533, 9 Eng. Rul. Cas. 365; Hamilton v. Sheddon, 3 Mees. & W. 49, M. & H. 334, 7 L. J. Ex. 1; Warre v. Miller, 7 Dowl. & R. 1, 1 Car. & P. 237, 4 B. & C. 538, 4 L. J. (O. S.) K. B. 8; Cormack v. Gladstone, 11 East, 347. 10 R. R. 518. The rule formerly contra, Hughes v. Union Ins. Co. 3 Wheat. (16 U. S.) 159, 4 L. ed. 357; Perkins v. Augusta Banking Ins. Co. 10 Gray (76 Mass.) 312, 71 Am. Dec. 654; Thomas v. Royal Exch. Assur. Co. 1 Price, 195; Sheriff v. Potts, 5 Esp. 96; Stitt v. Wardwell, 1 Esp. 610.

[1] Kingston v. Girard, 4 Dall. (4 U. S.) 274, 1 L. ed. 831.

[2] Lavabre v. Wilson, 1 Doug. 284; Hogg v. Horner, reported with the last case in 1 Marshall on Ins. (ed. 1810) 192, *191; Gairdner v. Senhouse, 3 Taunt. 16, 12 R. R. 573; Seccomb v. Provincial Ins. Co. 10 Allen (92 Mass.) 305, citing Stocker v. Harris, 3 Mass. 409; Bottomley v. Bovill, 5 Barn. & C. 210, 7 D. & R. 702, 4 L. J. (O. S.) K. B. 237, 29 R. R. 221; Solly v. Whittemore, 5 Barn. & A. 45; Kettell v. Wiggin, 13 Mass. 68. "Such clauses, however wide their terms may be, never give the right of changing the voyage insured. . . . Caesarigis well remarks that the captain in using the liberty given him in the policy is never to lose sight of the voyage entered upon:" Emerigon on Ins. (Meredith's ed. 1850) c. xiii. sec. 6, p. 553.

[3] Bottomley v. Bovill, 5 Barn. & C. 210, 7 D. & R. 702, 4 L. J. (O. S.) K. B. 237, 29 R. R. 221; Robertson v. Columbian Ins. Co. 8 Johns. (N. Y.) 491; Seccomb v. Provincial Ins. Co. 10 Allen (92 Mass.) 305.

[4] Lavabre v. Wilson, 1 Doug. 284, reported also in 1 Marshall on Ins. (ed. 1810) 192.

[5] Perkins v. Augusta Banking Ins. Co. 10 Gray (76 Mass.) 312, 71 Am. Dec. 654.

that the vessel is limited to a particular port of an island; as where the insurance was "at and from" a designated port, "thence to a port on the north side of Cuba, with liberty of a second port thereon," here the latter clause will be construed to mean a second port on the north side of the island, and visiting a port on the south side discharges the underwriters.[6] And it is held that the vessel may not deviate from the course even for a purpose connected with the voyage insured,[7] although a departure from the course may, as will be seen from the cases noted elsewhere, be justified under a sufficiently extensive liberty when done for a purpose connected with the voyage insured. Thus, the limited construction of the liberty given in the above cases will not be followed, however, where it is clearly evident from the whole policy that a broader or more extensive liberty was intended, and a policy may be so worded that the vessel may stop at ports or places in either of two routes, or sail backward or forward upon some intermediate voyage for the purpose of accomplishing a voyage to the terminus of either route, but even in such case, if the vessel was upon neither route of the two contemplated, nor upon an intermediate voyage with a view to accomplish a voyage to the terminus of either route, the insurers are discharged.[8] And in cases of insurances at and from or to the West Indies Islands, thence home, the liberty to call at, or touch and stay at, all or any of the islands or ports or places therein, is not so strictly limited, in view of the character of the voyage, as in those instances first above noted, reference, however, being had to the purposes of the voyage in determining whether there has been a deviation.[9]

[6] Nicholson v. Marine Ins. Co. 106 Mass. 399.

[7] Hogg v. Horner, reported in 1 Marshall on Ins. (ed. 1810) 192, *191.

[8] Bottomley v. Bovill, 5 Barn. & C. 210, 7 Dowl. & R. 702, 4 L. J. (O. S.) K. B. 237, 29 R. R. 221. Emerigon says that Pothier "thus expresses himself: 'When a policy contains a clause that it shall be permitted the master of the vessel to navigate to the right or to the left to make a port, to go and to return, this clause certainly allows the assured to turn aside from the route, to touch on the right or on the left, to discharge goods there, and to ship others in their stead, to go and return from one port to the other even in retrograding, or that the vessel shall return to its route for the purpose of reaching the destination expressed in the policy, but it does not allow him to entirely change the voyage.'" And he adds: "The contract must be interpreted in view of the principal object that has dictated it, and in doubt it must be understood with reference to principles of law and to the practice of commerce:" Emerigon on Ins. (Meredith's ed. 1850) c. xiii. sec. 6, pp. 554, 555.

[9] See Metcalf v. Parry, 4 Camp. 123, 15 R. R. 734; Bragg v. Anderson, 4 Taunt. 229, 13 R. R. 584; Barclay v. Stirling, 5 Maule & S. 6, 17 R. R. 245.

Again, where a vessel was insured "at and from" Santa Marca, a port on the Spanish main, to New York, with a liberty to use "three additional ports from the Spanish main to New York," it was held that the vessel might touch at three ports on the main within the limits of the voyage insured, and was not confined to ports on the homeward voyage after leaving the main.[10] So a liberty of ports and places coupled with the purposes and nature of the voyage may justify sailing backward and forward from port to ports or places, and warrant intermediate voyages.[11]

§ 2397. Liberty of ports: trading, discharging, or taking in cargo.—Trading, discharging, or taking in cargo under a liberty of ports or places must be governed by the principles stated under the last section, reference always being had to the extent of the liberty given and construed with reference to the principal object that has dictated the contract, as well as the practice of commerce. But if the clauses are precise and clear, interpretation becomes unnecessary, and the parties must be bound by the terms stipulated, for it is lawful to insert clauses permitting extensive liberty to navigate in any direction, even though the vessel under them may go out of the usual course, provided the departure is in the prosecution of the original adventure or for the voyage insured, or for the accomplishment of the purposes of the voyage insured.[12]

If a liberty is given to touch one or more times at ports beyond the Cape of Good Hope to sell the outward and procure a homeward cargo, thence to the port of final discharge, the vessel may go to the port, sail thence to another to sell her cargo, return to the first port to trade, and may also sell the homeward cargo at one port and proceed thence to another to take in a whole cargo, such acts being done in good faith, and in furtherance of purposes of the voyage, and not changing the risk.[13] So, also, where a vessel was insured under a policy which gave a liberty to sail forward and [10] De Peyster v. Sun Mutual Ins. Co. 19 N. Y. 272, 17 Barb. (N. Y.) 306, 307, aff'd 75 Am. Dec. 331.

[11] Ashley v. Pratt, 16 Mees. & W. 471, 17 L. J. Ex. 135, aff'd 1 Exch. 257; Armet v. Innes, 4 J. B. Moore, 150, 21 R. R. 737. See §§ 2387, 2395 herein.

[12] See Armet v. Innes, 4 J. B. Moore, 150, 21 R. R. 737, per Park, J.; Williams v. Shee, 3 Camp. 469, 14 R. R. 811, per Lord Ellenborough; Hammond v. Reed, 4 Barn. & Ald. 72, 22 R. R. 629, 9 Eng. Rul. Cas. 372; Bottomley v. Bovill, 5 Barn. & C. 210, 7 D. & R. 702, 4 L. J. (O. S.) K. B. 237, 29 R. R. 221. "If the parties have explained themselves on the point in a precise, special and clear manner, interpretation becomes superfluous; cum in verbis nulla est ambiguitas non debit admittii voluntatis quæstio; and the stipulated agreement must be adhered to. The indefinite clause of being at liberty to navigate in any direction is lawful:" Emerigon on Ins. (Meredith's ed. 1850) c. xiii. sec. 6, pp. 555, 556.

[13] Thorndike v. Bordman, 4 Pick. (21 Mass.) 47.

backward to the ship's loading ports in designated localities, but which also gave permission to proceed and sail, touch and stay, at any ports or places whatsoever and wheresoever, for any purpose whatsoever, it was held that the ship might trade at any ports or places within the limit designated, even though out of the limits of the direct course, and also exchange part of her homeward cargo for other goods, such acts being in pursuance of and consistent with the purposes of the voyage. It was also decided that the terms of the policy, coupled with the relative geographical distances of the designated ports and places and the order specified in the policy, evidenced that such liberty to trade and discharge must have been contemplated in the case.[14]

A mere liberty to touch gives a liberty to trade where it is evident that the parties so intended, or where the nature of the voyage renders it necessary.[15] If the liberty given only extends the protection of the policy to the loading of goods on board, the vessel is not justified in stopping to deliver goods, for such purpose is wholly unconnected with the main object of the adventure, although if she had gone to the same port to see if she could get a cargo it would not have been a deviation.[16]

If under an insurance on a return cargo "from and immediately after the loading thereof" at the port of destination, a liberty of intermediate ports will not protect the outward cargo from the port of destination to one of the intermediate ports, where the vessel is refused admission at the port of destination.[17] In another case a vessel was insured from New York to Teneriffe, and, for an additional premium, permission was given to proceed from Teneriffe to the Isle of May and Bonavista and at and from thence to New York, but she was refused permission to enter or land any part of the cargo until after performing a quarantine of forty days, which the master, not choosing to do, went to Madeira, the nearest point where he could enter and land his cargo, and then sold and de-

[14] Armet v. Innes, 4 J. B. Moore, 150, 21 R. R. 737; Solly v. Whitmore, 5 Barn. & A. 45, 24 R. R. 274, noted below in text, and criticism thereon in note below.

[15] Urquhart v. Barnard, 1 Taunt. 450, 10 R. R. 574; Chase v. Eagle Ins. Co. 5 Pick. (22 Mass.) 51; Metcalf v. Parny, 4 Camp. 125, 15 R. R. 734. Formerly contra, United States v. The Paul Shearman, Pet. (U. S. C. C.) 98, Fed. Cas. No. 16,012.

[16] Solly v. Whitmore, 5 Barn. & A. 45, 24 R. R. 274. Mr. Phillips criticises the application of the doctrine of this case as questionable, on the ground that it could not have been intended that the ship should go out empty, and that the delivery of a cargo must have been deemed as one of the probable purposes for touching (1 Phillips on Ins. (3d ed.) 566, sec. 1007), and there is much force in this criticism. See Armet v. Innes, 4 J. B. Moore, 150, 21 R. R. 737 noted above.

[17] Graves v. Marine Ins. Co. 2 Caines (N. Y.) 339.

livered the cargo and proceeded to the Isle of May, and it was held that the going from Teneriffe to Madeira was a deviation.[18] In this last case the voyage undertaken was for the purpose of benefiting the assured, and not to further any purpose connected with the voyage. But the vessel is not confined to the usual and direct course of the voyage between the termini, but may take in goods at a port so outside the course where the main object of the adventure is to be furthered and the liberty is sufficiently broad; as in a case where permission was given to touch, stay, and trade at all or any places whatsoever and wheresoever, and to touch and stay at any ports or places whatsoever in any direction and for any purpose, necessary or otherwise.[19]

§ 2398. Liberty of ports and to tow and assist vessels.—A liberty to visit any port or ports for any purpose whatever and to tow and assist vessels in all situations must be construed to mean all ports in the course of the voyage described, or to tow and assist all vessels to be met with in such course. This was so held in the case of a chartered vessel where the liberty was given in the bill of lading and not in the charter.[20]

§ 2399. Liberty to touch and stay or of port or ports may be limited by other words in policy.—Although the voyage be described and a general liberty be given to touch and stay at any and all points and places, this liberty may be limited by other words in the policy so as to expressly confine the ship to ports and places in the usual course of the entire voyage; as where the insurance was from L. to P., M., and C., and back, with liberty to touch at designated ports, and also at all and any ports and places whatsoever, and these words are followed by the clause "and in the outward and homeward bound voyage" to touch and stay at any ports and places, the latter clause will control the former, and limit the liberty as above stated.[1] So where the insurance was on cargo to Bremen, with liberty to enter a Dutch port, when informed on arriving on that coast that it could be done in safety, limits the privilege of departing from the course except under strict compliance with the terms of the limitation.[2] In another case a vessel was insured upon a voyage described as "from New York to Gibraltar, at and from thence to Tarragona, with the liberty of using one port between Tarragona and Gibraltar, and at and from thence [18] Robertson v. Columbian Ins. Co. 8 Johns. (N. Y.) 491.

[19] Hunter v. Leathley, 10 Barn. & C. 858, 8 L. J. (O. S.) K. B. 274, aff'd 7 Bing. 517, 5 M. & P. 457, 1 C. & J. 423, 1 Tyr. 355, 9 L. J. (O. S.) Ex. 118.

[20] Arden S. S. Co. v. Thebaud, 35 Fed. 620. See § 2427 herein.

[1] Lavabre v. Wilson, 1 Doug. 284.

[2] Duerhagen v. United States Ins. Co. 2 Serg. & R. (Pa.) 309.

to New York." Four months later permission was indorsed on the policy "to stop at one other port between Tarragona and Gibraltar." It was held that, considering the manner of expression used in giving the permission and the time it was given, the permission was to be availed of on the homeward voyage; that the assured was privileged to stop at one port between Tarragona and Gibraltar, but that he had no right to stop at Gibraltar.[3]

§ 2400. Prohibited ports or waters: restricted waters.—If certain waters or ports are prohibited between certain dates, this constitutes a warranty that the ship will not enter said waters nor use those ports during the period specified.[4] But although a warranty not to use a certain prohibited port means not to go into it, it does not prevent going near to, or in the direction of said port, even with an intent to enter it, for a mere intention to use a prohibited port does not violate the warranty.[5]

If the printed part of a policy warrants that certain ports, places, and designated waters shall not be used, among them ports and places in Texas, except Galveston, and foreign ports and places in the Gulf of Mexico, and by indorsement in writing on the policy the vessel is permitted to be "employed in the coasting trade on the United States Atlantic coast," and also to use gulf ports not west of New Orleans, this does not permit of a voyage from Maine to a port in the Gulf of Mexico, west of New Orleans, so as to enable assured to recover for a loss on said voyage occurring west of New Orleans.[6]

Again, a vessel insured on time, with a warranty in the policy not to use any ports of Mexico except Laguna, touched there, and in order to enter there, in accordance with the commercial regulations of Mexico, went to another port to enter and pay tonnage duties. It was held that there was such a deviation and breach of warranty as to avoid the policy.[7]

There can be no recovery for a loss while a vessel is navigating waters other than those where she is permitted to navigate.[8]

[3] Perkins v. Augusta Banking Ins. Co. 10 Gray (76 Mass.) 312, 71 Am. Dec. 654.

[4] Odiorne v. New England Marine Ins. Co. 101 Mass. 551, 3 Am. Rep. 401; Cobb v. Lime Rock Ins. Co. 58 Me. 326. See §§ 2372–74 herein. See Canton Ins. Co. v. Independent Transportation Co. L.R.A.1915C, 408, 217 Fed. 213, 113 C. C. A. 207, 45 Ins. L. J. 206; Thames & Mersey Marine Ins. Co. v. O'Connell, 86 Fed. 150, 29 C. C. A. 624; Lovett v. China Mutual Ins. Co. 174 Mass. 708, 54 N. E. 338.

[5] Snow v. Columbian Ins. Co. 48 N. Y. 624, 8 Am. Rep. 578.

[6] New Haven Steam Saw Mill Co. v. Security Ins. Co. 20 Blatchf. (U. S. C. C.) 192, 9 Fed. 779.

[7] Stevens v. Commercial Mutual Ins. Co. 26 N. Y. 397.

[8] Norris v. China Traders' Ins. Co. 52 Wash. 554, 100 Pac. 1025. See Canton Ins. Co. v. Independent Transportation Co. L.R.A.1915C,

§ 2401. Liberty of ports where employment of ship is limited by the policy.—If it is clearly apparent from the terms of the policy that the ship is to be employed for a specific purpose, a liberty of ports and places or to touch and stay must be construed, however broad it may be, with reference to the intended employment, and to engage the ship in a totally different employment, whereby the risk is changed, is a deviation. This was so held in a case where it was evident that the ship was to be employed as a tender to other ships in a certain trade.[9]

§ 2402. Not touching at privileged port.—It is not a deviation for a vessel not to stop at a port at which she has a privilege to call in the course of the voyage, because such a privilege was intended as a benefit for the insured, which he may waive for the general interests of all concerned, if he sees fit.[10] If a policy of insurance authorizes the ship to stop at a particular port, the insured need not disclose that the ship will call there, although he has information of the fact.[11]

§ 2403. River navigation: departure from river channel.—It is not a deviation to depart from the usual channel in sailing up a river.[12]

§ 2404. River navigation: vessel may make usual stops for landing and loading goods, etc.—A vessel may undoubtedly be permitted to make such usual stops for landing or loading goods, discharging or taking on passengers, and the like, as are necessary and contemplated from the character of the voyage.[13]

408, 217 Fed. 213, 113 C. C. A. 207, 45 Ins. L. J. 206; Thames & Mersey Marine Ins. Co. v. O'Connell, 86 Fed. 150, 29 C. C. A. 624; Lovett v. China Mutual Ins. Co. 174 Mass. 108, 54 N. E. 338.

[9] Hamilton v. Shedden, 3 M. & W. 49, M. & H. 334, 7 L. J. Ex. 1. See also Hartley v. Buggin, 3 Doug. 39, 9 Eng. Rul. Cas. 391, reported in 1 Marshall on Ins. (ed. 1810) 200, where Lord Mansfield said: "If a ship insured for a trading voyage be turned into a floating warehouse, or a factory ship, the risk is different. It varies the stay, for while she is used as a warehouse, no cargo can be bought for her. This is the law. The fact is that though this was not a regular thatched factory ship, yet she was used as a thatched factory ship is used. This being clear, it follows that the risk is different in point of length from that which is generally understood in the trade, and consequently from that which was insured." And converting the vessel into a factory ship, or receiving ship for slaves, was therefore held a deviation. The ship was also delayed seven months beyond the usual time of vessels engaged in the trade.

[10] Cross v. Shurtleff, 2 Bay (S. C.) 220, 1 Am. Dec. 645. See Marsden v. Reed, 3 East, 572, 7 R. R. 516; Hale v. Mercantile Mutual Ins. Co. 6 Pick. (23 Mass.) 172.

[11] Hubbard v. Coolidge, 2 Gall. (U. S. C. C.) 353, Fed. Cas. No. 6,816.

[12] Keeler v. Fireman's Ins. Co. 3 Hill (N. Y.) 250.

[13] Lockett v. Merchants' Ins. Co. 10 Rob. (La.) 339; Lowry v. Russel, 8 Pick. (25 Mass.) 360.

§ 2404a. Vessel constructed for river navigation: trial trips: delay: usual course of voyage.—Where a vessel was nonseagoing, but was being constructed for use as a river steamer, and the policy was issued for a double premium to cover a voyage from the place where she was being built to that where she was intended to be used, the making of two trial trips, neither of which extended beyond the limits of the port where she was being constructed, did not constitute a deviation, where such trial trips were made to determine whether she was suitable for the voyage intended and were therefore a reasonable part of the preparation therefor, nor, in such case, for the same reason, is a delay in commencing the voyage a deviation as a matter of law; nor is taking an inside course before making the open sea a deviation as a matter of law, having in view the character of the vessel, the purpose for which she was built, and the motive and circumstances attending such act, and therefore the question is one for the jury.[14]

§ 2405. Masters and mariners: negligence or mismanagement: remote cause.—If the proximate cause of the loss is one of the perils insured against, the fact that the remote cause may be traced to the masters or mariners does not release the insurers, but a voluntary deviation by the master is not such a remote cause as to bring it within the rule.[15] A departure to obtain water, the necessity for which was caused by the negligence of one of the seamen in losing the water from a cask, is not such a deviation as will avoid the policy, unless, perhaps, it be proven that the neglect occurred during the master's unjustifiable absence.[16] The act of lashing a flat boat, ascending the Mississippi and laden with produce, to a steamer for towing is of itself a violation of the contract of insurance, but if, after a collision with the steamer, the master, with the honest intention of averting imminent danger of loss, causes such flatboat to be lashed to and taken in tow by the steamer to the nearest landing, the underwriters are not thereby discharged.[17]

§ 2406. Departure from course through ignorance of master.—A departure from the course, to constitute a deviation, should be voluntary, yet if it takes place through the master's ignorance, it will be deemed voluntary and a deviation, although a mere honest mistake of judgment, where the exercise of a discretion is required in taking the ship out of the course, made by a skilful, discreet, and prudent master, will not constitute a deviation.[18]

[14] Thebaud v. Great Western Ins. Co. 155 N. Y. 516, 50 N. E. 284, 27 Ins. L. J. 756.

[15] Natchez v. Stanton, 2 S. & M. (10 Miss.) 340, 41 Am. Dec. 592. See § 2167 herein.

[16] Lapene v. Sun Mutual Ins. Co. 8 La. Ann. 1, 58 Am. Dec. 668.

[17] Stewart v. Tennessee Marine & Fire Ins. Co. 1 Humph. (20 Tenn.) 242.

[18] Phyn v. Royal Exch. Assur. Co.

§ 2407. Master's judgment and discretion.—The master must be the principal judge of the degree of peril to which his ship is exposed, of her ability to withstand the same, of the necessity of departing from the usual course of the voyage, and whether the ship may safely proceed to a nearer or more distant port for repairs, and also which port offers, under the circumstances, the greatest facility for repairs. If he acts in good faith, and has no other purpose but to conduct the vessel by the safest and shortest course to her selected port of necessity, such acts are within the spirit of the contract, and will be protected thereby, and the deviation justified. In brief, if the master, being one of ordinary skill and discretion, acts in good faith and forms the best judgment he can under the existing circumstances, having in view the safety of lives on board and next thereafter the security of the property intrusted to him, it is all that the contract can be reasonably held to require, and, if the safety of life and property require it, the master should seek the nearest land accessible without needless delay or divergence from the course thereto.[19]

So if a master, being obliged to repair his vessel, returns to port and acts with good faith and sound discretion, there is no deviation.[20] And the master may, therefore, depart from the usual course for the purpose of saving life, ship, or property, if necessity or reasonable cause impels him thereto. There is in every policy an implied consent and authority to the masters so to do, whether the urgent danger which it is sought to avoid be a peril insured against or not.[1]

§ 2408. Instructions to master: generally.—The master's discretion as to the mode of prosecuting the voyage or of the course to be pursued may be limited to the instructions of the owner of the ship, for it is the master's duty to follow instructions, even though his own judgment might not approve of the course prescribed.[2]

7 Term Rep. 505, 4 R. R. 508; See Tait v. Levi, 14 East, 481, 13 R. R. 289; Brazier v. Clapp, 5 Mass. 1, per Sedgwick, J.; Turner v. Protection Ins. Co. 25 Me. 515, 43 Am. Dec. 294. See the following section.

[19] Turner v. Protection Ins. Co. 25 Me. 515, 43 Am. Dec. 294; Brazier v. Clapp, 5 Mass. 1, 8, per Sedgwick, J.; Silloway v. Neptune Ins. Co. 12 Gray (78 Mass.) 73.

[20] Wiggin v. Amory, 13 Mass. 118.

[1] Goyon v. Pleasants, 3 Wash. (U. S. C. C.) 241, Fed. Cas. No. 5,647; Riggin v. Patapsco Ins. Co. 7 Har. & J. (Md.) 279, 16 Am. Dec. 302; Graham v. Commercial Ins. Co. 11 Johns. (N. Y.) 352; Reade v. Commercial Ins. Co. 3 Johns. (N. Y.) 352, 3 Am. Dec. 495; D'Aguilar v. Tobin, Holt N. P. 185, 2 Marsh. 265. "The deviation is proper when made in good faith and upon reasonable grounds of belief in its necessity to avoid a peril:" Deering's Annot. Civ. Code Cal. sec. 2695, subd. 3.

[2] 2 Duer on Marine Ins. (ed. 1846) 491, sec. 59. See New York Firemen's Ins. Co. v. Lawrence, 14 Johns. (N. Y.) 46, per Kent, Ch.

§ 2409. Departure from route to avoid seizure in pursuance of instructions.—If the instructions evidence a prudent exercise of discretion, they may permit the vessel's going out of the most usual and least dangerous route to avoid a peril; as where under an insurance from New York to Bordeaux the owners, being apprehensive of detention by British cruisers, instructed the master to go through the sound, instead of through the narrows, to the Hook, which latter was the usual course and least dangerous. In this case the owners were on the spot, and were probably most competent to judge of a danger, and there was no reason or necessity for consulting the master.[3]

§ 2410. Liberty of ports for orders: revisiting port.—A vessel may be insured with liberty of ports for orders, and under such a policy, coupled also with the liberty of ports for any purpose whatever, the ship touched at Carlsham for orders, in pursuance of which she proceeded to Schwinnemunde for orders, off which she arrived, and receiving instructions to return to Carlsham because it was unsafe to land at Schwinnemunde, and while undergoing repairs, her cargo was seized, it was held no deviation.[4]

§ 2411. Visiting port for information or orders.—If a vessel is insured to either or both of two ports, and one port is elected as that of the ship's destination, but the vessel is temporarily prevented from entering, it does not constitute a deviation for the master to put into a third port to ascertain to which of the two ports he had better visit.[5] And a ship insured to a port of discharge on a certain coast may stop at a port on said coast for the purpose of ascertaining the state of the market, and to enable the master to determine whether he will discharge there or proceed to another port. And the vessel may proceed thence to that port of discharge which promises the best sales; he is not obliged to discharge at the first port.[6]

But even an extensive liberty to call at certain places must be limited to the calling for purposes connected with that particular voyage, and it is a deviation to call for the purpose of obtaining information to be used for the purpose of another voyage in no way connected with that insured.[7]

[3] Reade v. Commercial Ins. Co. 3 Johns. (N. Y.) 352, 3 Am. Dec. 495. See § 2176 herein.

[4] Andrews v. Mellish, 5 Taunt. 496, aff'g 2 Maule & S. 27, 16 East, 312. See Mellish v. Andrews, 15 East, 13, 13 R. R. 351.

[5] Clark v. United Ins. Co. 7 Mass. 365, 5 Am. Dec. 50.

[6] Laphan v. Atlas Ins. Co. 24 Pick. (41 Mass.) 1; Coolidge v. Gray, 8 Mass. 527.

[7] Hammond v. Reid, 4 Barn. & Ald. 72, 22 R. R. 629, 9 Eng. Rul. Cas. 372.

§ 2412. Delay or departure from route for political information.—Delay for a few days at an intermediate port was held not a deviation, when it was for the purpose of obtaining news from Mexico, with which country we were then at war, and the next port was on the Rio Grande, though under the control of our troops.[8]

Under certain English decisions covering what were known as Baltic risks, arising from the political exigencies brought about by Napoleon's continental system, and under which policies the risk was to a port or ports in the Baltic, backward or forward, with liberty to touch and stay at any or all ports or places for all purposes, it was held that the liberty was sufficiently broad to permit putting into a port to ascertain the political state of other ports, and under a very similar policy where the liberty was extended to call for orders, and the vessel had not selected her port of discharge, it was held that she might call twice at the same port for orders.[9]

§ 2413. Delay to await orders as to port of discharge under permission in policy.—A vessel may, under terms of the policy, be justified in a delay to await instructions; as where a policy was upon goods consigned to A upon vessels from Santos to New York, Baltimore, or Boston direct, "or via Hampton Roads for orders," and it was held that the vessel was justified in delaying eighteen days at Hampton Roads for orders, and there was no deviation.

It further appeared that the master wired A his arrival, and the former received a letter directing him to await instructions. A and his agents during the period of delay were endeavoring to sell the cargo at either port of discharge, but without success. It was further decided that a reasonable time for selling the cargo was permissible, and the delay therefore excusable. It was also decided that an indorsement of the policy, whereby it was agreed that an extra premium should be paid in case a vessel used a port of call exceeding seven and not over fifteen days, justified a construction of an understanding that there might be a delay of fifteen days at Hampton Roads.[10]

§ 2414. Instructions to deviate: whether must be disclosed.—A question has arisen whether the assured is not obligated to disclose to the underwriter instructions given to the master, and whether, in case of failure so to disclose the same, the underwriter is released by the concealment, or only from the time of the actual

[8] Bradley v. National Ins. Co. 3 La. Ann. 708, 48 Am. Dec. 465.

[9] 1 Arnould on Marine Ins. (Perkins' ed. 1850) 374, *369; Id. (Maclachlan's ed. 1887) 475; Id. (8th ed. Hart & Simey) secs. 403 et seq., pp. 525 et seq., citing Rucker v. Alnutt, 15 East, 278, 13 R. R. 465; Mellish v. Andrews, 2 Maule & S. 27; Andrews v. Mellish, 5 Taunt. 496. See Id. 15 East, 13, 16 East, 312.

[10] Arnold v. Pacific Mutual Ins. Co. 78 N. Y. 7.

deviation. Mr. Duer is of the opinion that inasmuch as the master is obligated to follow instructions to deviate, and such instructions are concealed from the underwriter, the risk never attaches,[11] and such seems to be substantially the English rule as stated by Mr. Arnould,[12] under which the case relied on is that of a voyage "at and from" London to Jamaica. The master was instructed to touch Cape St. Nicholas mole for the purpose of landing stores. Up to a certain point the voyage was over the same route; from there on there were three courses, two to the southward and one to the north of San Domingo, of which three courses the master was by usage permitted a choice, although the usual and safest of the courses were the southern routes. The vessel was captured on the northern course before she had turned off for St. Nicholas' mole, and it was held that the instructions had taken away the master's discretion, and the concealment of the intention to go to St. Domingo released the underwriters.[13] It is noteworthy that in this case the ship had passed the point of divergence of the three routes before she was lost, and it is doubtful from the general tenor of the opinions given if the court would have released the insurers had the vessel been lost before the dividing point was reached. It is true that the proposition is applicable that the insurers have a right to rely upon the master's judgment and discretion in choosing the safest and most expeditious route, under the circumstances, existing at the time when the dividing line is reached. But it is doubtful if it is necessary to disclose whether it is intended to rely upon the master's judgment or not. Assume that such instructions were withdrawn before the dividing point was reached. In what respect does it then differ from an intention to deviate? Again, is not the fact one of which the insurer waives being informed, and, therefore, to be placed in the same category with cases under the rule which does not require the disclosure of information respecting seaworthiness? It seems most reasonable, in view of the whole tenor of the court's opinion in the above

[11] 2 Duer on Marine Ins. (ed. 1846) 491–99, where he reviews Marine Ins. Co. v. Tucker, 3 Cranch (7 U. S.) 357, 2 L. ed. 466; Talcott v. Marine Ins. Co. 2 Johns. (N. Y.) 130; New York Firemen's Ins. Co. v. Lawrence, 14 Johns. (N. Y.) 46, per Kent, Ch.; Lawrence v. Ocean Ins. Co. 11 Johns. (N. Y.) 241; Silva v. Low, 1 Johns. (N. Y.) 184, 193; 3 Benecke & Rossetti, 92–94; Middlewood v. Blakes, 7 Term Rep. 162, 4 R. R. 405.

[12] 1 Arnould on Marine Ins. (Perkins' ed. 1850) 560, 561, *557; Id. (8th ed. Hart & Simey) sec. 389, pp. 509, 510, citing Middlewood v. Blakes, 7 Term Rep. 162, 4 R. R. 405.

[13] Middlewood v. Blakes, 7 Term Rep. 162, 4 R. R. 405, Lawrence, J., however, did not consider this ground tenable.

English case, as well as in consideration of what is declared by eminent authority in this country, to hold that the question is not one of concealment merely, but one as to whether there has been a change of the voyage or mere intention to deviate, as governed by the principles applicable to the determination of the questions.[14]

§ 2415. Whether an act be deviation, change of voyage, or barratry.—Whether an act be a deviation or barratrous must, as will be seen from the definition of barratry hereafter given, depend primarily upon whether it was done by the master in his character as such, or by the mariners with a fraudulent or criminal intent to damnify the owners, or the charterers of the ship, who are owners pro hac vice. Where the act is in pursuance of the owners' instructions, or with their knowledge and consent, or for their interest and benefit, this is an important factor. Barratry does not cover acts done through mere ignorance of the master or through his carelessness. It does, however, comprehend gross malversation in office by the master, any wilful cheat or fraud, or wilful act of known illegality, breach of trust with a dishonest purpose to prejudice the owner, and gross negligence amounting to criminality. A willful deviation for the benefit of the owners is not barratry;[15] nor is the conduct of the master barratrous in deviating

[14] Talcot v. Marine Ins. Co. 2 Johns. (N. Y.) 130, 136; New York Firemen's Ins. Co. v. Lawrence, 14 Johns. (N. Y.) 46, per Kent, Ch.; Houston v. New England Ins. Co. 5 Pick. (22 Mass.) 89; Reade v. Commercial Ins. Co. 3 Johns. (N. Y.) 352, 3 Am. Dec. 495. See Henshaw v. Marine Ins. Co. 2 Caines (N. Y.) 274. "It is not necessary to the validity of the insurance at the outset that the assured should disclose his intention to enhance or vary the risk described in the policy at some intermediate stage. Such enhancement or change affects the policy, if at all, as a deviation, and not as a concealment:" 1 Phillips on Ins. (3d ed.) 18, 319, sec. 582. And in another place the same author says: "I do not see how the case (viz., Middlewoods v. Blakes) can be distinguished from any other of an originally intended deviation . . . or unjustifiable delay, or other originally intended forfeiture of the policy." And also that Mr. Arnould's references do not support the construction given this case: Id. p. 550, sec. 992, note 4. See also 1 Parsons on Marine Ins. (ed. 1868) 486, 487, note 1. See §§ 2375, 2377 herein. Mr. Maclachlan says of Middlewood v. Blakes that if the intention to send the ship to St. Nicholas mole was formed after the policy was effected, it was merely an intention to deviate, and not a change of voyage, as Jamaica was not lost sight of as the terminus ad quem, but that if it was formed definitely when the policy was effected, as he inferred it to have been, the policy never attached. "And to call the absence of any mention of St. Nicholas mole a concealment seems, under these circumstances, a misuse of language:" 1 Arnould on Marine Ins. (Maclachlan's ed. 1887) 461, n. 2; Id. (8th ed. Hart & Simey) sec. 389, pp. 509, 510.

[15] Dederer v. Delaware Ins. Co. 2

by directions of the shipowners, notwithstanding the owner might be liable to the owners of goods insured;[16] nor is proceeding on the wrong course, owing to the master's gross ignorance, a barratrous deviation, there being no fraud or criminality.[17] And where a ship had been piratically taken off by its crew, and the master of a vessel was to receive for her recapture a part of a certain sum of money, dependent as to his proportion of said amount upon the owner's pleasure, and departed from his course in pursuit of the sloop, this was held a deviation, and not a barratrous act, there being an absence of fraud or criminal conduct.[18] So if the master, owing to a misunderstanding or mistake as to sailing instructions, sails on a different voyage not warranted by the contract, such act is not barratrous;[19] and delay at a port of distress is not a deviation, but barratry, when the master while there procures forged papers, changing the ship's name and absents himself longer than necessary, and then runs away with the vessel, and the barratrous act commences, in such case, with this delay.[20] A deviation which is the voluntary, illegal, and fraudulent act of the master, done without the knowledge or consent of the owner, pro hac vice is barratrous.[1]

§ 2416. Vessel forced to deviate by barratrous acts.—If barratry is one of the perils insured against, it is not a deviation if the vessel is taken out of her course by the barratrous act of her master.[2]

§ 2417. What justifies deviation generally: statutory or Code provisions.—As will be apparent from the several sections under this chapter, the terms of the policy may warrant what would otherwise be a deviation. It is, therefore, material to ascertain, in the first

Wash. (U. S. C. C.) 61, Fed. Cas. No. 3,733.

As to barratry, see §§ 2741 et seq. herein.

As to barratry as excuse for deviation, see marine insurance act of England, sec. 49 (1), under § 2417 herein.

[16] Nutt v. Bourdieu, 1 Term Rep. 323, 1 R. R. 211.

[17] Phyn v. Royal Exch. Assur. Co. 7 Term Rep. 505, 4 R. R. 508; Earle v. Rowcroft, 8 East, 126, 139, 9 R. R. 385, 14 Eng. Rul. Cas. 345, per Lord Ellenborough.

[18] Hood v. Nesbit, 2 Dall. (Pa.) 137, 1 Yeates (Pa.) 114, 1 L. ed. 321, 1 Am. Dec. 265. See Hood's Ex'rs v. Nesbit.

[19] Bottomley v. Bovill, 5 Barn. & C. 210, 4 L. J. (O. S.) K. B. 237, 29 R. R. 221, 7 D. & R. 702.

[20] Roscow v. Corson, 8 Taunt. 684, 21 R. R. 507.

[1] Vallezjo v. Wheeler, Cowp. 143, Lofft, 631. See further as to what is a departure from the voyage and what barratry, Martin v. Delaware Ins. Co. 2 Wash. (U. S. C. C.) 254, Fed. Cas. No. 9,161; Glidden v. Manufacturers' Ins. Co. 1 Sum. (U. S. C. C.) 232, Fed. Cas. No. 5,482; West v. Columbian Ins. Co. 5 Cranch (U. S. C. C.) 309, Fed. Cas. No. 17,421; Buckley v. Protection Ins. Co. 2 Paine (U. S. C. C.) 82, Fed. Cas. No. 2,118.

[2] McIntyre v. Bowne, 1 Johns. (N.

instance, the exact terms of the policy and the character and nature of the voyage. If the act claimed as a deviation be not one within the permission of the policy, it should be determined whether there is a necessity or other justifying cause, having in view the fact that deviation is a voluntary act. The main question to be considered in all cases is the nature and extent of the necessity, or justifying cause which will warrant a departure from the usual course, or whether the delay has been reasonable and necessary under the particular circumstances or to accomplish the purposes of the voyage. Another point is whether the ship has departed further than the necessity requires, and the judgment and discretion of a master of competent skill and prudence also constitutes an important factor. A deviation will not, as we have seen, be justified to insure the success of the adventure, as distinguished from the purposes of the voyage, nor for mere purposes of commerce. The necessity which justifies a deviation must be a real and inevitable one, or reasonable ground must exist for believing it urgent, and must not be created by the assured or any agent of his.[3] Under the Y.) 299. In this case the master agreed with the charterers for a stated sum to deviate.

[3] United States.—Oliver v. Maryland Ins. Co. 7 Cranch (11 U. S.) 487, 493, 3 L. ed. 414; Cruder v. Philadelphia Ins. Co. 2 Wash. (U. S. C. C.) 262, Fed. Cas. No. 3,453; Crousillat v. Ball, 4 Dall. (U. S.) 294, 1 L. ed. 840, 3 Yeates (Pa.) 375, 2 Am. Dec. 375.

Louisiana.—Lapene v. Sun Mutual Ins. Co. 8 La. Ann. 1, 58 Am. Dec. 668.

Massachusetts. — Greene v. Pacific Ins. Co. 9 Allen (91 Mass.) 217; Kettel v. Wiggin, 13 Mass. 72; Whitney v. Haven, 13 Mass. 172; Brazier v. Clap, 5 Mass. 1, 9, per Sedgwick, J.

New York.—Robinson v. Marine Ins. Co. 2 Johns. (N. Y.) 89, per Kent, Ch.; Neilson v. Columbian Ins. Co. 1 Johns. (N. Y.) 301.

South Carolina.—Miller v. Russell, 1 Bay (S. C.) 309.

England. — D'Aguilar v. Tobin, Holt N. P. 185, 2 Marsh. 265; Phillips v. Irving, 13 L. J. Com. P. 145, 7 Man. & G. 325, 8 Scott (N. R.) 3, 9 Eng. Rul. Cas. 396; Scott v. Thompson, 1 Bos. & P. (N. R.) 181; Driscol v. Bovil, 1 Bos. & P. 313.

1 Marshall on Ins. (ed. 1810) 205. "A deviation never puts an end to the insurance, unless it be a voluntary act of those who have management of the ship:" Scott v. Thompson, 4 Bos. & P. 181 (1 Bos. & P. [N. R.] 181), per Mansfield, C. J. "Change of route occasioned by tempest, to avoid dangers of ground, to fly an enemy, or through other perils of the sea, alters in no respect the insurance. The loss suffered in the route are at the charge of the insured:" Emerigon on Ins. (Meredith's ed. 1850) c. xiii. sec. 15, p. 576. "In all cases the necessity must be a real and imperative necessity, affecting the vessel, such as actual force preventing the master from exercising his will, peril of the sea, danger of capture, want of repairs, disability of the crew, or unseaworthiness, occurring under such circumstances that the master, acting upon his best judgment for the interest of all parties, has no alternative, and is forced to leave his route or delay its prosecution. Where the departure is caused by such a necessity,

California Code a deviation may be justified, by circumstances over which neither the owner of the ship or the master has any control, in cases where it is necessary to comply with the warranty, or to avoid a peril, whether insured against or not, where reasonable grounds exist that it is necessary to avoid a peril, to save human life, or relieve a vessel in distress, provided that in these last cases it is made in good faith, but is not justified in any other cases than those herein specified.[4]

A deviation will be justified by necessity in case of an insurance against a particular risk, as well as in the case of a general insurance.[5] But where necessity sanctions a deviation, the deviation must be strictly commensurate with the vis major which causes it.[6]

A necessity for a deviation is not in all cases to be tested by the result. If, under the circumstances, there is a justifiable ground, it is sufficient.[7] The master is not obligated to sacrifice a deckload before deviating for a port of necessity.[8] A deviation may, as will be noted hereafter, be justified by compulsion a second time, by the necessity for repairs, to save life, to avoid certain dangers, to relieve ships in distress and in other cases.

The marine insurance act of England provides: "Deviation or delay in prosecuting the voyage contemplated by the policy is excused: (a) Where authorized by any special term in the policy; or (b) Where caused by circumstances beyond the control of the master and his employer; or (c) Where reasonably necessary in order to comply with an express or implied warranty; or (d) the change of route in no respect alters the insurance, because the course of a sea voyage must at times be necessarily subject to extraordinary perils of the sea and contingencies beyond the control of the master, and in the presence of which he is forced to succumb; and when they occur and he is obliged to depart from the usual course of the voyage, there is no deviation in the legal sense of the term, for the departure is the necessary incident of the route named in the policy as prosecuted at the time by the ship. The probability of such occurrences is well understood; they are known perils of the voyage, and enter into the ordinary contract of marine insurance. And when the master, compelled by the necessity, does that which is for the benefit of all concerned, the act is within the intention of the policy as much as if expressed in terms:" Burgess v. Equitable Marine Ins. Co. 126 Mass. 70, 30 Am. Rep. 654, per Endicott, J. As to "unseaworthiness," noted in this quotation, see §§ 2180–83, 2390 herein.

[4] Deering's Annot. Civ. Code Cal. secs. 2695, 2696.

[5] Robinson v. Marine Ins. Co. 2 Johns. (N. Y.) 89.

[6] Maryland Ins. Co. v. Leroy, 7 Cranch (11 U. S.) 26, 3 L. ed. 257. "The deviation and extent of it must be warranted by the degree of the necessity:" 1 Marshall on Ins. (ed. 1810) 205.

[7] Byrnes v. Louisiana State Ins. Co. 7 Mart. (La.) N. S. 126.

[8] American Ins. Co. v. Francia, 9 Pa. St. 390.

Where reasonably necessary for the safety of the ship or subject-matter insured; or (e) For the purpose of saving human life, or aiding a ship in distress where human life may be in danger; or (f) Where reasonably necessary for the purpose of obtaining medical or surgical aid for any person on board the ship; or (g) Where caused by the barratrous conduct of the master or crew if barratry be one of the perils insured against.

"(2) When the cause excusing the deviation or delay ceases to operate, the ship must resume her course, and prosecute her voyage, with reasonable dispatch." [9]

§ 2417a. Agreement or clause permitting deviation: "due notice" of deviation.—Although an act may be necessarily done in furtherance of the insured journey and so be within the scope of the adventure, and the risk be all the time a transit risk, still if such act be so far continued as to result in an unreasonable delay, it will constitute an unjustifiable deviation which the premium paid does not cover. In such case, however, deviation may be one in the course of the voyage within the intent of a deviation clause covering assured in the event of deviation or change of voyage "at a premium to be hereafter arranged" so as to make the underwriter liable, and this applies where, a box of bullion was insured "at and from" in a specified steamer "including all risks of every description from the mines by escort" to a specified railway station, thence by rail a certain distance to a specified port, thence to the port of destination, and it appeared that the station master at said railway station refused wrongfully to receive the box, except at the owner's risk rate, in consequence of which it was taken for safety to a place at a distance off the route, where it was kept in a safe for a month during negotiations with the railway company, and was then forwarded to its destination by the route prescribed, and upon arrival there it was discovered that a bar of gold had been stolen while the box was delayed as above stated.[10] An agreement that in case of deviation the vessel shall be held covered at a premium to be arranged provided "due notice be given" by assured on receipt of advice of such deviation, "due notice" does not mean that no notice is to be considered as "due" unless it is given in sufficient time to enable the underwriter to still protect himself by reinsurance, but the condition is satisfied and assured is covered by the giving of such notice as he could give after receiving advice of the deviation, and even though he is not advised of the deviation until after loss a notice then given is sufficient.[11]

[9] Marine insurance act 1906 (6 Edw. VII. c. 41) sec. 49 (1); Butterworth's Twentieth Century Stats. (1900–1909) p. 410; 15 Chitty's Stats. (1902–1907) p. 893.

[10] Hyderabad (Deccan) Co. v. Willoughby (1899) 2 Q. B. D. L. R. 530, 68 L. J. Q. B. 862.

§ 2418. Effect of usage and exigencies of trade.—If the deviation is justified by a uniform and well-established usage, or the exigencies of trade, in which the vessel is engaged, are such as must have been in the contemplation of the parties from the character of the trade, or if the mode of trading is usual to vessels of that description, or if the voyage is according to usage, the insurers will not be released, although the deviation might not have been justified in the absence of such usage which, to justify a deviation, must be so certain and generally known as to raise the presumption that it was generally known as the law of that trade.[12]

And although the termini and intermediate ports are named, such description does not preclude stopping at other intermediate ports which by the course of navigation or the usage of trade are usually stopped at in such voyages, unless the terms of the policy expressly exclude the usage.[13] And while deviation is a voluntary departure, without necessity or reasonable cause, from the regular and usual course of a voyage, still, to touch at a port, out of the regular course, to receive part of a cargo, is not a deviation, if within the known usage of trade.[14] So usage may warrant a [11] Mentz Decker & Co. v. Maritime Ins. Co. [1910] L. R. 1 K. B. 132, 79 L. J. K. B. 104, 101 L. T. 808, 15 Com. Cas. 17, 11 Asp. M. C. 339.

[12] United States.—Bulkley v. Protection Ins. Co. 2 Paine (U. S. C. C.) 82, Fed. Cas. No. 2,118.

Louisiana.—Lockett v. Merchants' Ins. Co. 10 Rob. (La.) 339.

Maine.—Folsom v. Merchants' Ins. Co. 38 Me. 414.

Massachusetts.—Parsons v. Manufacturers' Ins. Co. 16 Gray (82 Mass.) 463; Lowry v. Russell, 8 Pick. (25 Mass.) 360.

Missouri. — Walsh v. Homer, 10 Mo. 6, 45 Am. Dec. 342.

New York.—Child v. Sun Mutual Ins. Co. 3 Sand. (N. Y.) 26; Union Ins. Co. v. Tyson, 3 Hill (N. Y.) 118.

England.—Stewart v. Bell, 5 Barn. & A. 238, 24 R. R. 342; Leathley v. Hunter, 1 Tyr. 355, 1 C. & J. 423, aff'g 7 Bing. 517, 9 L. J. (O. S.) Exch. 118, 5 Moore & P. 457; Hunter v. Leathley, 10 B. & C. 858, 8 L. J. (O. S.) K. B. 274; Lindsay v. Janson, 4 Hurl. & N. 699, 28 L. J. Ex. 315; Salvador v. Hopkins, 3 Burr. 1707; Laroche v. Oswin, 12 East, 131, 11 R. R. 337; Bond v. Gonsales, 2 Salk. 445, Holt, 469; Ougier v. Jennings, 1 Camp. 505n, 10 R. R. 739; Vallance v. Dewar, 1 Camp. 503, 10 R. R. 738; Armet v. Innes, 4 Moore, 150, 21 R. R. 737; Cormack v. Gladstone, 11 East, 347, 10 R. R. 518; Kingston v. Knibbs, 1 Camp. 508n, 10 R. R. 742.

[13] McCall v. Sun Mutual Ins. Co. 66 N. Y. 505.

[14] Oliver v. Maryland Ins. Co. 7 Cranch (11 U. S.) 487, 3 L. ed. 414. Cited in Hostetter v. Park, 137 U. S. 30, 40, 34 L. ed. 572; 11 Sup. Ct. 1; Constable v. National Steamship Co. 154 U. S. 51, 66, 38 L. ed. 903, 912, 14 Sup. Ct. 1062; Thatcher v. McCulloh, Olcott, 370, Fed. Cas. No. 13,862; Hostetter v. Gray, 11 Fed. 179, 181; Natchez Ins. Co. v. Stanton, 2 Smedes & M. 340, 376, 41 Am. Dec. 592; Morgan v. Dibble, 29 Tex. 120, 94 Am. Dec. 264.

return to a port from which a vessel has sailed; as where custom permits of a return for clearance,[15] and the master may by usage be permitted a choice of certain routes.[16] The usage and course of trade are also material in determining whether the delay of a vessel in taking in her cargo is unreasonable or not.[17] A delay which is necessary, in accordance with the course of trade, to accomplish the purposes of the voyage is not such a deviation as will avoid the insurance on a round voyage.[18] So a considerable delay at a particular port on a voyage, where different ports are to be visited, caused by the efforts of the master to obtain, by sales of the cargo at retail, the price prescribed by the owner, does not, if bona fide and conforming to the ordinary usage, constitute a deviation.[19]

§ 2419. Necessity for repairs.—In case an insured vessel is so far injured as to render it unsafe, in the judgment of a master of competent skill, prudence, and discretion, to proceed on the voyage without repairs and refitting, he should seek the nearest port practicable therefor; but the master can deviate only so far as is necessary for the required repairs, and if the peril is not imminent, he is not obligated to seek the nearest port out of the course of the voyage. The master must also, in making repairs, content himself with only such repairs as can be most expeditiously made in order that the ship may continue the voyage insured. Thus, if a vessel sustains damages during a gale, she may, if necessary, seek a port of repair out of the course of the voyage insured. If the voyage has been undertaken for any other purpose than repairs, it is a deviation.[20]

The master should, however, in determining what port to seek [15] Parsons v. Manufacturers' Ins. Co. 16 Gray (82 Mass.) 463.

[16] See §§ 2367, 2368 herein.

[17] Oliver v. Maryland Ins. Co. 7 Cranch (11 U. S.) 487, 3 L. ed. 414; Columbian Ins. Co. v. Catlett, 12 Wheat. (25 U. S.) 383, 6 L. ed. 664. Cited in Hostetter v. Park, 137 U. S. 30, 40, 34 L. ed. 572, 11 Sup. Ct. 1; Constable v. National Steamship Co. 154 U. S. 51, 66, 38 L. ed. 903, 911, 14 Sup. Ct. 1062; Hostetter v. Gray, 11 Fed. 179, 181; Mutual Benefit Life Ins. Co. v. Ruse, 8 Ga. 534, 540; Walsh v. Homer, 10 Mo. 6, 16, 45 Am. Dec. 342.

[18] Columbian Ins. Co. v. Catlett, 12 Wheat. (25 U. S.) 383, 384, 6 L. ed. 664.

[19] Columbian Ins. Co. v. Catlett, 12 Wheat. (25 U. S.) 383, 6 L. ed. 664. Cited in Hostetter v. Gray, 11 Fed. 181; The Giulio, 34 Fed. 911; Burgess v. Equitable Marine Ins. Co. 126 Mass. 70, 81, 30 Am. Rep. 654; Arnold v. Pacific Mutual Ins. Co. 78 N. Y. 7, 17.

[20] Aiken v. Mississippi Mutual Ins. Co. 14 Mart. (La.) N. S. 661; Turner v. Protection Ins. Co. 25 Me. 515, 43 Am. Dec. 294; Lapham v. Atlas Ins. Co. 24 Pick. (41 Mass.) 1; Motteaux v. London Assur. Co. 1 Atk. 545, 13 Eng. Rul. Cas. 467; O'Reilly v. Gonne, 4 Camp. 249, 16 R. R. 788; Pelly v. Royal Exch. Assur. Co. 1 Burr. 341; 1 Marshall on Ins. (ed. 1810) 207, *209, reporting Lavabre v. Wilson, 1 Doug. 284.

for repairs, consider the extent of the danger, the distance of the port from the course of the voyage, the facilities afforded, and the quickness with which the necessary material can be there procured, and, although there are other nearer ports, the vessel may seek the most proper place for repairs.[1] And if a vessel is driven by stress of weather into a port of distress, or makes a port of necessity, the master is not bound to remain at such port for the needed repairs or refitting, but may in good faith and the exercise of sound judgment, having in view the interests of all concerned, go to a second port more suitable in point of convenience, quickness, and expense, and for refitting; and this rule would also apply in case the necessary repairs cannot be had at the first port.[2] It is held, however, that if a flatboat navigating the Mississippi, after sustaining damage by collision, neglects to make necessary repairs through the master's belief that they are not required, or if repairs not being practicable he neglects to transship the cargo, that the underwriters are released.[3]

After a departure from the course for repairs the master must pursue the new course without deviation, so as to reach the ship's destination in the shortest and most expeditious manner, unless prevented by necessity, some unforeseen obstacle, or other justifying cause, and any wilful departure from the course of the new voyage or unnecessary delay thereon will be a new deviation, releasing the insurer as in the original voyage; although the master is not obligated at all events to enter the new port, as in case the state of the weather renders it dangerous, but he may seek another convenient port without vitiating the insurance.[4] And where a vessel insured to Maderia, and being in sight of it, was prevented by heavy weather from entering, and the master deemed it prudent to run for the Cape de Verde Islands, and might have obtained provisions but not repairs at Mogadore, but might have returned to Madeira, this was held evidence of a deviation without justifying cause.[5]

If the accident happens while the property is at the risk of the underwriters, and the ship cannot be repaired at the port of departure, the vessel may go to the nearest port where the damage

[1] Turner v. Protection Ins. Co. 25 Me. 515, 43 Am. Dec. 294; Morgan v. Oswald, 3 Taunt. 554.

[2] Silloway v. Neptune Ins. Co. 12 Gray (78 Mass.) 73; Hall v. Franklin Ins. Co. 9 Pick. (26 Mass.) 466.

[3] Stewart v. Tennessee Marine & Fire Ins. Co. 1 Humph. (20 Tenn.) 242.

[4] Turner v. Protection Ins. Co. 25 Me. 515, 43 Am. Dec. 294; 1 Marshall on Marine Ins. (ed. 1810) 205, 209.

[5] Neilson v. Columbian Ins. Co. 1 Johns. (N. Y.) 301.

can be repaired without prejudice to the insurance. The deviation is as excusable as if the accident had happened on the voyage, and the case is the same as if the vessel had been repaired at the port of departure, but the burden of proof is on the assured to show the necessity for such act, and also that the vessel was taken to the nearest port at which repairs could be made. A case of this character is, however, to be distinguished from that where the vessel goes out of her course to supply a defect in the vessel's original seaworthiness.[6] So a vessel is not restricted to going into port once for repairs, but may go more than once if the necessity warrants.[7] So a vessel insured "at and from" a foreign port may return after sailing for necessary repairs, and sail again, and the insurer be obligated in port also after the vessel's return and on the subsequent voyage.[8] So a vessel insured from a port of lading may return for repairs necessitated by striking the bar when leaving port.[9] And under a like policy a delay for repairs before the vessel is ready to take in cargo is not voluntary, and therefore justifiable.[10]

§ 2420. Stress of weather: port of necessity.—Stress of weather, or a tempest or peril of the sea, which drives the ship out of her course, or forces her to depart from her route to seek a refuge, is a justifying cause for a deviation. The master may also in good faith and in the exercise of such judgment as is required of a master's skill, prudence, or discretion seek refuge from a tempest or wait for a wind.[11] A lighter insured for a voyage from Norwalk, Connecticut, to Jersey City, is not guilty of a deviation because she makes fast to a Brooklyn dock as a proper precaution to overcome the force of the wind and tide.[12]

§ 2421. Stress of weather: vessel need not return to point whence driven.—If a vessel is driven out of her course by stress of weather or a peril of the sea into any port, she is only obligated to pro-

[6] Cruder v. Philadelphia Ins. Co. 2 Wash. (U. S. C. C.) 262, Fed. Cas. No. 3,453, per Washington, J. See Hutton v. American Ins. Co. 7 Hill (N. Y.) 321.

[7] Hall v. Franklin Ins. Co. 9 Pick. (26 Mass.) 466; Ellery v. New England Ins. Co. 8 Pick. (25 Mass.) 14.

[8] Taylor v. Lowell, 3 Mass. 331, 3 Am. Dec. 141; Merchants' Ins. Co. v. Clapp, 11 Pick. (28 Mass.) 56.

[9] Wiggin v. Amory, 13 Mass. 118.

[10] Smith v. Surridge, 4 Esp. 25, 6 R. R. 837.

[11] Graham v. Commercial Ins. Co. 11 Johns. (N. Y.) 352; Robinson v. Marine Ins. Co. 2 Johns. (N. Y.) 89; Campbell v. Williamson, 2 Bay (S. C.) 237; Delaney v. Stoddard, 1 Term Rep. 22, 1 R. R. 139; 1 Marshall on Ins. (ed. 1810) 206.

[12] New Jersey Lighterage Co. v. New York Mutual Ins. Co. 49 N. Y. Super. Ct. 165.

ceed thence to her port of destination, and need not turn back to the point whence she was driven.[13]

§ 2422. Compulsory delay or deviation by superior authority.—If a vessel is compelled to anchor, in a port not described in the policy, by the military power of a belligerent, it is no deviation.[14] for a delay may be justified when necessitated by physical as well as moral force, which the master could not, or ought not, to resist. But a vessel is not justified in departing from her course in obedience to orders of a ship of war, no force, threats, or remonstrance being used, and no force being exercised which the master as a good subject ought not to have resisted.[15] And a vessel insured to an island and market, and having arrived at the island and discharged as part of her cargo, and taken on ballast necessary to her safety, and while proceeding on her voyage is compelled by the government to put into a port at which there is no market for her cargo, there is no deviation which releases the insurers.[16] And where a neutral ship was carried by a British cruiser out of her course, but she was afterward released and proceeded on her voyage, it was held not a voluntary act, and therefore no deviation, although the vessel was insured against sea and fire risks only.[17]

§ 2423. Turned away: blockade.—If a vessel is insured against sea risks only, and is turned away from her port by a ship of war because of a blockade, and departs by reason thereof, and is driven by stress of weather into another port, this is a justifiable deviation.[18] But where a ship is turned away from her port of destination because it is in the enemy's hands, and is unable to unload any part of her cargo or make necessary repairs, and makes for a port of safety, it is held that there is such a deviation as to discharge the insurers from the moment she is so turned away.[19] This question will, however, be more fully considered elsewhere.[20]

§ 2424. Compulsory delay or deviation by acts of crew.—If the master is compelled by force to depart from the course of the voy-

[13] Delaney v. Stoddard, 1 Term Rep. 22, 1 R. R. 139, per Lord Mansfield, reported in 1 Marshall on Ins. (ed. 1810) 206 et seq.

[14] Savage v. Pleasants, 5 Binn. (Pa.) 403, 6 Am. Dec. 424.

[15] Phelps v. Auldjo, 2 Camp. 350, 11 R. R. 725, per Lord Ellenborough. See also Burgess v. Equitable Marine Ins. Co. 126 Mass. 70, 30 Am. Rep. 654, per Endicott, J.

[16] Deblois v. Ocean Ins. Co. 16 Pick. (33 Mass.) 303, 28 Am. Dec. 245.

[17] Scott v. Thompson, 4 Bos. & P. 181, 1 Bos. & P. (N. R.) 181.

[18] Robinson v. Marine Ins. Co. 2 Johns. (N. Y.) 89; Snowden v. Phœnix Ins. Co. 3 Binn. (Pa.) 457. See § 2741 herein.

[19] Parkin v. Tunno, 2 Camp. 59, 11 East, 92, 10 R. R. 422.

[20] As to capture, arrest, restraint, detention, etc. See §§ 2737 et seq. herein.

age, or delay the same by acts of his crew, it is an excusable deviation, and it makes no difference whether the master be constrained to deviate by actual physical force on the part of the crew or by their refusal to otherwise navigate the ship. It is sufficient that the acts of the crew create a necessity which leaves the master, in the exercise of a sound judgment and discretion, no alternative but to deviate.[1]

§ 2425. Departure from route or delay to save life or property.—A vessel may depart from her course or may delay to save life and succor mariners or passengers destitute or suffering on board distressed vessels, in danger of shipwreck or foundering, but a departure from the course or delay for the purpose of saving property alone is not justifiable. If there is a double motive to save life or relieve distress, and also to save property, there is no deviation, and if the master sees another vessel in apparent distress, he is clearly justified in departing from the course of the voyage or in delaying to ascertain if there are lives to be saved or distress to be relieved. In all such cases the master will have the benefit of any doubt, and a favorable construction be given his motives; for the duty of succoring distressed vessels is imposed by every dictate, not only of policy, but of humanity upon every man who has it in his power to render such aid or relief.[2]

It is not a deviation for a vessel to go out of her course three miles to speak another at sea, on seeing a signal for that purpose,

[1] Burgess v. Equitable Marine Ins. Co. 126 Mass. 70, 30 Am. Rep. 654, per Endicott, J.; Elton v. Brogden, 2 Strange, 1264, 9 Eng. Rul. Cas. 413, per Lee, C. J.; Driscoll v. Bovil, 1 Bos. & P. 313; Driscoll v. Passmore, 1 Bos. & P. 200, 4 R. R. 782. See Brazier v. Clap, 5 Mass. 1.

[2] United States.—Mason v. Ship Blaireau, 2 Cranch (6 U. S.) 240, 2 L. ed. 266, per Marshall, J.; Bond v. The Brig Cora, 2 Wash. (U. S. C. C.) 80, Fed. Cas. No. 1,621; Crocker v. Jackson, 1 Sprague (U. S. C. C.) 141, Fed. Cas. No. 3,398; The Schooner Boston, 1 Sum. (U. S. C. C.) 328, Fed. Cas. No. 1,673; per Story, J.; A Box of Bullion, 1 Sprague (U. S. C. C.) 57, Fed. Cas. No. 17,717; The Henry Ewbank, 1 Sum. (U. S. C. C.) 400, Fed. Cas. No. 6,376.

Louisiana. — Herman v. Western Ins. Co. 13 La. 523.

Massachusetts.—Burgess v. Equitable Marine Ins. Co. 126 Mass. 70, 30 Am. Rep. 654, per Endicott, J.; Perkins v. Augusta Banking Co. 10 Gray (76 Mass.) 312, 71 Am. Dec. 654.

Missouri.—Walsh v. Homer, 10 Mo. 6, 45 Am. Dec. 342; Settle v. St. Louis Perpetual Marine Ins. Co. 7 Mo. 379.

England.—African Merchants Co. v. British & Foreign Marine Ins. Co. 8 L. R. Ex. 154, 42 L. J. Ex. 60, 28 L. T. 233, 21 W. R. 484, 1 Asp. M. C. 588; The Beaver, 3 C. Rob. 292, per Lord Stowell; Lawrence v. Sydebotham, 6 East, 45, 2 Smith, 214, 8 R. R. 385, 9 Eng. Rul. Cas. 402, per Lawrence, J.

See marine insurance act of England, sec. 49 (1) (e), under § 2417 herein.

nor to delay three hours to take from a foreign ship, bound to a foreign port shipwrecked mariners of the United States, for the purpose of bringing them direct to the United States.[3] It is also held no deviation in the navigation of the Mississippi for one vessel to stop and assist another in distress, even though no lives are in danger.[4] In a federal case under a charter party, it was, however, held an unjustifiable deviation where the vessel proceeded forty miles out of her course to take in tow a disabled vessel, and she was detained seven days, although under the bill of lading the vessel had liberty to call at any ports for any purpose whatsoever, and "to tow and assist vessels in all situations." But this clause was held to refer to ports along the course of the specified route, and the charter gave no such liberty. In this case the vessel was held liable to the charterer for increased premiums and insurance, and for interest on the goods during the delay.[5]

The rule as to saving life is not confined to mariners or passengers so distressed or suffering on board other vessels, but a departure or delay is justifiable to relieve urgent distress, or administer to those on board taken from distressed vessels and suffering from disasters of shipwreck, and also of all other distressed and suffering persons lawfully on board. But in all cases where this last rule is sought to be applied, in determining whether the deviation is justifiable, the extent, degree, and urgency of the necessity which demands the relief, and the adequacy of the present means available should be carefully weighed, as well as the nearness to port, the increased length of the voyage, the delay necessitated, and the danger to the other lives on board, and whether a justifying necessity exists must be one of fact. The following case, however, commends itself, in holding that the vessel was justified in delaying eleven days for necessary medical attendance to the captain's wife, who, being in the third month of her pregnancy, had fallen six feet when about to go down into the cabin. The ship was passing Gibraltar at the time, and she had gone on deck to look at the rocks, and had turned suddenly and missed her footing, and was seriously injured.[6] But a delay of three weeks of a chartered vessel in a port of necessity is not justified by an attack of acute rheumatism of the master, and in such case the charterer is entitled to indemnity for the detention.[7]

[3] A Box of Bullion, 1 Sprague (U. S. C. C.) 57, Fed. Cas. No. 17,717.

[4] Walsh v. Homer, 10 Mo. 6, 45 Am. Dec. 342.

[5] Ardan S. S. Co. v. Thebaud, 35 Fed. 620.

[6] Perkins v. Augusta Banking & Ins. Co. 10 Gray (76 Mass.) 312, 71 Am. Dec. 654.

[7] The Giulio, 34 Fed. 909 (a noteworthy case).

An imminent peril to life and property outweighs all other considerations, and requires the master to instantly depart from the voyage insured and seek the nearest land, nor should the insurer's interest control the master in deciding upon such a deviation.[8]

§ 2426. Delay at port or place or in prosecuting voyage.—As we have seen, not only must reference be had to the terms of the policy as to the route or voyage permitted, but also to the character of the voyage and the purposes thereof, and as the risk may be varied by a departure from the route, so also may it be changed by delay in commencing or prosecuting the voyage insured. It is a general rule that an insured ship must proceed on her voyage with reasonable expedition, and without unnecessary delay.[9] The delay may also occur in port after the commencement of the risk, as well as in prosecuting the voyage,[10] and evidence of an unreasonable delay in prosecuting the voyage is admissible.[11] So delay of the vessel at intermediate ports, not stipulated for, where the cargo is insured for a voyage between two designated ports, constitutes such a deviation as to discharge the insurer for a subsequent loss in the absence of a custom or necessity justifying such acts.[12] If a vessel be permitted to go from one port to another to collect her cargo, and she unnecessarily exhaust at one port the whole time allowed, according to the usage of the trade, to complete her cargo, she cannot go to the other port without being guilty of such a deviation as will avoid the policy.[13] Where the delay is relied on as a deviation, it is a question for the jury whether it was justified in the exercise of sound discretion and good faith, by necessity, or reasonable cause.[14] An idle waste of time after a vessel has completed the purchases for which she entered a port, is a deviation which discharges the underwriters.[15] If the delay in commencing or prosecuting the voyage is reasonable and necessary for the purposes of the voyage, or is excused by other justifying cause, there is no deviation.[16] And a deviation may arise from unjustifiable delay at the end of the voyage, although awaiting her turn to be admitted

[8] Turner v. Protection Ins. Co. 25 Me. 515, 43 Am. Dec. 294.

[9] Himely v. South Carolina Ins. Co. 1 Mills (S. C.) 153, 12 Am. Dec. 623.

[10] Taylor v. Lowell, 3 Mass. 331, 3 Am. Dec. 141; Merchants' Ins. Co. v. Clapp, 11 Pick. (28 Mass.) 56; 1 Arnould on Marine Ins. (Perkins' ed. 1850) 357, *351; Id. (Maclachlan's ed. 1887) 459. See Id. (8th ed. Hart & Simey) secs. 411 et seq., pp. 537 et seq.

[11] Amsinck v. American Ins. Co. 129 Mass. 185.

[12] Mannheim Ins. Co. v. Atlantic & L. S. R. Co. (Rap. Jud. Queb.) 11 B. R. 200.

[13] Oliver v. Maryland Ins. Co. 7 Cranch (11 U. S.) 487, 3 L. ed. 414.

[14] Foster v. Jackson Marine Ins. Co. 1 Edm. Sel. Cas. (N. Y.) 290.

[15] Oliver v. Maryland Ins. Co. 7 Cranch (11 U. S.) 487, 3 L. ed. 414.

[16] Columbian Ins. Co. v. Catlett, 12 Wheat. (25 U. S.) 383, 6 L. ed. 664, to a dock to unload is not a deviation by the vessel;[17] but if there exists no such justifying excuse for delaying the commencement or prosecution of the voyage insured, or if the vessel delays in port for the prosecution of business not connected with the purposes of the voyage, the underwriter is discharged.[18]

If the vessel delays the commencement of the risk by undertaking an intermediate voyage, this is a deviation.[19] What constitutes a reasonable and justifiable cause for delay in commencing or prosecuting the voyage is dependent upon varying conditions, such as the character of the voyage, the business or trade in which the ship is engaged, the description of the risk, or terms of the policy. The vessel may, undoubtedly, be detained for a reasonable time for the purposes of the adventure, but such fact cannot be determined by any positive rule; every case must depend upon its entire circumstances.[20] The extent of the stay in port may vary, but mere length of time is not controlling,[1] and a delay which would not be justifiable in one case may be excusable in another. Thus, where a vessel stayed in port six months after the date of the policy, it was held not to be a deviation, it not being fraudulent or varying the risk.[2] So delays have been held justifiable when existing for seventy-two days,[3] for one hundred and nine days,[4] for over four months,[5] for two months,[6] and for nine months for needed repairs and to obtain a cargo.[7] So a delay for over a month after the cargo was loaded, caused by inability to obtain a crew, is per Story, J.; Phillips v. Irving, 7 Man. & G. 325, 8 Scott (N. R.) 3, 13 L. J. C. P. 145, 9 Eng. Rul. Cas. 396; Burgess v. Equitable Marine Ins. Co. 126 Mass. 70, 30 Am. Rep. 654, per Endicott, J.

[17] Samuel v. Royal Exchange Assur. Co. 8 Barn. & C. 119, 6 L. J. (O. S.) K. B. 315, 13 Eng. Rul. Cas. 641.

[18] Seamans v. Loring, 1 Mason (U. S. C. C.) 127, Fed. Cas. No. 12,583; Burgess v. Equitable Marine Ins. Co. 126 Mass. 70, 30 Am. Rep. 654, per Endicott, J.; Earl v. Shaw, 1 Johns. Cas. (N. Y.) 313, 1 Am. Dec. 117; Mount v. Larkins, 8 Bing. 122, per Tindal, C. J. See § 2380 herein; African Merchants Co. v. British & Foreign Marine Ins. Co. L. R. 8 Ex. 154, 42 L. J. Ex. 60, 28 L. T. 233, 21 W. R. 484, 1 Asp. M. C. 588.

[19] Vallance v. Dewar, 1 Camp. 503, 10 R. R. 738. See § 2380 herein.

[20] See Phillips v. Irving, 7 Man. & G. 325, 13 L. J. Com. P. 145, 8 Scott (N. R.) 3, 9 Eng. Rul. Cas. 396; Motteaux v. London Assurance Co. 1 Atk. 545, 13 Eng. Rul. Cas. 467; Columbian Ins. Co. v. Catlett, 12 Wheat. (25 U. S.) 383, 6 L. ed. 664, Story, J.

[1] Grant v. King, 4 Esp. 175, 6 R. R. 849, per Lord Ellenborough.

[2] Earl v. Shaw, 1 Johns. (N. Y.) 313, 314, 1 Am. Dec. 117.

[3] Columbian Ins. Co. v. Catlett, 12 Wheat. (25 U. S.) 383, 6 L. ed. 664.

[4] Bain v. Case, 3 Car. & P. 496, M. & M. 262.

[5] Gilfert v. Hallett, 2 Johns. (N. Y.) 296, 297.

[6] Langhorn v. Allnutt, 4 Taunt. 511, 12 R. R. 660.

[7] Phillips v. Irving, 13 L. J. Com. P. 145, 7 Man. & G. 325, 8 Scott (N. R.) 3, 9 Eng. Rul. Cas. 396.

excusable, but is not justified by proceedings in admiralty for the recovery of debts,[8] and, after obtaining a manifest and custom-house clearances, a delay long enough to put goods of the insured on board by a packer was excusable.[9] But the insurers will be released by a delay of eight days to obtain a supercargo,[10] or of twenty-four hours to transfer goods without necessity.[11] So also of a delay to save cargo of a sunken ship.[12] There is in policies "at and from" an implied agreement that the risk shall commence in a reasonable time, in the absence of an express provision to the contrary.[13] The vessel under such a policy may not, therefore, delay an unreasonable time after she is "at" and before commencing a voyage; she may delay a reasonable time for justifiable cause.[14] A delay of four months where the policy attaches at the port of lading,[15] or of twenty-four months not accounted for, releases the underwriters.[16] So under a policy "at and from, and until moored twenty-four hours in safety," an unnecessary stay for a month discharges the underwriters.[17] And the ship may not delay unnecessarily before arriving at the outport under a policy "at and from" homeward;[18] nor may the master detain the vessel for his own purposes before arriving "at" the outport under such a policy.[19] A vessel insured from a port with liberty to trade is not justified in staying seven months beyond the usual time of vessels engaged in such trade.[20] When staying for the purposes of trade having no reference to the main scope of the voyage insured, it is a deviation, even though there is a liberty of ports for [8] Augusta Ins. & Banking Co. v. Abbott, 12 Md. 348.

[9] Carruthers v. Gray, 15 East, 35, 3 Camp. 142.

[10] Martin v. Delaware Ins. Co. 2 Wash. (U. S. C. C.) 254, Fed. Cas. No. 9,161.

[11] Settle v. St. Louis Perpetual Marine Fire & Life Ins. Co. 7 Mo. 379.

[12] African Merchants Co. v. British & Foreign Marine Ins. Co. 8 L. R. Ex. 154, 42 L. J. Ex. 60, 28 L. T. 233, 21 W. R. 484, 1 Asp. M. C. 588.

[13] De Wolff v. Archangel Maritime Bank & Ins. Co. 9 L. R. Q. B. 451, 43 L. J. Q. B. 147, 39 L. T. 605, 22 W. R. 801, 2 Asp. M. C. 273, 13 Eng. Rul. Cas. 609.

[14] Chitty v. Selwyn, 2 Atk. 359; Augusta Ins. & Banking Co. v. Abbott, 12 Md. 348; Motteaux v. London Assur. Co. 1 Atk. 545, 13 Eng. Rul. Cas. 467, per Lord Hardwick; Seamans v. Loring, 1 Mason (U. S. C. C.) 127, Fed. Cas. No. 12,583.

[15] Palmer v. Fenning, 9 Bing. 460, 2 Moore & S. 624.

[16] Palmer v. Marshall, 8 Bing. 79, 317, 1 M. & Scott, 161, 454, 1 L. J. C. P. 19.

[17] Leigh v. Mather, 1 Esp. 411, 5 R. R. 740.

[18] Mount v. Larkins, 8 Bing. 108, 1 L. J. Com. P. N. S. 20, 1 M. & Scott, 165; Freeman v. Taylor, 8 Bing. 124, 1 L. J. C. P. 26, 1 M. & Scott, 182.

[19] Mount v. Larkins, 8 Bing. 108, 1 L. J. Com. P. N. S. 20, 1 M. & Scott, 165.

[20] Hartley v. Buggin, 3 Doug. 39. See Lavabre v. Wilson, 1 Doug. 284; Hamilton v. Sheddon, 3 Mees. & W. 49, M. & H. 334, 7 L. J. Ex. 1.

any purpose whatsoever.[1] If the delay is incurred bona fide in the course of trade, and to accomplish the objects of the adventure, it is excusable;[2] as in case of a "seeking ship" waiting for a remunerative cargo, owing to the large number of vessels in port, the scarcity of produce, the depressed state of trade, and extremely low rates of freight.[3] If, on being refused an entrance at the place of destination, a master delays under a reasonable expectation of finally being able to obtain it, it will not be a deviation.[4] So the ship may be justified in waiting bona fide at the port that she has entered for the purpose of disposing of her cargo at a price limited by the owner, which is reasonable. The master is not compelled to sacrifice his cargo so soon as he arrives in port by selling it at whatever price he can obtain, but he ought not fairly to be permitted to wait beyond such time, as it is clearly evident that there will be no change in the market.[5] So delay on an intermediate voyage may be justified by the usages of a particular trade,[6] and where a vessel is driven into a port of necessity, and a pestilence breaks out, which prevents her pursuing her voyage, it is a loss within the meaning of the policy,[7] and a delay may be justified under a liberty in the policy,[8] but the vessel must not delay beyond the time permitted.[9]

§ 2427. Delay for towing vessel.—A delay for the purpose of towing not permitted by the terms of the policy, or within the purposes and scope of the voyage insured, is such a change of risk as releases the insurers. Thus, taking a brig in tow by a steamer is a deviation by the latter, there being nothing in the policy which expressly authorized it; especially where the steamer is, by reason of said tow, compelled to stop because stress of weather prevents making headway with the brig.[10] In a New York case the facts were as follows: On June 13, 1879, the company insured a steam

[1] Williams v. Shee, 3 Camp. 469, 14 R. R. 811.

[2] Columbian Ins. Co. v. Catlett, 12 Wheat. (25 U. S.) 383, 6 L. ed. 664, per Story, J.

[3] Phillips v. Irving, 7 Man. & G. 325, 13 L. J. Com. P. 145, 8 Scott (N. R.) 3, 9 Eng. Rul. Cas. 396.

[4] Suydam v. Marine Ins. Co. 2 Johns. (N. Y.) 138.

[5] Columbian Ins. Co. v. Catlett, 12 Wheat. (25 U. S.) 383, 6 L. ed. 664 per Story, J.; Ellerry v. New England Ins. Co. 8 Pick. (25 Mass.) 14.

[6] Vallance v. Dewar, 1 Camp. 503. 10 R. R. 738; Kingston v. Knibbs, 1 Camp. 508, 10 R. R. 742.

[7] Williams v. Smith, 2 Caine (N. Y.) 1, 2 Am. Dec. 209.

[8] Doyle v. Powell, 4 Barn. & A. 267, 1 N. & M. 678; Hughes v. Union Ins. Co. 3 Wheat. (16 U. S.) 159, 4 L. ed. 357; Langhorn v. Allnutt, 4 Taunt. 511, 12 R. R. 660. And see cases under sections in this chapter covering "liberty of ports."

[9] Doyle v. Powell, 4 Barn. & A. 267, 1 N. & M. 678.

[10] Natchez Ins. Co. v. Stanton, 2 Smedes & M. (10 Miss.) 340, 41 Am. Dec. 592.

tug, then lying at St. Georges in the Bermudas, "at and from Bermuda to New York," to sail during July. On July 2d she left her berth and steamed to Hamilton, about twenty miles, where she took a schooner in tow and brought it to St. Georges, and from there towed it out to sea, about five miles, and then returned to her berth. On July 3d, after receiving her clearance papers, she towed another schooner to sea, then proceeded to Hamilton and took on coal and a lifeboat, and sailed from there July 4th for New York, and was lost en route. It was held that the towing trips were such deviations as forfeited the insurance.[11]

§ 2428. Vessel turned away, and delay in port which she has entered.—A vessel which has been turned away by a ship of war and has entered a port which under the terms of the policy she may enter, in such case is justified in delaying in said port a reasonable time to avoid heavy weather and to secure the protection of a convoy to avoid seizure.[12]

§ 2429. Departure from route or delay to avoid danger, cruisers, or capture.—If the danger of capture is real and imminent, or there is a reasonable and just ground, in the judgment and discretion of the owners or the master acting in good faith for the belief that it is so, a vessel is justified, in order to avoid enemy's cruisers, in delaying in port, or in going out of her usual course, or in putting into port to seek convoy, or in hastily departing from a port before she is fully equipped and prepared for her voyage.[13] And a vessel pursued by a cruiser may seek an intermediate port to avoid the danger of capture.[14] So putting into a port, while obliged to wait for a favorable wind in order to avoid such danger is justifiable.[15]

[11] Snyder v. Atlantic Mutual Ins. Co. 95 N. Y. 196, 47 Am. Rep. 29. See also Herman v. Western Marine & Fire Ins. Co. 13 La. 523; Gourock Rope Works Co. v. Fleming, 5 Ct. Sess. Cas. 3d ser. 501. See § 2398 herein.

[12] Snowden v. Phœnix Ins. Co. 3 Binn. (Pa.) 457. The ship in this case awaited convoy to avoid seizure under Bonaparte's Milan decree, which was a violation of the law of nations, and the vessel delayed four months.

[13] United States.—Oliver v. Maryland Ins. Co. 7 Cranch (11 U. S.) 487, 493, 3 L. ed. 414; Goyon v. Pleasants, 3 Wash. (U. S. C. C.) 241, Fed. Cas. No. 5,647.

Maryland.—Riggin v. Patapsco Ins. Co. 7 Har. & J. (Md.) 279, 16 Am. Dec. 302.

Massachusetts.—Whitney v. Haven, 13 Mass. 172; Post v. Phœnix Ins. Co. 10 Johns. (N. Y.) 79, 80; Reade v. Commercial Ins. Co. 3 Johns. (N. Y.) 453, 3 Am. Dec. 495; Patrick v. Ludlow, 3 Johns. (N. Y.) 10, 2 Am. Dec. 130; Suydam v. Marine Ins. Co. 2 Johns. (N. Y.) 138.

England.—Blackenhagen v. London Assurance Co. 1 Camp. 454, 10 R. R. 729, 15 Eng. Rul. Cas. 650; Driscol v. Bovil, 1 Bos. & P. 313; O'Reilly v. Gonne, 4 Camp. 249, 16 R. R. 788.

[14] Post v. Phœnix Ins. Co. 10 Johns. (N. Y.) 79.

[15] Suydam v. Marine Ins. Co. 2

So a vessel may put into port to obtain the protection of convoy, the danger of capture being imminent.[16] And a vessel with leave to stop at a port to learn if any men-of-war are off a certain port is justified in putting into said port to avoid cruisers, and in delaying there so long as the danger from the cruisers off such port may continue,[17] but the vessel should not remain longer than necessary.[18] So if there is imminent danger of capture, the vessel may delay sailing, and it is not a deviation if done to avoid a peril insured against.[19] The general principles governing the class of cases considered under this section are as follows: While the underwriters are presumed tacitly to assent to all reasonable efforts on the master's part for the safety of the property insured, and to authorize the usual means of avoiding urgent danger,[20] yet an increase of risk after the voyage is begun will not excuse the insured beyond a prudent and necessary deviation in order to avoid it.[1] And the danger which will justify a vessel in remaining in port a long time must be obvious, immediate, and directly applied to the interruption of the voyage, and imminent, not distant and contingent and indefinite.[2] A mere apprehension of danger, unless founded upon reasonable evidence, does not justify deviation. The peril apprehended must be one that would occasion serious loss or injury; it must be imminent and obvious, not problematical or contingent. If the apprehended danger be such as would justify a departure, the master should, if possible, go to the nearest practicable port in Johns. (N. Y.) 138; Post v. Phœnix Ins. Co. 10 Johns. (N. Y.) 79.

[16] Patrick v. Ludlow, 3 Johns. (N. Y.) 10, 2 Am. Dec. 130.

[17] Hughes v. Union Ins. Co. 3 Wheat. (16 U. S.) 159, 4 L. ed. 357. See also as to extent of delay, Post v. Phœnix Ins. Co. 10 Johns. (N. Y.) 79, 80.

The stopping at a place permitted by the policy, to avoid capture, and unloading the cargo, which produced no delay, no increase of risk, and did not alter the voyage, is not such a deviation as to discharge the underwriters, when the vessel was afterwards lost by the perils of the sea. Hughes v. Union Ins. Co. 3 Wheat. (16 U. S.) 159, 4 L. ed. 357. Cited in Jolly v. Baltimore Equitable Soc. 1 Harr. & G. 305, 18 Am. Dec. 288; Thorndike v. Bordman, 4 Pick. 484.

[18] Goyon v. Pleasants, 3 Wash. (U. S. C. C.) 241, Fed. Cas. No. 5,647.

[19] Whitney v. Haven, 13 Mass. 172. See Duerhagen v. United States Ins. Co. 2 Serg. & R. (Pa.) 309; Riggin v. Patapsco Ins. Co. 7 Har. & J. (Md.) 279, 16 Am. Dec. 302; Neilson v. Columbian Ins. Co. 1 Johns. (N. Y.) 301.

[20] Riggin v. Patapsco Ins. Co. 7 Har. & J. (Md.) 279, 16 Am. Dec. 302.

[1] King v. Delaware Ins. Co. 2 Wash. (U. S. C. C.) 300, Fed. Cas. No. 7,788.

[2] Oliver v. Maryland Ins. Co. 7 Cranch (11 U. S.) 487, 3 L. ed. 414. Cited in Crosby v. Fitch, 12 Conn. 410, 421, 31 Am. Dec. 745; Riggin v. Patapsco Ins. Co. 7 Harr. & J. (Md.) 279, 291, 16 Am. Dec. 302.

the course of the voyage, and the deviation is not justified where the vessel seeks a port many hundred miles out of the course.[3]

§ 2430. Vessel delayed by ice.—If a vessel finds it impossible to reach her port of destination by reason of ice closing navigation, she is justified in a reasonable delay, and also in attempting to seek the nearest practicable port in prosecuting her voyage, where the master exercises good faith. Thus, where an insurance was on cargo at and from Carlsham to St. Petersburg, and the vessel sailed, but by reason of adverse winds attempted to get into Revel, but being unable to make that port put into port Baltic, where, being informed that it would be impossible to reach Cronstadt by reason of the ice, she remained about twenty days, when wind and weather appearing favorable she sailed for Revel, but heavy and thick weather and adverse winds coming on she was lost on a shoal while trying to get into Revel, it was held that going to port Baltic and delaying there, and subsequently attempting to make Revel, were justifiable, and not a deviation.[4]

§ 2431. Deviation to comply with warranty.—A deviation is justifiable when necessary to comply with a warranty; as in case of a warranty to depart with convoy. The rule is especially applicable where the departure from the course is in conformity with usage. But if the departure from the route be for another distinct purpose, and not for the purpose of compliance with the warranty, it is not excusable.[5] If, however, a convoy might be obtained at a nearer port than that to which the instructions are to proceed for convoy, conforming to instructions may amount to a deviation.[6]

§ 2432. Departure from course or delay to seek protection of convoy.—If the stipulations of the contract require the master to join convoy, or if the master, acting bona fide and with the sole view of avoiding danger and to seek the safest course to his destination, departs from the route or delays for the purpose of seeking protection of convoy, this is a justifiable deviation,[7] and this is so

[3] Riggin v. Patapsco Ins. Co. 7 Har. & J. (Md.) 279, 16 Am. Dec. 302. See Blackenhagen v. London Assur. Co. 1 Camp. 454, 10 R. R. 729, 13 Eng. Rul. Cas. 650.

[4] Graham v. Commercial Ins. Co. 11 Johns. (N. Y.) 352. See Blackenhagen v. London Assur. Co. 1 Camp. 454, 10 R. R. 729, 13 Eng. Rul. Cas. 650, per Lord Ellenborough.

[5] Bond v. Nutt, Cowp. 601, reported in 1 Marshall on Ins. (ed. 1810) *354, per Lord Mansfield; Gordon v. Morley, 2 Strange, 1265. "A deviation is proper . . . when necessary to comply with a warranty:" Deering's Annot. Civ. Code Cal. sec. 2695, subd. 2. See next section herein.

See marine ins. act of England, sec. 49 (1), under § 2417 herein.

[6] Heselton v. Allnutt, 1 Maule & S. 46.

[7] Governeur v. United States Ins. Co. 1 Caines (N. Y.) 592; Patrick v. Ludlow, 3 Johns. (N. Y.) 10, 2 Am. Dec. 30. Snowden v. Phœnix Ins. Co. 3 Binn. (Pa.) 457; D'Agui-even though the vessel is forced by stress of weather to prosecute or continue her voyage without convoy.[8]

§ 2433. Right to convoy prize under liberty clauses to cruise, capture, etc.—The liberty to "cruise or capture" or "cruise, capture, and man prizes," and the like, does not permit a vessel to delay or depart from the course of her voyage to convoy her prize and thereby correspondingly change the risk, but if there is no delay or departure from the route in convoying the prize whereby the route is changed, such act is not a deviation, nor is it a deviation to convoy if there be a liberty so to do; and if a liberty to cruise and capture, or the like, be given, but it is confined in its exercise within certain specified limits, such clause controls.[9]

Wthin this rule sailing as convoy for ten days was held no deviation.[10] But where the master convoyed his prize, and several times during the voyage shortened sail and lay to in order to give time to the prize to come up, and particularly on one occasion, when the prize carried away her foretopmast, it was held a deviation, and that the liberty did not extend to convoying prize, even though the port to which she was being convoyed was within the limits of the voyage.[11] And if the liberty be extensive enough to warrant convoying the vessel into port, such provision will not authorize a delay there beyond what the permission necessarily and reasonably implies.[12]

§ 2434. Deviation to recapture vessel.—Where the master of a vessel departs from the course of the insured voyage in pursuit of a vessel which has been piratically taken off by its crew, it is a deviation, unless the act of the master is such as to constitute barratry.[13]

lar v. Tobin, Holt N. P. 185, 2 Marsh. 265; Bond v. Gonsales, 2 Salk. 445, Holt, 469; Bond v. Nutt, Cowp. 601, per Lord Ellenborough, reported in 1 Marshall on Ins. (ed. 1810) *210, *355.

[8] Patrick v. Ludlow, 3 Johns. (N. Y.) 10, 2 Am. Dec. 30; Lane v. Glover, 5 Taunt. 89.

[9] Ward v. Wood, 13 Mass. 539 (liberty "to cruise and capture"); Lawrence v. Sydebotham, 6 East, 45, 2 Smith 214, 8 R. R. 385, 9 Eng. Rul. Cas. 402, reported in 1 Marshall on Ins. (ed. 1810) 199 ("with leave to chase, capture, and man prizes"); Hibbert v. Halliday, 2 Taunt. 428, 11 R. R. 633 ("to chase, capture, and man any prize or prizes . . . to cruise anywhere and in any latitude on the outward bound voyage on this side of Cape Horn"); Jarratt v. Ward, 1 Camp. 263, 10 R. R. 677 ("to cruise for, chase, capture, man and see into port any ship or ships of the enemies").

[10] Ward v. Wood, 13 Mass. 539.

[11] Lawrence v. Sydebotham, 6 East, 45, 8 R. R. 385, 9 Eng. Rul. Cas. 402, reported in 1 Marshall on Ins. (ed. 1810) *199.

[12] Jarratt v. Ward, 1 Camp. 263, 10 R. R. 677 (delay for repairs not justified).

[13] Hood v. Nesbitt, 2 Dall. (Pa.) 137, 1 Yeates (Pa.) 114, 1 L. ed. 321, 1 Am. Dec. 265; Robinson v.

§ 2435. Letter of marque: cruising and making prizes.—A merchant ship carrying letters of marque and insured as such has no right to cruise at large in quest of prizes; that is, she must not delay the prosecution of her voyage to lie in wait for prizes, or depart from her course to seek them. But if hostile vessels come in sight within the course of her voyage, she may chase and capture them, or lie in wait for them, without its being such a deviation as will release the insurer; although such acts of delay or departure must be fairly attributable to motives for self-defense, or to intimidate the enemy and repel a meditated attack before she herself should be disabled. If said acts are, however, based upon motives of profit, for the mere purpose of making a prize, they are not justifiable. The right to capture, if justifiable, draws to it all the incidents necessary to make it effectual, and, therefore, justifies a delay for the purpose of manning a prize. If it is made known to the underwriters at the time of insuring that the ship carries letters of marque, it makes no difference that the vessel is not described as such in the policy.[14]

Such, at least, seems to be the law in this country, and it evidently conforms with that existing under the English cases.[15]

Jones, 8 Mass. 536, 5 Am. Dec. 514. See § 2415 herein.

[14] Haven v. Holland, 2 Mason (U. S. C. C.) 230, Fed. Cas. No. 6,229, per Story, J.

[15] Wiggin v. Boardman, 14 Mass. 12; Wiggin v. Amory, 14 Mass. 1, 7 Am. Dec. 175, s. c. 13 Mass. 118, 123; Hibbert v. Halliday, 2 Taunt. 428, 11 R. R. 633, 1 Marshall on Ins. *195 et seq. citing Cock v. Townson, Beawes, 316; Park on Ins. 396, per Lord Camden, C. J., and reporting, Jolly v. Walker, Beawes, 316; Park on Ins. 396, where the case was left by Lord Mansfield to the jury, and it was admitted that the vessel could not cruise, yet if an enemy came in her way she might engage or defend herself. The vessel was insured "at and from London to Cork and the West Indies," and had letters of marque on board. And Parr v. Anderson, 6 East, 202, where the vessel was insured "with or without letters of marque," and she altered her course a quarter of a point, pursued a hostile vessel in sight for about a quarter of an hour, when she abandoned the chase and proceeded on her voyage, Lord Ellenborough left it to the jury to determine whether the deviation was for the mere purpose of capture or for defense, and if the latter, they should find for the plaintiff. The jury found for defendant, and a new trial was granted, and the case sent back to the jury to ascertain if any usage of trade existed, and what it was. It was also said in this case that the purposes of defense might happen in various ways, "as by making a show of confidence in the face of an enemy with a view to deter them from an attack, or, if that could not be accomplished, with a view to obtain some advantage in the conflict, and the like:" 1 Arnould on Marine Ins. (Perkins' ed. 1850) 395–402, *391–398; Id. (Maclachlan's ed. 1887) 493–99; Id. (8th ed. Hart & Simey) secs. 418 et seq., pp. 544 et seq.); 2 Parsons on Marine Ins. (ed. 1868) 22, 36 et seq. and notes; 1 Phillips on Ins. (3d ed.) 581–84, sec. 1029; 3 Kent's Commentaries (5th ed.) 316.

Although in a Massachusetts case, where the ship carried letters of marque obtained from the American minister for her homeward voyage, with the understanding that they were to be used only for purposes of dispatch, and her armament was increased from four to fourteen guns, and the crew from thirty to seventy men, about three days out from France on her voyage, a brig was seen standing for the insured vessel, she was captured, and a delay of about two hours was made to man the vessel, she was sent into a port in France and condemned, and this was held a deviation.[16] But it was also held that a letter of marque does not confine the vessel to acts merely of defense, but extends the right to pursue hostile ships in sight.[17] So it is decided that the ship may attack and capture a vessel which comes across her course where there is no departure from the voyage, although there are other motives than those merely of self-defense.[18] In a policy, a warranty that "orders will be given that the ship shall not cruise" is satisfied only by positive orders not to cruise, not by mere absence of authority to cruise.[19]

§ 2436. Instructions as to cruising.—If the acts of cruising, chasing, or convoying prize are not justified by the liberty given under the policy, they are none the less a deviation because done in pursuance of her instructions,[20] although it may be a question whether the act of cruising contrary to instructions is a mere deviation or barratry. If the act be based on fraud or criminality of the master to the prejudice of the owners, it would probably be barratrous.[1] A warranty that "orders will be given that the ship shall not cruise" is not complied with unless such orders are expressly given to the captain. No compliance can arise by implication from the implied instructions, and there being no proof of express directions not to cruise, the insurers would be released.[2]

§ 2437. Understood purpose for which letters of marque taken is important.—The understood purpose for which letters of marque are taken ought to be an important factor in determining what [16] Wiggin v. Amory, 14 Mass. 1, 7 Am. Dec. 175, s. c. 13 Mass. 118, 123.

[17] Haven v. Holland, 2 Mason (C. C.) 230, Fed. Cas. No. 6,229. See also Wiggin v. Boardman, 14 Mass. 12.

[18] Jolly v. Walker, Beawes, 316, reported in 1 Marshall on Ins. (ed. 1810) *196; Park on Ins. (3d ed.) 299; 2 Park on Ins. (8th ed.) 630.

[19] Ogden v. Ash, 1 Dall. 162 (Ct. Com. Pl. Phila.) 1 L. ed. 82.

[20] Lawrence v. Sydebotham, 6 East, 45, 2 Smith, 214, 8 R. R. 385, 9 Eng. Rul. Cas. 402.

[1] Moss v. Byron, 6 Term Rep. 379, 3 R. R. 208, as construed in Wiggin v. Amory, 14 Mass. 1, 7 Am. Dec. 175. See Wiggin v. Boardman, 14 Mass. 12; Phyn v. Royal Exch. Assur. Co. 7 Term Rep. 505, 4 R. R. 508.

[2] Ogden v. Ash, 1 Dall. (Pa.) 162, 1 L. ed. 82.

their use shall be; as where they were taken for the sole purpose of inducing seamen to ship, and without any intention of cruising,[3] or where they were taken with the intention of being used for defense only.[4]

§ 2438. Liberty clauses to cruise, capture, etc.: construction.—If the policy gives a liberty "to cruise and capture," or "to chase, capture, and man prizes," or a like liberty, but confines the exercise thereof within certain specified limits, or if there be any other similar stipulation, such liberty must no doubt be confined in its exercise within the strict meaning of the terms used, and the permission cannot be extended beyond what is necessary for the performance of the permitted acts, although such a liberty ought also to carry with its lawful and justifiable exercise all the incidents necessary to make the capture effectual, but nevertheless throughout the entire class of cases of this character, as well as in all those wherever the right of making and securing prize is claimed, the determining factor or test is whether there has been a change of risk. A proven usage may, however, justify an act which would otherwise, under this class of policies, be a deviation.[5]

§ 2439. Carrying letters of marque no deviation in itself.—The mere fact of carrying letters of marque is in itself no deviation.[6]

§ 2440. Liberty clauses to cruise, capture, etc., for designated time.—If the time during which the vessel has liberty to cruise is designated by weeks, days, etc., it means successive weeks, days, etc., from the commencement of the cruise, when no time of commencement is specified, and cruising at different times not within such period is a deviation, unless a usage exists justifying such desultory cruising.[7]

§ 2441. Whether the peril which will justify a deviation must be one insured against.—The question whether a vessel is justified in a delay or a departure from her course to avoid a peril not insured against has been much discussed. Mr. Arnould distinguishes

[3] Moss v. Byron, 6 Term Rep. 379, 3 R. R. 208.

[4] Wiggins v. Amory, 14 Mass. 1, 7 Am. Dec. 175, 13 Mass. 118, 123; Haven v. Holland, 2 Mason (U. S. C. C.) 230, Fed. Cas. No. 6,229; Parr v. Anderson, 6 East, 202, 2 Smith 316, 8 R. R. 461 (contention of defendants).

[5] See Lawrence v. Sydebotham, 6 East, 45, 2 Smith, 214, 8 R. R. 385, 9 Eng. Rul. Cas. 402, per Lord Ellenborough, and cases generally, under §§ 2433-39 herein.

[6] Jarratt v. Ward, 1 Camp. 263, 277, 10 R. R. 677; Haven v. Holland, 2 Mason (U. S. C. C.) 230, Fed. Cas. No. 6,229; Raine v. Bell, 9 East, 195, 9 R. R. 533, 9 Eng. Rul. Cas. 365, per Lawrence, J.; Wiggin v. Amory, 13 Mass. 118; Wiggin v. Boardman, 14 Mass. 12. Formerly otherwise, Denison v. Modigliani, 5 Term Rep. 580.

[7] Syeres v. Bridge, 2 Doug. 527, reported in 1 Marshall on Ins. (ed. 1810) *197 et seq., per Lord Mansfield.

between a deviation necessitated by the immediate and irresistible operation of a peril not insured against or excluded, and a going off the course in order to avoid such peril, or to repair in consequence thereof. Mr. Maclachlan, in his edition of Mr. Arnould's work, does not, however, make this distinction, although he goes to the extent of stating that the deviation is justified when the "necessary effect of the immediate and inevitable operation of a peril not insured against" or excluded.[8] In one of the cases, however, relied on by Mr. Arnould, the insurance was against sea risk and fire only, and the vessel was seized, carried off her course, and detained by a British cruiser, and the court said that a deviation never puts an end to the insurance unless it be a voluntary act of those who have the management of the ship. "Here the deviation was occasioned by force, which in such case is necessity; and there is no ground for the distinction between a policy confined to sea risk and fire, and a general policy including all risks."[9] Clearly in this case the sole distinction was whether the act was voluntary or one justified by necessity, without regard to the fact whether the peril was one insured against or not. In another case relied on by Mr. Arnould capture or seizure was an excepted peril, and the vessel endeavored to avoid this peril by cutting her cables and putting to sea when she had half completed her loading, and, subsequently sustaining damage, put into a port for repairs. This was held a deviation, because the ship endeavored to avoid a risk against which the underwriters had stipulated. While in another case, under the same facts, the deviation was covered by a peril insured against.[10] Mr. Maclachlan, however, omits any reference to either case in this connection, but does notice elsewhere and remarks under a subsequent chapter, as to the first case, that "when she (the vessel) was lost, she was out of her due course, carried thither seemingly because she left port in a state of unseaworthiness."[11] Mr. Phillips criticizes at length this distinction of Mr. Arnould's, and says no such distinction was made in the authority relied on, and that the rulings in the two cases referred to were based upon the fact that the risk was excepted in one case and not in the other, and that, even in this view the ground is not tenable.[12] He also speaks of the case as

[8] 1 Arnould on Marine Ins. (Perkins' ed. 1850) 411–13, *406–8; Id. (Maclachlan's ed. 1887) 508.

[9] Scott v. Thompson, 1 Bos. & P. (N. R.) 181, per Sir James Mansfield, C. J.

[10] O'Reilly v. Royal Exchange Ins. Co. 4 Camp. 246, 16 R. R. 786, per Gibbs, C. J.; O'Reilly v. Gonne, 4 Camp. 249, 16 R. R. 788.

[11] 2 Arnould on Marine Ins. (Maclachlan's ed. 1887) 842. See Id. (8th ed. Hart & Simey) secs. 424a, 435, pp. 550, 563.

[12] 1 Phillips on Ins. (3d ed.) 597, sec. 1025.

"a hasty ruling at nisi prius." In a case in this country, it is declared that the mere apprehension of danger is not of itself sufficient to justify a deviation without other reasonable grounds, but that if the danger be urgent, or the peril which it is sought to avoid be such that it would necessarily occasion serious injury or loss if met, or there is a reasonable ground for a belief that it would have such effect, the master is justified in a delay or a departure from the voyage insured to save either ship or cargo, whether the peril be one insured against or not.[13] And where a vessel insured against a sea risk only, is turned away by a blockading squadron, and thereafter suffered loss, this was held no deviation.[14]

It would seem, in view of the cases and of the opinions of textwriters, that the weight of authority at the present day does not rest the question of deviation upon the fact whether the peril is one insured against or not, but that if the deviation is not voluntary, and one which would be justifiable if the insurance were against perils of the sea generally, it makes no difference whether the peril justifiably necessitating the deviation is one insured against or not.[15]

§ 2442. Loss need not be connected with deviation.—The insurers are released from the time a deviation without a justifying cause occurs.[16] It is not, therefore, necessary to show that a subsequent loss arose from or was connected with the deviation.[17]

[13] Riggin v. Patapsco Ins. Co. 7 Har. & J. (Md.) 279, 16 Am. Dec. 302.

[14] Robinson v. Marine Ins. Co. 2 Johns. (N. Y.) 89.

[15] "Going off the course or delay from necessity, or any other cause which would be justifiable under a policy against perils of the sea generally, is not a deviation under one against one or a part only of such perils:" 1 Phillips on Ins. (3d ed.) 578, sec. 1025, citing Scott v. Thompson, 1 Bos. & P. 181; Greene v. Elmslie, Peake, 278, 3 R. R. 693; Riggin v. Patapsco Ins. Co. 7 Har. & J. (Md.) 279, 16 Am. Dec. 302; Robinson v. Marine Ins. Co. 2 Johns. (N. Y.) 89; Lee v. Gray, 7 Mass. 349; Richardson v. Maine Ins. Co. 6 Mass. 102, 4 Am. Dec. 92. Not all these authorities are, however, directly in point on the main question in the text. "Nor does it seem to be material that the peril which the ship thus endeavors to escape should be one which is insured against." And again: "The weight of authority seems to be in favor of the view that a departure from the course to avoid a peril, although that peril is not insured against, is no deviation:" 2 Parsons on Marine Ins. (ed. 1868) 31–32, note 1. See Suydam v. Marine Ins. Co. 2 Johns. (N. Y.) 138. "A deviation is proper . . . when necessary . . . to avoid a peril, whether insured against or not:" Deering's Annot. Civ. Code Cal. sec. 2695, subd. 2. Contra, Budd v. Eaton, 10 Mass. 21; Roget v. Thurston, 2 Johns. (N. Y.) 248; Murden v. South Carolina Ins. Co. Mill Const. (S. C.) 96; O'Reilly v. Royal Exch. Assur. Co. 4 Camp. 246, 16 R. R. 786, per Gibbs, C. J.

[16] See § 2370 herein.

[17] Crousillat v. Ball, 4 Dall. (4 U.

§ 2443. Whether any exception exists to last rule.—As already noted, however, there is a class of cases where the policy is on time with clauses limiting the navigation, and in cases of this character, where the loss occurs after a temporary deviation and return in safety to the permitted waters, and a loss occurs not at all connected with the breach of condition, the insurers are held not discharged,[18] and if it be admitted, as is claimed by some writers, that there may be a temporary deviation under other policies than those within the class mentioned,[19] it must also be admitted that a similar rule would apply.

§ 2444. Waiver of deviation.—That the insurer, having full knowledge, may waive the deviation is undoubted, but such waiver must be by some unequivocal act; as where the underwriters signed a memorandum that a specified deviation should not prejudice the insurance,[20] or where a contract is made healing the deviation assented to by the company's president, and written on the policy by his order, although it may not have been recorded by the secretary,[1] or where the policy is subscribed with the knowledge of the deviation by the underwriter.[2] So the question, whether or not a contract, by which a vessel is restricted to certain waters, has been modified, so as to permit a deviation, may be one for the jury.[3] But if there are two deviations, and one is expressly waived by memorandum, this excludes the claim that the other, even though a previous one, has been waived,[4] although it is also held that a writing waiving a deviation for an additional premium covers all previous deviations,[5] and where under such a memorandum there was a misstatement as to place to which the return voyage was made, it was held of no effect.[6] A deviation occurring by reason of a vessel navigating outside of restricted waters, may be waived, and is waived, where insurer, with knowledge thereof

S.) 294, 1 L. ed. 840, 3 Yeates (Pa.) 375, 2 Am. Dec. 375; Martin v. Delaware Ins. Co. 2 Wash. (U. S. C. C.) 254, Fed. Cas. No 9,161; Kettel v. Wiggin, 13 Mass. 68; Walsh v. Homer, 10 Mo. 6, 45 Am. Dec. 342.

[18] Wilkins v. Tobacco Ins. Co. 30 Ohio St. 317, 27 Am. Rep. 455. See §§ 2372–2374 herein.

[19] See § 2373 herein.

[20] Glidden v. Manufacturers' Ins. Co. 1 Sum. (U. S. C. C.) 232, Fed. Cas. No. 5,482.

[1] Warren v. Ocean Ins. Co. 16 Me. 439, 33 Am. Dec. 674.

[2] Coles v. Marine Ins. Co. 3 Wash. (U. S. C. C.) 159, Fed. Cas. No. 2,-988. See Redman v. London, 3 Camp. 503, 5 Taunt. 462, 1 Marsh. 136.

[3] Norris v. China Traders' Ins. Co. 52 Wash. 554, 100 Pac. 1025.

[4] Glidden v. Manufacturers' Ins. Co. 1 Sum. (U. S. C. C.) 232, Fed. Cas. No. 5,482.

[5] Crowninshield v. New York Ins. Co. 3 Johns. (N. Y.) 142. See § 2417a herein.

[6] Glidden v. Manufacturers' Ins. Co. 1 Sum. (U. S. C. C.) 232, Fed. Cas. No. 5,482.

thereafter receives premiums without objection, received proofs of loss and stated that the loss would undoubtedly be paid.[7]

§ 2445. Deviation: acts of third person.—The insured is not responsible for the acts of third persons done in consequence of a misfortune occurring during the voyage, from which misfortune alone, and not from any act of the owner or his agents, such third persons derived their power to interfere, although the same acts would have avoided the policy had they been done by the assured or his agents, as in case where the vessel was driven into a port of necessity, and while there it was claimed, together with its cargo, by the assured's correspondent, but it was referred to the American consul there, who procured a survey and sold the cargo, putting in a lighter one, because he deemed the vessel overloaded, dispatched the vessel to her return port in command of a British subject, and it was held that the American consul could not be considered the assured's agent, although the act of changing and adding to the cargo, if done by the assured or his agents, would have been a change of risk.[8]

[7] Norris v. China Traders' Ins. Co. Wash. (U. S. C. C.) 7, Fed. Cas. No. 52 Wash. 554, 100 Pac. 1025. 17,901.

[8] Winthrop v. Union Ins. Co. 2

CHAPTER LXVII.

OTHER OR DOUBLE AND OVER INSURANCE.

§ 2455. What is other or double insurance.
§ 2456. Overinsurance.
§ 2456a. "Existing insurance:" marine: mutual societies.
§ 2457. Conditions as to other insurance.
§ 2458. Construction of conditions as to other insurance.
§ 2459. Where other insurance is only temporary.
§ 2460. Subsequent marine policy suspended where property fully covered by other insurance at time of issuance.
§ 2461. Warranted "uninsured:" "honor policy:" marine risk.
§ 2462. Representations or concealment concerning other insurance.
§ 2462a. Effect of want of knowledge of other insurance.
§ 2462b. Same subject: mortgagor and mortgagee.
§ 2463. Policy outstanding at time of application for insurance surrendered before issuance of subsequent policy.
§ 2464. Subsequent policy must cover same or part of same property.
§ 2465. Insurance on ship and on advances.
§ 2466. Insurance against different perils.
§ 2467. Where insurances are upon different interests or do not cover same subject.
§ 2468. Policy to different joint owners of property: tenants in common.
§ 2469. Insurance by owner of land and person holding under contract for deed.
§ 2470. Different interests: mortgagor and mortgagee.
§ 2471. Insurance by stranger will not constitute other insurance.
§ 2472. Subsequent insurance covering property first insured and other property.
§ 2473. Where part of insured property covered by subsequent policy: entire or divisible contract.
§ 2473a. Other insurance: whether contract divisible or entire: statute.
§ 2474. Where insured goods are removed and joined with other goods also insured.
§ 2475. Where other insurance is void or voidable: prior or subsequent policies conditioned against other insurance.
§ 2476. Effect of interim receipts.

§ 2477. Where subsequent voidable policy is treated as valid after a loss.
§ 2478. Prohibition against other insurance, whether "valid or invalid."
§ 2479. Renewals of prior policies.
§ 2480. Where policies are simultaneous: concurrent insurance: fire risks.
§ 2480a. Distinction between concurrent insurance and coinsurance.
§ 2481. Rule where marine policies of same date are issued: priority in date may be shown.
§ 2482. Provisions in charter or by-laws as to other insurance.
§ 2483. Notice of other, etc., insurance: what is and is not sufficient.
§ 2484. Permission to obtain other insurance.
§ 2484a. Permission continued: concurrent insurance.
§ 2485. Consent to other insurance: indorsement on policy.
§ 2485a. Same subject: when indorsement effects new contract.
§ 2486. Return of premium in case of refusal to indorse consent to other insurance.
§ 2487. Waiver of provisions as to other insurance: estoppel: notice: consent: indorsement on policy.
§ 2487a. When no waiver of provisions as to other insurance.
§ 2487b. Waiver continued: agents.
§ 2488. Insurer is chargeable with knowledge of prior policies issued by it.
§ 2489. Recovery: prior policies: marine insurance: contribution: where no pro rata clause.
§ 2490. To enforce contribution policies must cover same interest to same property.
§ 2491. Rules as to recovery and contribution in fire insurance where there are several policies constituting other insurance.
§ 2492. Rule where fire policy contains pro rata clause.
§ 2493. Specific insurance and general policy.
§ 2494. Agreement between insurers to share expenses of defense pro rata.
§ 2495. Effect under pro rata clause of payment by any company of more than its share.
§ 2496. "American clause:" "shall only be liable for deficiency."
§ 2496a. Other insurance as affected by coinsurance: "average" or "distribution" clause.
§ 2496b. Effect of three-fourths value provisions: valued policy laws: concurrent insurance: other or double insurance: coinsurance: prorating.
§ 2497. Where policies of different dates attach and property subsequently diminished.
§ 2498. Presumption as to basis of settlement where settlement made with one of two insurers.
§ 2499. Double insurance for "whom it may concern."

§ 2455. What is other or double insurance.—Other or double insurance exists where two or more policies of insurance are effected upon the same interest in the same property against the same risk, and either in the name or for the benefit of the same person.[9] "A double insurance is where one insures the same thing twice over against the same perils; . . . where one procures an insurance from one underwriter against the danger of the seas, from another against the danger of the enemy, from a third against the barratry of the master, etc., although these several insurances are upon the same ship, they are not double, because the assured can never receive more than one satisfaction." [10] It is not necessary that the insurance be effected in the same name to constitute double insurance. Lord Mansfield says: [11] "If the same man really and for his own proper account insures the same goods doubly, though both insurances be not made in his own name, but one or both of them in the name of another person, yet that is just the same thing, for the same person is to have the benefit of both policies." [12]

[9] United States.—California Ins. Co. v. Union Compress Co. 133 U. S. 730, 33 L. ed. 730, 19 Ins. L. J. 385, 10 Sup. Ct. 385; Thurston v. Koch, 4 Dall. (49 U. S.) 348–51, 1 L. ed. 862.

Illinois.—Peoria Fire & Marine Ins. Co. v. Lewis, 18 Ill. 553.

Maryland.—Baltimore Fire Ins. Co. v. Loney, 20 Md. 20.

Massachusetts.—Perkins v. New England Marine Ins. Co. 12 Mass. 214–17.

Michigan.—Hall v. Concordia Fire Ins. Co. 90 Mich. 403, 51 N. W. 52.

New York.—Ætna Fire Ins. Co. v. Tyler, 16 Wend. (N. Y.) 385, 30 Am. Dec. 90; Mussey v. Atlas Ins. Co. 14 N. Y. (Kern) 79.

Ohio.—Roots v. Cincinnati Ins. Co. 1 Disn. (Ohio) 138, 12 Ohio Dec. 535.

Pennsylvania.—Clarke v. Western Assur. Co. 146 Pa. 561, 28 Am. St. Rep. 821, 15 L.R.A. 127, 23 Atl. 248, 21 Ins. L. J. 281; Lebanon Ins. Co. v. Kepler, 106 Pa. St. 28–35; Royal Ins. Co. v. Roedel, 78 Pa. St. 19–22, 21 Am. Rep. 1; Merrick v. Germania Fire Ins. Co. 54 Pa. 277; Sloat v. Royal Ins. Co. 49 Pa. 14–18, 88 Am. Dec. 477; Peters v. Delaware Ins. Co. 5 Serg. & R. (Pa.) 473–84, per Duncan, J.; Norwich Union Fire Ins. Soc. v. Cheaney Bros. 161 Tex. Civ. App. 220, 128 S. W. 1163.

England.—Godin v. London Assur. Co. 1 Burr. 489–95; Irving v. Richardson, 1 Moody & R. 153, 2 Barn. & A. 193, 9 L. J. (O. S.) K. B. 225.

See also Rapalje & Lawrence's Law Dictionary, 668; 17 Earl of Halsbury's Laws of England, p. 380.

Other insurance means, when indorsed upon a policy, additional insurance to that of said policy amount. De Leach v. Ætna Ins. Co. 4 Ga. App. 746, 62 S. E. 473.

"A double insurance exists where the same person is insured by several insurers separately in respect to the same subject and interest." S. Dak. Civ. Code, sec. 1877; Lawyer v. Globe Mutual Ins. Co. 25 S. Dak. 549, 127 N. W. 615, 39 Ins. L. J. 1588, 1595.

[10] Perkins v. New England Marine Ins. Co. 12 Mass. 214–17.

[11] Godin v. London Assur. Co. 1 Burr. 489, 1 W. Black. 103.

[12] See also Phœnix Ins. Co. v. Copeland, 86 Ala. 551, 4 L.R.A. 848, 6 So. 143; Hough v. People's Fire Ins. Co. 36 Md. 398; Van Aylstyne v. Ætna Ins. Co. 14 Hun (N. Y.) 360.

Over or double insurance is not reinsurance. Reinsurance is the making of a contract by the insurer in order to secure himself, while other and double insurance is where the different insurances are effected by the insured as we have stated.[13]

So double insurance and concurrent insurance are entirely distinct.[14]

In case of double insurance, unless otherwise stipulated, the respective insurers are liable pro rata. all the policies being considered as together making but one policy. But where two policies cover the same property, but one also covers additional property without specifying how much of the insurance applies to each property, a case of double insurance does not arise; certainly not as to the whole amount of such policies.[15]

§ 2456. Overinsurance.—The words "other insurance," "double insurance," and "overinsurance" are used in most instances as if synonymous. They are, in fact, practically the same, yet overinsurance more particularly refers to that class of cases not simply where "other insurance" is prohibited, but rather to that class where the policy prohibits the insurance beyond a certain amount. The same principle naturally controls in case of overinsurance as in case of other or double insurance. Different persons may insure different interests in the property. So when a sheriff seizing an insured vessel effected insurance to cover harbor risks, and this together with the insurance held by the owners exceeded the amount named in a prohibitory clause in the policy providing that it should become void if any interest already insured should be insured to exceed a certain sum, the interests insured are not the same, and the policy cannot be avoided on the ground of excessive insurance.[16] So an overinsurance of the freight to be earned on a voyage is not a breach of the warranty by the owner of a vessel that he will not insure his interest in the vessel beyond a specified amount.[17] In Pennsylvania a policy of fire insurance upon build-

[13] Davis v. Gilbert, 1 Marshall on Ins. (2d Am. ed.) 148. Mr. Marshall says: "It differs from reinsurance in this, that it is made by the insured with a view of receiving a double satisfaction in case of loss, whereas a reinsurance is made by a former insurer, his executors or assigns, to protect himself and his estate from the risk to which they were liable by the first insurance:" 1 Marshall on Ins. (2d Am. ed.) 146.

[14] Lawver v. Globe Mutual Ins. Co. 25 S. Dak. 549, 127 N. W. 615, 39 Ins. L. J. 1588, 1596. Concurrent insurance defined, see § 2480 herein.

On what is concurrent insurance, see note in 49 L.R.A.(N.S.) 374.

[15] Clarke v. Western Assur. Co. 146 Pa. St. 561, 28 Am. St. Rep. 821, 15 L.R.A. 127, 23 Atl. 248. See §§ 2489 et seq. herein. But see § 2472 herein.

[16] Marigny v. Home Ins. Co. 13 La. Ann. 338, 71 Am. Dec. 511.

[17] Merchants Mutual Ins. Co. v. Allen, 121 U. S. 67, 30 L. ed. 858, 7

ings contained a stipulation "that the aggregate amount insured in this and other companies . . . shall not exceed two-thirds of the estimated cash value." The insurance was for thirteen hundred dollars, and the estimated cash value according to the policy was nineteen hundred and fifty dollars; subsequently improvements were made and an additional insurance of one thousand dollars was effected in another company. The buildings were destroyed by fire and their value at the time of the fire was four thousand two hundred dollars. In an action on the first policy it was held that the "estimated cash value" was that at the time of the first insurance, and that the first policy was void for overinsurance.[18]

§ 2456a. "Existing insurance:" marine: mutual societies.—The term "existing insurance" in a clause in a carrier marine policy excluding goods and merchandise covered by existing insurance by or on account of the owners of the same, is not limited to insurance by the owners existing at the time of the attachment of the policy, but includes all other insurance while the risk continues.[19] Certificates in mutual aid societies do not constitute insurance within the meaning of a question in an application blank of an insurance company as to "existing insurance" in this or any other company.[20]

§ 2457. Conditions as to other insurance.—An ordinary provision of policies of insurance is that in case of other or double insurance upon the property covered by the policy, without the consent of the insurers, the policy shall be void. The object of this provision is to prevent the moral hazard from being increased without the knowledge of the insurer who has assumed the risk. Though the insured may in all cases have an interest in the preservation of the property, yet it is certainly true that the motive for its preservation would not be as strong if several policies existed upon the property amounting to a sum in excess of the actual value of the same. In such cases the insured might not be as watchful and careful of the acts of others as he would if the property were not as fully protected. And not only is such a provision a protection against the gross carelessness of the insured

Sup. Ct. 821, 122 U. S. 376, 30 L. ed. 1209, 7 Sup. Ct. 1248.

[18] Elliott v. Lycoming County Mutual Ins. Co. 66 Pa. St. 22, 5 Am. Rep. 323.

[19] Lehigh Valley Rd. Co. v. Providence-Washington Ins. Co. (U. S. D. C.) 167 Fed. 223, aff'd 172 Fed. 364, 97 C. C. A. 62.

[20] Penn Mutual Life Ins. Co. v. Mechanics' Savings Bank & Trust Co. 72 Fed. 413, 19 C. C. A. 286, 37 U. S. App. 692, 73 Fed. 653, 19 C. C. A. 316, 43 U. S. App. 75, 38 L.R.A. 33. See § 2075, subdiv. (j) herein.

in respect to his own acts and the acts of others, but it also tends to prevent any motive existing for the fraudulent destruction of the property by the insured. The condition is a reasonable and valid one, and will be enforced by the courts.[1] Therefore, as a general rule, procuring additional valid insurance in violation of an express condition in the first policy, without the written consent of the insurer avoids the policy, unless the company has waived the right to insist upon such forfeiture.[2] And the policy

[1] United States.—Bakhaus v. Germania Fire Ins. Co. 176 Fed. 879, 100 C. C. A. 349, 39 Ins. L. J. 1049.

Alabama.—Queen Ins. Co. v. Young, 86 Ala. 424, 11 Am. St. Rep. 51, 5 So. 116.

Iowa.—O'Leary v. Merchants' & Bankers' Mutual Ins. Co. 100 Iowa, 173, 62 Am. St. Rep. 555, 66 N. W. 175, 69 N. W. 420.

Kentucky.—Northwestern National Ins. Co. v. Avant, 132 Ky. 106, 116 S. W. 274, 38 Ins. L. J. 472, 474 (object is to prevent overinsurance and temptation to burn property, etc.).

Michigan.—Liverpool & London & Globe Ins. Co. v. Verdier, 35 Mich. 395.

Missouri.—Rogers v. Home Ins. Co. of N. Y. 150 Mo. App. 276, 136 S. W. 743, 40 Ins. L. J. 1434.

New York.—Sanders v. Cooper, 115 N. Y. 279, 5 L.R.A. 638, 12 Am. St. Rep. 801, 22 N. E. 212.

North Dakota.—First National Bank of Nome v. German American Ins. Co. 23 N. Dak. 139, 38 L.R.A. (N.S.) 213, 134 N. W. 873, 41 Ins. L. J. 899.

South Carolina.—Spann v. Phœnix Ins. Co. 83 S. Car. 262, 65 S. E. 232, 38 Ins. L. J. 1020.

Texas.—National Union Fire Ins. Co. v. Dorroh, — Tex. Civ. App. —, 133 S. W. 475, 40 Ins. L. J. 484.

Washington.—Rice v. Hartford Ins. Co. 50 Wash. 346, 97 Pac. 238.

Clauses in a policy forbidding other insurance without notice to or the knowledge and consent of the insurer, are proper and reasonable, and violation of them avoid the policy. Carpenter v. Providence Washington Ins. Co. 16 Pet. (41 U. S.) 495, 10 L. ed. 1044.

Cited in: United States.—Northern Assurance Co. v. Grand View Building Assoc. 183 U. S. 308, 341, 46 L. ed. 213, 227, 22 Sup. Ct. 133; Clark v. Manufacturing Ins. Co. 2 Woodb. & M. (U. S. C. C.) 491, Fed. Cas. No. 2,829.

District of Columbia.—Hamburg-Bremen Fire Ins. Co. v. Lewis, 4 App. D. C. 66, 86.

Iowa.—Hubbard v. Hartford Fire Ins. Co. 33 Iowa, 325, 332, 11 Am. Rep. 125.

Louisiana.—Duclos v. Citizens' Mutual Ins. Co. 23 La. Ann. 332, 333; Battaile v. Merchants Ins. Co. 3 Rob. 384, 386.

Maine.—Gardiner v. Piscatauqua Mutual Fire Ins. Co. 38 Me. 439, 442.

New York.—Whitwell v. Putnam Fire Ins. Co. 6 Lans. 166, 168; Gilbert v. Phœnix Ins. Co. 36 Barb. 372, 377.

On void or inoperative policies of insurance as breach of a condition against additional or other insurance on property, see note in 1 B. R. C. 39.

[2] Queen Ins. Co. v. Young, 86 Ala. 424, 11 Am. St. Rep. 51, 5 So. 116.

Arkansas.—Planters Mutual Ins. Co. v. Green, 72 Ark. 305, 80 S. W. 151.

Iowa.—Wilson v. Anchor Fire Ins. Co. 143 Iowa, 458, 122 N. W. 157.

Maine.—Towle v. Dirigo Mutual Fire Ins. Co. 107 Me. 317, 78 Atl. 374.

Massachusetts.—Hayes v. Milford is avoided by such breach of condition even though insured is ignorant of said prohibition.[3] But if the parties agree that additional insurance may be obtained; a condition prohibiting other insurance becomes unenforceable and said agreement need not be in writing.[4]

That insurance in other companies is effected at the same time as a policy providing that it shall be void "if insured now has, or shall hereafter make or procure," any other contract of insurance on the same property, will not prevent the operation of such provision.[5]

A distinction is made between a condition that the policy shall be void if there is any other insurance upon the property and a condition that the policy shall be void if insured has or thereafter procures other insurance upon the property without insurer's consent and this is applied in a case where a policy was procured by the owner and mortgagor and duly assigned for the mortgagee's benefit and thereafter said owner, through a trustee, conveyed the property to his wife who obtained the policy in suit containing the condition last above mentioned, when the property was so conveyed to the vendee, the policy was not assigned to her, nor was she aware of its existence and, therefore, inasmuch as the mere transfer of title does not carry the policy the later policy was not void for other insurance.[6] The insertion by an insurance agent who has failed to secure all the insurance to be placed on a building, of a clause in the policy issued by him making it void if additional insurance is taken, will not prevent recovery on the policy in case of loss, although the intended amount was placed with other companies.[7] If the policy covers "goods sold but not Mutual Fire Ins. Co. 170 Mass. 492, 40 N. E. 754, 27 Ins. L. J. 459.

Nebraska.—Nebraska Mercantile Mutual Co. v. Susek, 64 Neb. 17, 89 N. W. 428.

New York.—Tilton v. Farmers Ins. Co. 143 N. Y. Supp. 107, 82 Misc. 79.

North Dakota.—First National Bank of Nome v. German American Ins. Co. 23 N. Dak. 139, 38 L.R.A. (N.S.) 213, 134 N. W. 873, 41 Ins. L. J. 899.

Pennsylvania.—Greiner v. Lawn Mutual Fire, Storm & Lightning Ins. Co. (Pa.) 25 Lan. L. Rev. 337; Seibel v. Lebanon Mutual Ins. Co. (Pa.) 16 Lan. L. Rev. 356.

Tennessee.—Arnold v. St. Paul Fire & Marine Ins. Co. 106 Tenn. 529, 61 S. W. 1032, 30 Ins. L. J. 941, 942.—McAlister, J.

Washington.—Rice v. Hartford Ins. Co. 50 Wash. 346, 97 Pac. 238.

[3] Rice v. Hartford Ins. Co. 50 Wash. 346, 97 Pac. 238.

[4] Northwestern National Ins. Co. v. Avant, 132 Ky. 106, 116 S. W. 274.

[5] United Firemen's Ins. Co. v. Thomas, 47 L.R.A. 450, 82 Fed. 406, 27 C. C. A. 42, 53 U. S. App. 517, 92 Fed. 127, 34 C. C. A. 240, 47 L.R.A. 455.

[6] German Fire Ins. Co. v. Greenwald, 51 Ind. App. 469, 99 N. E. 1011, 42 Ins. L. J. 248.

That sale of property does not transfer policy to purchaser, see § 2307 herein.

[7] Norfolk Fire Ins. Co. v. Wood, 113 Va. 310, 39 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1020, 74 S. E. 186.

delivered" a policy taken out by the purchaser does not constitute other insurance where no such delivery or transfer has been made as to vest any property in the vendee.[8]

§ 2458. Construction of conditions as to other insurance.—A condition in a policy of insurance that it shall be void in case of other insurance has been construed as meaning that the policy is voidable at the option of the insurer, and not absolutely void.[9] In such a case, though the facts of other insurance may not be known to the insurer upon the first policy until after the loss, yet it is a good defense.[10] And if the insurer after loss interposes other insurance as a defense, and the defense is sustained, it is held to amount to an election to avoid the policy at the time the other insurance was effected, and consequently to render a premium note void from that moment for want of consideration as to all future risks and losses.[11] Where the policy provides that a person insuring must give notice of "any other insurance effected," it refers to both prior and subsequent insurance.[12] So also do the words "additional insurance."[13] A condition in a policy that "if any other insurance be made which together with this shall exceed, etc.," has been held to refer only to subsequent insurance.[14] The word "assigns" in the clause "if the said insured or assigns shall hereafter make any other insurance" has been construed as meaning the assignees of the policy, and not of the property.[15] In the standard form of fire insurance policy for New York the policy is conditioned to be void "if the insured now has or shall hereafter make or procure any other contract of insurance, whether valid or not, on property covered in whole or in part by the policy." A "standard guaranty to maintain eighty per cent insurance," stamped on the face of a policy of fire insurance, does not supersede a provision that the policy shall be void in case of [8] McFadden v. Union Assur. Co. (U. S. D. C.) 112 Fed. 35.

[9] Turner v. Meridian Fire Ins. Co. 16 Fed. 454, Fed. Cas. No. 530n; Hubbard v. Hartford Fire Ins. Co. 33 Iowa, 325, 11 Am. Rep. 125; Stevenson v. Phœnix Ins. Co. 83 Ky. 7, 4 Am. Rep. 120.

Construction: law of foreign state, see Northwestern Fuel Co. v. Boston Ins. Co. 131 Minn. 19, 154 N. W. 53, 46 Ins. L. J. 715 (considered under § 2496a herein). See also §§ 225 et seq. herein.

As to construction against insurer, see §§ 220 et seq. herein.

[10] Turner v. Meridian Fire Ins. Co. 16 Fed. 454, Fed. Cas. No. 530n.

[11] Tuckerman v. Rigler, 46 Barb. (N. Y.) 375.

[12] Warwick v. Monmouth County Mutual Fire Ins. Co. 44 N. J. L. 83, 43 Am. Rep. 343; Harris v. Ohio Ins. Co. 5 Ohio, 466.

[13] Behrens v. Germania Ins. Co. 58 Iowa, 26, 11 N. W. 719.

[14] Mussey v. Atlas Mutual Ins. Co. 14 N. Y. (4 Kern) 79.

[15] Bates v. Commercial Ins. Co. 1 Cinc. Rep. (Ohio) 523, 13 Ohio Dec. 698.

other insurance, at least, when that policy itself is for more than eighty per cent of the value of the property.[16] A provision of a policy as to prorating in case of loss of property covered by several policies, controls another provision that the interest of a mortgagee or trustee shall not be invalidated by any act or neglect of the mortgagor or owner of the property.[17]

§ 2459. Where other insurance is only temporary.—A temporary violation of the condition in a policy is held to render the policy inoperative only during the time while such other insurance exists. In such a case if there is no other insurance at the time of the loss, it is held that there may be a recovery on the policy first issued, since after the other insurance has ceased the prior policy becomes operative, the same as if the subsequent insurance had not been effected.[18]

§ 2460. Subsequent marine policy suspended where property fully covered by other insurance at time of issuance.—A frequent provision in marine policies is that if there be any prior insurance upon the property insured then the insurer shall only be liable for so much of the amount of the prior insurance as shall be deficient toward fully covering the property at risk. Under such a stipulation if the property is fully covered by insurance at the time the subsequent insurance is effected, then the subsequent policy will be suspended only, and will attach if at any time before a loss and during the term for which the policy is issued the prior insurance ceases to attach, or does not fully cover the property at risk.[19] Thus where the owners of a vessel, a few days before the expiration of a policy thereupon, obtained another policy upon the same vessel at and from Boston to Charleston, which contained such a condition, it was held that though the first policy continued in full force until after the vessel had sailed from Boston, the second policy attached immediately upon the expiration of the first, and the insured could recover for a loss subsequently occurring.[20]

[16] Cutler v. Royal Ins. Co. 70 Conn. 566, 41 L.R.A. 159, 40 Atl. 529.

[17] Sun Ins. Office v. Varble, 103 Ky. 758, 41 L.R.A. 792, 46 S. W. 486, 27 Ins. L. J. 798.

[18] New England Fire & Marine Ins. Co. v. Schletter, 38 Ill. 166, 167; Germania Ins. Co. v. Klewer, 129 Ill. 599, 22 N. E. 489; Obermeyer v. Globe Ins. Co. 43 Mo. 573. See, however, §§ 2239, 2240 herein, as to effect of temporary violation, etc., of conditions.

On effect of other insurance which ceased before loss under general provisions against other insurance, see note in 32 L.R.A.(N.S.) 461.

[19] Murray v. Insurance Co. of Pennsylvania, 2 Wash. (U. S. C. C.) 186, Fed. Cas. No. 9,961.

[20] Kent v. Manufacturers' Ins. Co. 18 Pick. (35 Mass.) 19.

§ 2461. Warranted "uninsured:" "honor policy:" marine risk.—An important decision in this connection was rendered in England in 1895, under a policy upon a marine risk, wherein there was a warranty that the subject matter, the hull and machinery of a vessel, was uninsured, and the question was involved whether certain "honor" policies void under the statute 19 George II. chapter 37, would, if they had been on the same subject matter, have operated as an infringement of the warranty, and it was said by the court, per Kennedy, J.: "I am of opinion that the clause ought to be construed as a warranty by plaintiff that as to the five thousand pounds he was not covered by any such insurance as is treated in practice and according to the usage of commercial men as an effectual insurance. It is merely another way of putting the same thing to say that we ought not to read into the warranty the words 'by any policy not invalid in point of law.'" The court also said: "The plaintiff's counsel . . . argued that the 'honor policy,' being null and void by statute, was no insurance at all, and therefore . . . the plaintiff was uninsured within the meaning of the warranty, even if the subject matter was in part the same subject matter as that of the policies on 'hull and machinery.' . . . I am of opinion that plaintiff is wrong, and that the 'honor' policies . . . cannot be disregarded in reference to this warranty on account of their legal invalidity. A curious result would follow if they could be. The main, if not the whole, object of the warranty is to give the insurer a pledge of the good faith of the assured and of his diligence in preserving the thing assured by reason of remaining his own insurer to the extent specified in the warranty. It was admitted in the course of the argument, and it could not but be admitted, that a claim under an 'honor' policy is regularly recognized and discharged by the underwriter as faithfully and as promptly as a claim under a policy which is not open to the same legal objection. Therefore, if this contention on behalf of the plaintiff is right, he might after giving this warranty have straightway gone and safely defeated its purpose, by covering by 'honor' policies on 'hull and machinery' the whole of the five thousand pounds which he was warranted uninsured. Looking alike at the obvious aim of such a warranty as this and the fair meaning of the word 'uninsured' in a commercial document of this kind, it must be taken to have been understood both by assurer and assured by the light of their common knowledge and of the universal treatment of an 'honor' policy in the insurance world." [1]

[1] Roddick v. Indemnity Mutual B. D. 836, 64 L. J. Q. B. 733, 2 Q. Marine Ins. Co. (1895) 1 L. R. Q. B. 380, 14 R. 516, 72 L. T. 860, 44

Upon appeal, however, this case was decided upon another point, and Lord Esher, M. R., says as to this question, that it was unnecessary to deal with it. "But it must not be assumed that I assent to the view of the learned judge on this point." And Smith L. J., says: "With regard to 'honor' policies as being a breach of the warranty, the business meaning of the warranty was to secure that the shipowner would be careful in the management of his ship by his remaining uninsured to the extent of five thousand pounds. It is not necessary to decide the point; but I am not satisfied that, by reason of his having a policy upon which he could not recover at law, the shipowner would cease to be his own insurer."[2] And it would seem that the main point which ought to decide the question would be whether there could be a recovery at law; not whether the underwriters consented to pay because of a practice so to do, but whether they could, should they choose, successively rest upon the defense that the "honor" policy was void at law. If insured has a policy not legally enforceable, has he, as it is clearly put by Smith, L. J., ceased "to be his own insurer?" We believe not. The question of usage, however, evidently outweighed this point in the opinion of the court in the first case so that said decision, as then rendered, in effect makes practice or usage validate that which is in law invalid.

§ 2462. Representations or concealment concerning other insurance.—Representations as to other insurance will not in all cases where incorrect avoid the policy; as where the company is satisfied to rely on a mere statement of belief, instead of a positive assertion which the assured makes in good faith, they cannot set up the defense that the facts were not correctly stated.[3] So an approximate estimate made by assured from memory of amounts of insurance then existing on the property to the company's agent, who reported a definite sum to the company, and the agent had authority to act upon verbal statements, will not avoid the contract.[4] But a statement of mere belief as the amount of other insurance is not sufficient when made in response to a statement of the agent that the amount must be exactly stated where such amount is incorrect, and the answers of the insured in the application are made warranties, and in such case there can be no recovery.[5] If the

W. R. 27, 8 Asp. M. C. 24, 1 B. R. C. 51n. See §§ 2475–2478 herein.

[2] Roddick v. Indemnity Mutual Marine Ins. Co. (1895) 2 L. R. Q. B. D. 380, 384, 386, 64 L. J. Q. B. 733, 14 R. 516, 72 L. T. 860, 44 W. R. 27, 8 Asp. M. C. 241.

[3] Bridgewater Iron Works Co. v. Enterprise Ins. Co. 134 Mass. 433. See §§ 1874, 1926, 2075 herein.

[4] Hornthal & Bros. v. Western Ins. Co. 88 N. C. 71.

[5] Commonwealth Mutual Fire Ins. Co. v. Huntzinger, 98 Pa. St. 41.

actual amount of other insurance does not exceed the amount stated, a slight mistake as to the amount will not be considered material,[6] nor will a mistake as to the name of the other insurer,[7] but a representation as to the amount of insurance upon the property may be so much in excess of the actual insurance as to be considered material, and thus avoid the policy.[8] As a general rule, if the statement is one upon which the insurers have a right to rely, or it is made a warranty by the terms of the policy, and it is not in fact a true statement of the actual facts, and is misleading, then no recovery may be had upon a policy which is issued based upon such statement.[9] A representation that other insurance to a certain amount exists at the time of taking out the policy, when in fact it does not, will not justify the insured in taking out subsequent policies in other companies to the amount named.[10] And where a former owner's title to the property has been parted with but he had taken out insurance in his own name it does not constitute such other insurance as falsifies a representation concerning its existence and, therefore, it does not invalidate a policy issued upon the faith of the statement.[11]

Additional insurance existing upon property when the application was accepted and unknown to the insurer issuing a policy on said property avoids the latter policy, which provides that if assured now has or shall hereafter make any other insurance on the property without assent of the insurer, the policy shall be void.[12]

A paid-up policy calling for unconditional payment for a certain sum to the executors, administrators, or assigns of the insured at his death, with reservation to the insurer of the right to pay the money to any person who has incurred expense on behalf of the insured, constitutes "insurance in force upon his life," within the meaning of an application calling for information upon that point.[13]

[6] Osser v. Provincial Ins. Co. 12 U. C. C. P. 133, 141.

[7] Osser v. Provincial Ins. Co. 12 U. C. C. P. 133, 141.

[8] Armour v. Transatlantic Ins. Co. 90 N. Y. 450.

[9] Clapp v. Massachusetts Benefit Assoc. 146 Mass. 519, 16 N. E. 433; London Assurance Co. v. Mansel, 11 T. R. Ch. D. 363, 48 L. J. Ch. 331, 41 L. T. 225, 27 W. R. 444.

[10] Conway Tool Co. v. Hudson River Ins. Co. 12 Cush. (66 Mass.) 144, 59 Am. Dec. 172.

[11] State Insurance Co. v. New Hampshire Trust Co. 47 Neb. 62, 66 N. W. 9, 47 Neb. 71, 66 N. W. 1106.

[12] Carleton v. Patrons' Androscoggin Mutual Fire Ins. Co. 109 Me. 70, 39 L.R.A.(N.S.) 951 (annotated on duty to notify insurer of facts which develop after submission of application but before delivery of policy), 82 Atl. 649, 41 Ins. L. J. 1067.

[13] Dimick v. Metropolitan Life Ins. Co. 69 N. J. L. 384, 62 L.R.A. 774, 55 Atl. 291.

§ 2462a. Effect of want of knowledge of other insurance.—It may be reasonably deducted from the decisions that the insured will not, on the ground of a breach of condition as to other insurance, lose the protection afforded by his policy where there clearly exists, bona fide, a want of knowledge or consent on his part as to other policies being issued or in existence, and which, without such want of knowledge or consent, might constitute other insurance. There are, however, as will appear from the decisions, certain qualifications which modify or limit the application of this rule.

In a Michigan case the owners in fee sold the property under a land contract with insurer's consent and they retained an insurable interest and the policy, for which the vendee paid the premium for the unexpired portion of the insurance under her agreement to keep the property insured for the vendor's benefit and that the unpaid part of the foreclosure money should, in case of loss, be received by the latter. The purchaser in possession without notice to or consent of said owners, insured in her own name her interest. The second insurer claimed that the policy was void because of the prior policy, and her policy was canceled as to that part which covered the purchased property. It was claimed as to the owners' policy that they were not entitled to recover more than the loss or damage to their interest in the property insured, but this claim was not sustained by the court, and it was also held that the policy retained by said owners could not be changed to their harm by the vendee's said act, and that the vendors had no interest in the second policy because said vendee had carried out her agreement by insuring the property for their benefit.[14] And where the husband of the vendee of property, to whom the policy had been assigned with insurer's consent, obtained additional insurance without the knowledge of either the insurer or the vendor, to whom, under an attached rider the loss was payable as interest might appear, it was held that the policy was not thereby voided as to said vendor's interest as the policy conditions made applicable by said rider, protected his interest.[15] So a vendee in possession, who holds under a contract to purchase from the mortgagor of the property insured, and who takes out a policy, has an interest thereunder so far different from that of the mortgagee under his policy as not to constitute other insurance even though the mortgagee has caused an indorsement to be made upon the policy, without the knowledge of either the mortgagor or vendee, stating that the latter is recognized as the owner of the property and the policy, for he is not thereby made the insured.[16]

[14] Smith v. American Ins. Co. 177 Mich. 123, 143 N. W. 54, 42 Ins. L. J. 1758.

[15] Dumphy v. Commercial Union Assur. Co. — Tex. —, 174 S. W. 814, rev'g — Tex. Civ. App. —, 142 S. W. 116, 41 Ins. L. J. 441.

So a policy issued to the owner of property is not avoided by the fact that additional insurance is without said owner's knowledge or consent, procured thereon by one who has a lien on the property.[17] And any other contract or agreement for insurance held by any person "interested," within the meaning of a provision in a policy against other insurance, does not include insurance procured without the knowledge and consent of the other party by a third person who has no interest in the first policy, although he has or claims an insurable interest in the property.[18]

If a person, after insurance has been procured for him by another at his request, obtains insurance on the same property with another insurer it constitutes other insurance although insured had no knowledge that the first insurance had been effected for in such case it is his duty to learn what his agent has done, and, in addition, if insured brings an action on the policy obtained by his said agent he ratifies his act.[19] So the fact that the owner of insured property does not know of the existence of other insurance thereon, will not excuse him in making a statement, in his application, that there is no other insurance; nor will it prevent the company from setting up the false representations in an action on the policy.[20]

If an assignor and his assignee ratify an unauthorized act of the assignee's wife in obtaining additional insurance and accept the benefits thereof they are bound thereby.[1] But a person cannot after the property insured has been destroyed accept a policy procured without his knowledge or procurement and which at the time of issue he never intended to accept, and, therefore, in such case there can be no question of ratifications and where it is claimed that such a policy is other insurance and this is denied the question is one for the jury.[2]

[16] De Witt v. Agricultural Ins. Co. 157 N. Y. 353, 61 N. E. 977, aff'g 36 N. Y. Supp. 570, 89 Hun, 229, 71 N. Y. St. Rep. 566.

[17] Ginners' Mutual Underwriters v. Wiley & House, — Tex. Civ. App. —, 147 S. W. 629.

[18] Niagara Fire Ins. Co. v. Scammon, 144 Ill. 490, 19 L.R.A. 114, 28 N. E. 919, 32 N. E. 914.

[19] Arnold v. St. Paul Fire & Marine Ins. Co. 106 Tenn. 529, 61 S. W. 1032.

[20] Phœnix Ins. Co. v. Copeland, 86 Ala. 551, 4 L.R.A. 848, 6 So. 143.

[1] German Ins. Co. v. Emporia Mutual Loan & Savings Assoc. 9 Kan. App. 803, 59 Pac. 1092.

[2] Nelson v. Atlanta Home Ins. Co. 120 N. Car. 302, 27 S. E. 38, 26 Ins. L. J. 913.

§ 2462b. Same subject: mortgagor and mortgagee.[2a]—If an owner of property accepts a fire policy thereon, containing a condition that it shall be void if other insurance is taken on the insured property, the fact that the mortgagee of such property subsequently takes other insurance on his interest does not avoid the owner's insurance, especially when neither knew that insurance had been procured by the other.[3] And where a mortgagee who is assignee of the policy obtains its cancelation without the mortgagor's knowledge and effects insurance with another insurer, it does not constitute double insurance under the commercial law, nor is it subsequent insurance under the Ontario statute.[4] In another case the loan agent who negotiated the mortgage, took out, without the mortgagor's knowledge or consent, a mortgage on his dwelling, loss payable to the mortgagee, said agent paying the premium out of the loan fund. After the loss the mortgagor learned of the prior insurance and upon advice of insurer's agent that he present proofs of loss on both policies and prorate the same, he did so and it was held that the insurance subsequently obtained was not annulled and that his acts after loss, done upon advice of insurer's agent, after the moral hazard had ceased to exist, could not prevent recovery.[5] Again, a condition binding insurer's liability to the mortgagor's proportionate share of the loss has no application where the only other policy is one which is taken out by the mortgagee without authority on the part of the mortgagor and who upon learning thereof notified said mortgagee that she had procured insurance upon the property and he thereupon promised to cancel that obtained by him, he having no authority to procure said insurance unless the mortgagor failed to protect his interest.[6] Where the policy is issued, loss payable to the mortgagee, limiting liability to no greater proportion of the loss than the amount insured should bear to the whole insurance whether valid or not, and the mortgagee, at the agent's request, surrendered the policy for cancelation and accepted from said agent another policy in another company in place thereof, of which facts the [2a] When mortgagee's interest not affected by mortgagor's acts. See § 2795 herein.

[3] Home Ins. Co. of N. Y. v. Koob, 113 Ky. 360, 58 L.R.A. 58, 101 Am. St. Rep. 354, 68 S. W. 453, 24 Ky. L. Rep. 223.

On procuring of insurance by mortgagee as a violation of provisions in policy of mortgagor against other or additional insurance, see note in L.R.A.1917A, 607.

[4] Morrow v. Lancashire Ins. Co. 29 Ont. 377, 18 Canadian L. T. 220, aff'd 26 Ont. App. 123, 19 Canadian L. T. 130; Rev. Stat. Ont. c. 203, sec. 8.

[5] Cowart v. Capital City Ins. Co. 114 Ala. 356, 22 So. 57, 27 Ins. L. J. 246.

[6] Kelley v. People's National Fire Ins. Co. 262 Ill. 158, 50 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1164, 104 N. E. 188, aff'g 181 Ill. App. 142.

mortgagor had no notice, it was held that the second policy constituted other insurance and that the loss should be apportioned as stipulated.[7] But where the mortgagee has effected insurance in the owner's name loss payable to himself as his interest may appear the insured owner is not aided by the fact that the mortgagee's act was without said owner's knowledge or consent.[8]

If a mortgagee's interest is protected by a policy taken out in the name of the mortgagor and they accept and retain the policy they are chargeable with knowledge that the mortgagor is the insured and whether the latter had actual or imputed notice that said policy was issued, his act in taking out further insurance without consent of the insurer constitutes other insurance which defeats the first policy.[9] So the rights of mortgagees under a policy payable to them as their interest may appear, and providing that they shall not be affected by any act of the mortgagor to which they do not consent, are not affected by additional insurance taken by him without their knowledge, although the policy provided that in the event of other insurance "the insured" can recover only pro rata, and a rider to the policy permits other insurance, making a similar provision as to pro rata liability, "whether such other insurance applies in the same manner or not," as the other insurance in such case affects only the insured, and not the mortgagees.[10]

§ 2463. Policy outstanding at time of application for insurance surrendered before issuance of subsequent policy.—Though the insured may insert a statement in his application for insurance that there is no other insurance upon the property, and there is in fact a prior policy in existence, yet it is held that if he surrenders this prior policy before the subsequent one is issued, the condition in the subsequent policy as to "prior and subsequent insurance" will not be violated.[11]

§ 2464. Subsequent policy must cover same or part of same property.—As we have already stated, the subsequent policy must cover the same or at least part of the same property as is covered by the prior policy. If it does not, then it will not constitute double or other insurance. So an insurance on goods in the store is not within the rule of an insurance company making void the policy

[7] Hartford Fire Ins. Co. v. Peterson, 209 Ill. 112, 70 N. E. 757.

[8] Perry v. Liverpool & London & Globe Ins. Co. 34 N. B. 380.

[9] Holbrook v. Balvise Fire Ins. Co. 117 Cal. 561, 49 Pac. 555, 26 Ins. L. J. 639.

When mortgagee's interest not affected by mortgagor's acts, see § 2795 herein.

[10] Hardy v. Lancashire Ins. Co. 166 Mass. 210, 33 L.R.A. 241, 44 N. E. 209. See § 2795 herein.

[11] Train v. Holland Ins. Co. 68 N. Y. 208. See §§ 2475–2478 herein.

on the store in case the assured shall be allowed to insure the same or "any other property connected with it in any other company or any other office." [12] The fact that the insured had insured in other companies is no defense if the policies do not legally cover the same property though there may be some mingling of the goods.[13] Where the policy covered a "carpenter's shop and carpenter tools," it was held that, although another policy was issued to the same person upon "four chests of carpenters' tools in a wood shop," which was described as being in the same street as the property described in the first policy, it was not proof that any part of the property was covered by both policies where it appeared that there were two chests in the shop belonging to the assured and two or three belonging to the workmen.[14]

§ 2465. Insurance on ship and on advances.—If an insurance is effected upon a ship and also upon "advances," this will not constitute double insurance where it is evident from the construction of the policy that the advances are independent of and distinct from the ship, and are intended so to be insured; as in a case where the ship's valuation was fixed at one hundred thousand dollars, and there had been the sum of ninety-five thousand dollars paid on the policies and also twenty-eight thousand seven hundred and fifty dollars on account of advances, it was held, in an action to recover on a five thousand dollar policy, that there was no double insurance. This was a case where a policy was effected at Lloyds "on advances." The policy was the common form of Lloyds' valued policies, printed with blanks for the insertion of the particular terms of the contract to be superadded to the printed parts. The court said: "When the words 'on advances,' together with the valuation, are inserted, they cannot be taken to mean any part of the ship or cargo, because all these are already described not only in the valuation clause but in the general clause descriptive of the insured property. . . . The sensible construction of a policy like this now in controversy is that it insures advances against risk from the loss of a ship and the advances thus insured are something independent of and distinct from the ship herself." [15]

§ 2466. Insurance against different perils.—As we have previously stated,[16] the insurance must be upon the same property, [12] Jones v. Maine Mutual Fire Ins. Co. 18 Me. 155. See also Illinois Mutual Fire Ins. Co. v. O'Neil, 13 Ill. 89. See § 2472 herein.

[13] Boatman's Fire & Marine Ins. Co. v. Hocking, 8 Atl. 417, 6 Cent. 652, 5 Sadler (Pa.) 180.

[14] Clark v. Hamilton Ins. Co. 9 Gray (75 Mass.) 148.

[15] Providence-Washington Ins. Co. v. Bowring, 50 Fed. 613, 1 C. C. A. 583.

[16] See § 2455 herein.

for the benefit of the same person, and against the same risk, in order to be within the meaning of a provision as to other insurance. All these conditions must unite. Therefore, the same property may be insured against different perils,[17] and it will not constitute other insurance.

A case upon this point arose in England. Insurance against fire was effected to the amount of three thousand pounds upon wool in any shed or station or in transit by land only, or in any shed, store, or on the wharf in Sydney until placed on ships. The policy was conditioned to be void in case of other insurance. The insured then procured a subsequent marine policy for sixteen thousand five hundred pounds on wool to be carried by ship from Hunter to Sydney, and from thence to London by ships. The policy carried the risk of craft from the time the wool was first waterborne, and of transshipment or landing and reshipment at Sydney. It was the custom of stevedores at Sydney to have the wool taken to their stores, where it was pressed and taken to the ship. The wool, upon the arrival of the ship at Sydney, was transferred by the plaintiff's agent to his store. The agent entered into a contract for its shipment by water to London. After having the wool weighed, it was transferred from his store to the warehouse of the ship's stevedore, and while there it was in part destroyed by fire. In an action to recover it was held that there was no other insurance within the meaning of the provision, as the policy covering the marine risk did not attach while the wool was in the warehouse of the stevedore.[18]

§ 2467. Where insurances are upon different interests or do not cover same subject.—If different persons have different interests in the same subject of insurance each may insure his interest, and this will not constitute other or double insurance.[19] A policy of fire insurance containing a stipulation against "other insurance" is not invalidated by the fact that at the time of its issuance a prior policy covering the same property is in existence, unless the assured has an interest in such prior policy, or will derive a benefit under

[17] See § 2466 herein.

[18] Australia Agricultural Ins. Co. v. Saunders, 10 L. R. Com. P. 668, 44 L. J. C. P. 391, 53 L. T. 447, 3 Asp. M. C. 63.

[19] Perkins v. New England Marine Ins. Co. 12 Mass. 214; Lowell Manufacturing Ins. Co. v. Safeguard Fire Ins. Co. 88 N. Y. 591; Rowley v. Empire Fire Ins. Co. 4 Abb. Dec. (N. Y.) 131, 36 N. Y. 550, 42 N. Y. 557; Whittwell v. Putnam Fire Ins. Co. 6 Lans. (N. Y.) 166; Wells v. Philadelphia Ins. Co. 9 Serg. & R. (Pa.) 103; Goding v. London Assurance Co. 1 Burr. 489–93, per Lord Mansfield, 1 Ld. Ken. 254, 1 W. Black. 103.

it in the event of the burning of the property.[20] So where a policy provided against other insurance, it was held that an insurance by a partner of his undivided interest did not avoid the policy.[1] An agreement between different owners of property that one of them shall take out the insurance upon said property in his own name does not amount to double insurance.[2] Different merchants who have been supplying a dealer with stock may each insure his interest, and it will not constitute other or double insurance.[3] Nor will it in case of insurance by both pledgeor and pledgee,[4] or by vendor and vendee.[5] But where the vendee of goods procured a policy prohibiting other insurance, and assigned it to the vendor with insurer's consent, and then executed a subsequent insurance for his own account, it was held that the second policy was void.[6] And insurance by both shipper and carrier will not constitute other insurance,[7] or by lessor and lessee,[8] or by consignor and consignee,[9] except where the policy is procured by the consignee to protect both his interest and that of the consignor, and in such a case so much of the insurance as will be for the protection of the consignor will be double or other insurance.[10] So also where B had a bond from A for an undivided half of a mill, and gave a bond back to keep it in repair, and also agreed that A might get it insured at his expense to secure him for the debt, and A procured an insurance on the whole mill, it was held that the insurance by A was not a double insurance.[11] Insurance may be effected by the grantee of the equity of redemption and by the mortgagee in the cases where the sale or transfer of the property by the mortgagor will not defeat the mortgagee's policy, and such insurance will not be in violation of a condition in the mortgagee's policy requiring notice of other insurance.[12] Where a widow insures property be-[20] Copeland v. Phœnix Ins. Co. 96 Ala. 615, 38 Am. St. Rep. 134, 11 So. 746.

[1] Hall v. Concordia Fire Ins. Co. 90 Mich. 403, 51 N. W. 524.

[2] Burbank v. Rockingham Ins. Co. 24 N. H. 550, 57 Am. Dec. 300.

[3] Roos v. Merchants' Ins. Co. 27 La. Ann. 409.

[4] Nussbaum v. Northern Ins. Co. 37 Fed. 524, 1 L.R.A. 704.

[5] Southern Ins. Co. v. Lewis, 42 Ga. 587; Ætna Fire Ins. Co. v. Tyler, 16 Wend. (N. Y.) 385, 30 Am. Dec. 90; Rumsey v. Phœnix Ins. Co. 1 Fed. 396, 17 Blatchf. 527.

[6] Neve v. Columbia Ins. Co. 2 McMull. (S. C.) *220, 490; Leavitt v. Western Fire & Marine Ins. Co. 7 Rob. (La.) 351.

[7] Royster v. Roanoke N. & B. Steamboat Co. 26 Fed. 492.

[8] Mitchell v. Home Ins. Co. 32 Iowa, 421; Planters' Mutual Ins. Co. v. Rowland, 66 Md. 236, 7 Atl. 257.

[9] Williams v. Crescent Mutual Ins. Co. 15 La. Ann. 651; Shaw v. Ætna Ins. Co. 49 Mo. 578, 8 Am. Rep. 150; Herkimer v. Rice, 27 N. Y. 163.

[10] Home Ins. Co. v. Baltimore Warehouse Co. 93 U. S. 527, 23 L. ed. 868.

[11] Burbank v. Rockingham Ins. Co. 24 N. H. (Fost.) 550, 57 Am. Dec. 300.

[12] City Five Cents Savings Bank

longing to the minor heirs of her deceased husband, making the application in their behalf, they having no guardian and she has a dower interest in the property, the policy is not forfeited by the fact that she subsequently insures her dower interest in the property in another company, since in order to assert a forfeiture on the ground of double insurance the second policy must have been made to the same person mentioned in the first policy and on the same interest in the same policy.[13]

§ 2468. Policy to different joint owners of property: tenants in common.—Where several persons own property as tenants in common, and have effected a policy thereon which forbids other insurance, a subsequent policy effected by one of the tenants without mention of the joint ownership will constitute other insurance within the meaning of the prohibition.[14] And a policy conditioned to be void if there be any prior insurance is held to be avoided by a prior policy in the name of one of the joint owners only.[15] In Kentucky, it has been held that insurance by several joint owners may be made on their respective interests at different offices, notwithstanding a provision in each policy "that it shall be void in case any other insurance is effected on the same property without notice." Such a provision applies only to a second insurance in case the policy is forfeited.[16]

§ 2469. Insurance by owner of land and person holding under contract for deed.—Both the owner of land and a person holding possession under a contract for a deed may each insure his interest, and in such a case if the policy to the person holding possession under such a contract contains a condition forbidding other insurance, a subsequent policy to the owner will not avoid the prior policy.[17] So an insurance upon the mortgagee's interest and a policy upon the interest of a vendee in possession under a contract for purchase cover different interests and an insurance by the latter does not void the former's policy although it forbids additional insurance.[18]

v. Pennsylvania Ins. Co. 122 Mass. 165.

[13] Haire v. Ohio Farmers' Ins. Co. 93 Mich. 481, 32 Am. St. Rep. 516, 53 N. W. 623.

[14] Pitney v. Glens Falls Ins. Co. 65 N. Y. 6.

[15] Horridge v. Dwelling-House Ins. Co. 75 Iowa, 374, 39 N. W. 648.

[16] Franklin Marine & Fire Ins. Co. v. Drake, 2 B. Mon. (Ky.) 47; Woodbury Savings Bank v. Charter Oak Fire & Marine Ins. Co. 31 Conn. 517, 518.

[17] Ætna Fire Ins. Co. v. Tyler, 16 Wend. (N. Y.) 385, 30 Am. Dec. 90; Tyler v. Ætna Fire Ins. Co. 12 Wend. (N. Y.) 507. See also Smith v. American Ins. Co. 177 Mich. 123, 143 N. W. 54, 42 Ins. L. J. 1758, considered under § 2462a herein.

[18] DeWitt v. Agricultural Ins. Co.

§ 2470. Different interests: mortgagor and mortgagee.—The general rule that different persons each having a different interest in property may insure that interest also prevails where different policies are effected by the mortgagor and mortgagee upon the property. The mortgagor may insure the property to cover his interest, and the mortgagee may likewise insure his interest in the property, and it will not be within the meaning of the clause as to other insurance.[19] So a policy taken by a mortgagee on his interest in mortgaged property is not within the meaning of a clause of a policy issued to the mortgagor, rendering the policy void "if now or hereafter there be other insurance on any property hereby insured."[20]

If a policy is procured in the name of the mortgagor, and is merely made payable to the mortgagee as his interest may appear, and the mortgagor subsequently procures additional insurance, the policy will be avoided if conditioned to be void in case of other insurance.[1]

A mortgagee may be bound by the stipulations of a policy so that the policy will be defeated by subsequent unauthorized insurance, although obtained by and insuring the interest of one of the mortgagors only. In this case the mortgage provided that if the mortgagors failed to insure the property, the mortgagee could in-157 N. Y. 353, 51 N. E. 977, aff'g 36 N. Y. Supp. 570, 89 Hun, 229, 71 N. Y. St. Rep. 566.

[19] Connecticut.—Woodbury Savings Bank v. Charter Oak Fire & Marine Ins. Co. 31 Conn. 517.

Illinois.—Niagara Fire Ins. Co. v. Scammon, 35 Ill. App. 582, 20 Ins. L. J. 119.

Kentucky.—Home Ins. Co. of N. Y. v. Koob, 113 Ky. 360, 24 Ky. L. Rep. 223, 58 L.R.A. 58, 68 S. W. 453.

Massachusetts.—Wheeler v. Watertown Fire Ins. Co. 131 Mass. 1; Nichols v. Fayette Ins. Co. 1 Allen (83 Mass.) 63.

Michigan.—Guest v. New Hampshire Fire Ins. Co. 66 Mich. 98, 33 N. W. 31.

New York.—Traders' Ins. Co. v. Roberts, 9 Wend. (N. Y.) 404.

As to insurance by mortgagee without mortgagor's knowledge, see § 2462a herein.

[20] Home Ins. Co. of N. Y. v. Koob, 113 Ky. 360, 58 L.R.A. 58, 101 Am. St. Rep. 354, 68 S. W. 453, 22 Ky. L. Rep. 223.

On procuring of insurance by mortgagee as a violation of provisions in policy of mortgagor against other or additional insurance, see note in L.R.A.1917A, 607.

[1] Sias v. Roger Williams Ins. Co. 8 Fed. 183, 187, 9 Ins. L. J. 154; Monroe Building & Loan Assoc. v. Liverpool & London & Globe Ins. Co. 50 La. Ann. 1243, 24 So. 238, 28 Ins. L. J. 266; Hine v. Homestead Fire Ins. Co. 29 Hun (N. Y.) 84, s. c. 93 N. Y. 75, 45 Am. Rep. 176; Perry v. Lorillard Fire Ins. Co. 61 N. Y. 214, 19 Am. Rep. 272; Van Alstyne v. Ætna Ins. Co. 14 Hun (N. Y.) 360, 366; Gillett v. London & Liverpool & Globe Ins. Co. 73 Wis. 203, 9 Am. St. Rep. 784, 41 N. W. 78. Examine Franklin Ins. Co. v. Wolff, 23 Ind. App. 549, 54 N. E. 772.

Compare §§ 2314 et seq., 2795 herein.

sure the same, the expense thereof being added to the mortgage debt, and the mortgagee applied for insurance on the property to secure his interest therein, and a policy was issued running to the mortgagors, but provided that the loss, if any, should be payable to the mortgagee, and contained a stipulation avoiding the policy if the insured obtained additional insurance without consent of the company, and the mortgagee paid the premium and retained the policy without objection for nearly a year before the property was burned.[2] Again, where a husband and wife mortgaged the wife's premises, and procured an insurance thereon payable to the mortgagee as his interest might appear, and the policy was conditioned to be void in case of subsequent insurance, whether valid or not, without consent written on the policy, and the wife alone procured another policy of insurance in her own name, it was held, first, that the first insurance was of the mortgagor's, and not of the mortgagee's, interest, and second, that the first insurance was avoided by the second.[3] And where a policy was issued in the name of the owner of a vessel which was mortgaged, and the policy was assigned to the mortgagee, and the mortgagor subsequently procured another policy, it was held that the assignee's right to recover was defeated.[4] A policy in the name of the mortgagor alone which contains such a condition will, it is held, be avoided where one of the mortgagors procures a subsequent insurance, though the former policy was procured and paid for by the mortgagee.[5] In these cases it will be seen that the person who procures the insurance, or in whose name it is issued, retains his interest in the first policy at the time of procuring the second. If, however, the policy has been assigned by the mortgagor to the mortgagee, so as to transfer all interest in the policy and to constitute it a new contract between the mortgagee and the insured, there will be no reason why the mortgagor might not procure a subsequent policy in his own name to protect his interest in the mortgaged property, and such insurance would not be other or double insurance. Where a fire policy issued by the G Company to M, payable to T as mortgagee, contained a clause avoiding it in case of other insurance without G's written consent, etc., and T, without M's knowledge, procured insurance in the H Company, and after the loss M made the formal proof required to procure payment of the H insurance,

[2] Gillett v. London & Liverpool & Globe Ins. Co. 73 Wis. 203, 9 Am. St. Rep. 784, 41 N. W. 78.

[3] Continental Ins. Co. v. Hulman, 92 Ill. 145, 34 Am. Rep. 122, cited in note 1 B. R. C. 52. See §§ 2475–2478 herein.

[4] Buffalo Steam Engine Works v. Sun Mutual Ins. Co. 17 N. Y. 401.

[5] Gillett v. London & Liverpool & Globe Ins. Co. 73 Wis. 203, 9 Am. St. Rep. 784, 41 N. W. 78.

it was held that there was no default or ratification by M that would avoid the G policy.[6] Persons holding under different mortgages may each insure the property to protect their interest.[7] It has been held, if a policy contains a warranty that no other insurance exists, that the fact that the insured had no knowledge of other insurance is not always conclusive.[8] Again, insurance taken out by a mortgagee under authority of the mortgage deed to do so if the mortgagor fails to insure, after the mortgagor had secured a policy, and which the mortgagee promised to cancel upon learning the facts, does not avoid the policy of the mortgagor under a provision therein making it void if insured shall make or procure any other contract of insurance.[9] And if the mortgagor takes out a policy to cover the mortgagee's interest it is not avoided by the latter's effecting insurance without the former's consent where she upon learning thereof sent notice to said mortgagee informing him of the insurance previously obtained by her and he thereupon promised to cancel his policy but did not do so, said mortgagee only being authorized to procure insurance to protect his interest in case the mortgagor failed to procure it.[10] And the fact that a mortgagee in effecting insurance on his interest in the mortgaged property attempted to charge the premium to the mortgagor, does not make it "other insurance," within the meaning of a clause in a policy procured by the mortgagor making it void in case there be any other insurance on the property hereby insured.[11]

§ 2471. Insurance by stranger will not constitute other insurance.—If a stranger without the knowledge and consent of the owner of the property, or the person having therein an insurable interest which he has protected by a policy of insurance, procures a policy upon the property, this will not constitute other insurance such as will be within the meaning of a prohibition as to other insurances,[12] unless the subsequent insurance is ratified by the

[6] Titus v. Glens Falls Ins. Co. 81 N. Y. 410, 8 Abb. N. C. (N. Y.) 315. See also Robert v. Traders' Ins. Co. 17 Wend. (N. Y.) 631, rev'g 9 Wend. (N. Y.) 474.

[7] Fox v. Phœnix Ins. Co. 52 Me. 333.

[8] Phœnix Ins. Co. v. Copeland, 86 Ala. 551, 4 L.R.A. 848, 6 So. 143.

[9] Kelley (use of Chisholm) v. People's National Fire Ins. Co. 262 Ill. 158, 50 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1164, 104 N. E. 188.

[10] Kelley v. People's National Fire Ins. Co. 262 Ill. 158, 50 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1164, 104 N. E. 188, aff'g 181 Ill. App. 142.

[11] Home Ins. Co. of N. Y. v. Koob, 113 Ky. 360, 58 L.R.A. 58, 101 Am. St. Rep. 354, 68 S. W. 453, 22 Ky. L. Rep. 223.

[12] United States.—Carpenter v. Providence-Washington Ins. Co. 16 Pet. (41 U. S.) 495, 10 L. ed. 1044; Johnson v. North British Mutual Ins. Co. 1 Holmes (U. S. C. C.) 117, Fed. Cas. No. 7,460.

Illinois.—Niagara Fire Ins. Co. v. Scammon, 144 Ill. 490, 19 L.R.A. 114, 28 N. E. 919, 32 N. E. 914.

insured under the prior policy; as where a father procured insurance in his son's name, and the latter accepted payment under such policy for a loss, it was held that the prior policy was avoided.[13] If persons interested in property have procured insurance thereon, though in the name and for the benefit of the person procuring the subsequent policy, yet it is held that the subsequent insurance will not be within the meaning of a condition in the prior policy prohibiting other insurance where it appears that the person procuring the subsequent policy was not aware of the issuance of the prior policy.[14]

§ 2472. Subsequent insurance covering property first insured and other property.—Where a policy contains a clause forbidding other insurance, it is held that it does not merely prohibit insurance of precisely the same property, but that the policy will be avoided by an insurance effected upon the property named in connection with other property.[15] In Pennsylvania, however, it has been held where one policy of insurance covers the building only, and a subsequent policy in another company covers the building, machinery, shafting, belting, tools, lathes, planes, drills, and stock, finished and unfinished, it is not a case of double insurance and does not come within the meaning of a clause in the former policy prohibiting double insurance without notice.[16] But in New York an insurance of one thousand dollars on fixtures and three thousand dollars on stock, and a further insurance of five thousand dollars on stock and fixtures as one parcel, was held to be a case of double insurance.[17] Although in another case where the first policy covered the "electric lamps, shades, wires, and all other electric fixtures and appurtenances," and the subsequent policies covered household goods and "fixtures of every description," there being no apportionment of the risk between the different kinds of prop-

Kentucky.—London & Lancashire Fire Ins. Co. v. Turnbull, 86 Ky. 230, 5 S. W. 542, 9 Ky. L. Rep. 544; Franklin Marine Fire Ins. Co. v. Drake, 2 B. Mon. (Ky.) 47.

Maine.—Fox v. Phœnix Ins. Co. 52 Me. 333, 353.

New York.—Rowley v. Empire Ins. Co. 4 Abb. Dec. (N. Y.) 131, 36 N. Y. 550, s. c. 42 N. Y. 557.

Ohio.—Harris v. Ohio Ins. Co. Wright (Ohio) 544.

[13] Dafoe v. Johnstown District Mutual Ins. Co. 7 U. C. C. P. 55, cited in note in 1 B. R. C. 46, 56. See §§ 2475–2478 herein.

[14] Nichols v. Fayette Ins. Co. 1 Allen (83 Mass.) 63.

[15] Phœnix Ins. Co. v. Michigan Southern & Northern Indiana R. R. Co. 28 Ohio, 69; McMahon v. Portsmouth Ins. Co. 22 N. H. 15. See §§ 2464, 2473a herein.

[16] Sloat v. Royal Ins. Co. 49 Pa. St. 14, 88 Am. Dec. 477; Clark v. Western Assurance Co. 146 Pa. St. 561, 28 Am. St. Rep. 821, 15 L.R.A. 127, 23 Atl. 248.

[17] Ogden v. East River Ins. Co. 50 N. Y. 388, 389, 10 Am. Rep. 492, overruling Howard Ins. Co. v. Scribner, 5 Hill (N. Y.) 298.

erty insured, it was held that it was not a case of double insurance, at least as to the whole amount of the policies.[18] So where the risk is apportioned, a separate amount upon each class of property insured, so that one of the classes would be the same as that covered by a prior policy, it would seem to clearly constitute a case of double insurance so as to avoid the prior policy.

§ 2473. Where part of insured property covered by subsequent policy: entire or divisible contract.—If a policy apportions the insurance to different items or classes of property, a subsequent insurance upon one of the items or classes to which a separate sum is apportioned in the first policy will avoid that, at least as to the item or class subsequently insured.[19] In Massachusetts, it has been held [20] that in such a case the policy first issued is entirely avoided where the first policy prohibits other insurance upon the "property insured or any part thereof." So where a policy which was issued containing such a condition apportioned part to a building and part to the household goods and furniture therein, it was held that the taking of subsequent insurance upon merely the building would avoid the policy.[1]

The question which arises in these cases is this, Does the fact of the apportionment of the insurance to different items or classes of property of itself render the contract a divisible one, so that an insurance subsequently effected upon one of the items will only avoid the policy as to that item, or is the contract so entire that the whole policy is avoided? Upon this point it is declared in an Indiana case that:[2] "In order, therefore, to give effect to the conditions according to the intent and purpose of the contract, it follows necessarily that where the property covered by one policy, although consisting of separate items, appears to be so situate as to constitute substantially one risk, then even though separate amounts of the insurance be apportioned to each separate item or class of property, if the consideration for the contract and the risk are both indivisible, the contract must be treated as entire nevertheless. To such a policy the principles governing entire and indivisible contracts are applicable, for the reason that the matter which renders the policy void as to part affects the risk of the insurer, in respect to the other items, in the same manner as it affects those items in respect to which the contract is voided. In such a [18] Clark v. Western Assurance Ins. Co. 146 Pa. St. 561, 28 Am. St. Rep. 821, 15 L.R.A. 127, 33 Atl. 248, 21 Ins. L. J. 281.

[19] Illinois Mutual Fire Ins. Co. v. Fix, 53 Ill. 151, 5 Am. Rep. 38.

[20] Kimball v. Howard Ins. Co. 8 Gray (74 Mass.) 33.

[1] Havens v. Home Ins. Co. 111 Ind. 90, 60 Am. Rep. 689, 12 N. E. 137.

[2] Havens v. Home Ins. Co. 111 Ind. 90, 60 Am. Rep. 689, 12 N. E. 137.

case the only effect of apportioning the amount of the insurance upon the separate items of property specified in the policy is to limit the extent of the company's liability to the sum specified upon each item or class of property insured." [3]

The weight of authority seems to support the rule that if the amount of the insurance is not apportioned to different items or classes of property, but the contract is entire, then a subsequent insurance effected by the assured in the first policy upon part of the property covered by such prior policy will defeat the entire policy.[4] The object of this condition in policies is to protect the insurer from any increased hazard due to overinsurance. By such a condition the insured has an interest in the preservation of the property, since in case of its destruction he will sustain no benefit, and will consequently be more watchful against fire; therefore, the property need not be the identical property covered in the first policy, but only a part thereof. If, however, the prior insurance is apportioned to different items, and the subsequent policy covers only one of those items, then it ought to constitute double insurance only as to that item, unless the contract is clearly an entire contract, or unless the policy is conditioned to be void in case of subsequent insurance upon the whole or any part of the property covered.

§ 2473a. Other insurance: whether contract divisible or entire: statute.—In a North Dakota Case where the first policy was upon the building and the other on the building for a specified amount and also covered for another specified sum the furniture and fixtures, for a lump consideration as premium, it was held that the contract was indivisible so that under the provisions of the policy anything which voided the policy as to the building also voided it in its entirety; but upon rehearing a statute of that state was before the court, the provision thereof being that the procurement of any other contract of insurance upon one or more of the several distinct things insured by one policy does not render void any insurance upon the things not covered by such other contract of insurance, "but in case of loss or damage such an amount shall be deducted from the insurance as the value of the property so doubly insured bears to the value of all the property covered by the policy" and also providing that any agreement to waive said provision should be void, so that it was held that in view of said statute the policy

[3] See also § 2254 herein. Examine Sunderlin v. Ætna Ins. Co. 18 Hun (N. Y.) 522.

[4] Associated Firemen's Ins. Co. v. Assum, 5 Md. 165; Liscom v. Boston Mutual Fire Ins. Co. 9 Met. (50 Mass.) 205; Columbus Ins. Co. v. Walsh, 18 Mo. 229; Pitney v. Glens Falls Ins. Co. 65 N. Y. 6. But see Quarrier v. Peabody Ins. Co. 10 W. Va. 507, 27 Am. Rep. 582.

must be treated as two separate and distinct policies, one on the building and the other upon the personal property and fixtures, and a breach of conditions subsequent which renders the insurance void as to one, did not affect the other.[5]

§ 2474. Where insured goods are removed and joined with other goods also insured.—Where a policy of insurance contains a condition "that if any other insurance has been or shall hereafter be made upon the said property not consented to in writing herein this policy shall be null and void," and the stock of goods insured is removed and merged in another stock which is insured under policies covering accruing stock, the insurance on the latter will cover the former, and, if effected without the consent of the first insurer, the policy issued by him is void.[6] In a case which arose in New York, however,[7] it was held that where goods covered by a policy containing such a condition were removed and mingled with other goods of a similar nature, which were also insured, it was not a case of other insurance, as the two policies covered different goods.

§ 2475. Where other insurance is void or voidable: prior or subsequent policies conditioned against other insurance.—A policy of insurance conditioned to be void if there be any other insurance upon the property is not avoided by other insurance which is void upon its face.[8] In a case in Maryland, this question arose, and it

[5] First National Bank of Nome v. German American Ins. Co. 23 N. Dak. 139, 38 L.R.A.(N.S.) 213, 134 N. W. 873, 41 Ins. L. J. 899, 906; Rev. Code 1905, sec. 5909. See Carleton v. Patrons' Androscoggin Mutual Fire Ins. Co. 109 Me. 70, 39 L.R.A.(N.S.) 951n, 82 Atl. 649, 41 Ins. L. J. 1067. See §§ 1931, 2472 herein.

[6] Washington Ins. Co. v. Hayes, 17 Ohio St. 432, 93 Am. Dec. 628. See also Walton v. Louisiana State Marine & Fire Ins. Co. 2 Rob. (La.) 563.

[7] Vose v. Hamilton Ins. Co. 39 Barb. (N. Y.) 302.

[8] Indiana.—American Ins. Co. v. Replogle, 114 Ind. 1, 15 N. E. 810; Replogle v. American Ins. Co. 132 Ind. 360, 31 N. E. 947.

Iowa.—Behrens v. Germania Ins. Co. 64 Iowa, 19, 19 N. W. 838; David v. Hartford Ins. Co. 13 Iowa, 69.

Massachusetts.—Hayes v. Milford Mutual Fire Ins. Co. 170 Mass. 492, 49 N. E. 754, 27 Ins. L. J. 459; Jackson v. Farmers' Mutual Fire Ins. Co. 5 Gray (71 Mass.) 52; Jackson v. Massachusetts Mutual Fire Ins. Co. 23 Pick. (40 Mass.) 418, 34 Am. Dec. 69.

Missouri. — Obermeyer v. Globe Mut. Ins. Co. 43 Mo. 573.

New Hampshire.—Gee v. Cheshire Ins. Co. 55 N. H. 65, 20 Am. Rep. 171; Hale v. Union Ins. Co. 32 N. H. 295, 64 Am. Dec. 370.

New York.—Bigler v. New York Ins. Co. 20 Barb. (N. Y.) 635, aff'd 22 N. Y. 402.

Ohio.—Firemen's Ins. Co. v. Holt, 35 Ohio St. 189, 35 Am. Rep. 601.

Pennsylvania.—Mitchell v. Lycoming Ins. Co. 51 Pa. St. 402; Examine Bateman v. Lumberman's Ins. Co. 189 Pa. 465, 42 Atl. 184, 28 Ins. L. J. 159; Stacy v. Franklin Fire Ins. Co. 2 Watts & S. (Pa.) 506.

was held that the first policy was not avoided by a second policy which was void ab initio.[9] In this case the second policy was conditioned to be void in case of prior or subsequent insurance, whether valid or invalid. The court said: "'Other insurance' does not mean a void policy which obviously affords no insurance at all, nor does it mean a policy which may, at the option of the underwriter, be canceled; for that is at least but conditional insurance. But it means a binding available insurance; one upon which the insured can rely for protection in case of loss, and which he can enforce by law, and which cannot be repudiated with impunity at the arbitrary election of the insurer. . . . A second policy which by its own terms is void for any cause is not an insurance at all, and this is equally true whether the invalidity is apparent on the face of the policy itself or is made to appear by evidence aliunde the policy. It is not the method by which the invalidity of the second policy may be shown that determines whether it does or does not create a liability on the part of the underwriter who issues it, and therefore does or does not constitute a breach of the condition in the first policy against further insurance; but it is the fact that the second policy is valid and binding that alone fixes upon its underwriter a liability, and accordingly determines whether in this respect the condition against other insurance set forth in the first policy has been violated or not. . . . If, then, its provisions be given the effect which the parties to it intended they should have, it is void and not merely voidable the moment the condition arises upon the occurrence of which the parties have declared it shall be invalid. And if thus invalid, it obviously does not create other insurance within the prohibition contained in the first policy. It would, then, be nothing more than an attempt to secure other insurance. An ineffectual attempt to secure insurance is confessedly no insurance."

All of the cases cited below do not directly hold that the policy is not avoided only in those cases where the other insurance is void upon its face, but many of them will be found to be in accord with the rule supported by a large number of cases, that in order to avoid a policy on account of subsequent insurance against an express condition therein, it must appear that such subsequent insurance is valid, and that the policy upon which it is made is cap-

South Carolina.—Neve v. Columbia Ins. Co. 2 McMull. (S. C.) *220.

West Virginia.—Wolpert v. Northern Assurance Co. 44 W. Va. 734, 29 S. E. 1024.

See also § 2492 herein.

On void or inoperative policies of insurance as breach of condition against additional or other insurance on property, see note in 1 B. R. C. 39.

[9] Sweeting v. Mutual Fire Ins. Co. 83 Md. 63, 32 L.R.A. 570, 34 Atl. 826.

able of being enforced.[10] Where the subsequent policy is invalid by reason of a misrepresentation as to other or prior insurance, a recovery may be had upon the prior policy.[11] In a case in Minnesota, however, it is held that a fire policy, conditioned to be void if the insured should thereafter insure the same property in another company without the consent of the insurer, is avoided by subsequent insurance void by its terms for misrepresentation.[12] There is a class of cases in line with this Minnesota case in which it is said that if the insured believed that the subsequent insurance was valid, then the prior policy is avoided or voidable at the option of the insurer, whether the subsequent insurance is in fact valid or not, since the same motives might move the insured to be less careful of the property, and the same motives would exist for a fraudulent destruction of the property as if it was in fact valid. Therefore, it is held that the policy is avoided, since the very motives exist which the insured intended to guard against, and the moral hazard is in fact increased.[13] So a prior insurance is none the less within the conditions of a policy of insurance declaring it void if

[10] Hubbard v. Hartford Fire Ins. Co. 33 Iowa, 325, 11 Am. Rep. 125, per Beck, J. See also:

United States.—Allison v. Phoenix Ins. Co. 3 Dill. (U. S. C. C.) 480, Fed. Cas. No. 252; Wilson v. Queen's Ins. Co. 5 Fed. 674.

Illinois.—Germania Fire Ins. Co. v. Klewer, 129 Ill. 599, 22 N. E. 489; New England Fire & Marine Ins. Co. v. Schettler, 38 Ill. 166.

Maine.—Lindley v. Union Ins. Co. 65 Me. 368, 20 Am. Rep. 701; Philbrook v. New England Mutual Fire Ins. Co. 37 Me. 137.

Massachusetts.—Thomas v. Builders' Mutual Fire Ins. Co. 119 Mass. 121, 20 Am. Rep. 317; Clark v. New England Fire Ins. Co. 6 Cush. (60 Mass.) 342, 53 Am. Dec. 44; Hardy v. Union Ins. Co. 4 Allen (86 Mass.) 217.

Michigan.—Keyser v. Hartford Fire Ins. Co. 66 Mich. 664, 33 N. W. 756; Emery v. Mutual City Ins. Co. 51 Mich. 469, 47 Am. Rep. 590, 16 N. W. 816.

Missouri.—Dahlberg v. St. Louis Ins. Co. 6 Mo. App. 121.

New Hampshire.—Gee v. Cheshire Ins. Co. 55 N. H. 65, 20 Am. Rep. 171; Gale v. Belknap Ins. Co. 41 N. H. 170.

New Jersey.—Jersey City Ins. Co. v. Nichol, 35 N. J. Eq. 291, 40 Am. St. Rep. 625; Schenck v. Mercer Co. Ins. Co. 24 N. J. L. 447.

Ohio.—Knight v. Eureka Ins. Co. 26 Ohio St. 664, 20 Am. Rep. 778.

Virginia.—Sutherland v. Old Dominion Ins. Co. 31 Gratt. (Va.) 176. See also § 2492 herein.

[11] Allison v. Phœnix Ins. Co. 3 Dill. (U. S. C. C.) 480, Fed. Cas. No. 252; Lindley v. Union Ins. Co. 65 Me. 368, 20 Am. Rep. 701; Clark v. New England Mutual Fire Ins. Co. 6 Cush. (60 Mass.) 342, 53 Am. Dec. 44.

[12] Funke v. Minnesota Farmers' Mutual Fire Ins. Assoc. 29 Minn. 347, 43 Am. Rep. 216, 13 N. W. 164.

[13] United States. — Carpenter v. Providence-Washington Ins. Co. 16 Pet. (41 U. S.) 495, 10 L. ed. 1044; Turner v. Equitable Ins. Co. 16 Fed. 454, Fed. Cas. No. 530n.

Georgia.—Lackey v. Georgia Home Ins. Co. 42 Ga. 456.

Indiana. — American Ins. Co. v. Replogle, 114 Ind. 1, 15 N. E. 810, 17 Ins. L. J. 456; Phœnix Ins. Co. v.

there be other insurance not made known to the insurer, because it is vitiated by misrepresentation of material facts, and so voidable at the option of the prior insurer.[14] So where a contract of insurance, which covered a storehouse and the goods therein, provided Lamar, 106 Ind. 513, 55 Am. Rep. 764, 7 N. E. 241.

Iowa.—David v. Hartford Ins. Co. 13 Iowa, 69.

Minnesota. — Funke v. Farmers' Mutual Fire Ins. Co. 29 Minn. 347, 43 Am. Rep. 216, 13 N. W. 164.

New York. — Landers v. Watertown Fire Ins. Co. 86 N. Y. 414, 40 Am. Rep. 554; Bigler v. New York Central Ins. Co. 20 Barb. 635, s. c. 22 N. Y. 402.

North Carolina.—Suggs v. Hartford Ins. Co. 98 N. C. 143, 3 S. E. 732, 17 Ins. L. J. 62.

Pennsylvania.—Mitchell v. Lycoming Ins. Co. 51 Pa. St. 402.

Tennessee.—Royal Ins. Co. v. McCrea, 8 Lea (76 Tenn.) 531, 41 Am. Rep. 565; Somerfield v. State Ins. Co. 8 Lea (76 Tenn.) 547, 41 Am. Rep. 662.

England.—Mason v. Andes Ins. Co. 23 U. C. C. P. 37; Ramsay Woolen Cloth Manufacturing Co. v. Mutual Fire Ins. Co. of District of Johnstown, 11 U. C. Q. B. 516.

[14] Carpenter v. Providence Washington Ins. Co. 16 Pet. (41 U. S.) 495, 10 L. ed. 1044. Cited in:

United States.—Phoenix Ins. Co. v. Raddin, 120 U. S. 183, 189, 30 L. ed. 644, 646; Allison v. Phœnix Ins. Co. 3 Dill. 480, Fed. Cas. No. 2562; Johnson v. North British & Mercantile Ins. Co. Holmes, 117, 119, Fed. Cas. No. 7,400; Turner v. Meridian Fire Ins. Co. 16 Fed. 454, 456.

Georgia.—Lackey v. Georgia Home Ins. Co. 42 Ga. 456, 459.

Illinois.—Germania Fire Ins. Co. v. Klewer, 129 Ill. 599, 607, 22 N. E. 489.

Indiana. — American Ins. Co. v. Replogle, 114 Ind. 1, 6, 15 N. E. 810; Phoenix Ins. Co. v. Lamar, 106 Ind. 513, 516, 55 Am. Rep. 764, 7 N. E. 241; Rising Sun Ins. Co. v. Slaughter, 20 Ind. 520, 525.

Iowa.—David v. Hartford Ins. Co. 13 Iowa, 69, 79.

Maine.—Lindley v. Union Farmers' Mutual Fire Ins. Co. 65 Me. 368, 372, 20 Am. Rep. 901.

Maryland. — Sweeting v. Mutual Fire Ins. Co. 83 Md. 63, 68, 32 L.R.A. 570, 572, 34 Atl. 826.

Massachusetts. — Burt v. People's Mutual Fire Ins. Co. 2 Gray (68 Mass.) 397, 398.

Michigan. — Donogh v. Farmers' Fire Ins. Co. 104 Mich. 503, 506, 62 N. W. 721; Carpenter v. Continental Ins. Co. 61 Mich. 635, 643, 28 N. W. 749.

Missouri. — Obermeyer v. Globe Mutual Ins. Co. 43 Mo. 573, 577.

Montana. — Saville v. Aetna Ins. Co. 8 Mont. 419, 430, 3 L.R.A. 542, 545, 20 Pac. 646.

New Hampshire. — Atlantic Ins. Co. v. Goodall, 34 N. H. 328, 334.

New York.—Hastings v. Westchester Fire Ins. Co. 73 N. Y. 141, 152; Bigler v. New York Central Ins. Co. 22 N. Y. 402, 407; Landers v. Watertown Fire Ins. Co. 19 Hun, 174, 177; Bigler v. New York Central Ins. Co. 20 Barb. 635, 637; Tillou v. Kingston Mutual Ins. Co. 7 Barb. 570, 575.

Ohio.—Firemen's Ins. Co. v. Holt, 35 Ohio St. 189, 192, 35 Am. Rep. 601.

Tennessee.—Royal Ins. Co. v. McCrea, 8 Lea, 531, 535, 41 Am. Rep. 656.

Texas.—New Orleans Ins. Assoc. v. Griffin, 66 Tex. 232, 234, 18 S. W. 505.

Virginia.—Sutherland v. Old Dominion Ins. Co. 31 Gratt. 176, 187.

Distinguished in Reed v. Equitable Fire & Marine Ins. Co. 17 R. I. 785, 787, 18 L.R.A. 496, 497, 24 Atl. 838.

that should the assured subsequently take out a policy in any other company, the assurers should receive notice of it on pain of forfeiting their policy, a subsequent assurance of the house or the goods in another company without notice to the assurers was held to work the forfeiture of the contract with them, whether the subsequent contract was legally enforceable or not.[15]

We have cited in the third last preceding note, under this last-stated principle, the cases usually and primarily relied upon to sustain that ruling. Upon examination, however, it will be seen that many of them cannot be said to fully support the point. The case of Carpenter v. Providence-Washington Ins. Co.,[16] has been briefly commented upon in Hubbard v. Hartford Fire Ins. Co.[17] as follows: "This case, we have observed, is often cited in support of this rule. . . . If such a rule be found in the case—but it does not so appear to us—its enunciation was not called for by the facts before the court and made the basis of the decision. The policy upon which that suit was brought is considered in the opinion the second instrument, and the court holds that it was defective by a condition therein against prior insurance, which in fact existed when it was issued." In Lackey v. Georgia Home Ins. Co.,[18] the court said: "The question here turns not so much upon the contract as upon our statute. . . . And this law would make void the first policy, though nothing was said in it about a second policy." In Phœnix Ins. Co. v. Lamar,[19] the prior policy was conditioned to be void in case of any other insurance "whether valid or not." In David v. Hartford Fire Ins. Co.,[20] the insurers in the subsequent policies treated the policies as valid after the loss had occurred, and paid the amount of the loss sustained. In Suggs v. Hartford F. Ins. Co.,[1] the prior policy was conditioned to be void in case of any other insurance, "whether valid or otherwise." In Bigler v. New York Cent. Ins. Co.,[2] the insurer issuing the subsequent policy waived the forfeiture and paid the loss under the policy. In Mitchell v. Lycoming Ins. Co.,[3] it was held by Agnew, J.: "If they were void at the time of the loss, they constituted no obstacle; but if they were voidable only by reason of some breach of condition enabling the insurer to avoid them, [15] Allen v. Merchants' Mutual Ins. Co. 30 La. Ann. 1386, 31 Am. Rep. 243.

[16] 16 Pet. (41 U. S.) 495, 10 L. ed. 1044.

[17] 33 Iowa, 325, 11 Am. Rep. 125.

[18] 42 Ga. 456, 457.

[19] 106 Ind. 513, 55 Am. Rep. 764, 7 N. E. 241. See § 2478 herein.

[20] 13 Iowa, 69.

[1] 98 N. Car. 143, 3 S. E. 732, 17 Ins. L. J. 62. See § 2478 herein.

[2] 20 Barb. (N. Y.) 635, aff'd 22 N. Y. 402.

[3] 51 Pa. St. 402.

but which they had waived, the overinsurance doubtless exists." In a case in Indiana[4] it was held that if in any case the insured accepted the subsequent policy as a valid subsisting contract, and extrinsic facts were necessary in order to show that the second policy was invalid, then the condition of the prior policy as to other insurance had been violated. In a case in Kentucky[5] it has been held that the prior policy forbidding other insurance is avoided, even though the subsequent policy is void upon its face.

Where the subsequent insurance is merely voidable and not absolutely void on its face, it has been contended that the insurers under a prior policy are released.[6] The cases, however, support the rule that the insurers are not released unless the insurer in the subsequent policy waives the condition as to other insurance before a loss, and becomes liable upon the policy.[7]

These questions have most frequently arisen where both the prior and subsequent policies have been conditioned to be void in case of any other insurance. Where the policies both contain such a condition, the latter policy cannot be considered as operative unless the condition is waived. Can the condition in the prior policy as to other insurance be said to be violated unless the subsequent policy is a valid and enforceable contract? The subsequent policy is certainly not an enforceable contract, unless the insurer assumes the risk after knowledge of the other prior insurance. It does not seem that it could reasonably be contended that a subsequent policy containing such a condition, and which has never attached, is within the meaning of the provision as to other insurance. The latter policy is inoperative, unless it is ratified and confirmed by the insurers with knowledge of the facts rendering it invalid. The better reasoning supported by the weight of authority is that the other insurance must be a valid contract, legally enforceable against the insurers, in order to avoid the prior policy. If the risk has been so increased by an alteration or change in the occupation of the premises as to avoid a policy, [4] American Ins. Co. v. Replogle, 114 Ind. 1, 15 N. E. 810; Replogle v. American Ins. Co. 132 Ind. 360, 31 N. E. 947.

[5] Stevenson v. Phoenix Ins. Co. 83 Ky. 7, 6 Ky. L. Rep. 196, 4 Am. St. Rep. 120.

[6] Phœnix Ins. Co. v. Copeland, 90 Ala. 386, 8 So. 48; David v. Hartford Fire Ins. Co. 13 Iowa, 69; Mitchell v. Lycoming Ins. Co. 51 Pa. St. 402.

[7] Thomas v. Builders' Fire Ins. Co. 119 Mass. 121, 20 Am. Rep. 317; Hardy v. Union Ins. Co. 4 Allen (86 Mass.) 217; Hale v. Union Ins. Co. 32 N. H. 295, 299, 64 Am. Dec. 370; Knight v. Eureka Ins. Co. 26 Ohio St. 664, 20 Am. Rep. 778; Mitchell v. Lycoming Fire Ins. Co. 51 Pa. St. 402.

and the company refuses to assume the risk as changed, a subsequent insurer cannot set up such prior policy in defense to an action on the subsequent policy which contains a condition as to other insurance.[8] It is held in Rhode Island that avoidance of a policy for a breach of a condition against other insurance, by the existence of a prior policy, is not prevented by the fact that the latter contains a like condition, although a void policy is not a breach of such a condition.[9]

An unconsummated contract of insurance is not other insurance, so where notice of cancelation has been given insured and upon inquiry by him of insurer's agent as to another policy, the latter writes one without assured's knowledge, countersigns and enters the same on his books but it is not delivered and no premium is agreed to be or is paid, and a loss occurs before the expiration of the time limit under the cancelation notice there is no new insurance effected and the first policy was in force at the time of the fire and insurer was held liable thereon although it provided against other insurance.[10] And if insurer's agent is applied to for insurance with another insurer and a part of the premium is paid by insured but said agent to whom the policy is sent does not deliver it until after the loss and the first policy is not canceled, although insured had expressed his intention to abandon it, the conditional insurance does not become operative so as to relieve from liability the insurer issuing the same.[11] So where there is nothing more than indefinite negotiations, they are insufficient to constitute such other insurance as to invalidate existing policies although a policy is antedated and issued after the loss and in such case assured is not estopped, after suit thereon and compromise, to deny its existence, in an action for the loss under a prior policy conditioned against other insurance as in the latter case the other policy had not been issued at the time the liability attached.[12] Again, where it was stipulated that notice should be given of any additional insurance and consent of insurer obtained and that a breach would render the policy null

[8] Leibrandt & McDowell Stove Co. v. Firemen's Ins. Co. 35 Fed. 30.

[9] Reed v. Equitable Fire & Marine Ins. Co. 17 R. I. 785, 18 L.R.A. 496, 24 Atl. 833.

[10] Milwaukee Mechanics Ins. Co. v. Graham, 181 Ill. 158, 54 N. E. 914, 29 Ins. L. J. 175, aff'g 80 Ill. App. 549.

[11] Whitla v. Royal Ins. Co. (Whitla v. Manitoba Ins. Co.) 14 Man. R. 90, 108.

[12] Taylor v. State Ins. Co. 107 Iowa, 275, 77 N. W. 1032, 28 Ins. L. J. 338, s. c. 98 Iowa, 521, 67 N. W. 677. Insurer "never ratified the act of its agent in dating its policy back, and not liable for the loss, it had the undoubted right to buy its peace without acknowledging its liability," per Ladd, J.

and void, omission to give notice does not avoid the contract as to additional insurance which never became effective by reason of nonpayment of the premium therefor as stipulated.[13] But it is also decided that a policy conditioned against other insurance is avoided by the existence of other insurance at the time of its issuance, although such other insurance is not in effect at the time of the loss.[14]

Under a Colorado decision a policy is not void by reason of prior insurance which had lapsed before the issuance of the policy sued on.[15] In Montana a policy valid upon its face and in the hands of the insured at the time of a loss, which is not null and void, but merely voidable at the option of the company, because a subsequent policy from another insurer was taken without the consent of the first insurer, is to be treated as "other insurance," within the meaning of a clause in the latter policy, providing that the insurer's liability on the policy shall be only in proportion to the whole amount of insurance.[16]

Whether, where parties to an alleged contract of insurance agree in treating it as void, it may be considered as violating a condition in another policy against additional undisclosed insurance, quære.[17]

§ 2476. Effect of interim receipts.—If a valid contract of insurance or to insure be effected, and in evidence of such contract an interim receipt is given, this will be sufficient to constitute a violation of the condition in the policy as to other insurance.[18]

§ 2477. Where subsequent voidable policy is treated as valid after a loss.—If the condition in a subsequent policy of insurance as to other insurance is waived by the insurer before a loss occurs, and the policy becomes a valid enforceable policy, there is no doubt but that the prior policy would be avoided where it is conditioned to be void in case of other insurance. The question whether

[13] Equitable Fire & Accident Office Ltd. v. The Ching Wo Hong [1907] L. R. App. Cas. 96; 76 L. J. P. C. (N. S.) 31, 96 L. T. (N. S.) 1; 23 T. L. R. 200; 1 B. R. C. 34.

[14] Reed v. Equitable Fire & Marine Ins. Co. 17 R. I. 785, 18 L.R.A. 496, 24 Atl. 833.

[15] German Ins. Co. v. Hayden, 21 Colo. 127, 52 Am. St. Rep. 206, 40 Pac. 453. See Obermeyer v. Globe Mutual Ins. Co. 43 Mo. 573. Compare Replogle v. American Ins. Co. 132 Ind. 360, 31 N. E. 947.

[16] Saville v. Aetna Ins. Co. 8 Mont. 419, 3 L.R.A. 542, 20 Pac. 646. See Southern National Ins. Co. v. Barr, — Tex. Civ. App. —, 148 S. W. 845, 41 Ins. L. J. 1496.

[17] Equitable Fire & Accident Office Ltd. v. The Ching Wo Hong [1907] L. R. App. Cas. 96; 76 L. J. P. C. (N. S.) 31, 96 L. T. (N. S.) 1, 23 Times L. R. 200, 1 B. R. C. 34.

[18] Hatton v. Beacon Ins. Co. 16 U. C. Q. B. 316; Mason v. Andes Ins. Co. 23 U. C. C. P. 37.

or not the prior policy would be avoided where the validity of the subsequent policy is not waived until after a loss has been many times discussed. There is a large class of cases in which it is held, and in fact the majority of the courts before which the question has come have held, that where the subsequent policy is valid on its face, or for any reason has been attached up to the time of the loss, then the prior policy is not avoided, though the insured may have received payment of the second policy from the insurer.[19] The rights of the parties become fixed from the time of the loss. If the subsequent policy is not a valid policy at that time, then the liability of the insurer under the prior policy has become fixed, and the insurer is indebted to the insured to the extent of the loss up to the amount of the policy. If the insurer who issues the subsequent policy waives its invalidity after the loss, such waiver can in no way affect the rights of the parties under the prior contract, since a payment under the subsequent policy will be considered as a gratuity. In such a case the insured is not estopped from showing that at the time of the loss there was no valid enforceable contract existing other than the policy first issued. If the insured had received a gift from some third person immediately after a loss, could it be reasonably contended that the insurer in a prior policy could defeat a recovery on that ground? And yet is it not substantially and in fact a gift where the insurers who have issued a subsequent policy make a payment to the insured of the amount of his loss, when in fact the policy is invalid and inoperative and cannot be enforced, and is in no way binding upon them? These cases are in accord and in the same line with the principles stated in the preceding section as sustained by the weight of authority. The rule could not, consistently with principle, be otherwise. It has been held, however, that in such a case the prior policy is avoided,[20] but the weight of authority supports the contrary view, as we have stated.

[19] Maine.—Lindley v. Union Ins. Co. 65 Me. 368, 20 Am. Rep. 701; Philbrook v. New England Mutual Fire Ins. Co. 37 Me. 137.

Massachusetts.—Thomas v. Builders' Fire Ins. Co. 119 Mass. 121, 20 Am. Rep. 317; Hardy v. Union Ins. Co. 4 Allen (86 Mass.) 217; Jackson v. Massachusetts Mutual Fire Ins. Co. 23 Pick. (40 Mass.) 418, 34 Am. Dec. 69; Clark v. New England Mutual Fire Ins. Co. 6 Cush. (60 Mass.) 342, 53 Am. Dec. 44.

New Hampshire.—Gale v. Belknap Ins. Co. 41 N. H. 170, 176.

New Jersey. — Schenck v. Mercer County Mutual Ins. Co. 24 N. J. Law, 447.

Pennsylvania. — Stacey v. Franklin Ins. Co. 2 Watts & S. (Pa.) 506.

[20] David v. Hartford Ins. Co. 13 Iowa, 69; Bigler v. New York Central Ins. Co. 22 N. Y. 402.

§ 2478. Prohibition against other insurance, whether "valid or invalid."—In many policies the words "valid or invalid" have been added to the clause against additional insurance in order to eliminate the question as to the effect of other insurance which is void or voidable. The courts, however, are not in harmony in their decisions as to the construction of this clause, though it has generally been sustained as valid and binding.[1] In Phoenix Insurance Company v. Lamar[2] it was held that where an insurance policy is conditioned to be void in case of "any other insurance" without consent, "whether valid or not," another policy in and of itself invalid and void, so that it constitutes no contract of insurance, is not within the prohibition, but if to avoid it requires the production of extraneous facts, it is within the prohibition. And in an Iowa case[3] it was held that where a prior policy had become void by the removal of the property insured, so that it had been taken out of the operation of that policy, one issued subsequent to the avoidance of the prior policy, and which was conditioned to be void by other insurance, whether "valid or invalid," was not avoided by the prior policy. In New Hampshire, it has been held that such a condition is not a valid one, since a void contract, which is regarded by law as a mere nullity, can in no way affect rights obtained under an existing contract.[4] The question has also arisen, where these words are added, whether or not the prior or subsequent policy is avoided where the conditions are the same or similar in each. In Michigan, it has been held that the subsequent policy is void,[5] while in North Carolina it has been decided that the

[1] Alabama. — Phœnix Ins. Co. v. Copeland, 90 Ala. 386, 8 So. 48.

Illinois.—Continental Ins. Co. v. Hulman & Cox, 92 Ill. 145, 34 Am. Rep. 122, 9 Ins. L. J. 91.

Kentucky.—Northwestern National Ins. Co. v. Avant, 132 Ky. 106, 116 S. W. 274, 38 Ins. L. J. 472.

Louisiana. — Allen v. Merchants' Ins. Co. 30 La. Ann. 1386, 31 Am. Rep. 243.

New York. — Bigler v. New York Central Ins. Co. 22 N. Y. 402.

North Carolina.—Sugg v. Hartford Fire Ins. Co. 98 N. C. 143, 3 S. E. 732.

North Dakota. — First National Bank of Nome v. German American Ins. Co. 23 N. Dak. 139, 38 L.R.A. (N.S.) 213, 134 N. W. 873, 41 Ins. L. J. 899.

South Carolina.—Spann v. Phoenix Ins. Co. of Hfd. 83 S. Car. 262, 65 S. E. 232.

Texas.—National Union Fire Ins. Co. v. Dorroh, — Tex. Civ. App. —, 133 S. W. 475. See Dumphy v. Commercial Union Assur. Co. — Tex. Civ. App. —, 142 S. W. 116, 41 Ins. L. J. 441, rev'd — Tex. —, 174 S. W. 814.

See §§ 2475, 2492 herein.

[2] 106 Ind. 513, 55 Am. Rep. 764, 7 N. E. 241.

[3] Stevens v. Citizens' Ins. Co. 69 Iowa, 658, 29 N. W. 769.

[4] Gee v. Cheshire Ins. Co. 55 N. H. 65, 20 Am. Rep. 171.

[5] Keyser v. Hartford Fire Ins. Co. 66 Mich. 664, 33 N. W. 756.

prior policy is void.[6] Under a Massachusetts decision if a policy is conditioned to be void if insured has or shall thereafter make other insurance on the same property without consent of insurer, and he subsequently obtains other policies with a like condition but with the added words "whether valid or not" neither of these latter policies affords any defense to a suit on the former. "If the Citizens' Companys' policy was issued before the policy in suit, it became void by its terms when the defendant issued its policy. . . . If it was issued subsequently, as was the policy of the security company, for the same reason neither it nor the policy of the latter company took effect." [7] If a prior policy continues in force by reason of an unsuccessful attempt to cancel the same and another policy is issued on the same property conditioned to be void for other insurance whether valid or not it is invalidated.[8] An application, however, for additional insurance will not avoid a policy under a provision therein, that it shall be void if assured shall procure any other contract of insurance, whether valid or not, on the property, if both the owner and the company to which the application for additional insurance is made, understood that no risk was assumed by the latter.[9]

Where the policy was to be void if insured should make or procure any other contract of insurance "whether valid or not" on the property insured the procuring of a second policy in violation of the policy conditions is not justified or excused by the fact that insured acted in good faith, and without intent to overinsure as where it was taken out under the mistaken belief that the first policy had expired.[10]

Under a Texas decision the policy does not become ipso facto void as insurer may waive such condition.[11]

§ 2479. Renewals of prior policies.—A policy of insurance which provides that it shall be void in case of other insurance is not avoided by the renewal of a policy existing at the time the policy containing the provision was effected, and which was mentioned

[6] Sugg v. Hartford Fire Ins. Co. 98 N. C. 143, 3 S. E. 732. See § 2475 herein.

[7] Hayes v. Milford Mutual Fire Ins. Co. 170 Mass. 492, 49 N. E. 754, 27 Ins. L. J. 459. See Nabors v. Dixie Mutual Fire Ins. Co. 84 Ark. 184, 105 S. W. 92.

[8] Hartford Fire Ins. Co. v. McKenzie, 70 Ill. App. 615.

[9] National Mutual Fire Ins. Co. v. Duncan, 44 Colo. 472, 20 L.R.A. (N.S.) 340, 98 Pac. 634, 38 Ins. L. J. 184.

[10] National Union Fire Ins. Co. v. Dorroh, — Tex. Civ. App. —, 133 S. W. 475, 40 Ins. L. J. 484.

[11] Southern National Ins. Co. v. Barr, — Tex. Civ. App. —, 148 S. W. 845, 41 Ins. L. J. 1496. Citing as to the meaning of "void," 8 Words & Phrases, p. 7334. See Saville v. Aetna Ins. Co. 8 Mont. 419, 3 L.R.A. 542, 20 Pac. 646.

in the application for that policy.[12] But if the insured mentions the prior insurance in his application for a policy, and states that it will not be renewed, a renewal of such prior policy will constitute a violation of the condition as to other insurance.[13] If the insured, instead of renewing the policy in the same company, takes out a policy for the same amount in another company, it is held to be a violation of the condition.[14] In a case in New Hampshire, however,[15] it was held that where the charter of a mutual company did not require the name of the company in which the other insurance was effected nor the terms of the policy to be given, but simply the amount of the other insurance to be stated to which the company had duly assented, that the assured might renew that policy in the same company, or transfer it to another for the same amount without giving any further notice. If the condition in a policy expressly refers only to other subsequent insurance, or is construed as only referring to a subsequent insurance, then the renewal of a prior policy would probably not avoid the policy containing such a condition.[16] Where an insurance company renews a policy with the knowledge of the existence of other insurance contrary to its provisions, it is estopped to afterward claim that this renewal is inoperative or the policy void by reason of the existence of such other insurance.[17]

§ 2480. Where policies are simultaneous: concurrent insurance: fire risks.—If policies are issued by different companies through different agents to the same assured, though the risk insured against is to commence at the same moment, it will not be presumed that the policies are simultaneous.[18] In the absence of proof to the contrary, the necessary presumption of both law and fact is that one of the policies was antecedent to the other, and consequently the companies are entitled to the usual notice in respect to prior and additional insurance.[19]

Where, however, they are issued by the same agent, and may [12] Brown v. Cattaraugus County Mutual Co. 18 N. Y. 385; First Baptist Soc. v. Hillsborough Mutual Fire Ins. Co. 19 N. H. 580.

[13] Dietz v. Mound City Fire & Life Ins. Co. 38 Mo. 85.

[14] Healey v. Imperial Ins. Co. 5 Nev. 268; Burt v. People's Mutual Ins. Co. 2 Gray (68 Mass.) 397.

[15] First Baptist Soc. v. Hillsborough Mutual Fire Ins. Co. 19 N. H. 580.

[16] Pitney v. Glens Falls Ins. Co. 65 N. Y. 6.

[17] Carroll v. Charter Oak Ins. Co. 38 Barb. (N. Y.) 402, s. c. 40 Barb. (N. Y.) 292. That renewal is not "other" insurance under a clause providing for notice of other insurance, see Pitney v. Glens Falls Ins. Co. 65 N. Y. 6.

[18] Manhattan Ins. Co. v. Stein, 5 Bush (68 Ky.) 652. See § 2496 herein.

[19] Manhattan Ins. Co. v. Stein, 5 Bush (68 Ky.) 652.

be presumed to be simultaneous, notice is not necessary.[20] Under the code provision of California,[1] if two or more policies bear date from the same day, they are deemed to be simultaneous, and the liability of insurers on simultaneous policies is to contribute ratably with each other. If two companies co-operate in assuming a risk where the applicant has only applied to one, and two policies are issued, similar in all respects, simultaneously, neither policy will constitute other insurance in violation of the conditions in each as to the policy being void in case of other insurance.[2]

In construing the meaning of the word "concurrent" in connection with insurance contracts the court, in East Texas Fire Insurance Company v. Blum,[3] said: "To be concurrent, the insurance must operate at the same time upon the same property, and look to the indemnity of the insured in case of its loss or destruction from a casualty insured against." [4]

But where other concurrent insurance was permitted and the policies in question included only part of the insured property and were concurrent as to the particular property covered by both and concurrent as to time, though one was for a shorter period than the other, it was held that they were concurrent and the court, per Ladd, J., declared that the concurrent clause "did no more than wipe out the prohibition of the policy. The hazard of excessive insurance was entirely waived, and, in so far as the risk was concerned, it was immaterial whether the additional insurance was on one or all of the items covered by the defendants' contract. "Concurrent insurance," under the circumstances, means any insurance running with that of the defendant and sharing its risk. If so, it would include policies covering not only a part of defendant's risk, but all of it, and more. The definitions of the lexicographers warrant such a conclusion.[5] . . . We are of opinion that the clause, 'other concurrent insurance permitted,' in the absence of any limitation in amount, should not be construed to require the later policies to exactly concur in covering all of the property. Otherwise it must be held that they must also cover all the time. . . . The authorities determining when [20] Farmers' Mutual Ins. Co. v. Taylor, 73 Pa. St. 342.

[1] Deering's Annot. Civ. Code Cal. sec. 2642.

[2] Washington Fire Ins. Co. v. Davison, 30 Md. 91, 108.

[3] 76 Tex. 653, 13 S. W. 572, see Gough v. Davis, 52 N. Y. Supp. 947, 24 Misc. Rep. 245, aff'd 57 N. Y. Supp. 1139, 39 App. Div. 639. "Concurrent insurance" defined, see Kelly v. Liverpool & London & Globe Ins. Co. 102 Minn. 178, 184, 111 N. W. 395, 112 N. W. 870, 1019.

[4] See Wynn v. Caledonian Ins. Co. 100 S. Car. 47, 84 S. E. 306, under Civ. Code sec. 2718.

[5] Quoting from Webster.

insurance is double throw little light on the question. Besides these are in conflict." [6] But it is declared in a Federal case that it does not appear that in insurance contracts the word "concurrent" has any settled, definite, technical meaning.[7] But con-

[6] Washburn-Halligan Coffee Co. v. Merchants Brick Mutual Fire Ins. Co. 110 Iowa, 423, 81 N. W. 707, 29 Ins. L. J. 234. The policy sued on covered all the property described in the others, with the possible exception of boilers, and much more.

[7] Globe & Rutgers Fire Ins. Co. v. Alaska-Portland Packers' Assoc. 49 L.R.A.(N.S.) 374 (annotated on what is concurrent insurance), 205 Fed. 32, 123 C. C. A. 340, 42 Ins. L. J. 1331. The court, per Gilbert, C. J., said: "What is 'concurrent insurance,' as those words are used in the contract? The word 'concurrent,' while its primary meaning is 'running with,' is used in different senses. It does not appear that in insurance contracts it has any settled, definite, technical meaning. But few insurance cases are reported in which the courts have been called upon to determine its meaning.

"The plaintiff in error relies upon New Jersey Rubber Co. v. Commercial Union Assurance Co. 64 N. J. Law, 580, 46 Atl. 777, 30 Ins. L. J. 55, aff'g 64 N. J. L. 51, 44 Atl. 848. In that case there were two defenses, —one resting on the terms of the policy, the other resting on an agreement made before the policy was issued. The policy insured certain property against loss by fire, and it contained a provision against other insurance similar to that in the policy in the case at bar, and a rider permitting 'other concurrent insurance.' The concurrent insurance which was procured covered only a portion of the property. Defining the provision permitting concurrent insurance, the court said:—

"'Concurrent insurance is that which to any extent insures the same interest, against the same casualty, at the same time, as the primary insurance, on such terms that the insurers would bear proportionally the loss happening within the provisions of both policies. It is this last quality, of sharing proportionally in the loss, that distinguishes concurrent insurance from mere double insurance.'

"And the court held that the additional insurance, although it covered only a portion of the property, came within the expressed permission. But, in discussing the second defense, which was the agreement between the parties that the plaintiff could procure from other insurers insurance on the same property to the amount of $75,000 at least, which should be concurrent and proportionate with the policy of the defendant, the court said:—

"'The true intent of this agreement was that, simultaneously with the complete execution of the defendant's contract, the plaintiff would procure other insurance of such a character as would limit the defendant's responsibility.'

"As to that defense the court said:—

"'Concurrent insurance required by an insured must, where there is no qualifying provision, run with the primary insurance for all the time and over all the objects covered by the latter. In the present case the insurance required was to be, not only current, but for a definite amount, and proportionate; that is, the amount was to be distributed among the various items of property insured, in the same proportion as was the amount of the defendant's policy.'

"For the reason that this agreement was not carried out by the plaintiff, the court held that defendant's policy did not become operative. The agreement to obtain concurrent insurance in that case was for the protection of the defendant. The defendant required that the insured take out additional insurance in other companies, and in order to secure the protection which was expressly stipulated for it was necessary that such other policies cover all the property which the defendant had insured. The construction placed by the court, in that case, upon the word 'concurrent' as used in the agreement, can hardly be said to be appropriate to a case like that at bar, where the insurer, instead of requiring concurrent insurance, simply granted permission to the insured to obtain it.

"In Gough v. Davis, 24 Misc. Rep. 245, 52 N. Y. Supp. 947, the policy provided that the procurement of additional insurance, except by agreement with the insurer, should void it; but it recited:—

" 'Permission is hereby given for other concurrent insurance.'

"The court held that the policy was not made void by other insurance covering only a part of the property, and said:—

" 'The object was to give the insured permission to have other insurance on the property during the existence of the policy. This would be concurrent insurance in respect of time and of the property. It would be concurrent in respect of time, though for a shorter period than that of the policy, and in respect of the property, though not upon all of it. It would not be wholly, but only partly, concurrent; and that, I think, is sufficient, in order to be within the terms of the permission. It does not seem to me that the insured could be expected to understand that the word was used in the precise and restricted sense that the additional policies must exactly concur in covering all the property any more than all of the time. . . . It is contended in the case at bar, however, that the permission for other insurance was intentionally restricted to "concurrent" insurance for the purpose of avoiding the difficulty of apportioning the loss among different insurers, where some of the policies cover all of the property and others cover only specific parts of it. If insurers want to express such a meaning and make such a severe alternative of a forfeiture, they should do it unequivocally, for that is the rule applicable. If the words are uncertain, or reasonably susceptible of two constructions, the construction of the insured will be upheld.'

"In Caraher v. Royal Ins. Co. 63 Hun, 82, 17 N. Y. Supp. 858, the court held that insurance was none the less concurrent in a case where the loss, if any, under one policy would be payable to the assured, and under another policy the company had by indorsement assented to its payment to a mortgagee as his interest may appear.

"In Corkery v. Security Fire Ins. Co. 99 Iowa, 382, 68 N. W. 792, the court said:—

" 'Defendant claims that these policies are noncurrent, because they did not specify the amount of insurance separately, on the goods held in trust or on commission. It is conceded that, if they specified the sum thereof applicable to the property covered by the policy in suit, they would be concurrent; but it is insisted that, as they are, an adjustment cannot be readily made. The provision as to contribution provides for such adjustment, and the fact that it may be so easily made as if the policies each covered only the same property is no reason for holding them to be noncurrent.'

"In Washburn-Halligan Coffee Co. v. Merchants' Brick Mutual Fire Ins. Co. 110 Iowa, 423, 80 Am. St. Rep. 311, 81 N. W. 707, the court said:—

" 'Here the clause "other concurrent insurance permitted" did no more than wipe out the prohibition of the policy. The hazard of excessive insurance was entirely waived, and, in so far as the risk was concerned, it was immaterial whether the additional insurance was on one or current insurance and double insurance are entirely distinct.[8]

A stipulation limiting concurrent insurance to a certain amount is valid and enforceable.[9] And a policy is voided by concurrent insurance in excess of the amount limited therein.[10] Where a rider attached to a standard form of fire policy of New York relates to obtaining other insurance outside of the state it does not violate the statute relating thereto where the state insurance law also recognizes such insurance as valid upon compliance with the prescribed conditions and such rider is a part of the contract; and where the policy is issued upon a warranty that insurer has a policy in force insuring the identical property for a certain sum in concurrent form in identically the same proportion on each part thereof and at no higher rate of premium, and that said policies as written will be continued in force during the entire currency of said policy, otherwise the policy will be void, said provision may be validly attached as a rider and it is not inconsistent with the prescribed conditions of the standard form nor does it constitute a waiver of any of its conditions.[11] In Missouri a stipulation limiting concurrent insurance is a warranty presumed in law to be material to the risk, and any substantial breach will operate to forfeit the policy, notwithstanding a statute providing that warranties not material to the risk are representations, since such statutes relate to existing facts which before said enactment had been treated as conditions precedent, but not as affecting the construction of executory warranties.[12] It is held that a condition of a fire policy limiting and requiring consent to concurrent insurance is not violated by the cancelation of a concurrent policy all the items covered by the defendant's contract. "Concurrent insurance," under the circumstances, means any insurance running with that of the defendant, and sharing its risk. If so, it would include policies covering, not only a part of defendant's risk, but all of it, and more.'"

The definition given under the above note in New Jersey Rubber Co. v. Commercial Union Assur. Co. 64 N. J. L. 580, is also given in Connecticut Fire Ins. Co. v. Union Mercantile Co. 161 Ky. 718, 171 S. W. 407.

[8] Lawver v. Globe Mutual Ins. Co. 25 S. Dak. 549, 127 N. W. 615, 39 Ins. L. J. 1583, 1596.

[9] Interstate Fire Ins. Co. v. Nelson, 105 Miss. 437, 62 So. 425.

[10] Interstate Fire Ins. Co. v. Nelson, 105 Miss. 437, 62 So. 425; Home Insurance Co. v. Morrow, 128 Ala. 595, 29 So. 687. See Wynn v. Caledonian Ins. Co. 100 S. Car. 47, 84 S. E. 306, under Civ. Code 1912, sec. 2718.

[11] Scharles & Deutsch v. N. Hubbard, J. & Co. 74 Misc. 72, 131 N. Y. Supp. 849, 40 Ins. L. J. 2119.

[12] Harwood v. National Union Fire Ins. Co. 170 Mo. App. 298, 156 S. W. 475, 42 Ins. L. J. 1002, act of 1887, Rev. Stat. 1909, secs. 7024, 7025.

subsequent to the issuance of the policy in question, and the issuance by another company of a new policy for the exact amount of the canceled policy making the total insurance the same as when the policy was issued.[13]

§ 2480a. Distinction between concurrent insurance and coinsurance.—A distinction is made between concurrent insurance and coinsurance in that a provision for concurrent insurance is a privilege extended to insured which, as usually framed, results in a forfeiture of the policy if insured exceeds the privilege. A provision for coinsurance is an obligation imposed upon insured to keep a specific amount of a percentage of additional insurance in force and if he fails to do so he becomes a coinsurer to the extent of the omitted insurance.[14] So it is also declared: "There is a wide distinction between 'coinsurance' and 'concurrent insurance.' The latter term has been used from time immemorial to designate insurance placed in other companies covering the same risk. . . . We venture to say that it is rare indeed that there is not concurrent insurance whenever the risk is a large one. Coinsurance on the other hand is a creature of modern invention at least in this state. . . . We hold there is no 'coinsurance' where insured does not bear a proportion of the risk himself." [15]

§ 2481. Rule where marine policies of same date are issued: priority in date may be shown.—If two or more marine policies are issued upon the same property and risk, and have the same date, there arises a presumption that they are simultaneous. This presumption, however, is by no means conclusive, and the actual time of the execution of each policy may be shown.[16] In a Federal case two policies were executed, bearing the same date, and upon this point Story, J., said: "The law, when it is material, will examine into fractions of a day, and give the parties their rights accordingly. In this case, therefore, I shall admit the evidence of the actual time of the execution of the two policies." [17] If in such a case it be shown that one of the policies was in fact executed prior to the other, then if the prior policy covers the whole interest the underwriters under that policy must alone bear the whole loss, where the subsequent policy provides that the un-

[13] New Orleans Ins. Assoc. v. Holberg, 64 Miss. 51, 8 So. 175.

[14] Northwestern Fuel Co. v. Boston Ins. Co. 131 Minn. 19, 154 N. W. 513, 46 Ins. L. J. 715, 720. Distinction made and applied by Dibell, C. See this case under § 2496a herein.

[15] Oppenheim v. Firemen's Fund Ins. Co. 119 Minn. 417, 138 N. W. 777, 42 Ins. L. J. 297, 300, Brown, J.

[16] Potter v. Marine Ins. Co. 2 Mason (U. S. C. C.) 475, Fed. Cas. No. 11,332; Lee v. Massachusetts Ins. Co. 6 Mass. 208. See § 2496 herein.

[17] Preceding note. See also Brown v. Hartford Ins. Co. 3 Day (Conn.) 58.

derwriters of that policy shall be liable only for as much interest as is uncovered by the prior policy.[18] If, however, the two policies were in fact executed at the same time, or the proof is not strong enough to overcome the presumption that they were so executed, then the priority clause is excluded, and the assured may, in an action upon either policy, recover the full amount of his loss on that policy. In such a case the other underwriters will be liable for contribution. The question concerning whether other policies are prior in date should not be determined by the date of the attaching of the policies; the clause refers to priority in date of effecting the insurance.[19]

§ 2482. Provisions in charter or by-laws as to other insurance.—If a policy issued by a mutual company refers to the charter and by-laws of the company, and makes them a part of the policy, then any provisions therein as to other insurance must be strictly complied with by the insured, and any violation of such provisions will avoid the policy.[20] A provision in the charter prescribing the manner and form of contract by the company must be complied with, and cannot, it is held, be waived.[1] Chief Justice Marshall says:[2] "The act of incorporation is an enabling act; it gives the corporation all the powers it possesses; it enables it to contract, and when it prescribes to it a form of contracting it must observe that mode, for the instrument no more creates a contract than if the body had never been incorporated." Consequently, if the charter of a company provides that the policy shall be void in case of other insurance unless assent has been given thereto and indorsed upon the policy, this provision must be complied with. The object of the provision is to prevent the insuring of the property in different companies, and to protect other policyholders and the public in general. The legislature in inserting the clause is presumed to have intended to place it be-

[18] Potter v. Marine Ins. Co. 2 Mason (U. S. C. C.) 475, Fed. Cas. No. 11,332.

[19] Lee v. Massachusetts Ins. Co. 6 Mass. 208; Deming v. Merchants' Cotton-Press Storage Co. 90 Tenn. 306, 17 S. W. 89, 13 L.R.A. 518; Corporation of London Assurance v. Paterson, 106 Ga. 538, 32 S. E. 650, 28 Ins. L. J. 385, 397.

[20] Burt v. People's Mutual Fire Ins. Co. 2 Gray (68 Mass.) 397; Security Ins. Co. v. Fay, 22 Mich. 467, 7 Am. Rep. 670; McMahon v. Portsmouth Ins. Co. 22 N. H. (2 Fost.) 15; Blanchard v. Atlantic Ins. Co. 33 N. H. 9; Fabyan v. American Fire Ins. Co. 33 N. H. 203. See O'Leary Bros. v. Merchants' & Bankers' Mutual Ins. Co. 100 Iowa, 173, 62 Am. St. Rep. 555, 66 N. W. 175, 69 N. W. 420.

[1] Couch v. City Fire Ins. Co. of Hartford, 38 Conn. 181, 9 Am. Rep. 375; Stark County Mutual Ins. Co. v. Hurd, 19 Ohio, 149. See § 2487 herein.

[2] Head v. Providence Ins. Co. 2 Cranch (6 U. S.) 127, 2 L. ed. 229.

yond the power of the company to enter into any contract of insurance which should be enforceable unless these provisions in the charter as to other insurance should be complied with. So it may be broadly stated that where there is a provision in the charter of a mutual company that the policy shall be void in case of other insurance unless consent has been given by the directors and indorsed by the president and secretary upon the policy, it cannot be waived, since it is considered as going to the essence of the contract, and consent can only be proved in the manner prescribed in the charter. In this connection the words of the court in an Indiana case[3] are pertinent: "Whenever the charter of an insurance company requires that any act shall be done, and declares that if the act be not done in the manner prescribed the contract or policy of insurance shall be void, the company cannot waive the performance of such act in the prescribed mode; for performance of any condition of the contract fixed by law cannot be waived. This has been repeatedly declared to be the law in cases involving the question of double insurance."

The words of a provision in a charter are not, however, in all cases to receive an absolutely literal construction, though they are to be strictly construed. Thus, where the charter provided that the consent to other insurance should be given by "indorsement on the back of the policy," it was held that a recital in the body of the policy of the other insurance was a substantial compliance with the provision.[4] In those cases where the by-laws or the charter contains such a provision, the courts have also held that the provision cannot be waived by an agent or any officer of the company.[5] Though it is held that charter provisions requiring certain things to be done in order to render a contract valid cannot be waived, yet it would seem that there might be a distinction where the provisions are only contained in the by-laws, and that while the charter provisions of this nature cannot be waived, provisions in the by-laws might.[6] A provision in the by-laws that "persons insuring with this company may insure with other companies, with the consent of the directors indorsed on the policy,"

[3] Leonard v. American Ins. Co. 97 Ind. 299.

[4] First Baptist Soc. v. Hillsborough Mutual Fire Ins. Co. 19 N. H. 580.

[5] Worcester Bank v. Hartford Fire Ins. Co. 11 Cush. (65 Mass.) 265, 59 Am. Dec. 145; Forbes v. Agawam Ins. Co. 9 Cush. (63 Mass.) 470; Hale v. Mechanics' Mutual Fire Ins. Co. 6 Gray (72 Mass.) 169, 66 Am. Dec. 410; Simpson v. Pennsylvania Ins. Co. 38 Pa. St. 250.

[6] See Redstrake v. Cumberland Mutual Fire Ins. Co. 44 N. J. L. 294. See § 526 herein.

the provision, being made a part of the policy, has been construed as being an implied prohibition against other insurance.[7]

The rules above given should be considered, however, in connection with what has been said elsewhere concerning the powers or corporations,[8] and of agents.[9]

§ 2483. Notice of other, etc., insurance: what is and is not sufficient.—A provision that notice shall be given of prior and subsequent insurance is reasonable and valid.[10] And policy clauses as to notice of prior and subsequent insurance are of such material importance, both to insurer and insured, that the courts will require that they be complied with by the insured in all good faith.[11] If a fire policy contains a condition that in case of "any other insurance" the insured must give notice to the company, such a condition applies to both subsequent and prior insurance.[12] But if the insurance requires "notices of all previous insurances," it will not be construed as extending to subsequent insurances also.[13] The provision requiring notice of all additional insurance in behalf of the insured refers only to additional insurance upon the same property.[14] But the insured should, in all cases where he has procured other insurance which his policy stipulates against,

[7] Hygum v. Ætna Ins. Co. 11 Iowa, 21.

[8] See §§ 34–36, 332–334, 350 et seq. herein.

[9] See §§ 434–439 and §§ 556 et seq. herein.

[10] Northern Assurance Co. v. Grand View Building Assoc. 183 U. S. 308, 46 L. ed. 213, 22 Sup. Ct. 133. See also Lancaster Ins. Co. v. Stanley, 70 Ark. 1, 62 S. W. 66.

[11] Carpenter v. Providence Washington Ins. Co. 16 Pet. (41 U. S.) 495, 10 L. ed. 1044. Cited in:

United States. — Phoenix Mutual Life Ins. Co. v. Raddin, 120 U. S. 183, 189, 30 L. ed. 644, 646, 7 Sup. Ct. 500; Humphrey v. Hartford Fire Ins. Co. 15 Blatchf. (U. S. C. C.) 504, 523, Fed. Cas. No. 6,875; Penn Mutual Life Ins. Co. v. Mechanics Savings Bank & Trust Co. 72 Fed. 413, 431, 19 C. C. A. 286, 304, 37 U. S. App. 692, 38 L.R.A. 33, 70; Union National Bank v. German Ins. Co. 71 Fed. 473, 475, 18 C. C. A. 203, 206, 34 U. S. App. 397.

Maryland.—Washington Fire Ins. Co. v. Davison, 30 Md. 91, 110.

Massachusetts.—Barrett v. Union Mutual Fire Ins. Co. 7 Cush. (61 Mass.) 175, 179.

Missouri.—Aloe v. Mutual Reserve Life Assoc. 147 Mo. 561, 579, 49 S. W. 553.

Ohio.—Madison Ins. Co. v. Fellowes, 1 Disney, 217, 224.

West Virginia.—Maupin v. Scottish Union & National Ins. Co. 53 W. Va. 557, 567, 45 S. E. 1003.

[12] Frederick County Mutual Fire Ins. Co. v. De Ford, 38 Md. 404; Warwick v. Monmouth County Mutual Fire Ins. Co. 15 Vroom (N. J.) 83, 43 Am. Rep. 343.

[13] Ætna Fire Ins. Co. v. Tyler, 16 Wend. (N. Y.) 385, 30 Am. Dec. 90; Tyler v. Aetna Fire Ins. Co. 12 Wend. (N. Y.) 507.

[14] Franklin Fire Ins. Co. v. Updegraff, 43 Pa. 350.

exercise reasonable diligence in giving notice of the same, and whether he has so exercised it is a question for the jury.[15]

Where a parol contract of insurance is entered into, a verbal notice is all that is necessary in case of other insurance, though the usual form of policies may require notice to be indorsed on the policy or otherwise acknowledged in writing.[16] But a parol notice of other insurance is not a compliance with the terms of a policy, requiring that all notice of previous insurance on the property be given and indorsed on the policy. This is true although the prior policy is voidable.[17] Notice of prior insurance may, however, be established by parol where the policy does not require it to be in writing, though it prescribes that the assent of the company be in writing.[18]

Where the policy provided that notice must be given of "all additional insurance and of all changes that may be made in such additional insurance," and the insured gave notice of other insurance, but upon renewing such other insurance had the amount differently distributed, it was held that a failure to give notice of such change in distribution would release the insurers.[19] While in all cases knowledge of further insurance may not be equivalent to notice to the original company, yet knowledge followed by acts that amount to a subsequent recognition of the original contract as still in force will dispense with the necessity of proving notice.[20] [15] Kimball v. Howard Ins. Co. 8 Gray (74 Mass.) 33; Mellen v. Hamilton Fire Ins. Co. 17 N. Y. 609.

[16] Eureka Ins. Co. v. Robinson, 56 Pa. St. 256, 94 Am. Dec. 65.

[17] Carpenter v. Providence Washington Ins. Co. 16 Pet. (41 U. S.) 495, 10 L. ed. 1044. Cited in:

United States.—Modern Woodmen of America v. Tevis, 117 Fed. 369, 373, 54 C. C. A. 297; Northern Assurance Co. v. Grand View Building Assoc. 101 Fed. 77, 82, 41 C. C. A. 207; McElroy v. British American Assurance Co. 94 Fed. 990, 997, 36 C. C. A. 615, 621.

Louisiana. — Myers v. Germania Ins. Co. 27 La. Ann. 63, 66.

Missouri.—Hutchinson v. Western Ins. Co. 21 Mo. 97, 103, 64 Am. Dec. 218.

Nevada.—Healey v. Imperial Fire Ins. Co. 5 Nev. 268, 274.

New York.—Bigler v. New York Central Ins. Co. 20 Barb. 635, 636.

Ohio. — Robert v. New England Mutual Ins. Co. 2 Disney, 106, 112.

Texas.—Crescent Ins. Co. v. Griffin, 59 Tex. 509, 512.

West Virginia.—Medley v. German Alliance Ins. Co. 55 W. Va. 342, 350, 47 S. E. 101. Cited as overruled in Pechner v. Phoenix Ins. Co. 65 N. Y. 195, 207.

[18] Kenton Ins. Co. v. Shea, 6 Bush (69 Ky.) 174, 99 Am. Dec. 676. See also Schenck v. Mercer County Mutual Fire Ins. Co. 24 N. J. Law, 447; McEwen v. Montgomery County Mutual Ins. Co. 5 Hill (N. Y.) 101; Sexton v. Montgomery County Mutual Ins. Co. 9 Barb. (N. Y.) 191; Planters' Mutual Ins. Co. v. Lyons, 33 Tex. 253; Hendrickson v. Queen's Ins. Co. 31 U. C. Q. B. 547.

[19] Simpson v. Pennsylvania Ins. Co. 38 Pa. St. 250.

[20] Eureka Ins. Co. v. Robinson, 56 Pa. St. 256, 94 Am. Dec. 65.

The required notice of other insurance does not extend to that which is not in existence when the loss occurs, as where insured did not until after the loss receive notice of the acceptance of other insurance theretofore applied for to another insurer.[1] So a policy of fire insurance containing a stipulation making it null and void if the insured omits to give notice of any additional insurance on the property covered, is not avoided by omission to give notice of an additional insurance which never became effective.[2] But it is decided that, inasmuch as declarations in a proposal are in the nature of continuing declarations up to the time the policy is issued, if between said proposal and the issue of the policy assured obtained insurance in another company without notice to, or insurer's consent, the first policy was void.[3] Again, where a statute so provides it must appear that assurer was injured by breach of a condition, or that loss resulted therefrom, or there will be no forfeiture and the failure to give notice or to obtain the consent of assurer to additional insurance does not of itself operate to forfeit the policy.[4] In a Federal case it was urged that assured had to show affirmatively what policies of other insurance were held on the insured property as a basis for recovery under a policy in the standard form, providing that insurer should not be liable for any greater proportion of any loss than the "amount hereby insured shall bear to the whole insurance," etc. Said policy also required that the proofs of loss should contain a sworn statement showing all other insurance on the property, and in accordance therewith the proofs containing a schedule of all other insurance were made out in apparent conformity with assurer's requirements and were accepted by it without objection, and were produced by it upon the trial upon assured's demand. It was held that assurer had full notice, under the sworn statement of all other insurance upon the property and it having been admitted in evidence without objection, the objection was altogether too technical to avail insurer, that it was only admitted to show compliance with the terms of the policy and could not, therefore, constitute proof of other insurance.[5]

It is decided that even though the owner of property does not

[1] Commercial Union Ins. Co. v. Temple, 18 Can. S. C. 206, 18 Canadian L. T. 387.

[2] Equitable Fire & Accident Office Ltd. v. Ching Wo Hong [1907] L. R. A. C. 96, 76 L. J. C. P. (N. S.) 31, 96 L. T. (N. S.) 1, 23 Times L. R. 200n, 1 B. R. C. 34n. See §§ 2475, 2478 herein.

[3] Marshall & Scottish Employers' Liability Co. In re, 85 L. T. 757.

[4] Lagden v. Concordia Mutual Fire Ins. Co. 188 Mich. 689, 154 N. W. 87; Pub. acts 1911, No. 128.

[5] Humboldt Fire Ins. Co. v. W. H. Ashley Silk Co. 185 Fed. 54, 107 C. C. A. 274, 40 Ins. L. J. 757.

know that the mortgagee has taken out a policy in said owner's name, loss payable to himself as interest may appear, still the policy is void where notice is not given by insured as required.[6] And it is held that properly mailing a notice of additional insurance is insufficient where the receipt thereof is denied by insurer,[7] and in such case knowledge cannot be imputed to insurer or its officers, even though the letter is in its possession, if the secretary, to whom it was mailed, never received it.[8]

Notice to insurer's agent is held sufficient,[9] even though written consent of insurer is required.[10] Notice of additional insurance is sufficient if given one to whom such notice might properly have been given, as to an employee who solicited the original insurance, occupies a desk in the office of the agent, and his duties are to solicit insurance for the exclusive benefit of such agent, and to take to him all risks secured.[11] If an insurance agent is part owner of the insured property as heir to one deceased subsequently to the execution of a mortgage on the property, and also one of the makers of the mortgage note, his failure, when issuing the policy, to notify his company of these facts, or that there was a prior policy upon the property issued to such mortgagee, does not void the policy last issued, although the amount of insurance is in excess of the amount permitted as concurrent insurance.[12] But notice given casually to assurer's officer is not sufficient.[13]

§ 2484. Permission to obtain other insurance.—In many cases policies are issued which contain a clause permitting other insurance to a certain specified amount, or subsequent to their issuance permission is indorsed for further insurance, the policy also permitting such other insurance. This will be construed to be a consent to insurance in other companies to the amount named, and the condition will not be violated by a renewal of the policies of [6] Perry v. Liverpool & London & Globe Ins. Co. (Can.) 34 N. B. 380.

[7] Fairfield Packing Co. v. Southern Mutual Fire Ins. Co. 193 Pa. 184, 44 Wkly. N. C. 533, 44 Atl. 317.

[8] Shelden v. Michigan Millers' Mutual Fire Ins. Co. 124 Mich. 303, 82 N. W. 1068 (a question of evidence was involved herein under the statute, the secretary having died, and evidence of the contents of the letter was excluded).

[9] Utz v. Insurance Co. of North America, 139 Mo. App. 153, 122 S. W. 318.

As to notice to and knowledge of agent, see §§ 515 et seq. herein.

[10] Utz v. Orient Ins. Co. 139 Mo. App. 552, 123 S. W. 538.

[11] Arff v. Star Fire Ins. Co. 125 N. Y. 57, 10 L.R.A. 609, 21 Am. St. Rep. 721, 25 N. E. 1073. Compare Morris v. Orient Ins. Co. 106 Ga. 472, 33 S. E. 430.

[12] Magoun v. Firemen's Fund Ins. Co. 86 Minn. 486, 91 Am. St. Rep. 370, 91 N. W. 5.

[13] Monk v. Penn Township Mutual Fire Assoc. of L. C. (Pa.) 21 Lanc. L. Rev. 222.

other insurance upon their expiration.[14] A permission of this nature is held to refer to both subsequent and prior insurance, and to include the aggregate amount of both.[15] So a permission to effect other insurance is construed to mean other and additional insurance so as to preclude a forfeiture.[16] If the policy permits other insurance to a certain amount, any insurance beyond that amount will avoid the policy where it is conditioned to be void in case of other insurance without notice and consent. It is the same as if the policy were conditioned to be void in case other insurance should be effected beyond the amount specified.[17] So attaching an eighty per cent clause average coinsurance clause operates as a permission for other insurance to the extent and only to the extent so specified.[18] And a permit to take a limited amount to other insurance does not nullify a condition of forfeiture for existing or subsequent additional insurance, but the policy is not avoided under such a permit, by a slight excess of additional insurance in the absence of proven fraudulent intent in procuring the same.[19] When partial insurance is taken on property, other insurance being permitted, the company assumes the risk not on any definable portion of the property, but on an undivided proportion of the whole property.[20] Permits for other insurance in a certain amount specified in each of two different policies issued by the same insurer at different times are not cumulative and preclude additional total insurance in excess of the largest amount so specified in either policy as that permitted, effected contrary to a provision against other insurance.[1]

A permission to obtain "—— additional insurance" has no effect whatsoever, although the policy is conditioned that it shall be void for procuring other insurance except as otherwise therein.[2]

[14] Parsons v. Standard Fire Ins. Co. 3 Leg. News (Montr.) 335.

[15] Carruge v. Atlantic Ins. Co. 40 Ga. 135, 2 Am. Rep. 567; Blake v. Exchange Ins. Co. 12 Gray (78 Mass.) 265; Kimball v. Howard Ins. Co. 8 Gray (74 Mass.) 33; Warner v. Peoria Ins. Co. 14 Wis. 318.

[16] Griscom-Spencer Co. v. Mechanics Ins. Co. (1909) — N. J. L. —, 32 N. J. L. Jour. 277.

[17] Allen v. German-American Ins. Co. 123 N. Y. 6, 25 N. E. 309; Blake v. Exchange Ins. Co. 12 Gray (78 Mass.) 265; Elliott v. Lycoming Ins. Co. 66 Pa. St. 22, 5 Am. Rep. 323.

[18] Nestler v. Germania Fire Ins. Co. 89 N. Y. Supp. 782. See Woolford v. Phœnix Ins. Co. 190 Mass. 233, 76 N. E. 722, 35 Ins. L. J. 316; Rudy v. Safety Mutual Fire Ins. Co. 64 Leg. Intel. 596, 16 Pa. Dist. R. 920.

[19] Teter v. Norfolk Fire Ins. Corp. 74 W. Va. 461, 82 S. E. 201.

[20] Teague v. Germania Fire Ins. Co. 71 Ala. 473.

[1] De Loach v. Ætna Ins. Co. 4 Ga. App. 746, 62 S. E. 473.

[2] Fountain v. Standard Fire Ins. Co. 155 Iowa, 96, 134 N. W. 1090. See also Philadelphia Underwriters' Ins. Co. of North America v. Bigelow, 48 Fla. 105, 37 So. 210; Miller v. St. Paul Fire & Marine Ins. Co. 26 S. Dak. 154, 128 N. W. 609.

§ 2484a. Permission continued: concurrent insurance.—If a specified amount of "total concurrent insurance" is permitted "including this policy" a permission is thereby given to effect additional insurance to the amount so specified even though the policy amount is the same as that so permitted.[3] If a policy of insurance on buildings contains a clause providing that it shall become void if the insured then has, or shall thereafter make or procure, any other contract of insurance, unless otherwise provided by agreement indorsed on, or added to, the policy, and it has attached to it an indorsement slip, of the same date, containing a description of the property insured, the amount of insurance written thereon, and a clause reciting that "two thousand five hundred dollars total insurance permitted," such sum being the amount of insurance written in the original policy, such indorsement slip and clause construed in connection with the whole policy permit other concurrent insurance in the sum named therein.[4] Where a certain amount of "total insurance" is permitted "concurrent herewith" on buildings, boilers, engines and machinery and other insurance is permitted "concurrent herewith" on stock, such limitation contemplates the amount so written in the policy and not additional insurance to that amount. The words "total insurance" mean the entire insurance and the expression "concurrent herewith" relates to the terms "total insurance" and the policy provides the subjects upon which there must be concurrence; that is, the total insurance must operate at the same time and upon the same property as is fixed by the policy.[5] Separate insurance subsequently procured on a sample room building connected by a covered board walk with a hotel, which with the attached building is insured, is within a policy limitation of the amount of concurrent insurance permitted.[6] If Lloyds marine policies are concurrent in time as well as concurrent as to the property which is covered, they are within a provision of fire policies permitting "other concurrent insurance," even though the former are not, as to the latter, concurrent in kind or method of adjustment. In cases of a permission of this character, if the insurer intends that the concurrent insurance should be identical in terms with that which it issues, it should so clearly express its

[3] Western Assurance Co. v. Ferrell, — Miss. —, 40 So. 8, 35 Ins. L. J. 314, citing as deciding precisely the same point, L'Engle v. Scottish Union & National Fire Ins. Co. 48 Fla. 82, 67 L.R.A. 581, 37 So. 462.

[4] L'Engle v. Scottish Union & National Fire Ins. Co. 48 Fla. 82, 67 L.R.A. 581, 111 Am. St. Rep. 70, 37 So. 462.

[5] Senor v. Western Millers' Mutual Fire Ins. Co. 181 Mo. 104, 79 S. W. 689, 33 Ins. L. J. 455.

[6] Interstate Fire Ins. Co. v. Nelson, 105 Miss. 437, 62 So. 425.

intent as to admit of no doubt as to its meaning, since the rule of construction in cases of doubt or ambiguity is against insurer.[7] Where the following clauses were indorsed upon the policy, "Other insurance permitted concurrent in form herewith," and "Loss, if any, payable to T., executor, to the extent of his mortgage interest," and subsequently other insurance was obtained, but it was not concurrent in form, it was held, the company having claimed that the policy was forfeited, that the indorsements upon the policy were not a part of the same, and that it was not necessary that the provisions in the other policies should be concurrent in form.[8] And where a policy to insured permitted total concurrent insurance, but, as construed by the court, did not permit additional insurance beyond the amount specified as "total insurance," the intention being to limit it to said amount, and the policy also stipulated as to the interest existing thereunder in favor of a mortgagee or of any person or corporation having an interest in the subject of insurance, the conditions contained in said policy should apply in the manner expressed in such provisions and conditions of insurance relating to such interest as should be "written upon, attached or appended" thereto, and a slip was attached to the policy as a part of the contract providing for a certain party's interest, but none of the conditions violating the policy as to insured were to be found in said appended agreement and none of the conditions were written upon, attached, or appended to the policy, it follows that said party's interest is not in any way affected by conditions rendering the policy void as to assured, and this applies to other insurance taken out by assured which invalidates the policy as to him, especially so, where said party whose interest was so provided for had no notice or knowledge of the issuance of other insurance to insured.[9] If other insurance covers only part of the insured property it does not avoid a policy prohibiting additional insurance by permitting other concurrent insurance.[10] A clause in a fire policy permitting concurrent insurance will cover policies written by marine insurance companies upon the property although they render the insurer liable only in case of total loss, and the method of adjustment is different from [7] Globe & Rutgers Fire Ins. Co. v. Alaska-Portland Packers' Assoc. 49 L.R.A.(N.S.) 374, 205 Fed. 32, 123 C. C. A. 340, 42 Ins. L. J. 1331.

[8] Caraher v. Royal Ins. Co. 63 Hun (70 N. Y.) 82, 17 N. Y. Supp. 858, 44 N. Y. St. Rep. 141, aff'd 136 N. Y. 645, 32 N. E. 1015.

[9] Senor v. Western Millers' Mutual Fire Ins. Co. 181 Mo. 104, 79 S. W. 689, 33 Ins. L. J. 455.

[10] Gough v. Davis, 52 N. Y. Supp. 947, 24 Misc. 245. Examine Washburn-Halligan Coffee Co. v. Merchants Brick Mutual Fire Ins. Co. 110 Iowa, 423, 81 N. W. 707, 29 Ins. L. J. 234, considered under § 2480 herein.

that of fire policies, if they are concurrent in time and as to property covered.[11] But obtaining other insurance without insurer's consent is not authorized by a clause "——other concurrent insurance permitted."[12]

§ 2485. Consent to other insurance: indorsement on policy.—In connection with the provision as to notice, above considered, there is generally the requirement of an indorsement to assent to other insurance upon the policy. There are a few cases which hold that there must be a strict compliance with this provision, as it is a condition precedent to recovery, and that verbal notice without a written indorsement is not sufficient.[13] Thus, it has been held that a letter expressing willingness to give consent to the insured's taking out additional insurance does not satisfy a condition in a policy that if the insured takes out other insurance without obtaining a consent of the company indorsed on the policy the policy shall be void.[14] If the charter of a mutual company contains a provision requiring indorsement as necessary to the continued validity of the policy,[15] it would be necessary to comply with this provision, but if it is simply a provision of the policy, it would seem that the requirement as to the indorsement might be waived by the company and its agent the same as any condition avoiding the policy. The later cases, and in fact the weight of authority, may be said to support this proposition.[16] Consequently, a strict compliance with the provisions is not in all cases necessary, and there are many instances in which a notice of other insurance will be sufficient to preserve the policy. And though the policy may require the consent to be indorsed thereon, yet it has been held that a consent in writing to the other insurance will be sufficient though not indorsed as required.[17] But where the policy provides that it shall [11] Globe & Rutgers Fire Ins. Co. v. Alaska-Portland Packers' Assoc. 205 Fed. 32, 123 C. C. A. 340, 49 L.R.A.(N.S.) 374n.

[12] Miller v. St. Paul Fire & Marine Ins. Co. 26 S. Dak. 154, 128 N. W. 609. See also Philadelphia Underwriters Ins. Co. of North America v. Bigelow, 48 Fla. 105, 37 So. 210; Fountain v. Standard Fire Ins. Co. 155 Iowa, 96, 134 N. W. 1090.

[13] United States.—Carpenter v. Providence-Washington Ins. Co. 16 Pet. (41 U. S.) 495, 10 L. ed. 1044 (see citations to this case under § 2483 herein).

Louisiana.—Meyers v. Germania Ins. Co. 27 La. Ann. 63.

Missouri.—Hutchinson v. Western Ins. Co. 21 Mo. 97, 64 Am. Dec. 218.

New York.—Gilbert v. Phœnix Ins. Co. 36 Barb. (N. Y.) 372.

Ohio.—Fellows v. Madison Ins. Co. 2 Disn. (Ohio) 128, 13 Ohio Dec. 79.

Pennsylvania.—Simpson v. Pennsylvania Ins. Co. 38 Pa. St. 250, 256.

[14] Allemania Fire Ins. Co. v. Hurd, 37 Mich. 11, 26 Am. Rep. 491.

[15] See §§ 34–36, 332–334, 434–439, and chapter XXV. herein.

[16] See § 2487 herein.

[17] Mattocks v. Des Moines Ins. Co. 74 Iowa, 233, 37 N. W. 174. See National Ins. Co. v. Crane, 16 Md. 260, 77 Am. Dec. 289; Kenton Ins. Co. v.

be void in case of other insurance without notice and consent of the company, other insurance without such notice or consent will, in the absence of a waiver of the provision, avoid the policy.[18] And procuring other insurance without written consent indorsed upon the policy as required thereunder avoids the contract even though at the time of obtaining the second policy insured believed the first one had expired.[19] Where, however, a contract for present insurance and for a policy on the same risk is made subject to the conditions contained in the printed policy of the insurer, a condition in the printed policy that all additional insurance, whether prior or subsequent, shall be mentioned in or indorsed on the policy does not require that either prior or subsequent insurance should be mentioned or indorsed on the contract.[20]

If a policy assented to by the insured, provides that it shall become void if the insurer contracts other insurance on the property without the written consent of the company, indorsed on the policy, additional insurance, obtained without the required indorsement, renders the policy void, although the secretary of the company consents, by letter, to the additional insurance.[1] If, however, the policy is silent concerning where or by whom the consent shall be indorsed, the attachment of a printed slip used for that purpose, signed by an agent of the company, will be sufficient.[2]

A requirement that notice be given and written consent obtained from insurer if additional insurance is effected is not superseded or nullified by a permissive eighty per cent coinsurance clause, so that if the additional insurance carries the total insurance to a sum in excess of the total value of the property, the policy is avoided.[3] Under an Ohio decision, additional insurance taken

Shea, 6 Bush (69 Ky.) 174, 99 Am. Dec. 676.

[18] Ben Franklin Ins. Co. v. Weary, 4 Ill. App. 74; Johnson v. American Ins. Co. 41 Minn. 396, 43 N. W. 59.

See also Independent School District of Doon v. Fidelity Ins. Co. 113 Iowa, 65, 84 N. W. 956.

[19] Wilson v. Anchor Fire Ins. Co. 143 Iowa, 458, 122 N. W. 157.

[20] Dayton Ins. Co. v. Kelly, 24 Ohio St. 345, 15 Am. Rep. 612.

[1] O'Leary & Bros. v. Merchants & Bankers Mutual Ins. Co. 100 Iowa, 173, 62 Am. St. Rep. 555, 66 N. W. 175, 69 N. W. 420.

[2] Grubbs v. Virginia Fire & Marine Ins. Co. 110 N. C. 108, 14 S. E. 516.

[3] Woolford v. Phenix Ins. Co. 190 Mass. 233, 76 N. E. 722, 35 Ins. L. J. 316, citing Cutler v. Royal Ins. Co. 70 Conn. 566, 572, 41 L.R.A. 150, 40 Atl. 529; Allen v. Germania Ins. Co. 123 N. Y. 6, 25 N. E. 309, and declaring that: "In so far as the cases of Pool v. Milwaukee Mechanics' Ins. Co. 91 Wis. 530, 51 Am. St. Rep. 919, 65 N. W. 54, and Catoosa Springs v. Linch, 41 N. Y. Supp. 377, 18 Misc. 209, 210, cited by the plaintiff, are inconsistent with this view, we cannot follow them." Hammond, J. See also Rudy v. Safety Mutual Fire Ins. Co. 64 Leg. Intel. 596, 16 Pa. Dist. R. 920. See Nestler v. Germania Fire Ins. Co. 89 N. Y. Supp. 782.

without the consent of the prior insurer, increases the risk as matter of law, so that a statutory provision as to the liability on a policy in the absence of any change increasing the risk without the consent of the insurers, does not apply.[4] The granting by the insurer of the required consent for the procuring of another policy will extend to the renewal of that policy.[5] If an agent acts in a dual capacity for insured and insurer, as where he is employed by the insured bank as cashier, and he effects other and additional insurance on the bank building without insurer's consent indorsed on the policy as required, and insurer had no knowledge thereof until after the loss, the policy is avoided in the absence of waiver.[6]

§ 2485a. Same subject: when indorsement effects new contract.—If an indorsement made upon an "open policy" previously issued by the same insurer provides for additional insurance upon and from the time of notice before known loss, and the premium to be charged is fixed upon the same terms and conditions, so far as applicable, as had been previously agreed upon when the risk was originally accepted, such indorsement is equivalent to issuing an entirely new and distinct contract or policy as of its date when so indorsed, and one containing all the stipulations set forth in the original except those which the said indorsement expressly, or by necessary implication negatived.[7]

§ 2486. Return of premium in case of refusal to indorse consent to other insurance.—If the policy provides that it shall be void, in case of other insurance upon the property, unless notice has been given and the company's consent indorsed upon the policy, the company cannot, in case of its refusal to indorse consent, be compelled to return the premium for the remainder of the term which the policy would have had to run,[8] unless the policy provides that the insured may cancel upon returning the premium for the unexpired term. In such case the insurer must either cancel the policy and return the premium, or else the policy will continue in full force and effect.[9]

[4] Sun Fire Office of London v. Clark, 53 Ohio St. 414, 38 L.R.A. 562, 42 N. E. 248, Rev. Stat. sec. 3643.

[5] New Orleans Ins. Co. v. Holberg, 64 Miss. 51, 8 So. 175.

[6] First National Bank of Nome v. German American Ins. Co. 23 N. Dak. 139, 38 L.R.A.(N.S.) 213, 134 N. W. 873, 41 Ins. L. J. 899.

[7] Corporation of London Assurance v. Paterson, 106 Ga. 538, 52 S. E. 650, 28 Ins. L. J. 385. See § 2479 herein.

[8] Phœnix Ins. Co. v. Stevenson, 78 Ky. 150; Johnson v. American Ins. Co. 41 Minn. 396, 43 N. W. 59.

[9] Demill v. Hartford Fire Ins. Co. 4 Allen (9 N. B. Rep.) 341; Mississippi Home Ins. Co. v. Dobbins, 81 Miss. 623, 33 So. 504, 506, 32 Ins. L. J. 364, 366.

§ 2487. Waiver of provisions as to other insurance: estoppel: notice: consent: indorsement on policy.—A violation of the provisions of the policy as to other insurance will avoid the policy where it is so conditioned, unless there has been a waiver of such provision. Though the courts were at first inclined to require a strict compliance with the provisions as to notice and consent to other insurance when required to be in writing, the weight of authority clearly sustains the rule that a strict compliance is not necessary, and the provisions may be waived by the company,[10] and in many instances by the agents of the company.[11] But in order to establish a waiver of a condition against additional insurance, it must appear that the subject matter of the waiver and consent was in the minds of the parties, and that it was consciously and purposely done by the minds of the parties coming together upon the proposition.[12] The fact that the company has actual knowledge of the other insurance at the time of issuing the policy, though no formal notice has been given, will prevent it from setting up additional insurance to defeat a recovery;[13] and it is declared to be well settled that issuing a policy with full knowledge of the facts voiding it in its inception, if insisted on, constitutes a waiver or operates as an estoppel from setting up the breach.[14] So notice

As to return of premiums and assessments, see c. XLV. (§§ 1390 et seq.) herein.

[10] Alabama.—Alabama State Mutual Assur. Co. v. Long Clothing & Shoe Co. 123 Ala. 667, 26 So. 655.

Florida.—Southern States Fire Ins. Co. v. Vann, 69 Fla. 549, L.R.A. 1916B, 1189, 68 So. 647; Eagle Fire Ins. Co. v. Lewillen, 56 Fla. 246, 47 So. 947, 38 Ins. L. J. 320.

Georgia.—See Carrugi v. Atlantic Ins. Co. 40 Ga. 135, 2 Am. Rep. 567.

Kentucky.—North British & Mercantile Ins. Co. v. Robertson, 134 Ky. 529, 121 S. W. 630; Kenton Ins. Co. v. Shea, 6 Bush (69 Ky.) 174, 99 Am. Dec. 676.

Missouri.—Horwitz v. Equitable Mutual Ins. Co. 40 Mo. 557, 93 Am. Dec. 321; Rogers v. Home Ins. Co. of N. Y. 155 Mo. App. 276, 136 S. W. 743, 40 Ins. L. J. 1434.

New York.—Pitney v. Glens Falls Ins. Co. 65 N. Y. 6; Bigler v. New York Ins. Co. 22 N. Y. 402, and other cases under this section.

[11] See §§ 556–558 herein.

[12] Hartford Fire Ins. Co. v. Small, 66 Fed. 490, 14 U. S. C. C. A. 33, 35, per Bruce, D. J.

[13] Richardson v. Westchester Fire Ins. Co. 15 Hun (N. Y.) 472; Whited v. Germania Ins. Co. 76 N. Y. 415, 32 Am. Rep. 330; Eureka Ins. Co. v. Robinson, 56 Pa. St. 256, 94 Am. Dec. 65. See also Niagara Fire Ins. Co. v. Johnson, 4 Kan. App. 16, 45 Pac. 789.

[14] Gray v. Germania Fire Ins. Co. 155 N. Y. 215, 49 N. E. 674, 27 Ins. L. J. 474.

Where policy delivered without agreed upon permission for other insurance, agent's knowledge is knowledge of company, and it will be held to its agreement, and policy will be reformed in conformity therewith. Salzman v. Machinery Mutual Assoc. 142 Iowa, 99, 120 N. W. 697. Examine Commercial Assur. Co. of London v. New Jersey Rubber Co. 61 N. J. Eq. 446, 49 Atl. 155.

to a company at the time of the issuance of a policy, that there is a prior insurance, will estop it from asserting that the policy is void under a condition against other insurance.[15] And delivery of an insurance policy, knowing of the existence of other insurance upon the premises, waives a condition in the policy that it shall be void if there is any other insurance thereon.[16] So notice of additional insurance with a request that insurer authorize the increase or cancel the policy, if acceded to is a waiver.[17] The company may also waive its right to insist upon the forfeiture provided for by inducing by its silence the insured to believe that no objection would be made.[18] And insurer is estopped by receiving a letter from insured notifying it of additional insurance and requesting an answer but it does not answer it.[19] So it has been held that it is the duty of the insurer, upon being notified of other insurance, to either indorse consent or notify the insured of its refusal to carry the risk, and that a failure to do so will estop the company from setting up in defense the fact that consent was not indorsed.[20] Again, notice to an insurer or its agent for receiving such notice, of additional insurance, and its failure to object or cancel the policy because thereof, is a waiver of a provision in the policy rendering it void in case of such additional insurance unassented to in writing by the insurer.[1] And a provision in a policy and in the by-laws of the insurer, that procuring additional insurance on the insured property shall avoid the policy unless [15] Reed v. Equitable Fire & Marine Ins. Co. 17 R. I. 785, 18 L.R.A. 496, 24 Atl. 833; Continental Ins. Co. v. Reynolds, 107 Md. 96, 68 Atl. 277 (upon pleadings insurer estopped by notice of additional insurance).

[16] Anderson v. Manchester Fire Assur. Co. 59 Minn. 182, 28 L.R.A. 609, 63 N. W. 241; Hood v. Prudential Ins. Co. of America, 61 Leg. Int. 198, 13 Pa. Dist. R. 305 (subsequently executing and delivering other policies by same insurer constitutes waiver).

[17] Neimeyer v. Clayborne, 87 Ark. 72, 112 S. W. 387.

[18] Crescent Ins. Co. v. Griffin, 59 Tex. 509.

[19] Rauch v. Michigan Millers Mutual Fire Ins. Co. 131 Mich. 281, 91 N. W. 160.

[20] Planters' Mutual Ins. Co. v. Lyons, 38 Tex. 253. See also Phœnix Ins. Co. v. Spiers, 87 Ky. 285, 8 S. W. 453, 10 Ky. L. Rep. 254; Potter v. Ontario & Livingston Mutual Ins. Co. 5 Hill (N. Y.) 147; Westlake v. St. Lawrence Ins. Co. 14 Barb. (N. Y.) 206. But see Johnson v. American Ins. Co. 41 Minn. 396, 43 N. W. 59.

[1] Phenix Ins. Co. v. Grove, 215 Ill. 299, 25 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1n, 74 N. E. 141.

Failure to cancel after notice of additional insurance is evidence of waiver, especially so where attempted cancelation is based on another ground. Phenix Ins. Co. v. Holcombe, 57 Neb. 622, 73 Am. St. Rep. 533, 78 N. W. 300.

On whether failure of insurer to speak or act after notice of breach of policy constitutes a waiver thereof, see notes in 25 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1, and 51 L.R.A.(N.S.) 261.

the written consent of the insurer shall be indorsed thereon, is waived by the failure of the insurer to cancel the policy or indorse its consent thereon within a reasonable time after notice to it of the additional insurance before the loss.[2] So failure to repudiate or cancel after knowledge and retaining a premium note is a waiver,[3] as is also a failure to object within a reasonable time after notice;[4] and refusal on other grounds to pay the loss may operate as an estoppel, where insurer has knowledge of prior insurance.[4a] And insurer is estopped from asserting that the policy is void by collecting further premiums after notice received of additional insurance.[5] So accepting premiums with knowledge and without objection thereto until after the loss constitutes a waiver.[6] A provision in a policy that it shall be void if the insurer has other policies in force on the same life, unless consent to the additional insurance is indorsed thereon, is waived by a receipt of premiums on the new policy the beneficiary in which is ignorant of the former insurance, although, by reason of faulty bookkeeping the attention of the insurer was not in fact called to the breach of the condition.[7] If the application states that there is "no other insurance in this company," and said policy, as well as a prior one, is issued by the same insurer, and both applications are taken by the same agent, and the company acts on both applications, receives the premiums, and issues both policies, it cannot be heard to question the validity of either.[8] So a provision requiring written consent, indorsed on the policy, for other insurance, is waived where, at the time a policy of insurance is written, other insurance exists upon the same property, and the fact is known to the agent, who communicates it to the company, and the company accepts the premium, and does not deny the validity of its policy on account of such other in-

[2] Swedish-American Ins. Co. v. Knutson, 67 Kan. 71, 100 Am. St. Rep. 382, 72 Pac. 526.

[3] Kalmutz v. Northern Mutual Ins. Co. 186 Pa. 571, 42 Wkly. N. C. 538, 40 Atl. 816.

[4] Alabama State Mutual Assur. Co. v. Long Clothing & Shoe Co. 123 Ala. 667, 26 So. 665; North British & Mercantile Ins. Co. v. Robertson, 134 Ky. 529, 121 S. W. 630 (silence for unreasonable time after knowledge, is waiver).

[4a] Power v. Monitor Ins. Co. 121 Mich. 364, 80 N. W. 111.

[5] Lutz v. Anchor Fire Ins. Co. 120 Iowa, 136, 98 Am. St. Rep. 349, 94 N. W. 274. See §§ 1369 et seq.

[6] Hartford Fire Ins. Co. v. Redding, 47 Fla. 228, 67 L.R.A. 518, 37 So. 62.

[7] Monahan v. Mutual Life Ins. Co. 103 Md. 145, 5 L.R.A.(N.S.) 759n, 63 Atl. 211.

On effect of condition against other insurance in same company, see note in 5 L.R.A.(N.S.) 759.

[8] Emlaw v. Travelers' Ins. Co. 108 Mich. 554, 66 N. W. 469. See Copeland v. Dwelling-House Ins. Co. of Boston, 77 Mich. 554, 18 Am. St. Rep. 414, 43 N. W. 991.

surance until after a loss occurs, and the waiver will apply, not only to the other insurance as it existed when its policy was written, but to any policy subsequently issued in lieu or renewal of such other insurance.[9] But it is held that demanding payment of a premium note is not of itself sufficient although it is material evidence of an intention to waive, when insured is justified in concluding that there is no forfeiture.[10] Again, assurer's knowledge obtained after loss, its nondeclaration of forfeiture and negotiating for a settlement constitutes a waiver.[11] Where a policy of insurance against fire was conditioned to be void in case other insurance should be made without the insurer's consent, and the loss having occurred, the insurer, with knowledge that other insurance had been made contrary to the terms of the policy, called upon the insured for further proofs of loss without insisting upon the forfeiture, and the proofs were made, it was held that the forfeiture was waived.[12] So a failure to repudiate the policy until after loss is adjusted and assured had settled with other insurers, estops insurer.[13] A forfeiture of a policy, by taking additional insurance in violation of its conditions, may be waived by the company when, with knowledge of the forfeiture and supposing it to be waived, it fails to notify the insured of its intention to insist on the forfeiture until after its adjuster has visited the insured and obtained from him all the information asked for in relation to the extent and value of his loss. Such action by the company will warrant the jury in finding a waiver of the forfeiture, and that question should be submitted to it.[14] The mere fact, however, that insurance adjusters report the total amount of insurance and the proportionate share of the loss to be paid by each of several companies interested is not of itself a waiver by a company not represented by them of a condition in the policy of such company limiting the amount of insurance, but if such company receives such report showing overinsurance, and that it is expected to pay its proportionate share of the adjusted loss, and retains such report without objection, it thereby waives the protection of the condition limiting the amount of insurance to

[9] Hartford Fire Ins. Co. v. Redding, 47 Fla. 228, 67 L.R.A. 518, 37 So. 62.

[10] Glasscock v. Des Moines Ins. Co. 125 Iowa, 170, 100 N. W. 503.

[11] British America Ins. Co. v. Bradford, 60 Kan. 82, 55 Pac. 335.

[12] Webster v. Phœnix Ins. Co. 36 Wis. 67, 17 Am. Rep. 479.

[13] Columbus Dry Goods Co. v. Globe & Rutgers Fire Ins. Co. 127 N. Y. Supp. 589, 142 App. Div. 561.

[14] Cleaver v. Traders' Ins. Co. 71 Mich. 114, 15 Am. St. Rep. 275, 39 N. W. 571.

be carried.[15] Again, a rider pro rata clause attached operates as consent to prior insurance and waives a forfeiture.[16]

A condition against other insurance may be shown to have been waived, or that assurer is estopped, although the facts may be such as to justify a submission of the question to a jury.[17] So whether failure to object after knowledge obtained of other insurance, or requesting proofs of loss and permitting assured to thereby incur expense, constitutes a waiver, is for the jury.[18]

§ 2487a. When no waiver of provisions as to other insurance.— There is no waiver of a condition as to other insurance by issuing a policy with notice of intent to take out other insurance.[19] And the clause "— total concurrent insurance permitted" is neither a permission nor a waiver.[20] Nor does the failure to return the premium constitute a waiver, even though the policy was void when issued, because of overinsurance.[1] Nor does retention of the premium constitute a waiver where insured has not by reason thereof incurred expense or inconvenience;[2] nor is sending notices of assessments and receiving payment thereof;[3] nor an assessment of the premium note;[4] or collecting assessments without knowledge of the breach, or failure to return the same, a waiver.[5] And where insurer has no notice of the procurement of overinsurance, its retention of the premium does not constitute a waiver, even [15] Everett v. London & Lancashire Ins. Co. 142 Pa. St. 332, 24 Am. St. Rep. 499, 21 Atl. 819. But see Phœnix Ins. Co. v. Stevenson, 78 Ky. 150; Jewett v. Home Ins. Co. 29 Iowa, 562.

[16] Bolte v. Equitable Fire Assoc. 23 S. Dak. 240, 121 N. W. 772, 38 Ins. L. J. 886.

[17] Reliance Ins. Co. of Philadelphia v. Dalton, — Tex. Civ. App. —, 178 S. W. 966; Power v. Monitor Ins. Co. 121 Mich. 364, 80 N. W. 111.

[18] Walters v. Mutual City & Village Fire Ins. Co. 120 Mich. 35, 78 N. W. 1011.

[19] Lancashire Ins. Co. v. Stanley, 70 Ark. 1, 62 S. W. 66.

A notice at the time of procuring fire insurance of intention to procure additional insurance in the future is not a notice of existing conditions, so as to make the reception of the premium with such notice operate as an estoppel against the insurer. Black v. Atlanta Home Ins. Co. 148 N. Car. 169, 21 L.R.A.(N.S.) 578, 61 S. E. 672.

[20] Philadelphia Underwriters Ins. Co. of North America v. Bigelow, 48 Fla. 105, 37 So. 210. See Miller v. St. Paul Fire & Marine Ins. Co. 26 S. Dak. 154, 128 N. W. 609; Fountain v. Standard Fire Ins. Co. 155 Iowa, 96, 134 N. W. 1090.

[1] Georgia Home Ins. Co. v. Rosenfield, 95 Fed. 358, 37 C. C. A. 96.

[2] Alabama State Mutual Assur. Co. v. Long Clothing & Shoe Co. 123 Ala. 667, 26 So. 665.

[3] Mouk v. Penn Township Mutual Fire Assoc. of L. C. (Pa.) 21 Lanc. L. Rev. 222.

[4] Carleton v. Patrons' Androscoggin Mutual Fire Ins. Co. 109 Me. 70, 39 L.R.A.(N.S.) 951n, 82 Atl. 649, 41 Ins. L. J. 1067.

[5] A. M. Todd & Co. Ltd. v. Farmers' Mutual Fire Ins. Co. 137 Mich. 188, 100 N. W. 442.

though its agent had been informed by assured at the time of taking out the policy that he intended to carry concurrent insurance.[6] Nor is there a waiver by submitting the loss to arbitration when it is stipulated that appraisal does not waive;[7] nor is an adjustment without knowledge of excess insurance a waiver;[8] nor is assurer estopped by notice denying liability on other grounds if the defenses are consistent.[9] And although assured settles with other assurers there is no waiver if he was not misled by insurer into such settlement.[10] So a delay of eight days after loss to ascertain particulars of other insurance does not constitute a waiver.[11]

§ 2487b. Waiver continued: agents.—A provision in a fire policy voiding it for procuring other insurance without an agreement therefor indorsed thereon being inserted for insurer's benefit may be waived by it or its agent even though the latter's powers are limited by the policy, for the limitation clause may itself be waived nor does such limitation supersede the law making the principal liable for the negligent, wrongful, or fraudulent act of his agent, or the law of equitable estoppel.[12] If insurer's agent, with authority to make the contract and to indorse insurer's consent to other insurance, is advised and has full knowledge thereof and executes and delivers the contract, and receives the premium from assured, assurer is bound by his knowledge whether it be called a waiver or estoppel.[13] And knowledge of insurer's agent of other insurance, as where he consents that it may be effected and issues a slip showing such consent, estops insurer from insisting upon a forfeiture.[14]

[6] Harwood v. National Union Fire Ins. Co. 170 Mo. App. 298, 156 S. W. 475, 42 Ins. L. J. 1002.

[7] Holbrook v. Baloise Fire Ins. Co. 117 Cal. 561, 49 Pac. 555.

[8] Spann v. Phœnix Ins. Co. of Hfd. 83 S. Car. 262, 65 S. E. 232.

[9] Kerr v. Milwaukee Mechanics Ins. Co. 117 Fed. 442, 54 C. C. A. 616.

[10] Huff v. Century Fire Ins. Co. 136 Iowa, 464, 113 N. W. 1078.

[11] Shelden v. Michigan Millers Mutual Fire Ins. Co. 124 Mich. 303, 82 N. W. 1068.

[12] Southern States Fire Ins. Co. v. Vann, 69 Fla. 549, L.R.A.1916B, 1189, 68 So. 647. See §§ 439, 556 et seq. herein. Bank of Anderson v. Home Ins. Co. of N. Y. 14 Cal. App. 208, 111 Pac. 507 (general agent may waive without indorsement on policy); Taylor v. State Ins. Co. 98 Iowa, 521, 67 N. W. 577 (agent with power to issue and renew policies cannot orally permit additional insurance).

[13] Western National Ins. Co. v. Marsh, 34 Okla. 414, 42 L.R.A. (N.S.) 991, 125 Pac. 1094, 41 Ins. L. J. 1726. As to agent's powers; other insurance, see §§ 556 et seq. herein.

[14] American Central Ins. Co. v. Hardin, — Tex. Civ. App. —, 151 S. W. 1152; Palatine Ins. Co. v. McElroy, 100 Fed. 391, 40 C. C. A. 441 (knowledge of broker justifies finding of estoppel); Swain v. Macon Fire Ins. Co. (Macon Fire Ins. Co.

But a condition against other insurance, contained in a policy, is not waived by the issuance of the policy after notice to a mere soliciting agent, of the existence of additional insurance.[15] The rule which imputes an agent's knowledge at the inception of the risk to the principal does not apply where the agent acts in a dual capacity for insurer and insured; and the character of his employment as such for the latter and his financial interest in the latter's business should be considered as in such case it would not be assumed that he would impart information prejudicial to his interests or to those of insured.[16] So an express provision in a policy, forbidding other insurance, will override any supposed agreement to consent to such insurance from the fact that the insurer's agent knew of an intention to procure it.[17] And if a statute providing a standard form of fire policy requires cancelation by insurer of a policy at once upon learning of a breach of condition voiding the policy, but said provision is not contained in later statute as to such policies, no waiver can be based upon the knowledge of insurer's agent that concurrent insurance had been procured, and the failure to cancel the policy, since the moral risk is increased by such procurement.[18] Again an agreement by insurer's agent that a future breach by insured of a condition as to other insurance will be condoned and not be allowed to forfeit the policy, does not constitute a waiver of such future breach, and this

v. Swain) 102 Ga. 96, 29 S. E. 147 (agent's knowledge of prior insurance when issuing policy estops); Insurance Co. of North America v. DeLoach & Co. 3 Ga. App. 807, 61 S. E. 496 (agent's knowledge at time policy was issued estops); Independent School District of Doon v. Fidelity Ins. Co. 113 Iowa, 65, 84 N. W. 956 (knowledge of agent who procured risk is company's knowledge and waiver); Fields v. German American Ins. Co. 140 Mo. App. 158, 120 S. W. 697, 38 Ins. L. J. 979 (notice to and knowledge of agent when policy issued is waiver).

[15] Reed v. Equitable Fire & Marine Ins. Co. 17 R. I. 785, 18 L.R.A. 496, 24 Atl. 833.

[16] First National Bank of Nome v. German American Ins. Co. 23 N. Dak. 139, 38 L.R.A.(N.S.) 213, 134 N. W. 873, 41 Ins. L. J. 899, distinguishing Leisen v. St. Paul Fire & Marine Ins. Co. 20 N. Dak. 316, 30 L.R.A.(N.S.) 539, 127 N. W. 839; Northern Assurance Co. of London v. Grand View Building & Loan Assoc. 183 U. S. 308, 46 L. ed. 213, 22 Sup. Ct. 133, rev'g 101 Fed. 77, 41 C. C. A. 207 (no waiver of written consent by notice to or knowledge of agent when effecting insurance); Traders Ins. Co. v. Letcher, 143 Ala. 400, 39 So. 271 (knowledge of agent who issued policy after agency terminated no waiver).

On effect of insurance broker's knowledge as to other insurance, see note in 38 L.R.A.(N.S.) 638. On effect of knowledge of agent acting in double capacity, see note in 3 L.R.A.(N.S.) 444.

[17] United Firemen's Ins. Co. v. Thomas, 47 L.R.A. 450, 82 Fed. 406, 27 C. C. A. 42, 53 U. S. App. 517, 92 Fed. 127, 34 C. C. A. 240, 47 L.R.A. 455.

[18] Hronish v. Home Ins. Co. of N. Y. 33 S. Dak. 428, 146 N. W. 588.

applies where insured informed the agent that he expected to take out concurrent insurance.[19] And if assured obtains other insurance of one of the members of a firm of agents who had issued the first policy, this does not constitute consent to other insurance, even though assured does not know of the fact of dissolution, nor that the agency had terminated for the first company.[20]

Although it is claimed that the acts of the adjuster constitute a waiver, such claim will not be sustained where it does not appear that there is anything in his conduct from which a relinquishment of a known right can be implied, or anything therein which tends to mislead assured to his injury or prejudice, or lull him into a false security in the matter of his rights, and this applies where an independent fire insurance adjuster employed by insurer had stated that: "You will hear from me," made at an examination by the state fire marshal as to the circumstances attending the loss and at which the adjuster was present and asked some questions.[1] And it is held that the fact that insurer's adjuster, after the loss, acquired knowledge of additional insurance and did not object does not waive insurer's right to defend on that ground, where the policy requires consent thereto to be indorsed on the policy.[2]

§ 2488. Insurer is chargeable with knowledge of prior policies issued by it.—A company is chargeable with knowledge of the existence of other prior policies issued by it.[3] But where both policies were issued by the same company, and the prior policy was conditioned to be void in case of other insurance, it was held that the prior policy was avoided by the subsequent one.[4] And in New York it has been held that if an agent knows of a prior insurance, which he mistakenly believes to have expired, and, acting under such belief, procures a second policy on the same property which contains a condition that it shall be void if the insured "shall have any insurance on the property hereby insured, not indorsed, known, or consented to by this company or its authorized agent in writing, [19] Harwood v. National Union Fire Ins. Co. 170 Mo. App. 298, 156 S. W. 275, 42 Ins. L. J. 1002; Lippman v. Ætna Ins. Co. 108 Ga. 391, 33 S. E. 897, 28 Ins. L. J. 886 (mere oral permission by agent to effect other insurance no estoppel); Morris v. Orient Ins. Co. 106 Ga. 472, 33 S. E. 430 (promise to give other insurance no waiver).

[20] Greenwich Fire Ins. Co. v. Sabotnick, 91 Ga. 717, 17 S. E. 1026.

[1] Bakhaus v. Germania Fire Ins. Co. 176 Fed. 879, 100 C. C. A. 349, 39 Ins. L. J. 1049.

[2] First National Bank of Nome v. German American Ins. Co. 23 N. Dak. 139, 38 L.R.A.(N.S.) 213, 134 N. W. 873, 41 Ins. L. J. 899.

[3] Lanigan v. Prudential Ins. Co. 44 N. Y. St. Rep. 234, 18 N. Y. Supp. 287, 63 Hun, 408.

[4] Duclos v. Citizens' Mutual Ins. Co. 23 La. Ann. 332.

this policy shall be void," this pre-existing policy is a breach of the condition, and avoids the second policy.[5]

§ 2489. Recovery: prior policies: marine insurance: contribution: where no pro rata clause.—If several policies of marine insurance are issued upon the same property and risk, and contain no clause as to apportionment of the liability of the insurers, the rule in England and the common-law rule in the United States is, that the insured may recover a proportionate part of the loss from each of the insurers, or he may recover the entire amount from any one of the insurers, and the insurer may demand contribution from the others. Where several policies are issued by different insurers upon the same property, they are, as between themselves, sureties.[6]

[5] Sanders v. Cooper, 115 N. Y. 279, 12 Am. St. Rep. 801, 5 L.R.A. 638, 22 N. E. 212.

[6] Davis v. Gildart, 1 Marshall on Ins. (ed. 1810) 148; Godin v. London Assur. Co. (1758) 1 Burr. 489, 1 W. Black. 103; Clark v. Western Assur. Co. 29 Week. L. C. 237; Newley v. Reed, 1 W. Black. 116; Thurston v. Koch, 4 Dall. (4 U. S.) 348, 1 L. ed. 862; Millaudon v. Western Mutual Ins. Co. 9 La. 27, 29 Am. Dec. 433; Wiggin v. Suffolk Ins. Co. 18 Pick. (35 Mass.) 145, 29 Am. Dec. 576; Lucas v. Jefferson Ins. Co. 6 Cow. (N. Y.) 635; Howard Ins. Co. v. Scribner, 5 Hill (N. Y.) 298; Peters v. Delaware Ins. Co. 5 Serg. & R. (Pa.) 473, per Duncan, J. In this case, however, the court held upon the facts that the case was one of double insurance, and that the insured should not recover from the second insurer where he could recover against the first, unless plaintiff could show that in the event which had happened the defendants were liable, and not the other insurance company whose policy was of prior date: Sloat v. Royal Ins. Co. 49 Pa. St. 14, 88 Am. Dec. 477; Lebanon Ins. Co. v. Kepler, 106 Pa. St. 28. This was first settled in the case of Davis v. Gildart, 1 Marshall on Ins. (ed. 1810) 148. In that case Lord Mansfield said: "The question seems to be whether the insured has not two securities for the loss which has happened. If so, there can be no doubt that he may bring an action against either. It is like the case of the two sureties where if all the money be recovered from one of them he may recover a portion from the other." And in the later case of Godin v. London Assur. Co. 1 Burr. 489, 1 W. Black. 103, Lord Mansfield again said: "As between the insurer and the insured, upon the foot of commutative justice merely, the insurers were bound to pay the insured the whole, for they have received a premium for the whole risk. If the insured be to receive but one satisfaction, natural justice says that the several insurers shall all of them contribute pro rata to satisfy that loss against which they have insured . . . and if the whole should be recovered from one, he ought to stand in the place of the insured to receive contribution from the other, who was equally liable to pay the whole." In Thurston v. Koch, 4 Dall. (4 U. S.) 348, 1 L. ed. 862, this last cited case and the rule stated therein was approved and adopted. The court said: "Such being the law of England as to double insurances before and at the commencement of our regulation, which divides the loss ratably among the insurers. It was also the law of this country, and is so now. It is of authoritative force, and must govern the present case. Besides, if the court were at liberty to elect a

§ 2490. To enforce contribution policies must cover same interest in same property.—Contribution cannot be enforced unless the policies cover the same interest in the same property.[7] So a provision for apportionment of loss if there is other insurance, applies only to cases where the insurance covers the same interest.[8] And where the consignee had insured goods of the consignor in pursuance of a contract with the consignor to keep his goods insured, it was held that the insurer under the policy could not claim contribution from other companies which had issued policies upon goods in the same warehouse belonging to other consignees.[9] But where warehousemen insured "merchandise" in their warehouses "their own or held by them in trust, or in which they have an interest or liability," and depositors of the merchandise, to whom advances had been made by the warehousemen, took out other policies upon the same goods for their own protection and that of the warehousemen, it was held to constitute double insurance, and to render the insurers liable to bear the loss proportionately.[10] In case of a policy issued upon the mortgagor's interest and of another policy by a different company upon the mortgagee's, the fact that the mortgagor had, after payment of the loss to the mortgagee, compelled the latter to account to him as trustee ex maleficio will not permit the company which insured the equity of redemption to enforce contribution against the other insurer, since there is no double insurance.[11] rule, I should adopt the English regulation, which divides the loss ratably among the insurers. It is the most convenient, equal, and consonant to natural justice, and has been practiced upon nearly half a century by the first commercial nation in the world." This case contains a review of all the prior decisions involving this point, and also a thorough and lengthy discussion of the principles involved.

As to compound policies: prorating loss, see § 3457 herein.

On contribution in case of Lloyd's policies, see note in 55 L.R.A. 201.

[7] Fox v. Phœnix Ins. Co. 52 Me. 333; Liverpool & London & Globe Ins. Co. v. Verdier, 33 Mich. 138; Tuck v. Hartford Fire Ins. Co. 56 N. H. 326; Adams v. Greenwich Ins. Co. 9 Hun (N. Y.) 45, aff'd 70 N. Y. 166; Hastings v. Westchester Fire Ins. Co. 73 N. Y. 141; Ætna Ins. Co. v. Tyler, 16 Wend. (N. Y.) 385, 30 Am. Dec. 90.

[8] Niagara Fire Ins. Co. v. Seammon, 144 Ill. 490, 19 L.R.A. 114, 28 N. E. 919, 32 N. E. 914; Traders Ins. Co. v. Paeaud, 150 Ill. 245, 41 Am. St. Rep. 355, 37 N. E. 460.

On what constitutes double insurance for purpose of apportionment of loss, see note in 15 L.R.A. 127.

[9] Lowell Manufacturing Co. v. Safeguard Fire Ins. Co. 88 N. Y. 591.

[10] Home Ins. Co. v. Baltimore Warehouse Co. 93 U. S. (3 Otto) 527, 23 L. ed. 868. See also Robbins v. Firemen's Fund Ins. Co. 16 Blatchf. (C. C.) 122, Fed. Cas. No. 11,881.

[11] Niagara Fire Ins. Co. v. Seammon, 35 Ill. App. 582, 28 N. E. 919.

§ 2491. Rules as to recovery and contribution in fire insurance where there are several policies constituting other insurance.—In the absence of any provisions in fire policies covering the same property, and issued by different companies, as to liability in case of other insurance, the rule which we have stated in a preceding section as applicable to marine policies under similar conditions will control.[12] The insured can in no case recover more than the amount of loss which it has been proved that he has sustained, and if, where there are several policies upon the property, he has recovered the amount of that loss upon a part of the policies, the liability of the remaining insurers to him has ceased, and they are only liable for contribution to those who have paid.[13]

If a policy on merchandise is taken out by a warehouseman and policies covering the same goods are taken out by depositors of the merchandise who received advances thereon from the warehouseman it is a case of double insurance and they bear a loss proportionately.[14] Where three companies insured goods in every part of a building, and one of them made a further insurance of goods in the upper stories only, and a loss occurred which in the lower stories exceeded the amount of the first insurance, and in the upper stories exceeded the amount of the second insurance, it was held that the second insurance was payable in full, and that the first policies did not contribute to it.[15] And if one has insurance in [12] United States.—Home Ins. Co. v. Baltimore Warehouse Co. 93 U. S. 527, 23 L. ed. 868; Barnes v. Hartford Fire Ins. Co. 3 McCrary (C. C.) 226, 9 Fed. 813.

Georgia.—Williamsburg City Fire Ins. Co. v. Gwinn, 88 Ga. 65, 13 S. E. Rep. 837.

Illinois.—Peoria Fire & Marine Ins. Co. v. Lewis, 18 Ill. 553.

Louisiana.—Keller v. Merchants' Ins. Co. 7 La. Ann. 29.

Maryland.—Baltimore Fire Ins. Co. v. Loney, 20 Md. 20.

Massachusetts.—Wiggins v. Suffolk Ins. Co. 18 Pick. (35 Mass.) 145, 9 Am. Dec. 576.

New York.—Howard Ins. Co. v. Scribner, 5 Hill (N. Y.) 298.

Pennsylvania.—Lebanon Ins. Co. v. Kepler, 106 Pa. St. 28; Royal Ins. Co. v. Roedel, 78 Pa. St. 19, 22, 21 Am. Rep. 1; Sloat v. Royal Ins. Co. 49 Pa. 14, 88 Am. Dec. 477.

Compound policies: prorating loss, see § 3457 herein.

On jurisdiction of equity to adjust losses between concurrent insurance policies on same property, see note in 32 L.R.A.(N.S.) 941.

[13] Williamsburg City Fire Ins. Co. v. Gwinn, 88 Ga. 65, 13 S. E. 837. See also cases cited in preceding note.

[14] Home Ins. Co. v. Baltimore Warehouse Co. 93 U. S. 527, 23 L. ed. 868. Cited in Meigs v. London Assur. Co. 126 Fed. 781, 785; Robbins v. Peoples Ins. Co. Fed. Cas. No. 11,885; Home Ins. Co. v. Koob, 113 Ky. 360, 369, 24 Ky. L. Rep. 223, 58 L.R.A. 58, 101 Am. St. Rep. 354, 68 S. W. 453; Lowell Manufacturing Co. v. Safeguard Fire Ins. Co. 88 N. Y. 591, 597.

[15] Royal Ins. Co. v. Roedel, 78 Pa. St. 19, 21 Am. Rep. 1.

two companies but there is a doubt about his ability to recover from either, he may claim the full amount of the loss from each without being guilty of an attempt at fraud, which by the terms of one of the policies would prevent a recovery thereon.[16] An agreement by insurance agents to insure property for a certain specified amount in certain specified companies at a certain per cent is held to mean that there is to be an equal division of the risk among those companies.[17] Though the policies may provide that the insured shall in case of loss furnish a statement giving the details of the loss and the amount claimed, it is not necessary for the insured to apportion, or attempt to apportion, the loss among the different companies in the proof of loss.[18]

§ 2492. Rule where fire policy contains pro rata clause.—Most policies of fire insurance contain a clause providing that the insurer shall not be liable for any greater proportion of any loss which may occur than the amount named in the policy shall bear to the entire amount of insurance upon the property.[19] The fact that at the time a policy containing such a condition is issued there is another policy upon the property does not bind the insured to continue such other policy in force, or prevent him from canceling the same, in the absence of an express agreement that it shall be continued, and the insured may recover the full amount to the extent of the company's liability where such other policy has been canceled or has expired.[20] But if the loss does not equal the full amount of all the policies, the measure of damages against each insurer is the proportion of the loss which the amount of insurance in the policy sued upon bears to the whole insurance.[1] By inserting this clause the insurer limits the amount of recovery upon that particular policy to the proportionate amount which that policy bears to the entire amount of the policies. In the absence of such a clause the [16] Bennett v. Council Bluffs Ins. Co. 70 Iowa, 600, 31 N. W. 948.

[17] Fitton v. Phœnix Assurance Co. 25 Fed. 880. In this case the agents agreed to insure certain buildings for twelve thousand dollars at three per cent in four companies.

[18] Fuller v. Detroit Fire & Marine Ins. Co. 36 Fed. 469, 1 L.R.A. 801.

[19] The clause in the standard form of the New York fire policy is as follows: "This company shall not be liable under this policy for a greater proportion of any loss on the described property, or for loss by and expense of removal from premises endangered by fire, than the amount hereby insured shall bear to the whole insurance, whether valid or not, or by solvent or insolvent insurers covering such property."

As to compound policies: prorating loss, see § 3457 herein.

[20] Hand v. Williamsburgh City Fire Ins. Co. 57 N. Y. 41. See also Lattan v. Royal Ins. Co. 45 N. J. L. 453; Quarrier v. Peabody Ins. Co. 10 W. Va. 507, 27 Am. Rep. 582.

[1] German Ins. Co. v. Heiduk, 30 Neb. 288, 27 Am. St. Rep. 402, 46 N. W. 481.

insured could recover the whole amount from any one of the insurers, and leave him to obtain contribution from the other insurers.[2] A provision in a policy that in case of any other insurance upon the property insured, made prior or subsequent to the policy, the assured shall be entitled to recover no greater proportion of the loss than the sum insured bears to the whole amount so insured therein, applies only to cases where the insurance covers the same interests, and can have no application to insurance obtained upon another distinct insurable interest in the property.[3]

An invalid policy is held to be other insurance within a clause that insurer shall not be liable for a greater proportion of the loss than the amount insured shall bear to the whole insurance "whether valid or invalid or by solvent or insolvent insurers." [4]

If the policy contains a pro rata clause, "without reference to the solvency or liability of other insurers," it is held that though the other insurers become insolvent, or though the policy be avoided, yet the other insurance will be considered as reducing the liability of the company issuing the policy which contained such a condition.[5] But a clause providing for a pro rata liability if there be any other insurance, "valid or invalid," does not apply where other policies are procured without the consent or ratification of the insurer.[6] And if the policy provides that if other insurance shall be taken upon the property the company shall only be liable for its proportion of the loss, a judgment against the company for the full amount of the policy is erroneous where the pleadings show that other insurance was taken to which the company consented.[7] In determining the liability of the insurer under the provision of the policy as to pro rata liability, it is necessary to determine whether the other policies which it is claimed cover the goods do so in fact, and this must be done by construction of the other policies or otherwise, without regard to the fact that the insurers who have issued

[2] Schmaelzle v. London & Lancashire Fire Ins. Co. 75 Conn. 397, 60 L.R.A. 536, 96 Am. St. Rep. 233, 53 Atl. 863, 33 Ins. L. J. 632, 635—Prentice, J.; Scottish Union & National Ins. Co. v. Moore Mill & Gin Co. 43 Okla. 370, 143 Pac. 12, 44 Ins. L. J. 659, 663.—Turner, J.

[3] Traders' Ins. Co. v. Pacaud, 150 Ill. 245, 41 Am. St. Rep. 355, 37 N. E. 460; Niagara Fire Ins. Co. v. Scammon, 144 Ill. 490, 19 L.R.A. 114, 28 N. E. 919, 32 N. E. 914.

[4] Bateman v. Lumberman's Ins. Co. 189 Pa. 465, 42 Atl. 154, 28 Ins. L. J. 159. But compare Gurnett v. Atlas Mutual Ins. Co. 124 Iowa, 547, 100 N. W. 542 (under statute). See § 2478 herein.

On applicability of provisions for prorating where other policy is invalid, see note in 36 L.R.A.(N.S.) 350.

[5] Cassity v. New Orleans Ins. Co. 65 Miss. 49, 3 So. 138.

[6] London & Lancashire Fire Ins. Co. v. Turnbull, 86 Ky. 230, 5 S. W. 542, 9 Ky. L. Rep. 544.

[7] Continental Ins. Co. v. Coons, 14 Ky. L. Rep. 110.

such other policies are parties or not.[8] Where by the articles of agreement of an insurance company a loss sustained by the company was "to be borne by each and every one of the several subscribers or members in proportion to the sum of money by them subscribed, it was held in case of loss they were liable in solido like an ordinary partnership, though the insured was a member of the company.[9] But where an insurance policy provides that in case of additional insurance "the insured shall not recover any greater portion of loss sustained than the amount hereby insured bears to the whole amount of the insurance," and that "the company shall only be obliged to pay as if they had insured two-thirds of the actual cash value of the said property," it was held that, in case of total loss, where the property was insured in two companies the first was not entitled to prorate with the second.[10]

Under a condition voiding the policy if insured without insurer's consent "now or shall hereafter make or procure any other contract of insurance whether valid or not" the policy does not become ipso facto void by a breach of the condition, but whether or not this be so, the other insurance should be considered as insurance in estimating assurer's liability under a stipulation limiting its liability to no greater proportion of the loss than the amount insured bore to the whole insurance whether valid or not.[11] Again, [8] Fire Ins. Assoc. v. Merchants' & Miners' Transportation Co. 66 Md. 339, 59 Am. Rep. 162, 7 Atl. 905.

[9] Shubrick v. Fisher, 2 Desaus. Eq. (S. C.) 148.

[10] Lebanon Mutual Ins. Co. v. Kepler, 100 Pa. St. 28.

[11] Southern National Ins. Co. v. Barr, — Tex. Civ. App. —, 148 S. W. 845, 41 Ins. L. J. 1496. The court per Rice, J., after declaring that the policy did not become ipso facto void by the breach of such condition as to other insurance, said: "But we do not place this decision wholly upon this ground; for we think, irrespective of the fact whether or not said first policy became ipso facto void upon the taking out of the second policy without the consent of the first company, that it should be considered as insurance in estimating appellant's liability under the clause contained in its contract which was that it was liable for no greater amount, in the event of loss, than its policy bore to the whole amount of the insurance, whether valid or not. See Wilson v. Ætna Ins. Co. 12 Tex. Civ. App. 512, 33 S. W. 1085; National Union Ins. Co. v. Dorroh, — Tex. Civ. App. —, 133 S. W. 477, 40 Ins. L. J. 484; Cassity v. New Orleans Ins. Assoc. 65 Miss. 49, 3 So. 138; Gandy v. Orient Ins. Co. 52 S. Car. 224, 29 S. E. 658; Rickerson v. German American Ins. Co. 39 N. Y. Supp. 547, 6 App. Div. 550; Liverpool & London & Globe Ins. Co. v. Verdier, 35 Mich. 395; Hartford Fire Ins. Co. v. Peterson, 209 Ill. 112, 70 N. E. 757; Webb v. Concordia Fire Ins. Co. 167 Mich. 144, 36 L.R.A.(N.S.) 350, 132 N. W. 523; Cooley's Briefs on the Law of Insurance, vol. 4, p. 3101.

"In Wilson v. Ætna Ins. Co., supra, Mr. Justice Collard held, as shown by the syllabus, that 'a policy providing that it should be void if the insured had or should thereafter procure "any other insurance wheth-a clause in a policy providing that the insurer shall be liable only for its pro rata share of the entire insurance on the property, er valid or not," was voided by afterwards procuring another policy, which by reason of a similar clause therein, was void and never attached.'

"In National Union Insurance Co. v. Dorroh, supra, The Texarkana court held, in construing a policy declaring a forfeiture in the event of additional insurance, whether valid or not: 'The condition "whether valid or not," includes an invalid or void policy, and is enforceable,' citing the Wilson case with approval.

"These cases are authority, we think, in this state for the contention that a clause, 'insurance whether valid or not,' includes a void policy, or a policy in the same attitude as the Royal policy in this case. But cases have gone to judgment in other jurisdictions where the exact point in question here presented has been discussed and determined in favor of appellant's contention. In Cassity v. New Orleans Ins. Co., supra, the Supreme Court of Mississippi, passed upon the following provision in a policy of insurance, to wit: 'The insured shall not recover any greater proportion of the loss than the amount hereby insured bears to the whole sum insured on said property . . . without reference to the solvency or liability of other insurers.' At the time of taking out of the New Orleans Insurance Company's policy assured had another policy in the home company which provided for a forfeiture if other insurance be taken out. The assured claimed that the home policy was void from the inception of the policy sued on, and did not constitute insurance within the meaning of the contribution clause, above quoted, which is the same contention as is urged in the case at bar. The court, in passing upon this question said: 'In the absence of a stipulation of this character, the assured might recover from any one of a number of insurers the whole loss sustained by him, leaving the party from whom full recovery had been had recourse on the other insurers for contribution of the loss paid. Under such circumstances, it would devolve upon the company seeking contribution to establish the validity of the several contracts of insurance; and it would bear its proportion of the loss arising from the insolvency of one or more of its coinsurers. To obviate this inconvenience and hazard, the clause under consideration is inserted in the policy. It casts upon the assured not only the loss which may arise from insolvency of any company insurer, but also the obligation of looking to such other insurers for a proportionate part of the loss, regardless of the liability of such insurer upon its policy. We cannot distinguish between a policy of insurance on which there is "no liability of the insurer" and an "invalid policy." We cannot yield our assent to this construction (assured's construction) of the contract. We cannot, in applying the rule which construes the instrument most strongly against the insurer, close our eyes to the manifest purpose of the clause and so refine upon language as to defeat the object sought to be accomplished.'

"In Gandy v. Orient Insurance Company, supra, a question similar to the one under consideration was determined in accordance with appellant's contention. There a policy in the home company was issued prior to the Orient policy, and contained a provision making it void if other insurance was secured. It was claimed that the home policy was void from the inception of the Orient policy, and therefore it was not within the condition 'other insurance, valid or not,' in the contribution clause of the Orient policy; but the court held that, regardless of the question as to whether the home policy was whether valid or invalid, applies even in cases where existing policies are by their terms rendered void, by the issuance of the policy void or voidable, it was insurance, within the condition of the contribution clause.

"In the recent case of Webb v. Concordia Fire Ins. Co., supra, by the Supreme Court of Michigan, the facts were as follows: The insured secured a policy in the Mutual Company October 8, 1903. This policy provided for its forfeiture if other insurance were secured. Later another policy sued upon was secured. The last company had notice of the first policy; but the first company had no notice of the last policy. The last policy contained a clause: 'This company shall not be liable for a greater proportion of any loss than the amount hereby insured bears to the whole insurance, whether valid or not.' The defendant company settled with the assured and paid him its proportion of the loss; both parties assuming that the Mutual Company would pay its proportion. The Mutual Company refused to pay any part of the loss, on the ground that the additional insurance, procured without notice to it, avoided the policy. Assured thereupon instituted suit to cancel the settlement with defendant and recover the balance of the insurance. The assured secured judgment in the lower court. The court reversing the judgment said: 'The single question presented for our determination is: Does the pro rata clause apply to a case where the prior policy becomes void ipso facto upon the issuance of the subsequent policy? Counsel for the defendant contend that the phrase "whether valid or not" was inserted in the policy to cover just such a case as this; that manifestly the pro rata clause can have no effect and cannot become operative until there has been a loss, and that loss ascertained. Therefore, whether a policy has been forfeited and is invalid at the time of the loss, or whether it is still in force, makes absolutely no difference under the working of the policy. The contention of complainant was that, "by reason of the taking of the policy in the defendant, the first policy became wholly void; that the fact that the claim was made under the first policy would not annul the second policy; . . . that the first policy became void upon the day of the issuance of the new policy in defendant company; that it became void for all purposes, not only for the purpose of avoiding liability upon that policy, but it was so void that there was no policy in existence after that date for any purpose whatever, except the policy of defendant; and that the defendant was the sole insurer of the property at the time of the loss, and was liable for the full loss of the property covered by their policy.'

"After so stating the contentions of each party, the court, proceeding said: 'We think it was the legislative purpose in requiring this provision in the statutory policy that all policies in existence at the time of the loss should be taken into account, whether void or valid. In the Verdier Case, Chief Justice Cooley said: "The plaintiff in error required the insured to stipulate in their policy that in adjusting a loss other existing policies should be taken into account, even though forfeited, the plain purpose being to protect the company against the necessity of contesting with the assured any question of the validity or invalidity of existing policies, and this was a competent provision and not unreasonable." In Donogh v. Farmers' Fire Insurance Company, 104 Mich. 503, 62 N. W. 721, Justice Montgomery said: "Plaintiff contends that, inasmuch as the policy attempted to be taken out in the Liverpool, London & Globe Insurance Company contained a clause like that relied upon containing the clause, so that from the date of the latter policy it is the only existing insurance on the property.[12] If an owner and a mortgagee of the same property have procured insurance on their separate interest therein, and the owner seeks to recover on his policy, the defendant insurer is not entitled to contribution against the insurer of the mortgagee's interest.[13] And one insuring a mortgagor's interest cannot, in case of loss, prorate the loss with a policy issued on the mortgagee's independent interest, or compel contribution from the insurer of such interest, under a clause providing for prorating merely in case of "other insurance" on the property.[14] Insurance of a lessor's interest on the premises, on which the lessee also had procured insurance for the lessor's benefit, as his lease required him to do, will cover such part of the loss insured against as remains after the application of the policies taken by the lessee, where they fail to cover the whole loss because of a stipulation in them for prorating with all other insurance on the by defendant, such policy was void and did not operate to forfeit the first policy. There is authority to sustain this contention of plaintiff to the extent that, where there is a stipulation in the policy merely that it shall be voided by subsequent insurance, the first policy is not avoided by taking out a new policy which is wholly inoperative and void. (Citing authorities). But the stipulation in this case goes further. It provides that the policy shall be void if the assured now has or shall hereafter make or procure any other contract of insurance, whether valid or not. Language could not well be more specific. The evident purpose of the provision is to guard against the possibility of all apparent motive or inducement to commit fraud." As remarked by the author of May on Insurance (volume 2, p. 365b): "It is difficult to see why the words 'valid or not' do not in all common sense cover a void policy."

"We think the clause in appellant's policy limiting its liability to no greater proportion of the loss than the amount insured bore to the whole insurance, whether valid or not, must control. It is the solemn agreement of the parties, which the court is bound to enforce, in the absence of fraud or other circumstances authorizing us to set aside the contract. To hold otherwise would be to make a new contract for the parties, which we are not authorized to do. As the parties have bound themselves, so must they be bound.

"We therefore hold that, whether such other insurance was valid or not at the time of the fire, it must be taken into consideration in determining appellant's liability under the contract. So believing, it becomes our duty to reverse the judgment of the trial court and here render judgment in behalf of appellant, which is accordingly done."

[12] Webb v. Concordia Fire Ins. Co. 167 Mich. 144, 36 L.R.A.(N.S.) 350 (annotated on applicability of provision for prorating where other policy is invalid), 132 N. W. 523.

[13] Home Ins. Co. of N. Y. v. Koob, 113 Ky. 360, 58 L.R.A. 58, 101 Am. St. Rep. 354, 68 S. W. 453, 22 Ky. L. Rep. 223.

[14] Home Ins. Co. of N. Y. v. Koob, 113 Ky. 360, 58 L.R.A. 58, 101 Am. St. Rep. 354, 68 S. W. 453, 22 Ky. L. Rep. 223.

premises.[15] Again a policy taken out by one who holds the proceeds as trustee ex maleficio for the owner is not, as to the latter, "other insurance" within the meaning of the apportionment clause in his own policy, although he has obtained the benefit thereof by compelling such trustee to account to him for the proceeds, where he did not in any other way ratify the action of the latter in taking out such policy.[16] Where a policy of insurance provides that, in the event of other, or additional insurance, the assured shall recover no greater proportion of the loss than the sum named in the policy bears to the total amount of the insurance, proof of additional insurance, and that the loss is less than the total amount of insurance, will limit the recovery of the assured to the sum stipulated for in the policy, and he is not entitled to recover the market value of the goods destroyed.[17]

§ 2493. Specific insurance and general policy.—If a general policy on goods provides that if there is any specific insurance upon the goods the insurer will only be liable for the excess of the loss insured against, over and above such specific insurance, the clear intent is to throw the loss upon the specific insurance, and in such a case the insurer will only be liable on such a policy for the excess of the value of the goods lost over the amount insured by such specific insurance.[18] But where four companies insured the same property in buildings in a described inclosure, and each policy contained the following condition, "If at the happening of any fire the assured shall have insurance upon a floating policy or policies not specific, but covering goods generally in various places not designated, and yet within limits which include the property herein insured, such policy, as between the assured and this company, shall be considered as covering any excess of sound value of the subject insured beyond the amount covered by the specific insurance thereon; and to determine the amount for which this company is liable in case of loss, such floating policy shall be considered an insurance on the property to the extent of such excess," and other companies insured on specific property in the same inclosure, it was held that the liability of the four companies was not confined

[15] Sun Ins. Office v. Varble, 103 Ky. 758, 41 L.R.A. 792, 46 S. W. 486.

[16] Niagara Fire Ins. Co. v. Scammon, 144 Ill. 490, 19 L.R.A. 114, 28 N. E. 919, 32 N. E. 914.

[17] German Ins. Co. v. Heiduk, 30 Neb. 288, 27 Am. St. Rep. 402, 46 N. W. 481.

[18] Fairchild v. Liverpool & London Fire & Life Ins. Co. 51 N. Y. 65, aff'g 48 Barb. 420.

Compound policies: prorating loss, see § 3457 herein.

On adjustment between blanket and specific fire insurance policies, see note in L.R.A.1915B, 509.

to the excess of loss above that covered by the specific insurances.[19] In case an insurance policy only covers the interest of the insured, and provides that "goods on storage must be separately and specifically insured," and they have been so insured by the depositors of the goods, the insurer will not be liable for contribution to the company which has specifically insured the property.[20] Again, where cotton is specifically covered by a fire policy while stored in a particular warehouse it does not, until by removal from the warehouse or otherwise it loses the protection thus afforded, come within the operation of a "floating" policy which expressly stipulates that it shall not be held to apply to or cover any cotton which at the time of the loss may be covered by any more specific insurance; and, therefore, in prorating the claim under said policy the floating policies are not to be held as other insurance, and it was declared, relying upon an earlier case under the same policy form, in the same state, that "a floating policy of insurance, which declares that it does not cover cotton on which there is any more specific insurance, does not embrace or apply to any cotton which is specifically insured in another company, and therefore is not subject to share with the other company the burden of loss sustained by the latter or by the insured in respect to the cotton covered by the more specific insurance; and for this reason the company issuing the floating policy cannot be called upon to contribute to a loss resulting from destruction of the cotton covered by the more specific insurance although the policy touching the latter contains a clause declaring that" in case of other prior or subsequent insurance assured shall be entitled "to recover of this company no greater proposition of the loss sustained than the sum hereby insured bears to the whole amount insured thereon, whether by specific or floating policies." [1]

§ 2494. Agreement between insurers to share expenses of defense pro rata.—An agreement between insurers to share the expenses of defense to a claim made for a loss is enforceable as between themselves, but cannot affect those to whom certain expenses of making the defense are due. Thus, where several insurers combined by such an agreement to defend a claim for a loss by fire, and hired an expert to assist them in their defense, it was held that he might recover the entire amount of his claim against any one of the companies, and that the other companies would be liable to that company for contribution.[2] In determining the amount of the contribution it was held that if any of the companies were insolvent, the amount of contribution was to be determined without reference to them.[3]

[19] Merrick v. Germania Fire Ins. Co. 54 Pa. St. 277.

[20] Home Ins. Co. v. Gwathney, 82 Va. 923, 1 S. E. 209.

[1] Macon Fire Ins. Co. v. Powell, 116 Ga. 703, 43 S. E. 73, 32 Ins. L. J. 283,—Simmons, C. J. quoting from United Underwriters Ins. Co. v. Powell, 94 Ga. 359, 21 S. E. 565.

§ 2495. Effect under pro rata clause of payment by any company of more than its share.—If several policies of insurance are issued upon the same interest and risk, and one of them only contains a pro rata clause, and the others or any of them which do not contain such clause pay more than their share, they will be entitled to contribution from the underwriters of the policy which contains this clause.[4] An insurance company is bound, however, to pay its ratable share of loss, and can derive no benefit from excess of payment made by another company where property is insured in several fire insurance companies, and each policy contains a clause that in case of loss the assured shall not be entitled to receive of the company issuing such policy any greater proportion of the loss than the amount insured by such policy bears to the whole amount insured upon the property, and if one of the companies pays more than its ratable share of loss under such a clause, it cannot claim contribution from others which have not paid their share, but must enforce its remedy, if it have any, against the assured.[5]

§ 2496. "American clause:" "shall only be liable for deficiency."—A clause known as the "American clause" has been used for many years and to a great extent in marine policies. It defines the insurer's liability both in case of prior and subsequent insurance. In substance, it provides that in case of prior insurance the insurer shall be liable only for the deficiency between the amount of such prior insurance and the actual amount or value of the amount insured, but in case of subsequent insurance, the insurer will be liable to the full extent of the amount subscribed in the policy.[6] Such a condition is binding, and in case of loss, where there has been double insurance, the insurer is only liable for the

[2] Security Ins. Co. v. St. Paul Fire & Marine Ins. Co. 50 Conn. 233.

[3] Security Ins. Co. v. St. Paul Fire & Marine Ins. Co. 50 Conn. 233.

[4] Finley v. Lycoming Ins. Co. 30 Pa. St. 311, 72 Am. Dec. 705. See Lucas v. Jefferson Ins. Co. 6 Cow. (N. Y.) 635.

[5] Fitzsimmons v. City Fire Ins. Co. 18 Wis. 234, 86 Am. Dec. 761. See also Bardwell v. Conway Ins. Co. 118 Mass. 465; Connecticut Fire Ins. Co. v. Merchants' & Mechanics' Ins. Co. 1 Va. Dec. 592, 15 Ins. L. J. 615.

[6] One of the forms in use is as follows: "If the insured shall have made any other insurance upon the subject insured prior in date to this policy, the assurers shall be answerable only for so much as the amount of such prior insurance may be deficient toward fully covering the subject insured, and shall return the premium upon so much of the sum by them assured as they shall be by such prior insurance exonerated from; and in case of any insurance upon the subject matter subsequent in date to this policy, the assurers shall never-amount of loss not covered by the prior policy.[7] In Murray v. Pennsylvania Insurance Company[8] this question arose. It appeared that the owners of a vessel had effected insurance upon the same in New York for four thousand dollars, valuing her at that sum, and subsequently procured insurance in Philadelphia for the same sum, valuing her at six thousand dollars. Both contained the "American clause." An action was brought for a partial loss, and it was held that the second insurer was only liable for so much of the loss as the prior insurance failed to cover.

If, however, several policies of different dates are issued upon a ship, but the entire amount does not exceed the estimated value of the property insured, then it is held that the insurers are all liable pro rata. The "American clause" is held only to apply in cases of double insurance.[9] So where insured, the interests and the risks covered differ under two different sets of policies the American clause even though in all the policies, is not applicable, especially so where insurance in one case is under an open policy.[10]

Where the policy contains this clause the insurer cannot, of course, claim contribution from subsequent insurers.[11]

theless be answerable for the full extent of the sum by them subscribed, without right to claim contribution from such subsequent assurer, and shall accordingly be entitled to retain the premium by them received in the same manner as if no such subsequent insurance had been made." This was in substance the rule laid down in the French Code of Commerce, sec. 3598, and which was the ancient rule in England (see African Co. v. Bull, 1 Show. 132) prior to the rule laid down by Lord Mansfield.

The marine ins. act of 1906 (6 Edw. VII. c. 41) sec. 80; Butterworth's Twentieth Cent. Stat. (1900–1909) p. 420; Chitty's Stats. Eng., p. 903, provides: "Right of contribution. 80 (1) Where the assured is over insured by double insurance, each insurer is bound, as between himself and the other insurers, to contribute ratably to the loss in proportion to the amount for which he is liable under his contract.

"(2) If any insurer pays more than his proportion of the loss, he is entitled to maintain an action for contribution against the other insurers, and is entitled to the like remedies as a surety who has paid more than his proportion of the debt." See also sec. 32, of act of 1906.

[7] American Ins. Co. v. Griswold, 14 Wend. (N. Y.) 399; Murray v. Pennsylvania Ins. Co. 2 Wash. (U. S. C. C.) 186, Fed. Cas. No. 9,961.

[8] 2 Wash. (C. C.) 186, Fed. Cas. No. 9,961.

[9] Whiting v. American Ins. Co. 15 Md. 297. In this case it appeared that the ship was valued at twenty-two thousand dollars, and that three policies of different underwriters were issued, two being for seven thousand three hundred dollars and one for seven thousand four hundred dollars, and each containing the American clause.

[10] Gross v. New York & T. Steamship Co. (U. S. D. C.) 107 Fed. 516.

[11] American Ins. Co. v. Griswold, 14 Wend. (N. Y.) .399. See Peninsular & O. Ins. Co. v. Atlantic Mut. Ins. Co. 185 Fed. 172, 40 Ins. L. J. 1274; Atlantic Mut. Ins. Co. v. Peninsular & O. Ins. Co. 194 Fed. 84, 114 C. C. A. 162, s. c. 225 U. S. 704, 56 L. ed. 1265, 32 Sup. Ct. 837.

If at the time of the making of the subsequent policy containing the "American clause" the property is fully covered by prior insurance, the policy does not attach.[12] And where a vessel is insured with navigation limited to certain waters and the policy stipulates that deviation beyond said limits shall only operate to suspend the risk until the return of the vessel within the prescribed limits when the policy again becomes in force, and upon being refused permission to go outside said waters another policy was effected with another insurer which with the other policies exceeded the total permitted, and the last policy stipulated for liability only for the deficiency of the amount of prior insurance which totaled the vessel's value, it was held that there was no overinsurance, for the reason that although the vessel went outside the limited waters still since she returned within said limits the last policy was thereby suspended and there was never any excess of insurance.[13] But if, however, at any time during the life of such subsequent policy and before a loss the property insured is not fully covered by the prior policies, then the subsequent one will attach. It is held, however, that it will not attach from the mere fact that some of the prior insurers have become insolvent.[14] Where a policy was issued upon a vessel and outfits, "on provisions, oil-casks, iron boilers, and whaling apparatus generally, and on oil, bone, and other takings, empty casks, and whaling apparatus generally, homeward," and also provided that "as fast as oil, bone, or other articles of cargo are procured this insurance is to attach," and a subsequent policy on catchings was effected which contained the "American clause," it was held that, as the amount of catchings was at all times fully covered by the first policy, there was no liability on the part of the subsequent insurers in any manner.[15] Where a bailee's agent, under a contract to procure insurance on the property, insures only a part of it for the benefit of itself, its principal and the owners, and part of the owners insure their interests in a separate company for their own benefit, in case of loss the first insurance will be applied to the risks covered by it alone, to wit, those of the bailee and owners uninsured by the other company and thus incidentally to the benefit of the agent, before contribution will be enforced in favor of the second insurer towards paying the loss of the owners insured by it.[16] It is held that a pro-

[12] Ryder v. Phœnix Ins. Co. 98 Mass. 185.

[13] St. Paul Fire & Marine Ins. Co. v. Knickerbocker Life Ins. Co. 93 Fed. 931, 36 C. C. A. 19.

[14] Ryder v. Phœnix Ins. Co. 98 Mass. 185.

[15] Lewis v. Manufacturers' Fire & Marine Ins. Co. 131 Mass. 364.

[16] Deming v. Merchants Cotton-Press & Storage Co. 90 Tenn. 306, 13 L.R.A. 518, 17 S. W. 89.

vision, in a policy on cargo and catchings, that if the assured shall have made any prior insurance on the catchings the underwriters shall be answerable for so much only as the amount of the prior insurance is deficient in fully covering the property at risk, remains in force after a prior policy effecting such insurance is canceled by agreement of the parties thereto without the consent of the other underwriters, although it is canceled before any loss occurs.[17] In case a policy is issued containing the "American clause," a prior policy cannot, by an agreement between the prior insurer and the assured, be canceled to the prejudice of the subsequent underwriter.[18] And it is held to be error, in those cases where a marine policy contains the "American clause," to determine whether other policies are prior or subsequent thereto by the date of the attaching of the risk. In other words the date of the policy, and not that of the attaching of the risk, must govern the question whether other insurance is prior or not, under a clause in a policy of marine insurance, providing that other insurance prior in day of date shall be first applied in payment of a loss.[19] So it is held in another case that under the express provisions of this clause, though it be contained in an open policy, not immediately attached to any specific risk, the date which determines whether other insurance is prior or subsequent in day of date to the policy, is not that upon which the policy attached to a specific risk, but that upon which the policy was issued.[20] Again, marine policies issued on different days, but taking effect on the same future day, are not simultaneous within the meaning of the third part of what is known as the "American clause," which provides that other insurance "of date the same day as this instrument shall be deemed simultaneous herewith," so that the insurer shall not be liable for more than a ratable contribution in proportion to the sum thereby insured to the aggregate of such simultaneous insurance.[1]

§ 2496a. Other insurance as affected by coinsurance: "average" or "distribution" clause.—While coinsurance is a condition or agreement that insured keeps a certain amount or percentage of additional insurance in force and upon his failure to do so he becomes a coinsurer to the extent of the percentage amount agreed

[17] Macy v. Whaling Ins. Co. 9 Met. (50 Mass.) 354.

[18] Seamans v. Loring, 1 Mason (U. S. C. C.) 127, 128, Fed. Cas. No. 12,-583; Macy v. Whaling Ins. Co. 9 Met. (50 Mass.) 354.

[19] Deming v. Merchants' Cotton-Press & Storage Co. 90 Tenn. 306, 17 S. W. 89, 13 L.R.A. 518.

[20] Corporation of London Assurance v. Paterson, 106 Ga. 538, 32 S. E. 650, 28 Ins. L. J. 385.

[1] Carleton v. China Mutual Ins. Co. 174 Mass. 280, 46 L.R.A. 166, 54 N. E. 559.

upon,[2] still it may constitute a condition the breach of which will avoid the policy when the coinsurance clause is itself not prohibited either expressly or impliedly by statute.[3] This clause, however, relates more particularly to the measure of liability under the policy containing it, in connection with other insurance and the conditions contained therein as affecting their validity and also the consequent liability of other insurers.[4] If a statute prohibits insurer from requiring any coinsurance clause except at insured's option, or from limiting the amount payable in case of loss below the actual cash value of the property if within the amount of insurance for which the premium is paid, but standard policies are issued with a liability per cent requirement and providing also that if insurance is not kept up to said per cent, insurer shall be liable only for such portion of the loss or damage as the amount insured shall bear to said liability per cent, in such case the statute does not aid assured where he had impliedly elected under the policies to exercise his option and he is, therefore, not entitled to full indemnity, in view of the fact that the premium had been reduced in consideration of said proportionate liability clause.[5]

[2] See definition in note to Northwestern Fuel Co. v. Boston Ins. Co. 131 Minn. 19, 154 N. W. 513, 41 Ins. L. J. 715, 720, given under this section. See also definition in Oppenheim v. Firemen's Fund Ins. Co. 119 Minn. 417, 138 N. W. 777, 42 Ins. L. J. 297, 300, under § 2480a herein.

[3] See Hartford Fire Ins. Co. v. Shlenker, 80 Miss. 667, 32 So. 155, 31 Ins. L. J. 938, where the validity of the policy was based upon such coinsurance agreement although the clause was held contrary to the statute and unenforceable. See this case under § 2496b herein.

[4] See decisions under this and the next following section.

[5] Stephenson v. Agricultural Ins. Co. 116 Wis. 277, 93 N. W. 19, Rev. Stat. 1898, sec. 1943a.

As to statutes expressly or impliedly prohibiting coinsurance clause, or making same optional with insured, see:

Georgia. — Civ. Code 1895, sec. 2110 (requiring payment of full amount of loss except in case of certain personal property when only actual value recoverable. Held in Firemen's Fund Ins. Co. v. Pekor, 106 Ga. 1, 31 S. E. 779, 28 Ins. L. J. 953, that coinsurance clause not invalid even though statute makes void all stipulations contra). See Code 1911, sec. 2545 (sec. 2110); sec. 2546 (sec. 2111); (but that loss in Georgia is unliquidated claim which must be ascertained after loss and is open to adjustment, see Norwich Union Fire Ins. Co. v. Bainbridge Grocery Co. 16 Ga. App. 432, 85 S. E. 622).

Indiana.—Burns's Ann. Stat. 1908, secs. 4623, 4624.

Iowa.—Code 1907, sec. 1758a, subdiv. III.; Code Supp. (1898–1910) p. 364, sec. 1758a; Code 1897, sec. 1746 (other insurance: pro-rating); Code Supp. 1913, sec. 1746 (coinsurance), am'd by Acts & Res. 1917, p. 208, c. 185.

Kentucky.—Stat. sec. 700 (valued policy law; coinsurance clause held void in Sachs v. London & Lancashire Fire Ins. Co. of London, 113 Ky. 88, 23 Ky. L. R. 2397, 67 S. W. 23, 31 Ins. L. J. 426); Russell's Stat. 1909, p. 1039, sec. 4307 (as to liability of insurer for value of property as fixed in policy); Id. sec. 4308.

A coinsurance clause is neither unreasonable, invalid, nor against public policy which provides that in consideration of the policy and the basis upon which the rate of premium is fixed that assured shall "maintain insurance on each division of property as per division of this policy, to the extent of the actual cash value thereof and failing to do so, shall be an insurer to the extent of such deficit and in that event" his proper proportion of any loss.[6] Where a Massachusetts standard form of fire policy has a rider coinsurance clause attached requiring insured to maintain coinsurance to at least eighty per cent of the actual cash value of the property insured, and making him liable, if he fails to do so, for the deficiency to the extent that he shall bear his proportion of the loss, said rider does not violate the statute prescribing such standard form and providing for adding to or modifying those provisions contained therein, nor does said rider diminish the full indemnity which seeks to secure mortgagees by protecting their interest against any act of the mortgagor.[7] In a New York case decided in 1903, where it was declared that the question involved was new, insured obtained policies to an amount not exceeding

Louisiana.—Act 1900, No. 135, p. 209 (valued policy law held not to prohibit coinsurance in Simon v. Queen Ins. Co. of America, 120 La. 477, 45 So. 396). See La. L. 1914, p. 493, act No. 255 (adopting N. Y. Standard forms; and that standard policy law repealed valued policy law so far as inconsistent, see § 176d, herein).

Michigan.—L. 1907, No. 307; 3 Howell's Stat. Annot. pp. 3396, 3401, sec. 8328 (standard form: not liable for greater proportion than amount insured bears to whole insurance whether valid or not by solvent or insolvent insurers; extent of contribution may be provided for by agreement or condition, written or indorsed on policy, etc.)

Minnesota. — Rev. L. 1905, sec. 1642, am'd Gen. L. 1907, c. 446, p. 639; Rev. Laws Suppl. 1909, sec. 1642; Gen. Stat. 1913, sec. 3322 (see Minn. case at end of this section).

Mississippi.—Code 1906, sec. 2592, L. 1912, c. 224 (construed in Darden v. Liverpool & London & Globe Ins. Co. 109 Miss. 501, 68 So. 485).

Missouri.—L. 1903, p. 209, 2 Mo. Rev. Stat. 1909, sec. 7021 (as to property insured in more than one company); Id. sec. 7023 (provision as to liability as coinsurer prohibited, etc., with exception as to personal property in certain cases.)

New Jersey.—L. 1902, c. 134, sec. 78, p. 438; Comp. Stat. (1709–1910), p. 2863, sec. 78 (optional with insured to accept policy with coinsurance clause).

Oklahoma.—Rev. Stat. 1903, sec. 3199, Snyder's Comp. L. 1909, pp. 903–906, sec. 3800 (standard form: in effect March 25, 1909: not liable for greater proportion, etc.; contribution may be provided for in agreement, etc.).

Tennessee. — L. 1903, c. 539; Shannon's Supp. Code (1897–1903) p. 536, sec. 3348 (coinsurance clause optional, except in certain cities). See § 2496b herein.

[6] Pennsylvania Fire Ins. Co. v. Moore, 21 Tex. Civ. App. 528, 51 S. W. 878.

[7] Quinn v. Fire Assoc. of Phila. 180 Mass. 560, 62 N. E. 980, 31 Ins. L. J. 460; Mass. Stat. 1894, c. 22, sec. 60. See § 2795 herein.

sixty thousand dollars on certain buildings, under a standard form policy, which amount was thereafter reduced by mutual consent leaving forty thousand five hundred dollars as the amount of insurance. The policy contained an apportionment clause whereby insurer was not to be liable for a greater proportion of any loss than the amount insured should bear to the whole insurance "whether valid or not by solvent or insolvent insurers." Other insurance was thereafter procured in four companies to an amount not exceeding seventeen thousand five hundred dollars. As the maximum of liability each of the last-mentioned policies contained a "percentage coinsurance clause" stipulating for liability in no greater proportion than the sum insured bore to eighty per cent of the cash value of the insured property at the time of loss, "nor more than the proportion which this policy bears to the total insurance." It was held that the maximum sum which in any event can be collected under a policy, and not the smallest sum which can be collected under special circumstances is the amount of insurance effected by the policy; that the "whole insurance" means the face value of the first policy together with that of the face value of all the contributing policies, making sixty thousand dollars, but that insured was not entitled to recover his entire loss as he had agreed in a certain contingency to stand part of the loss and the amount he had agreed to bear must be included in apportioning the loss; that the "percentage coinsurance clause" meant insurance by insurer and insured or owner dependent on the percentage or proportion which the insurance bore to the value, and the owner was coinsurer for any deficiency, that is, if the property was insured to the full specified per cent of its value or more, in case of a total loss the whole sum became due, but if insurance and the loss are both less than said stipulated per cent, the owner became a coinsurer proportionately; that "the sum hereby insured" meant that amount of insurance, and said sum was always the same, fixed, definite and certain without regard to actual liability under special circumstances.[8] In a Minnesota case in an action to determine and ap-

[8] Farmers' Feed Co. of N. J. v. Scottish Union & National Ins. Co. 173 N. Y. 241, 65 N. E. 1105, 32 Ins. L. J. 162, rev'g 72 N. Y. Supp. 732, 65 App. Div. 70, 31 Ins. L. J. 84. The court, per Vann, J., said: "The plaintiff claims that the amount due from the defendant under its policy 'by reason of the fire loss' was $38,177.26, while the defendant claims that such amount was but $32,102.50, which it has paid to the plaintiff under an agreement that such payment should be without prejudice. The appellate division rendered judgment in favor of the plaintiff for the difference between these sums, amounting to $6,074.76, with interest thereon from November 28, 1900.

"The decision of the controversy turns on the meaning of the words 'whole insurance' as used in the apportion the liability of twenty insurers under forty policies of tornado insurance, it appeared that there were two forms of poliportionment clause of the defendant's policy. It was there provided that the defendant should not be liable for a greater proportion of any loss than the amount insured by its policy should bear to the whole insurance on the property. There is no disagreement as to the amount of insurance made by the defendant's policy, which was absolute, but the controversy is over the amount made by the four other policies, which were not absolute, owing to the coinsurance clause. . . .

"The four companies stipulated that they should 'be liable for no greater proportion' of the loss, which was $45,321.18, 'than the sum hereby insured,' or $17,500, 'bears to 80 per cent of the cash value of the property,' which was $99,728. Their liability, therefore, is represented by the following proportion: as $99,728, is to $17,500, so is $45,321.18 to the amount required, or $7,962.84. Was this 'the whole insurance' effected by the four policies containing the coinsurance clause? If so, that clause has no effect in this case. We think it was not, for if the loss had been greater, the amount called for by the policies would have been greater also, and yet it could not have exceeded the amount of the insurance. The largest sum which in any event can be collected under a policy, and not the smallest sum which may be collected under special circumstances, is the amount of insurance effected by the policy. There is no limit to the possible liability under the four policies, except the amount that the companies stipulated it should not exceed, aggregating $17,500, which they would have been obliged to pay if the loss had been total. Under an open policy if the loss is less than the insurance, the former measures the liability; but if the loss is greater than the insurance the latter measures the liability, yet in either event the amount of insurance is the same. The amount of the insurance, therefore, is the largest sum that the company, under any circumstances, according to the terms of the policy, can be required to pay. This is the popular understanding as well as the legal definition. The test is what is the extent of the indemnity furnished under any possible circumstances? The insurance effected by the four policies was for a proportion of the cash value of the property less 20 per cent, which can always be represented by a fraction, the numerator being unchangeable while the denominator may vary from time to time. The enumerator is the highest amount which the companies could be required to pay, while the denominator is 80 per cent of the cash value of the property. The amount of the insurance does not vary, but the cash value of the property is subject to change; still that change does not reduce the amount of insurance. The fact that the owner ran his own risk, or became his own insurer as to the 20 per cent of the cash value of the property, did not lessen the amount of insurance, because if the loss had been total the whole $17,500 would have been due upon the four policies. Thus the effect of the coinsurance clause is that if the property is insured to 80 per cent of its value, or more, in case of a total loss the whole sum insured becomes due, but with insurance for less than 80 per cent of the value and a loss also of less than 80 per cent, the owner becomes, in effect, a coinsurer proportionately. He could have procured insurance to 80 per cent of the value, but not having done so he became his own insurer pro tanto. This accords with the way the clause is characterized in the policies, for it is entitled, 'Percentage Coinsurance Clause,' which means insurance by the company and the owner, depending upon the percentage or cies, in both of which the description of the property was the same, but one form provided for "necessary alterations and repairs and proportion which the insurance bears to the value. The object is through lower premiums to induce the owner either to take out insurance to 80 per cent of value, or to become a coinsurer with less risk to the company in case of a loss falling below such percentage of value. Where either the loss or the insurance equals or exceeds 80 per cent of value the clause has no effect, but when both are less, the insured and the insurer bear the loss in certain proportions. The amount of insurance is not the variable factor, but the amount of loss. The amount of insurance is at all times the same, but when the loss is partial the insurer stands only a part, unless the insurance is for the full percentage, whereas if the loss is total the insurer stands all, not exceeding the limit stated in the policy, the limit is the amount made by the policy because the company may be required to pay to that extent.

"The words of the coinsurance clause, viz.: 'the sum hereby insured,' indicates that amount of insurance. That sum is fixed, definite and always the same. It should not be confounded with the actual liability under special circumstances, for all open policies are necessarily indefinite as to the sum to be paid until the amount of the loss is known. The liability can never exceed the value of the property, but the insurance may; for a house worth but $1,000 may be insured for $2,000. If thus insured by two companies, one-half in each, and the property was wholly destroyed by fire, neither would have to pay $1,000, the amount of its policy, but only $500, the amount of its liability, owing to the apportionment clause. This would be true even if one of the companies was insolvent, so that the insured by taking out other insurance may reduce his security while intending to increase it. In the case before us the plaintiff by procuring the four policies reduced his security in the event of a partial loss, but increased it in the event of a total loss. For the purpose of apportionment the face value of the policies should be resorted to, regardless of the cash value of the property, and thus the whole amount of the insurance can be ascertained by a simple inspection of the policies. The face value of a policy is not reduced by the actual value of the property, or by the duty of apportioning the loss, or by the effect of a coinsurance clause in another policy on the same property. The amount of insurance is fixed at the inception of the policy, but the amount of liability is not fixed until a loss has occurred. The one depends upon the sum for which the policy is written, but the other depends upon a number of contingencies which may or may not happen, and hence cannot be known in advance. The fact that they are not known and may never come into existence does not effect the amount of the policy.

"The question involved is new, and we are without controlling authorities to guide us, but the discussion of a subject somewhat related in a recent case has aided us in reaching the conclusion announced: Continental Ins. Co. v. Aetna Ins. Co. 138 N. Y. 16, 21, 33 N. E. 724.

"It may be asked why, if the whole insurance was $60,000, the plaintiff is not entitled to recover his entire loss, which was but $45,321.18, and the answer is that he agreed in a certain contingency to stand part of the loss himself.

"He accepted four policies which provided for the payment to him of not exceeding $17,500 in case of a total loss, or in case the loss was partial and his insurance amounted to 80 per cent of the cash value, but he agreed that if both loss and insurance were each less than the 80 per cent to

